
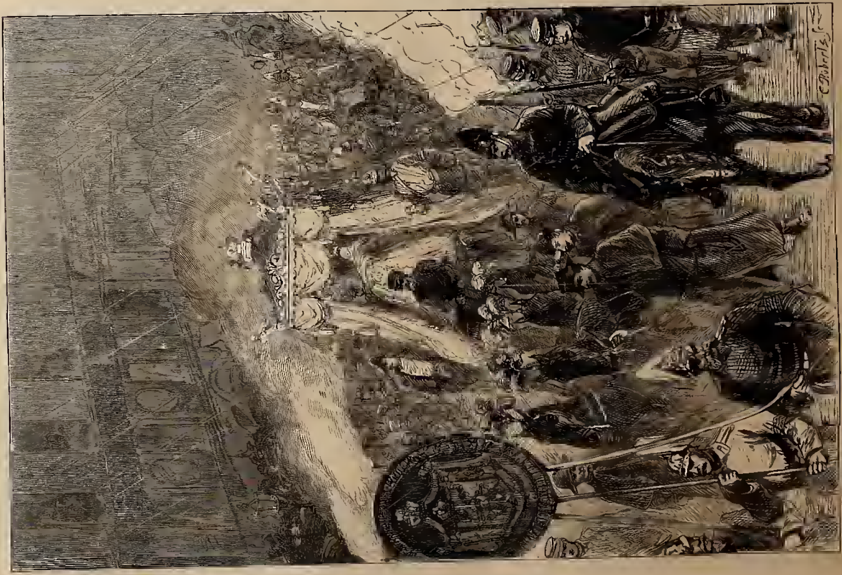
PROPOSED SAFETY NET FOR RESCUING LIFE FROM FIRE



THE FUNERAL OF THE LATE PRINCE LEUCHTENBERG AT ST. PETERSBURG—THE PROCESSION PASSING DOWN THE NEWSKY PROSPECT

FOREIGN

The War in the East.——The Turks have sustained a severe blow in the fall of Kars on Sunday morning after twelve hours' hard and continuous fighting. The surrender of this historic fortress was all the more unexpected from the fact that it had been left well provisioned, and that under the same commander, Ferik Hussain Pasha, it had successfully resisted a three months' siege earlier in the year. It appears, however, that during the first siege the garrison consisted of some 18,000 men, while after the disaster of the 15th ult. Mukhtar Pasha was only able to spare from 10,000 to 12,000 troops—far too small a force to man the extensive outlying works with which Kars is defended. The attack began on Saturday, and was directed against the southern side, on the right bank of the Kars Tchai River (we gave a double-page view of Kars and its defences in No. 400, July 28th, 1877,), and Forts Hafiz Pasha, Khanli, and Siwarri were captured by storm, the Karadagh and Arab Tabia being taken by a sudden assault. The Turks are admitted by the Russian accounts to have fought most desperately, and are said by the official report to have lost 10,000, the Russian loss being only 2,500. Part of the garrison attempted to escape to Olti and Erzeroum, but were intercepted, and cut down or captured. General Loris Melikoff commanded at the assault, at which the Grand Duke Michael was also present. The road to Erzeroum is now entirely open, and as the army besieging Kars is set at liberty, it is thought that General Melikoff will at once push on to Erzeroum and attack Mukhtar's positions in force, while it is even suggested to attack Constantinople from the Asiatic side.

The fall of Kars has naturally been hailed with great rejoicings in Russia and in the Russian camp, while the affair is regarded by all Europe as a great military achievement, and speculations are hazarded on all sides concerning the effect it will have upon the campaign, and upon the ultimate terms of peace. These the Russian journals are now declaring must be something really tangible, by way of compensation for the great sacrifices Russia has made for the "emancipation of her fellow Christians." It would be worse than useless to repeat the various rumours, but we may mention that the very general impression is that Russia, having now captured Kars for the third time in fifty years, will be by no means disposed to give it up at the end of the war, and that the autonomy of the Bulgarian Christians and a fair slice of Armenian territory will be amongst the indispensable conditions of peace. Of the impression in Constantinople of the disaster it is difficult to speak yet, but great apprehension of a popular outbreak against the Sultan and his unpopular favourite prevails.

At Plevna matters remain in much the same condition. Osman Pasha having been summoned to surrender has declined, there have been numerous skirmishes outside, and a Turkish official despatch announces the recapture of Berkovtch. Mehemet Ali Pasha has arrived at Sofia, and is most energetically organising the army of relief, despatching troops across the Balkans with all the speed possible. A correspondent of The Times who saw him at Sofia states that he speaks confidently, and is determined on "acting energetically but with a well-studied plan" to relieve Plevna and to make the road secure. He regrets the want of clothing in Osman Pasha's army, but thinks that there is no fear of Plevna being driven to straits—the scarcity of provisions notwithstanding. In the meantime Mehemet Ali's chief position of concentration north of the Balkans seems to be Orchanie, where the Russians suffered a somewhat sharp repulse at the close of last week at the hands of Chakir Pasha.

In the Shipka Pass there appears to be the usual desultory cannonading and skirmishing without any noteworthy advantage on either side. On the Lom Suleiman Pasha continues to be active and to harass the enemy by continual reconnaissances, in which the Turks frequently obtain small successes. On Monday there was an important engagement fought at Pirgos, the Turks being the attacking party. There are accounts of the affair from both Russian and Turkish official sources, each giving a different version and claiming the victory. The Turks, however, are acknowledged by their opponents to have at first driven back the Russians from Pirgos, and to have reduced that town to ashes. Lost week also, on the 17th inst., there was a sharp engagement near Yenikoi, in which the Turks claim the advantage.

Both sides are still calling up large reinforcements, and the Russians are making every possible preparation for the winter campaign. Large iron pontoons with special provision against ice are daily arriving at the Danube from Herr Krupp's manufactory, while huge stores of great coats and boots have been ordered from Berlin. At Constantinople at present all is quiet. The supposed removal of ex-Sultan Murad is now stated to be false. The Sultan while presenting colours to the Civic Guard made a speech declaring that "the honour of a nation consisted in defending the Fatherland, its right and dignity, by means of universal military service." The Messrs. Geshoff have arrived at the capital, and will probably be exiled to Aleppo; and the election for the Chamber of Deputies has resulted in the return of four Mussulmans and one Christian.—The war in Montenegro continues, and the Montenegrins have taken Spizza and its citadel, but have been defeated by Ali Said Pasha on the road between Scutari and Antivari, which latter town Prince Nicholas has been actively besieging.—Servia is still actively preparing for war, and large quantities of troops are being mobilised.

France.——This has been a terrible week of crises, and although the Ministry have given in their resignations the situation remains graver than ever. To resume our chronicle of events, as had been foreseen, the proposed appointment of a Committee of Inquiry into the abuses practised during the recent elections was duly voted by the Chamber of Deputies last week, after an indignant protest from the Duc de Broglie, to whom M. Gambetta made a powerful and stirring reply—in no way mincing matters, but roundly declaring that the Cabinet had gained forty seats by "robbery and fraud." The Ministers at once handed their resignation to the Marshal, which he accepted, while asking them to remain in office until the appointment of their successors, and next day the Chamber elected the Committee, which is presided over by M. Albert Grévy, and numbers thirty-three members, all belonging to the Left. On Saturday the battle was transferred to the Senate, where Legitimist M. de Kerdrel gave notice of interpellating the Government as to the measures it means to adopt respecting the inquiry ordered by the Chamber of Deputies. The Government immediately accepted the interpellation for Monday, but MM. Jules Simon and Dufaure at once objected to the interpellation as interfering with a matter exclusively concerning the Chamber of Deputies, the latter stigmatising it as a "revolutionary manœuvre in the highest degree." To this the President, the Duc d'Audiffret Pasquier, forthwith replied that it was merely intended to ask the Government what orders they would give to their agents respecting the inquiry, and therefore was lawful. He then continued to say that the Senate was by no means competent to criticise or to judge the Chamber of Deputies, its sole jurisdiction lying in joining with the President in pronouncing a dissolution. This explanation was warmly received by the Left, and very favourably commented on by the Republicans at large, whose hopes were thus raised that the Senate would inflict defeat upon the Government next day. These hopes, however, were not destined to be realised, mainly owing to the action of the Orleanists or Right Centre, who now form the trimming or ponderating power in the Upper House, and who feared that if the Cabinet were defeated the Marshal would resign and chaos supervene. The chief features of the debate were the speeches of MM. de Broglie and Dufaure, the former maintaining the right of the Government to order its officials not to appear before the Committee of Inquiry—which, by the way, has been done by the various Ministers—the latter denying any such right, and declaring that "it was indeed strange if the truth required to be controlled by a superior." He also moved the "order of the day pure and simple," which would have shelved the interpellation, but was defeated by 155 against 130, and another order of the day was passed in which the Senate took "cognisance of the declarations of the Government," and declared itself resolved, in conformity with the Conservative principles which it has always sustained, not to suffer any infringement of the prerogatives of either of the Public Powers.

At first it was announced that this order was accepted by only a majority of four, and the Republicans accordingly considered the result a virtual defeat for the Government; but an error had been committed in the counting, and on Tuesday morning the Government majority was announced to be twenty-two. This somewhat changed the aspect of affairs, and foreshadowed a determination of the Senate seriously to oppose the Lower Chamber. Great apprehensions at once spread through all Republican circles, the Bourse fell, the words dissolution and coup d'état were once more in every one's mouth, and the Republican journals, from the Journal des Débats downwards, declared that the Senate had entered upon a violent path, full of danger. Nor was this anxiety calmed by a semi-official announcement that the new Ministry would be formed of Monarchical nonentities, headed by M. Bathie, the inventor of the famous phrase, "Ministère du combat." The ultra-Conservatives, and Bonapartists in particular, are in high feather over the vote of the Senate. The Orleanists, however, do not like the path they have been compelled to enter by their affection for the Marshal, and are openly afraid of a coup d'état, which could only benefit the Bonapartists, and, if it came fairly to a choice, they would infinitely prefer M. Grévy to Napoleon IV.

On Wednesday the new Budget Committee met for the first time, M. Gambetta being again chosen President. On taking the chair he made a characteristic speech, denying that the late Committee ever "justified the fanciful fear christened with the name 'social peril,'" and dilating upon the "incapacity of the man who seized upon office on the 16th May."

In Paris, politics apart, the chief topic has been the revival, at the Théâtre Français, of Victor Hugo's Hernani, when an amusing incident occurred at the full-dress rehearsal, when one of the characters exclaiming "J'y suis," the whole audience shouted, "Et j'y reste," a universal burst of laughter interrupting the performance for some minutes. Other first performances have been a new comedy at the Odéôn, Blackson Père et Fille, by MM. Delavigne and Jacques Normand, and a revival of Lazare le Pâtre, by Joseph Bouchard, at the Château d'Eau.—The Senate nominated four more Conservative Life Senators last week, and the death is announced of another Life Senator, M. Lanfrey, the author of the well-known "Histoire de Napoleon."

Germany.——There has been an asserted plot to assassinate the Emperor and Prince Bismarck, and a Pole has been arrested on suspicion. The Prisoner is named Lubovski, and on his arrest gave out that he was a relation of Cardinal Ledochowski, and had come to Berlin on purpose to assassinate the Emperor and his Premier, but he was subsequently found to be only a forger who had been "wanted" for some time, and he then declared his first statement to have been wholly untrue.

India.——Another little frontier expedition is reported, General Keyes, with a field force of 2,100 infantry, six guns, and a small number of cavalry, having entered the Jowaki territory on the 9th inst. The Jowakis were surprised, and on the 11th inst. Paiya was occupied after a very slight resistance. There was further fighting on the 14th, our men being attacked by a large force of Jowakis, who, however, were completely routed. The expedition was rendered necessary by the continual Jowaki inroads into British territory, and our forces will occupy the Jowaki territory until the enemy surrenders unconditionally, and consents to submit to a heavy fine, to deliver up all arms of English manufacture, to the construction of a military road through their country, to the surrender of the head men, and to the destruction of the fortified towers in the villages.—The famine reports continue to be favourable, and the numbers on the relief works are rapidly falling.

Italy.——The Pope continues in the same serious state of health, though he still pursues his ordinary avocations. Dr. Vanzetti, the Paduan physician, has approved of the treatment which has been pursued by Dr. Ceccarelli, but states that a sudden catastrophe may occur at any time. The Pope is now compelled to keep his legs in a horizontal position, but he insists upon saying Mass seated in his chair, though often overpowered by his habitual drowsiness.—A consistory will be held on the 17th prox., when several new Cardinals will be created. The Pope is expected to deliver an allocution insisting on the necessity of the Temporal Power as a guarantee of the independence of the Holy See and at the same time will announce the foundation of a new Scotch Hierarchy.

Miscellaneous.——In Austria De Tourville's appeal has been rejected, but it is thought that the sentence of death will be mitigated to penal servitude for life.—In the United States there is little news, save that the Mexicans continue their raids into Texan territory, and that the proposal to refuse the grant for the Paris Exhibition was refused by a large majority, so that the Bill accepting the invitation of France has been definitely passed.—The war in the Transkei is coming to an end. On the 18th ult. the whole Colonial force, consisting of 800 Europeans, 3,000 Fingoes, and 1,500 Timbus, advanced upon the Galekas, and hemmed them in, and by the last advices of October 31, Commander Griffiths had scoured the whole country, and the insurgent chief, Kreli, had fled.

THE COURT

The Queen will probably not leave Scotland until the 30th inst. in consequence of the illness of Prince Leopold, who has been indisposed for some time past. His illness, however, is not serious. The Princess Beatrice also has not been very well. Her Majesty has accordingly received no visitors this week at Balmoral, and on Sunday did not go to Crathie Church, Divine Service being performed at the Castle by the Rev. A. Campbell. The Queen has however been to Abergeldie nearly every day, has driven out with the Princess of Wales, and has visited Glen Gelder Shiel and Birk Hall. Sir Stafford Northcote, the Minister in attendance, has dined several times with Her Majesty.

The Prince of Wales concluded his visit to Lord Walsingham at Merton at the end of last week, and came up to town. This week he has been spending a few days with Lord Londesborough at Londesborough Park, near Selby, Yorkshire, for a few days' shooting. The Princess did not leave Abergeldie last week as arranged, as Miss Knollys was not well enough to travel. Her return has been postponed for the present.

The Princess Louise was present on Wednesday at the marriage of the Duke of Norfolk and Lady Flora Hastings at the Oratory, Brompton.—Prince and Princess Christian have been entertaining the Crown Prince of Hanover at Cumberland Lodge. On Saturday Prince Christian and the Crown Prince went out fox-hunting, and on Monday the Crown Prince returned to London.—The Duke of Edinburgh, according to Mayfair, is forming a collection of old china at his Maltese residence, but has declared that he will pay no fancy prices and will only purchase bargains.—The Duchess of Teck on Saturday opened the Infirmary at Hemel Hempstead which has recently been rebuilt.

The ex-King of Hanover and the Princess Frederica have returned to Paris from Biarritz to spend the winter.—Wednesday was the thirty-seventh birthday of the Princess Royal, and was commemorated at Windsor with the usual salutes and bell ringing.

CHURCH NEWS

Mr. Tooth's Triumph.——The Queen's Bench Division on Monday made absolute a rule which the Rev. Arthur Tooth had obtained against Lord Penzance, prohibiting him from proceeding further in the Hatcham Ritual case, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction. The Primate's requisition to the Dean of Arches to hear the case called upon him to sit "at any place in London or Westminster, or within the diocese of Rochester." Lord Penzance sat at Lambeth Palace, which is not within the diocese of Rochester, nor in Westminster, nor, it was contended by the appellant, in "London" in the technical sense. At the conclusion of the arguments, the Lord Chief Justice said he was of opinion that the rule must be made absolute, but added that he did so with very great regret, because it was clear to him that the objection was of the most technical character, and had nothing on earth to do with the merits of the case. Mr. Justice Mellor and Mr. Justice Lush concurred, the latter remarking that the objection came, he thought, with bad grace from the appellant. Mr. Tooth has since written to the Primate, announcing that he does not intend to proceed against any one for false imprisonment, believing that he has sufficiently vindicated the rights of the Church against "an alien jurisdiction."

Eternal Punishment.——The John Bull reports what it calls "an extraordinary sermon," which was delivered at Westminster Abbey on Sunday week by Canon Farrar, who after speaking of the horrible character of the generally accepted views of Hell and of so-called Eternal Punishment, and denouncing the Early Fathers, St. Augustine especially, as having thrown a dark stain upon theology, said that even if the doctrine could be supported by isolated texts he would set aside the authority of such texts as opposed to the general testimony of Scripture to the mercy and justice of God. But he believed, speaking as a theologian, and having given the subject much study, that it could not be supported even by isolated texts. In every case there was either a mistranslation or the words used had changed from their original meaning. Indeed, he hoped that in the revision of the Bible the words, "hell," "damnation," and "eternal" would be omitted, and this would be done if the revisers did their duty.

Various.——The Bishop of Lincoln, preaching at Cambridge last Sunday, said that disestablishment would be one of the greatest calamities that could befall the English nation. His experience of his own diocese led him to believe that its effect would be to pauperise the priesthood and paganise the people.—The Bishop of Manchester, in opening the Church Institute at Blackburn on Monday, said the Church of England must be made a national Church, relying on popular support. Abuses must be rectified. He often read of promotion other than by merit which made him wince. Appointments ought to be probationary, and clergymen who did not give satisfaction in their parishes should be removable. The pew system ought to be abolished, and the church made the church of the people.—On Tuesday, the Bishop of Peterborough administered a sharp rebuke to Mr. Bright for his recent attack upon the Bishop of Truro, which he said was a proof that bigotry and illiberality were not always the monopoly of Churchmen.—The Bishop of Lichfield's boat-church is now afloat on the canal near the cathedral city. It will seat about fifty worshippers, and a few days ago his lordship preached in it, he and his chaplain first going from cabin to cabin, and hut to hut, to gather a congregation of "bargees."—The ancient church of St. Peter's, Lamerton, near Tavistock, which was last year restored at a cost of 11,000*l.*, has been totally destroyed by fire.—Mr. Alfred Gliddon, the late manager of the Aldgate Branch of the City Bank, who was recently convicted of having endeavoured to induce a person named Gautier to withdraw from a "long firm" prosecution, but who has been liberated by order of the Home Secretary, preached last Sunday at the Baptist Chapel, West Drayton, of which he is the pastor. Many persons had said to him, 'I suppose it will be a long time before you will think of helping another man out of a mess.' But his answer was, 'Certainly not. I shall help the first man out of a mess who comes across my path, and if I am sent where I have just come from I will most gladly go.'" He felt that a taste of what he had undergone would do his friends a world of good; it would make them better men and women, and they would afterwards rejoice for the education.

MUSIC

Opera Comique.——The production of The Sorcerer, on Saturday night, was a real success—so real, indeed, as to encourage the belief that it will be lasting. That the work—"comic opera," or whatever special definition it may legitimately claim—is one of singular merit, few who have witnessed and heard it can reasonably deny. With Mr. W. S. Gilbert and Mr. Arthur Sullivan each at his best, it would be hypercritical to look for failure; and, both conditions being fulfilled in The Sorcerer, the result was what, without risk of disappointment, might have been anticipated. Mr. Gilbert has adopted an old and much revered legend—that of the "philtre," or love potion—as the basis of his libretto. His treatment of this legend, however, belongs exclusively to him, and to no other. Nor Thomas of Erceldoun ("the Rhymer"), nor Rusticien de Pise, nor Malory himself would have recognised it again. The readers of The Graphic, however—better informed through our last Christmas number—can draw their own inferences. For this reason—to say nothing of the ample details published on Monday by our daily contemporaries, we are absolved from the task of describing the plot. Enough that what, through the agency of Dame Bragwaine, was with fatal results administered to Sir Tristram, son of Meliadus, and to King Mark's wife, "the Belle Isonde" (we use the nomenclature of Mort d'Arthure—our own cherished romance), is by Mr. Wellington Wells, chief of an established house of "family necromancers," administered to the whole population of a village with no more fatal results than such as are provocative of mirth irresistible. The secret belongs exclusively to Mr. Gilbert, who in lieu of making folks weep bitterly compels them to laugh until tears of a healthier sort are engendered—the risum movere, rather than the lacrymas excire, being his especial aim. This he has accomplished with admirable skill, doubly fortunate in his Orphean confederate, Mr. Arthur Sullivan, one of the most gifted of Britain's musical sons, whose co-operation with the author of Pygmalion, the Palace of Truth, &c., has—witness the inimitable Trial by Jury, &c.—been already more than once successful. Both author and composer have reason to be gratified with this outcome of their united efforts. The Sorcerer made "a hit—a palpable hit"—on Saturday night, at the Opéra Comique, and kept the audience in one continuous state of hilariosity. At the same time, let it not be thought that the music of Mr. Arthur Sullivan is limited exclusively to parody and burlesque. On the contrary, while it is comic where the pure comic element is essential as Mr. Gilbert's own verve, dialogue, and incident, it not seldom speaks eloquently for itself, forcing, without exaggeration, his subtle confederate to look, in spite of himself, serious—to sob, in short, like Heraclitus, instead of to gibe after the manner of Democritus. Mr. Sullivan possesses the happy art of assuming gravity while affecting to be gay; and this makes him all the more fitting partner for Mr. Gilbert in works of art like The Sorcerer, where frequently the mock seriousness of that which is spoken and acted constitutes at the bottom what Shakespeare's Nym would style "the humour of it." Half-a-dozen instances might be cited in exemplification, but our space will not admit of detailed criticism, nor is it imperatively demanded. The Sorcerer—book and music—will speak for itself to those who have an innate sense of lively wit and genial humour, while for such as are not endowed with this peculiar faculty an analysis would be of little use. Aristophanes was not appreciated by the untutored mass, and had music in the time of Socrates been an art such as two or three centuries have made it for the actual generation, Aristophanes, feeling disposed to call in its aid, allowing it to play a conspicuous part, he would surely have looked out some Timotheus like Arthur Sullivan. Then would the "Birds" have chirped in measured tune, and "Frogs" have croaked in harmony! What more need be added beyond repeating that the The Sorcerer was a brilliant and richly merited success? A word of general and unqualified commendation is due to the performers, one and all. The leading singers were Mrs. Howard Paul, Misses Alice May, Everard, and Giulia Warwick; Messrs. George Bentham, Rutland Barrington, Temple, Clifton, and George Grossmith, two of the gentlemen, the second and fifth named, being novices before the stage-lights, although few would have set them down for anything less than adepts. Both chorus and orchestra were in every respect efficient, while the scenery and stage arrangements were alike to the credit of those responsible for their accuracy. Mr. Sullivan himself was at the conductor's desk.

London Ballad Concerts.——In addition to the usual series of these highly popular entertainments, which begin in January, Mr. John Boosey has arranged for four preliminary concerts, the first of which took place on Wednesday evening. Two new songs by Mr. F. H. Cowen were produced on this occasion. The first, entitled "The Better Land" (Mrs. Hemans' well-known poem), was delivered with much power by Madame Antoinette Sterling, and received an encore, but is not in itself a very striking composition. "Truant Love," words by W. J. Stewart, is a good song, and was well sung by Mrs. Osgood, but did not make much impression. Mr. Maybrick did full justice to a setting, by Stephen Adams, of Kingsley's "When all the world is young, lad." There is plenty of life in it, it is not very difficult, and will doubtless become a popular drawing-room ballad. Among the other singers were Mr. Santley and Mr. Edward Lloyd (both of whom it would be superfluous to praise), and Miss Orridge, who won the heart of the audience by her charming rendering of Sullivan's "Golden Days." The London Vocal Union was, as usual, delightful; and Miss Margaret Bucknall's pianoforte solo (Weber's "Il moto continuo") was very effectively played.

◆

RECENT POETRY AND VERSE

In "A Sheaf of Verse," by Henry G. Hewlett (H. S. King), there are evidences of such unusual amount of poetical talent, that a desire arises to know whether the author would be equally good in a more sustained effort. It would be hard to say which of the pieces gives us most pleasure; but, perhaps, from an artistic point of view, the sonnets deserve the highest praise. They are admirably balanced, and melodious throughout; whilst the writer nicely observes what is, to our thinking, an essential of this kind of poem, viz., the epigrammatic turn of conclusion; amongst the most favourable specimens are "June," "Nature and Ego," and "Colours." The ballads are almost equally to be commended; they have the true ring, and one of them, at least, "The Gift," contains thought as well as music; this verse strikes us as very happy:

> Gain! Ah! Gain is an anchorite,
> And Loss an alchemist:
> Love, we say, is common and cheap,
> We have it when we list:
> But when the dull blue pebble is dropt,
> Bewail the amethyst.

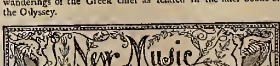
"Alva's Ride" is fine, and likely to live; and almost all the poems deserve more or less of praise. That Mr. Hewlett does not want humour is shown by such a piece as "From Naples to Pæstum," but, above all, by the clever burlesque of "The Banquet of Life"—a burlesque which becomes terrible earnest by the bitter satire of its last lines.

"The Trumpeter of Säkkingen, a Song from the Upper Rhine," by Joseph Victor von Scheffel, translated from the German by Mrs. Francis Brünnow (Chapman and Hall), is a rather long poem, founded on fact, which has gained great favour in its native dress; whether it will be equally popular in English may be doubted. Its metre is that octosyllabic one, best known by Longfellow's "Hiawatha," and which has always a tendency to become monotonous, although it is here handled with great facility. There is fancy in the account of Werner's interview with the gnome, and the peasant's riot is spirited in places; but the songs are most to our liking, especially "Two Days now have Passed Already." The story tells how a lover of humble origin wooed and won his master's daughter, an old theme which will always prove attractive, though it is here treated somewhat at length. From the use of such a hideous word as "donated" for "gave" we should imagine the translator to be an American.

"The House of Ravensburg" by the Hon. Roden Noel (Daldy, Isbister and Co.), is a tragedy, portions of which might not be ill-fitted for representation; as a poem we can hardly call it a success, in spite of some good passages here and there, of which perhaps the best is the ghost's speech after the death of Adrian. Sigismund the hero, with his mysterious crimes and remorse, inevitably suggests Manfred, and does not gain by the comparison. It was surely a mistake to make the Swiss peasants talk bad English; the effect in no way suggests their patois, as was, doubtless, intended.

"Essex: a Play," by D. Charles D. Campbell (Williams and Norgate), can hardly be commended as fitted either for the stage or the closet. There is a plentiful lack of incident or action, and it is highly didactic; whilst the verse, though extremely careful, shows none of the elements of poetry properly so-called. It is probably a juvenile attempt.—Of "Prometheus the Fire-giver" (Chatto and Windus) it is perhaps enough to say that, though a meritorious production, suggesting juvenile work, it will not remind the classical reader much of Æschylus. It contains successive, and rather happy, imitations of Messrs. Tennyson, Browning, and Swinburne, but has no originality.

There are some pretty songs, and one or two of even greater merit, in the volume entitled "The Death of Saul: and other Eisteddfod Prize Poems, and Miscellaneous Verses." By J. C. Manning (J. C. Manning, Swansea). But the longer pieces do not rise above the usual level of such occasional poems; the writer is more in his element in pieces like "Ring Down the Curtain," or "The Song of the Strike."—Those who can appreciate genuine, unforced humour should not fail to read "The Lazy Lays, and Prose Imaginings." Written, printed, published, and reviewed by William H. Harrison (38, Great Russell Street). Both the verses and the short essays are really funny, and in some of the latter there is a vein of genial satire which adds piquancy to the fun. "The Lay of the Newspaper Editor" is capital, if rather severe, and so is "The Lay of the Macebearers;" but one of the most laughable bits is the Turk's account of how he went to be photographed.—The author of "French Jesuits in England," by Z. W. Hinton (E. W. Allen), remarks, "It is very doubtful if I get any one to read all these tirades," and we quite agree with him. The lines are selected from some longer work, and are little better than doggrel, their motif being a violent attack on the Church of Rome.—The author of "The Prince of Darkness and the Curse of War," by Frederic Barnett (Elzevir Press), rhymes "horror" with "sorrow," and likes the smell of mandrakes. His lines are published for a charitable purpose, which forms their excuse.—"Ulysses in Phœacia," by James Pearce (Arthur H. Moxon), is a resumé in tolerable metre, but no more, of the wanderings of the Greek chief as related in the later books of the Odyssey.



New Music

Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co.——Much to be commended, both from a musical and poetical point of view, is a baritone song, entitled "The Old Organist," the plaintive and touching words are by H. B. Farnie, the music by Ciro Pinsuti.—A tenor will find satisfaction in singing, and his friends in listening to, "The Fisher's Daughter," written and composed by E. Oxenford and J. Cheshire.—Most of our musical readers are by this time acquainted with Offenbach's comic opera, The Creole, and have enjoyed a hearty laugh over the droll two-part song, "The Lay of the Chicken" (Notaries' Chant), and smiled feebly at the semi-sentimental ballad, "Gran' Pa!" "La Créole Quadrilles" are fairly good settings of the leading melodies from this opera, by Olivier Metra; scarcely so good is the "Créole Polka," for the pianoforte, by Arban.—Rather funny is "The Warbling Cobbler," a serio-comic song, for a voice of medium compass, written and composed by Messrs. H. B. Farnie and J. Offenbach.—Christmas facetiousness has already set in. "He Always Came Home to Tea," a comic song, with a hideous frontispiece, has been arranged as a polka by W. M. Lütz.—Got up with a most gorgeous frontispiece representing the object from whence it takes its name, is "Cleopatra's Needle Waltz," by Albert Hartmann, Mus. Doc.; the music is almost worthy of its brilliant exterior.—Four useful and moderately easy school pieces for the pianoforte, by Paul Vivian, are entitled respectively "Sunset," the prettiest and most effective of the group, "Mazurka à l'Espagnole," "Eulalie," a smoothly written nocturne, and a stiff "Gavotte," which will seldom be asked for a second time.—A showy morceau for the pianoforte is "Graziella," a so-called entrée dansante—one of John Cheshire's most pleasing recent compositions.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co.——A knowledge of the theory of music is now considered as necessary as its practice for the beginner as well as the advanced student, hence some of our ablest musical professors have turned their attention to the task of trying, at least, to remove or clear up the numerous difficulties which encompass the study of harmony and composition from the first to the last step. The above-named firm has commenced the issue of a series of "Music Primers," edited by Dr. Stainer, which will prove of the greatest value and assistance to musical students of every branch, professional or amateur. Two of the numbers of this series are by Ernst Pauer, namely, "The Art of Pianoforte Playing" and "The Elements of the Beautiful in Music," the former work gives most plain and explicit direction for the position of the hands, &c., together with many valuable hints for the industrious and painstaking student. Chapter XIII. gives the order in which the sonatas of our classical masters should be studied. The latter work may, with advantage, be carefully perused by the would-be composer, who should dissect, and even learn by heart, from page 19 to the end of this clever little volume.—As useful to vocalists as the two above-mentioned numbers are to instrumentalists, is "The Rudiments of Music," by W. H. Cummings, a work of sterling worth, which contains much information in a condensed form, and, in fact, is a valuable aid to the study of harmony and composition.—Dr. Stainer is quite in his element when he undertakes to guide the student of the organ through the severe study which is needful even for the moderate handling of this noble instrument. Dr. Stainer has accordingly undertaken "The Organ Primer," and has divided his work into four parts. Part 1, "Short Sketch of the History of the Organ; 2, "Short Explanation of the Construction of the Organ; 3, "Stops and their Management; 4, "Practical Study" a brief compendium of almost all that is necessary to learn on the subjects treated of.—Those of our readers who met with "A First Book on the Theory of Music," written expressly for the use of "High Schools for Girls," by Louisa Gibson, will be glad to continue the series with a second and third book. The former proceeds from "Definitions of Musical Terms" to "Suspensions;" the latter commences with "Chords of the Seventh" and terminates with "Various Forms of Composition." Students preparing for Cambridge or Oxford examination will find valuable help in these three clever works.—Passing from the study of musical composition to the practical results therefrom, we take up an admirable edition of Wagner's opera, The Flying Dutchman edited by Berthold Tours, English version by Rev. J. Troutbeck, through the aid of which we may learn to admire and appreciate the "music of the future."

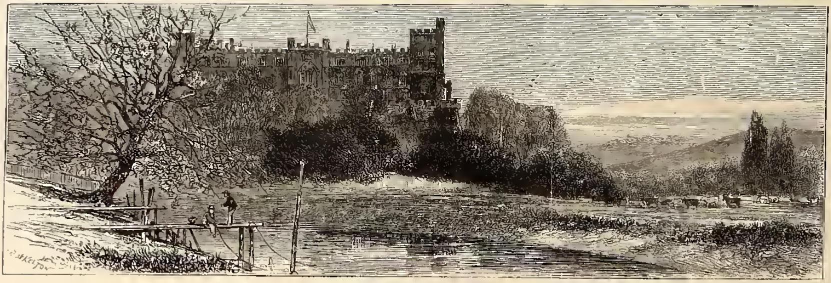
Miscellaneous.——Students may pick up some very useful bits of information from "Primer of Pianoforte Playing," by Franklin Taylor; although there is nothing very novel in this modest little work, it contains much general instruction for the beginner entering upon the study of harmony (Messrs. Macmillan and Co.).—A pleasing love-song for a medium voice is "Waiting but to say Farewell," written and composed by S. Jones and James J. Monk (Messrs. Willey and Co.).—Worthy of its title is "The Merry Maids," a polka élégante for the pianoforte, by Adam Wright (Charles Jefferys).—The "Musical Gazette and Review" has been incorporated with "The Penny Melodist." Besides some carefully written selected articles and reviews, it contains songs by Bishop and Hodges, together with some instrumental music; and, best of all, a very useful list of musical terms and expressions in various languages. Altogether, the new series of this publication promises well for the future (185, Fleet Street).—A poem of an ultra-affectionate description by A. C. Swinburne, entitled "Felise," has been set to appropriate music by T. Marzials (Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co.).

LEGAL

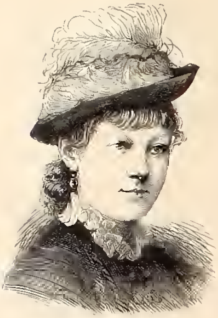
The Trial of the Detectives has at last come to an end, having occupied the attention of the jury for twenty days. Baron Pollock's summing up was a model of lucidity and fairness. His lordship dealt in turn with the evidence affecting each of the prisoners, finishing with the case as presented against Froggatt, the solicitor. The jury, after an absence of nearly an hour, returned a verdict acquitting Inspector Clarke, and finding the four others guilty, but recommending Druscovich and Palmer to mercy, the former on account of his previous good character, and the circumstances under which he was first induced to become acquainted with the convicts: and the latter because of his good character and the absence of evidence proving bribery. The judge passed sentence of two years' hard labour upon each of the convicted prisoners, remarking that though he was desirous to give effect to every recommendation to merciful consideration given by a jury, he felt that the highest punishment which the law allowed him to inflict was a much lighter one than is usually awarded in cases of breaches of trust of a much less important character. The Solicitor-General declined to allow a verdict of not guilty to be taken in respect of an indictment for felony against Meiklejohn, and refused at present to withdraw the remaining indictments against Clarke, who was, however, released on his own recognisances of 100*l*.

The Penge Case.——It is said that the solicitors retained by the Stauntons have been collecting fresh testimony, by which they hope to establish the entire innocence of their clients, and that they will shortly institute a prosecution of Clara Brown for alleged perjury. Notice has already been given to the shorthand writer to the Treasury that he will be required to give evidence against her, and a number of other witnesses will be called. She will, however, be defended by the Solicitor to the Treasury, to whose services she is entitled as a witness for the Crown.

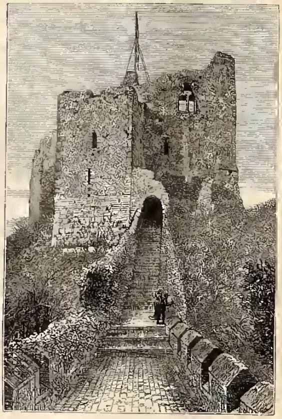
Miscellaneous Items.——An interesting question as to the law of libel is now pending in the Law Courts. The plaintiff brought an action against the Daily News, the Morning Advertiser, and the Standard for having published reports of an ex parte statement made against him at the Westminster Police Court in a case in which Mr. Woolrych decided that he had no jurisdiction. The jury, following the direction of the Lord Chief Justice, gave a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that the report was privileged; but a rule nisi for a new trial has since been granted by the Common Pleas Division, Justices Grove, Denman, and Lindley considering that the point raised as to misdirection by the judge was worth consideration.—A singular divorce suit has just been heard by Sir R. J. Phillimore. The petitioner was a lady who had been inveigled into marriage by an accomplished swindler and card-sharper, who is known to the police by a score of aliases, and who was already a married man. A decree nullifying the marriage was of course pronounced.—Another great jewel robbery is reported. This time the victim is the Countess of Aberdeen, and the value of the



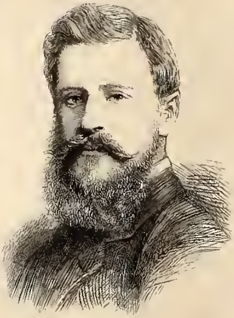
ARUNDEL CASTLE FROM THE RIVER



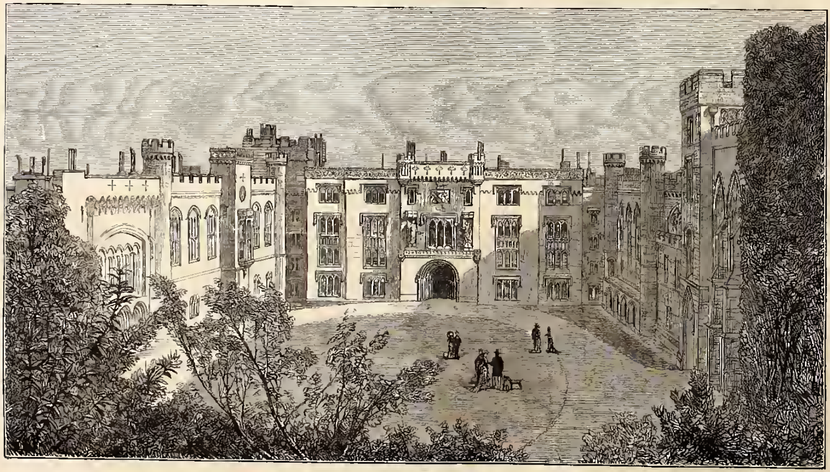
THE DUCHESS OF NORFOLK (NÉE LADY FLORA HASTINGS)



OLD KEEP AT ARUNDEL CASTLE

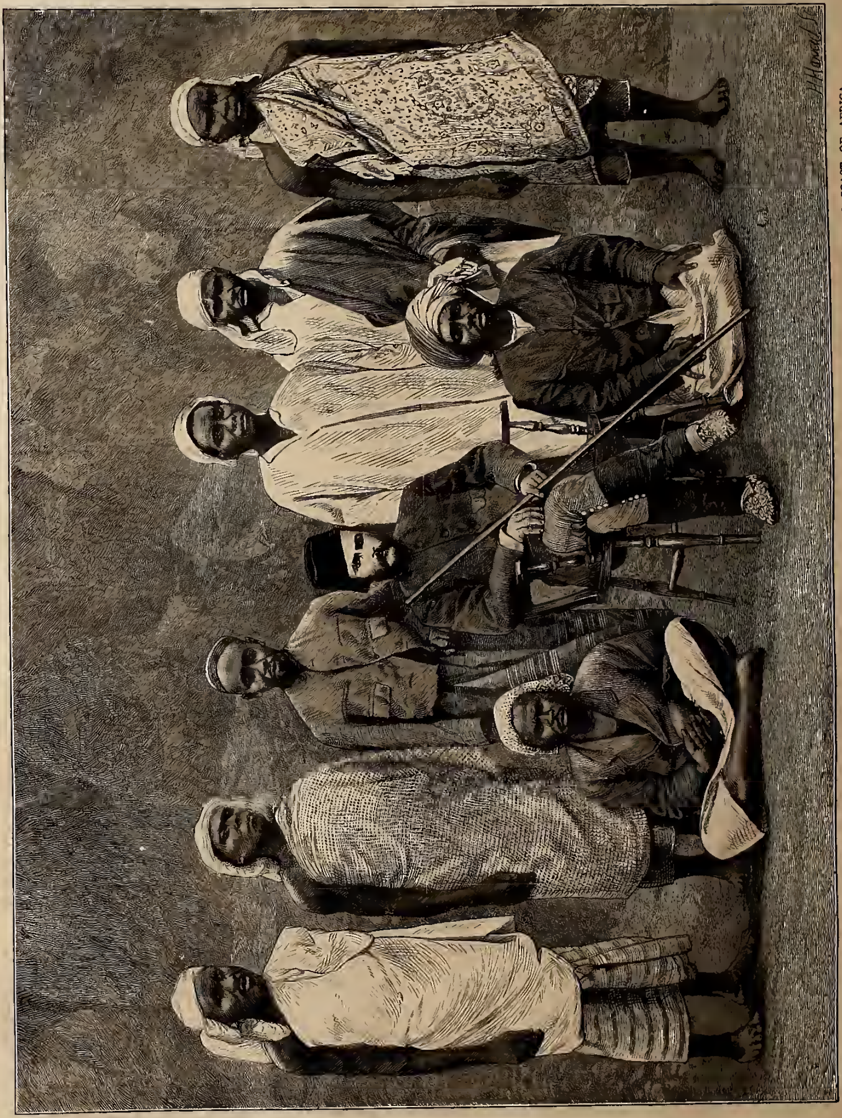


HENRY FITZALAN HOWARD, DUKE OF NORFOLK



QUADRANGLE, ARUNDEL CASTLE

THE MARRIAGE OF THE DUKE OF NORFOLK



AFRICAN EXPLORATION—THE ARRIVAL OF MR. H. M. STANLEY AND THE LEADERS OF HIS EXPEDITION AT CABENDA, WEST COAST OF AFRICA plunder with which the thieves got clear off is stated at 5,000*l*. The scene of the robbery was Halstead Place, near Sevenoaks, where the Earl and Countess were honeymooning.—A heartless swindler has been arrested at Sunderland. He had gone round to a number of poor people stating that Mr. Gibson, a well-known coal merchant of the town, had set aside a quantity of coal to be given away at a charge of 2*s*. per ton prepaid, and by this means he had obtained about 5*l*.—A servant girl has been committed for trial at Leeds for robbing her mistress of 5*l*. It seems that she had spent the money in dress, the possession of which she accounted for by saying that it had been given to her by the mother of her sweetheart, who had recently died, and had backed up her statement by producing a local paper containing an account of the young man's death. It turned out, however, that the announcement was false, and that the "copy" was in her handwriting. She subsequently made a confession, but when before the magistrate retracted it on the plea that it had been extracted from her on a promise of forgiveness.—Another domestic servant in Jersey has had a very narrow escape of being sent to prison. She had stolen a 1*l*. note of a private issue, which has not been negotiable for fifty years. When she attempted to change it she was given into custody, but the magistrate held that the charge of attempted "uttering" could not be maintained.—On Wednesday the convict Benson was taken to the Bankruptcy Court to be examined at a private sitting in the matter of his bankruptcy. His appearance, manacled hand and foot, and in custody of two warders, created some excitement in court, and he seemed to be highly amused at the anxiety of the crowd to get a glimpse of him.—On Monday, at the Central Criminal Court, the Recorder, in addressing the Grand Jury, alluding to the great foreign bond robbery, said that there was great doubt whether the Court had jurisdiction in the matter, as the offence was committed in France. He, however, advised them to return a true bill if they thought the prisoners guilty, and leave the legal question to be settled by a higher tribunal in the event of a conviction.

Folio, price 7s. 6d. each.

THROUGH THE EYE TO THE MIND—THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOKS, a Series of Volumes Illustrative of Natural History and of the Vegetable World, with Descriptive Letterpress.

"These volumes are among the most instructive picture books we have seen, and we know of none better calculated to excite and gratify the appetite of the young for the knowledge of nature."—Times.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Tenth Edition, with Fifty-four Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 1: or, LESSONS FROM THE NATURAL HISTORY OF ANIMALS. By ADAM WHITE, late Assistant, Zoological Department, British Museum.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Fifth Edition, with many new Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 2: or, LESSONS FROM THE VEGETABLE WORLD. By the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," "The Herb of the Field," &c.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Third Edition, with Sixty Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 3: LESSONS ON THE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS, or the Natural History of the Quadrupeds which characterise the Four Divisions of the Globe.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Second Edition, with Forty-eight Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 4: SKETCHES FROM NATURE, or Pictures of Animal and Vegetable Life in all Lands.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Seventh Edition, with Thirty-six Oblong Coloured Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.

RECREATIVE ILLUSTRATION—THE NEW PICTURE BOOK; or, PICTORIAL LESSONS ON FORM, COMPARISON, AND NUMBER, for Children under Seven Years of Age. With Explanation by NICHOLAS BOHNY.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Map and Illustrations, price 6s.

THE HEROES OF YOUNG AMERICA. By ASCOTT R. HOPE, Author of "A Peck of Troubles," "A Book About Boys," "A Book About Dominoes," &c., &c.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, price 6s.

ADVENTURES IN THE AIR: being Memorable Experiences of Great Aeronauts. From the French of M. DE FONVIELLE. Translated and edited by JOHN S. KELTIE.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

RIMMEL'S Perfumed ALMANACS. "ARTS AND SCIENCES," richly illuminated, 6d. FAN ALMANAC, 6d. COMIC POCKET BOOK ALMANAC (Olympus), 1s. Sent on receipt of Stamps, 96, Strand; 128, Regent St.; 24, Cornhill.

HAVE YOU READ "BRIEF?"

WHAT IS "BRIEF"?

"BRIEF" IS THE NEW PENNY WEEKLY PAPER.

BRIEF, the CHEAPEST and BEST FAMILY PAPER ever Published.

Every Saturday, One Penny. Yearly, post free, 6s. 6d.

BRIEF: an Epitome of Current News, Thought, and Criticism. Contains the Cream of all the Daily and Weekly Papers. The best Family Paper. One Penny Weekly.

WYMAN and SONS, 81, Great Queen Street, London, W.C.

WELDON and CO.'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL (Fourth Season). Price 1s. Postage, 2d. Capitally Illustrated. PAN THE PILGRIM: a Vision of Judgment.

London: WELDON and CO., Wine Office Court, Fleet St.

Ready this day, Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. (postage 5d.)

THE

PICTURE AMATEUR'S HANDBOOK

AND

DICTIONARY OF PAINTERS.

Being a Guide for Visitors to Public and Private Picture Galleries and for Art Students, including an Explanation of the various Methods of Painting and Instructions for Cleaning, Re-lining, and Restoring Oil Paintings, a Glossary of Terms, an Historical Sketch of the Principal Schools of Painting, and a Dictionary of Painters, giving the Copyists and Imitators of each Master.

By PHILIPPE DARYL, B.A.

CROSBY LOCKWOOD and CO., 7, Stationers' Hall Court, London, E.C.

DANCING MADE EASY.—COULON'S HANDBOOK OF DANCING is the most complete treatise on the subject, containing full descriptions of all dances, new and old, illustrated by upwards of forty woodcuts. Price 1s.; post free, 13 stamps.—A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, W. All new music half-price.

BY DR. BARR MEADOWS.

Seventh Edition, cloth, post free 32 stamps.

ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Remarks on the Abuse of Arsenic and other reputed specifics.—G. HILL, 154, Westminster Bridge Road.

THE WIZARD'S BOX of MAGIC. Instructions and Apparatus for performing Ten Capital Conjuring Tricks. Sufficient for one hour's amusement. Post free, 14 stamps.—H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street.

THE MOST LAUGHABLE THING on EARTH.—A new Parlour Pastime, 30,000 Comical Transformations for Evening Parties. Post free for 14 stamps. H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street, Covent Garden.

MOTHER SHIPTON'S PROPHETIC ORACLE.—A new and highly amusing Fortune-Telling Game. Post free for 14 stamps. Catalogue, 1 stamp. H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street, Covent Garden.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL (SELECT) FOR LADIES, BOLTON HOUSE, 192, Clapham Road, Surrey. Established 1867. A private home where patients suffering from serious diseases, and requiring special supervision, can obtain the best medical and surgical treatment without incurring anxiety in their own homes. Treatise of successful cures forwarded for twelve stamps. Physician, DAVID JONES, M.D. Consultations daily, 11 till 2 (Tuesday and Friday excepted), at 15, Welbeck St., London.

SOUTH KENSINGTON and BELGRAVIA HOUSE AGENCY OFFICES, 116, Cromwell Road, and 1, Motcomb Street, S.W.—Mr. HOWELL'S PRINTED INDEX LIST, post free, of Choice Residences to be LET or SOLD.

POPULAR WALTZES, easily arranged, without octaves, for piano, by JULES ROCHARD.

Loved and Lost. Müller.
The Last Kiss. Müller.
Rêve d'Amour. Lamothe.
Manolo. Waldteufel.
Beautiful Danube. Strauss.
Doctrinen. Strauss.
Morgenblatter. Strauss.
Thousand and One Nights. Strauss.

Post free, 1s. each.

DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

JULIETTE.—NEW WALTZ by LAMOTHE. Played at Arditi's Promenade Concerts. One of the prettiest of Lamothe's waltzes; full of melody, and easy to play. Post free for 2s.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street, London, and of all musicsellers in town and country.

LOUISA GRAY'S NEW SONGS.

Under the Lamplight. 4s.
Home of My Childhood. 3s.
Jeanette. 3s.
My Highland Home. 3s.
Jenny's Wedding. 3s.
My Little Sister. 3s.

Half-price.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

BERTHOLD TOURS' NEW SONGS.

Stay, Sweet Swallow.
Love and Time.
One Love Alone.
The Miner.
Only Love Can Tell.
The Charms that I Sing.

Post free 2s. each.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford St.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO (Co-operative price for cash). Seven octaves, strong, round, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free. Drawings gratis on application.

THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., Portman Sq.

PIANOS, £16—Pianos, £18—Pianos, £20 —GREAT SALE of PIANOS returned from Hire. Full compass, 7 octaves. In excellent condition, equal to new, at half the original prices. Packed free and forwarded to any part of the kingdom. Descriptive lists post free on application.

THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., London, W.

EBONY and GOLD PIANOS, 28 Guineas, 35 Guineas, and 45 Guineas.—These charming and elegant Pianos, with ormolu embellishments, elaborately carved work, repetition action, and every recent improvement, may now be obtained at the above low prices for cash, or on the three years' system at one guinea per month. The Illustrated Catalogue gratis and post free.

THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

PIANO, £35 (Civil Service cash price).—Trichord Drawing Room Model, repetition action, grand, rich, full tone, handsome Italian walnut-wood case, elaborately carved fretwork front, and cabriole truss legs. The usual price charged for this instrument is 50 guineas.

THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

NEW MUSIC by MARY TRAVERS.

Faithful	1s. 6d. net.
It Was Nothing But a Rose, E flat, F, A flat	2s. 0d. net.
Wishing, E flat, F	1s. 6d. net.
Coquette, Morceau de Salon	1s. 6d. net.
Impromptu (in D)	2s. 0d. net.
Original Air, with Variations (in A)	1s. 6d. net.

ASHBEE and HOLLOWAY, 23, Spring St., Hyde Park, W.

BUTLER'S MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Violins, Concertinas, Harmoniums, Flutes, Clarionets, Flageolets, Guitars, Zithers, Banjoes, Accordions, Flutinas, Cornets, Saxhorns, Drums, Fifes, and Musical Instruments of every description. Largest assortment in the kingdom at BUTLER'S MANUFACTORY, 29, Haymarket, London.—Illustrated catalogue, 50 pages, post free.

AMERICAN ORGAN for SALE.—A fine AMERICAN ORGAN by MASON and HAMLIN, containing Automatic Swell, Foot Swell, Sub Bass, Diapason, Flute, Melodia, Dulciana, Octave Coupler, Euphone, 2 Pedals suitable for drawing room, and sufficiently powerful for schoolroom or small church. Cased in American Black Walnut. Cost 55 guineas, now offered for £40 cash.—Apply by letter to X 2, Messrs. Geo. Rees, 43, Russell Street, Covent Garden.

DE LA RUE and CO.'S INDELIBLE RED LETTER DIARIES, CONDENSED DIARIES, and TABLET CALENDARS, for 1878, in great variety, may now be had of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Publishers,

THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

DE LA RUE and CO.'S PLAYING CARDS. The New Patterns for the Season may now be had of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Manufacturers,

THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

By Royal Letters Patent.

"DEXTER" PLAYING CARDS, with rounded Corners and Patent Index-pips, extra thin, and highly burnished on both sides. Of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Manufacturers,

THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

DE LA RUE and CO.'S CHRISTMAS CARDS, in great variety, prepared from original designs and illustrated by original verses. Of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Publishers,

THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

GO-BANG, a JAPANESE GAME, with Board arranged on an improved principle, Counters, and "Guide" by "CAVENDISH." Retail at 5s. and upwards. Of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Manufacturers,

THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

Now ready, 11th Edition, 8vo, cloth, extra gilt, price 5s.

WHIST. The Laws and Principles of. By "CAVENDISH." Of all Booksellers and Stationers.

THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

By the same Author

ECARTÉ. The Laws of, adopted by the TURF CLUB, WITH A TREATISE ON THE GAME. Price 2s. 6d. ROUND GAMES AT CARDS, Price 1s. 6d. PIQUET, Price 3s. 6d. LAWN TENNIS and BADMINTON, Price 1s. POCKET GUIDES, Price 6d. each: WHIST (3)—Guide; Laws; Leads. BEZIQUE. POLISH BEZIQUE. ECARTÉ. EUCHRE. SPOIL-FIVE. CRIBBAGE. CALABRASELLA. SIXTY-SIX. GO-BANG. BACK-GAMMON. CHESS. DRAUGHTS. Of all Booksellers and Stationers.

THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

STATHAM'S PRESENTS for YOUTH. Endless Amusement for Holidays and Evenings. Illust. Catalogue, Polytechnic Amusements, Scientific Apparatus, Mechanical Models, Toys, Games, 3 stamps.

W. E. STATHAM, 112½, Strand, London.

MALVERN COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will begin on Monday, January 28.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' One Shilling Moist Colour Box. Unadulterated pigments. Box to japanned tin.—LECHERTIER, BARBE, and CO., 60, Regent St., Lond., and local Artists' Colourmen and Stationers.

£10.—In return for a £10 Note, free and safe, per post, one of BENNETT'S LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, perfect for time, beauty, and workmanship, with keyless action, air tight, damp tight, and dust tight.—65, Cheapside, London. Good chains at manufacturer's prices. P.O.O. to John Bennett.

BENNETT, 65 and 64, Cheapside.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO?—Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, book plates, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 20s. Solid gold ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked, with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 9d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourne Street, corner of St. Martin's Lane.

VISITING CARDS by Culleton.—Fifty, best quality, 1s. 3d., post free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate. Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 13s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25 Cranbourn St. (corner of St. Martin's Lane), W.C.

CULLETON'S Guinea Box of Stationery contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn Street (corner of St. Martin's Lane).

FOR ARMS and CREST SEND NAME and COUNTY to T. MORING, Inns of Court Heraldic Office, 44, High Holborn, W.C. Sketch, 3s. 6d.; Coloured, 7s. 6d. Seals, Dies, &c. Illustrated Price Lists Post free.

WEDDING PRESENTS.—MECHI, 112, Regent Street, W.—Customers wishing to obtain for WEDDING, BIRTHDAY, or COMPLIMENTARY PRESENTS, dressing-cases and dressing-bags, writing cases, work-tables, inkstands, card boxes, tea-caddies, cutlery in all its branches, electro-plated and silver dessert knives and forks, and other articles of utility or ornament, will find every variety in style, elegance, design, and price at MECHI'S, 112, Regent Street. Catalogues post free.

GARDNERS' TOUGHENED GLASS and INDESTRUCTIBLE DINNER WARE, the Glass direct from De la Bastie's Manufactory. Wholesale price lists free on application.—GARDNERS', Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

GARDNERS' NEW DINNER SERVICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons:—

	£	s.	d.
The Osborne, in pink or green	£3	5	0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3	13	6
The Bramble, in all colours	4	4	0
The One Thousand and Two	5	5	0
The One Thousand and Two A	5	5	0
The Japanese Bamboo	6	6	0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNER'S, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

MAPPIN and WEBB,

MANUFACTURERS,

Mansion House Buildings, City, London.

The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S TABLE CUTLERY.—BEST QUALITY DOUBLE SHEAR STEEL.

	Table	Dessert	Carver
Ivory, per doz.	15s. od.	11s. od.	7s. od.
Ivory, balance, per doz.	19s. od.	15s. od.	7s. od.
Ivory, balance, per doz.	22s. od.	16s. od.	7s. 6d.
Ivory, stout, per doz.	32s. od.	22s. od.	9s. 6d.
4 inch fine Ivory, per doz.	34s. od.	24s. od.	10s. 6d.

Oak Boxes always kept ready in stock.

Illustrated catalogues post free.

MAPPIN and WEBB,

MANUFACTURERS,

76, 77, and 78, Oxford Street, West End, London.

The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

E. DENT and CO., 61, Strand, and 43, Royal Exchange, London, Manufacturers of CHRONOMETERS, WATCHES, CLOCKS, &c. (Catalogues free) to Her Majesty the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and Foreign Sovereigns.

Makers of the Great Westminster Clock and of the New Standard Clock of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

FURNISH your House at Deane & Co.'s. Catalogue, with Furnishing Estimates, post-free.

1. Table Knives, Ivory, per doz., 19s., 25s., 35s., 40s.
2. Electro Forks, Table, 24s. to 64s.; Spoons, 24s. to 66s.
3. Papier-Mache Tea Trays, in sets, 21s., 56s., 95s.
4. Electro Tea and Coffee Sets, £3 7s., £7 10s. to £24.
5. Dish-Covers—Tin, 22s.; Metal, 65s.; Electro, £11 11s.
6. Electro Cruets, from 12s. 6d. to £6 6s.
7. Electro Liqueur Frames, 40s. to £7 7s.
8. Lamps—Patent Duplex Rock Oil, Colza Oil, &c.
9. Fenders—Bright, 45s. to £15; Bronze, 3s. to £6.
10. Baths—Hot and Cold Water, Gas, Travelling, &c.
11. Bedsteads, Brass and Iron, with Bedding.
12. Gaseliers—2-light, 17s.; 3 do., 50s.; 5 do., £6 6s.
13. Kitcheners, front 3 ft., £3 to 6 ft. £30.
14. Kitchen Utensils—Copper, Tin, and Iron.

DEANE and CO., 46, King William Street, London Bridge.

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY | "THE PERFECTION OF WHISKY." UNRIVALLED FOR "TODDY."

Wholesale of the Sole Proprietors, GREENLEES BROS., 1, Gresham Buildings, E.C. (Distilleries, Argyleshire.)

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—Universally recommended by the Medical Profession. A pure old spirit, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome. Dr. HASSALL says:—"The samples were soft and mellow to the taste, aromatic and ethereal to the smell. The Whisky must be pronounced to be pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality."

HEDGES and Butler, 155, Regent Street, London, and 30 and 74, King's Road, Brighton, invite attention to their

CLARET, at 14s., 18s., 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s., to 84s.
SHERRY, at 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s., 48s., to 60s.
CHAMPAGNE, at 36s., 42s., 48s., 60s., 66s., to 78s.
OLD PORT, at 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s., 48s., 60s., to 96s.
Fine old Pale Brandy, 48s., 60s., 72s., 84s.

CHRISTMAS CASES, One Guinea, containing 3 Bottles of Port, 3 Sherry, 1 Gin, 1 Rum, 1 Whiskey, 2 Brandy, 1 lb. Tea. All reputed quart bottles, warranted pure and genuine. Sent bottles, case, and carriage free, to any Railway Station in England, by the VICTORIA WINE CO., 12, Mark Lane. P.O.O. to W. W. HUGHES.

WILLS' "BEST BIRD'S-EYE" CIGARETTES. Sold everywhere in Sixpenny Packets (containing Ten), protected by our Name and Trade Mark.—W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

WILLS' "THREE CASTLES." "There's no sweeter Tobacco comes from Virginia, and no better brand than the 'THREE CASTLES.'"—Vide "The Virginians." Sold only in Packets, protected by the Name and Trade Mark of

W. D. and H. O. WILLS.

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER OF 1877.

PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, is now offering a second delivery of New COLOURED LYONS SILKS.

In this collection will be found White, Cream, Ivory, Tilleul, Moonlight, Corail, Eau de Nil, &c., &c., specially prepared for BRIDAL AND EVENING WEAR, also every new shade of Bronze, Navy, Claret, Prune, &c., &c., at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., 4s. 4½d., and 5s. 3d. per yard. 250 Shades to select from. Patterns free on application to PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

ONE THOUSAND PIECES OF

BLACK GROS GRAINS. This extensive purchase comprises Silks of the best and most reliable makes, and are specially recommended. Prices 2s. 6½d., 3s. 3½d., and 3s. 9d. per yard. Also richer goods from 4s. 6d. to 10s. 6d. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

300 PIECES RICH

BLACK and COLOURED VELVETS, plain and brocaded in all the new designs, prices, Black and Plain Colours, from 4s. 11d., Brocaded, from 12s. 9d. Patterns free.

BLACK AND COLOURED

SILK COSTUMES, made from the new Paris Models in eight different styles of the most approved designs, as shown in Engravings, prices, with bodice complete, Black, from 4½, Colours, from 5½ guineas.

Patterns of the Silk and Fashion Plates post free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

THE LATEST PRODUCTION IN

MANTLES AND PALETOTS,

Cashmere Circulars, lined Fur, 35s. to 5 guineas.
Cashmere Paletots, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Circulars, lined Fur, 5 to 10 guineas.
Silk Paletots, lined Fur, 6 to 15 guineas.

THE NEW DIAGONAL

CLOTH PALETOTS, 2 to 5 guineas.

The New Beaver Cloth Paletots, 28s. 9d. to 5 guineas.
New Ulster Mantles, 17s. 6d. to 5os. 6d.
Waterproof Mantles and Ulsters, 17s. 6d. to 42s.

Patterns and Engravings free from PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, London, W.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF NOVELTIES FOR

WINTER DRESSES, in every variety of Fabric and Shade of Colour, From 12s. 6d. to 42s. the Full Dress. Patterns free.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON.

CASHMERE MERINOES, all wool, This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 2s. 2d. to 2s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

NEW AND ELEGANT DESIGNS IN

WINTER COSTUMES.

Cashmere and Silk Costumes, 4 guineas.
Specialities in Costumes suitable for Travelling, Promenade, and Indoor Wear, 38s. 6d. to 7 guineas.
Rich Velvet-Velveteen Costumes, 3½ to 7 guineas.
Illustrations and Patterns of Materials post free.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES REQUIRING

MADE BALL and Wedding Dresses. Now ready, several thousand charming Dresses in White, Black, and all colours, from 18s. 9d. to 10 guineas. Engravings of the above, with many others, can be seen in the New Book of Fashions, which is sent post free.

A FAVOURITE DRESS IN TARLATAN.

THE "DORA" (any Colour or Black), profusely trimmed with flounces and ample train, 1 guinea, a substantial box included. A pretty Brussels Net Dress, in White, Black, and all colours, for 18s. 9d., with material for bodice. Patterns of Materials and Illustrations free from PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

BLACK SILKS.—£20,000 Worth.—Faithfully recommended to their Customers by Messrs. JAY. These silks are unweighted, pure in quality, and may be fully relied on to wear well.

Present price		Last year's price
Present price	3s. 9d.	5s. 9d.
"	4s. 3d.	6s. 6d.
"	4s. 9d.	7s. 3d.
"	5s. 3d.	8s. 3d.
"	5s. 9d.	9s. 6d.
"	6s. 9d.	10s. 3d.

ALL WOOL POPLIN COSTUMES, of the latest designs and fashions, 2½ guineas each, material for bodice included. "A remarkably cheap dress for this season of the year."

TO CHARITIES, COMMUNITIES, &c.—BLANKET SERGE.—Messrs. JAY have had manufactured a really stout, warm, and durable BLANKET SERGE in Black, Grey, and Dark Blue, suitable for Dresses or Petticoats, which they are now selling in quantities of not less than one whole piece (60 yards) at the low price of One Shilling per yard.

JAY'S,
THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
Regent Street, W.

DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP of GASK and GASK.

SALE of the whole of their IMMENSE STOCK of SILK MERCERY, GENERAL DRAPERY, &c. ALL NEW FOR THIS SEASON.

GREAT REDUCTIONS in PRICES have been made throughout, and all articles marked in plain figures at the lowest prices for READY MONEY ONLY.

SILKS and VELVETS of all kinds, cheaper than they have ever been sold.

BONNET'S and PONSON'S CELEBRATED BLACK SILKS, greatly reduced in price.

COSTUMES.—Perhaps the largest and best Stock of New Costumes in London. Paris Models in Silk, Silk and Velvet, Silk and Cachemire, new Silken and Woollen Fabrics, &c., all now marked exceedingly cheap.

EVENING COSTUMES in Tulle, Net, Tarlatan, &c.; beautiful new designs, all equally cheap, commencing at 15s. 9d. each.

MANTLES, PALETOTS, JACKETS.—All the vast collection, new for this season, of Paris Mantles, &c., in Cloth, Vigognes, Camel's Hair, Matelasse, Velvet, fur-lined Cachemires and Silks, Sealskins, Ulsters, &c., has been re-marked at exceptionally low prices.

DRESS FABRICS.—A great collection of all the newest materials, Foreign and English, all marked at the reduced prices.

Gloves, Hosiery, Linen Goods, Blankets, Flannels, Calicoes, Lace Goods, Ties, Scarves, Fichus, Ribbons, Trimmings, Umbrellas, Ladies' Underclothing, Millinery, Mourning Goods of all kinds, &c.

All purchasers must effect a considerable saving during this Sale. Patterns free to the country.

The doors are opened each morning at ten o'clock.

58 to 63, Oxford Street; 1 to 5, Wells Street, London.

LADIES' IRISH ULSTER COATS, made in the best manner by experienced tailors. Immense variety of Irish Friezes and other fashionable materials. Patterns and forms for self-measurement post free.

RICHARD ALLEN, Sackville Street, Dublin.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR

GLENFIELD STARCH

SEE THAT YOU GET IT,

As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

PETER ROBINSON'S
COURT AND GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, REGENT STREET,
Is the Cheapest and the Largest
Warehouse of the kind in London.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S
WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS,
REGENT STREET.
For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
in the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.
"ON RECEIPT of LETTER
or TELEGRAM,"
MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required), without extra charge.
PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.
DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
in the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well
as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by
PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
AN IMPORTANT PURCHASE
OF SEVERAL THOUSAND PIECES BY
PETER ROBINSON of Regent Street
OF THE BEST WEARING MAKES ONLY,
and highly recommended.

Bonnet and Cie	at 5s. 0d
Jaubert	at 4s. 0d.
Ponsons	at 5s. 3d.
Degoves	at 4s. 9d.

The above are from 2s. to 3s. per yard
under last year's prices.
The EMPRESS CACHEMIRE, at 6s.
Also Excellent Value at
2s. 6d., 3s 3d., 3s. 11d., 4s 6d., and 4s. 11d.
For Patterns address to
PETER ROBINSON,
256 to 262, Regent Street.

BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS.
Exceedingly good qualities,
at 7s. 6d., 8s 9d., 10s 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d.
A Special Bargain
in Lyons Velvet, at 10s. 9d.
Black Silk-Trimming Velvets.
at 4s 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s 9d.
At PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.
Nos. 256 to 262.

FOR SIX GUINEAS.
A BLACK SILK COSTUME
made of RICH LYONS SILK.
with Velvet Garniture,
Exquisitely cut and fashioned.
Copies of expensive Paris Models.
Photos free.
PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

REMARKABLY CHEAP. For One Guinea, A Black Quilted SATIN PETTICOAT.
For 2½ Guineas, A Black Silk TRAINED SKIRT.
At PETER ROBINSON'S of REGENT STREET.

FOR TWO GUINEAS, and up to Seven,
Costumes in New Black Materials,
in various fashionable Styles.
At PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,

EVENING DRESSES, at One Guinea.
Black Brussels Net, at 29s 6d.
Tulle (condition keeping), 50s.
Grenadine, 59s 6d.
New Styles, well cut, and elegantly trimmed.
Illustrations free.

THE NEW CRAPE.
The Pure Silk Gordian Crape,
for Widows and Families.
Its advantages are—that it is made
of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon
nor spot with rain.
It is a richer black, free from dust, and the gummed appearance so objectionable in other Crape.
The wear of every yard is guaranteed.
The Gordian Crape is a Specialité,
only to be obtained at
PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET,
The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262.
Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 9s. 6d.
Patterns free.

FUR-LINED CLOAKS
at SUMMER PRICES.
Good useful Cloaks at
3½ and 4½ guineas.

SEMI-FITTING SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long for 9½ guineas.
36 inches long for 11 guineas.
39 inches long for 13 guineas.
at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.

NOTICE.—In reference to the above advertisement,
It is important that letters
should be clearly addressed to
256 to 262, REGENT STREET.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS
REDUCTION
OF PRICES.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
30 inches long,
from 8 to 12 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long,
from 10 to 15 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
36 inches long,
from 12 to 16 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
40 inches long,
from 16 to 20 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
46 inches long,
from 20 to 28 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 40 inches long, richly trimmed with real marten tails, 12 inches deep, 20 gs.; Real Sable, 10 inches deep, 40 gs.; Skunk, 20 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS can be sent on approval to any part of the United Kingdom by forwarding a reference in Town to

---

MESSRS. WAYRE, Manufacturing FURRIERS, 96, Oxford Street, and 332, Oxford Street (corner of Regent Circus). Established Half-a-Century.

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.

BRUSSELS CARPETS.

VELVET CARPETS, &c.

EXHIBITION MEDALS, 1851, 1862: DUBLIN, 1865.
34 and 36, OLD BOND STREET, W.

HENRY GLAVE'S
NEW AUTUMN DRESS GOODS.
1,000 New Patterns of the choicest Shades and designs, the productions of various European nations.
7,000 yards of Autumn Serge, 10½d. the yard.
Yachting Serges, 6½d. and 10½d. the yard.
Autumn Beges, 8½d. the yard.
Matelasse Serge, 1s. 3½d. (Sage, Olive Green, &c.)
Estamene Serges, 1s 3½d and 1s. 6½d.
Homespun Estamene, 1s. 6½d., 27 in. wide.
New Snowflakes, Camel's Hair, and Vicuna Cloths.
Shetland Estamene, 27 in. wide, 1s. 4½d. the yard.
Poil de Chameau, French production, all wool,
30 in. wide, 1s. 9½d. the yard.
The Royal Blue Naval Serge, 1s. 0½d. (all wool).
The "Inflexible" Serge, 1s. 0½d. and 1s. 4½d.
The "Princess" Serge, 1s. 6½d and 1s. 11½d. yard.
The New Circassian Cord, 11½d. yd., superb colours.
Seaboro' Twill, 1s. 0½d.; Derby Matelasse, 1s. 0½d.; New Autumn Rink Skirting, 1s. 11½d. the yard, 40 in wide; Indian Cashmere, Autumn Shades, 48 in. wide, 2s. 11½d. yard.
These and other Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
NEW SILK PATTERNS are now ready.
The Princess Black Silk, 3s. 9d.
The Princess Black Silk, 4s. 9d. } A New Make of
The Princess Black Silk, 5s. 9d. } Extreme Richness
The Princess Black Silk, 6s. 9d.
BLACK SILKS, 1s. 6½d. to 10s. the yard.
The Queen's Black Silk, 7s. 11d.
The Queen's Black Silk, 8s. 11d. } Superb Goods &
The Queen's Black Silk, 9s. 11d. } Splendid Wear.
The Queen's Black Silk, 10s. 11d.
A special parcel of Coloured Silks, 2s. 11½d. yard.
Coloured Gro Grain Silks, 3s. 11½d., 4s. 11d., 5s. 11d., and 6s. 11d. the yard. Floral Silks for Trimmings, 3s. 9½d. Japanese Figures, 1s. 3½d.
A Special Lot Black Velveteens, 1s. 11½d., and Colours, at 2s. 10½d. yard. Patterns free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
DOUBLE-WIDTH HOMESPUNS, SERGES, and MELTONS, measuring from 54 to 60 inches in width.
Double-width Homespun Serge, in Blue, Black, or Brown, 1s. 3½d. Double-width Scotch Serges, in Autumn Colours, 1s 11½d. Double-width Melton Cloths, 1s. 6½d., 1s. 11½d., and 2s. 11½d.
Stout Double-width Matelasse, 3s. 11d. to 6s. 11d.
Stout Beaver and Napp Mantle Cloths, 3s. 11d., 4s. 11d., and 5s. 11d. Stout Camel's Hair Cloths, 5s. 11d., 6s. 11d., and 7s. 11d. a yard. All Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
PHOTOGRAPHS AND SKETCHES OF BALL AND SOIREE DRESSES.
A large variety of Styles and Colours kept in Stock, or made to measure on the Shortest Notice.
"Robe de Bal," Coloured Tarlatan Dresses, 18s. 9d., or trimmed with flowers or coloured ribbons, 25s. 6d.
"Palais Royal," Coloured Tarlatan Dresses, handsomely trimmed with wreaths of flowers, 29s. 6d., or with brocaded silk trimming, 35s. 6d.
"La Charmeuse," White, Black, and Coloured Net Dresses, 2 gs., or trimmed with flowers or silk, 2½ gs.
"Giroflée," Muslin Dresses, in pale blue, cream, pink, or mauve, 29s 6d., or brocaded silk trimming, 37s. 6d.
"Special Cheap Ball Dresses," complete, with made bodice in blue, black, white, pink, mauve, or cream, Tarlatan, 16s. 9d. each, made to measure in a few hours.
"Fairy," White Muslin Dresses, 18s 9d., or trimmed with coloured bows, 25s. 6d., or with lace, 29s. 6d.
"Ninon," Coloured Check Grenadine Dresses, 39s 6d.
"Antoinette," Grey Japanese Silk Dresses, brocaded, 35s. 6d and 5 gs.
"Yolande," Black Grenadine Dresses, 21s. 6d. and 29s. 6d., or handsomely trimmed with coloured bows or flowers, 35s. 6d.
"Gipsy," Coloured Japanese Silk Dresses, 3 gs., or trimmed brocaded silk, £3 10s. 6d.; Brocaded Japanese Silk Dresses, £5 10s. 6d.
"Argentine," Coloured Silk Dresses, 4, 5, and 6 gs.
"Soirée Wraps," in White Wool, 3s. 11d. to 18s. 9d., in Coloured Wool, 6s. 11d. to 22s. 9d.
Children's White Muslin Dresses, 1st size, 7s. 11d., to Young Ladies' size, at 15s. 9d.
Photographs with Patterns of Material, and Instructions for Self-Measurement post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

WOOLLEN CLOTHS. Waterproof Tweeds, Matelasse Cloths, Sealskins, Fur Beavers, and other materials for Ladies' Jackets; also every kind of Woollen Goods for Gentlemen's and Boys' wear.
C. MEEKING and CO., Woollen Warehouse,
111 and 112, Hatton Garden, Holborn Circus, London

SHIRTS.—FORD'S EUREKA.—"The most perfect fitting made."—Observer. Gentlemen desirous of purchasing shirts of the best quality should try Ford's Eureka. 30s., 40s., 45s. half-dozen.

ÆGIDIUS.—A New ELASTIC OVER-SHIRT, as warm as wool, as soft as silk. It will entirely dispense with the ever-shrinking coloured flannel, 13s. 6d. to 14s. 6d. each. Patterns of material and self-measure free by post.—FORD and CO., 41 and 44, Poultry, London.

COLD CREAM OF ROSES.—PIESSE and LUBIN prepare this exquisite COSMETIC with the greatest care, fresh daily, in jars, 1s.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London.

PIESSE & LUBIN'S SWEET SCENTS
—Opoponax, Jockey Club, Patchouly, Frangipanni, Kiss-me-Quick, White Rose, and 1,000 others from every flower that breathes a fragrance, 2s. 6d. each, 3 bottles in a case, 7s. The above sweet scents in sachet powder, 1s. 6d. each, can be forwarded by post. Sold by fashionable Druggists and Perfumers in all parts of the world.

PIESSE and LUBIN's PESTACHIO NUT SKIN AND COMPLEXION POWDER imparts a natural whiteness and youthful delicacy to the skin attainable by no other means; also represses the unpleasantness of too copious perspiration.—2, New Bond Street, London, W. May be had of all the fashionable perfumers and druggists throughout the earth. In boxes, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d.

BREIDENBACH'S TALIPAT BLOSSOMS.—The NEW SCENT for 1877. A great novelty, and quite different to all others. 2s 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., 10s., 20s. Sole Address, 157B, New Bond Street, London. All kinds of Perfumery for Export duty free.

IF YOUR HAIR IS WEAK USE
BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE OIL, 1s.; or three bottles in one, 2s. 6d.—Sole Address, 157B, New Bond St. Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Drapers

---

ROWLAND'S ODONTO.
Has been proved, by its unparalleled success of seventy years, to be the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and Fragrant Breath, being perfectly free from all deleterious and acid compounds which give a temporary whiteness to the teeth, but ultimately ruin the enamel. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers everywhere. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

HEALTHY SKIN and GOOD COM-PLEXION.
PEARS'S TRANSPARENT SOAP,
is the Best for the
TOILET, NURSERY, and SHAVING.
Recommended in the Journal of Cutaneous Medicine, edited by Mr.
ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S.,
used by
THE ROYAL FAMILY,
and Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere.

TAMAR-INDIEN, a laxative, refreshing, and medicated Fruit Lozenge—the effectual Cure of Constipation, Headache, Bile, Hæmorrhoids, &c. Tamar (unlike pills and the usual purgatives) is agreeable to take, and never produces irritation. 2s. 6d. per box; post free, 2s. 8d.
E. GRILLON, Wool Exchange, E.C., and of all Chemists.

EPPS'S	GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.
COCOA.	JAMES EPPS AND CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS.

SCHWEITZER'S COCOATINA.
Anti-Dyspeptic Cocoa or Chocolate Powder.
Guaranteed Pure Soluble Cocoa, with excess of Fat extracted.
Four times the strength of Cocoas Thickened yet Weakened with Arrowroot, Starch, &c., and really cheaper.
The Faculty pronounce it the most nutritious, perfectly digestive Beverage for "BREAKFAST, LUNCHEON, or SUPPER," and invaluable for Invalids and Children. Keeps in all Climates. Requires no Cooking. A teaspoonful in Breakfast cup costing less than a halfpenny. Samples gratis.
H. SCHWEITZER and CO., 10, Adam Street, London, W.C.

FOR BLANC-MANGE, PUDDINGS, CUSTARDS,

CHILDREN AND INVALIDS' DIET,

AND ALL THE USES OF ARROWROOT,

BROWN and POLSON'S
CORN FLOUR

HAS A WORLD-WIDE REPUTATION,

AND IS DISTINGUISHED FOR

UNIFORMLY SUPERIOR QUALITY.

AMERICAN CENTENNIAL
PRIZE MEDAL.
FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
"A most delicious and valuable article."—Standard.
"The Caracas Cocoa of such choice quality."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.

FRY'S EXTRACT OF COCOA.
Of great value to invalids who wish to avoid rich articles of diet.
"Which really consists of Cocoa Nibs deprived of the superfluous oil."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.
TENTH INTERNATIONAL MEDAL
awarded to J. S. FRY and SONS.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN COMPANY, LIVERPOOL ROAD, LONDON, N., supply the best goods only. Whites for pastry, 10s. per bushel; households for bread, 9s. 4d.; wheat meal for brown bread, 8s. 6d; coarse Scotch oatmeal, 3s. 2d. per 14 lbs.; fine, 3s. 4d.; American hominy, 4s.; barley, maize, and barley meal, 5s 8d. per bushel, or 21s. 6d. per sack; buckwheat, 5s. per bushel, or 19s. per sack; oats, 4s. per bushel; crushed oats, 3s. 6d. per bushel, or 13s. 6d. per sack; middlings, 2s. 4d.; ground pollard, 1s. 8d.; peas, 7s. 6d.; tick beans, 8s.; split peas, 2s. 6d. and 3s. per peck; meat biscuits, 20s. per cwt.; lentil flour for invalids, in tins, 1 lb. size, 1s., and 7 lbs., 5s. All other kinds of grain and seed. Special prices for larger quantities. Post Office Orders and Cheques to be made in favour of GEORGE YOUNG

JOHNSTON'S (THE OLD HOUSE)
CORN FLOUR
IS THE BEST.
"Is decidedly superior."—Lancet.
JOHNSTON'S SCOTCH OATMEAL, in packets, with plain directions for making Porridge, Brose, and Gruel.

DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—From Mr. Shaw, 5, Charles Street, Hull: "They are an unfailing remedy for all disorders of the breath and lungs." Sold at 1s. 1½d. per box.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR INDIGESTION, WIND, HEARTBURN, &c.
Also unrivalled as a Tonic, Purifying, Family Aperient Medicine, without Mercury.
DR. SCOTT'S BILIOUS and LIVER PILLS, prepared by W. LAMBERT, 1a, Vere Street, London, W. Price 1s. 1½d. and 2s 9d. per Box; post free for 15 or 35 penny stamps, or of all Chemists. See you have the right Pills, "Dr. Scott's," which are wrapped in a square green package.

NATURAL MINERAL WATERS.
VICHY.
Property of the French Government.
CELESTINS—The water of this spring is very agreeable, sparkling, and slightly acidulated. Remedy for complaints of the Kidneys, Gravel, Gout, Diabetes, Rheumatism, &c.
HAUTERIVE—This spring contains a greater quantity of carbonic acid, and is especially recommended as a table water.
GRANDE-GRILLE—For complaints of the Liver and Biliary Organs, Indigestion, &c.
HOPITAL—For Stomach complaints, &c.
VICHY WATERS are pleasant to the taste, and may be drank pure or mixed with wine or spirits.
CAUTION—See that the name of the particular water required is on the capsule.
Sold by all Chemists, Wine, and Mineral Merchants.
Price One Shilling per Bottle.

DR. LELIEVRE'S ICELAND MOSS POULTICE (Patented) is exempt from all the inconveniences inseparable from Poultices made with Linseed or Bread. These spoil the linen, bedding, &c., dry up on the edges, rapidly ferment, giving a most unpleasant odour; and no dependence can be placed on the quality and freshness of the linseed meal. This New Poultice is instantaneous, for it is ready in a few seconds. Sold retail by all Chemists.
Wholesale: RIGOLLOT and CO, 82, Southwark St., London.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CON-STIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children.
The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says: It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families."
Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists
Wholesale: 82, Southwark Street, London.

THROAT IRRITATION.
EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Sold only in Boxes, 6d. and 1s. labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS,
48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

TOOTH-ACHE.
INSTANT CURE.
FORMS A STOPPING.
SAVES THE TOOTH.
J. Hounsell, Esq., Surgeon, Bridport, writes:—"I consider Bunter's Nervine a specific for Toothache. Very severe cases under my care have found instantaneous and permanent relief."
Of all chemists, at 1s. 1½d. per packet.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD LIVER OIL (Registered).
No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.
Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.
"The natural nauseous taste of the Oil is disguised with considerable art. Children take it with avidity."—See Lancet, British Medical Journal, Sanitary Record, Medical Times, Medical Press, Medical Record, &c.
Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half-pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure.
Retail of all Chemists and Druggists, and Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited), Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the finest purifiers of the blood. They speedily correct all disorders of the liver and stomach, are invaluable in cases of dysentery, and as a general family medicine have no equal.

FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH.—This excellent Family Medicine is the most effective remedy for indigestion, bilious and liver complaints, loss of appetite, drowsiness, giddiness, spasms, and all disorders of the stomach and bowels; or where an aperient is required, nothing can be better adapted.
For FEMALES, these Pills are truly excellent, removing the distressing headache so very prevalent, depression of spirits, dulness of sight, nervous affections, blotches, pimples, and sallowness of skin, and give a healthy bloom to the complexion. Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per box.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil).

HYDROLEINE. Equal to ten times the quantity of Cod Liver Oil

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil).
The nauseous taste of Cod Liver Oil is removed by Hydration. Easier to administer than Cod Liver Oil.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil)
Entirely supersedes plain Cod Liver Oil. Contains ready-digested Cod Liver Oil. Can be taken by the most delicate stomach. Is immediately assimilated.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil)
Produces rapid increase in flesh and weight.

"HYDROLEINE" has been described as partially-digested oil, which will nourish and produce increase in weight in those cases where oils or fats not so treated are difficult or impossible to digest. All tendency to emaciation and loss of weight is arrested by the regular use of HYDROLEINE, which may be discontinued when the usual average weight has been permanently regained."

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil).
Superior to any Emulsion or Pancreatised Oil ever known.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil)
Is not a Patent Medicine. Has the formula upon every bottle. Is Tonic, Digestive, and Highly Nutritive.

IN "NOTES on CONSUMPTION and

WASTING DISEASES

SUCCESSFULLY TREATED by

HYDRATED OIL,
With cases showing the immediate increase in weight produced by it." (Published by Diprose, Bateman, and Co., Sheffield St., Lincoln's Inn Fields),

---

G. OVEREND DREWRY, M.D., Phy-sician to the National Free Dispensary for Consumption and Wasting Diseases, Gower Street, W., Author of "Common Sense Management of the Stomach," &c.,

---

REFERRING to CASES treated at the

NATIONAL FREE DISPENSARY says that

"HYDRATED OIL produces an effect such as neither Cod Liver Oil nor any preparation of it with which I am acquainted even faintly approaches."—Page 23, and on page 51,

---

"PATIENTS are unanimous in their statement that the appetite is much increased by taking Hydrated Oil, and that so far from possessing the unpleasant taste of ordinary Cod Liver Oil, the taste of Hydrated Oil is agreeable rather than the reverse, and is described by some as resembling Devonshire cream. These, I submit, are very important points, in cases usually attended by great irritability of stomach. The general improvement in strength shown within a fortnight was in many instances surprising even to myself, who had seen already in private practice many startling results from its use. My experience, however, shows that in cases where Cod Liver Oil or an emulsion of it has been depended upon, increase of weight is rarely obtained."—Page 26.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil).
Economical in use; certain in result.

THE agreeable character of HYDRATED OIL is conclusively shown by the fact that Delicate Women and Young Children take it with avidity; and in the case of Infants who do not thrive upon the food given, the nourished and well-conditioned appearance of the child after this treatment is most marked.

THE CHEMICAL PRINCIPLES upon which Hydrated Oil is prepared were first described

---

IN a TREATISE on the ASSIMILA-TION AND DIGESTION OF FATS IN THE HUMAN BODY, by

---

H. C. BARTLETT, Ph.D., F.C.S.
Published by Messrs. J. and A. Churchill, New Burlington Street.

"FAT in the HUMAN BODY." Page 41.

"NOTHING appears to restore the healthy functions of the liver and pancreas in these cases except the frequent ingestion of oil or liquid fat, so treated artificially that it is already partially transformed by fermentation and the reaction of bile. Seized on with avidity by the absorbents, it is insensibly assimilated by the digestive organs, until they gradually become strengthened, not only to provide their own nourishment, but to transform a sufficient quantity of fat to supply the inevitable waste throughout the body."

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil).
From its valuable tonic effect on the nervous system, in addition to its special stimulating action on the organs concerned in the production of fat in the body, it also causes marked increase in weight in persons of naturally thin habit who do not present any evidences of disease.

THE permanence and perfection of the emulsion and the extreme solubility of the HYDRATED OIL is shown by its retaining its cream-like condition as long as the purest Cod Liver Oil will retain its sweetness. Unlike simple Cod Liver Oil, it produces no unpleasant eructation or sense of nausea, and should be taken in such very much smaller doses, according to the directions, as will ensure its complete assimilation; this at the same time renders its use economical in the highest degree.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) is imme-diately assimilated. Unlike ordinary Cod Liver Oil, it does not Purge, does not produce Sickness, or what is so well known as biliousness, nor does it pass through the body unchanged, as it is already partially digested, and suitable for immediate absorption and assimilation. Hence its economical value, none being wasted.

WEAKLY INFANTS thrive on it. Appetite is improved, digestion assisted, and strength increased by HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil). A true Nerve Tonic, a REAL DIGESTIVE, and POWERFUL NUTRITIVE.

ALL Persons taking HYDROLEINE are particularly urged to keep an ACCOUNT FROM WEEK TO WEEK of THEIR WEIGHT, that the gain and improvement may be shown.

MESSRS. J. M. RICHARDS and CO., having devoted special attention to perfecting a process by means of which uniformity in the production of HYDRATED OIL is secured, desire to direct the attention of the medical profession and the public to this preparation, to distinguish which the name of HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) has been registered under the Trade Marks Act by them.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil), in Half-pound Bottles, price 4s. 6d. Sold by all Chemists. Manufactured by J. M. RICHARDS and CO.—Office and Warehouse, Great Russell Street Buildings, Great Russell Street (corner of Charlotte Street, Bloomsbury), London.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SPECIALITIES in PIANOFORTES.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S STUDENT'S PIANOFORTE. Compass 5 Octaves, 15 gs., or £1 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SCHOOL PIANINOS. From Canadian Walnut, 20 gs., or 2 gs. per qr. on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT PIANINOS, 30 gs., or £3 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR PIANINO, 35 gs., or £3 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MODEL PIANETTE, 35 gs., or £3 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH MODEL, 40 gs., or £4 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S COLONIAL MODEL, 45 gs., or £4 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S FOREIGN MODEL, 50 gs., or £5 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH OBLIQUE, 55 gs., or £5 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S OBLIQUE GRAND, 70 gs., or £7 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IRON-FRAMED OBLIQUE, 90 gs., or £9 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MIGNON IRON GRAND, 80 gs., or £8 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR IRON GRAND, 110 guineas, or £11 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

UPWARDS of ONE HUNDRED VARIETIES on VIEW.

MAY BE HAD OF ALL PIANO-FORTE DEALERS throughout the United Kingdom.

SHOW-ROOMS, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

STEAM FACTORY, CHALK FARM ROAD, N.W.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S MUSIC Primers. Edited by Dr. STAINER. The following are now ready:—

THE PIANOFORTE PRIMER. By ERNST PAUER. Price 2s.

THE ORGAN PRIMER. By Dr. STAINER. Price 2s.

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC PRIMER. By W. H. CUMMINGS. Price 1s.

THE ELEMENTS OF THE BEAU-TIFUL IN MUSIC. By ERNST PAUER. Price 1s. (Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.)

LIEDER OHNE WORTE. Eight Books. The only complete edition. Cloth, 6s.; paper covers, 4s.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS, NEW AND OLD. Edited by the Rev. H. R. BRAMLEY and Dr. STAINER. With 45 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Elegantly bound, 7s. 6d.

THE SUNLIGHT OF SONG. Sacred and Moral Songs, with Original Music by the most eminent English Composers. With 46 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Handsomely bound, 10s. 6d.

NATIONAL NURSERY RHYMES. Set to Music by J. W. ELLIOTT. With 65 Illustrations, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. Cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS. Edited by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Folio, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 21s.; octavo, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.; octavo, paper covers, 5s.

MOZART'S SONATAS. Edited by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Folio, elegantly bound, gilt edges, 18s.

MENDELSSOHN'S LIEDER OHNE WORTE. The best and only Complete Edition, containing the Seventh and Eighth Books. Folio, handsomely bound, gilt edges, 12s.; octavo, handsomely bound, 6s.; paper covers, 4s.

 Order Novello's Edition.

RUBINSTEIN'S EIGHTEEN TWO-PART SONGS. German and English Words. Octavo, handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.

SCHUMANN'S VOCAL ALBUM. English and German Words. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.

SCHUMANN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM FOR YOUNG PIANISTS (Op. 68 and Op. 15). Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.

GERMAN VOLKSLIEDER ALBUM. Original German Words, and an English Version by JOHN OXENFORD. Handsomely bound, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.

A DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. Edited by Dr. STAINER and W. A. BARRETT. 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 16s.

MUSICAL MYTHS AND FACTS. By CARL ENGEL. Two vols., demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s.

LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.,
1, Berners Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C.

DANCE MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS.

HAMMOND'S MUSIC PORTFOLIO.

Price 1s. each number. Post free 13 stamps.
Violin and Cornet Accompaniments to each number, 6d. each.

No. 1 CONTAINS:

Brise des Nuits Waltzes	Lamothe.
Hydropaten Waltzes	Gung'l.
Manuelita Waltzes	Waldteufel.
Autograph Waltzes	Strauss.
St. David's Quadrille	Dan Godfrey.
Bruder Lustig Galop	Budik.

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

Le Premier Baiser Waltzes	Lamothe.
Venus Reigen Waltzes	Gung'l.
Den Lieben Langen Tag Waltzes	Rudel.
Deutsche Herzen Waltzes	Strauss.
The 'Varsity Lancers	D'Egville.
The Pet Schottische	Bertrand.

CONTENTS OF No. 3.

SIX WALTZES BY JOSEPH GUNG'L.

Soldaten Lieder	Waltzes.
Grafenberger	Waltzes.
Daheim!	Waltzes.
Jungherren Tänze	Waltzes.
Fantasiebilder	Waltzes.
Mein schönster Tag in Berlin	Waltzes.

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Frühlingslieder Waltzes	Gung'l.
Lille Waltzes	Strauss.
Le Tour du monde Waltzes	Metra.
La Fiancée Waltz	Lamothe.
Hochzeit (Wedding) Quadrille	Strauss.
Pergola Polka	Marie.

A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, London, W.

MUSICAL-BOX Depot, 22, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price, £4 to £120. Snuff-Boxes, 18s. to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and M'CULLOCH, as above.

ESTEY AMERICAN ORGANS, cheapest and best for quality, &c. LOW PRICES FOR CASH, or by monthly payments (in London and Suburbs only). Lists on application.—J. A. M[illegible] 40, Moorgate Street, E.C.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S CATA-LOGUES of MUSIC.

Part 1. PIANO, ORGAN, HARMONIUM.
Part 2. VOCAL.
Part 3. HARP, CONCERTINA.
Part 4. VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, ORCHESTRA, &c.
Part 5. FLUTE, CORNET, CLARIONET, &c.
Sent gratis and post free to any part of the World.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

POPULAR CLASSICS.—A series of sterling compositions for the Pianoforte Solo. Selected, edited, and fingered by WALTER MACFARREN. Sixty Numbers, price from 1s. to 5s. each. The series contains some of the most celebrated and beautiful works of Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Steibelt, Dussek, Hummel, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Chopin, &c. Detailed Lists forwarded gratis post free to any part of the world.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIECES.

Figaro. Fantasia on Mozart's Opera	4	0
Cynthia. Serenade	4	0
Souvenir de Bal	4	0
Air Danois	4	0

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

CARE IS ALL FIDDLE-DE-DEE. A merry Christmas Song with Chorus (from the Extravaganza "The Miller and His Man"). Words by F. C. BURNAND; Music by ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

KING CHRISTMAS. J. L. HATTON'S celebrated Song. The popularity of this capital baritone Song is ever on the increase. Price 3s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

SYDNEY SMITH'S NAZARETH.— Transcription of Gounod's grand composition for the Piano. Solo, 4s.; Duet, 5s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

Just published.

THE LORD BRINGS BACK HIS OWN. New Sacred Song. By Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Price 4s.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

STANDARD VOCAL PART MUSIC.

THE SINGER'S LIBRARY.

An Unequalled Collection of VOCAL CONCERTED MUSIC, TRIOS, QUARTETS, QUINTETS, &c.
Sacred and Secular, by the most renowned Composers, English and Foreign.
Edited by JOHN HULLAH.
Upwards of 150 Numbers. Price Twopence each.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

THE GLEE and CHORAL LIBRARY.

A COLLECTION OF STANDARD and Well-known VOCAL COMPOSITIONS,
As well as recent works by Macfarren, Hutton, Leslie, Balfe, &c.
Eighty Numbers. Price Twopence each.
Catalogues gratis and post free to any part of the world.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

STEPHEN HELLER'S PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS.—A COMPLETE CATALOGUE is NOW READY, and will be sent on application, gratis and post free, to any part of the world.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS are to be had of every Musicseller and Bookseller in Great Britain, Ireland, the Colonies, and India, or will be sent direct post free at half the marked price (bound works and cheap vocal part music excepted) to any part of the world on receipt of remittance or satisfactory reference.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS'S LIST OF MUSIC.

"THE GREATEST SUCCESS IN PARIS."

LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE.

OPERA COMIQUE DE ROBERT PLANQUETTE.
Now Ready.
Polka, by Arban. 3s. 6d. net.
Polka Mazurka. 1s. 6d. net.
Suite de Valse, by O. Métra. Solo and duet. 2s. each net.
Quadrilles, by Arban. Solo and duet. 2s. each net.
Quadrilles, by O. Métra. Solo and Duet. 2s. each net.
Brilliant Fantasia, by F. Moniot. 1s. 6d. net.
Rondeau Valse, by B. Richards. 1s. 6d. net.
Chanson du Mousse, by B. Richards. 2s. net.
Valse Brillante, by B. Richards. 2s. net.
In the Press.
Complete Opera, piano solo, 2s. 6d. net.
Vocal Score, English and French Words.
Selections of Airs, in two books, by Cramer. 1s. 6d. each.
Also arrangements by W. Kuhe.
N.B.—The sole right of representation, &c., for Great Britain and Colonies belongs to Mr. Joseph Williams.

CH. NEWSTEDT'S CARILLON, LOUIS XIV. Piano Solo, net, 1s. 6d.; Piano Duet, by J. Rummell, net, 1s. 6d.; Small Band Parts, 1s. 6d.; Full Orchestra, 2s. net.

L. GREGH.—LES BERGÈRES WATTEAU. Piano Solo, net, 1s. 6d.; Duet, by J. Rummell, net, 1s. 6d.; Orchestra, 2s. net.

ARDITI'S L'INGÉNUE, Morceau a la GAVOTTE. 3s. Performed at the Promenade Concerts with enormous success. Orchestra, 2s.

FLORIAN PASCAL'S LATEST COM-POSITIONS.

Berceuse. 3s. Also for Small Band, 1s. net.
La Princesse. 3s. (Gavotte). Also for Small Band, 1s. net.
Performed with great success at the Promenade Concerts.
Près le Lac, Deuxième Meditation. 3s.
Les Vieux Temps (Gavotte). 3s.
Pavane Royale de Louis XIV. 3s.
Air de Ballet. New Simplified Edition by Arthur Grenville. 3s.
Thematic Lists of this favourite Composer's sent free on application.

FLORIAN PASCAL.—AUTREFOIS (Souvenir de Marguerite de Valois). This charming little morceau has already run through several editions, and seems likely to rival the ever popular "Danse Favorite" of the same composer. Post free 18 stamps.

FLORIAN PASCAL.—UN BIJOU PERDU. "M. Pascal is to be congratulated upon having rescued from oblivion this really exquisite little gem, the melody of which is so captivating that we venture to predict for it great popularity." As Piano Solo, now ready, 18 stamps.

SPRING SONG. By J. Leybach. ENGLISH, FRENCH, AND ITALIAN WORDS.
"A perfect little gem, easy to sing and play."
Compass D to F (in C). Post free, 18 stamps.

NEW SONGS by J. Leybach.

LIFE'S AUTUMN (in A). Compass E to G flat.
THE SIRENS (in F). Compass C to F.
BRIGHT STARS OF HEAVEN (in C). Compass D to F.
MAIDEN AND THE BIRDS (in B flat). Compass D to F.
Post free, 18 stamps each.

CATALOGUES GRATIS and POST FREE.
Shipping Orders on most favourable terms.

LONDON: JOSEPH WILLIAMS,
24, BERNERS STREET, W.; and
123, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

THE ILLUSTRATED SONGS OF SCOTLAND. Published this day, a new and very superb edition of the Songs of Scotland, containing twelve full-page illustrations by

- Frank Dicksee.
- J. MacRalston.
- W. Small.
- A. Hunt.
- P. Skelton.
- E. B. Leighton.

The book contains 190 songs, the music edited by J. Pittman and Colin Brown, the words revised (with notes) by Charles Mackay. The Illustrated Songs of Scotland are printed in one volume, imperial 8vo, very beautifully bound in cloth, gilt edges, price 10s. 6d.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

AT LAST.—F. H. COWEN'S NEW SONG, "AT LAST," will be sung by Miss ANNA WILLIAMS in the following Towns:—Hastings, Nov. 24; Rochester, 25; Warrington, 27; Leicester, 28; Wolverhampton, 30; Bolton, Dec. 1; Southport, 3; Liverpool, 4; Worcester, 6; Preston, 7; Glasgow, 8; Dundee, 10; Newcastle, 11; Birkenhead, 12; and Hull, 14.

AT LAST.—Opinions of the Provincial Press on Cowen's New Song, sung by Miss Anna Williams. "This song ought to be as popular as any of Arthur Sullivan's. More cannot be said."—Dublin Daily Express. "An exquisite new ballad."—Cork Constitution. "A charming Song."—Belfast Northern Whig. Price 2s. net.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

STEPHEN ADAMS' TWO NEW SONGS.

YOUTH and AGE. The Words by the Rev. CHARLES KINGSLEY. The music by the composer of "Nancy Lee." To be sung by Mr. Maybrick for the second time at the Third Ballad Concert.

THE TAR'S FAREWELL. The Words by F. C. BURNAND. The music by the composer of "Nancy Lee." To be sung by Mr. Santley at the Second Ballad Concert, Nov. 28. Price 2s. each net.—BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

F. H. COWEN.—THE BETTER LAND.—A new setting of Mrs. Hemans' celebrated words, Sung by Madame ANTOINETTE STERLING at the Ballad Concerts. Price 2s. net.

BOOSEY and CO.'S PIANOFORTE ROOMS.
GRAND and UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES,
by all the great makers, both English and Foreign,
for SALE or HIRE,
subject to the largest discount obtainable in London.
Pianettes, from £20. Short Grands, from £40.
Sole Address, 295, Regent Street.

PRATTEN' PERFECTED FLUTES, Cylinder and Cone, commencing at 4 gs. The Siccama Flute and the Boehm Old and New System of Fingering. Particulars of all these Instruments upon application to the Manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, W.

BOOSEY and CO.'S BRASS INSTRU-MENTS FOR AMATEURS.

THE DISTIN CORNET, from £3 10s.
THE DISTIN CELEBRATED LIGHT VALVE CORNETS, 7 and 9 guineas, are the best Cornets manufactured.
THE DISTIN MINIATURE CORNET-A-PISTONS, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN BALLAD HORN in C, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN DRAG AND POST HORNS AND BAND INSTRUMENTS at all prices.
THE DISTIN MONTHLY BRASS BAND JOURNAL, 10s. 6d. per annum.

The above Instruments were exhibited by Boosey and Co. at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and were awarded a Prize Medal "For power and good quality of tone, fine workmanship." Estimates for Bands of all sizes, also illustrations and prices, to be had of the sole manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

MUSIC.—Just issued, gratis and postage free, a CATALOGUE of more than Five Hundred Popular Publications for the Pianoforte, by BRINLEY RICHARDS and GEORGE FREDERICK WEST.—Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

THE HOLY FAMILY. Sacred Melo-dies. Arranged by W. H. CALLCOTT for the Pianoforte. Solos complete in 12 books, 5s. each; duets, 6s. each; ad lib. accompaniments for flute, violin, and violoncello, 1s. each. Each book free at half-price in stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

CONCERTS, PENNY READINGS, &c.—POPULAR SONGS, VOCAL DUETS, TRIOS, and QUARTETS (part songs), selected from Messrs. ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S CATALOGUE. This list may be had, gratis and post free, on application at New Burlington Street.

THE LOOK-OUT QUADRILLE, for the Pianoforte, composed by COTSFORD DICK, 4s. (quite equal to the popular Osborne Quadrilles by Stephen Glover). Also by the same composer, "A SINGING QUADRILLE," 4s., and "L'Eclair Galop," 3s. (all with illustrated titles). All post free at half-price, and his Contre Danse.
London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO.

THE SENSATIONAL DRAWING ROOM PIANOFORTE PIECE, the MUSICAL BOX, No. 2. By I. LIEBICH. 4s.; free by post for 24 stamps. Always encored. "An agreeable and clever piece, which is very popular among amateurs."—Vide Musical World.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

POPULAR QUADRILLES for the Pianoforte, as Solos and Duets. 4s. each; post free at half-price.

- The United Service. F. Godfrey.
- The Osborne. S. Glover.
- The Globe. S. Glover.
- The Gypsy. S. Glover.
- The Holiday. S. Glover.
- The True Friends. S. Glover.
- The Pussy. A. Leduc.
- Pretty Polly. A. Leduc.
- The Canary. R. Linter.
- The Goldfinch. R. Linter.
- The Garden Party. W. Smallwood.
- The Moselle. W. Smallwood.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington St.

ALLEGRETTO in F Minor, and SCHERZO in B Flat Major. By Mrs. MARWOOD TUCKER, dedicated to her mother, Lady Mildred Beresford Hope. Price 4s.—STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, and CO., 84, New Bond Street, London.

NEW AND POPULAR SONGS.

All for Her. No. 1 sop., No. 2 contralto. A. S. Gatty.
Maiden May. Two keys. A. S. Gatty. Sung by Madame Cave-Ashton.
Before the Storm. Baritone. A. S. Gatty.
Meha. No. 1 tenor, No. 2 baritone. V. Capoul. Sung by M. Capoul.
Be My Love. Baritone. G. Fox.
My Star. No. 1, contralto, No. 2 mezzo-sop. Julia Wolff.
Little Nannie. Soprano. Julia Wolff. Sung by Mrs. Osgood.
The Trooper's Dream. Baritone. Julia Wolff.
Post free 24 stamps each.
ENOCH and SONS, 19, Holles Street, W.

ROBERT STANLEY'S NEW SONGS.

DEAR LITTLE FLOWERS.
WHEN LOVE'S GLOW HATH GONE BY.
EASTING.
Price 2s. each net.
J. B. CRAMER and CO., 201, Regent Street.

STOLEN KISSES WALTZ. By Hans WALDENFELDT. Free, 2s. "Played nightly at the Globe with immense success."
OSMAN PASHA MARCH. By ADOLPH MEYER. Free, 2s. "A bold, inspiriting melody—the time well marked."
London: WOOD and CO., 3, Great Marlborough Street.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.

A GREAT SECRET. Words by F. E. Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Trevor.
"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News.
Post free 24 stamps.
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867.
BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.
Central Depot for the British Empire: 10, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—CARPETS.— OETZMANN and CO. beg to announce that they have now received all their new designs in Carpets for the present season, adapted to every class of furnishing, from the richest qualities and most artistic designs to the neat and inexpensive kinds. An early inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67 to 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD, near Tottenham Court Road.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.

OETZMANN & CO.

67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,

HAMPSTEAD ROAD,

NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZ-MANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PRE-MISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO. are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.

CABINET and UPHOLSTERY DE-PARTMENT.—Elegant Drawing-room Suites, handsomely carved Italian walnut wood, upholstered in rich Worsted Damask, from 8 guineas; ditto in Rich Silk and Satin, 20 to 60 guineas; Elegant Black and Gold Suites, from 10 guineas; superior ditto, from 18 to 50 guineas; solid Mahogany Dining Room Suites, 8 guineas; ditto Fine Spanish Mahogany, upholstered in best Marone Leather, 14 guineas; Massive Mahogany Telescope Dining Tables, from £2 15s.; handsome walnut large OVAL Centre Table, 3 guineas.
OETZMANN and CO.

SIDEBOARDS, OETZMANN and CO. —Large and Handsome Mahogany or Oak Sideboards, with High Plate Glass Back and Carved Mountings, price 15 guineas; Massive Spanish Mahogany or Oak ditto, very handsome, 25 guineas; Noble Spanish Mahogany or Oak ditto, handsomely carved and lofty, Plate Glass Back, made and finished in the best possible manner, price 35 guineas. A variety of Early English and other designs, in rich Spanish Mahogany, or finest carved Oak, from 25 to 50 guineas.

OETZMANN and CO.'S BEDROOM SUITES.—One of the largest and best assortments in the kingdom to select from, displayed in Showrooms 228 feet long, with Bedsteads and Bedding fitted up for inspection. Bedroom Suite, consisting of Wardrobe, Chest of Drawers, Washstand, Toilet Table and Glass, Towel Airer, 3 Chairs, and Pedestal Cupboard, from 6½ guineas complete. Some new and elegant designs, at 15, 18, and 21 guineas. Large and handsomely decorated Bedroom Suites, in Ash, Pitch Pine, and other Woods, at 28, 36, 50, and 75 guineas. Also in Black and Gold, 50 guineas upwards.—OETZMANN and CO.

BEDDING DEPARTMENT.—Strong Iron Bedsteads, from 6s. 6d. each; superior Iron French ditto, 15s. 9d.; handsome Arabian Bedsteads, from 27s. 6d. upwards; excellent Mattresses, full size, 12s. 6d.; good Feather Beds, full size, 30s.; ditto Bolsters, 7s. 6d.; ditto Pillows, 3s. 9d. each; handsome 3 ft. Mahogany Washstands, with Marble Top, 18s. 6d.; Mahogany Toilet Glass, Best Plate Glass (size of plate, 16 inches by 12 inches), 6s. 6d.

PAPER-HANGINGS.—OETZMANN and CO.—PAPER HANGINGS at WHOLESALE PRICES.—A great reduction in price. All the new patterns are now on view at the Show Rooms.—OETZMANN and CO.

CARPETS.	FURNITURE.
CARPETS.	FURNITURE.
CARPETS.	FURNITURE.
CARPETS.	FURNITURE.

ANGLO-TURKEY CARPETS.—These superior Carpets, of which Messrs. OETZMANN and CO. have the exclusive sale, are of first-class British manufacture, have all the style and appearance of real Turkey Carpets, at little more than the price of good Brussels, and are very durable. Price lists post free on application. For the convenience of those residing at a distance, a large piece showing the border and centre of carpet, sent on receipt of 5s., which will be deducted from price of carpet or refunded upon return of pattern. Hearth Rugs to match, 6 ft. long by 2 ft. 8 in. wide, £1 5s. 6d. A large stock of real Turkey carpets at reduced prices.—OETZMANN and CO.

CARPET DEPARTMENT.—Stout Tapestry Brussels Carpet, 1s. 9½d.; handsome pattern ditto, from 2s. 2d. to 2s. 9d. per yard; superior Brussels, new designs, from 2s. 11d. upwards. These prices are much below value. Kidderminster Carpet, all wool, 1s. 11d. per yard; Patent Felt Carpeting, from 11½d. per yard; Superior Rock Dye ditto, handsome designs, double width, 1s. 11d. per yard; excellent Stair Carpet, from 6d. per yard; Best Quality, all Wool, ditto, 1s. per yard.—OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s. 6d. There is nothing sold that can be compared with these for quality and cheapness. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO.

DRAPERY DEPARTMENT.—Large white quilts, 2½ yards by 2 yards, 4s. 11d.; handsome marsella ditto, 9s. 9d.; white wool blankets, from 6s. per pair (see special reduced list sent post free); large Witney ditto, 2½ yards long, 9s. 11d. per pair; handsome cloth table covers, from 4s. 11d.; magnificent ditto, large size, 10s. 11d.; good chintzes, new patterns, 4½d. per yard; Cretonne ditto, from 6d. per yard.—OETZMANN and CO.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and CLOTHING combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable with the least possible weight, and are of the very best quality. Price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

EXHIBITION PATTERN COAL VASE.—OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGNS for the season, much admired, handsomely japanned, and rich burnished gold ornamentation, with opal handles, strong loose lining, a great convenience and saving in wear. Price complete, 21s.—OETZMANN and CO.

CHINA and GLASS DEPARTMENT. —Alexandra pattern Toilet Services, ewer, basin, &c., complete—9 pieces, 7s. 11d.; handsome ditto, 9s. 9d.; richly cut Decanters, 7s. 6d. per pair; cut Wines, from 2s. 6d. per dozen; superior ditto, richly cut, reduced to 5s. 9d. per dozen; Gilt Clocks, under glass shades, from 18s. 9d. upwards; Cottage Clocks, from 5s. 9d. each; elegant Lustres, Vases, Parian Figures, &c.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.

OETZMANN & CO.

HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by EDWARD JOSEPH MANSFIELD, at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand, both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—NOVEMBER 24, 1877.

THE GRAPHIC

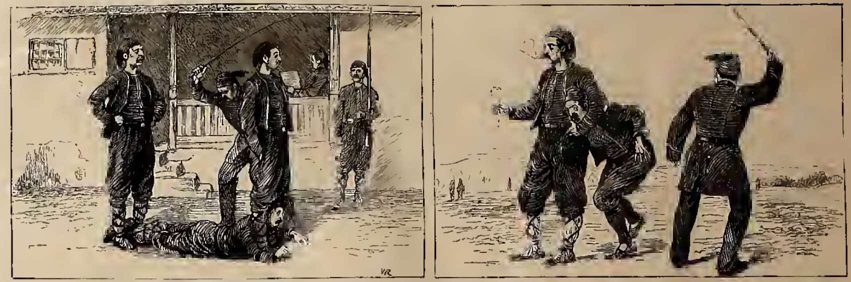
AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

VOL. XVI.—No. 418
Regd at General Post Office as a Newspaper

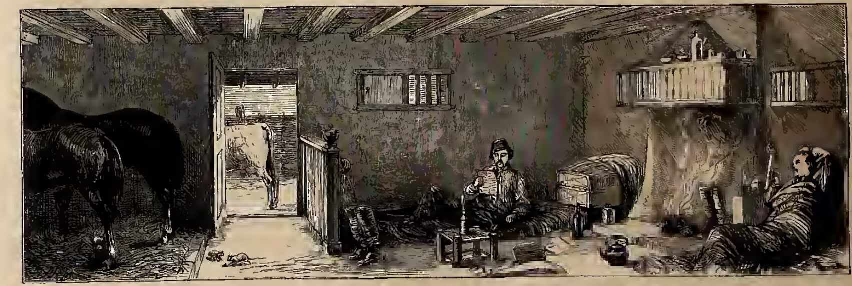
SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1877

WITH EXTRA SUPPLEMENT

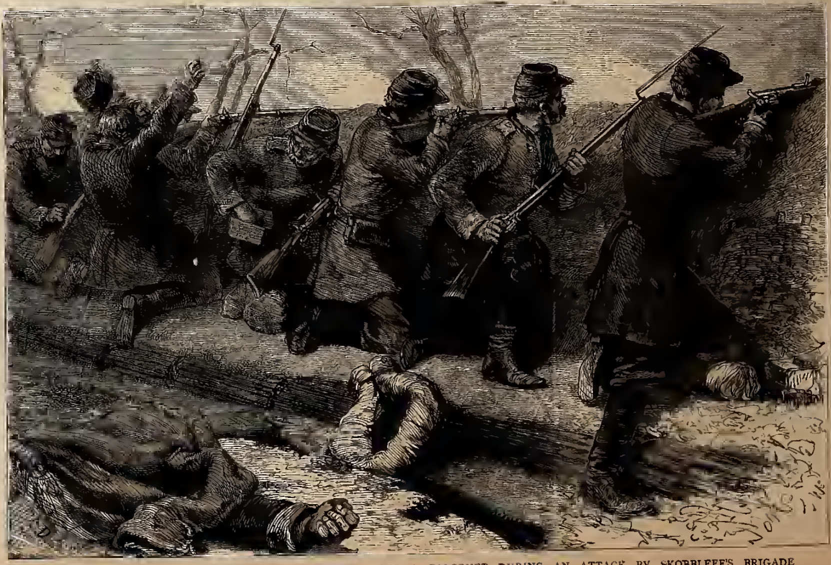
PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



WITH THE TURKS—SUMMARY PUNISHMENTS



WITH THE TURKS—ENGLISH OFFICERS' QUARTERS AT SARNASUFFLA, BULGARIA



WITH THE RUSSIANS BEFORE PLEVNA—OFFICER FIRING A FALCONET DURING AN ATTACK BY SKOBBLEFF'S BRIGADE

Topics of the Week

England and the War.——The speculations as to the probabilities of peace have been continued during the present week, and there is a sanguine feeling among a large class of observers that the fall of Plevna will be instantly followed by negotiations for the conclusion of the struggle. We wish we could feel sure that this view is right; but unfortunately too little is known of Turkish opinion to justify any one in arriving at a decided judgment. The Pashas know very well that if they could manage to involve England, the Porte might still obtain favourable terms; and it is quite possible that with a view to this result they might continue fighting even if the odds were all against them. The question of chief moment, therefore, is, What does England mean to do? Will she under any circumstances attack Russia? And if so, What are these circumstances? One would suppose that to questions of such vital interest we should all be ready with prompt answers, but in reality the greatest diversity of opinion prevails, and there is too much reason to fear that this diversity exists in the Government itself. If those who are usually well informed on such subjects are not wholly wrong, Lord Beaconsfield is not only prepared for war under certain vague conditions, but wishes to send a force to Constantinople as soon as Plevna falls. On the other hand, it is stated with an air of authority that Lord Salisbury and the party in the Cabinet which follows his lead are as opposed as ever to armed intervention. It must be admitted that the mass of the nation would be unwilling to act as the Premier is said to desire. Englishmen as a rule have no confidence in the designs of Russia; but they shrink from the enormous sacrifices that would be involved in war, especially as they dislike the idea of even seeming to support Turkish tyranny. The result is that in a tremendous crisis this country adopts a hesitating, wavering policy; and friends and foes alike cover us with reproaches. Lord Derby's speech on Wednesday has done something to allay excitement, but he did not venture to make any definite statement as to the ultimate action of England. He only insisted that under the conditions of the present moment we should not be justified in going to war.

Silk and Seed Adulteration.——When Mr. Tennyson indited that vigorous philippic against trade rogueries in "Maud," describing, for example, how the druggist cheats a dying man of a few last gasps by pestling a poisoned poison, he inclined to believe that War—"War with its thousand thunders shaking a hundred thrones"—would prove a potent reformer of such rascalities. Europe has seen a good many wars since "Maud" was written, and experience seems to show that war relaxes rather than strengthens morality. At any rate, adulteration flourishes as vigorously as ever, nor does it afford any consolation to learn that in this respect foreigners are nearly, if not quite, as bad as ourselves. Some time ago it was stated that Lancashire cotton goods were become rapidly discredited in Eastern markets because of the inordinate quantity of clay with which they were charged. It now seems that the French silk makers are serving us a similar trick, adding, by means of cunningly-devised dyes, a delusive weight and solidity to a material which is really of a very flimsy character. During the last few days a piece of trade-villainy of a still more mischievous character has been brought to light. Farmers, it is well-known, are a much-enduring class. The weather is generally more or less against them, and, of late years, more rather than less. They are martyrised by cattle epidemics, they are victimised by sellers of bogus manures, and now it seems they cannot even get genuine seeds. If the man who makes two blades of grass grow where only one grew before is a benefactor to his species, what ought to be done to the man who sells seeds which he knows will never sprout? These seeds, being of bad quality, are artificially killed before being sold, so that none of them may grow, in order that the farmer may attribute the failure to some freak of Nature. Now, what is the remedy against this adulterating tendency, this villainous dry-rot which infects more trades than we should care to specify? The true remedy is a very simple one, but it will never be generally adopted, because the mass of mankind, being the reverse of wise, prefer to buy that which is cheap rather than that which is good. It is the intense competition, fostered by this absurd mania for cheapness, which causes so many of the things we buy to be shams, masquerading under names to which they have no legitimate title.

Marshal MacMahon and France.——The new French Ministry met with so ungracious a reception from the Chamber of Deputies that if it had entered upon office with the least self-respect it would at once have resigned. The "Constitutionalists" of the Senate, however, have been so far favourable to Marshal MacMahon's policy that he and his Cabinet profess to feel themselves justified in defying the majority led by M. Gambetta. The situation becomes daily more serious, for although the Chamber may not absolutely stop the supplies, it is evidently resolved to vote them only in such a manner as will make the practical business of administration all but impossible. The Marshal, therefore, will be compelled to apply for a fresh dissolution; and the danger is almost equally great whether the application is granted or refused. If it is refused, there is a terrible chance that his counsellors will succeed in making him try force; if it is granted, the country will be thrown into a state of perilous excitement, the end of which no man can foretell. English journals have been severely taken to task for expressing so much antagonism to Marshal MacMahon; but it is hardly possible for disinterested observers to condemn him too severely. The theory of government to which he appeals is utterly baseless, since the Senate does not represent France in any sense so fully or directly as the popular House, and her wishes have been so unmistakably expressed that it is nothing short of treachery to attempt to act in opposition to them. The Republicans hope that the waverers in the Senate will gradually come round to this view. The Marshal would then have no excuse for reaction, and would be forced, if he did not attempt a coup d'état, either to obey the country or to make way for a more worthy successor. As yet, however, there have been few indications of a peaceful solution; and the address presented on Wednesday by about a hundred of the leading business houses in Paris clearly proves that there is among all classes a vague terror of coming trouble.

The German Navy.——Not many years ago it was customary for our comic writers to poke fun at the German Navy as something which had no real existence, and was as invisible as the Spanish Fleet in Sheridan's Critic. Such jocosity nowadays would be thoroughly misplaced, for the German fleet has become, especially since the war with France, a fully appreciable, not to say formidable, entity. Eight armoured frigates, six armoured corvettes, eighteen armoured gunboats (especially designed for coast defence), twenty unarmoured corvettes, besides smaller vessels and torpedo boats, constitute a considerable naval armament for an Empire whose seaboard is small in proportion to its extent; whose coasts are for the most part rendered almost inaccessible to an enemy by sandbanks, shallow water, fogs, and storms; and whose colonial possessions are very few in number. Two other points are worthy of note. Formerly all, or nearly all, the appliances for equipping these vessels would necessarily have been obtained from this country in default of native production; now, everything—iron plates, anchors, cables, and blocks, have been supplied by German industry. Secondly, as a fleet, however powerful, is useless without trained seamen, systematic measures have been adopted for ensuring the necessary supply. Not only is there an apprentice school, the doors of which are beset by candidates, where lads between the ages of fifteen and seventeen are received; but also young men from inland districts are allowed to acquit themselves of their military liabilities by a four years' service on board ship, three years of which are passed at sea. Considering the rapid advance made by Germany as a naval Power during the last six years, who shall say what her position in this respect may not be when the century closes?

The Violence of the Clerical Party.——There are indications that the Italian Clerical Party are no longer to hold aloof from the practical politics of their country, and this week The Times had an article setting forth the immense advantages that may be expected to attend the exercise of their functions as citizens. We quite agree that all parties ought to take their share in the public life of the nation; but we question whether, as our contemporary supposes, the priests and those influenced by them are likely to be made more moderate by contact with men from whom they differ. This, at any rate, has not been the experience of the French and the Germans. It might have been expected that the last war would have taught even the French Ultramontanes a bitter lesson; yet, as all the world knows, they are at the present moment carrying on a struggle that threatens to bring the nation to the verge of ruin. And they do not conceal their readiness to plunge their country at the first favourable opportunity into a war for the restoration of the Temporal Power. As for the German Ultramontanes, their designs may be guessed from an incident of the present week. In the course of a very fierce debate in the Prussian Parliament their leaders denounced M. Gambetta and his friends as enemies of society, and enthusiastically applauded Marshal MacMahon for resisting them. At the very time when these virtuous upholders of morality were thus speaking, their supporters were allying themselves in a provincial election with the Socialists against the Liberals; and on every occasion when such an alliance is possible, it is resorted to without hesitation. We fear there is no chance of the Clerical party either in Italy or elsewhere moderating its zeal. In each country it is supported by the consciousness that it has friends in other lands, and it has persuaded itself that it is fighting for a sacred cause.

Grumbling Emigrants.——It is just because the comically ill-spelt letter from an emigrant to Queensland which Punch publishes this week bears such a family likeness to many similar effusions from persons of the labouring class that it deserves attention. Englishmen are proverbially grumblers, but, judging from our own experience, the ignorant and unlettered are far more apt to growl under the pressure of Colonial hardships than those who are better educated. The labourer, for instance, with his three meals a day of butchers' meat, conveniently forgets that in the old country he seldom tasted anything more appetising than bacon; and while vigorously inveighing against the hot winds, the dust, and the snakes, he looks back with fond regret on the dank fogs, the gloomy skies, and the biting frosts of his native island. As employers of labour, as shopkeepers, and as artisans, the English do well enough in the Australian colonies; but for the hard, rough, heavy work, which is chiefly in demand in every young country, they are not so well-suited as the Irish, the Scotch, and the Welsh. The clannishness of these latter nationalities helps them on, they are ready to give their fellow-countrymen a lift, whereas an Englishman is apt (unless urged by other motives) to regard another Englishman with surly indifference. At the same time, reverting to Punch's emigrant, we admit that, of all the Australian colonies, Queensland is the last to which we should recommend a labouring man to go. It is all very well for capitalists out there, who want cheap labour, to crack up the climate; but the climate, though cool for the latitude, is quite tropical in its character, and, except on the table-lands, is unsuitable for Northern Europeans who have to gain their living by hard out-of-door labour. Such persons had far better go to the southern colonies, to Tasmania, or New Zealand, and leave the hard work of Northern Australia to John Chinaman, who will willingly undertake it if only permitted to do so.

Art in the Provinces.——A very influential deputation, appointed by a number of municipal corporations, waited this week upon the trustees of the National Gallery, to ask them for help in establishing local art exhibitions. A similar application will probably be made to the trustees of the British Museum, and we hope that both bodies will do what they can to meet the request in a friendly spirit. After all, London and England are not quite the same thing; and the inhabitants of provincial towns have a perfect right to demand that they shall derive some benefit from the common property of the nation. We do not know what proportion of the public art treasures in London could be made available for the purpose; but unquestionably every picture and statue that are not absolutely necessary for the completeness of the metropolitan collections ought to be in Birmingham, Manchester, or some other provincial city. It is of the utmost importance that measures should be taken to make life more attractive in every considerable centre throughout the country. So many elements of the national life have now been brought together in London, that the vast, overgrown place is rapidly draining the United Kingdom of its best energies. The process will never be effectually checked until the smaller towns are made pleasanter places to live in; and the cultivation of a feeling for art would certainly be one powerful means of enabling them to compete with the capital. We are far from supposing that the furnishing of galleries would alone suffice to develop artistic sympathies; but it would at any rate be a step in that direction.

Minor Railway Improvements.——The following remarks are intended to apply to metropolitan lines, where the trains are frequent, the stoppages brief, and the stations in many cases underground and dimly lighted. In an assault case reported the other day the defendant declared that he was not aware he was in a smoking-compartment. When it was proposed to allow smoking on the Metropolitan Railway, Mr. Bright objected (and very sensibly we thought at the time) that it would compel intending passengers, in semi-darkness, and with only a few seconds at their disposal, to discriminate between six sets of vehicles instead of three. Mr. Bright was overruled, but as his objection still holds good, we suggest that smoking-carriages should either be painted of a special colour (this plan has been adopted in India to distinguish railway carriage classes) or much more boldly labelled than they now are. Again, in second and third-class coaches, where there are no arm-divisions, would it not be well, to prevent disputes about passengers occupying an undue amount of space, to mark on the walls of the compartment the width allotted to each person? Fat people, of course, would still unavoidably encroach on their neighbours' territory; but, at all events, the extent of their encroachment would be clearly shown. Lastly, ladies and inexperienced persons, who want to know whether the train coming in is their train, would derive surer information if the differences indicated by the system of variously coloured lamps placed in front of each engine were explained by placards hung up at each station, than from the shouts of the porter, which are often rendered inaudible by the noise of the approaching train. The sliding panel, also, showing the destination of each incoming train, which is in use at Victoria Station, might advantageously be adopted elsewhere.

NOTICE.——With this Number is presented an EXTRA QUADRUPLE SUPPLEMENT, entitled, "A BIRD'S EYE VIEW of the RUSSIAN and TURKISH POSITIONS before PLEVNA." For binding, this Supplement must be mounted on a guard.

AMUSEMENTS

SMITHFIELD CLUB SHOW OF CATTLE, IMPLEMENTS, ROOTS, &c., &c

SMITHFIELD CLUB SHOW, AGRICULTURAL HALL, ISLINGTON, MONDAY, Dec. 10, at 2 o'clock. Admission, 5s. Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, at 9 o'clock. Admission, One Shilling.
S. SIDNEY, Secretary.
Agricultural Hall Co. (Limited), Barford Street, Islington.

THE BIRMINGHAM CATTLE AND POULTRY SHOW.

The TWENTY-NINTH GREAT ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF FAT CATTLE, SHEEP, PIGS, DOMESTIC POULTRY, CORN, ROOTS, and IMPLEMENTS, will be held at Bingley Hall, MONDAY, December 3, Admission, 5s.; TUESDAY, December 4, WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, December 5 and 6, 1s.

For Excursion Trains and other special Railway Arrangements, see the advertisements and bills of the various Companies.

HENRY DUNBAR, by TOM TAYLOR, Powerfully Cast, and A ROUGH DIAMOND, by J. B. Buckstone (for a limited number of Nights). Box Office Hours, 11 to 5. No Fees for Booking. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s. Doors open at 7, commence at 7.30.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

GLOBE THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. EDWARD RIGHTON.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, CRYPTOCONCHOIDSYPHONOSTOMATA. At 7.45, STOLEN KISSES. At 9.45, ISAAC OF YORK. Messrs. Ryder, F. H. Macklin, Garnes, A. H. Warren, C. Collette, D'Arley, and E. Righton; Mesdames C. Loseby, C. Lewis, Lucette, Clifton, Rachel Sanger, and Emma Ritta. Acting Manager, Mr. E. CLIFTON.

GLOBE THEATRE. — MORNING PERFORMANCE EVERY SATURDAY.—TO-DAY, Saturday, Dec. 1, at 2, for the Benefit of Mr. E. Clifton, Acting Manager, SPEED THE PLOUGH, and other Entertainments.

BRITANNIA THEATRE, HOXTON.—Sole Lessee, Mrs. S. LANE.—EVERY EVENING (Wednesday and Saturday excepted), at 6.45, TWO SONS, a New Drama by F. Manuel, Esq. On Wednesday and Saturday, at 6.45, MAN OF THE RED MANSION. Followed Every Evening by MISCELLANEOUS ENTERTAINMENT. Messrs. Young and Dean, Emily Randall, William Randall, Sisters Waite. Concluding with A WIFE YET NO WIFE. Mrs. S. Lane.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT.
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, SATURDAY,
at THREE and EIGHT.
Fauteuils, 5s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. No Fees.
Doors open at 2.30 for Day Performances, and at 7.15 for the Evening do.

STAFFORD HOUSE FUND FOR THE RELIEF OF THE SICK AND WOUNDED TURKISH SOLDIERS.—CONCERT, ST. JAMES'S HALL, WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, Dec. 5, at 3 o'clock, in aid of this Fund. Mdlle. Caroline Salla and Mdlle. Bauermeister (by kind permission of J. H. Mapleson, Esq., of Her Majesty's Opera); Mr. Maybrick. Instrumentalists: Messrs. Staeger, Hollander, Erba, Hann, and Lasserre. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 3s., and 1s. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co., 84, New Bond Street; Usual Agents; and at Austin's Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, 28, Piccadilly.

EVANS'S, COVENT GARDEN. — NOTICE. — These celebrated SUPPER ROOMS are now open for the reception of Ladies. EVANS'S CHOIR OF BOYS, specially trained by and under the direction of Mr. F. Jonghmans, and the best comic talent. SUPPERS after the THEATRES. Proprietor, J. B. AMOR.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker Street.—Now added, a Group representing the Emperor of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, General Ignatieff, and Hobart Pasha. Also Portrait Models of the Penge Convicts and the Perpetrators of the Great Turf Frauds, Benson and Kurr. Admission 1s. Children under twelve, 6d. Extra Rooms, 6d. Open from 10 a.m. till 10 p.m.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The SIXTEENTH WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES WILL OPEN on Monday, December 3. 5, Pall Mall East.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORÉ GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, by artists of the British and Foreign Schools, is NOW OPEN, at Thomas McLean's Gallery, No. 7, Haymarket. Admission, including catalogue, 1s.

BRIGHTON. — PULLMAN DRAWING-ROOM CAR TRAINS, leaving Victoria for Brighton every Weekday at 10.0 a.m. and 4.30 p.m., and from Brighton at 9.45 a.m. and 5.45 p.m., and on Sundays from Victoria 10.45 a.m. and from Brighton 8.30 p.m.

EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First Class Train from Victoria, 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY, Fast Trains from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m.; and London Bridge, 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon.

Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea, including admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion (Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds) available to return by any Train the same day, except the 5.45 p.m. Pullman Car Train

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Direct Service from Victoria to Ventnor, for Bonchurch and the Undercliffe; also to Sandown, Shanklin, Newport, and Cowes, via Ryde. Through Fares, including all charges.

The Trains by this route now run direct to and from Portsmouth Harbour, alongside the Isle of Wight steamers.
J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

BRIGHTON THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA-HOUSE. — Proprietress and Manager, Mrs. H. NYE CHART.—Engagement for Six Nights only, commencing MONDAY, December 3, of the Popular Actor and Actress, Mr. JOHN CLAYTON and Miss LOUISE MOODY, who will appear in THE DANISCHEFFS. In active preparation, and will be produced on MONDAY, Dec. 24, a Grand Comic Christmas Pantomime, by F. W. Green, entitled JACK AND THE BEANSTALK.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon ... Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS ... CO., James Street, Liverpool.

"THE GRAPHIC"

CHRISTMAS NUMBER,

READY EARLY IN DECEMBER, WILL BE OF EXCEPTIONAL INTEREST.

AN entire novelty has been introduced this year, as a large number of the Engravings have been printed in colours, besides the Presentation Coloured Plate usually issued.

IN addition to this Plate one of the Sheets will also be in Colours, illustrating a Tale called "THE ANIMATED PORTRAIT," so that with this Number there will be

NINE PAGES OF COLOURED ENGRAVINGS, besides many others of seasonable interest, printed in Black and White. The following is a List of the Illustrations:

COLOURED PLATES.

ONCE UPON A TIME.
(PRESENTATION PLATE).

THE CALICO BALL AT GROBY CASTLE (Double-page).
"The dresses had been very carefully designed, and they attracted a great deal of attention, as they afforded a pretty complete panorama of costume from the Middle Ages up to a recent date."

THE CARICATURE.
"The children were absorbed in their occupation, and totally unconscious that anybody was behind them, while Sir Anthony stood frowning and pursing up his lip."

LADY MILDRED AND HER LOVER.
"Very fascinating she looked, for her face wore an especially bright animated expression as she conversed with the rising young diplomat."

LILIAN'S BIRTHDAY PRESENTS.
"It was a pretty sight to see her arrive, her face grave with excess of joy, and her little arms laden with gifts."

CUPBOARD LOVE.
"Hilda had coaxed several of the deer from the park into the hall to eat these dainties from her hand."

A COTTAGER'S CHRISTMAS HAMPER.
"None received her more gladly than old Mrs. Boscobel, who delighted in a visit from the great folks at the Castle."

A CHRISTMAS HAMPER.

Maria started when she spied
The little winged boy inside. . . .
"You looked for game, sweet girl," cries he,
"Henceforward don't make game of me!"

BLACK AND WHITE ENGRAVINGS.

ANCESTOR RALPH.
"Both the girls distinctly saw the right hand of the Portrait move out of the canvas!"

THE CHRISTMAS GUEST.
"Psyche! Psyche! look!" cried Eros, starting to his feet in joyous excitement.

BLISSON'S LAST ROUND. Six Illustrations.
"He was in the act of lifting the tankard to his lips when I saw his face change suddenly. . . . Leaning against the clock in an attitude of dejection stood the Figure."

THE BARLEY MOW. Ten Illustrations.
"The disturbance outside continued. "My 'usband! My 'usband!" cried the voice; "what have you done with my 'usband?"

A HORRIBLE TALE (Double-Page).

Our blood was chilled, we could not speak,
We could not even raise a shriek,
Each moment seemed a tedious week.

THE TALES are by Mrs. OLIPHANT, ARTHUR LOCKER, T. W. SPEIGHT, and JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

PRICE ONE SHILLING, post free, 1s. 2½d.

OFFICE: 190, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The following are the Terms of Subscription for One Year, paid in advance, including Postage and Christmas Number, for which the publisher is prepared to supply THE GRAPHIC.

United Kingdom . £1 10 0 | United States . . £1 16 0

Africa, West Coast	France	Natal
Austria	Germany	Norway
Belgium	Gibraltar	Portugal
Brazil	Holland	Russia
Canada	Italy	St. Thomas
Cape of Good Hope	Jamaica	Suez
Constantinople	Malta	Sweden
Denmark	Mexico	Switzerland
Egypt	Monte Video	West Indies

£1 12 0 Thin Edition; or £1 16 0 Thick Edition.

The Postage of a Single Copy of THE GRAPHIC (either the Thick or Thin Edition) to any part of the United Kingdom is ½d.

To any other country mentioned in the above list the charge is 1d. thin and 2d. thick; but all Newspapers which are sent abroad must be posted within eight days after the date of publication.

Australia Ceylon China	Via Brindisi, 36s. thin edition. 45s. thick edition.	India Japan New Zealand

Postage of Single Copies, 2d. and 4d.

The Subscription can be paid by means of a cheque or post-office order made payable to E. J. MANSFIELD, 190, Strand, London.

All the Back Numbers of THE GRAPHIC can be obtained on application to the publisher

Our Illustrations

THE WAR IN THE EAST

WITH THE TURKS

ALTHOUGH the bastinado is comparatively little used now amongst the Turks, corporal punishment is as popular an institution as ever, and whether the offender is a dishonest baker of Stamboul, or a disobedient or thieving soldier on the banks of the Lom, the culprit—provided his fault be not so flagrant as to necessitate reference to higher quarters—is generally summarily made to "eat stick," after the orthodox schoolboy fashion represented in our illustration.

The third sketch depicts a stable and hut, the quarters occupied by the two British officers of Baker Pasha's staff, Colonel Studdy and Major Allix, at Sarnasuffla, Bulgaria. Our artist enjoyed the hospitality of these gentlemen for one night; though, owing to the close proximity of the horses and the company of a multitude of rats, his sleep could hardly be termed unbroken. However, he remarks, "à la guerre comme à la guerre," and the smallest shelter on the field is eminently acceptable.

WITH THE RUSSIANS—FIRING A FALCONET

IN these days of ironclads and 100-ton guns it is strange to find a weapon of three centuries back being reverted to in a campaign where even the zundnädelgewehr of a few years since is regarded as an antiquated weapon. The "falconet" was the name given to the semi-blunderbuss-semi-cannon used in the time of good Queen Bess. During the present war it has been a not unfrequent arm in the hands of the Russians, who have used it behind good cover, such as a raised mound, for desultory assaults, or for pushing forward a line of advance. In the present sketch it is being used during an attack on November 9th by Skobeleff's troops, the officer resting the unwieldy weapon upon a breastwork of bushes.

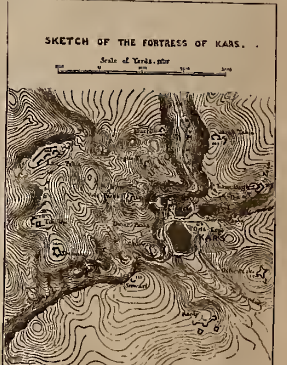
WITH THE TURKS IN ASIA—PRAYER

"CELEBRATE the praise of thy Lord before the rising of the sun, and before the setting thereof . . . that thou mayest be well pleased with the prospect of receiving favour from God." So runs the ordinance for prayer in the Koran, and there is no precept of the Mahometan Scriptures more rigidly observed by the True Believer than this, wherever he may be at the appointed hour, whether in the barren wastes of the desert, where sand has to serve for his preliminary ablutions, or on the crowded bazaar of Stamboul or Cairo. Neither does he neglect these duties in warfare, for his regiment is invariably accompanied by a Muezzin, who, as the sun slowly prepares to sink to rest, mounts, if in camp, on a roughly-made watch-tower; if on the field, on a neighbouring transport waggon or earthen mound, and with the cherished profession of faith, "La Allah il Allah, Mahmoud Rusoul Allah" ("God is God, and Mahomet is His Prophet"), loudly summons the men of war to their nightly prayer and genuflexions—a summons rarely neglected, and doubtless on such occasions as portrayed in our illustration many a "faithful" soldier supplements his orisons by an inward petition to the Prophet not to forget the promise, given in the words of the Koran, which has sustained him through so many hardships and dangers, that "whosoever fighteth for the religion of God, whether he be slain or be victorious, we will surely give him a great reward." And is he not about to fight once more against the Giaour Muscov?

THE SURRENDER OF KARS

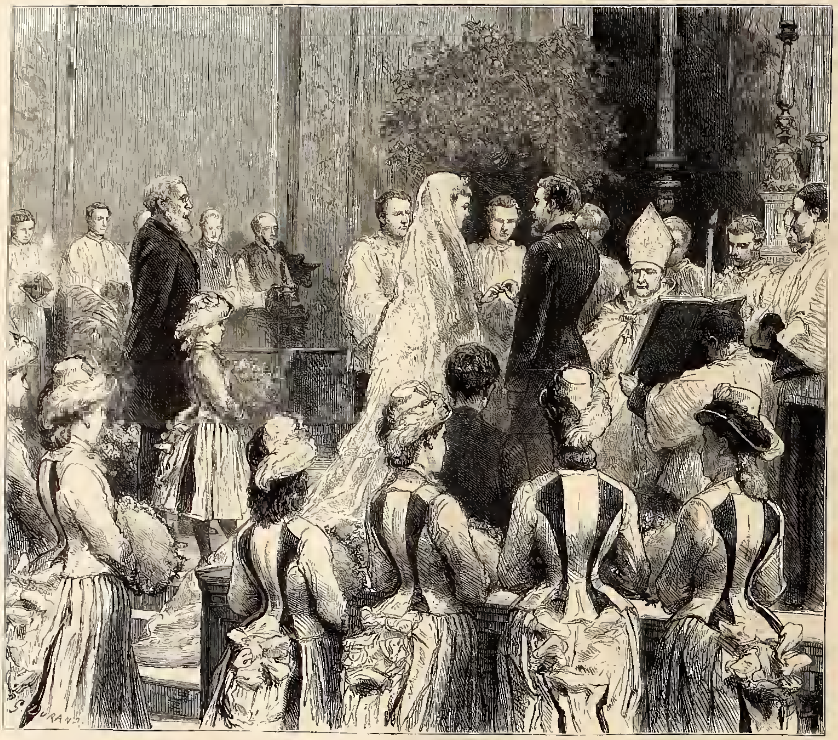
THE fortifications of Kars—the key of Asia Minor, as Sir Fenwick Williams termed it—may be divided into three distinct sets of defences. The town itself is situated in a rocky amphitheatre of basaltic heights—those on the eastern side, the Kara Dagh, or Black Mountain, being the most formidable. On the hills are constructed a series of outlying forts and redoubts, which when properly manned, afford an effective protection to the position.

The first set of these defences—a correspondent of The Times recently wrote—are on the plain to the south, and include Hafiz Pasha, the Kanli, and the Suwarri Tabia (forts), with the connecting line of intrenchments and the camp in their rear. The second, to the west of the Kars Tchai (River) which flows through the valley, are on steep heights—the principal forts being Tahmasp, the Tek, and Mukhliss Tabia. The third system comprises the works on the Kara Dagh. Between the eastern and western forts run the Kars Tchai, with steep precipitous banks from 400 feet to 700 feet in height. It was on Saturday, Nov. 10th, that the Russian besieging forces opened a heavy artillery fire on the southern and eastern positions, and in the evening, under cover of the darkness, assaulted simultaneously the Suwarri, the Kanli, and the Hafiz Pasha, while smaller parties threatened the Tahmasp and Kara Dagh. The forts being weakly manned, rapidly succumbed—the Kara Dagh, the key to the position, was carried, the remaining forts surrendered, and the town fell into the possession of the Russians on the following morning.

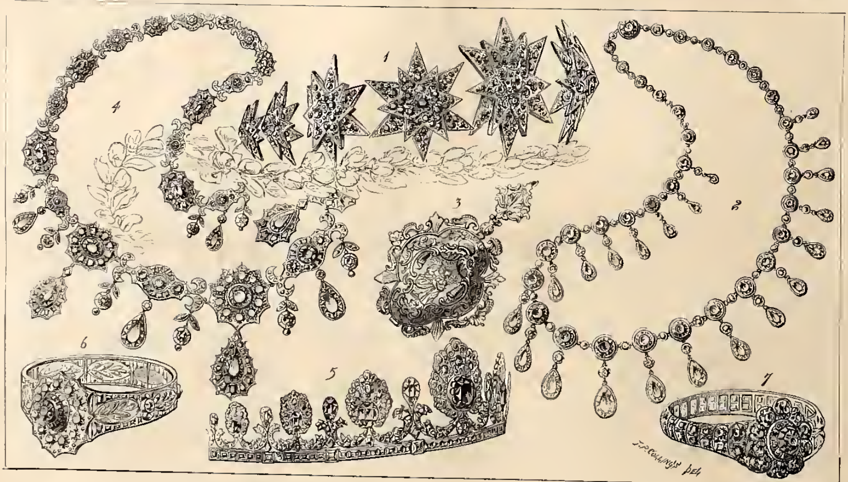


SKETCH OF THE FORTRESS OF KARS.

We have already published an engraving of the modern defences of Kars, and this week reproduce an illustration of the famous historical assault of Kars on September 29th, 1855, during its gallant defence by General Williams. General Williams had arrived at Kars on June 7th, and wrote to a friend that "Kars cannot be taken by a coup de main, but involves a bloody struggle for its defence and fall." General Williams's predictions were amply verified by the result, for after waiting until September 29th the Russian commander Mouravieff, growing tired of so long a siege, attempted to surprise the garrison in force. He failed, and after a most furious action was repulsed with a loss of 7,000 men. Famine, however, ultimately accomplished what force of arms could not effect, and on the 25th of November General Williams capitulated to General Mouravieff, who accorded him all the honours of war while remarking, "General Williams, you have made for yourself a name in history, and posterity will stand amazed at the endurance, the courage, and the discipline which this siege has called forth in the remains of an army."—Our illustration is from a lithograph executed by the Typographical and Statistical Depot of the War Department from a sketch made on the spot by Mr. Henry A. Churchill, Secretary to the British Commission, and transmitted through the Foreign Office to the War Department.



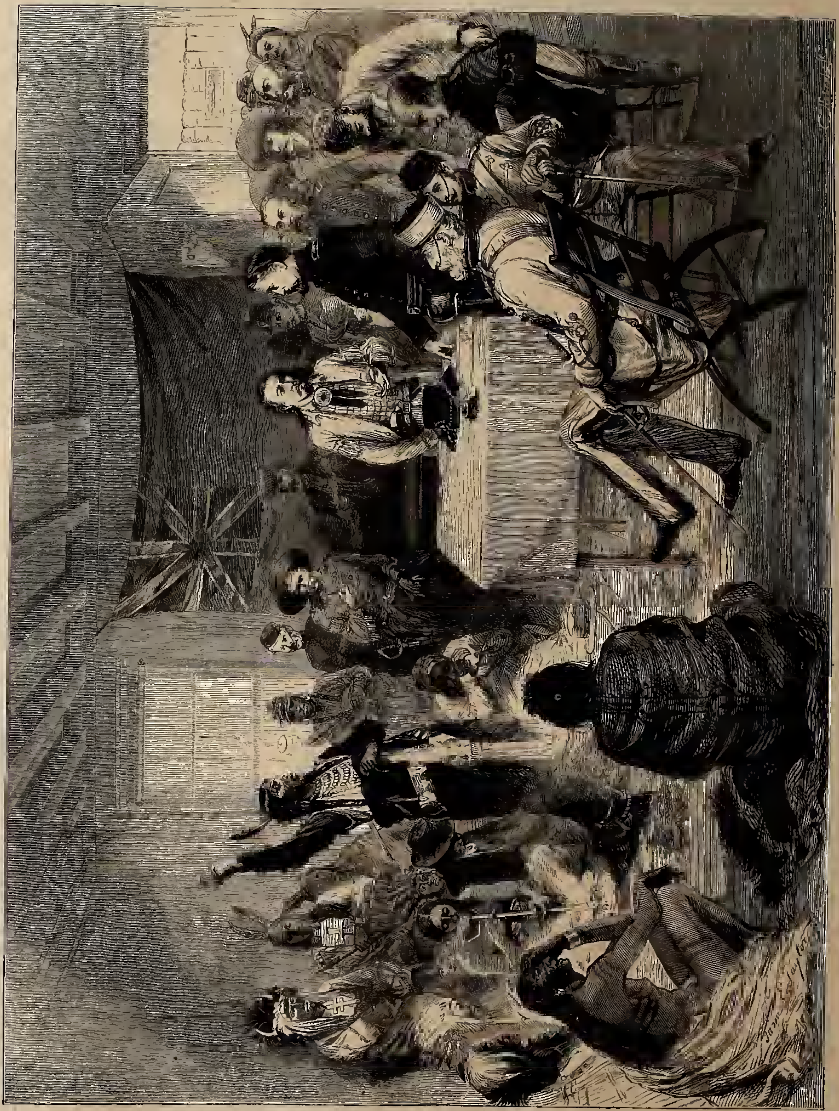
THE CEREMONY AT THE ORATORY, BROMPTON



SOME OF THE PRESENTS

1. Diamond Tiara, given by Abney Hastings, Esq., Father of the Bride.—2. Diamond Necklace given by the Inhabitants of Sheffield, and Tenants of the Hallamshire Estates.—3. Relic of Ste. Philippe, given by the Fathers at Brompton Oratory.—4. Diamond and Ruby Necklace given by the Bridegroom.—5. Diamond and Ruby Tiara given by the Bridegroom.—6 and 7. Bracelets given by the Bridegroom.

THE WEDDING OF THE DUKE OF NORFOLK



THE INDIAN WAR IN THE UNITED STATES—THE "SITTING BULL" COUNCIL AT FORT WALSH, BRITISH TERRITORY, OCTOBER, 1877

THE DUKE OF NORFOLK'S MARRIAGE

THE nuptial ceremony which took place last week at the Brompton Oratory was one of surpassing magnificence. The church was tastefully decorated with flowers, and the altar and super-altar were ablaze with light and colour. Dr. Danell (the Bishop of Southwark) officiated, assisted by the Bishops of Nottingham and Port Louis, Monsignors Capel, Weld, Talbot, and a host of lesser ecclesiastic dignitaries, whose rich vestments added to the magnificence of the scene. The bride, Lady Flora Hastings, wore a dress of white satin, trimmed with Brussels lace and sprays of orange-blossom, a point de gaze veil, and a profusion of diamond jewellery, the presents of the bridegroom, her father, and other relatives and friends. Her twelve bridesmaids, most of them very young, and a few quite children, were uniformly attired in ivory poult-de-soie, trimmed with ivory broche silk and Cardinal velvet, with felt hats to carrespond.

Instead of a locket the Duke of Norfolk had given each a bracelet of gold, pearls, and diamonds. The bride's mother was dressed in dark blue silk, and the bridegroom wore a blue frock coat, with pale lavender trousers. The Roman Catholic marriage-service differs from the Anglican ritual only in the introduction of the words "If Holy Church will it permit," the presentation by the bridegroom to the bride of "gold and silver" as well as the ring, and the sprinkling of the pair with holy water, but it of course has to be supplemented by a civil ceremony before the registrar of the district, as no purely religious marriage other than that of the Church of England is legally binding in this country. These necessary formalities were gone through in the sacristy, Lord Beaconsfield and the Marquis of Lorne being amongst the attesting witnesses who signed the register. The bride and bridegroom then re-entered the church, accompanied by the procession of priests, and the Nuptial Mass was performed, at the close of which the newly-married pair knelt on the altar steps and received the final blessing from the Bishop. The glad strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March then broke forth, and the bridal party, accompanied by those who had been invited to the wedding breakfast, drove off to Grosvenor Street amid the cheers of the crowd who had waited patiently in the pouring rain to get a glimpse of the equipages.

The health of the bride and bridegroom was proposed in a felicitous speech by Lord Beaconsfield, and the Duke of Norfolk having responded, the happy pair started to spend the honeymoon at Arundel, the customary rice and slippers being thrown after them as they left the house. The travelling dress of the Duchess was of sapphire velvet, trimmed with ostrich feathers.

We have no space for a detailed description of the wedding presents, which were unusually numerous, and included several reliquaries and religious emblems. That which we have engraved above is a pearl necklet of great historical value, having once belonged to Mary Queen of Scots. It was the gift of the bridegroom. During the time the presents were on view three detectives were employed to watch over them lest they might go the way of those belonging to the Countess of Aberdeen.

THE KAFFIR WAR AT THE CAPE

WE gave last week, with the portrait of the rebel chief Kreli, a brief account of the recent rising of the Galeka Kaffirs, which has just been quelled by the energy of Sir Bartle Frere, and this week we publish the portrait of Sandili, the chief of the Gaikas, a powerful Kaffir tribe. It was at first feared be might join Kreli, but he has fortunately remained faithful to us throughout. That is to say "passively" faithful, for he has rendered no actual assistance, and during a recent interview with Sir Bartle Frere feigned utter ignorance of the war news, and "wished to sit still." In rank and prestige, he is scarcely inferior to Kreli, as the Gaikas are nearly as large a tribe as the Galekas. The other portraits portray a Basuto witch-doctor in full dress, and bedecked with the various charms so essential to his art, and a Kaffir warrior of many feathers fully prepared for a campaign against the hated English invaders of his ancestral territory.

Of our two views, the first is taken from Fingoeland, overlooking part of the course of the Kei River, which is the boundary between the Eastern province of the Cape Colony and Kaffirland proper.

The flat-topped mountain rising from the opposite or Colonial side of the river has the evil-sounding name of Murderer's Kop—or head. It is so-called on account of its having been the scene of the murder of five English officers who, towards the close of the last Kaffir war, had ridden from the "Komgka" for the purpose of enjoying the splendid view of the Kei Valley that can there be obtained. Unfortunately they were watched by the Kaffirs, who lay in wait for them at the only place where an ascent to the upper plateau is possible. Here the dense bush so effectually cancealed them that the fire of their guns actually scorched the clothes of their victims, who had to pass within a foot or two of these hidden foes. During the fighting that took place on the following day several of these men were killed whilst wearing the unfortunate officers' clothes, whose bodies were found lying where they had been slain. The ascent to the "Kop" is on the left side of the sketch, all the other slopes of the mountain are precipitous. The "Komgka," situated among the most distant hills in this sketch, is now again occupied by British troops, who are there stationed to prevent the Gaika tribe within the Colony assisting the Galekas, and also to occupy the Colonial Police quarters, and thus enable the whole of that force to be concentrated in the Transkei.

Our second sketch is the Nxhaxa Presidency in the Idutwa Reserve, about twenty miles from Kreli's "Great Place." These magistrates' houses are mostly of a primitive style of construction, and are sometimes made with their own hands, whilst Kaffir huts have even to be put up with at times until a better lodging can be built. Beyond an occasional visit from another magistrate they see few white men—excepting their assistant clerk—from year's end to year's end, but their time is fully occupied settling Kaffir disputes, punishing criminals, and collecting the hut tax.

"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

A NEW STORY, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 513.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

VICTOR HUGO'S new work is continued on page 518.

THE LAPLANDERS AT THE WESTMINSTER AQUARIUM

ALL those who believe with Pope that the proper study of mankind is man, should make a point of seeing the strange visitors who have just been imported by Mr. Farini. They are remarkably good types of their race, and they come from Kauto Keino, in Finmark, the most northerly inhabited part of Europe, about 71 deg. N. latitude, and consequently within the Arctic Circle. The party, which was brought to this country by Mr. Carl Bock, the Norwegian naturalist, consists of two men and two women, and they have brought with them their sledges, tents, some reindeer, dogs, and an Arctic fox. They are of short stature, with Mongolian features; and their dress, made almost entirely of reindeer skin, is the same both for males and females, with the exception of the headgear, the men wearing a thick woollen cap stuffed with eider-down, and the women a sort of helmet made of light wood and covered with cloth. They go through a kind of performance, pitching their tents, lassoing the deer, and harnessing them to the sledges, as well as singing some Lutheran hymns, and the song by which they are accustomed to call together their flocks of deer. Their habits are not over cleanly. They seldom undress, sleeping in their clothes upon the floor, beds being entirely unknown in their country. They are great flesh-eaters, and are very fond of coffee and tobacco, and also of bread, with which, however, they were unacquainted until their arrival in this country. They have a simple, childlike expression, and their behaviour before a crowded audience is a strange mixture of shyness and self-possession. They stare at their visitors with great pertinacity, and will stop in the middle of a hymn to blow their noses through their fingers, yet when their task is completed they hide their faces in their hands as though half-ashamed of their performance. The names of the men are Joseph and Nils, those of the women Sivi and Ellen. The last mentioned is very wealthy, being the owner of 1,000 reindeer. They are all unmarried; but it is said that a double wedding is likely to take place before their return, Nils pairing off with Ellen and Joseph with Sivi.

THE "SITTING BULL" COUNCIL AT FORT WALSH, BRITISH COLUMBIA

A BURMESE PONY RACE

AND

COOLIES AT CAPE TOWN INSPECTING OUR WAR NUMBER

See page 524.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AT SELBY

THE recent visit of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to the seat of Lord Londesborough in Yorkshire was seized upon by the inhabitants of Selby as an opportunity for demonstrating their loyalty by a display of decorations which did credit to the taste of the Reception Committee. The weather, however, on the day of the Royal visit was most unfavourable; heavy rain saturated the bunting and put out most of the innumerable oil lamps, which had been prepared in consequence of the procession not passing through the town until nearly dusk in the evening. The gas illuminations, however, burned brightly enough, and the hearty welcome of the people was in no degree diminished by the dampness of the atmosphere.

The west front and south side of the parish church which forms the subject of our illustrations, were lit up in a very pretty manner. The church, which is the chief object of interest in the town, is a portion (almost the only remaining one) of Selby Abbey, founded by William the Conqueror 1069, and was the birthplace of Henry I. The architecture is mixed Norman and Early English, the choir being a most beautiful specimen of decorated work. The whole building has recently been restored under the supervision of Sir Gilbert Scott.—Our engravings are from sketches by Mr. F. Sherwood, of Selby.

HOME.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS.——Lord Derby, replying on Wednesday to a deputation representing three Russophobist Societies, whose desire is that the Government should take some active steps for the protection of "British Interests," and to bring about peace, said that he could not think that the road from England to India lies through the Euphrates valley, so long as the Suez Canal was open to us, and the proposition that the latter line of communication would be endangered if the Russians should get to Trebizonde he considered somewhat difficult of proof. The further strengthening of the Mediterranean garrisons might be regarded as a menace, and our fleet could not be sent to Constantinople without the consent of the Porte, which might possibly be refused, except on terms incompatible with the maintenance of our "conditional neutrality." He did not, however, think that the city was in any immediate danger.—Mr. Gladstone's lecture in reply to Mr. Forbes's article in the Nineteenth Century was given on Friday last at the Hawarden National Schools, the proceeds being devoted to the fund being raised by Mr. Forsyth and Miss Irby for the refugees in Dalmatia and Montenegro. Mr. Gladstone condemned the Turkish Government as a combination of fraud, falsehood, and robbery; and said that systematic lying and systematic slander were the daily instruments by which it carried on its work. (As an instance of this be cited the absurd account of his Bulgarian origin, which we have already noticed.) He admitted Mr. Forbes' description of the prosperity of the Bulgarians; but pointed out that their lives and property were at the absolute will of the Government, whose cruelty was only limited by regard for the raising of the taxes and the necessary cultivation of the land. As long as the British Cabinet observed its conditional neutrality, the Liberal party would observe a conditional quietude; but if the Government desisted, they would desist also. He regretted the errors which placed Russia in a position of such power; but he had confidence in the honour of the Emperor, and in the humanity of the Russian people. If Russia misused her position we should be strong enough to restrain her; but if, as he believed, she acted up to her pledges, she would have done mankind a service which would always be remembered.—Mr. Chamberlain, M.P., has abandoned for the present all hope of getting Parliament to adopt his scheme of Municipal Licensing. Finding that everywhere, except in Birmingham, he has failed to secure the support the United Kingdom Alliance, he bows before the inexorable logic of facts, and has determined to wait until public opinion has more advanced in his direction.—Dr. Kenealy's influence appears to be on the wane. His appeal for a "million sixpences" for the advancement of Magna Charta, issued some time ago, has as yet only been responded to to the extent of 20*l*.—Several members of Parliament have addressed their constituencies during the week, the Conservatives of course taking credit to the Government for its policy of conditional neutrality, and the Liberals equally of course claiming that that policy has been forced upon Lord Beaconsfield by Mr. Gladstone, and other prominent members of the Opposition.—Cork had its usual torchlight procession on Friday last to commemorate the anniversary of the execution of the "Manchester Martyrs;" but the number of processionists was exceedingly small.—A faction fight took place on Tuesday at New Pallas, Limerick, between three and four hundred men known as the "Three Year Olds" and the "Four Year Olds," some of whom were badly injured. We are obliged to confess ignorance as to the political proclivities of the contending parties.

MISCELLANEOUS.——At the Crystal Palace on Wednesday Mr. Archibald Forbes gave a lecture descriptive of his experiences as a Special Correspondent at the Seat of War. He wore the many Orders which he had won in different campaigns, and his stirring narrative of the episodes of the war, and humorous stories of personal adventure were evidently much appreciated by his hearers.—A Dramatic Reform Association is about to be started at Manchester. Its objects are to promote a more general elevation of public taste in relation to the Drama by affording facilities for the study of the works of the best dramatic authors, and arranging for dramatic readings, essays, and discussions.—The Marquis of Bute has offered to build a grand hall for the University of Glasgow. The cost estimated is 80,000*l*.—A statue of King Robert the Bruce was unveiled at Stirling on Saturday last. It stands in front of the Castle, and overlooks the battle-fields of Stirling Bridge and Bannockburn.—Lord Selborne is the new Lord Rector of St. Andrew's University.—Her Majesty the Queen has given to the town of Heywood, Lancashire, twenty acres of land for the purpose of a public park.—The violent gales of Saturday and Sunday appear to have done more damage by sea than on land, but the incessant rains have greatly swollen the rivers, and many parts of the country are inundated. As an indication of the extreme cold which has prevailed in some districts it may be noted that on Monday morning a young man was found frozen to death in the streets of Liverpool.—Temple Bar appears to be stronger than some people have supposed. The other day a carriage drawn by two runaway horses came into collision with it and did not knock it down.—The Blantyre Colliery inquiry concluded on Friday, and the report of the Commissioners will be anxiously waited for. An overman of No. 1 pit who gave evidence on Thursday said that the statement of the man Coulter, that he had been dismissed because he asked for an inspection of the mine, was a "deliberate lie," he having left of his own accord, although witness offered to go round the mine with him and any other two of the men.

SPORTING

THE TURF.——The "legitimate" racing season died last week, as every one interested in the Turf well knows; but now that nine-tenths of the "illegitimate" business is done by thoroughbreds, which are soon schooled to clear "obstacles," the winter of the Turfites' discontent is cheered by an almost continuous supply of hurdleracing and steeplechasing till the "flat" work begins again. If, then, a sufficient number of persons can be found to stand up to their ankles in mud, and defy Jupiter Pluvius with the aid of mackintoshes and waterproof ulsters, for the pleasure and excitement of watching the timber-topping and cross-country performances of animals equine and human, and a sufficient number of horses to keep the game alive, what just cause or impediment can be alleged against this winter form of racing? That a sufficient number of performers and spectators can be found this week's meeting at Croydon is ample evidence; and those who put in an appearance at the Woodside pastures must confess that they got their money's worth, though in one or two instances the caprice of owners and the ills horseflesh is heir to limited the fields. The wind-up of the legitimate season every year seems to take more and more out of the speculators, and consequently the big hurdle race and steeplechases at Croydon evoked but little in the way of market operations till the numbers were up. The acceptances for these were meagre when compared with the entrances; but the International Hurdle Race, after all, produced a fair field of eleven, and for speculative purposes was open enough, as the favourite, Citizen, could be backed up to the last moment at a trifle over 4 to 1, last year's winner, Woodcock, associated as a bird appropriately enough with the month of November, standing at 10 to 1. The race was a capital one, and it was not till within the last few strides that the favourite got up and defeated the almost rank outsider, Royal Oak, by a head. Another good race on the opening day was that for the Selling Steeplechase, which Mr. A. Yates, in capital form, won on Lothair, beating Zerlina by a neck. The Irish division, which is always formidable, threw two mains in succession, winning the Maiden Hurdle Race with Lady Pitt, and the Stewards' Steeplechase with Moortown. Whatever grievances our Hibernian friends suffer, or fancy they suffer, politically, civilly, or socially, there is certainly "justice to Ireland" on the English Turf. Wednesday's racing was decidedly good, though the Great Metropolitan Steeplechase dwindled down to five runners, and after a race of but little interest fell to last year's winner, Pride of Kildare, who beat Chimney Sweep easily enough. No less than fifteen animals contested the Selling Hurdle Race, for which Huntly, notwithstanding his indifferent performance on the previous day, was made favourite. He justified the anticipations of his supporters by winning the race from Somebody's Child by a neck. Gilestone, who has led a retired life of late, won the Shirley Hurdle Race for Mr. T. V. Morgan in a field of ten, starting at the decent odds of 6 to 1. Altogether the Craydon authorities may be congratulated on a very successful meeting.

Coursing.——The Berkeley Open Meeting shows signs of taking a foremost position among the coursing fixtures of the season, though yet in its infancy. The Derby Stakes were divided between Mr. Webb's Wordsley and Mr. Morgan's (nomination) Berkeley. Memorandum for those who are on the look out for young dogs likely to further distinguish themselves—"Keep an eye on Berkeley."

Football.——Matters have been rather quiet lately in the field, the match between the military establishments of Woolwich and Sandhurst being the most important of recent contests. It was fought at the Surrey Oval on Saturday last mid rain and mud, and resulted in the victory of the Woolwich team by three tries to nil. An inter-county match between Cumberland and Northumberland is to be recorded in favour of the latter by eight goals, Cumberland not making a single score.

Assault of Arms.——Under this somewhat perplexing title the London Athletic Club held high festival at St. James's Hall on Saturday last, and gave its annual exhibition of fencing, single-stick, boxing, and all kinds of gymnastic exercises. After its kind it is one of the events of the year, and drew, as it invariably does, an immense audience—or, to speak more correctly, "spectatory." The professional set-to between Allen and Donnelly with the gloves, conducted in a perfectly legitimate and artistic manner, was a treat to see, and might have been witnessed by a young ladies' school of the most refined character or by the bench of Bishops without scandal.

THEATRES

The author of The Omadhaun at the Queen's Theatre has with some ingenuity converted a French melodrama, the scene of which is in the Upper Pyrenees, into a romantic play, whereof the action is supposed to pass in the mountainous region of the south-west of Ireland. The original piece—as honestly acknowleged in the playbill—is Le Crétin de la Montagne, by Grangé and Thiboust, which was brought out at the Théâtre de la Gaîeté in 1861. A rough sort of version was quickly produced at the Surrey Theatre, with the title of The Idiot of the Mountain; but this is, we believe, the first time that anything like a careful adaptation of this stirring and picturesque play has been attempted on our stage. The skill of Mr. Grattan, the adaptor, has been chiefly exhibited in the genuine Irish tone which he has imparted to the dialogue, and praise is due to him for the judgment with which he has reduced the superabundant materials before him so as to bring the piece well within the limit of time beyond which experience seems to show that the patience of English audiences must not be tried. The play is, however, not without serious faults. The adaptor has not altogether made his own story clear; the characters hint at complications which are fully enough developed in the original, but in this compressed version are either not developed at all, or not sufficiently impressed on the mind of the audience for their significance and importance as elements of the story to be fully appreciated. We need hardly say that persecuted virtue is the main feature of both play and adaptation. A worthy innkeeper is charged with the murder of an oppressive usurer; the circumstantial evidence is strong, yet the real murderer is a villainous squire, who, to mislead justice, has done the deed by means of a gun belonging to the accused man, and surreptitiously obtained from his house. The murderer, however, does not go the length of allowing the innocent to be condemned. He happens to be one of the jury, and by his influence in this capacity he procures a verdict of acquittal. The innkeeper, nevertheless, still suffers from the persecution of his neighbours, who believe in his guilt; and from this point the story resolves itself into the efforts of his daughter, the heroine of the piece, to clear the reputation of her father. This, it will be seen, is not altogether so commonplace a situation as most melodramas present us with; and a poetical spirit is further communicated to the play by the presence of a poor half-witted lad, who, inspired by a simple love for the heroine, renders signal service in detecting the murderer. The interest, indeed, centres in this boy, and the part is played at the Queen's with equal delicacy and force by Miss Henrietta Hodson. It is, however, in great degree the relations of the boy with other personages, and above all with the murderer, that give him this importance, and these elements are in the adaptation weakened and obscured to an extent which does damage to the story. The management of the dénouement is singularly clumsy; as are the arrangements of the important set-scene in the second act, wherein serious incidents and dialogue are made to take place in a section of a cottage perched upon a rock. This scene in the original French play has always been enacted on the level of the stage, one half of which is occupied by the cottage. Although ordinary human eyesight is incapable, as Mr. Weller justly observed, of seeing through a deal door or a brick wall, a section of an interior is one of those conventions of the theatre to which—at least in a melodrama—no sensible person objects: but tragic proceedings going on in half a portmanteau upon a large shelf are apt to appear ridiculous. The acting of the piece is in most respects satisfactory, Mr. Vezin, Mr. Shiel Barry, Miss Carlisle, Miss Brennan, and Mr. Billington being each and all provided with characters strictly within their province; and little seems wanted to render The Omadhaun a popular piece.

Progress, which is a free rendering of Les Ganaches, was performed at the Criterion last Saturday morning, and, though somewhat didactic in tone, is by no means one of the least pleasing of the late Mr. T. W. Robertson's comedies. The interest of the piece, we may mention for the benefit of those who have not seen the play, turns on the affection of a young lady for a man of somewhat humbler position than herself. At first he does not reciprocate her feelings, but being encouraged by her friends (who regard it merely as the scheme of a good-natured doctor to restore her to health) to humour her belief that he is equally attached to her, he really and truly falls in love, to their great wrath and discomfiture. Miss Eastlake was a charming representative of Eva Summers, the young lady in question, and played the part in a way to justify a very sanguine estimate of her future reputation. She was excellently supported by Mr. Ashley as Dr. Brawn, the bustling, good-humoured medical attendant. Mr. C. Wyndham, as the young engineer whom Eva loves, has comparatively little to do; and we have seen Mr. Edgar Bruce in parts which suited him better than that of the proud yet generous-natured Arthur Mompesson. Mr. Bunnythorne and his scapegrace son might be omitted from the play without any damage to the plot. The former was humorously rendered by Mr. Harry Paulton. This (Saturday) morning, and on the 15th inst., the ever-popular Pink Dominos will be performed; on the 8th, Still Waters Run Deep, and on the 22nd, An American Lady.

On last Saturday morning at the Globe, Flirtation, a petite comedy in three acts, by Messrs. Romer and Bellamy, was performed. We noticed it when it was first produced last year, and therefore need only say that although the dialogue is very slight, the interest and amusement of the audience was well sustained by Mr. Righton's capital impersonation of the Major, and the piece met with a tolerably good reception. Mr. J. R. Plowman's burlesque Isaac of York concluded the entertainment.

The Duke's Theatre has reopened with a revival of Lord Byron's Sardanapalus, or rather of the compressed stage version of that play which has from time to time been employed as a vehicle for grand scenic effects. With the exception of Miss Gainsborough's performance of Myrrha there is not much to commend in the acting, or rather in the elocution, for there is but little action. The scenic splendours, however, which are due to the taste and enterprise of Mr. Calvert and Mr. Charles, fully justify the reputation with which this revival has come to town.

Shooting Stars at the Folly Theatre is another and a more free version of M. Hervé's L'Œil Crevé, which is brilliant and animated, as all musical pieces are at this theatre; though not remarkable for witty allusions or clever dialogue in general. The acting and singing of Miss Munroe, Miss Cameran, Miss Beaumont, and Mr. Howson, however, render the trifle a pleasant afterpiece.

The management of the Princess's have revived Mr. W. G. Wills's Jane Shore, with Miss Heath in the part of the heroine.

On Saturday last, at the Montefiore Institute, Tavistock Place, Mr. Charles Sleigh's comedy-drama company gave a representation of Mr. H. T. Craven's comic drama, Milky White. The characters were fairly sustained. The Institute, which is named after its chief patron, Sir Moses Montefiore, Bart., combines the advantages of a Club with those of a Literary and Art Society. Besides a bijou theatre, in which entertainments and lectures are given, there are ladies' rooms, dining, smoking, reading, and billiard saloons, a library, and classes for music, elocution, debating, &c.

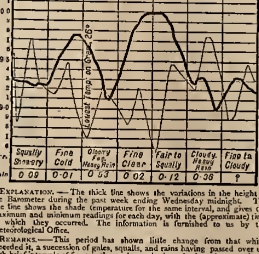
St. George's Hall, Langham Place.——After the 26th December next St. George's Hall will be under the entire management of Messrs. Alfred Reed and Corney Grain, and will as hitherto still be available for Amateur Performances, Concerts, &c., on the afternoons and evenings not devoted to Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's Entertainment.

Messrs. Savile Clarke and Du Terreaux's comedy, entitled Love Wins, was performed at the Crystal Palace Theatre on Wednesday, under the direction of Mr. Charles Wyndham, before a crowded audience. In these days of revivals it is rather remarkable that this cleverly constructed and amusing comedy has not been reproduced at a London theatre.

◆

WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

November 22nd to November 28th (inclusive)



Explanation.—The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

Remarks.——This period has shown little change from that which preceded it, a succession of gales, squalls, and rains having passed over us, with brief intervals of fine weather. As a rule the gales have been southerly to westerly in direction, and have been felt more severely on our western and northern coasts than about London. On Saturday, the 24th instant, however, a very small but deep disturbance passed up the Channel, and severe gales were experienced, from north-west to north-east in Devon and Cornwall, and from south-east to north-east on our south-eastern coasts. On the Kentish coast great damage was done by the violence of the wind; but the gale was not felt at any station north of the Wash. The barometer was highest (29·98 inches) on Sunday night, the 25th instant; lowest (29·00 inches) on Tuesday night, the 27th instant; range, 0·98 inches. Temperature, in the shade, was highest (54°) on Thursday, the 22nd instant; lowest (31°) on Monday, the 26th instant, when 21° was recorded on the grass; range, 23°. Rainfall: Total fall, 1·13 inches, on six days; greatest fall, 0·53 inches, on Saturday, the 24th instant. On Thursday morning last the weather was again stormy and wet, and the barometer had fallen to 29·85 inches in London.

◆

An Ingenious Picture Theft has been committed recently in the Philadelphia Academy of Arts. A valuable painting by the late Spanish artist, Fortuny, "The Council House of Grenada," was minutely copied by some painter, and the copy inserted in the place of the original, which was cut out of the frame and carried off. So well was the imitation executed that the trick was not discovered till several months afterwards, while the original has lately been found in the possession of an artist at Niagara Falls. The painting is worth about 3,000*l.*, and is specially valuable, as, says the New York Herald, there are only twenty-seven Fortunys in existence.

Scraps

Milan will hold an Industrial Exhibition in 1879.

A fine Bed of Oysters, extending over from twelve to twenty square miles, has been discovered off the west coast of Jersey.

Temple Bar's days are now numbered, and tenders for its removal are invited, the applications to be sent in by the 12th inst.

A Portrait of Mr. Darwin is to be painted for Cambridge University, and subscriptions are now being raised for this purpose.

The Ground round St. Paul's Cathedral is shortly to be laid out as a public garden. The palings will be lowered, trees planted, and pathways made.

Herr Wagner's Dramatic School at Bayreuth, wherein students are to be trained especially for the representation of his operas, opens on January 1st.

Terence's Adelphi will be the Westminster Play this year, and will be performed, as usual, in the Dormitory on the evenings of the 13th, 18th, and 20th inst.

Professor Ebers, the German novelist, who has furnished such curious studies of ancient Egyptian life in his "Egyptian Princess" and "Uarda," has completed a new novel, "Homo Sum," laid in the time of Constantine.

M. Victor Hugo has two five-act lyrical dramas ready for representation, according to the Paris Figaro, one being founded on the story of the Man in the Iron Mask, and called The Twins, and the other being entitled Torquemada. The author intended these two pieces to be played after his death, but the success of Hernani will probably induce him to bring them out at once.

A Species of Hydrophobia has attacked the deer in Cassiobary Park, the Earl of Essex's seat at Watford, according to the Live Stock Journal. The animals have become very fierce, foam at the mouth, fight, and run their heads against the trees, injuring themselves so much as to cause death. In this way forty-five deer had been destroyed up to the beginning of last week.

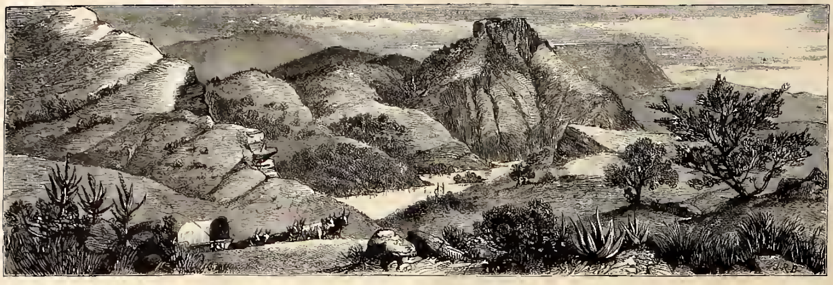
Incombustible Writing-Paper has been invented by two Salamanca savants, which is warranted to resist the most intense heat. A single sheet will carbonise, but will not burn, while if a roll of prepared paper be placed in the fiercest fire, although the outside leaves and the extreme edges may carbonise, the interior will remain unaltered, and the writing or printing will be perfectly legible. Papers already written or printed upon may undergo the process of preparation without injury.

Help to the Turkish Wounded.——The Stafford House Committee for the relief of the wounded in the Russo-Turkish war appeal afresh for assistance, as help is urgently needed in Armenia, where the recent battles have greatly increased the distress. Round Erzeroum thousands of wounded await assistance, and of these many must go for days or weeks without aid, and even die of their wounds, for simple want of appliances for their relief. The committee has sent out forty-two surgeons, has established five permanent hospitals and five ambulances, a transport service from the field to the hospitals, two railway transports, and five soup-kitchens, with the necessary stores and appliances, and four surgeons are now on their way to Trebizonde.

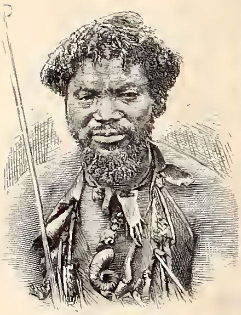
The Island of Jan Mayen, in the Arctic Ocean, has been freshly surveyed by the Norwegian Deep Sea Expedition, which explored the Northern Seas last summer. The island is a comparatively recent volcanic formation, similar in geological conformation to the later portion of Iceland, such as the peninsula of Reikavik. The volcano of Beerenberg, the highest point on the island, was ascertained by the explorers to be nearly 1,000 feet lower than had been believed—5,836 ft., instead of 6,640 ft. At a distance of seven or eight miles from Jan Mayen the sea was 1,000 fathoms deep, while the transition from the warm Gulf Stream to the icy Polar waters between Tromsoe and Jan Mayen was most strongly marked about lat. 71 N. and long. 5 W. Next year the Expedition will continue its investigations between Jan Mayen, Spitzbergen, and the North Cape, and will endeavour to ascertain the limit of the existence of shell-fish.

London Mortality increased last week, and 1,571 deaths were registered against 1,435 during the previous seven days, an increase of 136, but being 142 below the average, and at the rate of 23·2 per 1,000, a higher rate than any since May last. The present prevailing epidemic is measles, from which 82 deaths occurred during the last week (an increase of 16); there were 27 from small-pox (an increase of 13); 55 from scarlet fever; 11 from diphtheria; 32 from whooping-cough (an increase of 19), 38 from different forms of fever (an increase of 10, and 4 below the average), 13 from diarrhœa, and 1 from hydrophobia, being the sixteenth fatal case this year. Deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs numbered 409 (an increase of 96, but 56 below the average), of which 267 resulted from bronchitis, and 104 from pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 43 deaths. There were 2,398 births registered against 2,666 during the previous week. The mean temperature was 42·8 deg., or 1 deg. above the average. There were 11·9 hours of sunshine during the 59·7 hours the sun was above the horizon.

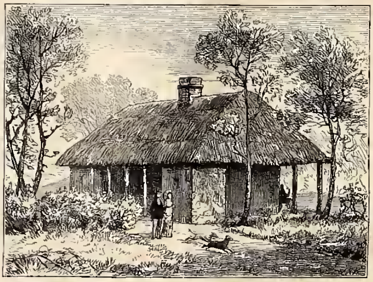
A Novel Fire Escape.——With reference to the engraving we published last week, Mr. T. Twining, of Twickenham, informs us that in May last he wrote to Captain Shaw, offering a sum of 25*l.*, or, if needed, of 50*l.*, for the purpose of instituting experiments on the feasibility of saving the inmates of the upper stories of a house on fire by preparing a suitable receptacle for them to jump down upon. Mr. Twining also forwarded to him a sketch of a pictorial diagram which has appeared for some years in his admirable published course of lectures, "Science Made Easy," and which suggests the same plan as that engraved by us, with the exception that a sail is portrayed instead of a net, as forming an object more easily seen from above. Mr. Twining concludes with the intimation that his proposed contribution is still available if the publicity which the suggestion has now attained should result in a series of experiments being undertaken by the proper authorities. Messrs. James Hood and Son, of Gateshead, suggest that, as timid persons might not easily be induced to jump from a two or three-storied window, the poles upon which the net or sail is supported might be made in three pieces of, say, six feet each, and joined together with iron ferules like an ordinary fishing-rod. This plan, however, would, we fear, be too complicated to work successfully at a time when every moment is precious.



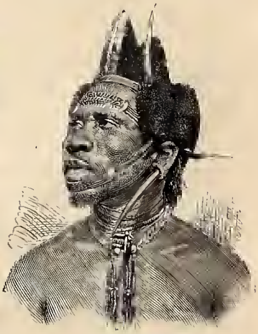
THE RIVER KEI FROM THE TOLENI ROAD, FINGOELAND



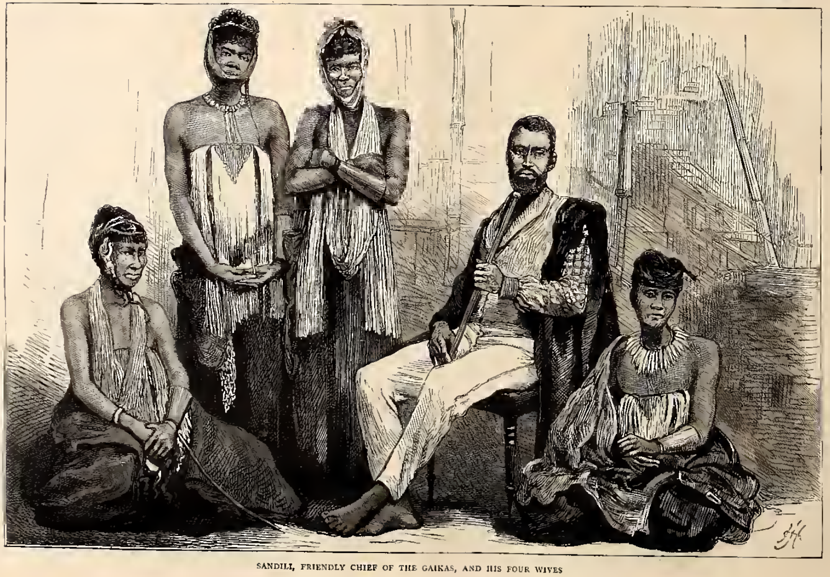
A BASUTO DOCTOR



NXAHAXA RESIDENCY, IDUTCHWA RESERVE, BORDERING ON KRELI'S COUNTRY



A KAFFIR WARRIOR



SANDILI, FRIENDLY CHIEF OF THE GAIKAS, AND HIS FOUR WIVES

THE KAFFIR WAR IN THE TRANSKEI

BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE DAY BEFORE

THEY were very patient with me, the Captain and Celia, while the madness was in my blood. They let me talk as wildly as I pleased, and did not argue. But on the third day Celia put her foot down.

"I will hear nothing more, Laddy," she said. "You have spent three days in dreams of bloodshed and battle. Talk to me about your mother, if you please. I shall never tire of looking at her eyes. They are like yours—when you do not madden yourself with the recollection of that story. Let us picture the sweet life in the Polish village with the chateau beside it, and the girls dancing. Let us play their waltz, or let us go up to the wall and talk of Leonard. But no more battles."

It was a wise prohibition, and I had to obey. My thoughts were directed into a new channel, and the furies which had taken possession of me were, for the moment at least, expelled.

Four days, then, to the twenty-first. Four long, tedious days.

Then three.

Then the days became hours, and at last we were only a single day—only four-and-twenty hours from the fixed time when Leonard should come back to us. "In riches or in poverty"—somehow, in spite of all obstacles—he was to return to Celia's Arbour on the evening of the twenty-first of June, 1858. How would he come back, and what would be his history?

"If he is changed, Laddy," said Celia, "he will find us changed too. You, poor boy, under a promise to go out and get killed for Poland. Not that you shall go in spite of the old patriot. And I—what am I, Laddy?"

"You are like Andromeda chained to the rock, waiting for the monster to come and devour her. Or you are like an Athenian maiden going out to the youth-devouring Minotaur. But patience; Perseus came to Andromeda, and Theseus killed the Minotaur. I fancy the Minotaur must have been a tall and rather imposing animal to look at, six feet high at least, with a heavy white moustache and a military carriage. And very likely he wore blue spectacles out of doors."

"And what was Theseus like?"

"I think we will call him Perseus, and our monster shall be Andromeda's terror. There is an ugly story, you know, about Theseus and Ariadne."

Cis flushed a sweet rosy red. "Then tell me what Perseus was like."

"He was about as tall as the monster, perhaps not quite. He was very handsome, had curly brown hair, perhaps he had a moustache, he was about four-and-twenty years of age; he was greatly esteemed by everybody because he was so brave and strong; there was a mystery about his birth which only made him more romantic; there was, you know, about a good many of the ancients,—Theseus, for instance, Achilles, Œdipus. The damsels all fell in love with him because there was no one in all Greece or the Isles half so handsome; but he kept himself away from all of them; I believe there is a story about some Queen offering him half her throne if he would marry her, but he would not,—declined in the most respectful, but unmistakeable terms. When she received his answer, and sent half-a-dozen men to murder him—because terrible is the wrath of a woman whose beauty has been despised—he stood with his back against a wall, with his short sword held so, and with his shield held in the other hand, he made mincemeat of all those six murderers together, and went on his way without further molestation. There was a Dryad once, too, who met him in an Arcadian forest, and proffered him, in return for his love, half the balance of her life. She said she didn't know how much there was left to run, but she thought about fifteen hundred years or so, when she and her sister, and the great God Pan, would all be snuffed out together. Perseus told her that Love was immortal, and not a slave to be bought or sold. So he passed away, and the Dryad, sitting under a tree, slowly pined and pined till Orpheus found her at last changed into the strings of an Æolian harp, and sighing most melodiously when the western breeze blew upon it. Perseus——"

"Laddy, talk sense."

"I can't, Cis. I feel as if Leonard was coming home to lift a great weight from both our hearts. I do not know how. I feel it. Perseus, however, was not callous to female loveliness, only he had given his heart away five years before, Cis, five years before."

"Laddy, I forbid you to go on."

"It is not a made-up story, Cis. I am certain it is all true. Arthur and Barbarossa are coming some day, to remove the miseries of the people. Why not Leonard to take away our troubles? We had no troubles when he went away. Now we are hampered and fettered, by no fault of our own, and I see no way out of it."

"Does the Captain know that it is so near?"

"Yes, he has not spoken of it to me, and he will not, I am sure. But he knows, and is looking forward. Last night I heard his step for an hour in his room, after he had gone to bed. He was thinking of Leonard, and could not sleep. And this morning he told Mrs. Jeram that you were going to stay all night to-morrow."

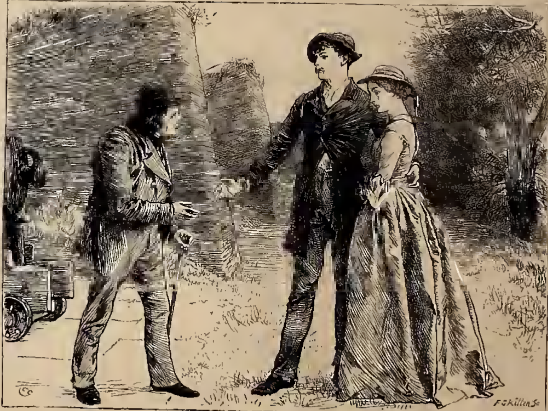
"Did he? The kind old Captain!"

"And that there would be another guest, and she was to get supper, a magnificent supper. The other guest, he explained, was to have his own room, and you were to have the spare room. Then I interposed, and said that a better arrangement would be to put the stranger into the spare bed in my room, so that he would not have to turn out. He grumbled and laughed, but he gave way."

"So he knows—but no one else."

"No one else: not even poor old Mrs. Jeram."

"We have gained a little time," said Celia, "Herr Raumer has not asked yet for my decision; but he has not given me up; and I am sure he will not. My father says nothing; but he starts if I come upon him suddenly. How will Leonard be able to help us with him?"



He got one hand free, and gave it to me

How indeed? And yet, somehow, he was going to help. I was quite sure of it.

"And how will Leonard help us?" I asked.

"It is no use hoping," said Celia. "Leonard can help neither of us."

"He will help you, somehow, Cis. Of that be very sure. But he cannot help me."

"He shall help you, Laddy. Do you think we are going to let you go off to be killed?"

"I must," I said. "I have partly got over the revengeful madness which filled my soul when Wassielewski told me my story; I can think of a Russian, now, without wanting to tear his heart out. But the old man is right, I owe my life to the same cause in which my father and my mother lost theirs. If I can do anything for Poland, I must. And if Wassielewski tells me that it will be good for my country if I go out to get shot in his name, why I must do that. And I have sworn to do it, on the cross that my father carved."

"Sworn! Laddy, of what power is an oath made under those conditions? You were maddened when you swore that oath. That old enthusiast ought never to have told you the story."

"Cis, dear, if I were to break that oath, it would break his heart. There is no way out of it at all. I must go."

That was the real reason. Heaven knows that during the first transport of rage, while before my eyes moved, visible in all the details, the long line of carts full of children, escorted by cavalry, and followed by shrieking women, running blindly along in the snow, and among them my poor mother, there was no scheme of vengeance, however mad, into which I wouldn't have plunged with joy. With calmer thoughts came better judgment, and I hope I shall not be accused of insensibility because I listened to Celia when she said that the perils of hopeless insurrection were not what my mother's death called for. There is no blacker story in all the black record of Russia than that robbery and murder of those helpless children; no wail yet resounding within the vaults of space more piercing than my poor mother's last cry for her stolen child. And yet, O sweet pure eyes; O tender face; O lips of soft and compassionate mould—would you wish in return for your death another tale of misery and retribution?

And if I did not go when the old man should think it the time to summon me, I should break his heart. It was the dream of his old age to carry back with him the son of his murdered mistress. He thought that because his own life had been spent in brooding over that cruel crime all good Poles at home had done the same thing, and he dreamed that he had but to show himself with me beside him to say, "This is the child of Roman Pulaski, tortured to death in the mines, and Claudia, who died of cold and fatigue trying to save the child," and that thousands would rise from all quarters to die for Poland. For at least he entertained no illusions of possible success. Poland could not free herself in his lifetime; of that he was quite certain. All the more honour to those who, knowing the worst, were ready to brave the inevitable.

When a man fixes his thoughts incessantly upon one thing, when day and night he is always dwelling upon a great aim, there comes, or seems to come, unto him, when his mind is charged with figures of the present and the future, the gift of prophecy. The mist which falls upon the spirit of the Highland seer is gloomy always, and full of woe. The prophet is always like him who would prophecy no good concerning Ahab, but only evil. As for me, I think,

> Too dearly would be won
> The prescience of another's pain,
> If purchased by mine own.

Six years ago, when the maddest of all modern revolts, that of the Commune of Paris, was staggering to its doom in blood and flame, there was one man among the leaders, Delescluze by name, who out of a life of over sixty years had spent between thirty and forty in prison, for the sacred cause of the people. Twice had he travelled backwards and forward on that cruel and stifling voyage between Brest and Cayenne. Many times had he been arrested on suspicion, he had been haled before judges, browbeaten, scoffed, and punished; had he been in Prussia he would have had the administration of stick, with those cuffs, boxes of the ear, kicks, and addresses in the third person, which illustrate the superior sweetness and light of the land of Geist. Had he been in Russia he would have had the knout. As he was in France he only got prison, with insufficient food, and wretched lodging. Then came the time of the Commune, prophesied by Heine, after the siege, when Delescluze for the first time in his life got his chance. It was really only the ghost of a chance, but he did his best with it. Of course he failed, as we know, and became, together with his party, a byeword of execration, by him quite undeserved. When it was apparent, even to him, the most fervent believer in the Commune, that there really was no longer any hope left, the poor old man was sent forth to meet Death. He would not wait to be brought before a Court Martial, to have more questions to answer, more witnesses to hear examined, to listen to more speeches, to wait in suspense for the sentence which would do him to death, to go back to a miserable prison, and sit there till the hour struck, when in the cold grey of the spring dawn he was to be placed with his back against the wall of La Roquette and receive the bullets of the soldiers. All this was too wearisome. But he had to die. His work in the world was over. He had striven for the best; he had maintained his own ideal of purity and singleness of purpose; as he had lived for the Cause, so he would die amid its dying struggles. He descended into the street, took off his hat, as one should in the presence of Death, of God, and of the Judgment, and walked without a word along the way till he came to the first barricade. Up to this he climbed, and then standing, his long white hair streaming in the wind, his sorrowful eyes looking upwards, his face full of that great love for humanity which made him half divine, he awaited the bullet, which was not long in coming.

When I read the story of the death of Delescluze, when I conversed with a man who actually saw it, I thought of poor old Wassielewski, for such was he, as unselfish, as simple, as strong in his conviction, and as careless of himself, if, by spending and being spent, he could advance the Cause.

With brave words and a great pretence at cheerfulness I comforted poor Celia, and prophesied her release; but I could not feel the assurance I pretended. How could Leonard, if he were ever so successful, free her so as to leave her father safe from the German's revenge? How could he release me from the oath which bound me to the old Pole, and yet not darken the last years of his life with the thought that the child of the Lady Claudia was a traitor to his mother's cause?

We had been living in a fool's paradise, expecting such great things; and now at the very time when they ought to be coming off, we were face to face with the cold truth.

"We must not think of ourselves any more, Laddy," said Cis, as if reading my heart. "If Leonard can help us, he will. At all events, he will be on our side. I shall wait patiently until I am called upon to give my answer, and then, Laddy—and then—if for my father's sake"—she broke off and left the sentence unfinished. "You must both of you try not to think badly of me."

"We shall never think badly of you, whatever you do, Cis," I said, a little huskily.

"Come home with me, Laddy," she said, rising from the grass. "It is nearly eight o'clock. See, the tide is high; we shall have everything to-morrow evening just as it was five years ago; a splendid evening; a flowing tide; the light of a midsummer sunset on the water; the buttercups and daisies out upon the meadow; the long green grass waving on the ramparts and grown up before the mouths of the cavern; you and I, dear Laddy, standing by the old gun, waiting for him. What was it he promised? 'In velvet or in rags—in riches or in poverty, I will come to see you on the 21st of June, 1858.' And now it is the 20th. Laddy—tell me how he will come."

"We shall see him first," I said, "crossing the meadow, just down there. We shall know him by the backward toss of his head. Presently we shall see his brown curls, and then his eyes and his mouth. He will see us then, and his lips and eyes will laugh a welcome before he runs up the slope. Then he will spring upon us in his old way, and—and—where he said goodbye, Cis, he kissed you."

"We are older now," said Cis. "And do not be silly, sir. As if men want to kiss like children!"

"It depends, my dear," I replied wisely, "on the object. However, that will be the manner of his return. And then we shall all three march off to the Captain's, Leonard between us; and should be singing as we went, but for the look of the thing; Leonard will be asking us questions about the dear old Captain and everybody—wait—Cis—wait for four-and-twenty hours."

I went home with her. Herr Raumer was talking to Mrs. Tyrrell in the drawing-room. We had a little music. The German played and sang one or two of his Volkslieder in his most sentimental manner, but we listened very little. Mr. Tyrrell was in his office, and I crept down to see him.

He was sitting in an attitude of profound melancholy before a pile of papers.

"Shut the door, Laddy, boy," he said, wearily. "Who is upstairs?"

"Herr Räumer, Mrs. Tyrrell, and Cis."

He sighed.

"He is beginning to worry about an answer. What would Celia say?"

"Celia would be made wretched for life. It cannot be. Is it quite, quite necessary?"

"There is one way out of it," he murmured.

I stood still and looked at him."

"What is the one way out of it?"

"There are two ways—Death and Dishonour. Let no one know, Laddy. Think of me as you must, only think that for no other cause would I ask this thing of my child. Poor Celia! Poor Celia!"

He drew his hand across his forehead.

"I cannot sleep—I cannot work—I can think of nothing else. Do you believe I like to have that man here—that cold and selfish cynic—that I willingly tolerate him in my house, to say nothing of seeing him hang about my daughter? But I am a lost man, Ladislas. I am a lost and guilty man, and I must abide my lot."

A lost and guilty man! And this the most successful man in the town!

He pointed to the safe painted outside "Herr Räumer."

"The papers are there—locked up. If I only had the key for one minute Celia would be free."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE TWENTY-FIRST OF JUNE

The day fulfilled its promise of the evening: it was one of those most perfect and glorious days which sometimes fall in June, and make that month, in full summer and yet with all the hope and promise of the year before it, the most delightful of any. I rose early, because I could not sleep; but I found the Captain up before me, at work in the garden. But he prodded the ground nervously, and made little progress. At prayers he opened the Bible at random, and read what fell first before his eyes. It was a chapter of the Song of Solomon, and as he read his voice faltered.

"'The watchmen that go about the city found me, to whom I said, Saw ye him whom my soul loveth?

"'It was but a little that I passed from them, but I found him whom my soul loveth.'"

Then he stopped, having read only the first four verses of the chapter; and to him, as to me, they seemed to be of good omen.

He did not mention Leonard's name, but he presently went up stairs, and I knew he was gone to see that the room was in order for him. He brought out certain articles of family plate which only saw the light on grand occasions; and I caught him making extensive and costly preparations with a couple of bottles of champagne. All day he was very serious. Nor did he, as usual, go out upon those mysterious rounds of his, of which I have spoken.

"Celia will come here to dinner, sir."

"Ay—ay——. The earlier the better. Celia cannot come too early or too often." He sat down in his wooden arm chair and began to nurse his leg in a meditative fashion.

"Laddy——Celia Tyrrell is a very beautiful girl."

"Have you only found that out to-day, sir?" I asked. "Why, she is the most beautiful girl in all the world, I believe."

"I was thinking—Laddy—if things are all right—and they must be all right, or else he would have written—when he comes home—he might—I know I should have done so at his age—he might—fall in love with her. She must have a good husband, the best husband that we can find for her. Look high or low, Laddy, I can see no one but Leonard that will do for her."

"But you have not seen him yet. And he may have fallen in love with some one else."

"Nonsense, boy. As if I did not know what he is like. Cubs don't grow out of lions' cubs; you can't turn a white boy into a nigger; and a Portugee, as every sailor knows, is a Portugee by birth."

Then we began, as we had done the night before, speculating how the wanderer would return. He was above all things, according to the Captain, to be strong, handsome, and successful.

Celia came to our mid-day dinner, and when it was over we moved into the garden, and sat under the old mulberry tree. The sun was streaming full upon the sheet of water before us, and a light breeze crisped the surface.

We spread rugs on the grass, and all three sat down upon them, Celia lying with her head on the Captain's knees, while he sat with his back against the tree. It was peaceful and quiet save for the boom of the mill hard by, and to that we were accustomed.

The excitement of the day touched Celia's cheek with a light flush, and heightened the brightness of her eyes. I had never before seen her more perfectly beautiful than on that afternoon. The Captain's eyes rested on her face, and his hand was in her hair with a gentle caress.

"This was where you were sleeping," she said in a low voice, "when he first came."

We did not say "Leonard" on this day because all our minds were full of him, and a pronoun was quite as useful as the noun.

The Captain nodded his head.

"Just here, my dear," he replied, "and just such an afternoon as this, without the breeze, and may be a thought warmer. It was in August, when the mulberries are ripe. I came out after dinner. My dinners were solitary enough then, before I had the boys to mess with me, and I sat under the tree and smoked my pipe. Then I fell fast asleep. What woke me was the mulberries dropping on my face, and then I looked up and saw the pretty rogue laughing at me, with his mouth full of mulberries, and his face and hands stained black with mulberry juice. Ho! Ho! and he began to laugh at once. What a boy he was! What a boy! Never any boy like him for spirit. A thousand pities he wasn't a sailor."

"And you never lost sight of him after that?" said Celia.

"No, my pretty—never after that. It was a matter of a year or two though before I found out that I was a lonely old bachelor, and wanted the boys with me. Wanted them badly, you may be sure. We had a good spell of fine weather, those years you were both of you at school, Laddy, hadn't we?"

"Indeed we had, sir."

"I was at sea when I was thirteen, and I hadn't much experience of shore-going boys till then. To be sure, I was always fond of watching boys at play, and talking to them—perhaps throwing in a word on the great subject of duty. But Lord! the things I learned from those two! The pretty ways of them when they were next door to babies! and their growing up to be boys together bit by bit. Then how they grew to be self-reliant, and how we all grew to understand each other! My dear," the good old man continued, simply, "if I were to give you what is best for all of us, man or woman, I would give you children. You can't distrust the Lord when you have felt what it is for the little children to trust and love you. I never had a wife, but I have had two boys all the same. Both good sons to me—Laddy, there, will not be jealous—and to each his gifts; but Leonard was born, like Nelson, without fear."

"Always a brave boy, was he not, Captain?" Celia murmured.

"It's a rare gift. Most of us learn by experience how to go into action without fear, and a fight is a red-letter day for soldiers as well as sailors. But Leonard would have gone in laughing as a middy. It's a beautiful thing to see a plucky boy! You remember how he used to come home after a fight, Laddy? The other boy always struck his colours, eh?—and generous and thoughtful with it, too. Why did I ever consent to his going away for five years?"

"Patience!" said Cis. "Tell me more about him."

We kept the Captain amused all the afternoon with yarns of Leonard's school life, while in the quiet garden the big humble bees droned, and the hollyhocks turned their great foolish faces to the sun, while the mill went grinding as the water ran out with the tide to the deep-toned music of its heavily turning wheels, and the golden sunshine of June lay upon the rippled waters of the mill-dam, and lit with flashes of dazzling light the leaves of the trees upon the little island redoubt.

At six I brought out a table and chair, and we had tea in the garden, also under the mulberry tree. Cis made it for us; she always made it so much better than we did.

And then the time began to drag, and the Captain to look at his watch furtively. Presently the mill stopped, and everything became quite still. That meant that it was seven o'clock.

Then Celia and I rose from the table.

"We are going for a walk, Captain," said Cis.

"Mayn't I go too?" he asked, wistfully.

She shook her head with decision.

"Certainly not. You have got to stay at home. We have got to go to the walls and—and walk about there—and talk. And we shall not be back till a quarter to nine, or perhaps later. Perhaps, Captain, we shall bring you some news—Oh! what news will it be?" she cried eagerly.

No one on the Queen's Bastion, when we got there; Celia's Arbour as deserted as any out-work of Palmyra; no one on the long straight stretch of wall between the gate and the Bastion—not even a nurse with children; and our own corner as green and grassy, as shaded by the great elm, as when, five years ago, Leonard bade us farewell there. Nothing changed here, at any rate.

"Laddy," whispered Celia, in awe-struck tones, "suppose, after all, he should not come."

"He will come, Celia; but we are an hour before our time."

"Oh! what a long day it has been! I am selfish. I have been able to think of nothing but my own troubles until to-day. And now they seem to be all forgotten in this great anxiety."

We walk up and down the quiet wall, talking idly of things unimportant, talking to pass the time.

Eight struck from half-a-dozen clocks, from the clock in the Dockyard, the clock on the Ordnance Wharf, the clock of St. Faith's, the clock of St. John's, from all of them. The splendid sun was sloping fast towards Jack the Painter's Point; the great harbour, for it was high tide, just as on that night when Leonard went away, was a vast lake of molten fire, with sapphire edging below our feet. We leaned against the rampart, and looked out, but we were no longer thinking of the harbour or the light upon it.

Five years, since he left us, a tall stripling of seventeen, to seek his fortune in the wide and friendless world. Five years. Celia, who was now so tall and fair, was then a little girl. In her, at least, Leonard would not be disappointed. And I? Well, I suppose, I was much the same to look at. And for my fortunes, there was little to tell and nothing to be proud of. Only a music-master in a provincial town; only an organist to a church; a composer of simple songs to please myself and Celia. But what would he be like? What tale would he have to tell us? What adventures to relate? In what part of the world had his fortunes drifted him?

Five years. They make a girl into a woman; a boy into a man; five links in the chain of time; time to make new friends, to form and lose new loves; to strengthen a purpose; to make or mar a life. Had they made, or had they marred, the life of Leonard?

"What will he say, when he sees us?" murmured Celia.

"He will remember, Cis, the words of Spenser.

> Tell me, ye merchants' daughters, did ye see
>   So fair a creature in your town before?
> So sweet, so lovely, and so mild as she,
>   Adorned with beauty's grace and virtue's store.

"Don't, Laddy, please. Let us talk only of him, until he comes."

"Where is he now?" she whispered, looking round. "On the road walking quickly so as to keep his promise to the minute? Is he in the train? Do you think he came last night and has been hiding away in a hotel all day for fear of meeting us before the time? Oh, Laddy, let us move about at least. I cannot stand here doing nothing."

The minutes passed slowly on. I looked at my watch.

"Twenty minutes more. Courage, Cis! Only twenty minutes. Where are your thoughts now?"

"I was thinking of the dear old time. Listening to his talk about the great world—it lay over there, you remember, behind the harbour and the hill. Wishing I had been a man, to go with him and fight the world beside him."

"Five years ago, Cis! Why, Leonard may have lost his faith in his own power, and—"

"Don't, Laddy. Not now. It is all we have to believe in. And—and—Laddy—please—do not tell him what you told me."

"I understand, dear Cis. I have forgotten that I ever told you."

"Not but that you made me happy—happy and proud; any girl would be proud to think of having had, if only for a day, such a hope and such a love. But he must never know. And yet I should be ashamed to hide things from him."

"Until you tell him yourself then, Cis."

I looked at my watch again. Heavens! had Time tumbled down down and hurt himself, so that he could only crawl? Only a quarter-past eight. Fifteen minutes more.

"Where are you now, Cis?"

"I am thinking what a difference he will see in us, and we in him. Why, I was only a child, a girl of fourteen, then, and you were only fifteen."

"At least," I said, "he will see no difference in me. I am no taller and no straighter. But you—oh! Celia, if you only knew how beautiful he will think you!"

"That is only what you think, dear Laddy. Beautiful? Oh! If I ever have any thoughts that are not common or mean it is because you have put them into my heart. What should I be now, if I had not had you, all these five long years?"

She stooped, and kissed my cheek.

I could endure that now—I could kiss her in return—without that old passionate yearning which, a very little while before, had been wont to set the blood tingling in every pulse at very sight of her. The monks of old were quite right in one thing, though as a Protestant I am bound to think that they had a very confused and imperfect sort of perception. I mean that you may, by dint of resolution and patience—they would call it prayer and penance—quite beat down and entirely subdue any inclination of the heart or intellect. They started with the supposition that every man was bound to fall in love with every woman. That is absurd, but an intelligible position on the score of monkish ignorance. I, for my part, was only in danger once of falling in love. Having seen, known, and learned the sweet nature of one woman, it was not possible that I should ever fall in love with another.

We kissed each other on the lips, and then we sat with clasped hands upon the sloping bank, waiting. At last the clock struck the half-hour, and we turned together and looked across the green.

Suddenly came a figure, a ragged figure, walking swiftly across the grass.

Yes, as I had prophesied, by the backward fling of his head, by the proud carriage, by the firm and elastic walk, we knew him.

Celia clasped my hands convulsively, and I hers; and before she sprang to her feet she whispered,

"See, he is ragged—he is poor—he has failed. Not a word, not a look, Laddy, to let him see what we feel. Oh, my poor Leonard! my poor Leonard!"

She made a little moan, and then ran forward to meet him. For it was Leonard himself and no other who, at sight of us, came bounding up the grass slope with quick and eager step, and in a moment was with us, holding Celia by both his hands, and gazing in her face with eyes that spoke of love—of love—of love. Who could mistake that look! Not Celia, who met the look once, and then dropped her eyes shamefaced. Not I, who knew by sad experience what love might be, how strong a king, how great a conqueror.

In one glance we caught the melancholy truth. He was in rags; there was no petty pretence of genteel shabbiness; there was no half failure, he was in rags absolute. He wore a battered old felt hat, the brim of which, partly torn, hung over his right eye; he had on a coat which was a miracle for shabbiness; it was green where it ought to have been black; shiny where it had once exhibited a youthful gloss; and it had a great hole on the left shoulder, such a hole as would be caused by carrying a bundle on a stick. The coat, an old frock, was fastened by the two surviving buttons, across his chest. One could see that he had no waistcoat, and his trousers were in the last stage of dilapidation and decay. He wore neither collar nor necktie. But it was Leonard. There was no mistake about him. Leonard came back to us on the day that he promised. Leonard, dressed as a beggar, and stepping like a prince.

"Celia!—Laddy!"

"Leonard!"

Both hands; not one. And as he clasped her tight she drew nearer to him, and like a child who holds up his face to be kissed, she looked up at him. But there was no kiss. Men, as Celia said, are not like children, always wanting to kiss. Oho! Cis, as if you knew! Man's love is like the morning sun, which, falling on his bride, the earth, draws up sweet mists which rise to hide her blushes. Leonard was come back, and now I understood how in her mind Leonard was to make all straight, because Leonard loved her, and she loved Leonard. And he a beggar.

He got one hand free, and gave it to me.

"Laddy! Well? You at least are not changed. But look at Celia!"

"Take off your hat, Leonard," she said. "Let us look at your face. Laddy! He is just the same, except for that." She laughed, and patted her own upper lip with her fingers. Leonard had grown a great moustache. "And his face is bronzed. Where have you been, sir, to get your face so brown? Fie! what a bad hat! A great hole in the side of it, and look what a coat to come home in! Dear, dear, before we take him home to the Captain we must dress him up. What a pity he is too tall to wear your things, Laddy. Now we have found him again we will never let him go. Will we? He is our predigal son, Laddy, who has come back to us—back to us," and here she broke down, and burst into tears. "We have so longed for you, have we not, Laddy? And the time has been so weary, waiting for you."

"But I am come at last, Celia," he said, with eyes that filled—I had never before seen a tear in Leonard's eyes—"I have kept my promise. See—in rags and tatters, with empty pockets." He turned them out.

"What does it matter," she cried, "so long as we have you, how you come?"

"And the Captain?"

"He is well," I told him, "and waiting at home for us all. Come, Leonard."

He hesitated, and looked with a humorous smile at his ragged habiliments.

"What will the Captain say to these rags? Dear old boy, it is not as he expects, is it? Nor as you expected, Celia."

"No, Leonard, I am sorry for your ill-success. But it wasn't your own fault?"

"No, certainly not my own fault," he replied, with a queer look. "Not my own fault. I have done my best. Celia and Laddy! How jolly it is to say the two names over again with their owners in the old place! And how often have I said them to myself, thousands of miles away,"—he had been a traveller, then.—"Suppose you two go first to the Captain, and prepare him. Will not that be best? Say that he must not be surprised to find me coming home in a sad plight—all in rags, you know—tell him about the hat, Laddy, and then—I will only be a quarter of an hour after you—he won't be so very much shocked. Will you do this? Good. Then, in a quarter of an hour, I will be there."

He caught Celia's hand and kissed it, looking her in the eyes half lovingly, half amused, and ran down the slope as lightly as if he was come back a conquering prince.

We looked at each other in stupefaction. Was it really Leonard? Was it a strange dream?

"Can you understand it, Celia?"

"Not yet, Laddy, dear. Do not speak to me just now."

"His hands were white," I went on, unheeding, "like the hands of a gentleman; his boots were good and new, the boots of a gentleman; and his face—did that look like the face of a beggar, Celia?"

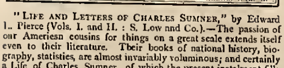
"Always the same face, Laddy. The dearest face in all the world to you and to me, isn't it? Poor and in rags. Poor—poor Leonard!"

"I don't know," I replied, "whether your face isn't dearer to me than Leonard's. That is because I have seen more of it, perhaps. But why is he in such a dreadful plight? He said he had been thousands of miles away. He must have been an emigrant in America, and failed."

Of course that was it. He must have gone to America as an emigrant and failed.

We crept slowly and sadly back, like a pair of guilty children. What were we to say to the Captain? Who should break the news?

(To be continued)



THE READER

"LIFE AND LETTERS OF CHARLES SUMNER," by Edward L. Pierce (Vols. I. and II.: S. Low and Co.).—The passion of our American cousins for things on a great scale extends itself even to their literature. Their books of national history, biography, statistics, are almost invariably voluminous; and certainly a Life of Charles Sumner, of which the present instalment fills two closely-printed volumes, and which cannot possibly be completed in less than two thick volumes more, will not be held an exception to the rule. It may be doubted, indeed, whether so lengthy a memoir is not a little disproportioned to the importance of its subject. For Charles Sumner, though a man of mark, was hardly in the foremost rank of American statesmen—in the rank, that is, of a Lincoln and a Seward. His fame, in truth, is rather that of the orator than of the politician, of the man whose reputation chiefly rests on three or four great speeches, and on the glory of having been at once champion and martyr in the cause of negro emancipation. But the interest of a biography is often to be measured less by what its subject does or says than by the things he sees and hears, and from this point of view Charles Sumner's life is very interesting indeed, even more so perhaps, in these its earlier stages, to English than to American audiences. How one so young and little known, armed only with a few letters of introduction, made good his footing almost without effort in the best social circles of the Old World was a puzzle even to those who helped to smooth his way. Famous he was not, for he was only known as editor of the American Jurist, as friend and protegé of good Judge Storey. Nor was he highly born or rich. His father, the plain Sheriff of Suffolk County, Mass., sprang from a line of worthy New England farmers. The very tour whose details fill the larger moiety of these two volumes was only made on borrowed money, and at a risk of losing his place in the profession to which he looked for bread, which to his English lawyer friends, the Folletts and the Denmans, seemed positively appalling. Yet here we find him—a briefless junior, so to speak, with a talent for reporting—installed at once in the best legal, literary, and political society; elected honorary member of Arthur's and the Garrick; at home with the leaders of the bar and of the bench, with Brougham, Pollock, Cottenham, no less than Follett, Lushington, or Charles Austin; wandering pleasantly from Brougham Hall to Wentworth, from Wentworth to Holkham; consulted by statesmen on the little asperities that then more frequently than now ruffled our intercourse with the United States. The letters which form so large a portion of these volumes go far to solve the seeming mystery, to trace the search of Charles Sumner's success less to his own indisputable ability or close relationship to Judge Storey than to his, then at least, thoroughly genial temperament, to the contagious readiness to please and to be pleased that sat so well on the stranger from the West. One often indeed imagines oneself perusing the recollections of a genial Talfourd or a less acid Rogers, not those of one who in his inmost core was, after all, a Yankee of the Yankees. His larger public career at home begins just where these volumes end, with the delivery of the famous "Fourth of July" speech, which placed him at once in the front rank of American orators. The pleasant easy flow of the memoir and correspondence reflect thus far the easy course of Sumner's early life. The rougher, historically more important, sequel remains to be told.

Among illustrated gift-books of the present season high place must be assigned to a magnificent volume, "Great Painters of Christendom: Cimabue to Wilkie" (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin), by J. Forbes-Robertson. Letter-press and illustrations seem for once almost equally good, the first comprising excellent notices of the chief masters of the Italian, Dutch, Flemish, Spanish, French, and English Schools; the second some 250 illustrations of their works, part large engravings, part prettily-finished heading and side-pieces. The whole volume presents an outline history of painting in a most attractive form, and with an amount of freshness in its general treatment and choice of examples—notably for the Dutch masters and the French Schools of the Regency and the First Empire—which quite removes it from the mere illustrated rechauffé of things that have been described elsewhere.

In "The Mediterranean Illustrated," by the author of "Buried Cities of Campania" (T. Nelson and Sons)—another really delightful gift-book, for its Italian sections more especially—we make the circuit of the ports and islands of the inland sea, commencing with visits to Malta and "the Rock," thence coasting quickly round its shores from Spain to France and Western Italy, thence up and down each side of the Adriatic to the Morea and the "Isles of Greece," and back by Syria and the African coast. The numerous engravings very effectively illustrate the scenes that greet the visitors from the sea; while here and there excursions inland afford occasion for fair descriptions of Granada, Lyons, Rome, Jerusalem, and Athens. For the young reader, not yet surfeited with books of travel, these pretty pictures of scenes seldom we think embodied before in one comprehensive survey, will prove an almost inexhaustible source of pleasure and instruction.

"Masterpieces of Antique Art," by Stephen Thompson (Griffith and Farran), or "Twenty-four Examples in Permanent Photography from the Collections in the Vatican, the Louvre, and the British Museum," though a fairly handsome volume, is at times a little disappointing. Photography scarcely strikes us as in all cases the most successful medium for the reproduction of the antique—to go no further than the "Sleeping Ariadne" of the title-page. Nor is the letterpress, though good as far as it goes, quite so complete as might be desired in a book of such pretensions, giving for instance only a few lines to the Melian Venus, and nothing to the many controversies about the true pose and meaning of the famous statue. Still it is a graceful volume for the drawing-room, and by no means without value as a book about art.

We must commit to critical readers of the gentler sex Mrs. H. R. Haweis' "Art of Beauty" (Chatto and Windus)—beauty in dress, in colour, in ornament, in furniture. Honestly we feel a little at sea in discussions whether dress should conceal, disclose, or, as poor M. Charles Blanc terms it, laisser deviner. We even have an old-world weakness for the barbaric times when dress was simply a medium for the display of splendour—we do not quite mean to the full extent of Queen Elizabeth, ruffed and farthingaled out of all likeness to humanity—and people talked less of the human form divine, whether revealed with the Paradisaic frankness of the Attic tunic or suggested by the subtler mouldings of the newest thing in jupes. We may say, however, that Mrs. Haweis' volume contains many sensible remarks on modern absurdities of dress, and not a few suggestions of greater or less utility, most piquantly set off by illustrations, all interesting, some comic, and a few graceful.

Whatever theory we adopt as to the origin of our species, whether the simple record which was good enough for our honest forefathers, or the newest scheme of the advanced evolutionist, the question of time is still our greatest difficulty. To bring within a few thousand years the peopling of the world by all the races, past and present, of whose infinite variety we have ocular proof, seems, on the one hand, hardly reasonable. To accept the million ages postulated by evolution is to bring the theories of the geologist into perilous conflict with the exacter calculations of the physical astronomer. In his "Origin of the World" (Hodder and Stoughton), Dr. Dawson, of M'Gill University, Montreal, argues boldly and with much ability in defence of complete harmony between Science and Revelation, taking of course the "days" of creation as so many "periods," but accepting from the sixth day downwards the Biblical narrative in its most literal sense as the most easy to reconcile with tradition and with common sense. Of course the evidence from "cave" and "fossil" man, from flint weapons in the drift, and layers of alluvial soil accumulated over the remains of human life, from Egyptian or Chaldæan legends stretching back to a fabulous antiquity, have one and all to be explained away. Nor does Dr. Dawson shrink from or evade the difficulty. His essay, whether it bring conviction with it or not, must certainly be commended as worth reading.

In "Oriental Records (II.), Historical" (S. Bagster and Sons), the Rev. Dr. Rule proceeds to illustrate the Scripture story by parallel passages from the historians or mythologers of the heathen world, as in the previous volume he had done from a comparison of the ancient monuments. The little volume, though not too much impregnated with the spirit of criticism, is undoubtedly interesting. We confess, however, that we were not aware that Xenophon ever resided at Ecbatana, and wrote his "Cyropœdia" out of the Medo-Persian archives.

The simple realism of "Five Years' Penal Servitude" (Bentley and Sons) scarcely requires the publishers' assurance that it is a genuine record of a convict's life in Newgate, Millbank, and Dartmoor, some dozen years ago. The writer neither wearies us with assertions of his own innocence, nor goes out of his way to cast discredit on the gaol officials. On the whole, indeed, life in prison—these were the ante-Carnarvon days—seems to have been for a certain class of convicts the very reverse of unendurable. We can quite imagine the poor labourer whom "justices' justice" sends to Dartmoor for stealing eggs to feed a too numerous family looking forward with very mixed feelings to his approaching release, and carrying with him fond memories of the cell, where he had slept more comfortably than in all his life before. For another class—for the two clergymen who accompany the writer through his change of prison, or for the fallen angel of "club-land," no doubt the case was somewhat different. Still the chief grievances seem to have been a certain want of elasticity in rules framed only to meet the case of hardened and habitual offenders, and some injustice occasionally done through stupidity or spite by crabbed or incompetent warders. On the whole system of penal servitude as now administered—the stumbling-blocks thrown half carelessly in the way of those who on discharge would fain lead a new life, the absence of effective classification of prisoners—short sentences, sharp disciplinary treatment, and total separation from the habitual criminal, are the writer's recipe for a first offence—the judgment is perhaps less favourable. Directors of prisons might read worse books than these experiences of a former convict.

FASHIONS

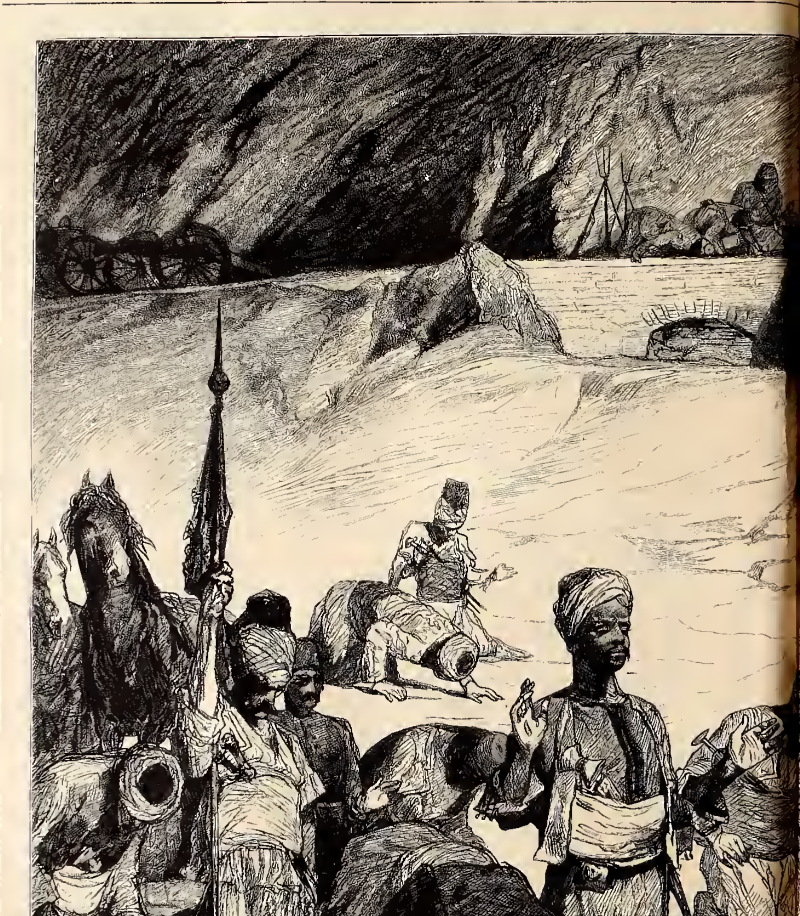
THE Paris season has commenced more than usually early; both male and female milliners and dressmakers have taxed their skill and taste to the uttermost in preparation for the Royal wedding in Spain, and also for the various recent complimentary banquets and receptions given to General Grant.

At the present moment a gift of antique lace is of more value than modern gems. At a modern ball or banquet we no longer see the same type of costume repeated again and again, each lady guest vies with her neighbour in producing some novel effect. For example, at a recent grand dîner were two toilettes, complete contrasts, but equally appropriate to their wearers. The one was worn by a very tall blonde, it consisted of a rich cream-coloured satin petticoat, elaborately embroidered in chenille with roses of every shade and hue—wide at the bottom and narrowing upwards—train skirt and corsage of cobalt blue velvet, on which was a flat trimming of Honiton lace; the train skirt was fastened back at irregular intervals on either side with sprays of blue Salvia exquisitely made in velvet. The coiffure was arranged with a thick fringe, almost touching the eyebrows, and thick curls on the top of the head, confined in three places by narrow pearl bands on wider blue velvet bands; on the left side was a dragon-fly, composed of gems. The other was of cream-coloured corded silk, Princess shape, with a very long train; down the front and round the train was a trimming of stamped white velvet, two inches wide in front, graduated to twelve inches at the back; the bodice, cut square back and front, was simply trimmed with Mechlin lace; the elbow sleeves were arranged in three straps of velvet, fastening silk puffs, lace ruffles. The wearer of this costume arranged her luxuriant dark hair close to the head in front, with thick plaits, low in the neck; at the back, a deep crimson natural rose and foliage was placed under the left ear, and one to correspond on the left side of the corsage.

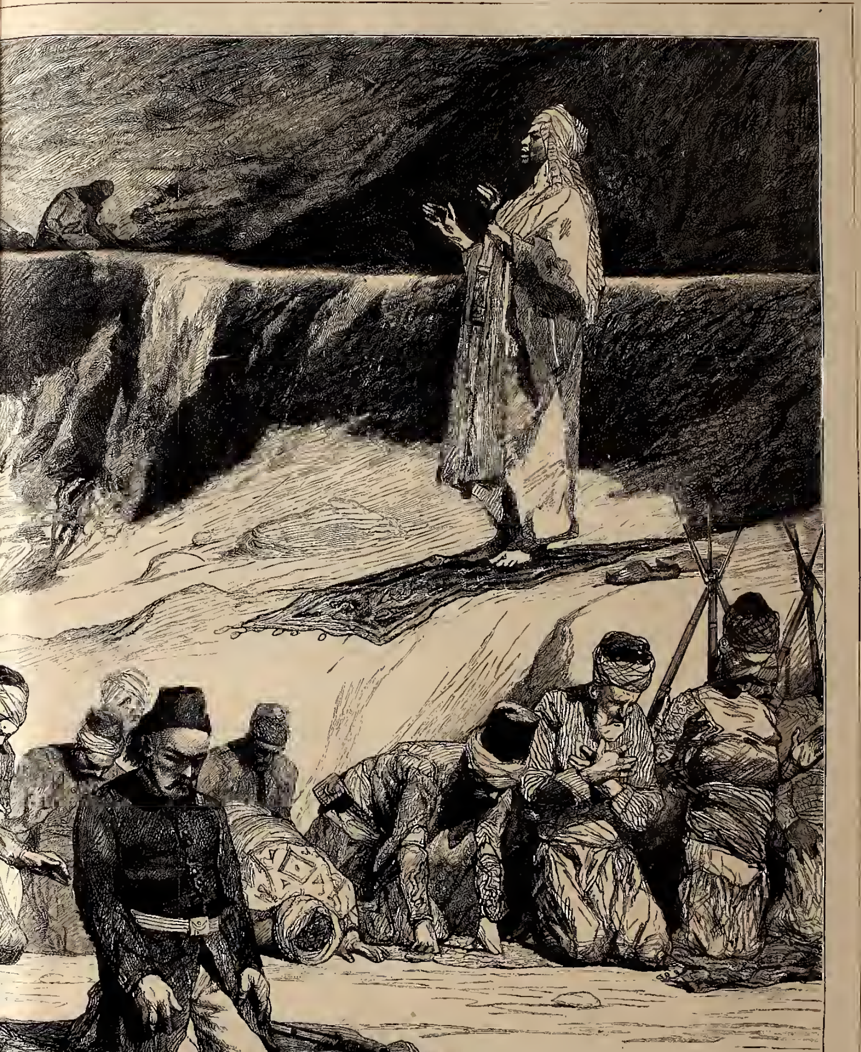
Whichever way we turn, the chief inquiry is, "Of course, you have seen the trousseau of the Duchesse S——?" In self-defence we are compelled to give a description of some few of the toilettes therein contained. Passing over the actual wedding-dress, which is of the orthodox satin and lace, we turn to the robe de chambre du souper de noces, which consists of a Watteau dress of rich white satin trimmed down the front with cascades of old point lace, interspersed with satin rosettes; the sides embroidered with small bouquets of rosebuds. The back and train of plain white satin, draped from the throat to the end of the skirt with point lace; the costume is completed by a small cap of point lace, with a sky-blue rosette and two roses. Distinguished among many other elegant dinner dresses is one of the true Castilian type, made thus:—Petticoat of rich black satin, bi-draped with heavy folds, on which are elaborate embroideries of clair de lune beads; the bodice and train of black satin, handsomely trimmed with stamped velvet, pattern of chestnut leaves. As a contrast, in white, was a dinner dress of silk draped with gauze and white velvet trimmings, four gauze scarves were fringed with white chenille, low bodice cut square, bouquet of vari-coloured flowers on the left side.

Passing on from these costly and unattainable toilettes to those within the reach of our readers who provide for themselves, we would first advise all who are delicate in the chest, or susceptible of cold, to procure chamois-leather habit shirts—with or without long sleeves—to be worn under their evening or dinner dresses, not in the day-time, when sufficient warmth is to be found in the ordinary winter attire of cloth, velvet, and fur; no greater mistake can be made by healthy young people than to wrap up over-much in the day-time, especially when they put on thin dresses for the evening. During the winter season it is quite unnecessary to wear a chilly catch-cold dress at the opera, theatre, or a friendly party. Numerous warm materials are now made in every delicate shade; for example, a costume of pale pink, blue, cream, or sea-green cashmere, made with a long polonaise fastened at the back and draped with a sash or cords and tassels of the same colour worn over a black or dark-coloured velvet or silk, is stylish and warm, more especially when between the lining and exterior of the bodice a thin layer of eider-down is introduced, an arrangement which we can assure those of our readers who are afraid of adding to their circumference will have no such effect. A capital way to utilise the dresses of the past season (we speak of cashmere, silk, or satin), is to wear them as petticoats under costumes of black silk, velveteen, or poplin, the former quilted, gathered, or pleated, the latter of a Princess shape, sometimes made quite plain with a high bodice and tight sleeves over which to display dainty lace collars, necklets, and cuffs, at others with long square lappels open at each side, and laced together with thick cords to the train, which is open half-way up to display a fan-tailed skirt; the bodice cut low and square back and front, under it either a high bodice to match the petticoat, or a thickly gathered white India muslin chemisette; velvet sleeves open and laced over the material to correspond with the petticoat. Opera cloaks are for the most part made in white this season, with wide Venetian sleeves; of silk matelassé trimmed with feathers, swansdown, or frayed ribbon; Indian embroidered cashmere sortie de bal are still much worn both in white and colours; the former is by far the most useful.

The Parisian fashion of wearing bonnets and hats at the theatre, and even at the opera in the winter season, is coming into usage amongst us, hence we see some very pretty dress bonnets of white plush, trimmed with a warm colour in velvet, silver-grey felt trimmed with a self-colour velvet, relieved by a bright hued humming bird or wing; a most stylish bonnet was recently shown to us, made entirely of white ostrich feathers, the tips curling over the front; black satin and velvet are much used for trimming hats and bonnets; some most eccentric ornaments are used, foremost amongst which may be mentioned a bunch of three or four keys; this idea might be utilised by young housekeepers, who are often at a loss where to carry these useful impedimenta. Caps are now worn so large as to be often mistaken for bonnets; for example, a velvet toque or Glengarry shape, with two-inch wide frills of lace, and an aigrette at the side, is too much for a young matron, and not dignified enough for the mother of a family; there are some caps small and coquettish enough for a young face, and others equally suitable for the middle-aged and elderly; judicious care is needful to draw the line between the seven ages of women.



WITH THE TURKS IN ASIA—AT



Benjamin Constant

SUNSET BEFORE THE BATTLE

"Sheen's Foreman," by Lady Wood (3 vols. : Chapman and Hall).—The somewhat rude vigour and graphic realism, which always characterise Lady Wood's novels are conspicuous in this, which consists, in the main, of pictures of the life of well-to-do agriculturists. There is always "a great deal of human nature" in Lady Wood's men and women ; if they do not greatly attract us, they are at any rate never insipid, or the mere thin abstractions which too many writers of fiction offer us in the stead of creatures of flesh and blood. The central figure in the story is the stiff-necked, hard-hearted, close-fisted farmer, Enoch Sheen of the West Grange ; a man of importance in the neighbourhood, as he is universally believed to be farming his own land. In truth, as he and a knavish attorney are very well aware, the land does not belong to him, but to the orphan cousin, whom he has taken as an infant out of the workhouse, where a series of untoward chances had placed him, and, after a fashion, clothed and fed ; hating the lad all the while precisely because of the wrong he is doing him. Young Benedict, or "Ben," Sheen, grows up a youth of promise, with many traces in him of gentle blood ; and becomes in time the right-hand man about the farm. He is never paid any wages, and gets nothing but hard words in return for good and faithful service ; still he stays on in his place partly because, in his modesty and want of self-assertion, he supposes himself an unprofitable servant, who is treated quite as well as he deserves, partly from his dog-like devotion to the pretty Lucy, his master's spoiled and petted daughter. How the scene shifts presently, and the depressed Benedict, who has taken his mother's name of Summertrees, appears as the man of wealth and position, whilst misfortune upon misfortune bring Sheen and his daughter very low in the world, we need not attempt to explain here. The denouement is just what all readers will anticipate, though it seems rather hurried and slurred over when it comes. Biddy Bond, the principal domestic at the West Grange, at once housekeeper to the farmer, nurse to Lucy, and almost second mother to Ben, is an admirable character ; one of the very best, we think, that we have ever had from the author's hands—though we don't know why Biddy should be styled an "old woman," when she can hardly be forty at the end of the story. The Bright household, with the sharp-eyed, self-seeking Miss Carrie Calénie, who ultimately manœuvres herself into becoming its mistress, is another humorous and most life-like sketch. It is a small matter, still it shows the hand both of the artist and the observer of human nature, that Carrie, instead of abusing the position she wins by somewhat questionable strategy, as we more than half expect she will, becomes with all her faults, as far as her lights, a model wife and daughter-in-law. As usual in telling her story, Lady Wood digresses not a little ; but we generally find that she has something to say which make her digressions worth reading.

"Ero ; or, Spells and Counter-Spells," by M. Bramston, author of "The Carbridges," &c. (Marcus Ward and Co.).—The one unfavourable criticism we have to offer upon Miss Bramston is that she sometimes writes "feasible," instead of "possible." For the rest, it would be difficult to speak in too high terms of the freshness and gracefulness of her delightful story, the reading of which is an unalloyed pleasure. The simple and familiar materials out of which the plot is built up are handled with much skill, and the characters interest at once, and are distinct and well-sustained. The book, too, bears that stamp of thoughtfulness and refinement of tone—of culture, in a word—which lends an attraction of its own even to inferior workmanship. It really has much of that analogy to a fairy-tale very prettily and ingeniously suggested by the author in the titles she has chosen for her chapters. We must not attempt to sketch the plot here ; we could give no real idea of it without going into details for which we have not room. Emily Madock, or "Em," "the sylph-child of the heather, innocently proud and confidingly simple," all the more determined to be the lady she is entitled to consider herself by right of her blood because of her rough and lowly surroundings, is an exceedingly fascinating heroine. She is, indeed, as the author says, "an example of the merits and shortcomings of the chivalrous sentiment ;" and her pride and strong sense of personal dignity, adroitly worked upon by the wicked fairy of the piece, are very nearly making shipwreck of her own happiness and her lover's with it. The good fairy, Mrs. Devon, the clergyman's wife, who has proclivities in the direction of "freethought," and "goes in" for culture, is another character drawn with much force and finish. We can congratulate Miss Bramston on a very thorough success, and bid her in all sincerity go on and prosper.

"Grey Abbey," by "Old Calabar," author of "Won in a Canter," &c. (2 vols. : Chapman and Hall).—If any thin-skinned Roman Catholic chanced to have his feelings lacerated by a perusal of "Gwen Wynn," noticed by us in our last issue, he may find balm in the pages of "Old Calabar's" story. In the Rev. Joseph Sladen, otherwise "Holy Joe," a clergyman of the Established Church, who is one of the most conspicuous of its characters, we have a very creditable pendant to the villainous and happily impossible Jesuit of Captain Mayne Reid's futile fancy. Whilst curate in charge of a parish in the neighbourhood of Hythe, Mr. Sladen is a money-lender's tout and a smuggler ; he proposes to a young lady of his flock that she shall share his home without the preliminary of a marriage, and, when she threatens to expose him to her father, throws her into a mill-pond and runs away. Of course she is rescued by an opportune poacher—a reformed poacher, be it understood—who seems always at hand when wanted ; and "Holy Joe," after living to perpetrate several other enormities, meets with condign punishment in the end. The novel contains full and particular accounts of a duel ; two steeplechases, one English, the other French, and some minor sporting "events ;" and is perhaps not worse than the run of tales which rely for success upon sensationalism and nothing else, though we cannot say that we have found it either probable or amusing.

"Seacliffe" (3 vols. : Provost and Co.).—In a dedication to Dr. Caird the author of this work trusts that it will not be found to contain any instances of "glaring anachronisms." We do not know what his notions touching anachronisms may be ; but what are we to say to a nobleman who, in the beginning of the reign of James the First, dates his letter "Seacliffe, N.B.," addresses his correspondent as "Dear Mr. Potts," and winds up with "Believe me, dear Mr. Potts, yours truly," &c. ? And this is just one instance out of many quite as striking that meet us even in the first thirty pages.

"Emilia ; or, The Genoese Orphan," by Giovanna Sursarello (London, Dulau and Co. ; Venice, Münster's successor, Ongaria).—This is a novel by an author who knows English only a very little, set up apparently by printers who do not know it at all. The result is like nothing in the world, except the letters from French correspondents that sometimes appear in Punch. Thus we come upon "last day Marion went down worse in health and spirits ;" "there was a signified reserve in her tone and manner which checked reproach at 'conversation' and 'enjoyment.'" The book may at least be pronounced mirth-exciting.

◆

THE SIEGE OF PLEVNA

The line of investment has been drawn tightly and closely round the brave army of Osman Pasha entrenched on their impregnable positions at Plevna, and that much lauded general has been caught in a trap, the meshes of which will very much tax his ingenuity to break through. Daily events tend to show that, unlike the picture of the Lion and Mouse we see on advertisement boards, the Lion Pasha has very little chance of outdoor relief. He is hemmed in by strong lines of Russian troops that will require an army larger than the Turks are capable of putting together to succeed in relieving him from his awkward position. His brave soldiers must starve behind their earthworks or break through the Russian forces surrounding them. If the latter alternative ever entered Osman's mind he ought to have acted on it long ago, but no doubt he knows a better means of getting out of the difficulty, and as Kars fell so will Plevna. In my sketch I have tried to show by taking a bird's-eye view from the south-east how the blockade is intact, and how the Turkish General with his army is literally bottled up, and (as correspondents love to say) hermetically sealed by the Russian troops.

On the right is the famous village and redoubt of Gravitza, which the Roumanians surprised with their bravery. Behind and forming part of the Gravitza spur of the Turkish works is the redoubt, which made the Roumanian victory of little avail. In the centre of the sketch is the redoubt which was stormed with such fruitless results on the memorable fête day of the Czar. In the foreground are troops marching to entrenched positions, and also sappers and miners returning from throwing up these defences. On the left of the panorama is the historical village and heights of Radichova lined with artillery and rifle pits. Continuing the ridge, we come to the redoubts made famous by the reckless bravery of Skobeleff on the 11th September. Further on is the Turkish entrenched camp behind Plevna, and beyond is Gorny Dubnik, the strong link on the Sofia road in the chain of iron the Russians have worked round Plevna. In relation to the interesting village of Radichova, the military correspondent of The Times, in one of his letters published on the 23rd inst., writes to say that because he has not kicked up a few bones and skulls in that village the massacre of the wounded on the night of the 31st of July "is wholly apocryphal." There might have been more weight in his argument if he had not gone on to state "that there was no panic in the Russian army on that deplorable night and following day." I was in the line of retreat during that period, and found the scattered remnants of the Russian army on a very quick move towards the bridge of Simnitza, without showing any of the "bulldog tenacity of the Russian character" which The Times' correspondent would lead us to believe was displayed on that occasion. It was not till late in the day of the 1st August that, finding that Osman Pasha, with the usual generalship that gentleman has always displayed, did not intend to follow up his victory, and not till the cry of "Bashi-Bashouks" died out on their rear that the Russians showed the "rock-like firmness" which the military correspondent states as the characteristic of its incomparable infantry, and which was displayed on that occasion.

The Russian soldiers are good, brave men, and may be incomparable when handled by intelligent officers, but on this memorable day, being thoroughly beaten by far superior numbers, and feeling the incapacity of their leaders, they broke and fled, after one of the best-fought battles on record in this campaign. But for the undoubted inability of Osman Pasha to feel the position of his enemy, two regiments of his Circassians, with artillery, could easily have destroyed Shakoffskoi's army, and have reached the bridge at Simnitza. "What the Russians were at Bondino and Pullusk they are to-day," further says the correspondent of The Times, but what they were on the 31st of July only eye-witnesses can tell. I was one of them, but the correspondent of The Times was then not far from the battle-field of Dorking.

Frederic Villiers

◆

The History of a Crime :

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

By VICTOR HUGO.

I.

THE FIRST DAY—THE AMBUSH

XIX.

ONE FOOT IN THE TOMB

Cournet was waiting for us. He received us on the ground floor, in a parlour where there was a fire, a table, and some chairs ; but the room was so small that a quarter of us filled it to overflowing, and the others remained in the courtyard.—"It is impossible to deliberate here," said Bancel. "I have a larger room on the first floor," answered Cournet, "but it is a building in course of construction, which is not yet furnished, and where there is no fire."—"What does it matter?" they answered him. "Let us go up to the first floor."

We went up to the first floor by a steep and narrow wooden staircase, and we took possession of two rooms with very low ceilings, but of which one was sufficiently large. The walls were whitewashed, and a few straw-covered stools formed the whole of its furniture.

They called out to me, "Preside."

I sat down on one of the stools in a corner of the first room, with the fireplace on my right, and on my left the door opening upon the staircase. Baudin said to me, "I have a pencil and paper. I will act as secretary to you." He sat down on a stool next to me.

The Representatives and those present, amongst whom there were several men in blouses, remained standing, forming in front of Baudin and myself a sort of square, backed by the two walls of the room opposite to us. This crowd extended as far as the staircase. A lighted candle was placed on the chimney-piece.

A common spirit animated this meeting. The faces were pale, but in every eye could be seen the same firm resolution. In all these shadows glistened the same flame. Several simultaneously asked permission to speak. I requested them to give their names to Baudin, who wrote them down, and then passed me the list.

The first speaker was a workman. He began by apologising for mingling with the Representatives, he, a stranger to the Assembly. The Representatives interrupted him. "No, no," they said, "the People and Representatives are all one! Speak!——" He declared that if he spoke it was in order to clear from all suspicion the honour of his brethren, the workmen of Paris ; that he had heard some Representatives express doubt about them. He asserted that this was unjust, that the workmen realised the whole crime of M. Bonaparte and the whole duty of the People, that they would not be deaf to the appeal of the Republican Representatives, and that this would be clearly shown. He said all this, simply, with a sort of proud shyness and of honest bluntness. He kept his word. I found him on the next day fighting on the Rambuteau barricade.

Mathieu (de la Drôme) came in as the workman concluded,—"I bring news," he exclaimed. A profound silence ensued.

As I have already said, we vaguely knew since the morning that the Right were to have assembled, and that a certain number of our friends had probably taken part in the meeting, and that was all. Mathieu (de la Drôme) brought us the events of the day, the details of the arrests at their own houses carried out without any obstacle, of the meeting which had taken place at M. Daru's house and its rough treatment in the Rue de Bourgogne, of the Representatives expelled from the Hall of the Assembly, of the meanness of President Dupin, of the melting away of the High Court, of the total inaction of the Council of State, of the sad sitting held at the Mairie of the Tenth Arrondissement, of the Oudinot fiasco, of the decree of the deposition of the President, and of the two hundred and twenty forcibly arrested and taken to the Quai d'Orsay. He concluded in a manly style : "The duty of the Left was increasing hourly. The morrow would probably prove decisive." He implored the meeting to take this into consideration.

A workman added a fact. He had happened in the morning to be in the Rue de Grenelle during the passage of the arrested members of the Assembly ; he was there at the moment when one of the commanders of the Chasseurs de Vincennes had uttered these words : "Now it is the turn of those gentlemen—the Red Representatives. Let them look out for themselves!"

One of the editors of the Révolution, Hennett de Kesler, who afterwards became an intrepid exile, completed the information of Mathieu (de la Drôme). He recounted the action taken by two members of the Assembly with regard to the so-called Minister of the Interior, Morny, and the answer of the said Morny : "If I find any of the Representatives behind the barricades I will have them shot to the last man," and that other saying of the same witty vagabond respecting the members taken to the Quai d'Orsay, "These are the last Representatives who will be made prisoners." He told us that a placard was at that very moment being printed which declared that "Any one who should be found at a secret meeting would be immediately shot." The placard, in truth, appeared the next morning.

Baudin rose up.—"The Coup d'État redoubles its rage," exclaimed he. "Citizens, let us redouble our energy!"

Suddenly a man in a blouse entered. He was out of breath. He had run hard. He told us that he had just seen, and he repeated, had seen with "his own eyes," in the Rue Popincourt, a regiment marching in silence, and wending its way towards the blind alley of No. 82, that we were surrounded, and that we were about to be attacked. He begged us to disperse immediately.

"Citizen Representatives," called out Cournet, "I have placed scouts in the blind alley who will fall back and warn us if the regiment penetrates thither. The door is narrow, and will be barricaded in the twinkling of an eye. We are here, with you, fifty armed and resolute men, and at the first shot we shall be two hundred. We are provided with ammunition. You can deliberate calmly."

And as he concluded he raised his right arm, and from his sleeve fell a large poniard, which he had concealed, and with the other hand he rattled in his pocket the butts of a pair of pistols.—"Very well," said I, "let us continue."

Three of the youngest and most eloquent orators of the Left, Bancel, Arnauld (de l'Ariége), and Victor Chauffour, delivered their opinions in succession. All three were imbued with this notion, that our appeal to arms not having yet been placarded, the different incidents of the Boulevard du Temple and of the Café Bonvalet having brought about no results, none of our decrees, owing to the repressive measures of Bonaparte, having yet succeeded in appearing, while the events at the Mairie of the Tenth Arrondissement began to be spread abroad through Paris, it seemed as though the Right had commenced active resistance before the Left. A generous rivalry for the public safety spurred them on. It was delightful to them to know that a regiment ready to attack was close by, within a few steps, and that perhaps in a few moments their blood would flow.

Moreover, advice abounded, and with advice, uncertainty. Some illusions were still entertained. A workman, leaning close to me against the fireplace, said in a low voice to one of his comrades that the People must not be reckoned upon, and that if we fought "we should perpetrate a madness."

The incidents and events of the day had in some degree modified my opinion as to the course to be followed in this grave crisis. The silence of the crowd at the moment when Arnauld (de l'Ariége) and I had apostrophised the troops had destroyed the impression which a few hours before the enthusiasm of the people on the Boulevard du Temple had left with me. The hesitation of Auguste had impressed me, the Society of Cabinet Makers appeared to shun us, the torpor of the Faubourg St. Antoine was manifest, the inertness of the Faubourg St. Marceau was not less so. I ought to have received notice from the engineer before eleven o'clock, and eleven o'clock was past. Our hopes died away one after another. Nevertheless, all the more reason, in my opinion, to astonish and awaken Paris by an extraordinary spectacle, by a daring act of life and collective power on the part of the Representatives of the Left, by the daring of an immense devotion.

It will be seen later on what a combination of accidental circumstances prevented this idea from being realised as I then purposed. The Representatives have done their whole duty, Providence perhaps has not done all on its side. Be it as it may, supposing that we were not at once carried off by some nocturnal and immediate combat, and that at the hour at which I was speaking we had still a "to-morrow," I felt the necessity o fixing every eye upon the course which should be adopted on the day which was about to follow.—I spoke.

I began by completely unveiling the situation. I painted the picture in four words: the Constitution thrown into the gutter; the Assembly driven to prison with the butt-end of a musket, the Council of State dispersed; the High Court expelled by a galley-sergeant, a manifest beginning of victory for Louis Bonaparte, Paris ensnared in the army as though in a net; bewilderment everywhere; all authority overthrown; all compacts annulled; two things only remained standing, the Coup d'État and ourselves.

"Ourselves! and who are we?" "We are," said I, "we are Truth and Justice! We are the supreme and sovereign power, the People incarnate—Right!"

I continued:

"Louis Bonaparte at every minute which elapses advances a step further in his crime. For him nothing is inviolable, nothing is sacred; this morning he violated the Palace of the Representatives of the Nation, a few hours later he laid violent hands on their persons, to-morrow, perhaps in a few moments, he will shed their blood. Well then! he marches upon us, let us march upon him. The danger grows greater, let us grow greater with the danger."

A movement of assent passed through the Assembly, I continued:

"I repeat and insist. Let us show no mercy to this wretched Bonaparte for any of the enormities which his outrage contains. As he has drawn the wine—I should say the blood—he must drink it up. We are not individuals, we are the Nation. Each of us walks forth clothed with the Sovereignty of the People. He cannot strike our persons without rending that. Let us compel his volleys to pierce our sashes as well as our breasts. This man is on a road where logic grasps him and leads him to parricide. What he is killing in this moment is the country! Well then! when the ball of Executive Power pierces the sash of Legislative Power, it is visible parricide! It is this that must be understood!"

"We are quite ready!" they cried out. "What measures would you advise us to adopt?"

"No half measures," answered I; "a deed of grandeur! To-morrow—if we leave here this night—let us all meet in the Faubourg St. Antoine."

They interposed, "Why the Faubourg St. Antoine?"

"Yes," resumed I, "the Faubourg St. Antoine! I cannot believe that the heart of the People has ceased to beat there. Let us all meet to-morrow in the Faubourg St. Antoine. Opposite the Lenoir Market there is a hall which was used by a club in 1848."

They cried out to me, "The Salle Roysin."

"That is it," said I, "the Salle Roysin. We who remain free number a hundred and twenty Republican Representatives. Let us instal ourselves in this hall. Let us instal ourselves in the fulness and majesty of the Legislative Power. Henceforward we are the Assembly, the whole of the Assembly! Let us sit there, deliberate there, in our official sashes, in the midst of the People. Let us summon the Faubourg St. Antoine to its duty, let us shelter there the National Representation, let us shelter there the popular Sovereignty. Let us intrust the People to the keeping of the People. Let us adjure them to protect themselves. If necessary, let us order them!"

A voice interrupted me: "You cannot give orders to the People!"

"Yes!" I cried, "when it is a question of public safety, of the universal safety, when it is a question of the future of every European nationality, when it is a question of defending the Republic, Liberty, Civilisation, the Revolution, we have the right—we, the Representatives of the entire nation—to give, in the name of the French people, orders to the people of Paris! Let us, therefore, meet to-morrow at this Salle Roysin; but at what time? Not too early in the morning. In broad day. It is necessary that the shops should be open, that people should be coming and going, that the population should be moving about, that there should be plenty of people in the streets, that they should see us, that they should recognise us, that the grandeur of our example should strike every eye and stir every heart. Let us all be there between nine and ten o'clock in the morning. If we cannot obtain the Salle Roysin we will take the first church at hand, a stable, a shed, some enclosure where we can deliberate; at need, as Michel de Bourges has said, we will hold our sittings in a square bounded by four barricades. But provisionally I suggest the Salle Roysin. Do not forget that in such a crisis there must be no vacuum before the nation. That alarms it. There must be a government somewhere, and it must be known. The rebellion at the Elysée, the Government at the Faubourg St. Antoine; the Left the Government, the Faubourg St. Antoine the citadel; such are the ideas which from to-morrow we must impress upon the mind of Paris. To the Salle Roysin then! Thence in the midst of the dauntless throng of workmen of that great district of Paris, enclosed in the Faubourg as in a fortress, being both Legislators and Generals, multiplying and inventing means of defence and of attack, launching Proclamations and unearthing the pavements, employing the women in writing out placards while the men are fighting, we will issue a warrant against Louis Bonaparte, we will issue warrants against his accomplices, we will declare the military chiefs traitors, we will outlaw in a body all the crime and all the criminals, we will summon the citizens to arms, we will recall the army to duty, we will rise up before Louis Bonaparte, terrible as the living Republic, we will fight on the one hand with the power of the Law, and on the other with the power of the People, we will overwhelm this miserable rebel, and will rise up above his head both as a great lawful Power and a great Revolutionary Power!"

While speaking I became intoxicated with my own ideas. My enthusiasm communicated itself to the meeting. They cheered me. I saw that I was becoming somewhat too hopeful, that I allowed myself to be carried away, and that I carried them away, that I presented to them success as possible, as even easy, at a moment when it was important that no one should entertain an illusion. The truth was gloomy, and it was my duty to tell it. I let silence be re-established, and I signed with my hand that I had a last word to say. I then resumed, lowering my voice.

"Listen, calculate carefully what you are doing. On one side a hundred thousand men, seventeen harnessed batteries, six thousand cannon-mouths in the forts, magazines, arsenals, ammunition sufficient to carry out a Russian campaign; on the other a hundred and twenty representatives, a thousand or twelve hundred patriots, six hundred muskets, two cartridges per man, not a drum to beat to arms, not a bell to sound the tocsin, not a printing office to print a Proclamation; barely here and there a lithographic press, and a cellar where a handbill can be hurriedly and furtively printed with the brush; the penalty of death against any one who unearths a paving stone, penalty of death against any one who would enlist in our ranks, penalty of death against any one who is found in a secret meeting, penalty of death against any one who shall post up an appeal to arms; if you are taken during the combat death; if you are taken after the combat transportation or exile; on the one side an army and a Crime; on the other a handful of men and Right. Such is this struggle. Do you accept it?"

A unanimous shout answered me, "Yes! Yes!"

This shout did not come from the mouths, it came from the souls. Baudin, still seated next to me, pressed my hand in silence.

It was settled therefore at once that they should meet again on the next day, Wednesday, between nine and ten in the morning at the Salle Roysin, that they should arrive singly or by little separate groups, and that they should let those who were absent know of this rendezvous. This done there remained nothing more but to separate. It was about midnight.

One of Cournet's scouts entered. "Citizen Representatives," he said, "the regiment is no longer there. The street is free."

The regiment, which had probably come from the Popincourt barracks close at hand, had occupied the street opposite the blind alley for more than half an hour, and then had returned to the barracks. Had they judged the attack inopportune or dangerous at night in that narrow blind alley, and in the centre of this formidable Popincourt district, where the insurrection had so long held its own in June, 1848? It appeared certain that the soldiers had searched several houses in the neighbourhood. According to details which we learned subsequently, we were followed after leaving No. 2, Quai Jemmapes, by an agent of police, who saw us enter the house where a M. Cornet was lodging, and who at once proceeded to the Prefecture to denounce our place of refuge to his chiefs. The regiment sent to arrest us surrounded the house, ransacked it from attic to cellar, found nothing, and went away.

This quasi-synonym of Cornet and Cournet had misled the bloodhounds of the Coup d'État. Chance, we see, had interposed usefully in our affairs.

I was talking at the door with Baudin, and we were making some last arrangements, when a young man with a chestnut beard, dressed like a man of fashion, and possessing all the manners of one, and whom I had noticed while speaking, came up to me.

"Monsieur Victor Hugo," said he, "where are you going to sleep?"

Up to that moment I had not thought of this.

It was far from prudent to go home.

"In truth," I answered, "I have not the least idea."

"Will you come to my house?"

"I shall be very happy."

He told me his name. It was M. de la R——. He knew my brother Abel's wife and family, the Montferriers, relations of the Cambacères, and he lived in the Rue Caumartin. He had been a Prefect under the Provisional Government. There was a carriage in waiting. We got in, and as Baudin told me that he would pass the night at Coumet's, I gave him the address of M. de la R——, so that he could send for me if any notice of the movement came from the Faubourg St. Marceau or elsewhere. But I hoped for nothing more that night, and I was right.

About a quarter of an hour after the separation of the Representatives, and after we had left the Rue Popincourt, Jules Favre, Madier de Montjau, de Flotte, and Carnot, to whom we had sent word to the Rue des Moulins, arrived at Cournet's, accompanied by Schœlcher, by Charamaule, by Aubry (du Nord), and by Bastide. Some Representatives were still remaining at Coumet's. Several, like Baudin, were going to pass the night there. They told our colleagues what had been settled respecting my proposition, and of the rendezvous at the Salle Roysin; only it appears that there was some doubt regarding the hour agreed upon, and that Baudin in particular did not exactly remember it, and that our colleagues believed that the rendezvous, which had been fixed for nine o'clock in the morning, was fixed for eight. This alteration in the hour, due to the treachery of memory for which no one can be blamed, prevented the realisation of the plan which I had conceived of an Assembly holding its sittings in the Faubourg, and giving battle to Louis Bonaparte, but gave us as a compensation the heroic exploits of the Ste. Marguerite barricade.

XX.

THE BURIAL OF A GREAT ANNIVERSARY

SUCH was the first day. Let us look at it steadfastly. It deserves it. It is the anniversary of Austerlitz; the Nephew commemorates the Uncle. Austerlitz is the most brilliant battle of History; the Nephew set himself this problem—how to commit a baseness equal to this magnificence. He succeeded.

This first day, which will be followed by others, is already complete. Everything is there. It is the most terrible attempt at a thrust backwards that has ever been essayed. Never has such a crumbling of civilisation been seen. All that formed the edifice is now a ruin; the soil is strewn with the fragments. In one night the inviolability of the Law, the Right of the Citizen, the Dignity of the Judge, and the Honour of the Soldier have disappeared. Terrible substitutions have taken place; there was the oath, there is perjury; there was the flag, there is a rag; there was the Army, there is a band of brigands; there was Justice, there is treason; there was the code of laws, there is the sabre; there was a Government, there is a crew of swindlers; there was France, there is a den of thieves. This called itself Society Saved.

It is the rescue of the traveller by the highwayman.

France was passing by, Bonaparte cried, "Stand and deliver!"

The hypocrisy which has preceded the Crime equals in deformity the impudence which has followed it. The nation was trustful and calm. There was a sudden and cynical shock. History has recorded nothing equal to the Second of December. Here there was no glory, nothing but meanness. No deceptive picture. He could have declared himself honest; he declares himself infamous; nothing more simple. This day, almost unintelligible in its success, has proved that Politics possess their obscene side. Louis Bonaparte has shown himself unmasked.

Yesterday President of the Republic, to-day a scavenger. He has sworn, he still swears; but the tone has changed. The oath has become an imprecation. Yesterday he called himself a maiden, to-day he becomes a brazen woman, and laughs at his dupes. Picture to yourself Joan of Arc confessing herself to be Messalina. Such is the Second of December.

Women are mixed up in this treason. It is an outrage which savours both of the boudoir and of the galleys. There wafts across the fetidness of blood an undefined scent of patchouli. The accomplices of this act of brigandage are most agreeable men—Romieu, Momy. Getting into debt leads one to commit crimes.

Europe was astounded. It was a thunderbolt from a thief. It must be acknowledged that thunder can fall into bad hands. Palmerston, that traitor, approved of it. Old Metternich, a dreamer in his villa at Rennweg, shook his head. As to Soult, the man of Austerlitz after Napoleon, he did what he ought to do, on the very day of the Crime he died. Alas! and Austerlitz also.

II.

THE SECOND DAY—THE STRUGGLE

I.

THEY COME TO ARREST ME

IN order to reach the Rue Caumartin from the Rue Popincourt, all Paris has to be crossed. We found a great apparent calm everywhere. It was one o'clock in the morning when we reached M. de la R——'s house. The fiacre stopped near a grated door, which M. de la R—— opened with a latch-key; on the right, under the archway, a staircase ascended to the first floor of a solitary detached building which M. de la R—— inhabited, and into which he led me.

We entered a little drawing-room very richly furnished, lighted with a night lamp, and separated from the bedroom by a tapestry curtain two-thirds drawn. M. de la R—— went into the bedroom, and a few minutes afterwards came back again, accompanied by a charming woman, pale and fair, in a dressing-gown, her hair down, handsome, fresh, bewildered, gentle nevertheless, and looking at me with that alarm which in a young face confers an additional grace. Madame de la R—— had just been awoke by her husband. She remained a moment on the threshold of her chamber, smiling, half asleep, greatly astonished, somewhat frightened, looking by turns at her husband and at me, never having dreamed perhaps what civil war really meant, and seeing it enter abruptly into her rooms in the middle of the night under this disquieting form of an unknown person who asks for a refuge.

I made Madame de la R—— a thousand apologies, which she received with perfect kindness, and the charming woman profited by the incident to go and caress a pretty little girl of two years old who was sleeping at the end of the room in her cot, and the child whom she kissed caused her to forgive the refugee who had awakened her.

While chatting M. de la R—— lighted a capital fire in the grate, and his wife, with a pillow and cushions, a hooded cloak belonging to him, and a pelisse belonging to herself, improvised opposite the fire a bed on a sofa, somewhat short, and which we lengthened by means of an armchair.

During the deliberation in the Rue Popincourt, at which I had just presided, Baudin had lent me his pencil to jot down some names. I still had this pencil with me. I made use of it to write a letter to my wife, which Madame de la R—— undertook to convey herself to Madame Victor Hugo the next day. While emptying my pockets I found a box for the "Italiens," which I offered to Madame de la R——. On that evening (Tuesday, December 2nd) they were to play Hernani.

I looked at that cot, these two handsome, happy young people, and at myself, my disordered hair and clothes, my boots covered with mud, gloomy thoughts in my mind, and I felt like an owl in nest of nightingales.

A few moments afterwards M. and Madame de la R—— had disappeared into their bedroom, and the half-opened curtain was closed. I stretched myself, fully dressed as I was, upon the sofa, and this gentle nest disturbed by me had subsided into its graceful silence.

One can sleep on the eve of a battle between two armies, but on the eve of a battle between citizens there can be no sleep. I counted each hour as it sounded from a neighbouring church; throughout the night there passed down the street, which was beneath the windows of the room where I was lying, carriages which were fleeing from Paris. They succeeded each other rapidly and hurriedly, one might have imagined it was the exit from a ball. Not being able to sleep I got up. I had slightly parted the muslin curtains of a window, and I tried to look outside; the darkness was complete. No stars, clouds were flying by with the turbulent violence of a winter night. A melancholy wind howled. This wind of clouds resembled the wind of events.

I watched the sleeping baby. I waited for dawn. It came. M. de la R—— had explained at my request in what manner I could go out without disturbing any one. I kissed the child's forehead, and left the room. I went down stairs, closing the doors behind me as gently as I could, so as not to wake Madame de la R——. I opened the iron door and went out into the street. It was deserted, the shops were still shut, and a milkwoman, with her donkey by her side, was quietly arranging her cans on the pavement.

I have not seen M. de la R—— again. I learned since that he wrote to me in my exile, and that his letter was intercepted. He has, I believe, quitted France. May this touching page convey to him my kind remembrances.

The Rue Caumartin leads into the Rue St. Lazare. I went towards it. It was broad daylight. At every moment I was overtaken and passed by fiacres laden with trunks and packages, which were hastening towards the Havre railway station. Passers-by began to appear. Some baggage trains were mounting the Rue St. Lazare at the same time as myself. Opposite No. 42, formerly inhabited by Mdlle. Mars, I saw a new bill pasted on the wall. I went up to it, I recognised the type of the National Printing Office, and I read,

"COMPOSITION OF THE NEW MINISTRY

"Interior—M. de Morny.
"War—"The General of Division St. Arnaud.
"Foreign Affairs—M. de Turgot.
"Justice—M. Rouher.
"Finance—M. Fould.
"Marine—" M. Ducos.
"Public Works—M. Magne.
"Public Instruction—M. H. Fortoul.
"Commerce—M. Lefebvre-Duruflé."

I tore down the bill, and threw it into the gutter; the soldiers of the party who were leading the waggons watched me do it, and went their way.

In the Rue St. Georges, near a side door, there was another bill. It was the "Appeal to the People." Some persons were reading it. I tore it down, notwithstanding the resistance of the porter, who appeared to me to be entrusted with the duty of protecting it.

As I passed by the Place Bréda some fiacres had already arrived there. I took one. I was near home, the temptation was too great, I went there. On seeing me cross the courtyard the porter looked at me with a stupified air. I rang the bell. My servant, Isidore, opened the door, and exclaimed with a great cry, "Ah! it is you, sir! They came during the night to arrest you." I went into my wife's room. She was in bed, but not asleep, and she told me what had happened.

She had gone to bed at eleven o'clock. Towards half-past twelve, during that species of drowsiness which resembles sleeplessness, she heard men's voices. It seemed to her that Isidore was speaking to some one in the ante-chamber. At first she did not take any notice, and tried to go to sleep again, but the noise of voices continued. She sat up, and rang the bell.

Isidore came in. She asked him,

"Is any one there?"

"Yes, Madam."

"Who is it?"

"A man who wishes to speak to master."

"Your master is out."

"That is what I have told him, Madam."

"Well, is not the gentleman going?"

"No, Madam. He says that he urgently needs to speak to Monsieur Victor Hugo, and that he will wait for him."

Isidore had stopped on the threshold of the bedroom. While he spoke a fat, fresh-looking man in an overcoat, under which could be seen a black coat, appeared at the door behind him.

Madam Victor Hugo noticed this man, who was silently listening.

"Is it you, sir, who wish to speak to Monsieur Victor Hugo?"

"Yes, Madam."

"He is out."

"I shall have the honour of waiting for him, Madam."

"He will not come back."

"Nevertheless I must speak to him."

"Monsieur, if it is anything which will be useful for him to know you can confide it to me in perfect security, I will faithfully tell him."

"Madam, it is to himself that I must speak."

"But what is it about? Is it regarding politics?"

The man did not answer.

"As to politics," continued my wife, "what is happening?"

"I believe, Madam, that all is at an end."

"In what sense?"

"In the sense of the President."

My wife looked fixedly at the man and said to him:

"You have come to arrest my husband, sir."

"It is true, Madam," answered the man, opening his overcoat, which revealed the sash of a Commissary of Police.

He added after a pause: "I am a Commissary of Police, and I am the bearer of a warrant to arrest M. Victor Hugo. I must institute a search and look through the house."

"What is your name, sir?" asked Madame Victor Hugo.

"My name is Hivert."

"You know the terms of the Constitution?"

"Yes, Madam."

"You know that the Representatives of the People are inviolable?"

"Yes, Madam."

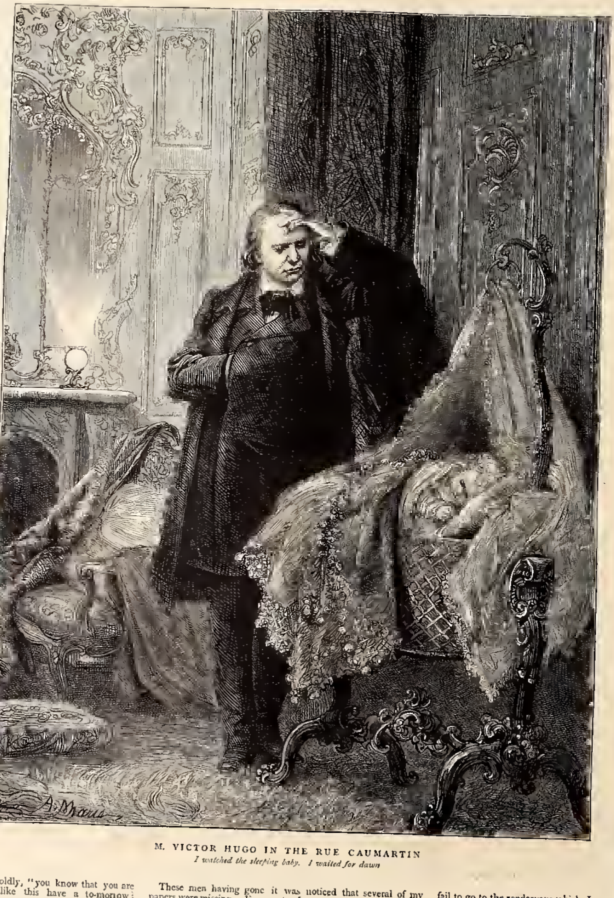
"Very well, sir," she said, coldly, "you know that you are committing a crime. Days like this have a to-morrow; proceed."

The Sieur Hivert attempted a few words of explanation, or we should rather say justification, he muttered the word "conscience," he stammered the word "honour." Madame Victor Hugo, who had been calm until then, could not help interrupting him with some abruptness.

"Do your business, sir, and do not argue; you know that every official who lays a hand on a Representative of the People commits an act of treason. You know that in presence of the Representatives the President is only an official like the others, the chief charged with carrying out their orders. You dare to come to arrest a Representative in his own home like a criminal! There is in truth a criminal here who ought to be arrested—yourself."

The Sieur Hivert looked sheepish and left the room, and through the half-open door my wife could see, behind the well-fed, well-clothed, and bald Commissary, seven or eight poor raw-boned devils, wearing dirty coats which reached to their feet, and shocking old hats jammed down over their eyes—wolves led by a dog. They examined the room, opened here and there a few cupboards, and went away—with a sorrowful air—as Isidore said to me.

The Commissary Hivert, above all, hung his head; he raised it, however, for one moment. Isidore, indignant at seeing these men thus hunt for his master in every corner, ventured to defy them. He opened a drawer and said, "Look and see if he is not in here!" The Commissary of Police darted a furious glance at him: "Lackey, take care?" The lackey was himself.



M. VICTOR HUGO IN THE RUE CAUMARTIN

I watched the sleeping baby. I waited for dawn

These men having gone it was noticed that several of my papers were missing. Fragments of manuscripts had been stolen, amongst others one dated July, 1848, and directed against the military dictatorship of Cavaignac, and in which there were verses written respecting the Censorship, the councils of war, and the suppression of the newspapers, and in particular respecting the imprisonment of a great journalist—Emile de Girardin:

> . . . O honte, un lansquenet
> Gauche, et parodiant Cesar dont il hérite,
> Gouverne les esprits du fond de sa guérite!

These manuscripts are lost.

The police might come back at any moment, in fact, they did come back a few minutes after I had left. I kissed my wife; I would not wake my daughter, who had just fallen asleep, and I went downstairs again. Some affrighted neighbours were waiting for me in the courtyard. I cried out to them laughingly, "Not caught yet!"

A quarter of an hour afterwards I reached No. 10, Rue des Moulins. It was not then eight o'clock in the morning, and thinking that my colleagues of the Committee of Insurrection had passed the night there, I thought it might be useful to go and fetch them, so that we might proceed all together to the Salle Roysin.

I found only Madame Landrin in the Rue des Moulins. It was thought that the house was denounced and watched, and my colleagues had changed their quarters to No. 7, Rue Villedo, the house of the ex-Constituent Leblond, legal adviser to the Workmen's Association. Jules Favre had passed the night there. Madame Landrin was breakfasting. She offered me a place by her side, but time pressed. I carried off a morsel of bread and left.

At No. 7, Rue Villedo, the maidservant who opened the door to me ushered me into a room where were Carnot, Michel de Bourges, Jules Favre, and the master of the house, our former colleague, Constituent Leblond.

"I have a carriage downstairs," I said to them; "the rendezvous is at the Salle Roysin in the Faubourg St. Antoine; let us go."

This, however, was not their opinion. According to them the attempts made on the previous evening in the Faubourg St. Antoine had revealed this portion of the situation; they sufficed; it was useless to persist; it was obvious that the working-class districts would not rise; we must turn to the side of the tradesmen's districts, renounce our attempts to rouse the extremities of the city, and agitate the centre. We were the Committee of Resistance, the soul of the insurrection; if we were to go to the Faubourg St. Antoine, which was occupied by a considerable force, we should give ourselves up to Louis Bonaparte. They reminded me of what I myself had said on the subject the previous evening in the Rue Blanche. We must immediately organise the insurrection against the Coup d'État, and organise it in practicable districts, that is to say, in the old labyrinths of the streets St. Denis and St. Martin; we must draw up Proclamations, prepare decrees, create some method of publicity; they were waiting for important communications from Workmen's Associations and Secret Societies. The great blow which I wished to strike by our solemn meeting at the Salle Roysin would prove a failure; they thought it their duty to remain where they were, and the Committee being few in number, and the work to be done being enormous, they begged me not to leave them.

They were men of great hearts and great courage who spoke to me; they were evidently right; but for myself I could not fail to go to the rendezvous which I myself had fixed. All the reasons which they had given me were good, nevertheless I could have opposed some doubts, but the discussion would have taken too much time, and the hour drew nigh. I did not make any objections, and I went out of the room, making some excuse. My hat was in the antechamber, my fiacre was waiting for me, and I drove off to the Faubourg St. Antoine.

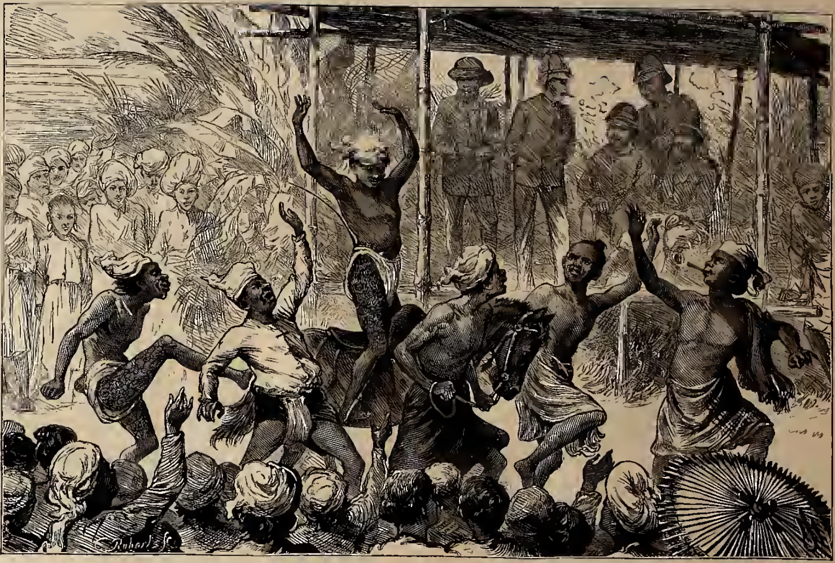
The centre of Paris seemed to have retained its everyday appearance. People came and went, bought and sold, chatted and laughed as usual. In the Rue Montorgueil I heard a street organ. Only on nearing the Faubourg St. Antoine the phenomenon which I had already noticed on the previous evening became more and more apparent; solitude reigned, and a certain dreary peacefulness.

We reached the Place de la Bastille.

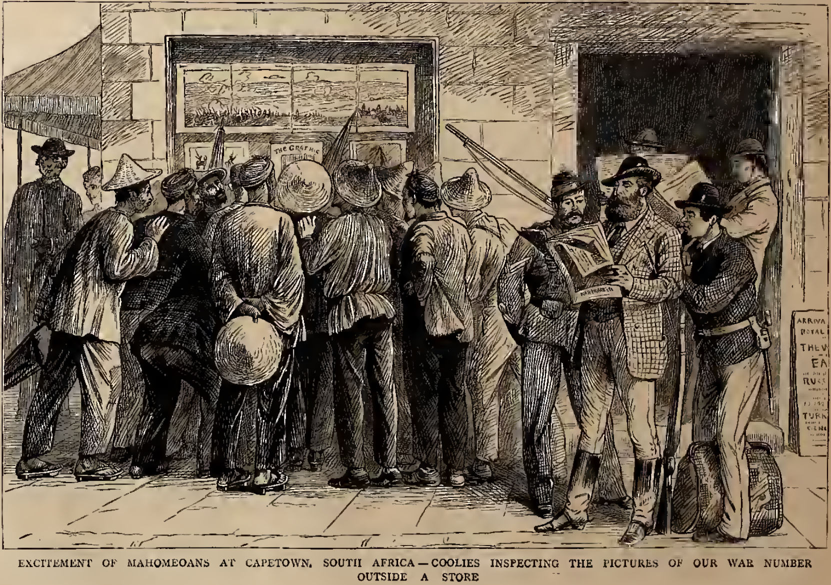
My driver stopped.

"Go on," I said to him.

(To be continued)



A PONY RACE AT JOUNGHOO, BRITISH BURMAH



THE GRAPHIC
ARRIVA
ROYAL
THE W
EA
RUSS
TURK
GENE

EXCITEMENT OF MAHOMEDANS AT CAPETOWN, SOUTH AFRICA—COOLIES INSPECTING THE PICTURES OF OUR WAR NUMBER OUTSIDE A STORE

FOREIGN

The War in the East.——Plevna having been completely blockaded, the Russians have been turning their attention to barring the way to the advance of Mehemet Ali's army of relief from the south, and have taken the positions at Provitz and the important town of Etropol, at the head of the defile leading to Orchanie and Sofia. This last achievement was carried out on the 23rd ult. by Generals Rauch and Schouvaloff, after a difficult march of forty-nine hours, during which the men had to drag the artillery themselves, up deep, precipitous paths where dynamite had frequently to be used in order to clear the way. After a sharp battle the Russians drove the Turks from the position, and were thus enabled to occupy a point on the Orchanie road almost as far as Laskeni. Although Sofia itself is only seventy kilomètres distant, and Orchanie is comparatively close at hand, Mehemet Ali sent no reinforcements to the front, but allowed the Russians to obtain possession of an extremely valuable strategical position, for he not only will now find it extremely difficult to reach the neighbourhood of Plevna, but, should he suffer defeat at Orchanie, he will leave the road to Sofia and the south of the Balkans open to the enemy. Respecting Plevna itself, the situation remains the same. Osman Pasha continues to hold out, but deserters tell grave stories of the scarcity of food. The Russians erected a huge transparent screen to inform the besieged that Kars had fallen, an attention acknowledged by a tremendous fire upon the erection.

The Roumanians also have a victory to chronicle, for on the 19th ult., under Colonel Slaniceanu, they assaulted and carried Rahova, thus barring the road between Widdin and the Russian positions.—On the Lom there has been continual skirmishing, as Suleiman Pasha seems determined to try every point in the Czarevitch's line until he finds the weakest, and accordingly has been attacking various positions, from Pyrgos in the north to Tartar Bazardjik southwards. On Monday the Turks attacked the Grand Duke Vladimir Alexandrovitch near Tirstenik and Metchka, but were repulsed with loss after having destroyed the depot of provisions at the former place. Further south also, at Polimarca, the Turks attacked the Russian garrison, but ultimately retreated. In the Shipka Pass the Turks made another unsuccessful attack on Mount St. Nicholas on the 22nd ult.—At Bogot, the Russian headquarters, the Roumanians are becoming great favourites, owing to their successes, the Czar has presented Prince Charles with two captured Turkish monitors, and is said to be negotiating the exchange of the Dobrudscha for the slip of Bessarabia which the Russians lost by the Treaty of Paris. The Russian loss up to the present is officially stated at 67,303 men, amongst whom are fourteen generals, one Imperial Prince, and four princes of the House of Rurik. The Turkish prisoners captured amount to 44,000 men, and the value of the booty taken to 14,000,000 roubles.

From Asia there is little trustworthy news beyond that Mukhtar Pasha has been summoned to surrender Erzeroum and has declined, and that the Russians are preparing for a general siege of the town. The fall of Kars has now been officially announced at Constantinople, where the event has not increased the popularity of obnoxious Mahmoud Damad Pasha, who is said to be about to resign. The Sultan has ordered a levy of a Civic or National Guard of 150,000, amongst whom for the first time Christians are to be enrolled, though only for the purpose of protecting the capital in case of an attack. Many Christians—chiefly Armenians—have joined the ranks.

Montenegro is still carrying on hostilities, and Prince Nicholas has captured Fort Nehay, near Spizza, and now occupies the whole territory from Lake Scutai to Bojana with the exception of the citadel of Antivari, which latter is being very energetically besieged, and Dulcigno. Servia is still preparing for war, and it is thought probable that Prince Milan will shortly declare his independence. Horvatovitch has ordered the inhabitants of Alexinatz, Saitschar, and Kujajevatz to be ready to return into the interior if required; while a boundary skirmish between Turks and Servians has already occurred in Krataroitza.

France.——Matters are looking more and more serious. The new Ministry was definitively formed on the 23rd ult. under General de Rochebouët, who commanded the troops in the Boulevard Montmartre during the street fighting of the Coup d'État in 1851. He now assumes the Premiership and the Ministry of War, and the other members are the Marquis de Banneville, MM. Welche, Lepelletier, Dutilleul, Ozenne, Graeff, and Faye; and respectively take the portfolios of Foreign Affairs, the Interior, Justice, Finance, Commerce, Public Works, and Instruction. None of the members belong to either House, and the Cabinet was formed professedly with the object of carrying on the business of the State without reference to political affairs. The Republicans, however, possessing the majority in the House and country, naturally regard the Ministry as unconstitutional, and moreover only formed for the sake of carrying the Budget through the House, and thus depriving the Left of their only weapon of resistance against the measures of the Marshal and his advisers. On Saturday the Ministers presented themselves to the House, and General de Rochebouët spoke, stating that the Marshal had confided the Ministry to men "whose programme it was to remain outside the pale of the political struggle," promising that the Republican Constitution should be respected by them, and handed down intact to their successors; and declaring that on the eve of the Universal Exhibition, on which so many interests and even the honour of the country depended, it behoved them "above everything else to devote themselves to the sound management of business transactions." The Left lost no time in taking action. M. de Marcère opened the battle with a telling oration, to which M. Baragnon made a weak reply; and after a speech from M. Floquet, who told the Ministry that the Chamber was too wide-awake to fall into the trap laid for it, the Chamber passed by 323 votes to 208 an "order of the day," declining to enter into any relations with the Ministry, which is a "negation of the rights of the nation, and can only aggravate the crisis which has weighed upon the country since May 16th." In the Senate an identically similar Ministerial statement was read, and was received in silence by both sides; but on Monday the Left Senators began the campaign with a proposition from M. Feray for a Committee of Inquiry into the causes of the existing commercial distress, with the manifest object of fixing the "cause" upon the policy of the men of the 16th of May. Nevertheless the Committee was voted unanimously, and the Senate adjourned to Thursday.

In the Lower Chamber the Left showed that Saturday's order of the day was no vain threat, and when M. Welche, the Finance Minister, moved that the four direct taxes should be detached from the Budget and passed as a distinct measure, the Chamber perfectly ignored the proposal, and passed on to other business. On Tuesday the Budget Committee reported on the special accounts which the late Ministry had raised since the dissolution to the amount of 700,000*l.*, illegally and without due authority. The report is a preliminary attack on one of the expedients which have probably been relied upon for expending money without the sanction of the Chamber. There was no sitting on Wednesday.

In the mean time the Ministry remain in office, General de Rochebouët having tried to extenuate his conduct in the Coup d'État by publicly declaring that he had simply carried out the orders he had received, "without his disciplinary obedience implying the slightest approval of Louis Napoleon's policy." But this is a very lame guarantee for the future, as "disciplinary obedience" may again lead him to rake the Boulevards with grape-shot. As for the Marshal, it is said that the ill-success of his new Cabinet only makes him more determined; and there are all sorts of rumours abroad respecting his intentions concerning which, now that General Bertaut has left the War Office, considerable apprehensions are openly expressed. It is thought that he will appeal once more to the Senate and to the "loyalty" of the Orleanists or self-dubbed Constitutionalists; but it is stated that a deputation of Conservative Republicans, headed by M. Grévy, has determined to interview him, and attempt to bring him to reason.

Paris has remained quiet throughout the crisis, although seditious placards are once more beginning to be posted on the walls, and there are visible signs of latent excitement. The Ministry, regarded by the Republicans as unconstitutional, is no favourite with the Conservatives, who nickname it a mustard plaister on a wooden leg. To pass to social matters, notwithstanding the political imbroglio, there have been three first representations, Les Mariages d'Autrefois, a highly successful two-act comedy at the Gymnase, by M. Adolphe d'Ennery, on the ancient custom of marrying children at an early age and then separating them for years; Le Club, a three-act comedy at the Vaudeville, by MM. Edouard Jondinet and Felix Cohen; and at the Taitbout a four-act comedy, Le Fiacre Jaune, which was so condemned by the audience that the authors declined to announce themselves at the close of the performance.

Italy.——The Pope gave audience to a body of Carcassonne pilgrims at the close of last week, and was so fatigued by the ceremony that he was compelled to take to his bed, where he remains up to the time we are writing, only receiving unavoidable visitors in a sitting posture.

The Chambers opened last week, but little noteworthy has been done. On Monday the Ministry, in reply to an interpellation, acknowledged that they had stopped certain telegrams to foreign journals respecting the inauguration of the Mentana Monument, at which it appears several seditious speeches and demonstrations were made.—The Clericals have at last determined to take part in political contests, and have stolen a march upon the Liberals by suddenly carrying off half the elections for Provincial Councillors of Rome.—The Antonelli suit has been once more postponed until the 6th inst.

India.——Our little war on the frontier has been somewhat delayed by the rains, but General Keyes has made several successful attacks upon the Jowakis, has destroyed numerous villages and fortified towers, and is now preparing to attack Jaumoo, their principal stronghold, while holding Jurki and Paiah in order to shorten the line of blockade which is to be held until the submission of the enemy. Capt. Swiney, of the 17th Bengal Cavalry, and nine men have been killed.—The famine reports continue to improve.—The Viceroy will hold an installation of the Bath and Star of India on January 1st, at Calcutta.

United States.——The Democrats and Republicans have been wrangling over the rival claimants for the South Carolina Senatorship, and on Monday sat for twenty-eight hours without deciding the matter.—The Fishery Commission on the compensation to be awarded to Canada under the Treaty of Washington, has awarded 1,100,000*l.* to Canada—the United States Commissioner, however, dissenting.—The U.S. steamer Huron has been wrecked on the North Carolina coast, only four officers and thirty men being saved, out of a crew of 15 officers and 119 men.

THE COURT

Prince Leopold still continues indisposed at Balmoral, and accordingly the Queen has again deferred her return to Windsor. Her Majesty will, however, probably leave Scotland about Tuesday or Thursday next, and an invalid coach is in readiness at Euston to be fitted to a saloon for the Prince's use during the journey if necessary. The Queen and the Princess Beatrice spent a short time at the Glassalt Shiel last week, and on their return to Balmoral Her Majesty held a Council, at which the Duke of Richmond and Gordon and Sir Stafford Northcote were present, and afterwards gave audience to the Duke. In the evening the two Ministers and Mr. Peel dined with the Queen, and next morning the Duke of Richmond and Gordon and Mr. Peel left the castle. On Saturday Sir Stafford Northcote joined the Royal party at dinner, and next morning Divine Service was performed in the Castle before Her Majesty and the Princess Beatrice, the Rev. A. Campbell officiating. Sir Stafford Northcote left Balmoral on Monday.

The Princess of Wales with her three daughters and Miss Knollys arrived at Clarence House from Abergeldie at the end of last week, and were afterwards joined there by the Prince of Wales on his return from visiting Lord Londesborough. Miss Knollys bore the journey well, although so weak as to be carried to and from the carriage, and continues to improve. On Saturday evening the Prince and Princess went to the Olympic Theatre, and on Monday, accompanied by their three little girls, left town for Sandringham, where they are entertaining a number of friends to keep the Princess's birthday. On Tuesday the Prince and his guests went out shooting, and the Princess and her lady visitors were out in the afternoon, while a county ball will be given this week.—Monday was the 8th birthday of Princess Maud, youngest daughter of Prince and Princess of Wales.—It is stated that the Prince of Wales will be re-nominated Grand Master of the English Freemasons at the Quarterly Meeting of the Grand Lodge on the 5th inst.

The Princess Louise and her husband and the Crown Prince of Hanover visited the Royalty Theatre last week.—The King of Holland is expected at Nice, where ex-Queen Amélie of Greece, widow of Otho I., also intends to spend the winter.—Prince Louis Napoleon has been staying with the Earl and Countess de la Warr, at Buckhurst.

CHURCH NEWS

"Eternal" Punishment.——Canon Farrar, writing to the Guardian, says that the language and purport of his recent sermon at Westminster Abbey has been completely misrepresented. He neither denounced the doctrine of eternal punishment nor expressed any hope that the word "eternal" might not appear in the Revised Translation. His object was to prove that the word "eternal" did not necessarily connote "endlessness," and at the same time to vindicate that faith in the possible effects of Christ's infinite redemption even beyond the grave, which seems to be most expressly stated in the text from which he preached (1 Pet. iv. 6). Neither the Anglican nor even (he believes) the Roman Church has dogmatically decided against the permissibility of such a hope, and it has been widely held in different ages.

Various.——A remarkable correspondence has taken place between the Bishop of London and Mr. Mackonochie relative to the erection of a crucifix and a picture of the Virgin in the Church of St. Alban's, Holborn. The Bishop points out the illegality of the adoption of these ornaments without a faculty, and directs their removal; but Mr. Mackonochie declines to comply, on the ground that they are deeply valued by his congregation as standing witnesses to two cardinal doctrines of Christianity, the Incarnation and the Atonement. The Bishop replies that he shall be compelled to proceed by monition from the Court of his diocese; and Mr. Mackonochie retorts that he has made up his mind to "take the consequences." Whatever these may be, the rev. gentleman cannot in this case contend that he is resisting the edict of a secular Court.—It is curious that Mr. Tooth's letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, published in The Times of the 23rd inst., had not reached his Grace on the 26th.—The Bishop of Lincoln, writing to some one who had interrogated him as to his reason for turning to the east at the conclusion of a sermon in Ordsall Church, says he was not aware of having done so, that it would not have been worth while noticing if he had, and that life is not long enough for debates on such trivialities. The Echo, commenting on this reply, says that it remembers a Bishop who raised a great storm about a triviality that he did debate, and which was discussed even up to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, where a frivolous objection to the grant of the title of "Reverend" to a Wesleyan minister was solemnly decided, and the trivial objection was judicially quashed.—Mr. Bright has written to the Bishop of Peterborough explaining that he meant no "sneer" in using the word "Consecration" in his speech in Parliament upon the Burials Bill. He says that he can no more believe in what is called "holy ground" than the Bishop can in "holy water," and adds that it is not necessary to ridicule all one cannot believe, although it is certain that ridicule has had its share in clearing the world of superstitions. To this the Bishop replies that he thinks a churchyard may fairly be called holy ground in the sense of its having been set aside for a holy use, though he has never heard it so called by Churchmen; and that with regard to the overthrow of superstition the effect has very often been mistaken for the cause. "Superstitions are successfully ridiculed when they are expiring; they do not expire because they are ridiculed."—The Free Church of Scotland, sitting in commission last week, resolved to take steps to prevent the spread of Roman Catholicism in Scotland, as threatened by the intended establishment of a Roman hierarchy therein. A resolution was passed calling the attention of ministers of the Church to "the importance of instructing the people in the true nature and bearing of the Romish system, as well as the present movement by the Vatican."—The Glasgow Free Presbytery had a long discussion the other day anent the heresy of the Rev. Dr. Dods, who holds very advanced doctrines respecting the inspiration of Scripture. There was no difference of opinion as to his guilt, but considerable difficulty arose as to the proper terms in which he should be condemned. Several resolutions were proposed and rejected in turn, and after a sitting of five hours the members adjourned without having settled the knotty question.—The amount collected for the Metropolitan Hospital Fund this year is 26,082*l.* The decrease as compared with last year (27,[illegible]42*l.*) is attributed to the serious financial depression of the country. The money has been distributed amongst seventy-six hospitals and forty-three dispensaries, the largest award (2,491*l.*) being made to the London Hospital.

MUSIC

Her Majesty's Theatre.——The prospects of Mr. Mapleson's winter season look brighter and brighter; and it is not surprising that he should, as is reported, resolve upon extending the term of its originally contemplated duration. The addition to his company of Mdlle. Marimon, a vocalist, in her particular style, unique, and the successful production of an opera which, though for some years popular in Italy, was hitherto unknown to this country, have afforded satisfaction to the public, and at the same time, if crowded houses signify anything, brought money to the treasury. Mdlle. Marimon has already appeared in three of her best known characters—Amina (La Sonnambula), Maria (La Figlia del Reggimento), and Astrifiammante (Il Flauto Magico). If not, in a strictly dramatic sense, the most ingeniously engaging of somnambulists, the most strikingly picturesque of "vivandières," or the most imposing "Queen of Night" habitual opera-goers can bring to remembrance, she is, after her manner, a perfect mistress of the vocal art, just as much at home with the music of Mozart as with that of Bellini and Donizetti. Each of the three operas above named gave Mdlle. Marimon an opportunity of reviving old impressions, and winning unanimous approval. In the exceptional music written by the composer of Die Zauberflöte for the exceptional voice of an exceptional singer, with a prodigious command of the higher notes, she, not for the first time, astonished her audience. From among the other singers, in the opera through which, by force of his truly Orphean melody, the great Mozart immortalised the little Schikaneder, author of the libretto, manager of the theatre, and first representative of Papageno—(that biped with feathers, who upset a Voltaire's definition of man—"un bipied sans plumes"), Madame Marie Rôze, as Pamina, stood out conspicuously, her delivery of the pathetic soliloquy, "Ah! lo so, più non m'avanza," being one of the most striking achievements of the evening. Signor Del Puente is an excellent Papageno—a character which would seem almost impossible after the inimitable impersonation of Ronconi; Mdlle. Valleria, as may well be credited, is all that could be desired as Papagena; Signor Bettini is an acceptable Tamino; and the Sarastro of Signor Foli is now, what it has ever been, and is ever likely to be—more like the Sarastro of Formes than the Sarastro of Staudigl. The subordinate characters—and many such belong to this mysterious Eleusinian "pasticcio"—are more or less adequately sustained; and the performance generally, under the able direction of Signor Licalsi, is good. About Ruy Blas, the first of Mr. Mapleson's promised "novelties," we can only just now say a few words. Signor Marchetti has written two other operas (if not more); but Ruy Blas alone has made its mark in Italy. Though much talked about, nine years elapsed before our English amateurs were allowed to judge of its merits. The general impression, however, seems to be decidedly favourable, and not without reason. The play of Victor Hugo, upon which the libretto is constructed, while uninviting, and occasionally repulsive, comprises characters, situations, and incidents enough to tempt any musician ambitious to shine as a composer for the theatre. It has been used as the medium of an operatic libretto on several occasions, but never, perhaps, on the whole so successfully as by Signor Marchetti. Not that a trace of original thought, or a suspicion of individuality, can be discovered in his music, which—but for the overshadowing Guiseppe Verdi (now to Italy what Weber was once to Germany)—would never have been written, or, at any rate, would have been written in quite a different style;—far from it. Nevertheless, Signor Marchetti has the talent of producing music agreeable enough to make his hearers forget that the larger number of his melodic phrases have, in some shape or other, been heard before; that his orchestration, while happily devoid of the incessant noise to which modern innovations have, for some considerable time, accustomed us, is by no means rich or varied; and that, in passages where the illustration of deep feeling is called, he is at his weakest. Signor Marchetti, in short, is anxious to be another Verdi, while lacking the genius, if not altogether the savoir faire, of that renowned dramatic composer—dubbed by Rossini "Last of the Romans." We shall, however, take another opportunity to speak about the music of Ruy Blas, and need only add that it is a fair specimen of what now in Italy obtains general acceptance. As such it was welcome; and we have to thank the director of Her Majesty's Theatre for placing it so carefully on the stage, and Signor Licalsi for having so efficiently prepared it in rehearsal. The leading singers—Mdlle. Salla (the Queen), Mdlle. De Belocca (Casilda), Madame Lablache (Giovanna), Signor Fancelli (Ruy Blas), and Signor Galassi (Don Sallust)—are all furnished with parts that well suit them, Mdlles. Salla and de Belocca more especially distinguishing themselves. The opera, which has been given twice, is an unquestionable success.

London Ballad Concerts.——Two new songs were produced on Wednesday evening. "When thou art near," words by W. J. Stewart (if we mistake not, a novelist of much promise, who died young some years ago), has been wedded by Mr. Sullivan to some tolerably pretty music, which will not, however, add materially to that composer's high reputation. Stephen Adams' "Tar's Farewell" has a good deal of "go" in it, but is not likely to attain to the popularity achieved by "Nancy Lee." Ample justice was done to both songs by Messrs. Edward Lloyd and Santley respectively, who also otherwise carried off the chief honours of the evening; the former in "Phillis is my only joy" and "Sally in our Alley," and the latter in the "Yeoman's Wedding" and various old English ditties. Madame Antoinette Sterling, too, sang two of her most favourite songs, "The Lost Chord" and "Caller Herrin'," in her best style. Nor must we forget the London Vocal Union, who sang Bishop's glee "Hart and Hind" most deliciously. We noted an improvement in the manner of encores at these concerts last Wednesday which will, we hope, be permanent. As soon as the audience unmistakably showed that they wanted to hear a song again the performer came back and sang it forthwith. We trust when Mr. Sims Reeves recovers from his cold he will do likewise, instead of wasting his own time and that of his listeners by affected delays.

◆

FINE ARTS

Continental Gallery.——Since our notice last May of Mr. Everard's Gallery of Continental Pictures in New Coventry Street, numerous other paintings have been added to the collection. Among these is a fine example of Ernest Slingeneyer (whose well-known "Christian Martyr" is still in the collection) representing "An Episode of St. Bartholomew." A Huguenot family have taken refuge on a terrace, but are prepared to sell their lives dearly to the assassins who are pursuing them, and one of whom is just mounting to their hiding-place. The various attitudes and expressions of the beleaguered family, including their faithful greyhound, are admirably rendered. Roybet furnishes a characteristic picture entitled "The Amateurs of Engravings." A party of gentlemen, richly-dressed in Henri Quatre costume, are carefully inspecting a series of portfolios. The expression of the elderly critic is especially good. Roybet has also added to a work of Fortuny's, "An Antechamber in the Vatican," some figures, skilfully grouped, thereby much enhancing the interest of the picture. While dealing with painters of the Fortuny school we may mention Madrazo's "Reverie," a charming girl in pale pink, whose dreamy gaze fully bears out the artist's title; and Jiminez' "Departure for the Bull Fight," a picture redolent of Spanish colour and character, representing the matador or picador kissing his wife before starting on his perilous enterprise. Tissot is always clever and interesting, though often eccentric in choice of subject. "Time is Money" simply shows us a middle-aged gentleman bowling along in a first-class railway carriage, watch in hand. In his second picture many will recognise that unique glass-covered staircase at Willesden Station, where a young lady (as plain featured as M. Tissot's young ladies usually are) is waiting behind a "varied assortment" of luggage—a thoroughly prosaic subject, yet attractive because of its genuineness. There are several examples here of the late celebrated painter, J. Van Lerius. Of those the most noticeable, "The Triumph of Virtue," depicts a very tragical scene. A girl has just plunged a dagger into the heart of her would-be seducer, while at her side stands an old woman gazing at the gold which she has been paid for arranging the interview. Next let us note some single-figure subjects, all good in their several ways, namely, Alfred Stevens' "Sad News," representing a lady opening a letter which shocks her; Piot's "Bird's Nest," a pretty, bright-eyed, Italian-faced girl with the nest in her lap; A. Toulmouche's "Will He Come?" a girl in a very natural attitude, leaning on the mantel-piece, and impatiently regarding the clock; and lastly Jules Goupil's highly-finished "Critical Observer," a lady dressed in the fashion of the First Empire carefully examining an old cabinet through an eye-glass. There is rather too much blue, to our fancy, in Detti's clever picture of the old gentleman reading aloud in a Swiss garden, while his daughter is more interested in her lover than in her father's book. Faostini's "Chinese Curiosity Shop" is a very rich bit of colouring. Jan Van Beers, a rising young Belgian artist, supplies a clever sketch of "A Spanish Juggler" preparing for his entertainment; Decamps' "Turkish School" is characteristic, though the figures in the background are rather indistinctly depicted; Munkacsy's "Drunkard's Home," a wife contemplating her snoring husband, is painfully powerful, the sordid wretchedness of the cottage and its inmates being most faithfully portrayed. Good also is Max Claude's "Departure for the Chase" and Castre's "Ambulance," a life-like scene from the war of 1870-1. De Neuville's "French Trumpeter" is a bold and clever sketch. T. Couture, who has a high reputation, is represented here by a very simple subject, "The Birdcatchers," a number of lines and traps set under a garden wall. As most of Paul Delaroche's pictures are now hidden in private collections, many persons will look with interest at his "Death of Annibal Caracci," a picture which grows upon you as you look at it. There is here also a charming Meissonier, "The Reader," which belonged to the notorious Baron Strousberg. Talking of Meissonier, Damingo, in his "Preparing for the Duel," shows himself a competent follower of that microscopic master. Noting Von Thoren's cow and sheep-dog confronting each other in a hostile attitude; Palmaroli's bright-hued group of Incroyables (temp. 1795), round an ornamental basin; and Tapiro's masterly water-colour sketches in Tangiers; let us say a word concerning two or three landscape pieces. The most important of these is Troyon's "Valley of La Tocque," an admirable, solidly-painted picture, revealing new beauties the longer it is looked at. Foreign artists have for some time learnt to value the peculiar charms of English scenery, and they are especially fond of the Thames. A. Musin's "View near Rosherville," shows a thorough knowledge of the scenery on the lower reaches of our metropolitan river. Last of all, we would mention a "View of Rome," by Ziem, with the huge mass of St. Peter's conspicuous in the distance.

◆

CHRISTMAS BOOKS

III.

"Picturesque Europe" (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin) has reached its second volume, and adorned with steel engravings, a multiplicity of smaller views, and a thoroughly readable text, forms one of the handsomest books of the season. The British Isles still furnish matter for the illustrations. We travel through the Highlands to the Border country, explore Western Ireland and Wales, saunter through Devon, linger with the honeymoon couples at the Lakes and the Isle of Wight, and visit the Cathedral cities, the Universities, and the old English homes, in which last category comes the eternal Haddon Hall. It would be quite refreshing to find a book of this description which omitted the fair Dorothy Vernon. The drawings of the rock scenery on the Irish coast are amongst the most interesting, and contrast admirably with the placid beauty of the Devonshire views, notably "on the Dart near Totnes." Messrs. Cassell also send us the first part of "The Sea," an illustrated periodical which promises to furnish an interesting account of the ocean and its wonders, and of the famous vessels which have floated on its waters.

Yet another artistic volume devoted to the beauties of Great Britain, "Art Rambles in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland," by J. T. Reid (Routledge). Mr. Reid is both author and artist, and has evidently a holy horror of tourists, so he wanders into comparatively out-of-the-way spots, and reproduces some charming little bits of scenery in Skye, Harris, Lewis, and the isles on the West coast, whilst not forgetting the more familiar parts of the Highlands. The illustrations are clear and delicately executed.—The illusions of the "magic art" have afforded so much genuine amusement that it seems almost a pity to allow such a peep behind the scenes as given by M. Robert Houdin's "The Secrets of Conjuring and Magic" (Routledge), edited and translated by Professor Hoffmann. Here the secrets of the prison house are duly unveiled, and the various tricks, even to the famous bowl of fish, are so clearly explained and illustrated that a shoal of amateur conjurers may be foreseen for Christmas, and Dr. Lynn's audiences may confront him with a certain knowledge of "how it's done."—Parents and relations in search of gift-books will welcome two old friends from the same publishers, "Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare," illustrated by Sir J. Gilbert, and an excellent edition of "The Poetical and Dramatic Works of Sir Walter Scott," a specially complete volume, containing even the mottoes and detached pieces from Scott's novels, and a brief memoir by W. B. Scott.—Of the many recent birthday books the palm must be awarded to "The Birthday Book of Flower and Song," compiled by A. Leith (Routledge), a handsome volume of well-chosen extracts, with a refined floral heading to each month, while "The Poetical Birthday Book," edited by the Countess of Portsmouth (Hatchards) is republished with the addition of twelve photographs from celebrated pictures.—Anent reprints, Mr. Tennyson's "Queen Mary" and "Harold" appear as the sixth volume of the "Author's Edition of Tennyson's Works" (C. Kegan Paul).

Alexander's lament for more worlds to conquer will surely soon be echoed by M. Jules Verue, who has left scarcely a corner of sea, earth, and sky untouched by his fictions. He has been to the moon, to the centre of the earth, and under the sea, to the tropics, and the Arctic regions, has put a girdle round the earth, and now resorts to the solar system by depicting the career of a comet in "Hector Servadac" (Sampson Low). Coming in contact with the earth, the comet Gallia carries off in its passage part of Algeria, a fragment of Gibraltar, and scraps of Italy, Morocco, and the Balearic Isles, whose inhabitants form a heterogeneous, but happy, colony. Gallia's climate, however, is decidedly unpleasant, for as the comet proceeds on its orbit, it is first nearly burnt up by the sun, and subsequently the piercing cold forces the colony to live in the heart of a volcano, so when our planet is once more approached the prisoners embark in a balloon, and return to Mother Earth. Smoothly translated by Ellen E. Frewer, the book will be a treat to lovers of the wondrous.—Temperance tales of late are all built upon the same model—a lovely, delicate woman with a drunken husband, who brings his home to ruin and his child to death—and "Little Mercy," by M. J. Franc (Sampson Low), follows the familiar lines. The story, however, is prettily told.—The manifold industries of the poor in our great city are transferred from the street to the drawing-room by "Street Life in London," by J. Thomson and A. Smith (Sampson Low), wherein photographs and word pictures ably illustrate the curious callings of our poorer brethren. Familiar scenes, most of them to be met with in an everyday walk, but each carefully drawn from life, and the history of the models is truthfully recounted.—Another London feature, soon to disappear, "Temple Bar," finds a sympathising historian in Mr. E. W. Godwin (B. T. Batsford), who gives a brief sketch of the Bar's history, and pleads for its preservation in a more convenient spot.

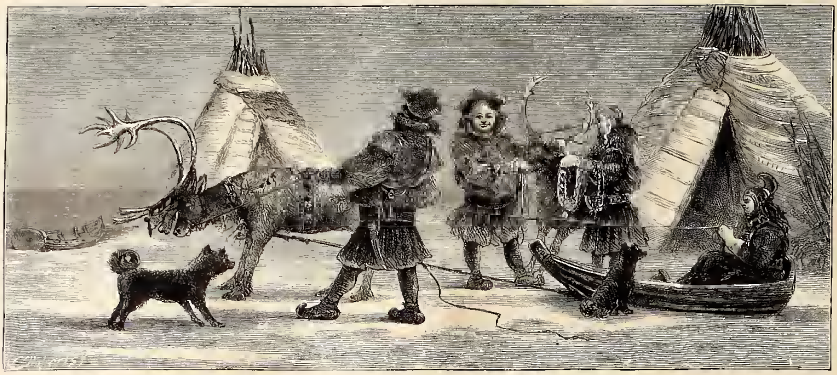
Trifles light and airy are the "Holiday Rambles," by a wife with her husband (Daldy, Isbister)—lively reminiscences of Continental and English travel reprinted from the Spectator. There is little new in the foreign trips, but the experiences of the travellers in Devonshire, when they emulate Mr. Black's "Adventures of a Phaeton," and drive about with a horse addicted to "megrims" are highly entertaining.—From travelling in pleasant places to vegetating in solitude—the isolation of the inhabitants of St. Kilda is again brought forward by Mr. J. Sands in a fresh edition of "Out of the World" (Maclachlan and Stewart), a record of his two visits to these melancholy islands. Several of the sketches in this book appeared in our journal some months ago.

The various religious magazines are now bringing out their yearly volumes. The Fireside (Hand and Heart Publishing Office), contains some excellent articles on historic, domestic, and scientific subjects—notably the sketches of "Caledonia, Stern and Wild"—in addition to the customary religious papers and fiction, while the illustrations are well-selected.—Home Words and the Day of Days (same publisher), are of a more homely character, the latter being intended for Sunday reading.—Much of the same type are The Mother's Friend (Hodder and Stoughton), the Friendly Visitor, Family Friend, and British Workman (S. W. Partridge), while for younger readers the latter publishers produce the Children's Friend, Infant's Magazine, and Band of Hope Review, in company with a number of sheet almanacs to hang on the wall.—Juveniles also will heartily enjoy the half-yearly volume of Little Folks (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin), brimful of merry stories, pictures, and puzzles; "Little Wideawake" and "Sunbeam's Picture Book" (Routledge), as gay inside as out, while "Young Days" (Sunday School Association), also has some wholesome tales and illustrations.—Sunday school teachers and their classes are supplied by the Church of England Sunday School Institute with the annual volume of the Sunday School Scholars' Companion; four New Year's addresses to parents, teachers, and pupils, young and old; a useful "Class Book;" "Teachers' Pocket Book," and some tasteful "motto cards," with texts in gold and colours, suitable for Christmas distribution.—Similar Christmas cards, "Christmas Wishes and Promises for the New Year," come from the Religious Tract Society, which also sends us "Sketches of Country Life," after Birket Foster—a collection of cards with coloured rural scenes and appropriate Scriptural extracts, and the music and words of "Christmas Carols," arranged by W. H. Essex, which will be valuable for children at school-teas, &c.

The Hornet Annual is an excellent sixpennyworth, containing as it does stories and poems by Messrs. H. J. Bymn, Leigh, Reece, Godfrey Turner, and other writers of comic fame, embellished by a profusion of woodcuts.

The Convicted Detectives.——It is said that Meiklejohn, who while the recent proceedings were pending made repeated overtures to the Treasury to become a witness for the Crown, has since his conviction made statements implicating a number of other police officers. The matter is understood to be under the consideration of the Home Secretary, and an official inquiry will in all probability be ordered. Confidence in the force has been so rudely shaken that nothing but a most searching public investigation can possibly re-establish it.

Miscellaneous Items.——One of the thieves who stole the Countess of Aberdeen's jewels has been captured, and the police have hopes of securing his confederates as well as of recovering some of the property.—Sir J. Bazalgette has been visited by burglars, who, besides appropriating a cash-box and its contents, carried off a silver trowel presented to him by the Board of Works in commemoration of the laying of the first stone of the Thames Embankment.—Jewel robberies are growing fashionable. Last week a shopman in the employ of a jeweller at Bury St. Edmunds, being left in sole charge of the premises decamped with the whole stock, worth several thousand pounds, besides 100*l*. in cash.—Who is responsible for the safety of mail-bags in transitu? Last Friday two bags were stolen from the Leamington Station of the Great Western Railway, and were subsequently found near by, emptied of their contents, fragments of the torn letters lying all around.—Mr. Justice Denman has decided that the men charged with being concerned in the robbery of 70,000*l*. worth of foreign bonds from the mail train between Calais and Paris cannot be tried in this country, as the alleged offence was committed abroad. Carr, the Englishman, has therefore got off scot free, but Martin and Hibbert are still in custody, and will probably be given up under the Extradition Act.—Procrastinating people, who buy dogs and put off from day to day the duty of procuring licenses for them, would do well to note the decision which has just been made in the Common Pleas Division—namely, that it is not lawful to keep a dog, even for an hour, without a Government permit.—The other day a beer-shop keeper was summoned for being drunk on his own licensed premises. There was no dispute as to the fact; but it was urged in his favour that he was found lying inside the bar, and it was held that that being a private portion of the premises, the Act did not apply. In all likelihood this nice point, which is only matched by the question of jurisdiction raised by Mr. Tooth, will have to be decided in one of the Superior Courts.—Mr. George Washington Moore, one of the famous troupe of negro melodists who "never perform out of London," was the other day summoned for furious driving; but, as the policeman who brought the charge was unable to say whether the animal so driven was a mule or a pony, the charge was dismissed.—Mr. Cobbett, the pertinacious champion of the Tichborne Claimant, on Tuesday made yet another fruitless application to the Queen's Bench Division. His contention is that perjury can only be punished with one term of seven years' penal servitude, and that therefore the double sentence passed on the convict in respect of two distinct charges is illegal. The Judges, however, consider the action "frivolous and vexatious," and of course refuse to grant a rule for its trial.—The three colliers who were convicted of kicking a man to death at Coalville on September 1st were executed in Leicester Gaol on Monday last; and the young Welsh farmer who killed a woman with whom he had illicit acquaintance was hung at Dolgelly on the previous Friday. At the latter place there had been no execution for sixty years, and none of the local carpenters would have anything to do with erecting the scaffold.



THE LAPLANDERS AT THE WESTMINSTER AQUARIUM

A BURMESE PONY RACE

A RACE between two ponies belonging to and ridden by Burmans took place on the 2nd of November last at Joungnoo, British Burmah. The Burmans are much attached to this form of sport, and bet considerably. In this case the race was held on the Jail Road, the starting place being near the jail, and the course a perfectly straight one of about 250 yards. Three heats are run, the winner of two out of three being of course the victor. The sketch represents the winner of the first heat being escorted back to the starting post by his backers with dance and song. The hubbub is scarcely calculated to steady the nerves of an English racer, but a paddy diet possibly produces stoicism. The jockey, tucking his switch into the back of his lungi—which was rolled tight up round his loins, displaying the indigo-coloured tattoo work with which all Burmans are adorned from the waist to below the knee to full advantage—stood in his very short stirrups and danced, gesticulating with hands bent back after the Burmese Pony fashion. The Burmese ponies are from 12 hands to 12·2 on the average, some smaller than 12 and some larger than 12·2. The Burmese saddle is a flat, shallow seat, with a large hump in front, covered with crimson cloth; the reins are crimson bell-rope, and so is the crupper, which passes loosely under the tail, and crimson bell-ropes, tassels and all, hang down the sides. A small bamboo shelter with a raised floor, standing at the winning-post, was occupied by a small party of Europeans—military, civil, and clerical.—We are indebted to Mr. J. B. Waller, of Jounghoo, for the sketch from which our engraving is taken, and for the above particulars.

◆

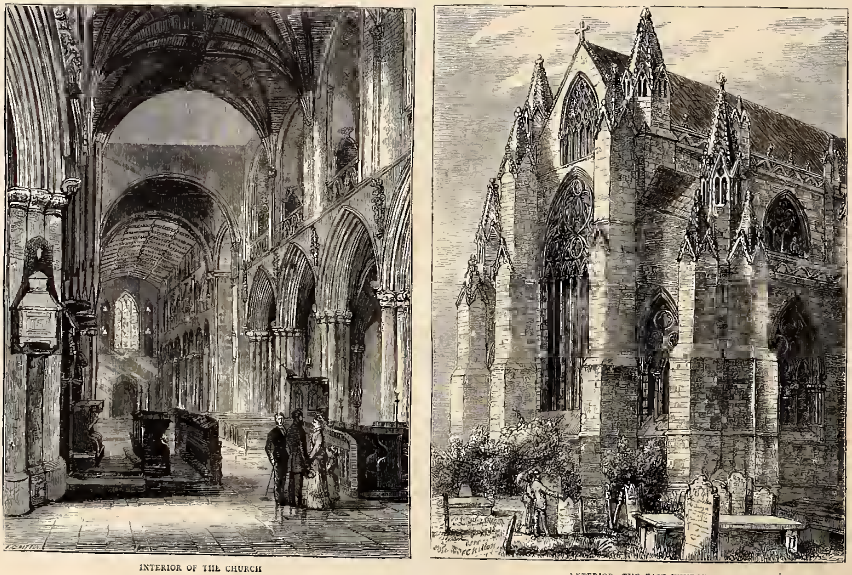
COOLIES AT CAPE TOWN INSPECTING OUR WAR NUMBER

BESIDES its white inhabitants, who are chiefly of Dutch and British descent, the metropolis of South Africa contains a numerous coloured population, some of whom belong to the native African races, such as the Hottentots and Fingoes, while others are Malays hailing from the region round about the Straits Settlements. These latter, who comprise the most industrious portion of the coloured population, are all Mohamedans by religion, and they have several places of worship in Cape Town. On account of their creed they take an especial interest in the war now being waged betwern the Sultan and the Czar, and the sketch (by C. B. M., of Cape Town), from which our engraving is taken, depicts the excitement of a party of Coolies on seeing the stirring events depicted in our Extra War Number, which was exhibited outside a store in a street in Cape Town. Some of the other figures represent volunteers for the Kaffir war, as they appear before going into and after coming out of the "Mill" at the Town House.

◆

THE "SITTING BULL" COUNCIL AT FORT WALSH, BRITISH COLUMBIA

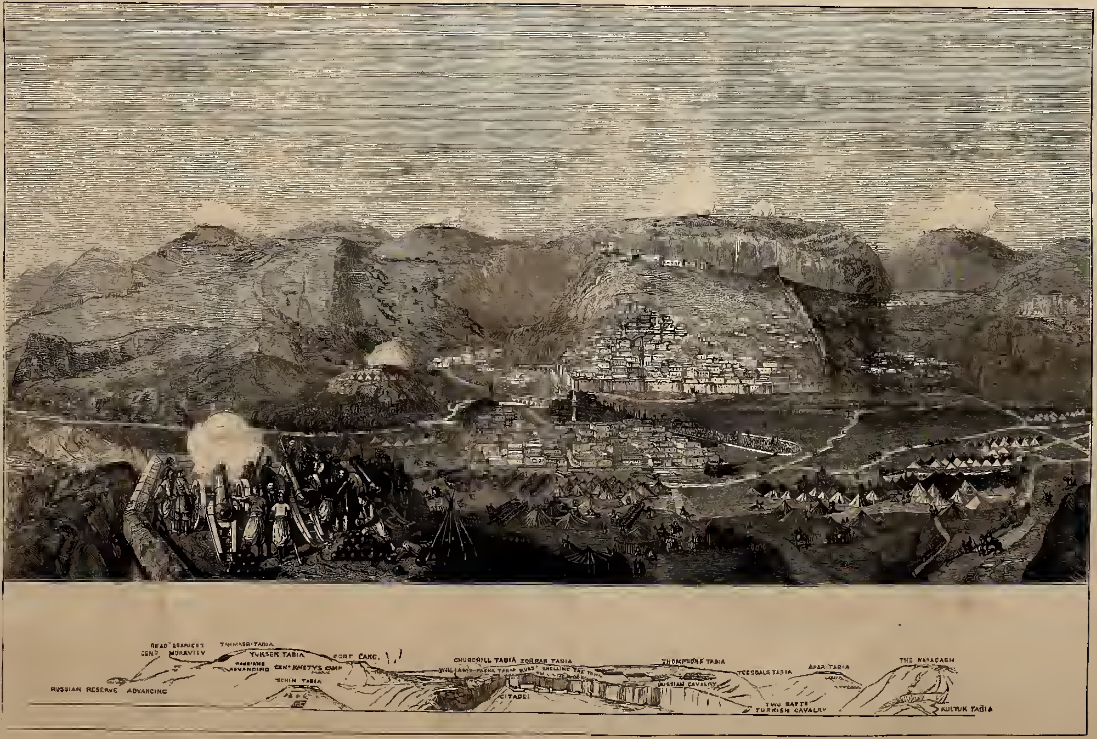
IT will be remembered that at the close of the late Indian War in the north-west of the United States, a number of the Sioux, headed by the famous chief, Sitting Bull, crossed over the British border. Those of the hostile Indians who had remained on American territory, having in the meantime received a full pardon from "the Great Father" (i.e., President Hayes) on condition of giving up their arms and horses, a United States Commission, presided over by General Terry, crossed the frontier with a view of persuading the refugees to follow the example of their penitent countrymen. The object of the



INTERIOR OF THE CHURCH

EXTERIOR, THE EAST WINDOW

THE ABBEY CHURCH, SELBY



HEAD QUARTERS
GENL MURAVIEV
TAHMASP TABIA
YUKSEK TABIA
RUSSIANS ADVANCING
GENL KMETY'S CAMP
FORT LAKE
TCHIM TABIA
RUSSIAN RESERVE ADVANCING
CHURCHILL TABIA
ZORRAB TABIA
WILLIAMS PASHA TABIA
RUSS SHELLING THE TOWN
CITADEL
THOMPSON'S TABIA
RUSSIAN CAVALRY
TEESDALE TABIA
ARAB TABIA
TWO BATTS
TURKISH CAVALRY
THE KARADAGH
KULTUK TABIA

THE FORTRESS AND FIELD DEFENCES OF KARS

REPRESENTING THE ACTION BETWEEN THE RUSSIANS UNDER MOURAVIEFF AND THE TURKS UNDER GENERAL WILLIAMS, SEPT. 29, 1855

Americans was of course to have Sitting Bull and his followers under entire control, whereas if they remained on the British side they might at any time make a raid into American territory. The place fixed upon for the interview, or "pow wow," as it is styled, was Fort Walsh, which is situated in British Columbia, near the 110th parallel of west longitude, and a few miles from the American Territory of Montana. Among the Red men present were Sitting Bull, Spotted Eagle, Flying Bird, and other prominent aboriginals; while the White men were represented by General Terry, with his fellow Republicans, and the British officers Colonel M'Leod and Major Walsh. Sitting Bull delivered a powerful speech expressive of the greatest animosity towards the Americans, and refusing to quit the British dominions. "I did not give you any country," he said, "but you took it away from us. I was born and raised in this country with the Red River half-breeds, and I intend to stop with them. You come here to tell me lies, and I don't want any such language here in my Great Mother's house" (alluding to Her Majesty the Queen). "This country is mine. Go back where you came from, and take it easy going back" (that is, "never go back at all"). Other Indians' speakers followed, and ended by shaking hands with the British officers, and addressing to them terms of affection and respect, while they did not even say "Good-bye" to the Americans. This marked difference of behaviour towards the respective representatives of the two nations is regrettable, and may react unfavourably upon the Indians generally; but it cannot be denied—indeed, it is freely admitted by the Americans themselves—that the Red Indians have been far more skilfully managed by the British than by their Republican cousins. The machinery of a Monarchy is far better fitted for dealing with outlying territories and semi-savage races than that of a Republic. Under the former, law and order are enforced in the remotest regions; under the latter, every man does "as he darn pleases," and it generally pleased the pioneers of new settlements to shoot and maltreat the aborigines.

THE THREE MAGAZINES.

NEW VOLUMES JUST COMMENCED.

Now Ready.
CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE for DECEMBER. Price 7d.,
Being the First Part of a New Volume.
"Its character is so marked and decided that we have no hesitation in giving CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE the FIRST POSITION AMONG THE MONTHLIES for the people."—Edinburgh Courant.

Now Ready.
THE QUIVER for DECEMBER.
Price 6d.
"An outlay of Sixpence upon THE QUIVER will not be regretted by those who are desirous of finding something at once easy to understand and worth the reading. The illustrations are a very pleasant feature in the numbers."—Guardian.

Now Ready.
LITTLE FOLKS for DECEMBER.
Price 6d.
"The praise of LITTLE FOLKS is among all the critics as the perfect ideal of a magazine for the young."—Glasgow Mail.

In Monthly Parts, 7d and 8½d. Part 1. now ready.
WAR, CASSELL'S HISTORY of the RUSSO-TURKISH. Profusely Illustrated.

Now Ready, Part 1, price 8½d.
WAR, CASSELL'S HISTORY of the RUSSO-TURKISH
, Every purchaser of Part 1 is entitled to receive with it a large Map, measuring 21½ in. by 31 in (handsomely printed in Chromo-Lithography), of THE PASSAGES OF THE DANUBE AND PASSES OF THE BALKANS.

In Monthly Parts, 7d. Part I. now ready.
SCIENCE FOR ALL.

Now ready, Part I., price 7d.
SCIENCE FOR ALL. Edited by Dr. ROBERT BROWN, assisted by Eminent Writers. Abundantly Illustrated.
"It is proposed in 'Science for All' to take everyday incidents of life and the commonest objects which surround us, and show, in simple and clear language, the scientific principles which underlie them, and whose operation they illustrate."—Extract from Prospectus.
CASSELL, PETTER, and GALPIN; and all Booksellers.

THE SEA—ITS STIRRING STORY.

Now ready, Part 2, price 7d
THE SEA—ITS STIRRING STORY OF ADVENTURE, PERIL, AND HEROISM. With Numerous Original Illustrations.
"Among the boys this book is likely to create a perfect furore, and it can hardly fail to be regarded as a most eligible investment for spare pocket-money, especially since to the attractions of 'awfully jolly' reading are added those of very effective illustrations."—John Bull.
FOURTH EDITION OF PART I. (including large presentation Plate), price 7d., also now ready.
CASSELL, PETTER, and GALPIN; and all Booksellers.

COMPLETE CATALOGUES of Messrs. CASSELL, PETTER and GALPIN'S PUBLICATIONS, containing a List of Several Hundred Volumes, including Bibles and Religious Works, Fine-Art Volumes, Children's Books, Dictionaries, Educational Works, History, Natural History, Household and Domestic Treatises, Handbooks and Guides, Science, Travels, &c., together with a Synopsis of their numerous Illustrated Serial Publications, sent post free on application to CASSELL, PETTER, and GALPIN, La Belle Sauvage Yard, Ludgate Hill, London

Folio, price 7s. 6d. each.
THROUGH THE EYE TO THE MIND—THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOKS: a Series of Volumes illustrative of Natural History and of the Vegetable World, with Descriptive Letterpress.
"These volumes are among the most instructive picture books we have seen, and we know of none better calculated to excite and gratify the appetite of the young for the knowledge of nature."—Times.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Tenth Edition, with Fifty-four Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 1: or, LESSONS FROM THE NATURAL HISTORY OF ANIMALS. By ADAM WHITE, late Assistant, Zoological Department, British Museum.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Fifth Edition, with many new Plates, price 7s. 6d
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 2: or, LESSONS FROM THE VEGETABLE WORLD By the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," "The Herb of the Field," &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Third Edition, with Sixty Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d,
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 3: LESSONS ON THE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS, or the Natural History of the Quadrupeds which characterise the Four Divisions of the Globe.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Second Edition, with Forty-eight Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No 4: SKETCHES FROM NATURE, or Pictures of Animal and Vegetable Life in all Lands.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Seventh Edition, with Thirty-six Oblong Coloured Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.
RECREATIVE ILLUSTRATION— THE NEW PICTURE BOOK; or, PICTORIAL LESSONS ON FORM, COMPARISON, AND NUMBER, for Children under Seven Years of Age. With Explanation by NICHOLAS BOHNY.
London. EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Map and Illustrations, price 6s.
THE HEROES OF YOUNG AMERICA. By ASCOTT R. HOPE, Author of "A Peck of Troubles," "A Book About Boys," "A Book About Dominies," &c., &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W

Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, price 6s.
ADVENTURES IN THE AIR; being Memorable Experiences of Great Aeronauts. From the French of M. DE FONVIELLE. Translated and edited by JOHN S. KELTIE.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

DANCING MADE EASY.—COULON'S HANDBOOK OF DANCING is the most complete treatise on the subject, containing full descriptions of all dances, new and old, illustrated by upwards of forty woodcuts Price 1s; post free, 13 stamps.—A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, W. All new music half-price.

THE NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS.
Now ready at all the Libraries.
DORIS BARUGH. By Mrs. Macquoid, Author of "Patty," "Diane," &c. 3 vols.
THE VILLAGE COMEDY. By MORTIMER and FRANCES COLLINS. 3 vols.
THE SQUIRE'S COURTSHIP. By Mrs. MACKENZIE DANIEL. 3 vols.
A JEWEL OF A GIRL. By the Author of "Queenie," &c.
MAUD LESLIE. By Lady CHARLES THYNNE. 2 vols.
TWO TALES OF MARRIED LIFE. By GEORGIANA M. CRAIK and M. C. STIRLING. 3 vols.
CHEAP EDITION of PHŒBE, JUNIOR. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. 1 vol. 5s. bound and illustrated.
HURST and BLACKETT, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

A YOUNG SQUIRE OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. From the Papers of CHRISTOPHER JEAFFRESON. Edited by JOHN CORDY JEAFFRESON. 2 vols., 21s.
"Two volumes of very attractive matter."—Athenæum.
HURST and BLACKETT, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

This day is published,
OUR TRIP TO BLUNDERLAND.
OR, GRAND EXCURSION TO BLUNDERTOWN AND BACK.
By JEAN JAMBON.
With SIXTY ILLUSTRATIONS designed by CHARLES DOYLE, and engraved by Messrs. DALZIEL.
Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt edges, price 6s. 6d.
WM. BLACKWOOD and SONS, Edinburgh and London.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEE THE SPLENDID CHRISTMAS HOLIDAY NUMBER OF
DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE. It contains an unparalleled list of attractions. Beautiful Steel Engravings, Christmas Stories, Poems, &c., and a host of other entertaining Christmas Novelties. Price 1s., or by post, 1s. 2d.—THE WILLMER & ROGERS NEWS CO., 11, Bouverie Street, Fleet St., E.C., and all Booksellers.

A DAILY PAPER says:—
"HUSH-A-BYE BABY.
"Such is the singular title of the Christmas annual of Once a Week. It is written by George Manville Fenn, and that of itself is a guarantee that it is of high literary merit. The author styles it 'a seasonable dish of small salad for a mental meal, in sixteen spoonfuls,' each 'spoonful' forming a distinct story, although the whole are in a very novel way connected. In these sixteen 'spoonfuls' the writer passes with marvellous power 'from grave to gay, from lively to severe.' Some of the stories are characterised by the richest humour, while others are full of pathos. In the latter category, perhaps, the most remarkable are, 'The Babies at Mrs. Widgeon's' and 'The Baby who was not Baptised—by Water.' On the other hand, 'The Baby who came in a Basket' and 'The Baby who had a Powder,' present babydom in a most comical manner."

HUSH-A-BYE BABY,
By G. MANVILLE FENN.
Of all Booksellers and Bookstalls.
PRICE ONE SHILLING.

THE ART JOURNAL
For DECEMBER (price 2s. 6d.) contains the following LINE ENGRAVINGS:—
I. ALMS-GIVING. By GUSTAVE DORE.
II. THE EAGLE'S NEST. After Sir E. LANDSEER, R.A.
III. JOHN HENRY FOLEY, R.A. After T. BROCK
LITERARY CONTENTS:
Norway. Chap. XII. By R. T. Pritchett, F.S.A. Illust
Rubens Tercentenary at Antwerp. By Athol Mayhew.
The Works of Charles H. Millet. Illustrated.
Art Sales of the Season. (Concluded)
The Art of Dressing and of being Dressed By Percy Fitzgerald, M.A., F.S.A.
Ancient Irish Art. By L. Jewitt, F.S.A. Illustrated
Art at Home and Abroad, Obituary, Reviews, &c.
London: VIRTUE and CO. (Limited), Ivy Lane, and all Booksellers.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE. No. 218.
For DECEMBER. Price 1s.
Contents of the Number:—
1. The Education of After Life. By the Dean of Westminster.
2. Young Musgrave. By Mrs. Oliphant. Chaps. XXXVI.—XL. (Conclusion.)
3. Modern Life and Insanity. By D. Hack Tuke, M.D.
4. A Narrow Escape. By M. Laing Meason.
5. Valentine's Day, 1873. (An unpublished Poem.) By the Rev. Charles Kingsley.
6. German Universities. By Walter C. Perry.
7. The Reform Period in Russia. By H. Sutherland Edwards.
8. Heligoland. By Mrs. Brassey.
9. Autumn.
MACMILLAN and CO., London.

Now Ready, the DECEMBER or EXTRA CHRISTMAS NUMBER of
MRS. HENRY WOOD'S MAGAZINE,
THE ARGOSY.
Contents: A Mysterious Visitor, by the Author of "East Lynne;" Lee the Letterman, by Johnny Ludlow; In Memoriam, Julia Kavanagh; Clement's Love, Julia Kavanagh's Last Story; Through Holland, with Five Illustrations by Charles W. Wood; Seeing a Ghost, &c.
PRICE ONE SHILLING.
RICHARD BENTLEY and SON, 8, New Burlington Street, W.

Price 6d., post-free, 7½d.
FAMILY HERALD for December.

FAMILY HERALD, PART 415.
PURE LITERATURE.
The Illustrated London News, in reference to pure literature, speaks of "The Family Herald, that joy to tens of thousands of innocent English households."

FAMILY HERALD FOR DECEMBER, price 6d.
LEADING ARTICLES and ESSAYS.
The British Quarterly Review says:—"There is a well-considered leading article or essay every week, upon some subject of an instructive or thoughtful character."

FAMILY HERALD, PART 415, price 6d., post-free, 7½d.
NOVELS and TALES.
The Saturday Review says:—"Its novels and tales are quite as well written as the best circulating-library stories."

FAMILY HERALD FOR DECEMBER, price 6d.
ANSWERS to CORRESPONDENTS.
The Saturday Review says:—"The editor is the confidant and confessor in every station of life. The Answers to Correspondents cannot be fictitious, a romance and a life history being embodied in almost each of them."

Price 6d., post free, 7½d.,
FAMILY HERALD for Dec., Part 415.
WILLIAM STEVENS, 421, Strand, London; and all Newsvendors and Railway Stations.

BY DR. BARR MEADOWS.
Seventh Edition, cloth, post free 32 stamps.
ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Remarks on the Abuse of Arsenic and other reputed specifics.—G. HILL, 154, Westminster Bridge Road.

NEW GIFT BOOKS.
ELEGANTLY BOUND.

G. CHRISTOPHER DAVIES' NEW BOOK FOR BOYS
In square imperial 16mo, price 6s., cloth gilt, gilt edges.
WILDCAT TOWER:
A Book of Adventures for Boys.
By the Author of "The Swan and Her Crew."
Embellished with 100 choice Illustrations.

In crown 8vo, price 5s., cloth gilt, 450 pp.,
OLD PICTURES in a NEW FRAME.
By DOUGLAS STRAIGHT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.
With Page Illustrations.

In crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. each, cloth gilt.
GOD'S SILVER: or, Youthful Days.
By the Hon. Mrs. GREENE,
Author of "Cushions and Corners," "Gilbert's Shadow," &c.
With Original Page Illustrations.

MARTIN NOBLE:
Or, a Boy's Experience of London Life.
By JOHN GEORGE WATTS.
With Original Page Illustrations.

LITTLE BOOKS FOR LITTLE PEOPLE.
In imperial 16mo, 2s., cloth gilt.
SEVEN O'CLOCK:
A Home Story.
By JANIE BROCKMAN.
With Choice Original Illustrations.

Now Ready, Gratis, on application.
WARNE'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of Choice GIFT BOOKS, elegant Presentation Works, Juvenile and Picture Toy Books, in price from 75s. to 6d., or forwarded post free by FREDERICK WARNE and CO., Bedford Street, Strand.

Ready this day, Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. (postage 5d.
THE PICTURE AMATEUR'S HANDBOOK
AND
DICTIONARY OF PAINTERS.
Being a Guide for Visitors to Public and Private Picture Galleries and for Art Students, including an Explanation of the various Methods of Painting and Instructions for Cleaning, Re-lining, and Restoring Oil Paintings, a Glossary of Terms, an Historical Sketch of the Principal Schools of Painting, and a Dictionary of Painters, giving the Copyists and Imitators of each Master.
By PHILIPPE DARYL, B.A.
CROSBY LOCKWOOD and CO., 7, Stationers' Hall Court, London, E.C.

CONSUMPTION: its Proximate Cause and Specific Treatment by the HYPOPHOSPHITES, upon the Principles of Stœchiological Medicine, by JOHN FRANCIS CHURCHILL, M.D.,
With an Appendix on the Direct Treatment of Respiratory Diseases (Asthma, Bronchitis, &c.) by Stœchiological Inhalants And Reports of nearly Two Hundred Cases by Drs. Churchill, Campbell, Heslop, Sterling, Bird, Santa Maria, Gomez, Maestre, Pongot, Reinvillier, Guites, Leriverend, Denobele, Feldman, Pfeiffer, Vinteas, Bougard, Tinfahy, Lanti, Fabbri, Panegrossi, Cerasi, Gualdi, Todini, Ascenti, Regnoli, Valentini, Casati, Blasi, Borromeo, Fiorelli, and Fedeli.
London: LONGMANS and CO. Price 2s.

DE LA RUE and CO.'S INDELIBLE REFILLETTER DIARIES, CONDENSED DIARIES, and TABLET CALENDARS, for 1878, in great variety, may now be had of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Publishers,
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

DE LA RUE and CO.'S PLAYING CARDS. The New Patterns for the Season may now be had of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Manufacturers,
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

By Royal Letters Patent.
"DEXTER" PLAYING CARDS, with rounded Corners and Patent Index-pips, extra thin, and highly burnished on both sides Of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Manufacturers,
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

DE LA RUE and CO.'S CHRISTMAS CARDS, in great variety, prepared from original designs and illustrated by original verses. Of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Publishers,
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

GO-BANG, a JAPANESE GAME, with Board arranged on an improved principle, Counters, and "Guide" by "CAVENDISH." Retail at 5s and upwards of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Manufacturers,
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

Now ready, 11th Edition, 8vo, cloth, extra gilt, price 5s.
WHIST. The Laws and Principles of.
By "CAVENDISH." Of all Booksellers and Stationers.
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

By the same Author
ECARTÉ. The Laws of, with a TREATISE ON THE GAME. Price 2s. 6d. ROUND GAMES AT CARDS, Price 1s. 6d. PIQUET, Price 3s. 6d. LAWN TENNIS and BADMINTON, Price 1s. POCKET GUIDES, Price 6d. each: WHIST (3)—Guide; Laws; Leads. BEZIQUE. POLISH BEZIQUE. ECARTÉ. EUCHRE. SPOIL-FIVE. CRIBBAGE. CALABRASELLA. SIXTY-SIX. GO-BANG. BACKGAMMON. CHESS. DRAUGHTS. Of all Booksellers and Stationers.
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL
LIFE ASSOCIATION,
27, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON,
Established 1840.
Mutual Assurance for all Classes.
W. T. LINFORD, Secretary.

PROVIDENT CLERKS' AND GENERAL GUARANTEE ASSOCIATION (LIMITED).
61, COLEMAN STREET, LONDON.
Guarantees for fidelity in situations of trust. The Bonds of this Association are accepted by all Government Departments.

PROVIDENT CLERKS' AND GENERAL ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY (LIMITED).
61, COLEMAN STREET, LONDON.
Every description of Accidental Insurance on favourable terms.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LONDON.— The extensive building now in course of erection on the site of the historical mansion of the Dukes of Northumberland at the corner of Northumberland Avenue, Trafalgar Square, will, when completed, be opened as a first-class Hotel.
Messrs. GORDON and CO., Proprietors.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL (SELECT) FOR LADIES, BOLTON HOUSE, 192, Clapham Road, Surrey. Established 1867. A private home where patients suffering from serious diseases, and requiring special supervision, can obtain the best medical and surgical treatment without incurring anxiety to their own homes. Treatise of successful cures forwarded for twelve stamps Physician, DAVID JONES, M.D. Consultations daily, 11 till 1 (Tuesday and Friday excepted), at 15, Welbeck St., London

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER OF 1877.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street.

300 PIECES RICH
BLACK and COLORED VELVETS,
plain and brocaded in all the new designs, prices, Black and Plain Colours, from 4s. 11d., Brocaded, from 12s. 9d. Patterns free.

NEW COLORED LYONS SILKS,
in White, Cream, Ivory,
Tilleul, Moonlight, Coral, Eau de Nil, &c., &c.,
specially prepared for
BRIDAL AND EVENING WEAR,
also every new shade of Bronze, Navy, Claret, Prune, &c., &c., at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., 4s. 4½d., and 5s. 3d. per yard.
350 Shades to select from. Patterns free on application to
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

BLACK SILKS OF STANDARD QUALITY.
Heavily dyed and showy makes at low prices should be avoided.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street,
having kept for the past 35 years Black Silks produced by Messrs. Bonnet, Ponson, Jaubert, and Tapissier, which are found upon careful examination to be the best and purest makes, invites special attention to these fine qualities, as being cheaper than at any former period, and at the same time recommended with more confidence for really hard wear than any other make of Silk; in proof of purity and excellence the highest awards were given at Philadelphia.
Each quality guaranteed not to cut.
Prices, 4s. 6d. to 21s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

BLACK AND COLOURED
SILK COSTUMES,
made from the new Paris Models in eight different styles of the most approved designs, as shown in Engravings, prices, with bodice complete, Black, from 4½, Colours, from 5½ guineas.
Patterns of the Silk and Fashion Plates post free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

THE LATEST PRODUCTION IN
MANTLES AND PALETOTS,
Cashmere Circulars, lined Fur, 35s. to 5 guineas.
Cashmere Paletots, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Circulars, lined Fur, 5 to 10 guineas.
Silk Paletots, lined Fur, 6 to 25 guineas.

THE NEW DIAGONAL.
CLOTH PALETOTS, 2 to 5 guineas.
The New Beaver Cloth Paletots, 28s. 9d. to 5 guineas.
New Ulster Mantles, 17s. 6d. to 52s. 6d.
Waterproof Mantles and Ulsters, 17s. 6d. to 42s.
Patterns and Engravings free from
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, London, W.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF NOVELTIES FOR WINTER DRESSES,
in every variety of Fabric and Shade of Colour,
From 12s. 6d. to 42s. the Full Dress. Patterns free.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON.
CASHMERE MERINOES, all wool,
This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 2s 2d. to 2s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

NEW AND ELEGANT DESIGNS IN WINTER COSTUMES,
Cashmere and Silk Costumes, 4 guineas
Specialities in Costumes suitable for Travelling, Promenade, and Indoor Wear, 38s. 6d. to 7 guineas
Rich Velvet-Velveteen Costumes, 3½ to 7 guineas.
Illustrations and Patterns of Materials post free.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES REQUIRING
MADE BALL and Wedding Dresses.
Now ready, several thousand charming Dresses in White, Black, and all colours, from 18s. 9d. to 10 guineas.
Engravings of the above, with many others, can be seen in the New Book of Fashions, which is sent post free.

A FAVOURITE DRESS IN TARLATAN.
THE "DORA" (any Colour or Black),
profusely trimmed with flounces and ample train,
1 guinea, a substantial box included.
A pretty Brussels Net Dress, in White, Black, and all colours, for 28s 9d., with material for bodice.
Patterns of Materials and Illustrations free from
PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

MADAME ELLIOT'S STYLISH PALETOTS, MANTLES, JACKETS, from 30s., trimmed fur, and also the new clair de lune trimming. Also, very stylish Princess Dresses and Polonaises, beautiful quality black Cashmere, from 42s.; elegant Bonnets and Hats, from 18s. 6d.; speciality in French Corsets, from 10s 6d. Madame E. especially recommends the Cuirass Corset, with Jean d'Arc Belt, wonderfully adapted for ladies inclined to embonpoint. Price from 21s. to 42s. To prevent delay and inconvenience send size of waist and Post-office Order to 8, Great Portland Street (four doors from Oxford Street).

DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP of GASK and GASK.
SALE of the whole of their IMMENSE STOCK of SILK MERCERY, GENERAL DRAPERY, &c.
ALL NEW FOR THIS SEASON.
GREAT REDUCTIONS in PRICES have been made throughout, and all articles marked in plain figures at the lowest prices for READY MONEY ONLY.
SILKS and VELVETS of all kinds, cheaper than they have ever been sold.
BONNET'S and PONSON'S CELEBRATED BLACK SILKS, greatly reduced in price.
COSTUMES.—Perhaps the largest and best Stock of New Costumes in London. Paris Models in Silk, Silk and Velvet, Silk and Cachemire, new Silken and Woollen Fabrics, &c., all now marked exceedingly cheap.
EVENING COSTUMES in Tulle, Net, Tarlatan, &c.; beautiful new designs, all equally cheap, commencing at 15s. 9d. each.
MANTLES, PALETOTS, JACKETS.—All the vast collection, new for this season, of Paris Mantles, &c., in Cloth Vigognes, Camel's Hair, Matelasse, Velvet, fur-lined Cachemires and Silks, Sealskins, Ulsters, &c., has been re-marked at exceptionally low prices.
DRESS FABRICS.—A great collection of all the newest materials, Foreign and English, all marked at the reduced prices.
Gloves, Hosiery, Linen Goods, Blankets, Flannels, Calicoes, Lace Goods, Ties, Scarves, Fichus, Ribbons, Trimmings, Umbrellas, Ladies' Underclothing, Millinery, Mourning Goods of all kinds, &c.
All purchasers must effect a considerable saving during this Sale. Patterns free to the country.
The doors are opened each morning at ten o'clock.
58 to 63, Oxford Street; 1 to 5, Wells Street, London.

LADIES' IRISH ULSTER COATS, made in the best manner by experienced tailors. Immense variety of Irish Friezes and other fashionable materials. Patterns and forms for self-measurement post free.
RICHARD ALLEN, Sackville Street, Dublin.

WOOLLEN CLOTHS. Waterproof Tweeds, Matelasse Cloths, Sealskins, Fur Beavers, and other materials for Ladies' Jackets; also every kind of Woollen Goods for Gentlemen's and Boys' wear.
C. MEEKING and CO., Woollen Warehouse,
111 and 112, Hatton Garden, Holborn Circus, London

CHAPMAN'S, NOTTING HILL, W.

BLACK LYONS SILKS.

The unparalleled quantities of Silk which I have sold during the past twelve months has caused the Lyons manufacturers of the special makes which I advertise to call them "CHAPMAN'S SILKS," and in following their example, I am anxious NOT TO DECEIVE the public by leading them to imagine I am the maker of these goods. I am simply a buyer and seller, but, being enabled to purchase such enormous quantities, I buy at a much lower rate than any other consumer. The advantage thus gained I give entirely to my Customers, and, being in a better position than any Broker or Merchant in London to supply the Public with a Good Silk at a Low Price, I shall be glad if Ladies will give me the chance of sending patterns for comparison.

THERE ARE FOUR PRICES:

No. 1, 3s. 11d. No. 2, 4s. 11d. No. 3, 5s. 11d. No. 4, 6s. 11d.

COLOURED SILKS.

Rich quality	3s. 11d. per yard.
Very superior value	5s. 6d. "
Magnificent Rich Failles	6s. 11d. "

JAPANESE SILKS.

The most extensive Assortment in London to Select from

In consequence of the depreciation in the value of Silk, I am compelled to reduce the whole of my Japanese Stock very nearly to what they cost me. The new tariff is as under:—

Brilliant quality	1s. 11½d. per yard.
The richest quality made	2s. 4½d. "

BRUNSWICK BLACK PERMANENT VELVETEENS.

After a series of failures and unsuccessful attempts to produce a perfect article of its kind, English manufacturers have at last attained their desired object, and in introducing their New Permanent Velveteens can dare to challenge the competition of the world, which they are prepared to defy. They assert that their New Velveteens can be warranted to wash, the colour is imperishable, they are far superior in appearance to every other kind, are lighter, will drape much better, perfectly free from smell, and, moreover, are perfect Velveteens, having all the appearance and double the wear of Lyons Velvet at one third the price, being only 3s. 11d., 4s. 11d., 5s. 11d. per yard. 27 in. wide.

EXTRACT FROM THE "QUEEN,"

November 24, 1877.—

"Mr. Chapman, of Notting Hill, whose stock of fashionable materials at low rates always testify to the energy of both manufacturer and retailer, has forwarded a parcel of his latest winter patterns. There are several novelties worthy of noting by those in quest of inexpensive dresses; and the Brunswick Black Velveteen certainly ranks in this category. Few buy Velveteen who can afford Lyons or Genoa Velvet, but many desire that Velveteen should have as near an approach as possible in effect to the French and Italian productions. This Permanent Black Velveteen, introduced by Mr. Chapman, has the same deep blue shades or reflets, called the bloom, noticeable in the richest black Velvets. It is light to wear and drapes well, and its colouring is admirable.

COMPLETE SETS of PATTERNS forwarded to all parts of the globe same day on receipt of order.

COURT DRESS MAKER.

Seven Minutes from Notting Hill Gate Station, Five Minutes from Uxbridge Road Station, and Ten Minutes from Addison Road Station.

CHAPMAN'S, NOTTING HILL, W.

HENRY GLAVE'S

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS for 1877.

GRENADINES for DINNER, BALL, and EVENING WEAR.

- White Grenadines, with Coloured Stripes, 3¾d., and with Satin Stripes, 10¾d. a yard
- Plain White Wool Grenadines, 10¾d. and 1s. 3½d.
- Black Self Stripe Grenadines, 6¾d. a yard.
- Black very rich Satin Stripe Grenadines, 6¾d. and 8¾d.
- Coloured Bengal Stripe Barèges, 7¾d., suitable for children.
- A very pretty Grey Granite Barège, at 9¾d.
- Black Checked Grenadines, at 4¾d. and 8¾d.
- White-Ground, Coloured-Checked Grenadines, at 8¾d.
- Pink, White, Sky, and Ecru Honeycomb Grenadines, at 1s. 0½d.
- Black Dentelle Grenadines, 8¾d., 10¾d., and 1s 0½d
- Black Silk Grenadines, 10¾d., 1s. 4½d., 1s. 6½d. and 1s. 11½d.
- Black Honeycomb Grenadines, 1s. 9½d. a yard.
- Black Barèges, 1s. 0½d., 1s. 3½d., 1s. 6½d., and 1s. 11½d
- Black Wool Norwich Grenadines, 6¾d., 8¾d., 1s. 0½d., 1s. 6½d., and 1s 11½d.
- Black Glacé Grenadines, 4¾d., 6¾d., and 8¾d. yard.

Patterns free.

534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S

DOUBLE-WIDTH HOMESPUNS, SERGES, and MELTONS, measuring from 54 to 60 inches in width.

Double-width Homespun Serge, in Blue, Black, or Brown, 1s. 3½d. Double-width Scotch Serges, in Autumn Colours, 1s 11½d. Double-width Melton Cloths, 1s. 6½d., 1s. 11½d., and 2s. 11½d.

Stout Double-width Matelasse, 3s. 11d. to 6s. 11d.

Stout Beaver and Napp Mantle Cloths, 3s. 11d., 4s. 11d., and 5s. 11d. Stout Camel's Hair Cloths, 5s. 11d., 6s. 11d., and 7s. 11d. a yard.

All Patterns post free.

534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S

CHRISTMAS BALL AND SOIREE DRESSES.

We have prepared photographs and sketches of the following New Styles, which are sent post free with patterns of material, instructions for self-measurement, and every other particular:—

"Robe de Bal," Coloured Tarlatan Dresses, 18s. 9d. or 25s. 9d.; "Palais Royal," 29s. 6d. or 35s. 6d.; "La Charmeuse," 2 and 2½ gs.; "Geroflee," 29s 6d or 37s. 6d.; "Fairy," 18s. 9d., 25s. 6d., or 29s. 6d.; "Niaon," 39s. 6d.; "Antoinette," 35s. 6d. and 2 gs.; "Yoland," 21s. 6d., 29s. 6d., and 35s. 6d.; "Gipsey," 3 gs. or £3 10s. 6d.; "Special Cheap Ball Dresses," complete, with made Bodice, in any Colour Tarlatan, 16s. 9d. each, made to measure in a few hours.

534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S

UNDERCLOTHING AND OUTFITTING.

A New Illustrated Price List is now ready, and can be sent free to any address.

- 300 dozen Ladies' Trimmed Nightdresses, 1s. 11½d. each, or three for 5s. 9d.; usual price 2s. 11½d. each.
- Handsomely Trimmed Ladies' Nightdresses, with Scotch Insertion and edging, 4s. 11d.; or three for 14s 6d.
- Ladies' Trimmed Chemise, three rows insertion and edging, 2s. 6½d. each, or three for 7s. 4d.
- Ladies' Handsomely Trimmed Chemise, 3s. 11½d. each, or three for 11s. 6d.; worth 5s. 11d. each.
- Ladies' Plain Chemise, 1s. 4½d. each, three for 3s. 11d., or six for 7s. 10d.
- 100 dozen Ladies' Trimmed Knickerbockers, with insertion and edging, 2s. 6½d. each, or three for 7s. 4d.
- 50 dozen Ladies' Trimmed Drawers, 2s. 11½d. each, or three for 8s. 6d.

534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.,

IMPORTERS.

TURKEY CARPETS.

PERSIAN CARPETS.

INDIAN CARPETS.

35 and 36, OLD BOND STREET.

ACCIDENTS by FLOOD and FIELD.

—Accidents of all kinds may be provided against by a Policy of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY.

Hon A. KINNAIRD, M.P., Chairman.

Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000.

£1,120,000 has been paid as compensation.

No. 64, Cornhill, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Sec.

MALVERN COLLEGE.

The ANNUAL EXAMINATION for ENTRANCE EXHIBITIONS and SCHOLARSHIPS will be held on December 20th and 21st.

BLACK SILKS! BLACK SILKS!

The Best Value, from 2s. 11d. to 5s. 6d.

Patterns free—BAKER and CRISP, 198, Regent Street.

EVENING, WEDDING, and USEFUL SILKS.

The Best Value, from 1s. 11½d. to 4s. 11d.

Patterns free.—BAKER and CRISP'S, Regent Street.

NOTICE.—1,000 ODD SILK

DRESSES and REMNANTS at Half-price.

Patterns free.—BAKER and CRISP.

1,000 BOXES ROYAL SILK

MOLESKIN VELVETEENS in Black, from 1s. 9½d.

All Colours, from 2s. 11d.—BAKER and CRISP.

INDIAN CASHMERES and FRENCH MERINOS.

500 Pieces. From 1s 9d. to 2s. 11d. yard.

Patterns free.—BAKER and CRISP, Regent Street.

DRESSES! DRESSES! DRESSES!

Serges, Viennas, Saxony Flannels,
Camel Hair Cloths, Snowflakes,
and 100 other new Winter Materials, from
6d. to 2s. 6d. yard.—BAKER and CRISP.—Patterns free.

EVENING DRESSES. EVENING DRESSES.

The New Grenadines and other light Fabrics, from 6s. 9d. full dress. Patterns free.

COSTUMES. COSTUMES. COSTUMES.

New Engravings free.

Cashmeres, Serges, Velveteens, Vicuna, Snowflake, and every other Fabric, from 29s. 6d. Patterns free.

BAKER and CRISP.

BAKER and CRISP'S PALETOTS,

ULSTERS, &c.—Patterns and Engravings free.

The Jehu (last Novelty), and 1,000 others, from 16s. 9d. to 100s.—BAKER and CRISP.

NOTICE.—ODDS and ENDS.—

WINTER BUNDLES of 50 yards of Best DRESS FABRICS, for 35s. 6d. and 45s. 6d. each. Send for P.O.O. to BAKER and CRISP, 198, Regent Street, London.

PETER ROBINSON'S

COURT AND GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, REGENT STREET,

Is the Cheapest and the Largest
Warehouse of the kind
in London.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S

WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS,
REGENT STREET.

For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
In the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.

"ON RECEIPT of LETTER

or TELEGRAM,"

MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required), without extra charge.

PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.

DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
in the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well

as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by
PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.

AN IMPORTANT PURCHASE
OF SEVERAL THOUSAND PIECES BY

PETER ROBINSON of Regent Street

OF THE BEST WEARING MAKES ONLY,
and highly recommended

Bonnet and Cie	at 5s. 0d
Jaubert	at 4s. 0d.
Ponsons	at 5s. 3d.
Degoves	at 4s. 9d.

The above are from 2s. to 3s. per yard
under last year's prices.
The EMPRESS CACHEMIRE, at 6s.
Also Excellent Value at
2s. 6d., 3s. 3d., 3s. 11d., 4s. 6d., and 4s. 11d.
For Patterns address to
PETER ROBINSON,
256 to 262, Regent Street.

BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS.

Exceedingly good qualities,
at 7s. 6d., 8s. 9d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d.
A Special Bargain
in Lyons Velvet, at 10s. 9d.
Black Silk-Trimming Velvets.
at 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 9d.
At PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.
Nos. 256 to 262.

FOR SIX GUINEAS.

A BLACK SILK COSTUME

made of RICH LYONS SILK.
with Velvet Garniture,
Exquisitely cut and fashioned.
Copies of expensive Paris Models.
Photos free.
PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

REMARKABLY CHEAP. For One

Guinea, A Black Quilted SATIN PETTICOAT.
For 2½ Guineas, A Black Silk TRAINED SKIRT.
At PETER ROBINSON'S of REGENT STREET.

FOR TWO GUINEAS, and up to Seven,

Costumes in New Black Materials,
In various fashionable Styles,
At PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,

EVENING DRESSES, at One Guinea.

Black Brussels Net, at 29s. 6d.
Tolle (condition keeping), 50s.
Grenadine, 52s 6d.
New Styles, well cut, and elegantly trimmed.
Illustrations free.

THE NEW CRAPE.

The Pure Silk Gordian Crape,
for Widows and Families.
Its advantages are—that it is made
of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon
nor spot with rain.
It is a richer black, free from dress, and
the gummed appearance so objectionable in other Crape.
The wear of every yard is guaranteed.
The Gordian Crape is a Specialite,
only to be obtained at
PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET,
The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262.
Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 9s. 6d.
Patterns free.

FUR-LINED CLOAKS

at SUMMER PRICES.
Good useful Cloaks at
3½ and 4½ guineas.

SEMI-FITTING SEAL PALETOTS,

33 inches long for 9½ guineas.
36 inches long for 11 guineas.
39 inches long for 13 guineas.
at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.

NOTICE.—In reference to the

above advertisement,
It is important that letters
should be clearly addressed to
256 to 262, REGENT STREET

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS.

REDUCTION OF PRICES.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,

30 inches long, from 8 to 12 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,

33 inches long, from 10 to 15 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,

36 inches long, from 12 to 16 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,

40 inches long, from 16 to 20 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,

46 inches long, from 20 to 28 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,

40 inches long, richly trimmed with real marten tails, 12 inches deep, 30 gs.; Real Sable, 10 inches deep, 40 gs.; Skunk, 20 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS

can be sent on approval to any part of the United Kingdom by forwarding a reference in Town to

MESSRS. WAYRE, Manufacturing

FURRIERS, 96, Oxford Street, and 335, Oxford Street (corner of Regent Circus). Established Half-a-Century.

SHIRTS.—FORD'S EUREKA.—"The most perfect fitting made."—Observer. Gentlemen desirous of purchasing shirts of the best quality should try Ford's Eureka. 30s., 40s., 45s. half-dozen.

ÆGIDIUS.—A New ELASTIC OVER-

SHIRT, as warm as wool, as soft as silk, 13s. 6d. each. Patterns of material and self-measure free by post.—FORD and CO., 41 and 44, Poultry, London.

"WEAR-RESISTING" (Registered)

BOYS' SUITS.

SAMUEL BROTHERS.

Suit for a Boy, 3 ft. 8 in. in height.
C Class, 27s.; D Class, 31s.
Prices varying according to height.
Patterns, &c., post free.
SAMUEL BROTHERS, Sydenham House,
65 and 67, Ludgate Hill, E.C

EPPS'S COCOA.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.

JAMES EPPS AND CO.,
HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS.

COCK'S READING SAUCE

Is the best and most economical Sauce ever manufactured

FOR FISH, ENRICHING SOUPS, GRAVIES, &c.

It only requires a trial to convince the purchaser of its excellence.

CAUTION.—The genuine is protected by Trade Mark, viz., CHARLES COCKS' Signature on a white ground across the Reading Arms.

Established 1837.

CUSTARDS WITHOUT EGGS.

ALFRED BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER makes the finest Custards without Eggs, and at one-half the cost and trouble. Sold by all Chemists, Italian Warehousemen, and Grocers. —Wholesale at BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon Street, London.

In packets, price 6d. and 1s. each.
Manufactory—69, Worcester Street, Birmingham.

THE "FITZROY SOUPS" are the best for EXCELLENCY, PURITY, AND ECONOMY.

Sold by all respectable Grocers.

MORSON'S

PEPSINE,

AND ITS PREPARATIONS

FOR INDIGESTION.

SEE NAME ON LABEL.

HIGHLY RECOMMENDED BY THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.

As WINE, in bottles, at 3s., 5s., 9s.
LOZENGES, at 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d.
GLOBULES, at 2s., 3s 6d., and 6s. 6d.
And as POWDER, in one-ounce bottles, at 4s. each.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS, AND THE MANUFACTURERS,

MORSON and SON,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, RUSSELL SQUARE,
LONDON.

NATURAL MINERAL WATERS.

VICHY.

Property of the French Government.

- CELESTINS—The water of this spring is very agreeable, sparkling, and slightly acidulated. Remedy for complaints of the Kidneys, Gravel, Gout, Diabetes, Rheumatism, &c.
- HAUTERIVE.—This spring contains a greater quantity of carbonic acid, and is especially recommended as a table water.
- GRANDE-GRILLE.—For complaints of the Liver and Biliary Organs, Indigestion, &c.
- HOPITAL.—For Stomach complaints, &c.
- VICHY WATERS are pleasant to the taste, and may be drank pure or mixed with wine or spirits.
- CAUTION—See that the name of the particular water required is on the capsule.

Sold by all Chemists, Wine, and Mineral Merchants.
Price One Shilling per Bottle.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD

LIVER OIL (Registered).

No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.

Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.

"The natural nauseous taste of the Oil is disguised with considerable art. Children take it with avidity."—See Lancet, British Medical Journal, Sanitary Record, Medical Times, Medical Press, Medical Record, &c.

Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half-pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure.

Retail of all Chemists and Druggists, and Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited), Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY

"THE PERFECTION OF WHISKY."
UNRIVALLED FOR "TODDY."

Wholesale of the Sole Proprietors, GREENLEES BROS. 1, Gresham Buildings, E.C. (Distilleries, Argyleshire.)

CHRISTMAS CASES, One Guinea

containing 3 Bottles of Port, 3 Sherry, 1 Gin, 1 Rum 1 Whiskey, 1 Brandy, 1 lb. Tea. All reputed quart bottles warranted pure and genuine. Sent bottles, case, and carriage free, to any Railway Station in England, by the VICTORIA WINE CO., 12, Mark Lane. P.O.O. to W. W. HUGHES.

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—

Universally recommended by the Medical Profession. A pure old spirit, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome. Dr. HASSALL says:—"The samples were soft and mellow to the taste, aromatic and ethereal to the smell. The Whisky must be pronounced to be pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality."

WILLS' "BRISTOL MIXTURE"

MILD AND FRAGRANT.
WILLS' "SMOKING MIXTURE,"
A CHOICE COMBINATION OF "FIRST GROWTHS."

Sold everywhere in One, Two, and Four Ounce Packets, protected by our Name and Trade Mark, W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

GARDNERS' TOUGHENED GLASS and INDESTRUCTIBLE DINNER WARE, the Glass direct from De la Bastie's Manufactory. Wholesale price lists free on application.—GARDNERS', Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

GARDNERS' NEW DINNER SERVICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons:—

The Osborne, in pink or green	£3 5 0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3 13 6
The Bramble, in all colours	4 4 0
The One Thousand and Two	5 5 0
The One Thousand and Two A	5 5 0
The Japanese Bamboo	6 6 0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNER'S, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

MAPPIN and WEBB,

MANUFACTURERS,
MANSION HOUSE BUILDINGS, CITY,
LONDON.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S

SPOONS AND FORKS.

Equal in Finish and Appearance to Sterling Silver.

	Plain		Ornamental
Table Spoons or Forks, pr. doz.	30s. 0d.	40s. 0d.	60s. 0d.
Dessert do. do. do.	24s. 0d.	32s. 0d.	44s. 0d.
Tea do. do.	12s. 0d.	16s. 0d.	28s. 0d.
Salt, Mustard, or Egg, each	2s. 3d.	2s. 0d.	3s. 6d.
Sugar Tongs do.	2s. 6d.	3s 6d.	6s. 0d.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S

ELECTRO-SILVER PLATE.

New Registered Designs, plain or richly ornamental.

THE HIGHEST QUALITY, at Lowest Prices.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES Post Free.

MAPPIN and WEBB,

MANUFACTURERS,
76, 77, and 78, OXFORD STREET, WEST END,
LONDON.

CHUBB'S SAFES and LOCKS.—

128, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, ST. PAUL'S. Communication by Special Private Wire with their West End Branch at 68, St. James's Street, Pall Mall; and Safe Factory, Old Kent Road, S.E. Lock Factory, Wolverhampton. Illustrated Price List sent free.

ENGRAVED GLASS.

Latest Novelties, Unique Designs.
RETIRING FROM BUSINESS.
LOW PRICES, CHRISTMAS SEASON.
NAYLOR & CO.,

7, PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W., Beg to announce that the whole of their carefully-assorted stock of table-glass and flower-stands is now offered at a reduction of 20 per cent. to effect clearance before Christmas.

GENUINE SALE.
SHOW ROOMS:
7, PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

DUPLEX TABLE LAMP, with instantaneous extinguisher.

—The Lamp of the Season for petroleum or rock oil, gives an intense, pure, and beautiful light, equal to that of 24 sperm candles, at a cost of about one farthing per hour. Deane and Co have a large stock on sale in Crystal, China, Ormoulu, and Bronzes. Prices from 17s. 6d. to £6 6s.

Deane and Co.'s Illustrated Priced List for 1877 post free.
DEANE and CO., 46, King William St., London Bridge.

HOLY BAZIL.—PIESSE and LUBIN.

—This is a most rare perfume distilled from the HOLY BAZIL FLOWER OF HINDU (Ocymum sanctum), so remarkable for its unique fragrance. Sold in bottles, 2s. 6d., 5s., and 10s. 6d. each, at the Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London, and by their agents in all parts of the world.

COLD CREAM OF ROSES.—PIESSE

and LUBIN prepare this exquisite COSMETIC with the greatest care, fresh daily, in jars, 1s.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London.

PIESSE and LUBIN.—HOLY BAZIL,

—Soap perfumed with HOLY BAZIL, 2s. 6d. HOLY BAZIL Sachet, 1s. 6d. HOLY BAZIL Scented Toilet Powder, 2s. HOLY BAZIL in all compounds, cosmetiques, hair dressings, pomades, &c.—Royal Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London, W. Price Lists free.

CONSUMPTION! CONSUMPTION!

SILPHIUM CYRENAICUM (the celebrated plant of the Ancients) has now been acknowledged by the principal celebrities of the French faculty to be the only cure for Consumption, and all affections of the Pulmonary Organs, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c., &c. Its effect is magical, and the cure certain. To be obtained from all Chemists, with pamphlets, full instructions, &c. Wholesale from London Patent Medicine houses.

DINNEFORD'S FLUID MAGNESIA

The best Remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEADACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION; and safest aperient for delicate constitutions, ladies, and children. Of all Chemists.

THOMPSON AND CAPPER'S

DENTIFRICE WATER

Arrests Decay in the Teeth and Sweetens the Breath. 55, Bold Street, Liverpool. Sold in 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. Bottles, by all Chemists.

DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC

WAFERS instantly relieve and rapidly cure asthma, consumption, bronchitis, coughs, colds, shortness of breath, phlegm, pains in the chest, rheumatism, and taste pleasantly. Sold at 1s. 1½d.

TOOTH-ACHE.

INSTANT CURE.
FORMS A STOPPING.
SAVES THE TOOTH.

J. Hounsell, Esq., Surgeon, Bridport, writes:—"I consider Bunter's Nervine a specific for Toothache. Very severe cases under my care have found instantaneous and permanent relief."

Of all chemists, at 1s. 1½d. per packet.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO.

Has been proved, by its unparalleled success of seventy years, to be the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and Fragrant Breath, being perfectly free from all deleterious and acid compounds which give a temporary whiteness to the teeth, but ultimately ruin the enamel. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers everywhere. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE.—A neat

Perfume Case, registered by E. RIMMEL, of 96, Strand, London, on sale (price 1s.), at the principal Perfumery Stores produces, by two or three applications, the beautiful golden colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. of all perfumers and chymists. Wholesale, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, 5, Great Marlborough Street, W., and 93 and 95, City Road, E.C., London; Pinaud 44, Meyer, Boul. de Strasbourg, 37, Paris; 32, Graben, Vienna; and Rue des Longs Chariots, Brussels.

GOLDEN HAIR.—Robare's Aureoline

NUDA VERITAS.—Grey Hair restored

by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials post free.—R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

SUNNY RAYS for GOLDEN HAIR, a few applications of which produce the most charming golden tint, varying in brightness by its frequency of use. It is perfectly harmless both to health and hair; an occasional use has a lovely effect upon any shade of brown, without producing a perceptible change. In bottles at 5s 6d., per post four extra stamps.—CHARLES BOND, 239, Oxford Street, W.

THROAT IRRITATION.

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES

Sold only in Boxes, 6d. and 1s. labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS,
48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SPECIALITIES in PIANOFORTES.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S STUDENT'S PIANOFORTE. Compass 5 Octaves, 15 gs., or £1 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SCHOOL PIANINOS. From Canadian Walnut, 20 gs., or 2 gs. per qr. on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT PIANINOS, 30 gs., or £3 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR PIANINO, 35 gs., or £3 10s per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MODEL PIANETTE, 35 gs., or £3 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH MODEL, 40 gs., or £4 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S COLONIAL MODEL, 45 gs., or £4 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S FOREIGN MODEL, 50 gs., or £5 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH OBLIQUE, 55 gs., or £5 10s per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S OBLIQUE GRAND, 70 gs., or £7 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IRON-FRAMED OBLIQUE, 90 gs., or £9 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MIGNON IRON GRAND, 80 gs., or £8 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR IRON GRAND, 110 guineas, or £11 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

UPWARDS of ONE HUNDRED VARIETIES on VIEW.

MAY BE HAD OF ALL PIANO-FORTE DEALERS throughout the United Kingdom.

SHOW-ROOMS, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

STEAM FACTORY, CHALK FARM ROAD, N.W.

MUSICAL PRESENTS FOR THE NEW YEAR.—High-class Music for Amateurs, Students, and others.—To be had, gratis and post free, a LIST of 400 CLASSICAL WORKS, bound, at greatly reduced prices.—Published only by ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

THE HOLY FAMILY. Sacred Melo-dies. Arranged by W. H. CALLCOTT for the Pianoforte. Solos complete in 12 books, 5s. each; duets, 6s. each; ad lib accompaniments for flute, violin, and violoncello, 1s. each. Each book free at half-price in stamps. N.B.—This work may also be had in 4 vols. as solos. Cloth, gilt edges. Price 12s. each net.

London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO.

EASY MUSIC. Arranged and Fingered for the Pianoforte.

Home Treasures. 25 Nos. Wm. Smallwood. 2s. 6d. each. 12 as Duets. 3s. each.

Little Fancies. 25 popular themes. Michael Watson. 1s. each. 12 as Duets. 1s. each.

Blossoms of Opera. 25 Nos. J. Andre. 1s. each.

Little Buds. 25 Nos. Wm. Smallwood. 1s. each. 12 as Duets. 1s. each.

Operatic Leaflets. 25 Nos. G. F. West. 2s. 6d. each. 12 as Duets. 3s. each.

Rosebuds: Twelve Progressive Lessons on Popular Melodies. By George Frederick West. 1s. each.

London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO.

HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUC-TIONS for the PIANOFORTE. 1,151st Edition.—Sixty-eight pages, 4s.; post free 28 stamps. The number of editions this work has passed through sufficiently guarantees its well-deserved and world-wide popularity.

Also HAMILTON'S DICTIONARY of 3,500 MUSICAL TERMS. 12 stamps. 119th Edition, in cloth, 1s. 6d.

CLARKE'S CATECHISM of the RUDI-MENTS OF MUSIC. 196th Edition. Free by post 12 stamps, in cloth 1s. 6d. "Every child learning music should have this book."—Morning Chronicle.

QUESTIONS RELATING to the THEORY of MUSIC. By GEO. F. WEST. 19th Edition, 1s.; free by post, 12 stamps.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington St.

DANCE MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

HAMMOND'S MUSIC PORTFOLIO.

Price 1s each number. Post free 13 stamps.

Violin and Cornet Accompaniments to each number, 6d. each.

No. 1 CONTAINS:

Brise des Nuits Waltzes	Lamothe.
Hydropaten Waltzes	Gung'l.
Manuelita Waltzes	Waldteufel.
Autograph Waltzes	Strauss.
St. David's Quadrille	Dan Godfrey.
Bruder Lustig Galop	Budik.

CONTENTS OF No. 2

Le Premier Baiser Waltzes	Lamothe.
Venus Reigen Waltzes	Gung'l.
Den Lieben Langen Tag Waltzes	Rudel.
Deutsche Herzen Waltzes	Strauss.
The 'Varsity Lancers	D'Egville.
The Pet Schottische	Bertrand.

CONTENTS OF No. 3.

SIX WALTZES BY JOSEPH GUNG'L.

Soldaten Lieder	Waltzes.
Gräfenberger	Waltzes.
Daheim!	Waltzes.
Jungherren Tänze	Waltzes.
Fantasiebilder	Waltzes.
Mein schönster Tag in Berlin	Waltzes.

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Frühlingslieder Waltzes	Gung'l.
Lille Waltzes	Strauss.
Le Tout du monde Waltzes	Metra.
La Fiancée Waltz	Lamothe.
Hochzeit (Wedding) Quadrille	Strauss.
Pergola Polka	Marie.

A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, London, W.

NEW WALTZES by OTTO MULLER —Composer of the famous Geliebt und Verloren (Loved and Lost). In making the present announcement DUFF and STEWART beg to point to the unprecedented success, and (for the few months it has been published) unparalleled sale of Geliebt und Verloren, and they now have great pleasure in submitting for public approval Otto Muller's Two New Sets of Waltzes,

ZART UND TREU (Tender and True), and VERLOBT (Betrothed).

Post free 2s. each.—DUFF and STEWART, 157, Oxford St.

A PRETTY PRESENT for CHILDREN —WATCHING FOR PA. Juvenile Quadrille on popular melodies sung by Christy's Minstrels (beautifully illustrated), arranged without octaves and fingered throughout by JULES ROCHARD. Post free 2s.

DUFF and STEWART, 157, Oxford Street

NEW and POPULAR WALTZES, performed at Arditi's Concert, Covent Garden Theatre.

Loved and Lost. Otto Muller.
Reve d'Amour. G. Lamothe.
Juliette. G. Lamothe.
The Last Kiss. Otto Muller.
Fontainebleau. G. Lamothe.

Post free 2s. each.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford St., and all Musicsellers.

THE MUSICAL TIMES. Price 3d. The Largest and Best Musical Journal (64 Pages).

THE MUSICAL TIMES for December contains:—Holiday Music, by H. C. Lunn; The Great Composers, Sketched by Themselves; Mozart, by J. Bennett (continued); History of Music Printing, by Dr. Chrysander (concluded); Borrowed Plumes; Newcastle Concerts; Glasgow Choral Union; Edinburgh Choral Union; Monday Popular, Crystal Palace, and other Concerts; Her Majesty's Opera; Opera-Comique; Reviews; Foreign and Country News; Part Song, "In Memoriam Therese Titiens," by J. L. Roeckel; and Christmas Carol, "Hollyberries," by W. J. Westbrook. Postage free 4d. Annual subscription 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for December contains Part Song, "In Memoriam, Therese Titiens," by J. L. Roeckel, and Christmas Carol, "Hollyberries," by W. J. Westbrook. Music separately, 1½d.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS, NEW AND OLD. Words edited by Rev. H. R. BRAMLEY, M.A.; Music edited by Dr. STAINER. Beautifully illustrated and elegantly bound, gilt edges, 7s. 6d. List of cheaper editions may be had on application.

CAROLS FOR CHRISTMASTIDE. Set to Music for Little Singers by GEORGE FOX. With Illustrated Title and Cover, 2s. 6d.

THE SUNLIGHT OF SONG. A Collection of Sacred and Moral Songs, with Original Music by the most eminent English Composers. Beautifully illustrated and elegantly bound, 10s. 6d.

SACRED SONGS FOR LITTLE SINGERS. Words by FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL; Music composed and arranged by ALBERTO RANDEGGER. Illustrated and elegantly bound, gilt edges, 5s.

NATIONAL NURSERY RHYMES AND SONGS. Set to Music by J. W. ELLIOTT. With 65 Illustrations. Elegantly bound, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

MENDELSSOHN'S LIEDER OHNE WORTE. 8 Books, 4s.

MENDELSSOHN'S LIEDER OHNE WORTE. The best and only Complete Edition, containing Books 7 and 8. With portrait of Composer. Elegantly bound, gilt edges, folio size, 12s.; octavo paper, 4s.; cloth gilt, 6s.

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS. New and complete Edition. Edited and fingered by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt edges, folio size, 21s.; octavo, paper, 5s.; cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.

MOZART'S SONATAS. New and Complete Edition. Edited and Fingered by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt edges, folio size, 18s.

SCHUMANN'S VOCAL ALBUM. Containing 30 of his most celebrated Songs. Handsomely bound, gilt edges, octavo size, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.

SCHUMANN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM (Op. 68 and Op. 15). New Edition, containing 13 additional pieces (56 pieces in all). Handsomely bound, gilt edges, octavo size, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.

GERMAN VOLKSLIEDER ALBUM. Containing 40 Songs, with the original German Words, and an English Version by JOHN OXENFORD. Handsomely bound, gilt edges, octavo size, 4s. 6d.; paper covers, 2s. 6d.

RUBINSTEIN'S EIGHTEEN TWO-PART SONGS. German and English Words. Paper covers, 2s. 6d.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S MUSIC Primers. Edited by Dr. STAINER. The following are now ready:—

Third Edition.

THE PIANOFORTE PRIMER. By ERNST PAUER. Price 2s.

Second Edition.

THE ORGAN PRIMER. By Dr. STAINER. Price 2s.

Second Edition.

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC PRIMER. By W. H. CUMMINGS. Price 1s.

Second Edition.

THE ELEMENTS OF THE BEAU-TIFUL IN MUSIC. By ERNST PAUER. Price 1s. (Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.)

NEW SONG BY JOSEPH BARNBY.

ELIZABETH'S SONG, from "The Saint's Tragedy," by the Rev. CHARLES KINGSLEY. Set to Music by JOSEPH BARNBY. 4s.

SIXTY HARMONIUM VOLUN-TARIES. Arranged by J. W. ELLIOTT. 1s.

MENDELSSOHN'S ELIJAH.—Arranged for the Pianoforte by BERTHOLD TOURS. Folio size, 5s.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH.—Arranged for the Pianoforte by BERTHOLD TOURS. Folio size, 5s.

LONDON: NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.,
1, Berners Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C.

NEW MUSIC by Mary Travers (post free)

Faithful	1s. 6d. net.
It Was Nothing But a Rose, E flat, F, A flat	2s. 0d. net.
Wishing, E flat, F	1s. 6d. net.
Coquette, Morceau de Salon	1s. 6d. net.
Impromptu (in D)	2s. 0d. net.
Original Air, with Variations (in A)	1s. 6d. net.

ASHDOWN and HOLLOWAY, 23, Spring St., Hyde Park, W.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.

A GREAT SECRET. Words by F. E. Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Trevor.

"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News.

Post free 24 stamps.
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row.

STOLEN KISSES WALTZ. By Hans WALDENFELDT. Free, 2s.—WOOD and CO., 3, Great Marlborough Street. "Sweetly pretty, universally admired, and, having established itself as one of the most popular waltzes of the season, no programme will be complete without it."

ROBERT STANLEY'S NEW SONGS.

DEAR LITTLE FLOWERS.
WHEN LOVE'S GLOW HATH GONE BY.
EASTING.
Price 2s. each net.
J. B. CRAMER and CO., 201, Regent Street.

ESTEY AMERICAN ORGANS, cheapest and best for quality, &c. LOW PRICES FOR CASH, or by monthly payments (in London and Suburbs only). Lists on application.—J. A. MILLS, 60, Moorgate Street, E.C.

MUSICAL-BOX Depot, 56, Cheapside, London, E.C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price £4 to £120. Snuff-Boxes, 18s. to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and McCULLOCH, as above.

BUTLER'S MUSICAL INSTRU-MENTS.—Violins, Concertinas, Harmoniums, Flutes, Clarionets, Flageolets, Guitars, Zithers, Banjoes, Accordions, Flutinas, Cornets, Saxhorns, Drums, Fifes, and Musical Instruments of every description. Largest assortment in the kingdom at BUTLER'S MANUFACTORY, 29, Haymarket, London.—Illustrated catalogue, 50 pages, post free.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO (Co-operative price for cash). Seven octaves, strong, sound, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free. Drawings gratis on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., Portman Sq.

PIANOS, £16—Pianos, £18—Pianos, £20 —GREAT SALE of PIANOS returned from Hire. Full compass, 7 octaves. In excellent condition, equal to new, at half the original prices. Packed free and forwarded to any part of the kingdom. Descriptive lists post free on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., London, W.

EBONY and GOLD PIANOS, 28 Guineas, 35 Guineas, and 45 Guineas.—These charming and elegant Pianos, with ormolu embellishments, elaborately carved work, repetition action, and every recent improvement, may now be obtained at the above low prices for cash, or on the three years' system at one guinea per month. The Illustrated Catalogue gratis and post free.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

PIANO, £35 (Civil Service cash price).—Trichord Drawing Room Model, repetition action, grand, rich, full tone, handsome Italian walnut-wood case, elaborately carved fretwork front, and cabriole truss legs. The usual price charged for this instrument is 50 guineas.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

BOOSEY and CO.'S CHRISTMAS PRESENTS,

all handsomely bound in cloth, gilt edges.

THE ILLUSTRATED SONGS OF SCOTLAND (190 songs with twelve full-page Illustrations) 10s. 6d.
BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS. Edited by W. Dorrell. 10s. 6d.
MENDELSSOHN'S SONGS WITHOUT WORDS. 4s.
SCHUMANN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM. 4s.
CHOPIN'S WALTZES, NOCTURNES, and MAZURKAS. 4s.
STRAUSS' WALTZ ALBUM (18 sets). 4s.

THE ROYAL SONG BOOKS.

RUBINSTEIN'S 50 SONGS. 4s.
RUBINSTEIN'S 18 VOCAL DUETS. 4s.
BEETHOVEN'S 76 SONGS. 4s.
MENDELSSOHN'S 60 Songs. 4s.
SCHUMANN'S 75 SONGS. 4s.
THE SONGS OF GERMANY. 4s.

The above have all German and English words.

THE SONGS OF ENGLAND. 4s.
THE SONGS OF SCOTLAND. 4s.
THE SONGS OF IRELAND. 4s.
THE SONGS OF WALES. 4s.

The above form a complete collection of National Songs.

SACRED SONGS, ANCIENT and MODERN. 4s.
HUMOROUS SONGS. 4s.
CHOICE DUETS FOR LADIES' VOICES. 4s.

All the 4s. volumes can be had in paper covers, 2s. 6d. each.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

BOOSEY and CO.'S NEW SONGS.

AT LAST. By COWEN. Sung by ANNA WILLIAMS.

THE BETTER LAND. By COWEN. Sung by ANTOINETTE STERLING.

THE OLD SAILOR WIFE. By MOLLOY. Sung by ANTOINETTE STERLING.

THE TAR'S FAREWELL. By STEPHEN ADAMS. Sung by SANTLEY.

THE KING'S HIGHWAY. By Molloy. Sung by FEDERICI and MAYBRICK.

Price 2s. each, net.—BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

NANCY LEE WALTZ. On the Cele-brated Song. The Waltz of the Season. Price 2s. net. Solo and Duet; Septet, 1s.; Orchestra, 2s.

NANCY LEE GALOP. By Frewin. On Adams' Popular Ballad. 2s. net. [This day.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S PIANOFORTE ROOMS.

GRAND and UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES,
by all the great makers, both English and Foreign,
for SALE or HIRE,
subject to the largest discount obtainable in London.
Pianettes, from £20. Short Grands, from £40.
Sole Address, 295, Regent Street.

PRATTEN' PERFECTED FLUTES, Cylinder and Cone, commencing at 4 gs. The Siccama Flute and the Boehm Old and New System of Fingering. Particulars of all these Instruments upon application to the Manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, W.

BOOSEY and CO.'S BRASS INSTRU-MENTS FOR AMATEURS.

THE DISTIN CORNET, from £3 10s.
THE DISTIN CELEBRATED LIGHT VALVE CORNETS, 7 and 9 guineas, are the best Cornets manufactured.
THE DISTIN MINIATURE CORNET-A-PISTONS, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN BALLAD HORN in C, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN DRAG AND POST HORNS AND BAND INSTRUMENTS at all prices.
THE DISTIN MONTHLY BRASS BAND JOURNAL, 10s. 6d. per annum.

The above Instruments were exhibited by Boosey and Co. at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and were awarded a Prize Medal "For power and good quality of tone, fine workmanship." Estimates for Bands of all sizes, also illustrations and prices, to be had of the sole manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

ALLEGRETTO in F Minor, and SCHERZO in B Flat Major. By Mrs. MARWOOD TUCKER, dedicated to her mother, Lady Mildred Beresford Hope. Price 4s.—STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, and CO., 84, New Bond Street, London.

BATH'S "MUSICAL MUSEUM" for THE HARMONIUM. 1s. each Book; by post, 14 stamps.

BOOK I., containing twenty-six Sacred Melodies, selected and arranged by W. Layland.

BOOK II., containing eighteen Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by A. S. Holloway.

BOOK III., containing twenty Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by Dr. Spark.

BOOK IV., containing twenty-two popular pieces (sacred and classical), selected and arranged by Michael Watson.

BOOK V., containing eighteen Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by J. E. Webster.

"Bath's Musical Museum for the Harmonium."

BOOK IV., selected and arranged by Michael Watson, is as cheap a shillingsworth as can be met with in the musical world. It contains twenty-two pieces for that instrument, including a popular "Volkslied," by Mendelssohn, a "Rondo," by Dussek, a "Bourée" and Gavotte, by Bach—in fact, most of our great ancient and modern composers have contributed a share to this excellent little work.—Vide Graphic, Oct. 27.
J. BATH, 40, Great Marlborough Street, W.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867.

BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.

Central Depot for the British Empire: 10, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S Practical Piano-FORTE SCHOOL.

Section 1. No. 1. PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

MUSICAL LIBRARY SERIES.

Edited and carefully fingered, with Metronome marks by CHARLES HALLÉ.
58 Numbers now ready.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

CHARLES HALLÉS New Edition of POPULAR WORKS.

Carefully fingered and revised with Metronome marks.

For list of pieces already published Catalogues will be forwarded post free on application to FORSYTH BROTHERS, 272a, Regent Circus, Oxford St., London; Cross Street, South King Street, Manchester.

MUSICAL BOXES, by Nicole Freres. —KEITH, PROWSE, and CO., direct Importers, have the largest Stock of really fine BOXES in Europe, £3 to £300. The new rooms devoted to the display of these instruments are now ready. Self-acting and Barrel Pianoforte, 18 to 1,200 gs.

FLUTES.—NEW MODEL, for beauty of tone unsurpassed, four guineas and seven guineas; Rudall's Prize medal Flutes, new and second-hand. A great variety of second-hand Flutes, one guinea to 25 guineas, of KEITH, PROWSE, and CO.'s Manufactory, 48, Cheapside.

BANJOES.—CHEAPSIDE MODEL Is best. Covered back, machine head, &c., five guineas, including light case, £6. Other models one to twelve guineas. Self-instructing book, with airs, songs, &c., 6s. net.—KEITH, PROWSE, and CO., Manufacturers, 48, Cheapside.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE

PULVERMACHER'S "GALVANISM, NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF EXHAUSTED VITAL ENERGY."

In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Bands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post free for three stamps, on application to

J. L. PULVERMACHER'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 194, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—CRETONNES. —OETZMANN and CO. beg to announce that they have now received all their New Designs in FRENCH CRETONNES for the present Season, amongst which are some beautiful specimens of artistic design and colourings. An early inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67 to 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
OETZMANN & CO.
67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,
HAMPSTEAD ROAD,
NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZ-MANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PRE-MISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO. are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.

PAINTINGS, OLEOS, CHROMOS, PHOTOS, and Engravings; a choice assortment in handsome frames. The paintings are by well-known artists, and the name guaranteed. Also, a large assortment of Bronzes, Statuettes, Vases, Clocks, Antique Furniture, and Artistic Furnishing Items. A catalogue of art department post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

CABINET and UPHOLSTERY DE-PARTMENT.—Best Plate Chimney Glasses, in double gilt frames, elegant pattern, large size, 2 guineas; magnificent ditto, from 5 to 20 guineas; handsome Walnut Cheffoniers, shaped front, and richly carved mountings, 4ft., 3½ guineas; noble Mahogany Sideboards, 5ft., 6 guineas; 6ft., from 8 guineas upwards; Easy Chairs, from 14s. 9d. upwards; Drawing and Dining Room Chairs, from 10s. 6d. each.—OETZMANN and CO.

STANLEY DINING-ROOM SUITE In solid carved Spanish Mahogany, upholstered in best marone leather, comprising a noble couch, two easy chairs, and six chairs. Price 14 guineas. Quality guaranteed. A variety of other patterns on show, from 8 guineas upwards. Massive mahogany telescope dining tables, 8 ft. by 4 ft., patent metallic screw, £6 15s.—OETZMANN and CO.

DRAWING-ROOM SUITES.—OETZ-MANN and CO.—Elegant Drawing Room Suite, richly carved Italian walnut-wood, upholstered very soft and comfortable, in best rep, consisting of a Couch, two Easy Chairs, and six Chairs, price 15 guineas; ditto, very handsome design, upholstered in rich Pekinade, made and finished in superior style, 20 guineas; ditto, very elegant design, richly upholstered in finest satin, and finished in the best possible manner, 33 guineas; also a variety of other Drawing-Room Suites, in Black and Gold, Early English, and other designs.

LODGINGS.—Extra Bed to accommo-date Visitors. A strong IRON FOLDING BEDSTEAD, 6 ft. long by 2 ft. 6 in. wide, with a wool mattress, bolster, and pillow, complete for 21s. Same items, 3 ft. wide, 25s. complete. Sent carefully packed; forms a portable package. Also, to suit the above, 2 white calico sheets, 1 ditto bolster-case, 1 pillow-case, 3 white Witney blankets, and 1 counterpane, for 28s. 6d. the set. Iron Easy-Chair Bedstead, 6 ft. by 2 ft., with cushions forming the mattress, price complete, 51s.—Address order to OETZMANN and CO.

BEDSTEADS. BEDDING.
BEDSTEADS. BEDDING.
BEDSTEADS. BEDDING.

LINOLEUM.—OETZMANN and CO. —LINOLEUM.—Warm, soft, carpet-like in appearance, and very durable. ALL the NEW PRIZE DESIGNS are NOW in STOCK. A visit of inspection solicited. Prices below those usually charged for this favourite floor covering. The trade supplied.—OETZMANN and CO.

TURKEY CARPETS.—CLEARANCE SALE.—OETZMANN and CO.—A quantity of Turkey, Indian, Persian, Jubbalpore, Massalapatam, Farahan, Khorassan, Serabend, Koula, Ghiordes, and Kelim Carpets and Rugs, clearing out at greatly reduced prices, ranging from 15s. 9d. to 80 guineas. A reduced Price List, with sizes and description, sent post free on application. Prices will be found much below those usually charged. A quantity of Indian Rugs, 15s. 9d. each; some very handsome ditto, at 35s. to 45s.
OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s 6d. There is nothing sold that can be compared with these for quality and cheapness. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and CLOTHING combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable with the least possible weight, and are of the very best quality. Price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

CRETONNES.—OETZMANN & CO. CRETONNES.—An immense assortment of all the choicest designs in this fashionable material, in every variety of style and colourings: excellent imitations of rare Tapestries, some being exact copies of the finest GOBELIN Tapestry. Prices varying from 9½d. to 4s. 11d. per yard. Patterns sent into the country by stating kind required.

BOMBAY STRIPED CURTAINS.—The cheapest Curtains extant. Effective style, 3 yards long by 46 inches wide, 9s. 9d. per pair; 3½ yards, 11s. 9d.; 4 yards, 13s. 9d. Patterns on application.

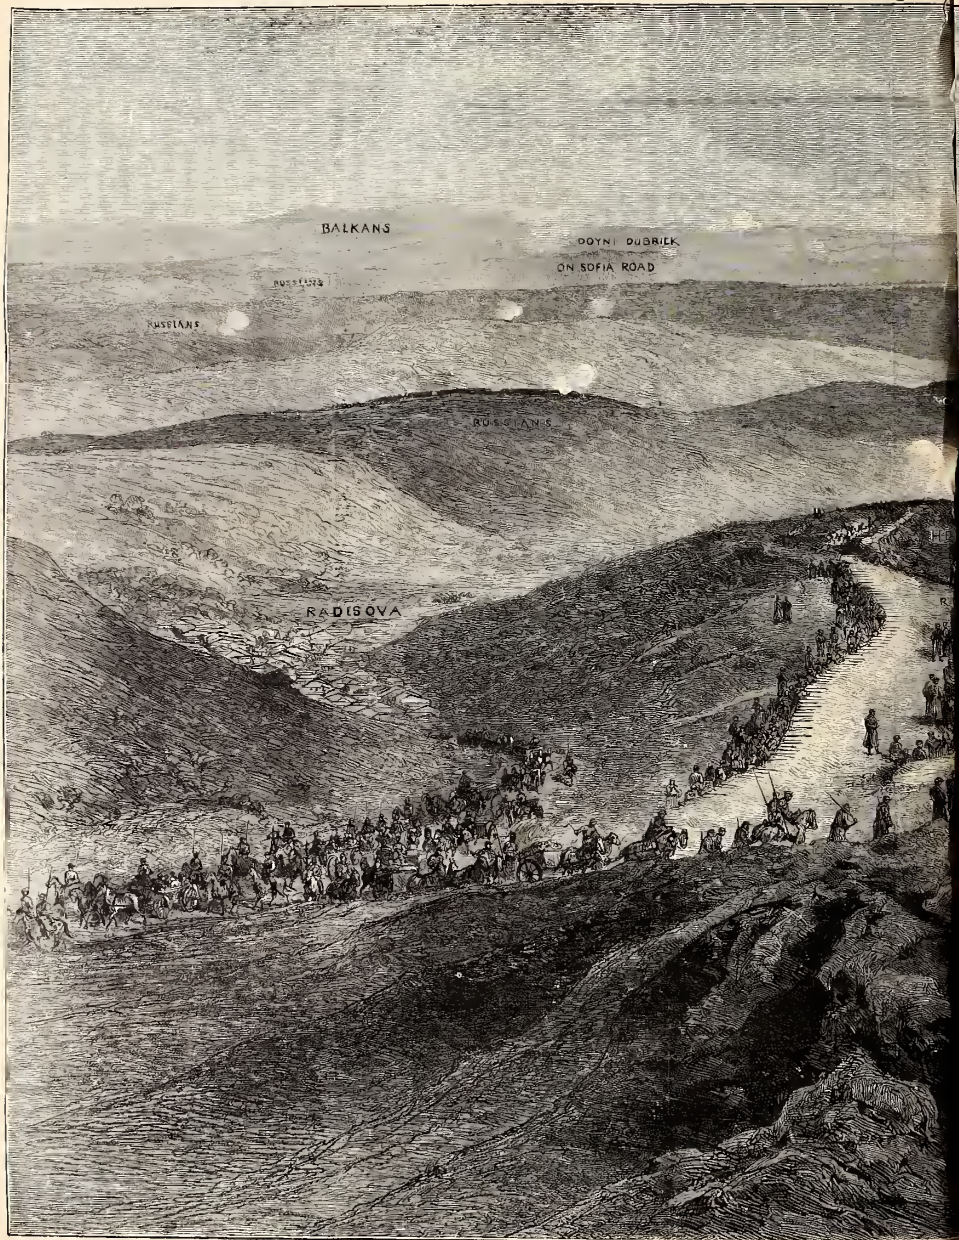
KITCHEN REQUISITES.—OETZ-MANN and CO.'S TEN POUND SET (List No. 5A, page 231, in their "GUIDE TO HOUSE FURNISHING," sent post free on application), includes Tables, Chairs, Clock, &c., with the various culinary utensils and requisites, contains all the most useful articles required in every kitchen, each being of superior quality, and is the most practical selection extant.—OETZMANN and CO.

CLEOPATRA TOILET SERVICE.—OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGN, a beautiful Grecian shape, meets the great desideratum of art manufactures—viz., the shape best adapted for purposes of use required, combined with the most artistic design and decoration. Prices from 10s. 6d. per set. Descriptive Price List post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

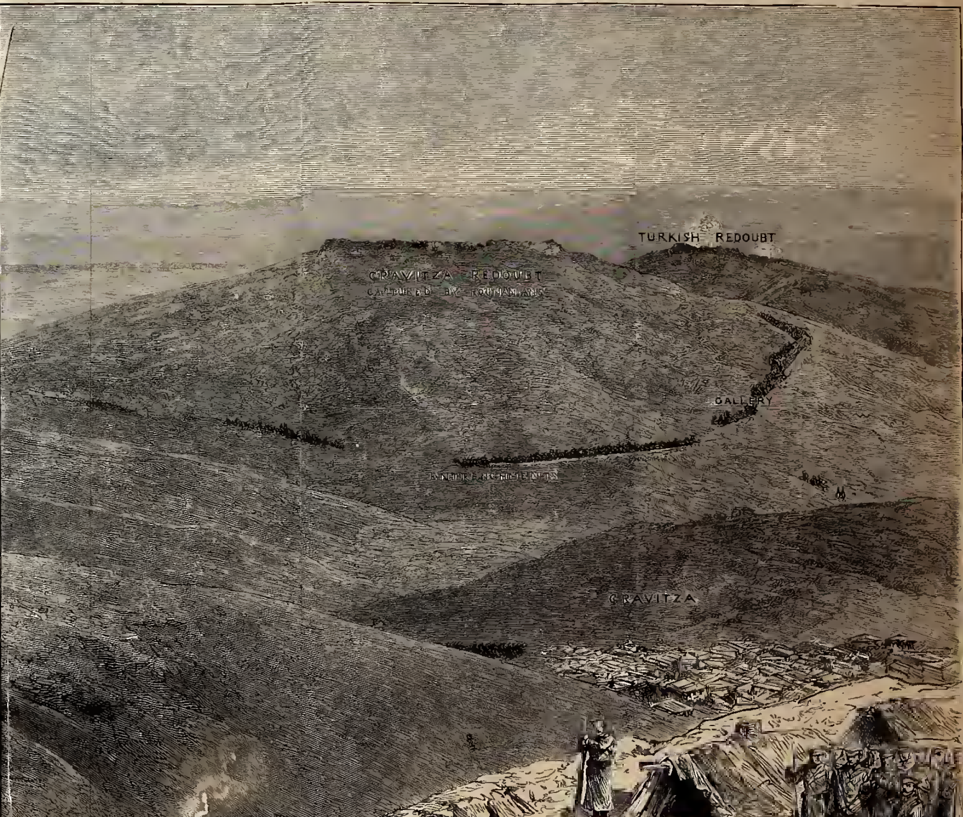
DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.
OETZMANN & CO.
HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by EDWARD JOSEPH MANSFIELD, at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand, both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—DECEMBER 1, 1877.



KIRSHINE REDOUBT RIDGE
BALKANS
DOYNI DUBRICK
ON SOFIA ROAD
RUSSIANS
RUSSIANS
RUSSIANS
RADISOVA
RADICHOVA RIDGE

THE



GRAVITZA RIDGE REDOUBTS
TURKISH REDOUBT
GRAVITZA REDOUBT
CAPTURED BY ROUMANIANS
GALLERY
ENTRENCHMENTS
GRAVITZA
INFANTRY OF GUARD MARCHING TO TRENCHES

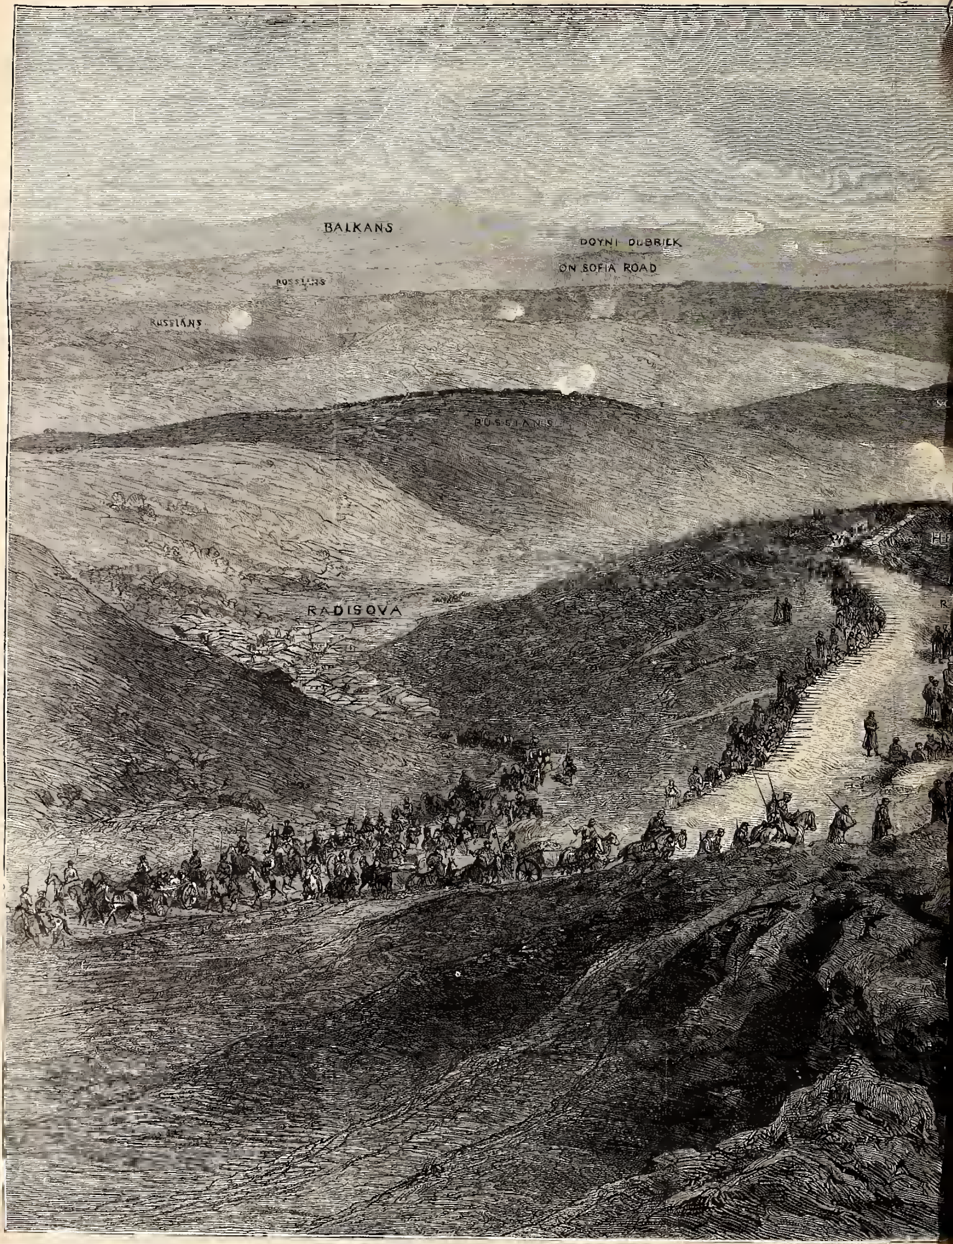
UTH-EAST

LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

SO

LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

KIRSHINE REDOUBT RIDGE

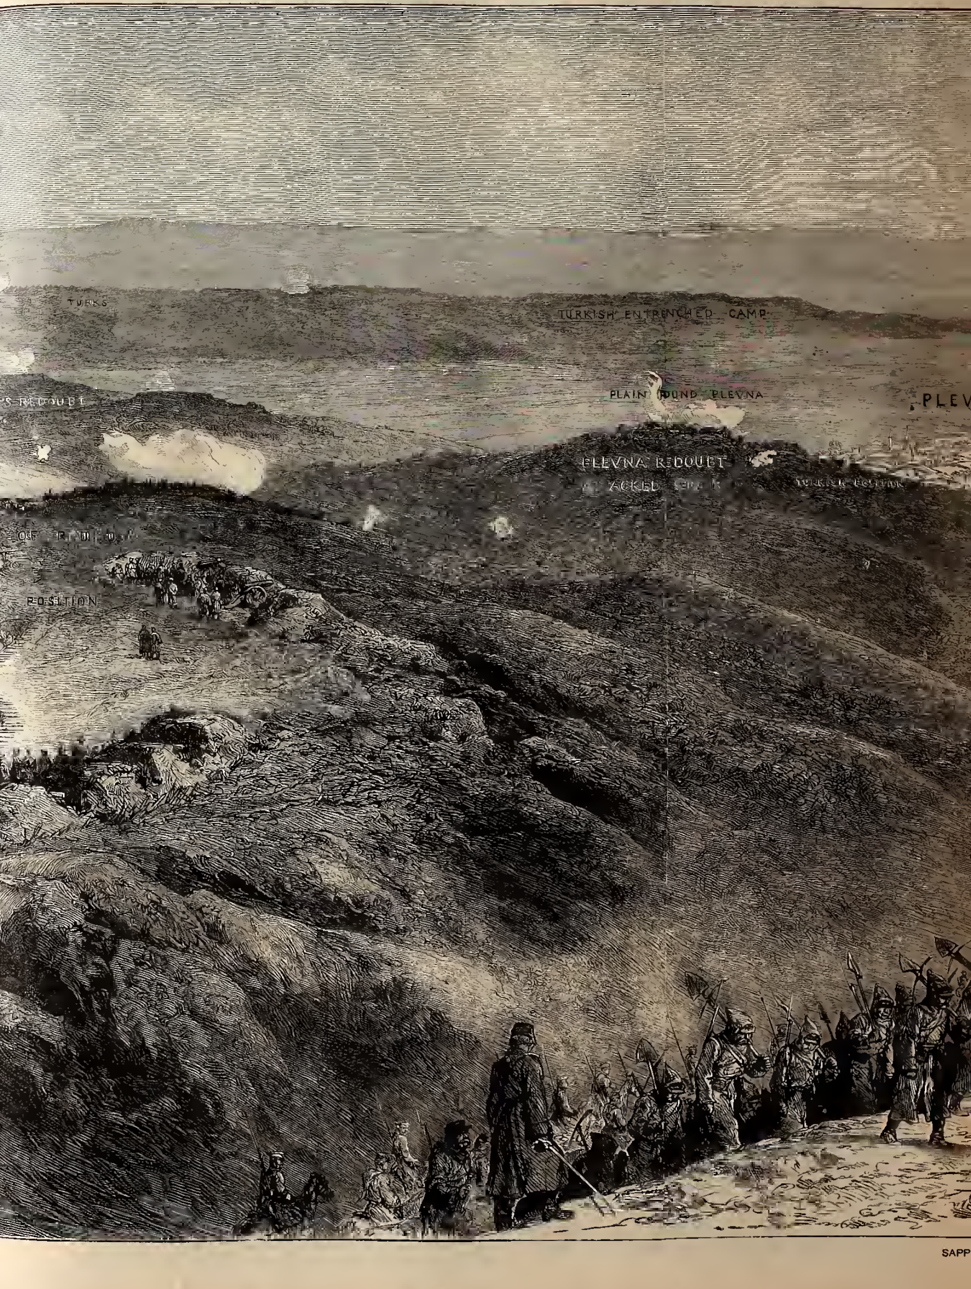


BALKANS
DOYNI DUBRICK
ON SOFIA ROAD
RUSSIANS
RUSSIANS
RUSSIANS
RADISOVA

RADICHOVA RIDGE

THE

PLEVNA REDOUBT



TURKS
TURKISH ENTRENCHED CAMP
PLAIN ROUND PLEVNA
PLEV
S REDOUBT
PLEVNA REDOUBT
ACKED TURKISH POSITION OF POSITION
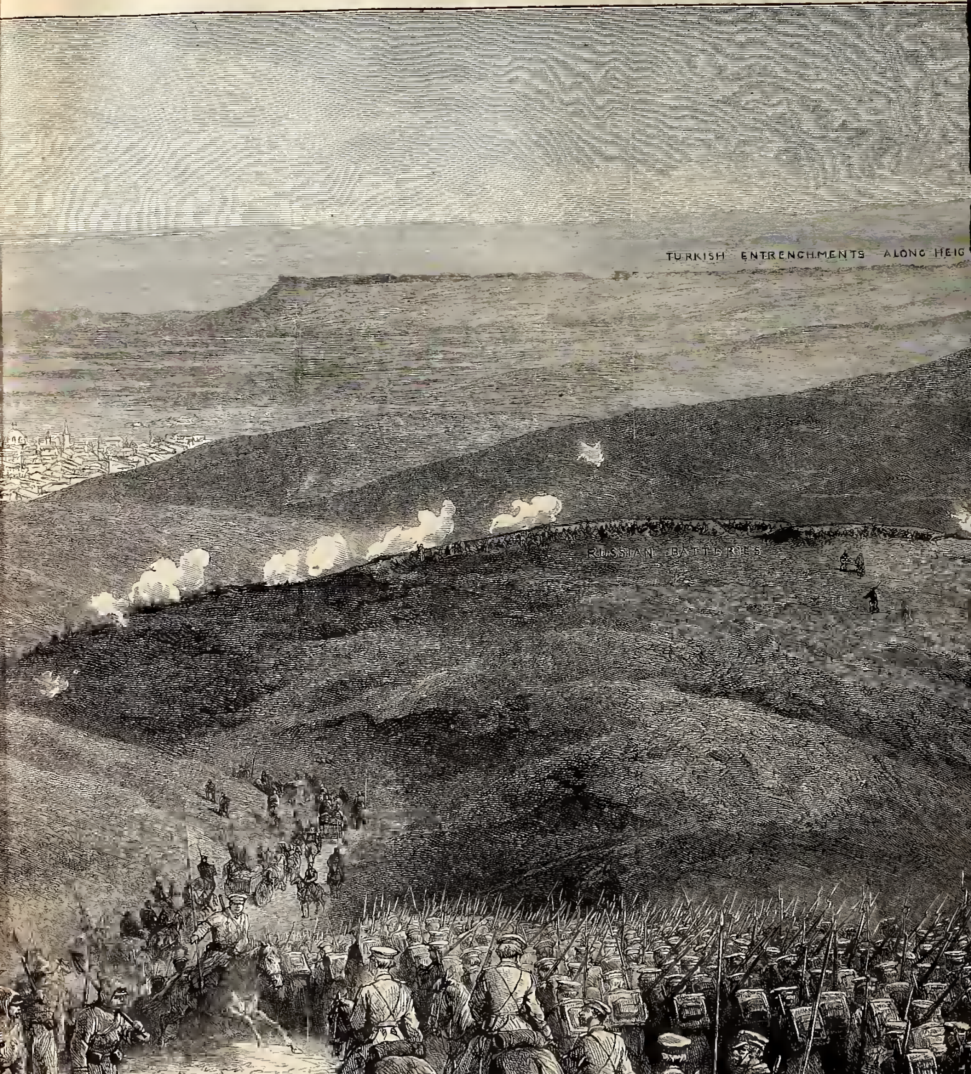
SAPP

EGE OF PLEVNA: BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE

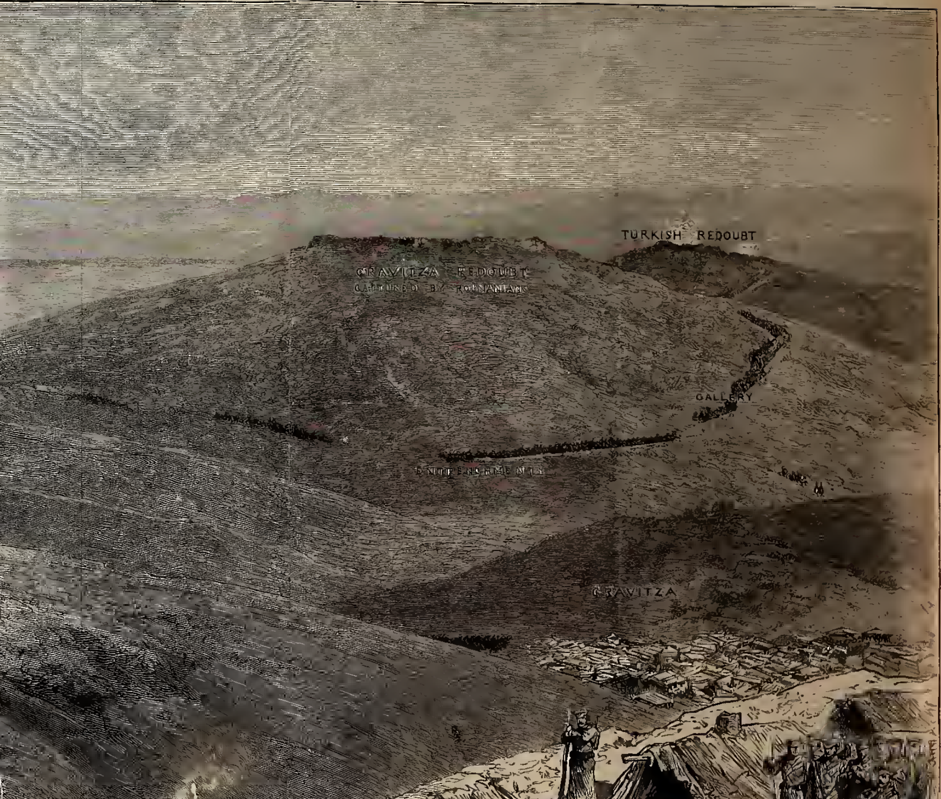


TURKISH ENTRENCHMENTS ALONG HEIG
RUSSIAN BATTERIES

ND MINERS RELIEVED

USSIAN AND TURKISH POSITIONS FROM THE

GRAVITZA RIDGE REDOUBTS



TURKISH REDOUBT
GRAVITZA REDOUBT
CAPTURED BY ROUMANIANS
GALLERY
ENTRENCHMENTS
GRAVITZA

INFANTRY OF GUARD MARCHING TO TRENCHES

UTH-EAST

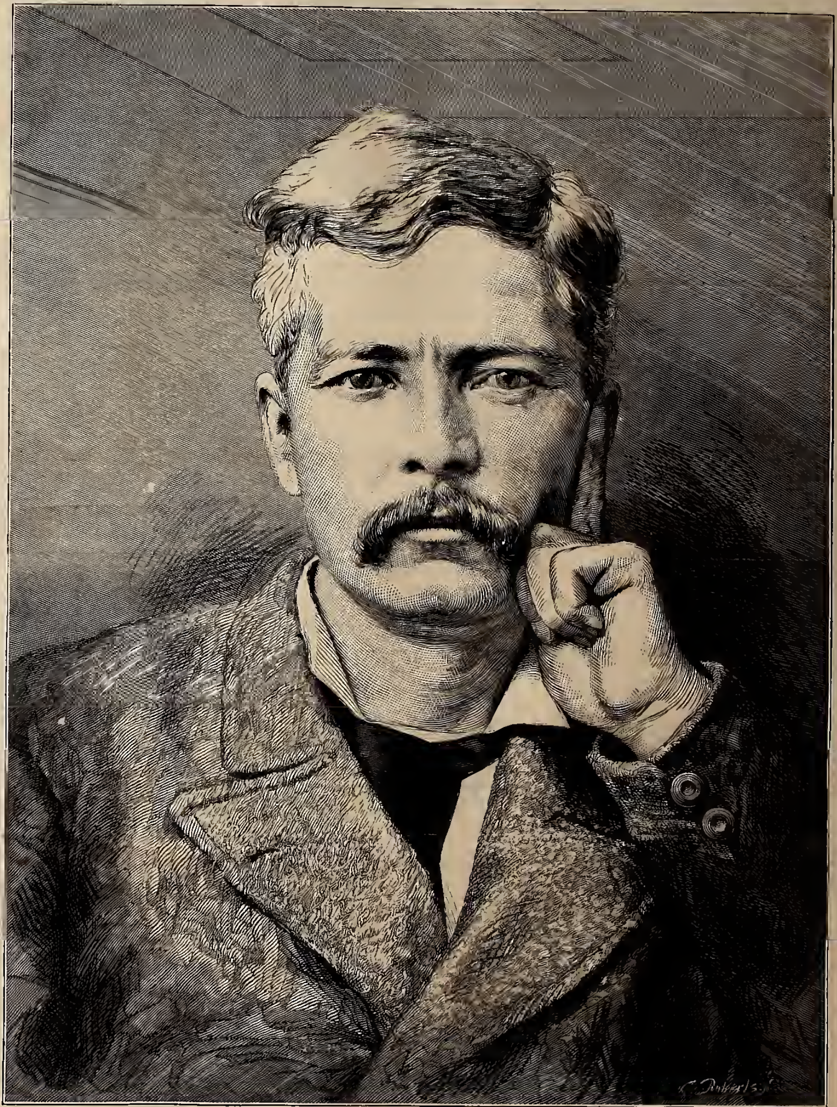
THE GRAPHIC

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

VOL. XVI.—No. 419
Regᵈ at General Post Office as a Newspaper

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1877

PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



MR. H. M. STANLEY, THE AFRICAN EXPLORER

FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN AT CAPETOWN ON HIS ARRIVAL FROM THE WEST COAST

Topics of the Week

The Indecision of England.——In his speech at Bournemouth on Tuesday, Sir Stafford Northcote appealed to the nation to have confidence in the Eastern policy of the Government. There was something in his tone which indicated that the confidence he desires is not, in his opinion, very generally felt; and we believe that this opinion is perfectly correct. There are still, as at the time of the outbreak of war, two currents of sympathy in the country. On the one hand, a considerable party would like nothing better than to see the nation committed to a conflict with Russia; on the other, an even more powerful section is anxious that, if possible, we should keep wholly apart from the struggle. The Ministry has somehow failed to conciliate either side, and the reason is that nobody knows what it really wants. Lord Derby and Sir Stafford Northcote adopt a peaceful tone, and Mr. Cross is equally pacific. On every occasion, however, on which Lord Beaconsfield has expressed an opinion on the subject, he has exhibited a strong preference for the Turks; and rumours are constantly going about to the effect that he makes to influential foreign authorities threatening declarations of which many of his colleagues disapprove. The English people have, therefore, a strange sense of insecurity, and long for nothing so much as for a firm utterance which would enable them to understand at what point their rulers would think it necessary to draw the sword. The result of the present indecision is that all sorts of negotiations go on in Europe without the opinion of Great Britain being in the least taken into account; and it is too probable that a peace may be concluded which will be altogether repugnant to the great mass of Englishmen. A strong utterance of almost any kind would be welcomed by men of every party. The nation would then know what it had to expect, and would speedily find means of letting the Cabinet know whether it might look for general support.

Pio Nono.——If, as Lord Bacon says, even a hale old man is like a tower undermined, it is not likely that a man of nearly eighty-six, whose recovery is pronounced to be hopeless, will long survive. As, therefore, it is highly probable that, before we next address our readers, Pope Pius the Ninth will have passed into another state of existence, we will take the opportunity to speak a few words concerning him at once. Of his successor we will say nothing now,—there will be abundant time for that hereafter. As for Pius the Ninth, friends and foes will alike agree in according to him a prominent place in the long roll of those men who have worn the triple tiara. None of his predecessors exceeded in their term of office the five-and-twenty years traditionally allotted to St. Peter, and although many of them have undergone severe vicissitudes of fortune, it was reserved for Pius the Ninth to see the extensive domains swayed by the Papacy when his reign began shrink before its close to the narrow space covered by the buildings of the Vatican. He began his Pontificate as a Liberal, of apparently so sincere and ardent a type that even Evangelical Protestants hailed his accession, and hoped that, under his auspices, Roman Catholicism was about to undergo a self-imposed reformation. He ends his career as an unyielding Reactionist, regarding the French Republic, the German Empire, and, above all, the Constitutional Kingdom of Italy, as "devices of Satan," chiefly contrived for the purpose of robbing him of his rights divine; while the Church of Rome, instead of moderating those pretensions which are so abhorrent to Protestants, has become more uncompromising than ever. Which party is chiefly to blame for this disastrous change, the Jesuits or the Ultra-Republicans? We say, without hesitation, the Ultra-Republicans. It was they who, on the pettiest provocation, drove Louis Philippe from power, an operation which paved the way for the Siege of Rome, for the Coup d'Etat, and for Sedan; it it was they who by their violence and excesses (witness the murder of Count Rossi) terrified the Pope at a time when the wise and cautious guidance of a Cavour might have led him permanently into the paths of moderate Reform.

The Struggle in France.——Marshal MacMahon used to be considered the most loyal of rulers. Few observers had a high opinion of his talents; but his loyalty, it was thought, could not be questioned. Even his honesty, however, is now open to doubt, for his recent tactics have, to say the least, had a remarkably disagreeable appearance. M. Duclerc, in the course of a conversation with him, noted several of the conditions which he personally thought would be required by the Left, one of them being a demand that the right of dissolution should no longer be vested in the President and the Senate. The Marshal had before this, by conferences with the Presidents of the two Chambers and with M. Dufaure, managed to convey the impression that he was willing to make concessions for the sake of peace. M. Duclerc's note gave him an opportunity of assuming the position of injured innocence. The ungrateful Radicals! There was no possibility of dealing with them, and the sooner the Constitutionalists in the Senate not only broke away from them but voted a dissolution the better for themselves and the country. The Republicans retorted by simply asserting that no one had been commissioned to mention terms of peace in their name. They proceeded also to announce in the most decided terms that until the appointment of a Parliamentary Government they would not vote the supplies. At the present moment, therefore, the two powers in the State confront each other in a spirit of violent hostility; and few politicians venture to predict how the struggle will go in the immediate future. Fortunately, the Constitutional senators appear to have sufficient patriotism to prevent them from sanctioning a dissolution; but it does not, therefore, follow that the Marshal will either accept a Republican Ministry or resign. He is ignorant of the real forces at work in the nation, and may persist in his folly until an attempt at violence becomes almost unavoidable. He would probably have passed from covert threats to action long ago but for his uncertainty as to the temper of the army.

Artificial Pauper Hatching.——It is to be hoped that the spirits of the departed take no cognisance of the affairs of this world, for if they do, the shade of the late Alderman Henry Smith, a citizen of London who died some two hundred and fifty years ago, must have felt very uncomfortable during the past week. All the daily papers have had a fling at him, and now we weeklies are going to follow their example. His testamentary intentions were excellent; he desired to redeem victims of Moslem piracy from slavery, and to preserve indigent members of his own kindred from sinking into utter poverty. But if "liars ought to have good memories," charitable will-makers ought to possess the gift of looking into futurity. In default of this faculty, Time and Fate are apt to play strange pranks with their well-meaning designs. Poor Alderman Smith had no idea of three phenomena which have since happened. First, that before long there would be no more Turkish captives to rescue; secondly, that his legacy would increase in value beyond his wildest dreams; thirdly, that his "poor kindred" in the latter half of the nineteenth century would occasionally be persons demanding from his trustees such absolute necessaries of existence as music-lessons and daily governesses. We will not join in the chorus of lecturing which has been so unanimously administered to Mr. Alderman Smith during the past week, we will merely say that were he suffered to "revisit the glimpses of the moon" he would feel indignant at the bald and literal manner in which his desires have been interpreted, and he would rejoice to find that the Master of the Rolls has decided that after the "Smith's Poor Kin" have got what they are legally entitled to, the surplus funds are to be applied to general charitable uses.

The Northern Weavers.——It is deeply to be regretted that the cotton-spinners of Lancashire, Cheshire, and Derbyshire seem about to enter upon a conflict with their employers which may last for months. We are very far from feeling hostility to trades unions. We believe they have conferred great benefits upon the working class, and that, when no other means of raising wages are possible, they are often justified in having recourse to strikes. But in the present instance the workmen would undoubtedly be injuring their own interests. The cotton trade is notoriously at a low ebb, but that is not caused, as the weavers seem to suppose, by over-production. It is mainly due to the fact that various countries, by prohibitive duties, have been able of late years to develop the trade within their own borders. In this way, although England still supplies a vast area, she has lost many of her old customers; and it is but too probable that she will go on losing them, especially as the dishonest practices of many manufacturers are bringing the English name into disrepute. A strike, therefore, could not result in a rise of wages; it would probably end in their being still further diminished. Moreover, the price of cotton goods would be so much increased that the masters would for once be sure of general sympathy, a consideration which the workers would be extremely foolish to disregard. No one can wonder at their discontent; but, after all, they have to choose between two evils, and the smaller of the two is to accept the conditions forced upon them by the pressure of events. Wide-spread hardship among their ranks at this season of the year would be nothing short of a national calamity.

Water Rates and Cisterns.——The case of a poor woman, who, after paying the rates regularly for twenty years, had her supply cut off by the Southwark and Vauxhall Company for a temporary default, reminds us that this method of enforcing payment is of rather a barbarously primitive character. If a man were unable or unwilling to pay the Lighting or Paving Rate and the parish were to put out the street lamp opposite his gate, and pull up the flagstones in front of his door, people would say that the parish were acting very absurdly. They would be inconveniencing the public for the sake of punishing an individual. The case of the water-supply is not so very dissimilar. Defaulting landlords often have lodgers, and it is hard that they should suffer for their landlords' sins. But, besides this, a "cut-off" household, with no more water than the modicum they can beg, borrow, or steal from their neighbours, very soon become an extremely dirty household, and, as such, a nuisance, and a possible source of disease to their neighbours. And here let us say a word in praise of that sensible doctor, Mr. Hatherly, who, instead of asking for more legislation, or imploring people to agitate for a "constant supply," bids them cleanse their foul cisterns with Condy's Fluid and a stiff birch-broom. We recommend the idea to Paterfamilias; the job (we have often done it ourselves) will give him a good appetite for breakfast, and his household will enjoy better health afterwards.

The City Companies and Technical Schools.——The announcement, made with authority the other day by Professor Huxley, to the effect that the City Companies are about to take definite measures for the establishment of technical colleges, was one of considerable importance. The Companies possess vast funds, and if they were to go on disposing of them in charity and "hospitality" the probability is that the public would by and by insist on some disagreeable inquiries. They could not find a better channel for a considerable portion of their revenues than that which they have now selected, for it has long been obvious that thorough instruction in their respective crafts is what our workmen most urgently need, and the endowment of such institutions is in perfect accord with the objects for which the companies were originally formed. It ought, however, to be remembered that technical schools, taken alone, will not be of essential service. To be in the highest degree useful they ought to form part of a general and well-considered scheme of national education. In Germany a lad does not enter a technical college until he has passed through several grades of schools. He begins at an elementary school, and passes on through a middle school to the so-called Real schools of two ranks. Completely equipped, he then enters upon his technical studies. In this country a boy would usually be expected to go from the Board school to the classes in which he would learn the principles of his particular trade or art; so that it would be unreasonable to expect the same results from him as from his German rival. This aspect of the question has not received sufficient attention, but it is one to which the falling off in our commercial prosperity is likely soon to give great prominence.

Electric Lamp-Lighting.——"He runs like a lamplighter." This venerable simile has ceased to have any significance for the young generation. The lamp-illuminator of our youth, with his brisk step and ladder, has been replaced by an official who moves no faster than other working folk, and who, in lieu of a ladder, carries a thing which looks like an apoplectic fishing-rod. This is a revolutionary age, and even the modern lamplighter is at this moment in as imminent danger of extinction as one of his own lamps at the approach of dawn. A plan for lighting gas-lamps by electricity has now been practically tested for eight months at the Gas Light and Coke Company's station at Fulham, and has been found so successful that before long it will probably be applied to street lighting. The invention, which is by Mr. Fox, is fully described in The Times of Tuesday last, so we will merely observe here regarding it, that the first and last lamps of the electrical circuit by which the lighting is effected are both placed close to the operating station, and if these two lamps are alight, it is certain that all the intermediate lamps on the circuit have also caught the electric spark. It is calculated that by this method of lighting a pound per lamp per annum will be saved, no mean sum in a city like London, which contains a hundred thousand street lamps. The invention will be especially useful during the occasional dense fogs of winter, as the gas can be lighted or put out in a moment, whereas now the gas is often not lighted till the fog is just clearing off, and is left alight when no longer needed.

ON MONDAY NEXT.

"THE GRAPHIC"

CHRISTMAS NUMBER,

THIS YEAR, WILL BE OF EXCEPTIONAL INTEREST.

AN entire novelty has been introduced this year, as a large number of the Engravings have been printed in colours, besides the Presentation Coloured Plate usually issued.

IN addition to this Plate one of the Sheets will also be in Colours, illustrating a Tale called "THE ANIMATED PORTRAIT," so that with this Number there will be

NINE PAGES OF COLOURED ENGRAVINGS, besides many others of seasonable interest, printed in Black and White. The following is a List of the Illustrations.

COLOURED PLATES.

ONCE UPON A TIME.
(PRESENTATION PLATE).

THE CALICO BALL AT GROBY CASTLE (Double-page).
"The dresses had been very carefully designed, and they attracted a great deal of attention, as they afforded a pretty complete panorama of costume from the Middle Ages up to a recent date."

THE CARICATURE.
"The children were absorbed in their occupation, and totally unconscious that anybody was behind them, while Sir Anthony stood frowning and pursing up his lip."

LADY MILDRED AND HER LOVER.
"Very fascinating she looked, for her face wore an especially bright animated expression, as she conversed with the rising young diplomat."

LILIAN'S BIRTHDAY PRESENTS.
"It was a pretty sight to see her arrive, her face grave with excess of joy, and her little arms laden with gifts."

CUPBOARD LOVE.
"Hilda had coaxed several of the deer from the park into the hall to eat these dainties from her hand."

A COTTAGER'S CHRISTMAS HAMPER.
"None received her more gladly than old Mrs. Boscobel, who delighted in a visit from the great folks at the Castle."

A CHRISTMAS HAMPER.

Maria started when she spied
The little winged boy inside. . . .
"You looked for game, sweet girl," cries he,
"Henceforward don't make game of me!"

BLACK AND WHITE ENGRAVINGS.

ANCESTOR RALPH.
"Both the girls distinctly saw the left hand of the Portrait move out of the canvas!"

THE CHRISTMAS GUEST.
"Psyche! Psyche! look!" cried Eros, starting to his feet in joyous excitement.

BLISSON'S LAST ROUND. Six Illustrations.
"He was in the act of lifting the tankard to his lips when I saw his face change suddenly. . . . Leaning against the clock in an attitude of dejection stood the Figure."

THE BARLEY MOW. Ten Illustrations.
"The disturbance outside continued. "My 'usband! My 'usband!" cried the voice; "what have you done with my 'usband?"

A HORRIBLE TALE (Double-Page).

Our blood was chilled, we could not speak;
We could not even raise a shriek;
Each moment seemed a tedious week.

THE TALES are by Mrs. OLIPHANT, ARTHUR LOCKER, T. W. SPEIGHT, and JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

PRICE ONE SHILLING, post free, 1s. 2½d.

OFFICE: 190, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

AMUSEMENTS

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT.
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, SATURDAY,
at THREE and EIGHT.
Fauteuils, 5s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. No Fees.
Doors open at 2.30 for Day Performances, and at 7.15 for the Evening ditto.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.—ONCE IN A CENTURY, AT THE SEASIDE, and NO. 204. Every Evening, except Thursday and Saturday, at 8; every Thursday and Saturday morning, at 3. Admission, 1s., 2s.; Stalls, 3s. and 5s.—ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place, Oxford Circus.

EVANS'S, COVENT GARDEN. — NOTICE. — These celebrated SUPPER ROOMS are now open for the reception of Ladies. EVANS'S CHOIR OF BOYS, specially trained by and under the direction of Mr. F. Jonghmans, and the best comic talent. SUPPERS after the THEATRES. Proprietor, J. B. AMOR.

RIPON HOUSE, 1, WOBURN PLACE, RUSSELL SQUARE.—Mr. HENRI BEAUMONT (pupil of Mr. Charles Sleigh), begs to announce that on SATURDAY, Dec. 15, he will give a Selection of Poetic and Dramatic Readings in the Theatre of the School of Dramatic Art (as above). Commence at 8 p.m. Tickets, 1s., 2s., and 5s.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The SIXTEENTH WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES by the MEMBERS is NOW OPEN, at their Gallery, 5, Pall Mal East. Ten till five. Admission 1s.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

INSTITUTE of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.—The TWELFTH WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES will OPEN on MONDAY NEXT, the 10th December. Gallery, 53, Pall Mall.
H. F. PHILLIPS, Sec.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORÉ GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, by artists of the British and Foreign Schools, is NOW OPEN, at Thomas McLean's Gallery, No. 7, Haymarket. Admission, including catalogue, 1s.

GUARDI GALLERY, 11, Haymarket.—Mr. MARTIN COLNAGHI begs to announce his Daily Exhibition of Munthe's "FROZEN RIVER," and other High-class Continental Pictures, between 10 and 7 o'clock.—GUARDI GALLERY, 11, Haymarket. Admission, 1s.

BRIGHTON. — PULLMAN DRAWING-ROOM CAR TRAINS, leaving Victoria for Brighton every Weekday at 10.0 a.m. and 4.30 p.m., and from Brighton at 9.45 a.m. and 5.45 p.m., and on Sundays from Victoria 10.45 a.m. and from Brighton 8.30 p.m.
EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First Class Train from Victoria, 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY, Fast Trains from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m.; and London Bridge, 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon.
Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea, including admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion (Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds) available to return by any Train the same day, except the 5.15 p.m. Pullman Car Train.

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Direct Service from Victoria to Ventnor, for Bonchurch and the Undercliffe; also to Sandown, Shanklin, Newport, and Cowes, viâ Ryde. Through Fares, including all charges.
The Trains by this route now run direct to and from Portsmouth Harbour, alongside the Isle of Wight steamers.
J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon £50. Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS and CO., James Street, Liverpool.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The following are the Terms of Subscription for One Year, paid in advance, including Postage and Christmas Number, for which the publisher is prepared to supply THE GRAPHIC.

United Kingdom . £1 10 0 | United States . . £1 16 0

Africa, West Coast
Austria
Belgium
Brazil
Canada
Cape of Good Hope
Constantinople
Denmark
Egypt
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Holland
Italy
Jamaica
Malta
Mexico
Monte Video
Natal
Norway
Portugal
Russia
St. Thomas
Suez
Sweden
Switzerland
West Indies

£1 12 0 Thin Edition; or £1 16 0 Thick Edition.

The Postage of a Single Copy of THE GRAPHIC (either the Thick or Thin Edition) to any part of the United Kingdom is ½d.

To any other country mentioned in the above list the charge is 1d thin and 2d. thick; but all Newspapers which are sent abroad must be posted within eight days after the date of publication.

Australia
Ceylon
China
} Via Brindisi, 36s. thin edition. 45s. thick edition. {
India
Japan
New Zealand

Postage of Single Copies, 2d. and 4d.

The Subscription can be paid by means of a cheque or post-office order made payable to E. J. MANSFIELD 190, Strand, London.

All the Back Numbers of THE GRAPHIC can be obtained on application to the publisher.

Our Illustrations

MR. STANLEY AND HIS FOLLOWERS

OUR portrait of Mr. H. M. Stanley is from a photograph taken since his arrival at Cape Town, and a comparison of it with that which appeared in our issue of Aug. 17, 1872 (No. 142), will show how much the intrepid explorer has been changed in appearance by the mental and physical strain which he underwent during the wonderful journey which he has just brought to a successful conclusion, and which, to use his own words, "has made him an old man in his thirty-fifth year." As one looks upon the altered features, one cannot help feeling admiration for the indomitable pluck and energy which must have been needed to carry him triumphantly through all dangers and obstacles; and if that sentiment be shaded with some regret concerning his treatment of the natives, it must not be forgotten that as yet we have had no complete statement of the circumstances under which force was resorted to. We may at least hope that when Mr. Stanley reaches this country he may be able to defend himself from the terrible accusation of wanton bloodshed: an accusation which he has already indignantly repelled in his speeches at Cape Town.

Of the group of Africans depicted on our second page we need say but little except that throughout the expedition they remained faithful to their leader "the white master," and that they have since shared in his triumphant receptions at St. Paul de Loando and Cape Town. At the latter place they were fêted by Lady Frere at the Government House, and taken to the theatre, where they saw an acrobatic performance which much astonished them; but the most marvellous delight to them was a trip upon the railway from Cape Town to Stellenbosch. They were greatly excited by the motion of the "fire-carriage." "We here, we there, quick, quick,—three whole days' journey in one hour," were the exclamations by which they expressed their astonishment and admiration. Of the chief, Manwa Sera, we need say nothing beyond the fact that as chief captain he was, of course, second in command after the death of the brothers Pocock, but the story of Uledi's heroism must be told, and it is best told in his own simple language, as quoted by Mr. Stanley in one of his letters to the Daily Telegraph. Having spoken of the manner in which the brave "little master," although sick and lame, insisted upon going over the Zinga Cataract in the canoe, he goes on to say that no sooner had they cast off than "the cruel water caught us and tossed and whirled us round, and shot us here, and shot us there, and the noise was fearful. Suddenly the little master shouted, 'Look out! Take hold of the ropes,' and he was tearing his shirt off, when the canoe, which was whirling round and round, with its bow in the air, was dragged down, down, down, until I thought my chest would burst, then we were shot out into daylight again and took some breath. The little master and two of our people were not to be seen; but soon I saw the little master face upward, but insensible. I instantly struck out for him, to save him, but we were both taken down again, and the water seemed to be tearing my legs away, but I would not give in. I held my breath hard then, and I came to the surface, but the little master was gone for ever."

Mr. Stanley describes Uledi as a young African, about twenty-seven or twenty-eight years old, "lithe and active as a leopard and brave as a lion, the first in war, the most modest in peace, the best soldier, the best swimmer, the best carrier, the best sailor, the best workman in wood or iron, and the most faithful of the black faithfuls."—Our portraits are all from photographs, that of Mr. Stanley by J. E. Brunton, Cape Town, and the others by S. B. Barnard, 37, Adderley Street, Cape Town.

THE WAR IN THE EAST

WITH GENERAL SKOBELEFF BEFORE PLEVNA

WE have already given the portrait of this dashing hero of the Russian camp, who until recently had escaped unscathed from the many reckless deeds of daring for which he is so renowned. On November 15th, however, he was wounded during the encounter at his outpost line, and for the first time had to take to his bed for a while. Our first sketch represents General Skobeleff on the trenches of his foremost outpost line, only 150 yards distant from the trenches of the enemy, taking a few hours' rest on a stretcher in his "bedroom," which, our artist writes, is a square shallow pit dug out about two feet, the depth of the ditch at the back of the trench, in which his "bed," a simple stretcher, is placed. His officers sit about on the ground or lie on the straw with which the pit is strewn. The rifles of the soldiers are ranged along the parapet, and a few men keep watch while the remainder sit on the step, which serves to bring their heads when standing on a level with the parapet, and sleep or play cards. In our other illustration (page 536) may be seen General Skobeleff and his standard-bearer, who carries his flag into every skirmish. "The standard itself," our artist writes, "is a tattered square banner of red silk, with a white cross of St. George on one side and the letters 'M. C., 1875,' in yellow on red ground on the other. I made the sketch during an inspection of troops which were going into action at 'the Green Hill.' The background of fog, the scattered groups of soldiers about the camp-fires, and the weird shape of the mitrailleuses made a most impressive picture. I do not think that Skobeleff's soldiers would fight unless they saw this standard following their general galloping at their head on his white horse."

WITH THE TURKS—THE CAPTURED AMBULANCE

HERE we have a group of the doctors who composed the section of the Red Cross Ambulance which was captured by the Russians at the surrender of Telis on October 28th. One of them, however, Dr. Mackellar, had previously left Telis, just before the road to Orchanie was closed, so that he escaped. Dr. Douglas, of St. Thomas's Hospital, and Dr. Vachell, of the London Hospital, had been sent out by the Stafford House Committee, but were subsequently transferred to the Red Crescent Ambulance, under the charge of Mr. Barrington Kennett. Colonel Coope is an ex-officer of the 7th Fusiliers, and a colonel in Baker Pasha's "Imperial Gendarmerie." Finding, however, that his post at present was a mere sinecure, Colonel Coope tried to organise a company of stretcher men to carry the wounded off the field. His services, however, were declined by Osman Pasha, who declared himself the "saviour of society," refused all "foreign" aid, and so Colonel Coope joined the Red Crescent, and was temporarily attached to the ambulance to organise the service of "brancardiers." The two doctors have, it is said, been very kindly treated by the Russians; but Dr. Vachell has been exceedingly ill with dysentery—so ill, indeed, that he was obliged to decline to return with the flag of truce which Chefket Pasha sent to the Russians to demand the restitution of the two doctors. Dr. Douglas also declined to leave his friend, and both have been sent to St. Petersburg, to the charge of our Ambassador, by whom they will be returned to England. Colonel Coope, however, and Lorando, the dragoman of the party, are detained by the Russians as prisoners of war, both being in the Ottoman service, and possessing no papers to prove their official connection with the ambulance.—Our illustration is from a photograph by D. Michailides, of Adrianople, which was taken at Orchanie just before starting for Telis.

WITH THE TURKS—SILISTRIA

OF our two sketches at Silistria one represents one of the entrance gates to this strongly fortified town, which, although smaller in extent than Widdin or Rustchuk, is of considerable strategical importance from its position on the Danube. The other sketch depicts a party of Circassians embarking for a raid on Roumanian territory. These raids are of constant occurrence, and on the 27th ult. a band of fifty of these irregular troops crossed on a reconnoitring expedition, seized upon a work recently constructed by the Russians, surrounded the troops who occupied it, and carried off some sixty horses, together with a quantity of needle-guns, salves, and provisions. Ordinarily, however, these raids are merely "cattle-lifting" affairs, resulting in the capture of a few dozen sheep or oxen.

THE BRITISH FLEET IN BESIKA BAY

THE British Mediterranean Fleet, under Vice-Admiral Hornby, is again to winter at the bleak and dangerous anchorage in Besika Bay, which, though fair enough in summer weather, is a hazardous station in the tempests of winter. From last year's experience it was seen how difficult it was in bad weather to keep such huge vessels in hand, and when ships of such enormous tonnage as these happen to drag their anchors, it is not easy to bring them to unless steam is got up. Thus the fires have to be kept constantly alight, and the difficulty of maintaining a sufficiency of fuel will not be amongst the least of Admiral Hornby's difficulties.

THE LAND OF PLENTY

WHILE deserters from Plevna bring sad accounts of the privations suffered by the besieged, the besiegers outside the city are living in a glorious land of plenty, as may be seen by our sketch representing a detachment of the Guards drawing their fresh meat rations at Dolny Dubnik, previous to their march southwards under General Gourko. "Goats, sheep, and calves," writes our artist, "were served out alive, and two men carried away half a sheep on a pole. It was most ludicrous to see these tall, sober, fine-looking fellows leading and carrying away this miscellaneous zoological collection, riding the goats, and hugging the sheep like babies. The country round about here has all been depopulated; but plenty of provisions can be drawn from the west and south, where General Gourko has captured enough to last the whole detachment of Guards for forty days." A writer in the Daily News also bears witness to the plentiful supplies of the Russians, stating that great droves of beef cattle are about here on the hill-sides, and the butchers are up to their elbows in blood from morning to evening. "In one respect we are very much like the Turks in Plevna—meat is plentiful, but bread is scarce, and even impossible to get at any price."

A PRESENT TO PLEVNA

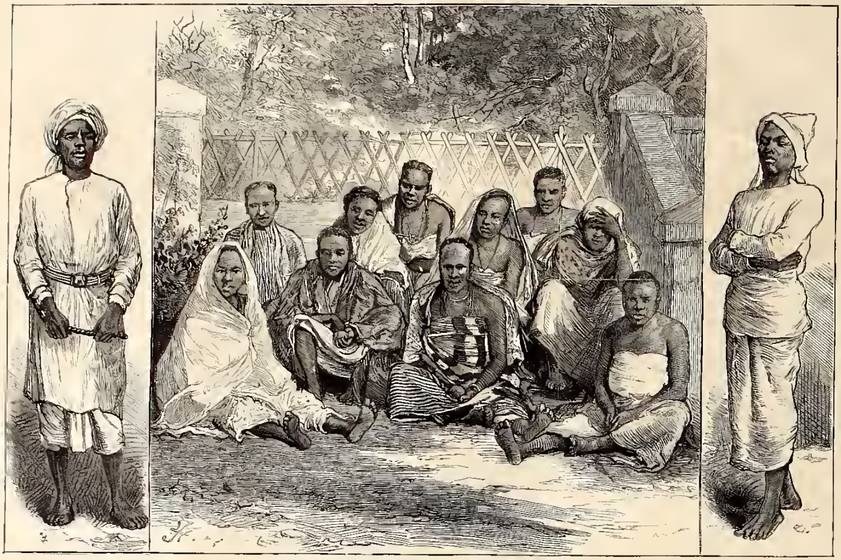
THIS depicts a sad scene at Dolny Dubnik, where our artist sketched a group of families—men, women, and children—who had been captured at Vraca, and who were being forwarded into Plevna as a "present to Osman Pasha." A correspondent of the Daily News gives a most harrowing account of their condition, there being about a dozen women and twice as many children stowed away in two ox-carts, half-naked and shivering in the cold wind which was sweeping through the valley. In the last cart there was a family of gipsies, scantily dressed and half-famished with hunger. "When the cavalcade of misery halted bread was given to the half-starved women and children, who shared it readily with the men. Bony hands clutched the loaves and tore them in pieces; wild eyes looked for more with a sort of agonised pleading, and for the first time for days they feasted. Soldiers showered on the party a share of their rations, corn was piled in the carts, and they creaked away. One of the women sat apart from the rest during the halt, and she took no share in the feast. She sat unmoved, and when the others ate threw herself flat on the ground and sobbed. She had taken a revolver and shot a Russian sergeant dead in the street at Vraca after the town was occupied and quiet, and for this she sat apart from the other women, pointed at as a murderess."

"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

A NEW STORY, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 537.

PHOTOGRAPHY AT NIAGARA FALLS

THE ambulatory photographer is becoming one of the nuisances of the nineteenth century. Whether you go simply to Hampstead Heath for an hour's walk, to Brighton for a week's blow by the sea, or to the United States for a three months' tour, you are invariably confronted by a man in a slouch hat, carrying a mysterious-looking box upon three legs, and who accosts you with "Nice evening to have your portrait taken; this style and size blank sixpences, shillings, or dollars," as the case may be. But

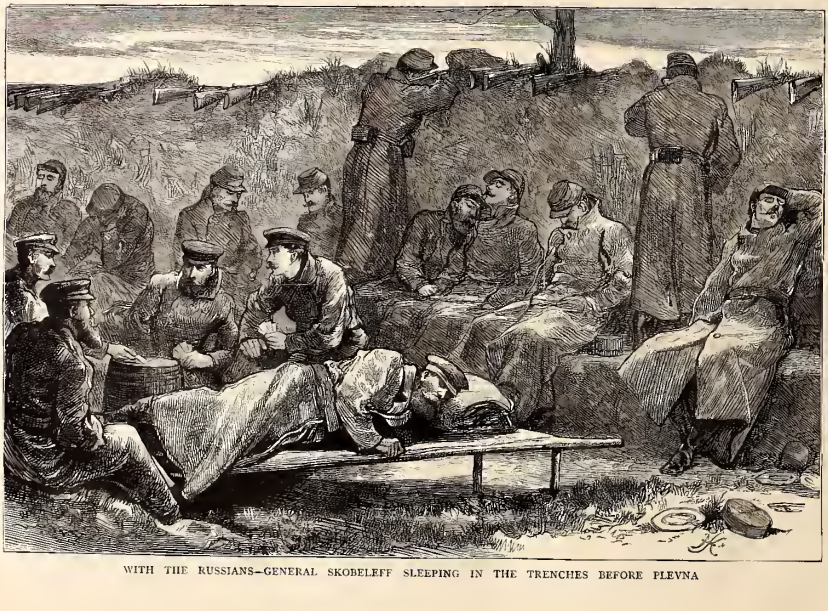


MANWA-SERA, MR. STANLEY'S CHIEF CAPTAIN

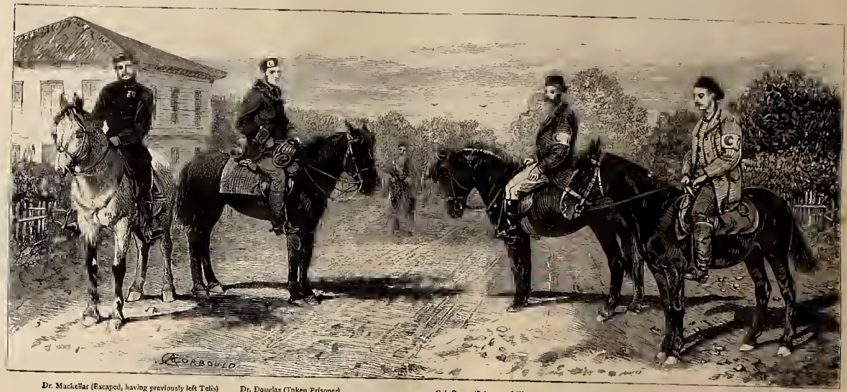
WIVES OF THE CAPTAINS OF THE EXPEDITION

THE HERO ULEDI, WHO TRIED TO SAVE FRANK POCOCK'S LIFE

MR. STANLEY'S CENTRAL AFRICAN EXPEDITION



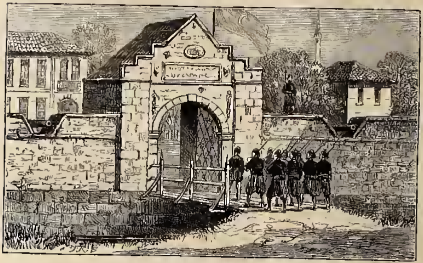
WITH THE RUSSIANS—GENERAL SKOBELEFF SLEEPING IN THE TRENCHES BEFORE PLEVNA



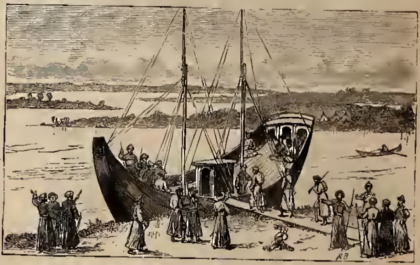
Dr. Mackellar (Escaped, having previously left Telis)
Dr. Douglas (Taken Prisoner)
Col. Coope (Prisoner of War, as being in Turkish Service)
Dr. Vachell (Taken Prisoner)

WITH THE TURKS—THE RED CRESCENT AMBULANCE SECTION TAKEN PRISONER BY THE RUSSIANS AT TELIS

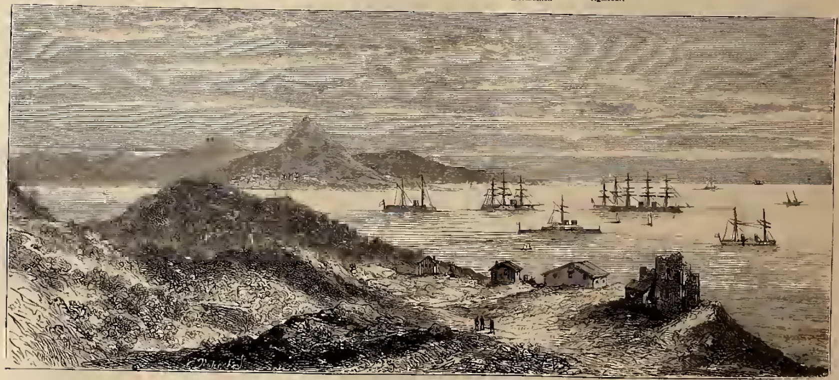
FROM A PHOTOGRAPH AT ORCHANIE TAKEN BEFORE STARTING FROM TELIS



SILISTRIA—ONE OF THE GATES



SILISTRIA—CIRCASSIANS EMBARKING ON THE DANUBE FOR A RAID ON THE ROUMANIAN SHORE



Island and Town of Tenedos in the Distance
"Hotspur"
"Pallas"
"Devastation"
"Agincourt"
English Cafe
Maltese Eating House
Café Chantant
"Salamis" Paddle Yacht

THE BRITISH SQUADRON AT BESIKA BAY

WITH THE TURKS

if there is one place where the nuisance becomes a positive insult, it is at Niagara Falls, where, lost in contemplation of the matchless grandeur of the scene, you are suddenly brought back to earth by the matter-of-fact ruffian thrusting a framed monstrosity before us, and remarking that the "atmosphere" is just in the condition for a "successful sitting," and that the Falls make a "grand natural background." The writer of these lines found the quickest way to get rid of these "artists" was to offer them, say a sixth of the price they would mention, when they would at once return with an injured expression at your low estimation of their professional powers. Yet there are people who never seem to get tired of seeing themselves portrayed in every possible attitude and in every possible place, otherwise the ambulatory photographer, who does not exercise his profession solely from love of his art, would quickly turn his talent to fields and pastures new. Two such folk are depicted by our artist, posing on a rustic seat in a presumably becoming attitude, with the rapids below the Falls as a background. These rapids, rushing along seething, foaming, and boiling over the black rocks in a narrow defile, are as eminently grand in their way as the "Falls" themselves, and when we look upon the two prim self-important atoms on the brink of the walled terrace, and the grotesque three-legged monster in the foreground, we feel that truly there is but a step between the sublime and the ridiculous.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

Victor Hugo's new work is continued on page 542.

A FAMINE COUNCIL AT BANGALORE

This engraving is from a photograph taken by Mr. A. J. W. Penn, at Bangalore, during the recent visit of the Viceroy to the Province of Mysore, whither he had proceeded for the purpose of conferring with the Chief Commissioner relative to the famine which has proved such a scourge to Southern India. Lord Lytton forms the centre of the group, with Mr. Saunders, C.B., Chief Commissioner of Mysore and Coorg, seated on his left, and Mr. C. A. Elliot, the newly-appointed Famine Commissioner, on the seat beyond. On the right of his Excellency are seated Mr. J. D. Gordon, C.S.I., the Judicial Commissioner of Mysore, and Mr. Molesworth. In the foreground Colonel Burne, C.S.I., Military Secretary to the Viceroy, and Captain Lock, A.D.C. to his Excellency, are seated on the right, with Captain Stainforth, A.D.C. to the Chief Commissioner, on the left. Behind the Viceroy stands the A.D.C. in Waiting, Captain the Hon. C. Villiers, lately appointed Attaché at Berlin; and on his right are grouped Mr. A. Wingate, of the Bombay Civil Service, who has been lately appointed Additional Secretary to the Chief Commissioners of Mysore in the Famine Department; Mr. Thornton, C.S.I., Foreign Secretary to the Government of India; Mr. Bayley, C.S.I.; and Colonel Colley, Military Secretary to the Viceroy. On the left of Captain Villiers are Major Moncrieff, who has been appointed to act as Chief Engineer in Mysore, when Colonel Sankey, R.E., was so summarily sent off to Simlah; Captain Yates, R.A., A.D.C.; and Mr. Bernard, C.S.I. Behind Mr. Saunders stands Mr. Tredway Clarke, the Secretary of the Mysore Government, with Major Robert Cole, on special famine duty; and Dr. Barnett, Surgeon to the Viceroy, on his left.

THE CHATHAM INSTITUTE
AND A CELEBRATED SHORTHORN

See page 548.

HOME.

Political Affairs.——The chief events of the week have been the Conservative gathering at Bournemouth on Tuesday, and the soirée of the Heywood Reform Club on Saturday last. At the first-named meeting Sir S. Northcote criticised at some length the recent speeches and writings of some of the Liberal leaders, and said that from the diversity of opinion amongst them they appeared to be engaged in a "free fight." He firmly believed that the Government possessed the confidence of the country, and that it would gladly intervene for peace as soon as an opportunity arose. At Heywood the principal speaker was Mr. Hibbert, M.P., who said that though it was not improbable that Lord Beaconsfield might attempt the assimilation of the franchise, with the view of "crushing" the Liberals, he felt confident that the latter would ultimately come uppermost. He trusted that, when the Ballot Act came up for revision in 1880, the portion giving votes to illiterates would be struck out, inasmuch as it allowed the most corrupt action to be followed. No question demanded more serious consideration, especially in the present state of trade, than that of taxation, for the annual expenditure of the country had under the Conservatives grown 6,500,000*l.* in the past three years.—Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., the First Lord of the Admiralty, was on Saturday entertained at a congratulatory banquet, and in response to the toast of his health, said that his duties had been materially lightened by the devotion and attention which had been paid to the exigencies of the service by the late Mr. Ward Hunt, who had left the Navy in a more efficient state than it had been for some years. Mr. Cross, replying for "The House of Commons," said that he adhered to every word of the speech upon the Eastern Question which he delivered in the House of Commons last Session, and which represented the sentiments of the Ministry generally, and when Parliament again met he for one should not be ashamed to defend the conduct of the Government.—Mr. Gladstone, replying to an address of the Kerry Tenants' Defence Association, says that he will endeavour to deal with whatever Irish measure may arise while he remains in the House of Commons upon the same principles of equity as heretofore.—Mr. H. Edwards, M.P., who has recently returned from Constantinople, spoke at a banquet at Weymouth, on Wednesday. He said that Russia had been carrying on a most flagrant system of bribery and intrigue. Lying and corruption had been her policy; and she was solely responsible for the outbreak of the Bulgarian atrocities. We were much indebted to Turkey for dispelling the bugbear of Russian greatness, but it behoved us to be on our guard against any interference with our prestige in the East, which would certainly be affected if Russia took possession of Armenia.

Miscellaneous.——Mr. Archibald Forbes was on Saturday entertained at dinner by his brother journalists and personal friends; the Duke of Sutherland, Lord Houghton, General Lord Mark Kerr, Sir Charles M'Grigor, and Sir John Heron Maxwell being amongst the company. Mr. Sala, who presided, spoke eloquently of the genius of Mr. Forbes and the value of his labours; and Mr. Forbes, in replying, said that the proudest moment of his life was when his first article was accepted by a gentleman then in the room, and that that was certainly his next proudest.—The Scottish Corporation kept St. Andrew's Day at the Freemasons' Tavern, their hall having been recently destroyed by fire. Sir Stafford Northcote occupied the chair, and the subscriptions amounted to 2,700*l.*, the largest amount ever received.—The Liverpool Caledonian Association also had a banquet on St. Andrew's Day. The Marquis of Huntly presided; and Mr. Rathbone, responding for "The House of Commons," said that, although Scottish legislation had been neglected, the Scotch were nearly fifty years ahead of the English in all matters of Reform.—Lord Lyttleton, in distributing the prizes at the Kidderminster School of Art on Tuesday, said that the great tendency towards increased subdivision of labour might lead to the perfection of the article produced; but it had a certain narrowing and cramping effect on the producer, and was likely to be extremely prejudicial to the development of the inventive faculties. He therefore urged that schools of art should afford not only the teaching a student asked, but something beyond it.—The ground around St. Paul's Cathedral is to be laid out with paths and thrown open to the public.—There is great distress, amounting almost to famine, in the Forest of Dean, 5,000 persons being upon the verge of starvation. The women of Parkend held a meeting last week, and resolved to send a memorial to the Queen. It has been signed by ten dames of the Forest, each about eighty years of age; ten mothers, each of whom has ten children; ten widows of ten colliers, ten orphan girls, and ten ladies, and it is to be presented to Her Majesty by Colonel Kingscote. The Earl of Ducie, the Lord-Lieutenant, sent a letter containing a donation in aid of the poor people, but pointing out that much of the distress was attributable to the refusal of the miners to work at reduced wages.—Mr. John De Morgan has been sent to prison by the Master of the Rolls for disregarding the injunction of the Court by addressing a meeting at Selston in September last. His speech was of the "don't pump on him" order, and was followed by a riot and the pulling down of some fences abutting on the common.—Mount Stuart House, near Rothesay, the seat of the Marquis of Bute, has been partially destroyed by fire, and some old panel-paintings and other valuables have been lost. Rothesay, a town inhabited by 9,000 people, has no fire-engine.—The coroner's jury have found that the recent explosion at the Pemberton Colliery was purely accidental, and that so far from there having been any negligence everything was done for the proper working of the mine and the protection of those engaged in it.—Two very singular suicides are reported this week. One is that of Lieutenant Lowe, of H.M.S. Boscawen, who on the 15th ult. jumped from his cabin window with three dumb bells fastened to his body. He left a letter addressed to a brother officer requesting him to accept a gun "in memoriam," and to think of him "as one gone to his rest." The other case happened at Bath, where a young man drowned himself in a public bath, having first written to his father stating that he could not divest himself of the idea that he had a cancer, and that, ignoble as it might be, it was better for him to die by his own hand than to linger on in misery.

Fine Arts

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY

I remember no Exhibition of drawings and water-colours at once so comprehensive and so interesting as that now open in the Grosvenor Gallery. It is not only that it enables us to survey at one view the whole progress of English water-colour art, from its rudimental condition of "tinted" topographical views and the almost monochromatic work of Cozens and Girtin to its development into pictures of masterly completeness in the hands of David Cox, De Wint, and J. M. W. Turner. Something of the same kind may be seen at South Kensington, where the bequests of Chauncey Hare Townshend, Mrs. Ellison, and W. Smith, with the aid of Mr. S. Redgrave's excellent catalogue, carry us along the same track of development to the same conclusion. But the Grosvenor Gallery shows us, along with the course of English water-colour painting, what English Art is not in a position to show us in any proportionate degree, all that the earlier schools of Italy, Germany, Holland, and France have done in the way of studies preparatory to pictures, and that by means of examples all interesting, and some of consummate excellence. English artists may learn here the infinite pains taken by the old masters; how much of what is most valuable in their finished work was, in fact, accomplished before they laid colour on canvas. They may compare the qualities of imagination and handicraft of different masters of the same school and the different schools of the same country, and the characteristics of the art of different countries; may see how beauty and high ideal or decorative aim were the distinctive quality of the Italians; literal truth, earnestness and grim pathos of the Germans; homely fact, the humours of humble life, and outdoor prose-pastoral of the Dutch; courtly grace, and gallantry, and second-hand classicality of the French. Then in English water-colour painting they will find from the first that predominant love of outdoor nature, and familiar life which have always characterised English art in its most popular form, with evidences besides of such influences of earlier schools as might be looked for in our own as the most recent of modern national developments of Art. The lessons of such an Exhibition are, indeed, too manifold for enumeration here. And in no country, it may confidently be asserted, could such ample materials for such teaching have been got together. Sir Coutts Lindsay has found the most liberal aid at his command. The Queen has lent him some of the choicest contents of the Windsor portfolios, so rich in fine examples of Leonardo, Michael Angelo, and Holbein. Historic houses like Chatsworth, Warwick, and Holkham have put their stores of drawings at his service. He has had the pick of the best private collections, both of drawings by Old Masters, and English water-colours, such as those of Messrs. W. Russell, E. Cheney, Malcolm of Poltalloch, F. Locker, W. Mitchell, Henderson, Nettlefold, Quilter and Burton, Holbrook Gaskell and Orrock, J. E. Taylor, C. E. Pooley, Aspland and Cohen, and the living representatives of such great names in Art as Constable and Girtin. And this large collection of 1,237 drawings is so displayed that all can be seen, and with the least possible confusion of schools and styles.

The Grosvenor Gallery, as many of our readers are no doubt aware, includes five rooms. The noble East Room, the largest of the suite, is devoted to English water-colours. The West Room, next in space and stateliness of proportions, is appropriated to the Italian and early German schools, in examples of the highest interest and excellence, which culminate in the wonderful Leonardos, the most delicately elaborated studies of figures, heads, limbs, and draperies, landscapes, flowers, and foliage, often containing, besides, the first thoughts of engineering inventions and architectural designs that ever proceeded from man's hand. In the vestibule are hung the invaluable Windsor Holbeins, with fine Rubenses, and Vandykes, and some early German works. The Sculpture Gallery contains a more miscellaneous collection, including the drawings of Boucher, Watteau, and his pupils or contemporaries, Lancrel, Pater, and Parrocel; landscapes of Claude and Nicholas Poussin; examples of later French masters as Greuze, Robert, St. Aubin, Fragonard, Huet, and Proudhon, with drawings, studies, and sketches of our own English masters, Hogarth, Reynolds, Gainsborough, Romney, Hoppner, Bartolozzi, Cosway, Lawrence, Bewick, Wilkie, Bonnington, Flaxman, and Calcott. Here, too, are some precious early German works of Wohlgemuth, Dürer, Memling, and Martin Schoen, with more examples of Holbein.

The works of English painters in this Gallery, though not numerous, are of great interest. Thus we have Hogarth's sketch of his well-known picture of the "Beggars' Opera," with Walker in Macheath, and Lavinia Fenton, afterwards Duchess of Bolton, in Polly, and the Duke himself among the audience in one of the stage-boxes. Here, too, is the wonderful design which the painter himself inscribed "Finis," and which was indeed the last work to which he set his hand, in which every object introduced points the moral of work done and life drawing to its close, while Time, the central figure, amidst all imaginable symbols of decay and downfall, lets his shattered scythe drop from his one failing hand, while the other holds his "last Will and Testament." In significance, as in sadness, this is about the most noteworthy piece of Hogarth's work. This is the very design from which he dashed the plate in with his own hand, hurrying as if he felt Death at his elbow. Here, too, not less notable, as an example of Hogarth's power of branding and scathing, is that wonderfully diabolic portrait of John Wilkes, with the Cap of Liberty, and a grin that seems to mock his dupes, which was Hogarth's revenge for Wilkes's savage attack upon him in the North Briton. This design is lent by Mr. F. Locker, whose collection seems to be made up of gems. From him, too, comes the best example here of Wilkie's work in water-colours,—a fancy sketch, or rather finished drawing, of his father, Captain Locker, R.N., as the "Old Commodore" tended by his daughter—which shows Wilkie a very competent workman in water-colour. Other Hogarth drawings here are a lifelike study of a baby's head, a spirited half-length sketch of a lady in a Spanish hat with a feather in her hand; a family group gathered round a card-table; and a study for a conversation piece in water-colour of a more artificial and elaborate kind.

Then there are interesting studies for ladies' portraits by Gainsborough; two of the slight landscape designs which were the favourite occupation of his evenings; a very interesting full-length of himself, as a very young man, sketching in the woods near his native place, before he migrated to Bath; and, of even more interest, a closely studied view from Yewdale, near Coniston, with notes in writing on it, of the effect and colouring. Never was man better fitted to enjoy, and never in fact did man more enjoy, the Lakes than Gainsborough, thanks to that fresh and youthful enjoyment of nature which was so strong in him, and which so entirely survived his town life. Of Sir Joshua, Hoppner, and Romney there is nothing worth particular notice. In fact, Sir Joshua never made studies or drawings except of the slightest kind. A sheet of Flaxman's designs for the "Pilgrim's Progress," some studies of ascending souls and guardian angels, and some portrait studies from his early friend Mrs. Mathews and his sister-in-law, Maria Denman, have all the simple grace of expression and calculated harmony of line which distinguish his work. Besides the "Old Commodore" there is a very interesting and delicate study by Wilkie, for the Duchess of Argyll in the "Knox Preaching," from Mrs. W. Russell. The lady was a descendant of the House of Argyll; and the face has a high-bred beauty rarely reached, or even aimed at, by the painter.

The last room of the suite, though the smallest, is one of the richest in the interest of its contents. Here are specimens of the careful studies from nature of the Dutch masters, Jacob Ruysdael, Cuyp, Wouvermans, Dusart, Van Ostade, Paul Potter, Jan Both, and others, with more Rubenses and Vandycks, a lovely girl's head by Sir Peter Lely, and a marvellously finished water-colour ascribed to Franz Hals, either a study for, or engraver's copy from, an early female portrait by him exhibited among the Old Masters at the Academy last year. To me it seems hardly conceivable that such studied and delicate work in water-colour could have come from the impetuous hand of Hals, though it is true that the portrait in oil, no doubt one of his earliest and most careful time, is as delicately finished as the drawing. The Water-Colour Room also contains a few examples of Velasquez and Murillo—the most interesting of the former a boy sketching in his shirt, of the latter a laughing peasant girl with a hound, and some singularly free and vigorous flower sketches by Van Huysum. Here, too, is a selection of six leaves from the sketch-book used by Paul Potter on his marriage tour, showing studies of Cleves, and groups of peasant men and women, slight but masterly. But the interest of this room comes to a climax in the Rembrandt drawings, which occupy the whole of one wall. Here we see fully displayed, though often in small, and, at first seeming, slight, examples, the master's wonderful power of expressing much by a few seemingly random strokes, or blots and dashes of colour, which makes his etchings so unrivalled. Here, too, we see at work the great imagination which could dispense with beauty of form; as if sublime poetry should somehow find an utterance in uncouth prose. Never has the unique character of Rembrandt's qualities been more strikingly shown than it is here in little.

This rapid sketch of the contents of this unique exhibition will sufficiently show how rich it is, how interesting and instructive it should be to all who practice or care for art. In the space at my command it is impossible to do more by way of more detailed notice of its contents, still less to comment on them.

Tom Taylor

DUDLEY GALLERY AND WATER-COLOUR SOCIETY'S EXHIBITIONS

The length to which the notice of the Grosvenor Gallery has run in our columns renders it impossible this week to do more than notify the opening of these exhibitions, and the fact that the contents of both are of even more than average excellence.

THE GUARDI GALLERY

We must touch very briefly on the interesting collection of pictures brought together by Mr. Martin Colnaghi, at 11, Haymarket. There are three important examples of Munthe, an artist who is unrivalled in the delineation of winter scenes in countries where the frost bites more sharply than in these islands. His "Frozen River," showing the roadway upon the imprisoned stream, scarred by wheel-tracks and hoof-prints, is especially noteworthy. Three Eastern subjects next claim our attention. Clairin's "Turkish Bath," where a lady is feeding peacocks, excellent both in colour and perspective; a Tunis negro selling oranges by Wauters; and "The Mahomedan Sunday at Algiers," showing the Moors engaged in friendly gossip, by Lazerges. Piot, noted for children, furnishes two companion pictures, one of a child playing with butterflies, the other (and the more interesting of the two) of a sweet little girl with a bunch of cherries. "The Return from the Ball" is a brilliant specimen of Madrazo's colouring. Billet's fisher-folk engaged in sand-eeling, Bischop's blind girl burnishing church plate, Domingo's Spanish strollers teaching a poodle to jump through a hoop, Roybet's "Archers," Guillemin's "Breton Interior" (a child lighting its father's pipe), and Egusquiza's "Fête Day," a young lady with an immense bouquet of flowers, are all in their several ways, full of merit. There are several good pictures by our own countrymen, as, for example, a Venetian study by Pritchett, a clever sea-piece by Harris, a faithful bit of Tipperary landscape by Nicol, and a lovely view among the Welsh hills, with the setting sun gilding the rocks and foliage, by Holden.

SPORTING

The Turf.——Two days of first-class hurdle-racing and steeplechasing at Sandown have brought us well into the "illegitimate" racing season, and for the next three months with little intermission we shall carry on con amore the cross-country sport in which Continental sportsmen indulge during the summer months. Here we associate barren fields and leafless trees, mud, rain, wind, and fogs with steeplechasing, but our friends in France and Germany green hedges, bright field-flowers, and hot sunshine. The Sandown Meeting was all that could be desired, and the improvements on the course gave universal satisfaction. Since the Esher course was opened three years ago, the management has never ceased to do all in the power of ordinary mortals to make it as perfect as possible, and before another gathering there will be a five furlongs straight course to finish with as good as any in the kingdom. Captain Pigott opened the ball with Roundhead winning the Claremont Flat Race for hunters on the Tuesday; and on the following day Roundhead secured the Royal Hunt Steeplechase, but not till after he and his two antagonists, Early Dawn and Little Fawn, had done as much in the way of falling and refusing as is often witnessed on a steeplechase course, the winner taking more than half-an-hour to complete the circuit. All this of course was "real jam" to those who attend steeplechases to see the fun of riders and horses coming to grief. The Grand Annual Hurdle Race produced only eight runners, others doubtless being scared away by the presence of Antidote, the withdrawn of the similar event at Croydon last week. Of course she was made first favourite, and it may be also said "of course" won; the only wonder being that the bookmakers were so liberal, even with all the chances of a fall at the timber-topping business. For the Hunters' Hurdle Race Lord Marcus Beresford landed his horse Bounce a winner by a head in advance of Crœsus, the favourite; and the last two races of the first day fell to Mr. Fitzroy, John Day, a certainty as far as there can be certainties at the game, taking the Maiden Hurdle Race, and old Chilblain the Prince of Wales's Steeplechase. The second day's sport was even better than that of the first, the Selling Hurdle Race producing no less than nineteen runners, of whom Silverley was made first favourite and Lady of Avenel second. This was not bad picking, as her Ladyship won, and Silverley was third. The Great Sandown Steeplechase, the event of the meeting, was contested by a good field of ten horses, Antidote naturally enough being made favourite, Citizen with the blushing honours of Croydon thick upon him being next in demand, and after him the veteran and somewhat unlucky Chimney Sweep. The result showed that the selection was sound, as the horses just named were the first three past the post, though not in the order of the betting, as Chimney Sweep beat Citizen by a head. The strange feature of the race was that the winner was behind the other two at the last hurdle, but actually beat them for pace in the run home. Lord Marcus Beresford, his owner, is to be congratulated on his victory, for he is not only one of the most plucky riders but most plucky and straightforward sportsmen we have at the cross-country game.—By the way it may be noticed that a week or so ago Mr. John Robinson, a successful bookmaker, and recently elected a town-councillor of Nottingham, offered 500*l.* to the "ministers of all denominations" in that town to be distributed by them among the poor—a kind of thank-offering we suppose for the good favour of Providence. Thereupon a report was spread that the ministers with one mind and voice repudiated "the wages of iniquity," and would have nothing to do with the gift. Thereupon again a series of articles in daily and weekly papers which most uncharitably scourged the ministers' want of charity. But after all it turns out that this virtuous indignation was premature—or rather we should say after-date—for the ministers in question had received the 500*l.* and distributed it days before the trenchant articles were written!

Football.——There has been almost a lull in the contest for the Association Challenge Cup; but the playing off the drawn game between Sheffield and Notts at Bramall Lane, Sheffield, on Saturday last, created an unusual interest in consequence of the well-known rivalry which exists between these clubs. After a splendid game victory rested with the home party, who were not a little sore at their claim of a goal in the former match being refused. By the way, when will some satisfactory arrangement be come to in reference to the terminology used in reference to football? We speak of the different "rounds" in contests, such as that for the Association Cup, as "ties," and at the same time a "drawn" game is called a "tie." It would be well that the latter term should be dropped altogether when speaking of the "rounds."—The first match ever played between London and Birmingham came off on Saturday last at the Oval (Association Rules), the Metropolitans never giving their opponents a chance, and winning by eleven goals to nothing.—At Eton, on St. Andrew's Day, according to immemorial custom, the Collegers and Oppidans played their "Game at the Wall," the former winning by ten "shies" to love.

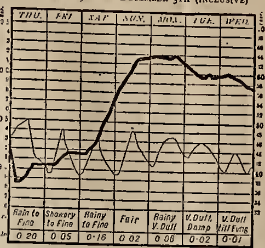
Aquatics.——The professional scullers keep the game alive in the dull season, and not a few interested in rowing came to witness the contest between Young Messenger, of Teddington, and W. Smith, of Kingston, over the Champion Course from Putney to Mortlake, on Monday last. However, the race was not an exciting one, as it was evident from the first that Messenger had it in hand, and he really won as he liked. His father is an old Thames Champion, and it is satisfactory to see that the race does not degenerate. Unless we are mistaken, there is a good future in store for the Teddington lad.

Pedestrianism.——Weston has failed to do 500 miles in six days, but he did 400 in less than five days. There seems to have been a roughish element at the Drill Hall, Bristol, and Weston plainly said that the "hideous hilarity" of some in the hall had prevented his getting the amount of sleep necessary for the successful accomplishment of the task he had undertaken.

◆

WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

November 29th to December 5th (inclusive)



Explanation.—The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

Remarks.——The weather at the beginning of this period was very changeable. The barometer was affected by the presence of a rather deep depression over Scotland, in the centre of which readings were about 28·5 inches, and which brought the mercury in London down as low as 28·85 inches on Thursday morning, the 29th ultimo. The winds at that time were strong from the southward, and the weather was very rainy; but in the course of the same day the barometer began to rise, and the wind veered to the westward, with fine weather. The rise in the barometer continued until Monday, the 2nd instant, the wind shifted round to the eastward, and the weather gradually improved; but towards the close of that day the mercury began to fall slowly—a change which has continued, though with some irregularity, until the present time. The north-easterly winds have gently given way, and have been succeeded by light airs or calms, except in the extreme west of our islands, where a strong south-east wind set in on Wednesday afternoon, the 5th instant. The weather has become overcast, very gloomy and misty, with occasional rain. In consequence of the density of the cloud canopy, the diurnal variations in temperature have been small. The mean for the week has been rather above the average for the time of year. The barometer was highest (30·17 inches) on Monday morning, the 2nd instant; lowest (28·85 inches) on Thursday morning, the 29th ultimo; range, 1·32 inches. Temperature, in the shade, was highest (50°) on Thursday morning, the 29th ultimo; lowest (35°) on Saturday, the 1st instant; range, 11°. Rainfall: Total fall, 0·52 inches, on seven days; greatest fall, 0·20 inches, on Thursday, the 29th ultimo. During the night of Wednesday, the 5th instant, the barometer had fallen fast, and strong southerly winds and rains set in along our southern coasts.

◆

"Minor Railway Improvements."——With reference to our "Topic Note" last week on this subject, we are informed that the plan of giving a distinctive colouring to the railway carriages in India according to their class has only been recommended, and not as yet adopted. According to the recommendation the colour of the carriages is to be the same as that of the tickets, an additional guide, especially for those who cannot read, a numerous class among the poor of India.

St. James's Hall.——A numerous audience, among whom the men far out-numbered the women, assembled in the large hall of this establishment on Tuesday evening to hear Mrs. Victoria Woodhull deliver her lecture, entitled "The Human Body the Temple of God." Such a stir has been made about this lady in America, and her portrait has been so extensively placarded about London, that it is little wonder that a large number of persons came to see and hear her. Doubtless they anticipated, as we ourselves did, an address which would at least be startling and original. We must confess that we were disappointed. Mrs. Woodhull, who is a lady of agreeable presence (the aforesaid portrait by no means does her justice), is not gifted with a voice of sufficient volume to fill that immense chamber, while her delivery was far too rapid to be effective. We make full allowance, of course, for the evident nervousness produced by a first appearance before an audience of strangers. So much for the manner of the address. As for the matter, the pith of which, judiciously condensed, might have been put into a ten minutes' speech, it chiefly consisted in the assertion, repeated over and over again, that if the mothers of England took their children into their confidence, and instructed them in certain physiological facts, crime and debauchery would disappear, and our gaols and lunatic asylums would be emptied. It is perhaps as well that there were very few mothers present, for they would have felt indignant to hear themselves so vigorously, and, we may add, so unjustly, scolded. Judging from the half-whispered comments around us, the audience evidently thought Mrs. Woodhull's vaunted panacea not worth serious discussion. One word of advice in conclusion to the fair reformer of morals. If she would really merit the name of "orator,"—which we observe is freely applied to her by some Transatlantic prints—let her take the trouble to write out an address, go carefully through it, cutting out all repetitions and "high falutin" phrases, then let her learn it by heart, and thus, by slow degrees, she may make herself a tolerably effective speaker. A flux of words is no more oratory than a crowd of men is a regiment of soldiers.

Scraps

M. Victorien Sardou will be received at the Paris Académie on February 15th.

M. Taine's "History of English Literature" has been translated into German, and brought out at Berlin.

Vaudeville Theatre.——The annual benefit of Mr. D. McKay, acting manager and treasurer, will take place on Wednesday, the 12th inst., at 2.30 p.m., when The Road to Ruin will be performed.

The Society of Lady Artists will hold their exhibition for 1878 at the Gallery, 43, Great Marlborough Street. Works received the 11th and 12th of February.—The Art Criticism Meetings (established in connection with this Society) will be held during the latter part of December and during January. Examining Visitor, W. H. Fisk, of University College.

Dr. Schliemann's Trojan Treasures are being arranged by the explorer himself in one of the Courts at the South Kensington Museum, and will shortly be opened to the public. The majority of the objects are terra cotta, but the collection includes a large portion of the supposed treasure of King Priam, varied representations of the owl-faced tutelary deity of Ilium, and the group of Apollo and the Horses of the Sun in the metope.

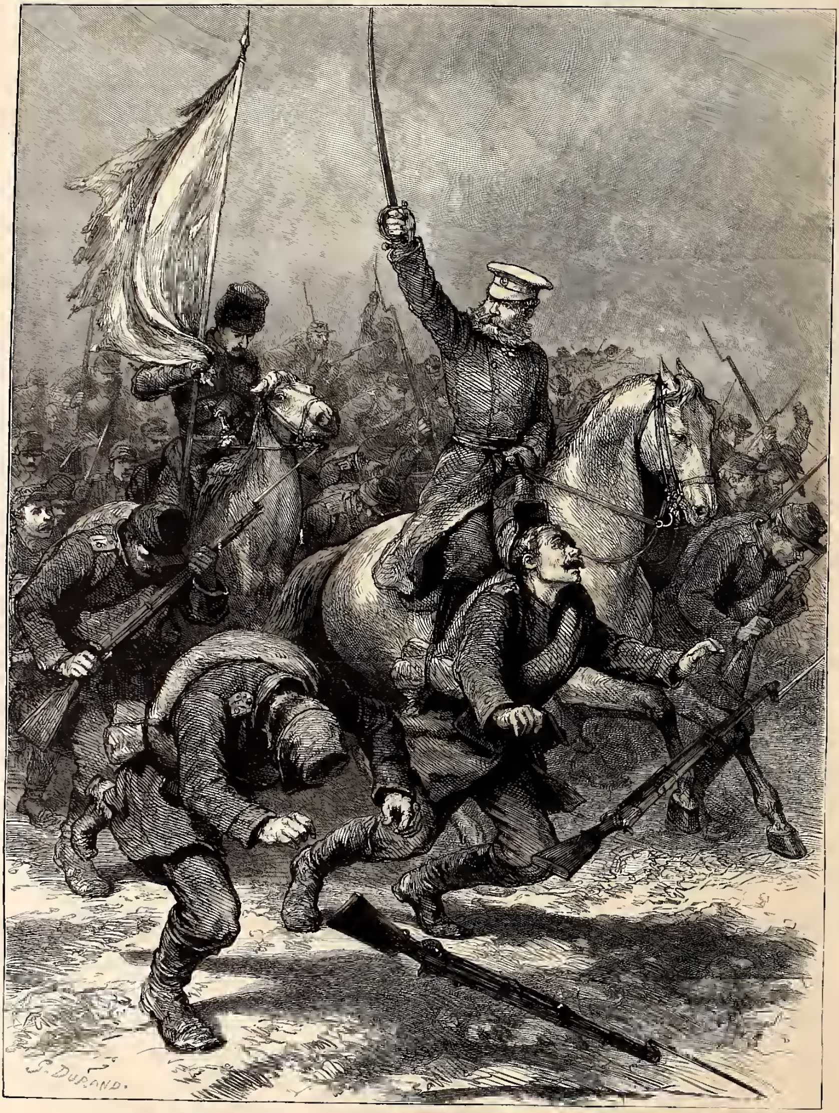
Walking Matches have been superseded in the United States by dances against time, and an agile professor in New York recently waltzed for seven hours without stopping, exhausting a large number of partners, none of whom were able to keep up longer than forty-five minutes at a time. The dancer took refreshments occasionally, but continued dancing while he drank, and during the first five hours swallowed two glasses of cold tea, two of champagne, and four of lager beer, as well as unlimited ice.

Cooking by Means of Solar Rays has been tried successfully at Bombay, and an apparatus has been contrived to cook chops and steaks in the open air as well and expeditiously as over an ordinary fire. The apparatus consists of a copper vessel, tinned inside and painted black outside, with a glass cover enveloping the vessel with an inch of hot air, and fixed on to the bottom of a conical reflector lined with common silvered sheet glass. If properly covered over it will retain the heat for full three hours and a half.

London Mortality increased very slightly last week, and 1,579 deaths were registered, against 1,571 during the previous seven days, but being 172 below the average of the last ten years, and at the rate of 23·3 per 1,000. There were 81 deaths from measles (exceeding the average by 29), 52 from scarlet fever (a decline of 3), 5 from diphtheria (a decrease of 6), 27 from whooping-cough (a decrease of 5), 31 from small-pox (an increase of 4, being the highest number registered in any week since the middle of last July), 36 from different forms of fever (a decline of 2, being 8 below the average), and 16 from diarrhœa (a decline of 3). Deaths referring to diseases of the respiratory organs numbered 417 (an increase of 8, but being 64 below the average), of which 291 resulted from bronchitis and 116 from pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 45 deaths. There were 2,636 births registered, against 2,398 during the previous week, exceeding the average by 270. There were 12·3 hours of registered sunshine, the sun being 57·4 hours above the horizon. The mean temperature was 49·1 deg., or 0·3 deg. above the average.

A Folk-Lore Society, the formation of which has been under discussion for some time past in Notes and Queries, is now definitely proposed by Mr. William J. Thoms, who suggests the following points as a basis—That the headquarters of the Society must be in London, and that there should be a yearly subscription of 1*l.* 1*s.* Regarding the first suggestion, Mr. Thoms writes: "I insist on this because the Folk Lore Society must not only have a local habitation and a name, but that habitation must be central and permanent," and as to the second he very naturally says that from the very motives of the Society the incidental expenses will be large, apart from the paper and printing; and paper and print are luxuries which must be paid for. Mr. Thoms proposes that one of the duties of the Society will be to gather in the various local journals which indulge in folk-lore columns, and to mount and preserve these columns for future use, and, next to gathering together the relics of our folk-lore, the collecting of analogous folk-lore of other countries. The more important items of their researches would be published in an annual volume. Mr. G. Laurence Gomme, whose name is familiar to readers of Notes and Queries, has consented to act as Honorary Secretary, and any lady or gentleman (for, remarks Mr. Thoms, the Folk-Lore Society is one which may be greatly promoted by ladies) who may be disposed, is requested to communicate his or her intentions to that gentleman, at 26, Merthyr Terrace, Castelnau, Barnes, S.W.

Queensland.——Mr. Thomas Hamilton, Secretary to the Queensland Government Offices, 32, Charing Cross, has written to us in reply to our remarks last week on the climate of Queensland. His observations may be summarised thus:—1. As a proof of the estimate entertained of Queensland by the other Australian colonists, 12,133 persons, or one-fifth of the entire population, are natives of the other Australian colonies. 2. A large number of the English emigrants go out to relations who would not be likely to invite their friends to come and live in an unsuitable climate. 3. While the death-rate in England is 22·4 per thousand, the death-rate in Queensland varies from about 15·0 to 18·0 per thousand, except in 1875, when, in consequence of an epidemic then known for the first time, it rose to 23·81. 4. As a proof of the prosperity of Queensland emigrants, 12,250 depositors (restricted to a deposit of 200*l.* each) had in the Savings' Bank (1876) 641,875*l.* This is quite independent of the 3,091,681*l.* deposited in the other Joint Stock Banks.—As we have no desire to decry any British colony, we are well pleased to read Mr. Hamilton's statement, but at the same time we do not think that it controverts our carefully-guarded expressions of last week. The demand in Queensland for Chinese labour—we observe that a paper on this very subject is about to be read before the Colonial Institute—affords some proof that hard out-of-doors' work in that climate is not very congenial to Northern Europeans. Suitability of climate is, of course, a comparative term. Even Mr. Hamilton would admit that the English labourer would not thrive on the Indian plains, and the climate of the lowlands of Queensland approximates more nearly to that of India than to that of North-Western Europe. Hence, even in the southern hemisphere, which is undeniably cooler than the northern, we should recommend working-class emigrants to select those colonies which lie furthest from the equator.



WITH THE RUSSIANS BEFORE PLEVNA—MODERN CRUSADERS: GENERAL SKOBELEFF AND HIS STANDARD-BEARER

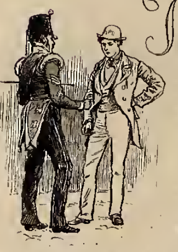
BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XXIX.

"A SURPRISE"



THE Captain, dressed in his Sunday blue uniform coat and white ducks, was sitting at his table, pretending to read. At least he had a book open before him, but I observed that it was upside down, and it was not usual with the Captain to read with the book in that position. But it was getting dark; the sunset gun had gone half an hour before; and the twilight of the longest day was lying over the garden and the smooth waters of the Mill Dam. Perhaps, therefore, the Captain could see to read no more, and, indeed, his eyes were not so good as they had been. The candles were on the table, but they were not lit; and the cloth was laid for supper. He had been listening to our footsteps, and when we came in looked up with a quick air of expectation which changed to disappointment.

"You two?" he cried. "Back again?—And alone—alone?"

We had pretended, all day long, not to know who was coming in the evening, but the pretence broke down now.

Celia threw her arms round his neck and kissed him.

"Dear old Captain," she whispered; "yes, he has come back—our Leonard has come home again to us."

He started to his feet trembling.

"Where is he, then? Why do you look at me like that? Why does he not come to me? What is it, Laddy?"

"Perhaps, sir, he is ashamed to come."

"Ashamed? Leonard ashamed? Why?"

"Suppose," said Celia, laying her hand on the Captain's shoulder, "suppose, Captain dear, that our boy, after he had promised his friends to come back triumphant, found the world too strong for him, and had to come back—in poverty, and not triumphant at all?"

"Is that all?" cried the stout old Captain. "Leonard has failed, has he? That is nothing. Many a lad fails at first. Give him rope enough and no favour, and he'll do in the long run. It's the confounded favour plays the mischief, ashore as well as afloat. Leonard has not had fair play. Where is the boy?"

And at this moment a step in the hall, and a scream, and a shuffle showed that the "boy" was arrived, and in the arms of the faithful Jeram.

"Oh, my beautiful boy—oh! my bonnie boy. Let your old nurse kiss you once again—and you so tall and bravo."

The Captain could restrain himself no longer.

"Leonard," he shouted, breaking through Celia's arms, "Leonard, ahoy! Welcome home, my lad."

We caught each other's hands and trembled, waiting for the moment when the Captain should discover the rags and tatters.

"Shall I light the candles, Laddy?"

"Not yet, Celia. Yes—do—it will be best so. The Captain must know all in a few minutes."

They were in the hall, laughing, shaking hands, and asking each other all round, and all at once, how they were, and how they had been.

"Supper at once, Mrs. Jeram," cried the jolly old Captain. "Supper at once. Such a feast we will make. And none of your fanteegs about not sitting down with Miss Celia, Mrs. Jeram, if you please. Now, then, Leonard, my boy, come and talk to Laddy and Celia. Lord! how glad I am, how glad I am!"

We looked at each other. One moment, and the rags would be visible to the naked eye.

"Poor Leonard—Oh, poor Leonard!" Celia whispered.

Then we started and cried out together, for the Captain and he came in together, the Captain, with his hand upon Leonard's stalwart shoulder, and a face which was like the ocean for its multitudinous smile.

But where were the rags?

They were gone. Before us stood the handsomest man, I believe, in all the world. He was nearly six feet high, his light brown hair lay in short crisp curls upon his head, his eyes had the frankest, loyalest look in them that I have ever seen in any man, and at that moment the happiest look as well. I declare that I have never seen in all my forty years of life so splendid a man as Leonard was at five-and-twenty. As he did not look one-half so splendid in rags one is bound to admit that clothes do improve even the finest figure. And as he stood in the doorway with the Captain I was dazzled by the beauty and vigour of the man. As for his dress, it was nothing but a plain black coat, with light summer trousers, just such as any gentleman might wear.

That was it: any gentleman.

He had succeeded, then.

"I beg your pardon, Celia, and yours, Laddy," said Leonard. "The foolish thought came into my head to see how you would receive me if I were to return in poverty and rags. So I masqueraded. I meant to come on here and see the Captain, too, just as I was. But I had not the heart when I saw the pain it gave you. So I made an excuse, and gave up the silly trick. Forgive me, Celia."

Her eyes, which had been frank with pity, looked more shyly into Leonard's as she listened.

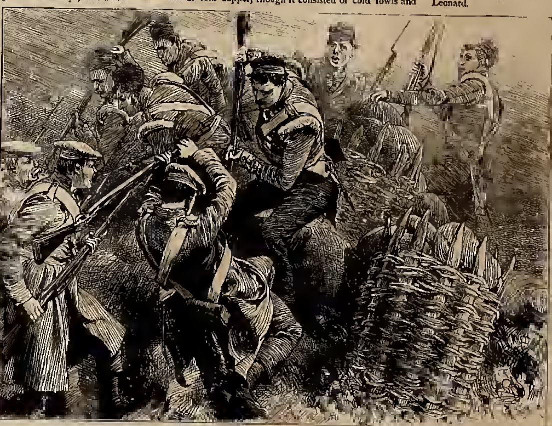
"What is there to forgive, Leonard? If we were glad to have you back again any way, how much more glad ought we to be that you have come back—as you are."

"But you do not know me—as I am."

"Come, come, no explanations now," cried the Captain. "Supper first, talk afterwards. I am so glad. Here's something I found to-day in your room, Master Leonard. See if you have forgotten the old tune."

Of course he had not forgotten it. It was the old fife on which he used to play the "Roast Beef of Old England" every Sunday before dinner. Leonard laughed, took up his position at the door, and piped lustily while the maid brought in the supper.

We all sat down, I at the end, Celia on the Captain's right, Leonard at his left, and Mrs. Jeram next him. I don't think we ate much at that supper, though it consisted of cold fowls and ham, the Captain's fixed idea of what a supper ought to be. But we had a bottle of champagne, a drink looked upon in those days as a costly luxury, to be reserved for weddings, Christmas dinners, and such great occasions. What greater occasion than the welcome home of the exile!



How Leonard won the Victoria Cross

"No explanations till after supper," repeated the Captain. "Celia, my pretty, not a question. Take another wing, my dear. No? Then Leonard shall have it. Leonard, my boy, here's to you again. Your health, my lad. After supper, you shall tell us all. I am so glad."

Supper finished, I began.

"Now, Leonard."

"Not yet," said the Captain. "The Bible and Prayer-book, Laddy, my boy."

Putting on his glasses, the old man turned over the pages till he found what he wanted.

Then he laid his hand upon the place, and looked up.

"Before I read the chapter," he said, "I wish to say that I thank God for my two boys, and for the trust that has always been with me, firm and strong, that the one who was away in the world would turn out as good in the matter of duty as the one who stayed with me."

And then, to our extreme discomfiture, he proceeded to read the story of the Prodigal Son. What on earth had the Prodigal Son to do with us at this juncture? Prayers despatched—he was always brief, after the manner of sailors, over prayers—he made another little speech.

"Since Leonard went away," he said, "which is five years to-day, as long a cruise as ever I made in the old days, I've been drawn towards this parable till I know it by heart. I've thought at times—What if Leonard were to come back like that young man, with five years' neglect of duty upon his mind! How should we have to receive him? And here I find the directions laid down plain. Lord! Lord! how plain a man's course is marked out for him, with lighthouses along the coast, and the mariner's compass, and the stars to steer by at night—if only he would use his eyes. Well, Mrs. Jeram, ma'am, and Celia, and Laddy, it was clear what we all had to do. And though a dreadful thought crossed my mind when you came home without him, and beat about the bush, talking of failure and such things, which I now perceive to have been only the remains of the devilment that always hung about the lad, I went out into the passage bold, and prepared, I hope, to act according to open orders. Somehow, we generally think, when we read this Divine parable, of the young man. To-night, all through supper, I've been thinking about his father, and I have been pitying that father. What if his boy, who had been away from home for five years or thereabouts, came home to him, not as he did, in rags and disgrace, but proud and tall, bringing his sheaves with him, my dear—bringing his sheaves with him? Think of that; for I am so glad, Leonard, I am so glad and happy."

We were all silent while the good old man cleared his throat and wiped his eyes. Celia leaned her head upon his shoulder and wept unrestrainedly.

"Therefore I say," continued the Captain, "the Lord be thanked for all His mercies, and if Laddy will play the Hundredth Psalm, and Celia will sing it with him, I think it would do good, both to Mrs. Jeram and to me."

"Thank you, my children," he said, when we had finished. "That hymn expresses my feelings exactly. And now, Leonard, that we've got the decks cleared of all superfluous gear and are ship-shape, and have had supper, and drank the champagne, and thanked God, I will light my pipe, and Celia shall mix me the customary—double ration to-night, my pretty—and you shall give us the log."

"Shall I begin at the end, sir, or at the beginning?" asked Leonard.

"The end," said Celia.

"The beginning," said the Captain, both in a breath.

"What do you say, Mrs. Jeram?" Leonard asked the old lady.

She said, crossing her hands before her, that, beginning or end, it would be all the same to her; that she was quite satisfied to see him back again, and the beautifullest boy he was that God ever made—flash o' lighting about the place just as he always had a done; and she was contented, so long as he was well and happy, to wait for that story for ever, so as she could only look at him.

"What do you say, Laddy?"

"Ask the Captain," I said. "He commands this ship, but Celia is our passenger."

"Good," said the Captain. "My dear, the ship's in luck to get such a lovely passenger as you. And you shall command the ship instead of me, so long as you don't run her ashore. Now then, Leonard, the end of the log first."

"First," said Leonard, "by way of preface to my log—you remember this?"

He drew a black ribbon from his neck with a gold ring upon it.

"A good beginning, my lad—your mother's ring."

"You remember what you said to me when you gave it to me? That it was an emblem of honour and purity among women, and that I was to wear it only so long as I could deserve it?"

"Ay—ay. This is a very good beginning of the end, Celia, my love. Go on, Leonard."

"I believe I have not forfeited the right to wear it still, sir."

"I never thought you would," said the Captain, with decision. "Go on, my lad,—keep on paying-out the line."

"Then the end is," he said, modestly, "that I bear Her Majesty's Commission, and am a Captain in the Hundred and Twentieth. We disembarked from India a week ago, and are now lying in the Old Kent Barracks in this town. Here, sir, are my medals—Alma, Inkerman, Sebastopol, and India. I have seen service since I left you, and I have gone through all the fighting without a wound or a day's illness."

"You are a combatant officer in Her Majesty's service like myself?" cried the Captain, springing to his feet.

"I am Captain Coplestone, raised from the ranks by singular good fortune; and five years ago a raw recruit sitting on a wooden bench at Westminster, with all my work ahead."

"Like me, he has seen service; like me, he holds Her Majesty's Commission; like me, he can show his medals." He spread out his hands solemnly. "Children, children"—he spoke to Celia and to me—"did we ever dare to think of this?"

CHAPTER XXX.

LEONARD TELLS HIS STORY

THEN Leonard began his story. The room was lit by the single pair of candles standing one each side of the model of the Asia on the mantelshelf. The Captain sat with his pipe in his wooden chair, his honest red face glowing with satisfaction, and beside him Celia leaning on his shoulder and listening with rapt eyes. It was Dido listening to Æneas. "With varied talk did Dido prolong the night, deep were the draughts of love she drank. 'Come,' said she, 'my guest, and tell us from the first beginning the stratagems of the enemy and the hap of our country then, and your own wanderings, for this is now the fifth summer that carries you a wanderer o'er every land and sea.'" As Dido wept to hear, so did Celia sigh and sob and catch her breath as Leonard told his story. No Gascon, he; but there are stories in which the hero, be he as modest as a wood nymph, needs must proclaim his heroism. And a hero at four-and-twenty is ten times as interesting as a hero of sixty.

> O, talk not to me of a name great in story;
> The days of our youth are the days of our glory;
> And the myrtle and ivy of sweet two-and-twenty
> Are worth all your laurels, though ever so plenty.

And what is it when the myrtle and ivy of two-and-twenty have real laurels mixed up with them?

A philosopher so great that people grovel before his name, in a work on the Subjection of Women, makes the astounding statement that the influence of woman has always been in the direction of peace and the avoidance of war. Pity he had not read history by the light of poetry. Was there ever, one asks in astonishment, a time when women did not love courage and strength? It was not only in the days of chivalry that young knights fought before the eyes of their mistresses—

> Since doughty deeds my lady please,
> Right soon I'll mount my steed;
> And strong his arm and fast his seat
> That bears frae me the meed.

How could it be otherwise? We love the qualities which most we lack. If women ceased to be gentle, tender, soft—what we call womanly—we should leave off falling in love. That is most certain. Who ever fell in love with one of the unsexed women? And I suppose if men ceased to be strong and courageous, women would leave off accepting and rejoicing in their love. Dido drank deep draughts of love listening to the tale of Æneas, which was, as Scarron many years afterwards remarked, extremely long and rather dull. So sat Celia listening to a much more wonderful story of battle and endurance. Or, I thought, she was more like the gentle maid of Venice than the proud Phœnician queen. With such sweetness did Desdemona listen when the valiant Moor told of the dangers he had passed. Did she, as John Stuart Mill would have us believe, incline him to ways of peace? Quite the contrary; this sweet and gentle Desdemona wished "that Heaven had made her such a man," and when her lord must go to slay the Turk she would fain go with him. My gentle Celia wept over the brave soldiers who went forth to fight, and again over those who were brought home to die; but her heart, womanlike, was ready to open out to the most valiant.

"I went up to town," he began, "with my ten pounds, as you all know. When I arrived at Waterloo Station I discovered for the first time that I had formed no plans how to begin. The problem before me was the old difficulty, how a man with a reasonably good education and no friends had best start so as to become a gentleman. I faced that problem for a fortnight, trying to find a practical solution. I might become a clerk—and end there; a mechanical copying clerk in a City office?"

"Faugh!" said the Captain.

"Or an usher in a school—and end there."

"Fudge!" said the Captain.

"Or a strolling actor, and trust to chance to make a name for myself."

"Pshaw!" said the Captain.

"There were men, I knew, who made money by writing for the papers. I thought I might write, too, and I found out where they mostly resorted, and tried to talk to them. But that profession, I very soon discovered, wanted other qualities than I possessed. Laddy might have taken to writing; but it was not my gift."

"Right," said the Captain. "Laddy, you remember the story of my old messmate who once wrote a novel. 'Twas his ruin, poor fellow. Never lifted his head afterwards.—Go on, Leonard."

"All the time I was looking about me the money, of course, was melting fast. I might have made it last longer, I dare say; but I was ignorant, and got cheated. One morning I awoke to the consciousness that there was nothing left at all except the purse. Well, sir, I declare that I was relieved. The problem was solved, because I knew then that the only line possible for me was to enlist. I went down to Westminster and took the shilling. Of course I was too proud to enlist under any but my own name. Going a soldiering is no disgrace."

"Right," said the Captain.

"Well," he went on, "it is no use pretending I was happy at first, because the life was hard and the companionship was rough. But the drill came easy to me who had seen so many drills upon the Common, and after a bit I found myself as good a soldier as any of them. One fretted a little under the rules and the discipline; that was natural at first. There seemed too much pipeclay and too little personal ease. One or two of the sergeants were unfair on the men too, and bore little spites. Some of the officers were martinets; I offended one because I refused to become a servant."

"You a servant, Leonard!" cried Celia.

He laughed.

"The officers like a smart lad; but it was not to be a valet that I enlisted, and I refused, as a good many others refused. Our lads were mostly sturdy Lancashire boys, proud of being soldiers, but had not enlisted to black other men's boots. It makes me angry now—which is absurd—to think that I should have been asked to become a lackey. Well, it was a hard life, that in the ranks. Not the discipline, nor the work, nor the drill,—though these were hard enough. It was the roughness of the men. There were one or two gentlemen among us—one fellow who had been an officer in the Rifles—but they were a bad and hopeless lot, who kept up as best they could the vices which had ruined them. They were worse than any of the rough rollicking countryside lads. I can't say I had much room for hope in those days, Celia."

She reddened, but said nothing. I remembered, suddenly, what he might mean.

"Things looked about as black for a few months as they well could. Rough work, rough food, rough campaigning. I thought of Coleridge and his adventures as a private, but he turned back while I—for there was nothing else to do—resolved to keep on. And then, bit by bit, one got to like it. For one thing, I could do all sorts of things better than most men—my training with the Poles came in there—it was found that I could fence: it got about that I played cricket, and I was put in the eleven—to play in the matches of the regiment, officers and men together; once, when we had a little row with each other, it was found that I could handle my fists, which always gains a man respect. And then they came to call me Gentleman Jack; and, as I heard afterwards, the officers got to know it, and the Colonel kept his eye upon me. Of course one may wear the soldier's jacket very well without falling into any of the pits which are temptations to these poor fellows, so that it was easy enough getting the good conduct stripe, and to be even made corporal. The first proud day, however, was that when I was made a sergeant, with as good a knowledge of my work, I believe, as any sergeant in the Line."

Mrs. Jeram shook her head. "More," she said, "much more."

"A sergeant," said Leonard. "It sounds so little now, but to me, then, it seemed so much. The first real step upwards out of the ruck. The old dream that I should return triumphant somehow was gone long since, or it was a dream that had no longer any faith belonging to it. And I began to say to myself that to win my way after two years to a sergeant's stripes was perhaps as much honour as Providence intended for me."

The Captain murmured something about mysterious ways. Then he patted Celia's head tenderly, and begged Leonard to keep on his course.

"Well," said Leonard, "you have heard how the great luck began. It was just before the Crimean War that I got the stripes. We were among the first regiments ordered. How well I remember embarking at this very place, half afraid, and half hoping, to see you all, but I did not."

"We were there, Leonard," said Celia, "when the first troops embarked. I think I remember them all going."

"It is a solemn thing," Leonard went on, "going off to war. It is not only that your life is to be hazarded—every man hazards his life in all sorts of ways as much as on a battlefield—but you feel that you are going to help in adding another chapter to the history of the world."

"Ay," said the Captain. "History means war."

"Let us pass over the first two or three months. We went to Varna, where we lost many men needlessly by cholera, waiting till the Generals could make up their minds. I suppose they could not avoid the delay, but it was a bad thing for the rank and file, and we were all right glad when the orders came to embark for the Crimea. We were amongst the earliest to land, and my first experience of fighting was at Alma. One gets used to the bullets after a bit; but the first time—you know, Captain——"

The Captain nodded.

"After Alma we might, as we know very well, have pushed straight on to Sebastopol. I doubt whether that would have finished the war, which had to be fought out somewhere. Russia had to learn that an immense army is not by itself proof of immense power. And so it was just as well, I believe, that we moved as we did.

"You know all about the battles—the Alma, Inkerman, Balaclava, and the rest. Our fellows went through most of the fighting, and, of course, I with the rest. The hardest day was Inkerman. We had just come in at daybreak from the trenches, where we had been on duty for four-and-twenty hours, when we were turned out to fight in the fog and rain. We fought in our great coats—well—all that is history. But the days of battle were red-letter days for all of us, and what tried us most was inaction, and the dreary waiting work in the trenches. And yet it was that work which got me my commission.

"You know what it was we had to do. Before the Redan and the Malakhoff were our batteries, the French attack on the Mamelon and the Malakhoff was on our right. Separating our right from our left attack was the valley which they called the Valley of the Shadow of Death, along which they carried the wounded, and where the Russian shells, which went over the Twenty-one Gun Battery, fell and rolled till the place was literally paved with shells. It was a dangerous way by which to carry wounded men, and at night the troops went down by the Woronzow Road. It was easy work comparatively in the battery; you could see the shells flying over, and long before they fell you had plenty of time to dodge behind the next traverse; after a while, too, a man got to know exactly if a cannon shot was making in his direction; sometimes the bombardment went on for days on both sides without any apparent result. There was the Naval Brigade—you would have liked to see them, Captain, in the Twenty-one Gun Battery under Captain Peel, the coolest officer in the whole navy—they were handier with the guns, and a great deal readier than our men.

"In front of the battery were the trenches, and in advance of the trenches were the rifle pits. You could see before you the venomous little Russian pits out of which so many brave fellows were killed, dotted about with sandbags, and where the Russians lay watching our men working from parallel to parallel, and in the zigzags. There was one rifle pit, in particular—I shall come to it directly—which gave us more annoyance than any other, on account of its position. It was close to the Quarries. The fire from it interfered with the approach of our trenches, and we had lost our men in numbers in the advanced sap at this point. It was for the moment the bête noir of our engineer officers. Of course, you have read in the papers what sort of work we have had in the trenches. On a quiet night, when the batteries were silent and the weather fair, it was pleasant enough. We sat round a fire smoking, telling yarns, or even sleeping, but always with the gun in readiness. In wet and bad weather it was a different thing, however. Remember that we only had ammunition boots, made by contract, which gave out after a week. The mud got trodden about deeper and deeper, till it was pretty well up to the knees; and when snow fell on top of it, and rain on top of that, and all became a wet pool of thick brown mud, it was about as lively work as wading up and down the harbour at low tide, even if you did happen to have a "rabbit," that is, one of the coats lined with white fur. And if it was a hot night you had the pleasure of listening to the cannonade, and could see nothing on the Russian side but the continuous flash of the guns. And there was always the excitement of a possible sortie.

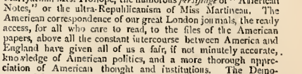
"We went out for night work in the trenches with heavy hearts, I can tell you, and many a man wished it were day again, and he was back in safety. We grew every day more badly off, too. Not only did the boots give out, but the great coats dropped to pieces, and the commissariat fell short. You have heard all that story. Jack of the Naval Brigade did not mind so much as regards the great coats, because he could patch and mend. He used to sell his slops for brandy, and cobble his old garments with the brown canvas of the sandbags. But the red coats were not so handy—I have often thought it a great pity that our fellows don't imitate the sailors, and learn how to do things for themselves—we suffered terribly. That you know, too; and any national conceitedness about the pluck of our fellows in fighting so well under such conditions has to be pulled up by the thought that what we did the French and Russians did, too. After all, there is no such thing as one nation being braver than another."

"Our sailors were stronger than the French," said the Captain. "When it came to pounding with the big guns, they held out longer."

"Let me come to my piece of great good fortune," Leonard went on, "or I shall be talking all night. I have told you of the rifle-pit by the Quarries which caused us such a lot of trouble. Now I am going to tell you how I took it. It was an afternoon in April, 1855. We were in the trenches; there had been joking with a lot of 'griffs,' young recruits just out from England; the men used to show them the immense wooden spoons with which the Russian soldiers eat their coarse black bread soaked in water, and declare, to Johnny Raw's terror, that the Russians had mouths to correspond. At that time the fighting between rifle-pits was the great feature of the siege, and to take a rifle-pit was one of the most deadly things possible, as it was also the most important. The 'griffs' went down to the most advanced trench; some of them had never been under fire before, and they were naturally nervous. Just after grog time—their grog had been taken down to them—a heavy firing began, and one of those curious panics which sometimes seize some veteran soldiers attacked these boys, and they bolted; left the trench and skulked back along the zigzag, declaring that the enemy was out in force. That was nonsense, and I was ordered down with a dozen men to take their place. My fellows, I remember, chuckled at finding the grog still there, and made short work of it.

"We had not been in the trench very long before a sortie in force actually took place. We were in front of the Redan; before us, under the Redan, stood the pit of which I have told you; on the right was the Malakhoff. Suddenly a cannonade d'enfer began from the Mamelon and the Malakhoff, and we began to suspect that something was going to happen; and then, between the two forts, we saw the advance of the great Russian sortie. To our great joy, they turned to the left, in the direction of the French. While we looked a thought came into my head—an inspiration. I reflected that the holders of the enemy's rifle-pit would very likely be watching their own sortie, and that now was the moment to make an attempt. I took half-a-dozen of our men; we crept out of cover, and then, without a word, rushed across the ground between. It was as I thought: the Russians never saw us coming: they were watching their own friends, and we were on them—a dozen of them—before they knew what had happened. It was hand-to-hand fighting, but we were the assailants. You know, Captain, it is always better to be in the attacking force. I cannot give you the details; but in less time than it takes me to tell the story, the Russians were hors de combat and the rifle-pit was ours. Then came the turning of the position. You understand, Celia, that the rifle-pit was a little advanced kind of redoubt, consisting of perhaps a dozen gabions filled with earth and topped with sand-bags, enough to shelter two or three dozen men. These were of course all placed in front, towards the enemy. We had to reverse the position, and place them towards the Redan. By this time we were observed, and shots began to fly about. That was the most dangerous moment of my life. We worked steadily and swiftly, tearing up the gabions, lugging the sand-bags round, getting such protection as we could while we worked. I do not know how long it lasted, but by the time we had finished there was left only myself and one other, and he was wounded in the right wrist. But the rifle-pit was ours, and our men in the trench behind were cheering like madmen."

(To be continued)



THE READER

"COLUMBIA AND CANADA," by W. Fraser Rae (Daldy, Isbister, and Co.).—In this useful volume—a supplement, says the title-page, to the author's well-known "Westward by Rail"—Mr. Fraser Rae has jotted down in solid, unpretending fashion his notes of a tour from Washington to Montreal and Toronto in the year of the Centennial Exhibition. The time has passed when the great British public was content to take its knowledge of the Western World from the writers whom Mr. Rae amusingly reviews in his concluding chapter—from the superficial satire of Marryat and Mrs. Trollope, the humorous persiflage of "American Notes," or the ultra-Republicanism of Miss Martineau. The American correspondence of our great London journals, the ready access, for all who care to read, to the files of the American papers, above all the constant intercourse between America and England have given all of us a fair, if not minutely accurate, knowledge of American politics, and a more thorough appreciation of American thought and institutions. The Democracy of the States is no longer for most of us an object either of ridicule or of dread. We flatter ourselves, indeed, that ours is in all essentials, as free a democracy as theirs, that each may learn something from the other, and that neither can possibly know too much of the other's inmost life and character. It is to the excellent purpose of adding to such knowledge, and thus contributing to a closer sense of union between the English-speaking races of either hemisphere, that Mr. Rae addresses himself in the present volume, with something, perhaps, of unnecessary solemnity, but with a fair share, too, of solid good sense and practical ability. His book is not the journal of the tourist "in search of the picturesque," but of the traveller who with exceptional means of information notes carefully as he goes along whatever strikes him as most interesting. The accounts of the American Press as typified in the Tribune, the New York Evening Post, and the Philadelphia Public Ledger; of characteristic gatherings like the Seventh Reunion of the Society of the Army of the Potomac, or the annual dinner of the Massachusetts doctors; of parties and politics in Canada, and of Protection v. Free Trade in the Dominion and the States, are among the most original features in a volume which also, it must be owned, comprises very much not unfamiliar to those who have had occasion to turn to the cheap, useful guide-books of Messrs. Lippincott or Appleton. Mr. Rae's "new and simple plan" of promoting closer union between the two branches of the good English stock by "an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, and an amendment to the Constitution of the States, giving to citizens of the Republic and subjects of Queen Victoria common citizenship in the Anglo-American Empire," must be classed, we doubt, among the airy schemes that float in the misty atmosphere of Utopia.

In "Myths and Marvels of Astronomy" (Chatto and Windus) Mr. R. A. Proctor has given us perhaps the pleasantest of his very many pleasant volumes. Few, probably, realise to the full the extent to which the fancies of the astrologer, or the crude theories of the unlearned watcher of the stars, still keep their hold upon the vulgar mind. Did we not read the other day—half-earnest seemingly if also half-jest—a horoscopic forecast of the war among the Balkans, and did not the recently-published memoir of a famous Anglo-Indian contain at least three astonishing instances of astrological predictions marvellously fulfilled? "Parallax," for aught we know, is lecturing somewhere now on his favourite doctrine that earth is like a billiard-table, with the sun, moon, and stars suspended like the gas-lights overhead. Mr. Proctor's own chapter on the Swedenborgian vision of other worlds called forth a fierce reply from a clerical believer in the Swedish seer. The occult meaning of the Constellation figures has furnished in the last year or two a key to all the mysteries of earth and heaven to at least two authors not too eccentric to find a respectable publisher. Nay, even mighty men of science have sometimes mingled fact with fancy. Leverrier went, we think, to his grave a firm believer in that very dubious planet, Vulcan; while a whole book has just been given to a mere summary of the various theories that owe their birth to the great Pyramid. The reader who begins this charming volume—a dozen chapters to as many instances of erroneous observation or superstitious credulity—will hardly fail to peruse it to the end.

Exception might perhaps be taken to Mr. Wedmore's theory that the novel of social life can hardly deal satisfactorily with times when all is undergoing change, with the sort of moral twilight that sets in between the dying out of the old order and the full morning of the new—is not this true, if true at all, only of writers of the second class?—none will regret a theory that takes him for such charming subjects as his three "Pastorals of France" (Bentley and Son) to lands where "the old moralities" are still unshaken, to sober Breton homes or quiet vicarages of the Beauce. A tinge of melancholy runs through these Pastorals—each one a tale of silent self-sacrifice—not painfully, but with the tender sadness of the slow transition from autumn tints to soft November grey. As works of art these little sketches are of a high order of merit.

Our Turkophils would fain re-write history. Let us admit that Russia has oft-times pursued a tortuous policy. Few nations, if we confess the truth, among those who claim what Americans boldly call "a manifest destiny," have not. But we fail to see what conclusions are to be drawn from brochures like Mr. F. Francis's "Diplomatic History of the Greek War from the Formation of the Hetairia to the Treaty of Adrianople" (Brook and Co.). Did Russia or the world gain most by the War of Greek Independence, or does any one now really think that England should have aided Turkey to bring Greece back to the "simple Constitution and wise institutions" which Mr. Francis apparently imagines to have obtained there while the land was still an appanage of the Porte? Unless one goes so far as this, whether Prince Lieven or Mr. Canning was the cleverer man may be left, we think, to rest in the dust of half a century.

We had almost overlooked "Multum in Parvo Gardening" (Crosby Lockwood and Co.), by Samuel Wood, when a second glance at the title-page quite took our breath away. For there we saw that it was in two-parts. 1. How to make an acre of land, without glass, produce by the cultivation of fruits and vegetables 620*l*. per annum clear profit. 2. How to grow flowers in three glass houses (each forty feet by fourteen) to realise 176*l*. per annum profit. We are not quite clear whether Mr. Wood has actually done this, or only proceeded far enough in the way of experiment and calculation to warrant the conclusion that such wealth is "quite attainable." We should say, too, that the wall-work on which the fruit-trees must be grown will cost per acre nearly 500*l*., though as a profit is promised of 156*l*. from radishes alone, and 50*l*. from tomatoes, it might, we should think, be possible to commence with a plain 200*l*. a year or so from these humbler vegetables, and gradually buy our fruit trees and our walls out of surplus profits. Whether Dame Nature would have some trick in reserve to trip up the amateur experimentalist on the threshold of success, we are not gardeners enough to say. But should such danger threaten from the insect world, Mr. Wood has a whole appendix full of remedies against every variety of insect pest that might strive to levy income tax on his swollen receipts.

The pretty volume of the "Art at Home Series" (Macmillan and Co.), in which the Miss Garretts spoke of "House Decoration" generally, has now been supplemented by one in which Mrs. Orrin Smith deals at length with the especial furnishing and adornment of "the drawing-room." How to make the room which is still too often the gaudiest and the least comfortable in the house pleasant alike to look at and to live in, should not be very difficult. Harmony of form and colour for adornment, solid rather than showy furniture for use, are, after all, the main conditions of success. In Mrs. Orrin Smith's volume will be found ample rules for all that makes a drawing-room habitable—for choice of wall-paper, fashion of fire-place and windows, carpets and hangings, furniture and decorations—set off with very effective illustrations—e.g., of "a snug corner" or a bit of "bare boards" artistically treated. A volume altogether in every respect up to the high general average of the series.

"Art Furniture," too, "designed by E. W. Godwin, F.S.A., and manufactured by W. Watt, of Grafton Street, Gower Street" (B. T. Batsford, Holborn), though simply a well-executed trade catalogue, is well worth some attention. The illustrations, ranging from designs for bed-room furniture to drawings of stalls and choir for private chapels, present many pretty forms and excellent examples of "old English." The preparatory "Hints" are useful and unpretending.

Last, but most interesting of all—to very many the most interesting publication of the month—comes Mr. Elliot Stock's fac-simile reproduction (in permanent lithography) of the original draft of the "Christian Year," in the clear legible handwriting of the poet—guiltless of blot or of erasure. Not, it is true, the "Christian Year" as we now have it—not half, indeed, of the hymns that make up the actual volume—but its first fair conception in the form of "MS. Verse, Chiefly on Sacred Subjects, 1822," containing, besides the first draft of the well-known hymns, other occasional pieces of Keble's own, already published (with two exceptions) in the miscellaneous Collection, and several more by early college friends whose identity not a few will guess beneath the initials of "G. J. C.," "J. T. C.," "T. A.," and "S. T." The accompanying preface, with notes on the variations between this first copy and the later text, is judiciously published—to make the fac-simile more exact—in a thin separate volume.

New Novels

"THE VILLAGE COMEDY," by Mortimer and Frances Collins (3 vols.: Hurst and Blackett).—Had the late Mr. Mortimer Collins been a less erratic and whimsical writer than, with all due recognition of his good gifts, we must consider him, it would have been easier to make a guess as to what share in this posthumous work should be assigned to him, and what to the wife who so faithfully and lovingly soothed and shared his labours. We should then have had little hesitation in coming to the conclusion that, except a few scenes here and there which seem completely worked out, it is only the rough draft of a tale, to be shaped and harmonised later on, which Mr. Collins is here to be credited with, and that this outline has been filled in by the hand of the wife, guided, no doubt, by what she knew of his designs as to his work. But Mortimer Collins so often made a quasi-boast of his own independence of the ordinary laws of composition that it is quite possible that his book may have had in his eyes all the finish and coherence that it needed, and that Mrs. Collins' share in completing it may have been much smaller than we might primâ facie suppose. We may, however, we imagine, take it that it is to her exclusively we owe the device of making Mortimer Collins himself, under the designation of Manly Frowde, figure as in some sort the central figure in the piece, round whom the rest of the actors and actresses more or less revolve. From a purely artistic point of view the device is hardly a happy one, as, for one thing, the reality of the one figure makes the others appear even more shadowy by comparison; but it is impossible not to respect and sympathise with the feeling which has dictated it. We have so often expressed our opinion as to Mortimer Collins' merits and demerits as a novelist that we may be excused from dwelling on the point afresh; all the more so as this book shows him on no new path, but altogether in his old "form." As usual there is some extravagance and waywardness of conception and method, much lively chatter, some shrewd if hardly profound thoughts, and plenty of eating and drinking, though it must be owned that the heroes and heroines here do not seem gifted with the appetites of their predecessors in Mr. Collins' novels. "The Village Comedy" will doubtless find many readers, and none of them will close the book with other than kindly feelings towards the man whose premature death in the fulness of his powers of body and mind must be felt as a loss by all.

"Rothery Selfert, Q.C.," by John Ollive, author of "A Wooing of Até" (3 vols.: Chapman and Hall).—Here we have another tale of unhappy married life—a mine of interest which, at the present rate of working, bids fair to "give out" at no distant date. Rothery Selfert, when we meet him, is a man already between forty-five and fifty, a highly successful barrister, and the leader of his circuit, with a prospect of the Solicitor-Generalship in the near future. But, prosperous as his career has been, he has an impression that he has, so far, missed something of domestic sweetness that falls to the lot of most men; so it occurs to him to take to wife Lena Morden, an exceedingly beautiful and gifted girl of eighteen or nineteen, who is well disposed to bow down and worship him on the score of his intellectual eminence, and can only wonder what so god-like a being can see in her to attract him. But Selfert, by nature a reserved and self-contained man, has grown more reserved and more self-contained through years of solitude, and it has formed no part of his scheme of matrimony to admit his wife to a share of his serious thoughts and aspirations. Lena's timid attempts at winning his confidence are sharply, even brutally snubbed, and the poor girl soon begins to pine at the isolation to which she finds herself doomed. How the little rift between husband and wife grows larger and larger, and is aggravated by untoward circumstances and the action of third persons, so that the sequel of the tale is of the gloomiest character, we need not attempt to set forth here. Lena is all that is morally excellent, and is drawn sufficiently well to win our interest and sympathy; but in his picture of the husband we question whether Mr. Ollive has quite achieved what he intended. In his arrogance, pretence, and harshness Selfert is simply another Mr. Dombey; of the intellectual gifts which have won him renown among his fellows, and the worshipping regard of his young wife, we hear, indeed; but he is made to give no evidence of them whatever. We cannot call the book a pleasant one—for to read of stupid tyranny is aggravating—but there is power in it, and here and there a touch of humour.

"The Trust: An Autobiography," by Jean Le Peur (3 vols: Samuel Tinsley).—The account which the heroine gives here of the days of her childhood strikes us as spun out even to weariness; but the tale, which is little beyond a chronicle of domestic life, is not without merit of a quiet and unpretending kind. The "Friends" who figure in its pages seem remarkably well drawn, startling as it somehow is to come upon Quakers in an Irish story.

"Noble by Heritage," by George F. Pardon, author of "The Faces in the Fire," &c. (Tinsley).—Mr. Pardon seems to have some turn for plot, which may perhaps be cultivated with advantage; but as yet we cannot credit him with any of the other qualities necessary to the novelist. His characters are unreal and conventional, and he does not impress us as having much knowledge of the world he attempts to portray. What possible occasion was there to devote a page to informing his readers as to the objects and general character of London clubs? Still, he has that knack at construction, though only in a rudimentary state, in which so many novelists are utterly wanting.

"Reediford Holm," by T. R. Skemp, author of "The D'Eyncourts of Fairleigh," &c. (Remington and Co.).—This is a tale of farm and country life which we cannot help feeling a trifle dull, in spite of what seems the faithfulness of its realism. Yet it is one of at least average excellence, for Mr. Skemp knows what he is writing about, and really has something to say, even if we have to regret that it is not said more attractively.

Magazines

AMONG the many interesting papers contained in this month's Nineteenth Century, that on "Hydrophobia and Rabies," by Sir Thomas Watson, will probably be the most widely studied. Veteran as he is, Sir Thomas writes as lucidly and vigorously as ever. He points out the difference between the respective diseases in the dog and the man, refutes the assertions of those who believe that hydrophobia is merely the product of fright, gives practical directions for securing from danger persons bitten by rabid dogs, and expresses his conviction that rabies might be extinguished by a strict system of quarantine.—Sir J. F. Stephen furnishes a valuable article on "Criminal Law Reform," showing how the time of our law officers might be economised by a clearer definition of the offences triable at assizes and quarter sessions respectively, and recommends, under certain restrictions, that prisoners should be allowed to be examined both by their own and by the prosecuting counsel.—Sir Julius Vogel maintains that the Post Office might largely increase their revenue by revising the charges now payable for telegrams, and Mr. Godfrey Turner offers some noteworthy remarks on the popular amusements of our countrymen.

In the Fortnightly Mr. Lowe writes a rejoinder to Mr. Gladstone's paper on "Manhood Suffrage." He, of course, makes the most of Mr. Gladstone's admission that the House of Commons has collectively degenerated rather than improved since the era of the First Reform Act, and he cites the example of France and the United States to show that universal suffrage has been by no means an unmixed blessing to either of those countries.—Mr. Frederic Harrison writes eloquently on the French crisis; he is very severe on the Marshal, De Broglie, Fourtou, and their followers; but the most interesting part of his essay, we think, is where he depicts Radicalism as it exists in the imagination of the reactionary party, and as it exists in the conception of its adherents. According to the latter view French Radicalism is a creed sufficiently harmless and non-revolutionary to be acceptable to such men as Mr. Cross and Sir Stafford Northcote.—The Rev. J. G. Rogers, writing on "Political Dissent," asserts that Nonconformists are more determined than ever to overthrow the Establishment, because of the covert which it lends to Romanising practices. It may be questioned whether in the interest of Protestantism generally this policy is really far-sighted, for with the fall of the Church would disappear those barriers which do undoubtedly at present tend to delay the Romeward movement.—Mr. Tollemache's paper on "Eternal Punishment," written in reply to Mr. Oxenham's work on "Eschatology," would have pleased us better if the tone had been simpler and more earnest. He harps on the familiar argument of sceptics, that, as there are alleged errors of fact in the Bible, the writers of that book may have been equally in error in their statements concerning future punishment.—It is a relief to turn from all these political and theological disquisitions to a delightful paper by Mr. A. R. Wallace on "Humming Birds."

Blackwood opens with rather an amusing story, descriptive of fashionable life in New York, and entitled "The Tender Recollections of Irene MacGillicuddy." The free-and-easy method of flirting which exists across the Atlantic, and apparently with little mischief to the hearts of the flirters, is well described. The heroine and her cousin, Flora Temple, become respectively engaged to two young British noblemen, but unfortunately the Duke of Gumbo puts his veto on his son's proposed alliance with Irene. Flora is more fortunate, and the happy couple sail for Europe, leaving Irene for the present in a state of despondency, which she endeavours to alleviate by attending Bible readings.

In Fraser we have an article which will be interesting to Spiritualists, as it is a reply to Dr. Carpenter's alleged exposure of so-called Spiritualistic phenomena. An elaborate account is given of a scientific test applied to a certain medium, Miss Eva Fay. Her hands were placed in contact with the two handles of a galvanometer, an instrument of such delicacy that if she had let go for a moment, the effect would have instantly been recorded. Having her hands thus practically tied, she was shut up in a dark room, when, among other wonders, four books were handed separately from a book-case twelve feet from the medium, on their being called for by name from the adjoining room. But it must be confessed that, however they are done, the feats of these nineteenth century spirits are of a very puerile character.

There is an exceedingly interesting article in the Cornhill, by Miss F. P. Cobbe, contrasting Wales with Ireland. But when Miss Cobbe expresses her surprise that two nationalities, both of Celtic origin, should differ so widely, she scarcely makes sufficient allowance for the fact that while the Welsh remain almost as homogeneous a people as they were in the days of the Druid, successive tides of immigration have flowed over Ireland. Danes, Spaniards, English, Germans, and French, have all contributed to the population of that wonderful island—to say nothing of the Scoto-English settlement of Ulster. The "Tipperary giants," for example, are probably nearly as Anglo-Saxon in blood as the peasantry of Sussex.

Dean Stanley delivered some time since an admirable address in Bristol on "The Education of After Life," which is now reprinted in Macmillan, and which it will do all, both old and young, good to read.—Dr. Tuke's paper on "Insanity," is also worthy of serious consideration. There can be little doubt that many of the conditions of modern life conduce to lunacy, and amongst these may be numbered the absurd rage for overloading young people's brains with book-learning. Perhaps the next generation will be wiser, and will revert to the spirit of that educational system which was deemed sufficient for the youth of ancient Persia, who were taught to ride, to shoot, and to speak the truth.

A great popular want has been supplied in Messrs. Cassell's new magazine, Science for All, where all branches of Nature will be discussed and explained in a clear lucid manner, intelligible to minds of the least scientific attainment, and yet full of information valuable even to the advanced student. The first number contains a good descriptive account of the chief features of the moon by that indefatigable astronomical writer, Mr. Richard A. Proctor, a treatise on the origin and transformation of a piece of limestone," by Mr. H. Alleyne Nicholson, a readable paper on "Hunger," by Mr. Robert Wilson, while botany and hydrostatics are represented by papers from Messrs. Robert Brown and J. E. H. Gordon. The illustrations are well executed, and a good coloured diagramatic section of the earth's surface, depicting the various geological strata, deserves especial mention.

We have also to acknowledge a host of other magazines and extra numbers, among which latter are the following: "Shepherds All and Maidens Fair" (All the Year Round), "Solomon Isaacs" (Tinsley), "Our Villas" (Simpkin and Marshall), Gentleman's Annual and Belgravia Annual (Chatto and Windus), "Frozen Kisses" (A. H. Moxon), "Sylvia's Annual" and "Sixes and Sevens" (Ward, Lock, and Co.), "Golden Christmas" (F. E. Longley), and "The Haunted River" (G. Routledge and Sons).

BOOKS RECEIVED

England to Calcutta: F. W. Sims. Harrison and Sons.

Perils (2 vols.); Breccia: False or True; Ida Dalton; The Snowdrop Papers; Riven Bonds. Remington.

Manual of Dates: Townsend. F. Warne and Co.

Five Chimney Farm (3 vols.); Proud Maisie (3 vols.). S. Low and Co.

Venise: Charles Yriarte. J. Rothschild, Paris.

Two Knaves and a Queen (3 vols.); If (3 vols.). Tinsley Bros.

Vanessa Fairi; Are You My Wife? (3 vols.); From a Bed of Roses: A Sussex Idyl. Samuel Tinsley.

The Voyage of the Challenger (2 vols.); Green Pastures and Piccadilly (3 vols.); The Wise Men of Greece; Mirage (3 vols.); Young Musgrave (3 vols.). Macmillan.

Cherry Ripe (3 vols.). Bentley.

Doris Barugh (3 vols.). Hurst and Blackett.

Castle Blair (2 vols.) C. Kegan, Paul, and Co.

Leaves From My Sketch-Book (2nd Series); E. W. Cooke, R.A. The Country of the Moors; My Boyhood. John Murray.

Science and Literature in the Middle Ages: Paul Lacroix. Bickers and Son.

Hints on Household Taste; History of the Assemblage at Delhi. Longmans and Co.

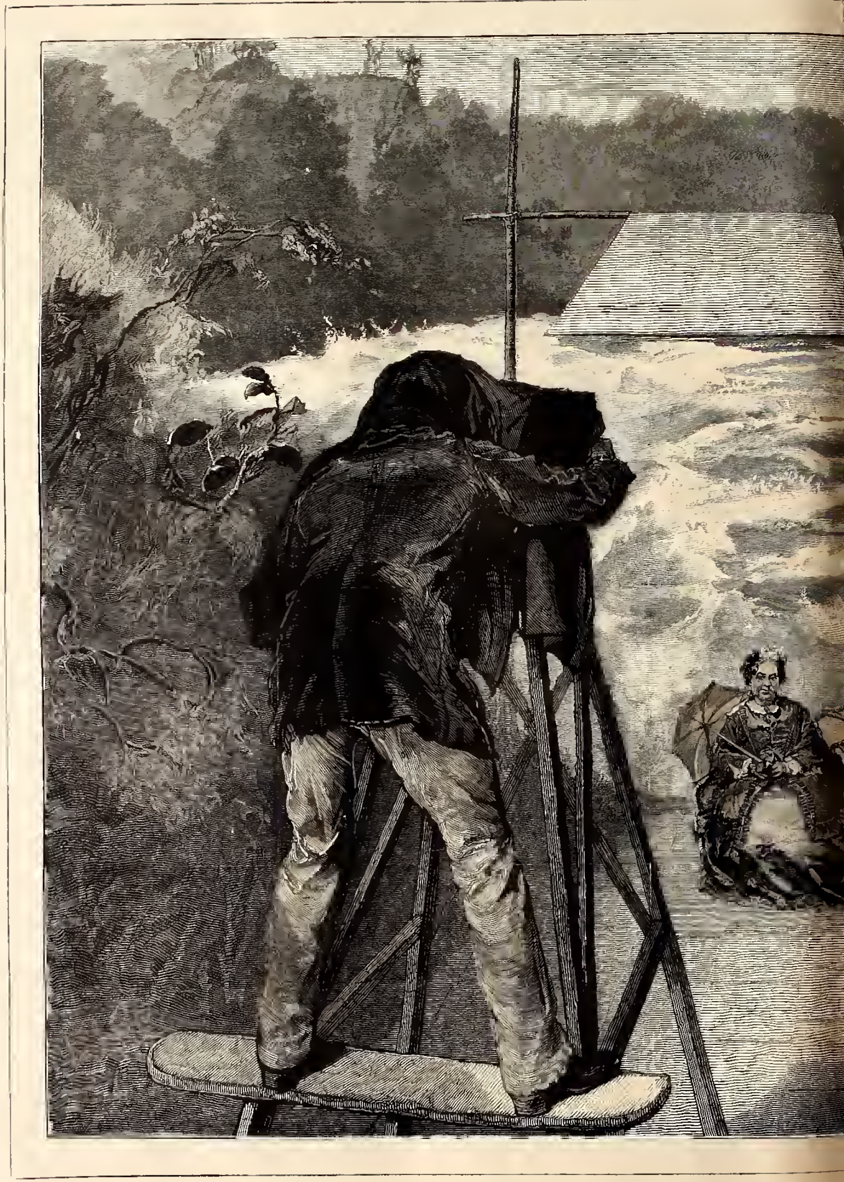
Thalessa; and some Fancy Stationery. Marcus Ward and Co.

The World Well Lost (2 vols.); Contemporary Art; North Italian Folk. Chatto and Windus.

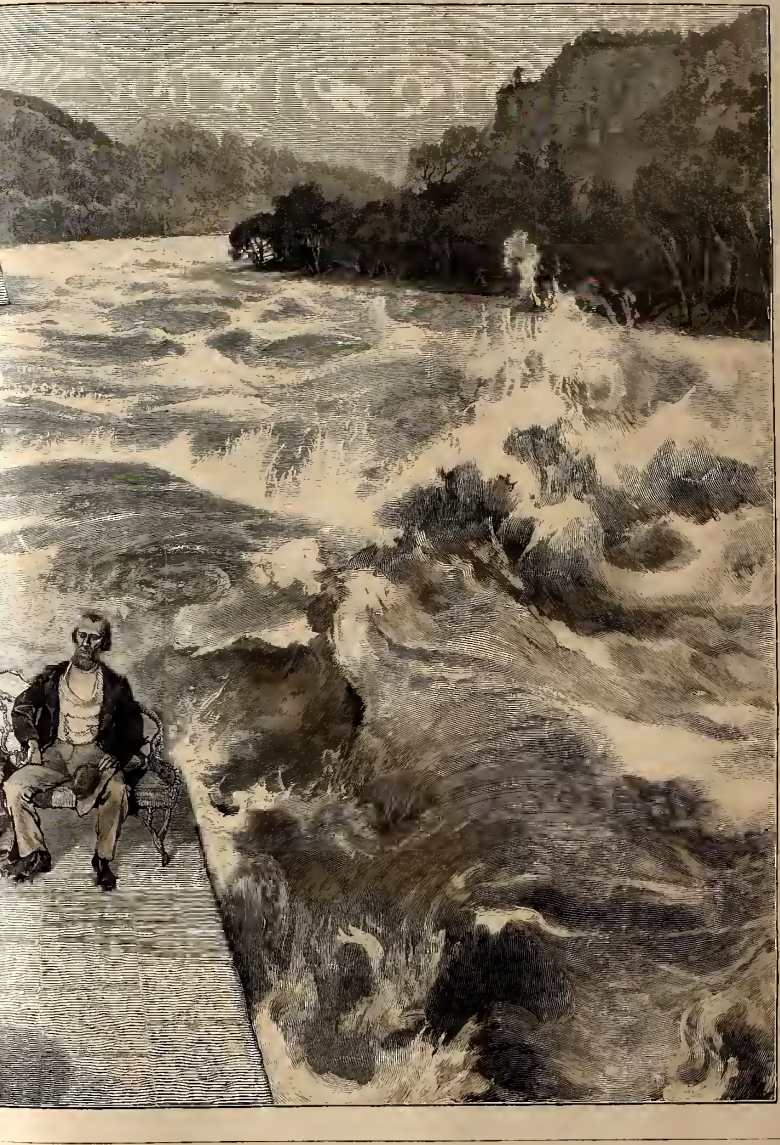
The War of Frederick I.; By Love and Law (3 vols.). Smith, Elder.

The Discordant Note; Winna (2 vols.). Charing Cross Publishing Co.

And a number of Christmas Books, Annuals, Cards, &c., from Messrs. Routledge, Cassell, Griffith and Farran, S. Low and Co., De La Rue, Nelson and Sons, &c.



THE RAPIDS BELOW NIAGARA FALLS



-THE SUBLIME AND THE RIDICULOUS

CHRISTMAS BOOKS

IV.

MESSRS. BRADBURY, AGNEW, AND CO. (London) have published a volume under the title of "International Art," which contains sixteen India proofs of steel engravings and fifty-two drawings on wood of the principal works of art exhibited in the gallery of the Centennial Exhibition, Philadelphia. The steel engravings are very beautifully executed, but the wood engravings are somewhat uneven. The steel plates, by the way, bear the imprint of an American publisher, as if they had been published simultaneously in both countries. The work will form a handsome and welcome gift-book for the season.

M. Viollet-le-Duc's "Treatise on the Constitution and Transformations of Mont Blanc" has been published by Messrs. Low and Co., with the hundred and twenty diagrams which illustrated the original French edition. In these days of Alpine travel such a work is sure to command attention, and the thoroughly practical character of the book has been carefully preserved by Mr. Bucknall in his translation. As an exhaustive treatise on Mont Blanc, this volume will no doubt be long regarded as the standard authority.

"Spenser for Children," by M. H. Towry, with illustrations in colours by Walter J. Morgan (Chatto and Windus), is a somewhat hazardous attempt to render the beauties of Spenser intelligible to young folks. The author has been fairly successful in her task, but the gems of the book are the coloured illustrations, which are admirably designed and tastefully printed. It is a pity the book is not better bound. The copy before us is all to pieces after a very slight turning over of the leaves.

Our old favourite, Routledge's "Every Boy's Annual" (Routledge), is more than usually varied in its contents, and is full of stories of adventure by land and by sea, from the pens of such writers as Jules Verne, Mrs. Riddell, Lieutenant Low, Rev. J. G. Wood, Colonel Drayson, and W. W. Fenn.

"Peter Parley's Annual" (Ben George), which has reached its thirty-seventh year of publication, is decidedly an improvement upon its predecessors, especially in its illustrations. The oil pictures are very bright and attractive. The letterpress also is of a higher quality than usual, and will tend to render this old favourite more popular than ever.

"Adventures in the Air" (Stanford) is a translation from the French of M. De Fonvielle's memorable experiences of great aeronauts. As a consecutive history of the main attempts that have been made to achieve the conquest of the air this volume will be found very useful and interesting. Its value is enhanced by the revision the proofs have received at the hands of Messrs. Glaisher and Coxwell. The history is brought down to the latest date, the final chapter including the most recent ideas as to the use of balloons in Arctic Exploration.

"The Holiday Book" (W. P. Nimmo) is a series of stories and sketches which are connected only in the sense in which the papers in a kite's tail are—by being put together. They are all, however, well worth reading, being from the pen of the genial writer who is here pleased to dub himself Richard Rowe.

"The Snowdrop Papers" (Remington and Co.) is one of those little volumes which always puzzle a reviewer to discover why they have been published. The sketches by Wallis Mackay are very meagre and scratchy, and the text has an amateurish look of lengthened sweetness long drawn out.

"The Magic Valley," by E. Keary (Macmillan), is a beautiful little book, with charming illustrations by E. V. B. The story is simply but cleverly told, and, if we mistake not, this will be a popular volume with the youngsters.

"Mottoes and Aphorisms from Shakespeare" (John Hogg) is, as its title denotes, a collection of sayings from our national poet. Its claim to excellence over other works of the same kind consists in a very good index of words and ideas which renders the book a very handy one for reference.

"Wild Cat Tower," by G. Christopher Davies (Warne and Co.), is a story of the adventures of four boys in pursuit of sport and natural history in the North Counties. It is beautifully illustrated, and is written in a spirited and entertaining style, which is sure to find favour with boys.

"The Maid of Norway, an Historical Romance" (Chatto and Windus), is a translation by Mrs. Robert Birkbeck of Munch's "Pigen fra Norge." It is the story of Princess Margaret, the only child of King Eric, of Norway, who, by the death of her grandfather, Alexander III., became heir to the throne of Scotland. How she was betrothed to the son of Edward I., how she sickened and died after landing in Orkney, on her way to take possession of her crown, is all told prettily enough by Mrs. Birkbeck, whose work bears very few traces of being a translation. A series of pen and ink sketches of Norwegian scenery, by Mr. Birkbeck, form very attractive chapter headings.

"Fair Else, Duke Ulrich, and Other Tales" (Warne and Co.), is a collection of stories by the talented authoress of "Mademoiselle Mori." The leading one, "Fair Else," is very interesting, and particularly suitable for girls' reading.

"Mother Goose's Nursery Rhymes and Fairy Tales" (Routledge) is a pretty volume full of capital illustrations by Sir John Gilbert, Tenniel, Walter Crane, Harrison Weir, &c. There are altogether upwards of four hundred engravings, and many of them are full-page. It is without doubt, we should say, the best collection of its kind.

Mr. Douglas Straight, who, under the pseudonym of "Sydney Daryl," has long been a popular contributor to our magazine literature, has published a collection of the best of his old sketches under the title of "Old Pictures in a New Frame" (Warne and Co.). The volume will make an acceptable prize-book for children of ten or twelve.

"The Heroes of Young America," by Ascot R. Hope (Stanford) is a little different in style to the schoolboy stories, for which this writer is famous. It is a brightly-written narrative of the adventures and perils of the English pioneers who first settled in North America, and is sufficiently detailed and painstaking to make it a popular and reliable history of that interesting period.

"A Book about Travelling, Past and Present," by T. A. Croal (Nimmo) is a series of pictures, sketchy, perhaps, in some parts, but fairly accurate, of the modes of travel that have been or still remain in use in this country. It is an interesting compilation, and traces its subject from the sedan chair in 1775 to the railways of 1875.

The Honourable Mrs. Greene is too well known as a writer for the young to need recommendation, and this collection of short stories, "God's Silver, or, Youthful Days" (Warne and Co.) will not disappoint admirers.

"The Catacombs of Rome, Historical and Descriptive" (Nelson) is a pretty little volume, which gives from a variety of sources all the leading facts without entering into controverted questions respecting the interesting memorials which constitute "underground Rome."

"Brave Little Heart" (Routledge) is a charmingly told story, reprinted from Little Folks, with some very tasteful illustrations by Mrs. Staples.

"King Hetel's Daughter; or, the Fair Gudrun" (Warne), is a well-told romance of the Norsemen, in which the weird quaintness of the Northern legends is well preserved.

"The Cuckoo Clock," by Ennis Graham (Macmillan), is another of those fascinating fairy stories which the author of "Carrots" knows so well how to indite. It is charmingly written, and characteristically illustrated by Walter Crane.

Five gift books from Mr. Nimmo, "The Boys of Willoughby School," "Harvey Sinclair," "Bible Jewels," "Bible Wonders," and "Rills from the Fountain of Life," will make admirable reward books for Sunday School.

The History of a Crime:

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

II.

THE SECOND DAY—THE STRUGGLE

II.

FROM THE BASTILLE TO THE RUE DE COTTE

THE Place de la Bastille was at the same time empty and crowded. Three regiments in battle array were there; not one passer-by.

Four harnessed batteries were drawn up at the foot of the column. Here and there knots of officers talked together in a low voice,—sinister men.

One of these groups, the principal, attracted my attention. That one was silent, there was no talking. There were several men on horseback; one in front of the others, in a general's uniform, with a hat surmounted with black feathers, behind this man were two colonels, and behind the colonels a party of aides-de-camp and staff officers. This lace-trimmed company remained immovable, and as though pointing like a dog between the column and the entrance to the Faubourg. At a short distance from this group, spread out, and occupying the whole of the square, were the regiments drawn up and the cannon in their batteries.

My driver again stopped.

"Go on," I said; "drive into the Faubourg."

"But they will prevent us, sir."

"We shall see."

The truth was that they did not prevent us.

The driver continued on his way, but hesitatingly, and at a walking pace. The appearance of a fiacre in the square had caused some surprise, and the inhabitants began to come out of their houses. Several came up to my carriage.

We passed by a group of men with huge epaulettes. These men, whose tactics we understood later on, did not even appear to see us.

The emotion which I had felt on the previous day before a regiment of cuirassiers again seized me. To see before me the assassins of the country, at a few steps, standing upright, in the insolence of a peaceful triumph, was beyond my strength; I could not contain myself. I drew out my sash. I held it in my hand, and putting my arm and head out of the window of the fiacre, and shaking the sash, I shouted:

"Soldiers! Look at this sash. It is the symbol of Law, it is the National Assembly visible. Where this sash is there is Right. Well then, this is what Right commands you. You are being deceived. Go back to your duty. It is a Representative of the People who is speaking to you, and he who represents the People represents the Army. Soldiers, before becoming soldiers you have been peasants, you have been workmen, you have been and you are still citizens. Citizens, listen to me when I speak to you. The Law alone has the right to command you. Well, to-day the law is violated. By whom? By you. Louis Bonaparte draws you into a crime. Soldiers, you who are Honour, listen to me, for I am Duty. Soldiers, Louis Bonaparte assassinates the Republic. Defend it. Louis Bonaparte is a bandit; all his accomplices will follow him to the galleys. They are there already. He who is worthy of the galleys is in the galleys. To merit fetters is to wear them. Look at that man who is at your head, and who dares to command you. You take him for a general, he is a convict."

The soldiers seemed petrified.

Some one who was there (I thank this generous devoted spirit) touched my arm, and whispered in my ear, "You will get yourself shot."

But I did not heed, and I listened to nothing.

I continued, still waving my sash:

"You, who are there, dressed up like a general, it is you to whom I speak, sir. You know who I am; I am a Representative of the People, and I know who you are. I have told you you are a criminal. Now, do you wish to know my name? This is it."

And I called out my name to him.

And I added:

"Now tell me yours."

He did not answer.

I continued:

"Very well, I do not want to know your name as a general, I shall know your number as a galley slave."

The man in the general's uniform hung his head, the others were silent. I could read all their looks, however, although they did not raise their eyes. I saw them cast down, and I felt that they were furious. I had an overwhelming contempt for them, and I passed on.

What was the name of this General? I did not know then, and I do not know now.

One of the apologies for the Coup d'État published in England in relating this incident, and characterising it as "an insensate and culpable provocation," states that "the moderation shown by the military leaders on this occasion did honour to General ——" We leave to the author of this panegyric the responsibility of that name and of this eulogium.

I entered the Rue du Faubourg St. Antoine.

My driver, who now knew my name, hesitated no longer, and whipped up his horse. These Paris coachmen are a brave and intelligent race.

As I passed the first shops of the main street nine o'clock sounded from the Church of St. Paul.

"Good," I said to myself, "I am in time."

The Faubourg presented an extraordinary aspect. The entrance was guarded, but not closed, by two companies of infantry. Two other companies were drawn up in echelons further on, at short distances, occupying the street, but leaving a free passage. The shops, which were open at the end of the Faubourg, were half closed a hundred yards farther up. The inhabitants, amongst whom I noticed numerous workmen in blouses, were talking together at their doors, and watching the proceedings. I noticed at each step the placards of the Coup d'État untouched.

Beyond the fountain which stands at the corner of the Rue de Charonne the shops were closed. Two lines of soldiers extended on either side of the street of the Faubourg on the kerb of the pavement; the soldiers were stationed at every five paces, with the butts of their muskets resting on their hips, their chests drawn in, their right hand on the trigger, ready to bring to the present, keeping silence in the attitude of expectation. From that point a piece of cannon was stationed at the mouth of each of the side streets which open out of the main road of the Faubourg. Occasionally there was a mortar. To obtain a clear idea of this military arrangement one must imagine two rosaries, extending along the two sides of the Faubourg St. Antoine, of which the soldiers should form the links and the cannon the beads.

Meanwhile my driver became uneasy. He turned round to me and said: "It looks as though we should find barricades out there, sir; shall we turn back?"

"Keep on," I replied.

He continued to drive straight on.

Suddenly it became impossible to do so. A company of infantry ranged three deep occupied the whole of the street from one pavement to the other. On the right there was a small street. I said to the driver,

"Take that turning."

He turned to the right and then to the left. We turned into a labyrinth of streets.

Suddenly I heard a shot.

The driver asked me:

"Which way are we to go, sir?"

"In the direction in which you hear the shots."

We were in a narrow street, on my left I saw the inscription above a door, "Grand Lavoir," and on my right a square with a central building, which looked like a market. The square and the street were deserted. I asked the driver,

"What street are we in?"

"In the Rue de Cotte."

"Where is the Café Roysin?"

"Straight before us."

"Drive there."

He drove on, but slowly. There was another explosion, this time close by us, the end of the street became filled with smoke; At the moment we were passing No. 22, which has a side door above which I read, "Petit Lavoir."

Suddenly a voice called out to the driver:

"Stop!"

The driver pulled up, and the window of the fiacre being down, a hand was stretched towards mine. I recognised Alexander Rey.

This daring man was pale.

"Go no further," said he, "all is at an end."

"What do you mean? All at an end?"

"Yes, they must have anticipated the time appointed; the barricade is taken; I have just come from it. It is a few steps from here straight before us."

And he added:

"Baudin is killed."

The smoke rolled away from the end of the street.

"Look," said Alexander Rey to me.

I saw, a hundred steps before us, at the junction of the Rue de Cotte and the Rue Ste. Marguerite, a low barricade which the soldiers were pulling down. A corpse was being borne away.

It was Baudin.

III.

THE ST. ANTOINE BARRICADE

THIS is what had happened.

During that same night, and as early as four o'clock in the morning, De Flotte was in the Faubourg St. Antoine. He was anxious, in case any movement took place before daylight, that a Representative of the People should be present, and he was one of those who, when the glorious insurrection of Right should burst forth, wished to unearth the paving-stones for the first barricade.

But nothing was stirring. De Flotte, alone in the midst of this deserted and sleeping Faubourg, wandered from street to street throughout the night.

Day breaks late in December. Before the first streaks of dawn De Flotte was at the rendezvous opposite the Lenoir Market.

This spot was only weakly guarded. The only troops in the neighbourhood were the post itself of the Lenoir Market, and another post at a short distance which occupied the guard-house at the corner of the Faubourg and the Rue de Montreuil, close to the old Tree of Liberty planted in 1793 by Santerre. Neither of these posts were commanded by officers.

De Flotte reconnoitred the position. He walked some time up and down the pavement, and then seeing no one coming as yet, and fearing to excite attention, he went away, and returned to the side streets of the Faubourg.

For his part Aubry (du Nord) got up at five o'clock. Having gone home in the middle of the night, on his return from the Rue Popincourt, he had only taken three hours' rest. His porter told him that some suspicious persons had inquired for him during the evening of the 2nd, and that they had been to the house opposite, No. 12 of the same street, Rue Racine, to arrest Huguenin. This determined Aubry to leave his house before daylight.

He walked to the Faubourg St. Antoine. As he reached the place of rendezvous he met Cournet and the others from the Rue Popincourt. They were almost immediately joined by Malardier.

It was dawn. The Faubourg was solitary. They walked along wrapt in thought, and speaking in a low voice. Suddenly an impetuous and singular procession passed them.

They looked round. It was a detachment of Lancers which surrounded something which in the dim light they recognised to be a police-van. The vehicle rolled noiselessly along the macadamised road.

They were debating what this could mean when a second and similar group appeared, then a third, and then a fourth. Ten police vans passed in this manner, following each other very closely, and almost touching.

"Those are our colleagues!" exclaimed Aubry (du Nord).

In truth, the last batch of the Representatives, the prisoners of the Quai d'Orsay, the batch destined for Vincennes, was passing through the Faubourg. It was about seven o'clock in the morning. Some shops were being opened and were lighted inside, and a few passers-by came out of the houses.

Three carriages defiled one after the other, closed, guarded, dreary, dumb; no voice came out, no cry, no whisper. They were carrying off in the midst of swords, of sabres, and of lances, with the rapidity and fury of the whirlwind, something which kept silence; and that something which they were carrying off, and which maintained this sinister silence, was the broken Tribune, the Sovereignty of the Assemblies, the supreme initiative whence all civilisation is derived, it was the word which contains the future of the world, it was the speech of France!

A last carriage arrived, which by some chance had been delayed. It was about two or three hundred yards behind the principal convoy, and was only escorted by three Lancers. It was not a police-van, it was an omnibus, the only one in the convoy. Behind the conductor, who was a police agent, there could distinctly be seen the Representatives heaped up in the interior. It seemed easy to rescue them.

Cournet appealed to the passers-by: "Citizens," he cried, "these are your Representatives, who are being carried off! You have just seen them pass in the vans of convicts! Bonaparte arrests them contrary to every law. Let us rescue them! To arms!"

A knot formed of men in blouses and of workmen going to work. A shout came from the knot, "Long live the Republic!" and some men rushed towards the vehicle. The carriage and the Lancers broke into a gallop.

"To arms!" repeated Cournet.

"To arms!" repeated the men of the people.

There was a moment of impulse. Who knows what might have happened? It would have been a singular accident if the first barricade against the Coup d'État had been made with this omnibus, which, after having aided in crime, would thus have aided in the punishment. But at the moment when the people threw themselves on the vehicle they saw several of the Representative-prisoners which it contained sign to them with both hands to refrain. "Eh!" said a workman, "they do not wish it!"

A second repeated: "They do not wish for liberty!"

Another added: "They did not wish us to have it, they do not wish it for themselves."

All was said, and the omnibus was allowed to pass on. A moment afterwards the rear-guard of the escort came up and passed by at a sharp trot, and the group which surrounded Aubry (du Nord), Malardier, and Cournet dispersed.

The Café Roysin had just opened. It may be remembered that the large hall of this café had served for the meeting of a famous club in 1848. It was there, it may also be remembered, that the rendezvous had been settled.

The Café Roysin is entered by a passage opening out upon the street, a lobby of some yards in length is next crossed, and then comes a large hall, with high windows, and looking-glasses on the walls, containing in the centre several billiard-tables, some small marble-topped tables, chairs, and velvet-covered benches. It was this hall, badly arranged however for a meeting where we could have deliberated, which had been the hall of the Roysin Club. Cournet, Aubry, and Malardier installed themselves there. On entering they did not disguise who they were; they were welcomed, and shown an exit through the garden in case of necessity.

De Flotte had just joined them.

Eight o'clock was striking when the Representatives began to arrive. Bruckner, Maigne, and Brillier first, and then successively Charamaule, Cassall, Dulac, Bourzat, Madier de Montjau, and Baudin. Bourzat, on account of the mud, as was his custom, wore wooden shoes. Whoever thought Bourzat a peasant would be mistaken. He rather resembled a Benedictine monk. Bourzat, with his Southern imagination, his quick intelligence, keen, lettered, refined, possesses an encyclopædia in his head, and wooden shoes on his feet. Why not? He is Mind and People. The ex-Constituent Bastide came in with Madier de Montjau. Baudin shook the hands of all with warmth, but he did not speak. He was pensive. "What is the matter with you, Baudin?" asked Aubry (du Nord). "Are you mournful?" "I?" said Baudin, raising his head, "I have never been more happy."

Did he feel himself already chosen? When we are so near death, all radiant with glory, which smiles upon us through the gloom, perhaps we are conscious of it.

A certain number of men, strangers to the Assembly, all as determined as the Representatives themselves, accompanied them and surrounded them.

Cournet was the leader. Amongst them there were workmen, but no blouses. In order not to alarm the middle classes, the workmen had been requested, notably those employed by Derosne and Cail, to come in coats.

Baudin had with him a copy of the Proclamation which I had dictated to him on the previous day. Cournet unfolded it and read it. "Let us at once post it up in the Faubourg," said he. "The people must know that Louis Bonaparte is outlawed." A lithographic workman who was there offered to print it without delay. All the Representatives present signed it, and they added my name to their signatures. Aubry (du Nord) headed it with these words, "National Assembly." The workman carried off the Proclamation, and kept his word. Some hours afterwards Aubry (du Nord), and later on a friend of Cournet's, named Gay, met him in the Faubourg du Temple, paste-pot in hand, posting the Proclamation at every street corner, even next to the Maupas placard, which threatened the penalty of death to any one who should be found posting an appeal to arms. Groups read the two bills at the same time. We may mention an incident which ought to be noted, a sergeant of the line, in uniform, in red trousers, accompanied him and protected him. He was doubtless a soldier who had lately left the service.

The time fixed on the preceding evening for the general rendezvous was from nine to ten in the morning. This hour had been chosen so that there should be time to give notice to all the members of the Left; it was expedient to wait until the Representatives should arrive, so that the group should the more resemble an Assembly, and that its manifestations should have more authority on the Faubourg.

Several of the Representatives who had already arrived had no sash of office. Some were made hastily in a neighbouring house with strips of red, white, and blue calico, and were brought to them. Baudin and De Flotte were amongst those who girded on these improvised sashes.

Meanwhile it was not yet nine o'clock, when impatience already began to be manifested around them.*

Many shared this glorious impatience.

Baudin wished to wait.

"Do not anticipate the hour," said he; "let us allow our colleagues time to arrive."

But they murmured round Baudin, "No, begin, give the signal, go outside. The Faubourg only waits to see your sashes to rise. You are few in number, but they know that your friends will rejoin you. That is sufficient. Begin."

The result proved that this undue haste could only produce a failure. Meanwhile they considered that the first example which the Representatives of the People ought to set was personal courage. The spark must not be allowed to die out. To march the first, to march at the head, such was their duty. The semblance of any hesitation would have been in truth more disastrous than any degree of rashness.

Schœlcher is of an heroic nature, he has the grand impatience of danger.

"Let us go," he cried; "our friends will join us, let us go outside."

They had no arms.

"Let us disarm the post which is over there," said Schœlcher.

They left the Salle Roysin in order, two by two, arm in arm. Fifteen or twenty men of the people escorted them. They went before them, crying, "Long live the Republic! To arms!"

Some children preceded and followed them, shouting, "Long live the Mountain!"

The entrances of the closed shops were half opened. A few men appeared at the doors, a few women showed themselves at the windows. Knots of workmen going to their work watched them pass. They cried, "Long live our Representatives! Long live the Republic!"

Sympathy was everywhere, but insurrection nowhere. The procession gathered few adherents on the way.

A man who was leading a saddled horse joined them. They did not know this man, nor whence this horse came. It seemed as if the man offered his services to any one who wished to fly. Representative Dulac ordered this man to be off.

In this manner they reached the guard-house of the Rue de Montreuil. At their approach the sentry gave the alarm, and the soldiers came out of the guard-house in disorder.

Schœler calm, impassive, in ruffles and a white tie, clothed, as usual, in black, buttoned to the neck in his tight frock coat, with the intrepid and brotherly air of a Quaker, walked straight up to them.

"Comrades," he said to them, "we are the Representatives of the People, and come in the name of the People to demand your arms for the defence of the Constitution and of the Laws."

The post allowed itself to be disarmed. The sergeant alone made any show of resistance, but they said to him: "You are alone," and he yielded. The Representatives distributed the guns and the cartridges to the resolute band which surrounded them."

Some soldiers exclaimed: "Why do you take away our muskets? We would fight for you and with you!"

The Representatives consulted whether they should accept this offer. Schœlcher was inclined to do so. But one of them remarked that some Mobile Guards had made the same overtures to the insurgents of June, and had turned against the Insurrection the arms which the Insurrection had left them.

The muskets therefore were not restored.

The disarming having been accomplished, the muskets were counted; there were fifteen of them.

"We are a hundred and fifty," said Cournet, "we have not enough muskets."

"Well then," said Schœlcher, "where is there a post?"

"At the Lenoir Market."

"Let us disarm it."

With Schœlcher at their head and escorted by fifteen armed men the Representatives proceeded to the Lenoir Market. The post of the Lenoir Market allowed themselves to be disarmed even more willingly than the post in the Rue de Montreuil. The soldiers turned themselves round, so that the cartridges might be taken from their pouches.

The muskets were immediately loaded.

"Now," exclaimed De Flotte, "we have thirty guns, let us look for a street corner, and raise a barricade."

There were at that time about two hundred combatants.

They went up the Rue de Montreuil. After some fifty steps Schœlcher said: "Where are we going? We are turning our backs on the Bastille. We are turning our backs upon the conflict."

They returned towards the Faubourg.

They shouted: "To arms!" They were answered by "Long live our Representatives!" But only a few young men joined them. It was evident that the breeze of insurrection was not blowing.

"Never mind," said De Flotte, "let us begin the battle. Let us achieve the glory of being the first killed."

As they reached the point where the streets Ste. Marguerite and De Cotte open out and divide the Faubourg, a peasant's cart laden with dung entered the Rue Ste. Marguerite.

"Here," exclaimed De Flotte.

They stopped the dung cart, and overturned it in the middle of the Faubourg St. Antoine.

A milk woman came up.

They overturned the milk cart.

A baker was passing in his bread cart. He saw what was being done, attempted to escape, and urged his horse to a gallop. Two or three street Arabs—those children of Paris brave as lions and agile as cats—sped after the baker, ran past his horse, which was still galloping, stopped it, and brought back the cart to the barricade which had been begun.

They overturned the bread cart.

An omnibus came up on the road from the Bastille.

"Very well!" said the conductor. "I see what is going on."

He descended with a good grace, and told his passengers to get down, while the coachman unharnessed his horses and went away shaking his cloak.

They overturned the omnibus.

The four vehicles placed end to end barely barred the street of the Faubourg, which in this part is very wide. While putting them in line the men of the barricade said,

"Let us not injure the carts more than we can help."

This formed an indifferent barricade, very low, too short, and which left the pavements free on either side.

At this moment a staff officer passed by, followed by an orderly, saw the barricade, and fled at a gallop.

Schœlcher calmly inspected the overturned vehicles. When he reached the peasant's cart, which made a higher heap than the others, he said, "That is the only good one."

The barricade grew larger. They threw a few empty baskets upon it, which made it thicker and higher without strengthening it.

They were still working when a child came up to them, shouting, "The soldiers!"

In truth two companies arrived from the Bastille, at the double, through the Faubourg, told off in squads at short distances apart, and barring the whole of the street.

The doors and the windows were hastily closed.

During this time, at a corner of the barricade, Bastide impassive was gravely telling a story to Madier de Montjau. "Madier," said he, "nearly two hundred years ago the Prince de Condé, ready to give battle in this very Faubourg St. Antoine, where we now are, asked an officer who was accompanying him, 'Have you ever seen a battle lost?'—'No, sire.' 'Well, then, you will see one now.'—Madier, I tell you to-day,—you will speedily see a barricade taken."

In the mean while those who were armed had assumed their places for the conflict behind the barricade.

The critical moment drew nigh.

"Citizens," cried Schœlcher, "do not fire a shot. When the Army and the Faubourgs fight the blood of the People is shed on both sides. Let us speak to the soldiers first."

He mounted on one of the baskets which heightened the barricade. The other Representatives arranged themselves near him on the omnibus. Malardier and Dulac were on his right. Dulac said to him, "You scarcely know me, Citizen Schœlcher, but I love you. Let me have the charge of remaining by your side. I only belong to the second rank in the Assembly, but I want to be in the first rank of the battle."

At this moment some men in blouses, those whom the Second of December had enlisted, appeared at the corner of the Rue Ste. Marguerite, close to the barricade, and shouted, "Down with the 'Twenty-five francs!'"

Baudin, who had already selected his post for the combat, and who was standing on the barricade, looked fixedly at these men, and said to them:

"You shall see how one can die for 'twenty-five francs!'"

There was a noise in the street. Some few doors which had remained half opened were closed. The two attacking columns had arrived in sight of the barricade. Further on could be seen confusedly other lines of bayonets. They were those which had barred my passage.

Schœlcher, raising his arm with authority, signed to the Captain, who commanded the first squad, to halt.

The Captain made a negative sign with his sword. The whole of the Second of December was in these two gestures. The Law said, "Halt!" The Sabre answered, "No!"

The two companies continued to advance, but slowly and keeping at the same distance from each other.

Schœlcher came down from the barricade into the street. De Flotte, Dulac, Malardier, Brillier, Maigne, and Bruckner followed him.

Then was seen a grand spectacle.

Seven Representatives of the People, armed only with their sashes, that is to say, majestically clothed with Law and Right, advanced in the street beyond the barricade, and marched straight to the soldiers, who awaited them with their guns pointed at them.

The other Representatives who had remained at the barricade made their last preparations for resistance. The combatants maintained an intrepid bearing. The Naval Lieutenant Cournet towered above them all with his tall stature. Baudin, still standing on the overturned omnibus, leaned half over the barricade.

On seeing the Representatives approach the soldiers and their officers were for the moment bewildered. Meanwhile the Captain signed to the Representatives to stop.

They stopped, and Schœlcher said in an impressive voice:

"Soldiers! we are the Representatives of the Sovereign People, we are your Representatives, we are the Elect of Universal Suffrage. In the name of the Constitution, in the name of Universal Suffrage, in the name of the Republic, we, who are the National Assembly, we, who are the Law, order you to join us, we summon you to obey. We ourselves are your leaders. The Army belongs to the People, and the Representatives of the People are the Chiefs of the Army. Soldiers! Louis Bonaparte violates the Constitution, we have outlawed him. Obey us."

The officer who was in command, a captain named Petit, did not allow him to finish.

"Gentleman," he said, "I have my orders. I belong to the People. I am a Republican as you are, but I am only an instrument."

"You know the Constitution?" said Schœlcher.

"I only know my instructions."

"There is an instruction above all other instructions," continued Schœlcher, "obligatory upon the Soldier as upon the Citizen—the Law."

He turned again towards the soldiers to harangue them, but the captain cried out to him:

"Not another word! You shall not go on! If you add one word I shall give the order to fire."

"What does that matter to us?" said Schœlcher.

At this moment an officer arrived on horseback. It was the major of the regiment. He whispered for a moment to the captain.

"Gentlemen! Representatives!" continued the captain, waving his sword, "withdraw, or I shall fire."

"Fire!" shouted De Flotte.

The Representatives—strange and heroic copy of Fontenoy—took off their hats, and faced the muskets.

Schœlcher alone kept his hat on his head, and waited with his arms crossed.

"Fix bayonets," said the captain. And turning towards the squads, "Charge!"

"Vive la République!" cried out the Representatives.

The bayonets were lowered, the companies moved forward, the soldiers came on at the double upon the motionless Representatives.

It was a terrible and superb moment.

The seven Representatives saw the bayonets at their breasts without a word, without a gesture, without one step backwards. But the hesitation which was not in their soul was in the heart of the soldiers.

The soldiers felt distinctly that this was a double stain upon their uniform—the outrage upon the Representatives of the People, which was treason, and the slaughter of unarmed men,

* "There was also some misunderstanding respecting the appointed time. Some made a mistake, and thought it was nine o'clock. The first arrivals impatiently awaited their colleagues. They were, as we have said, some twelve or fifteen in number at half-past eight.—'Time is being lost,' exclaimed one of them who had hardly entered; 'let us gird on our sashes; let us show the Representatives to the People; let us join it in raising barricades.' We shall perhaps save the country, at all events we shall save the honour of our party. Come let us to the barricades!' This advice was immediately and unanimously acclaimed; one alone, Citizen Baudin, interposed the forcible objection, 'We are not sufficiently numerous to adopt such a resolution.' But he spiritedly joined in the general enthusiasm, and with a calm conscience, after having reserved the principle, he was not the last to gird on his sash".—SCHŒLCHER Histoire des Crimes du 2nd Decembre, p. 130—151.

which was cowardice. Now treason and cowardice are two epaulettes to which a general sometimes becomes reconciled, the soldier—never.

When the bayonets were so close to the Representatives that they touched their breasts, they turned aside of their own accord, and the soldiers by an unanimous movement passed between the Representatives without doing them any harm. Schœlcher alone had his coat pierced in two places, and in his opinion this was awkwardness instead of intention. One of the soldiers who faced him wished to push him away from the captain, and touched him with his bayonet. The point encountered the book of the addresses of the Representatives which Schœlcher had in pocket, and only pierced his clothing.

A soldier said to De Flotte, "Citizen, we do not wish to hurt you."

Nevertheless a soldier came up to Bruckner, and pointed his gun at him.

"Well," said Bruckner, "fire." The soldier, touched, lowered his arm, and shook Bruckner's hand.

It was singular that, notwithstanding the order given by the officers, the two companies successively came up to the Representatives, charged with the bayonet, and turned aside. Instructions may order, but instinct prevails; instructions may be crime, but instinct is honour. Major P—— said afterwards,

"They had told us that we should have to deal with brigands, we had to deal with heroes."

Meanwhile those on the barricade were growing uneasy, and seeing their colleagues surrounded, and wishing to succour them, they fired a musket shot. This unfortunate shot killed a soldier between De Flotte and Schœlcher.

The officer who commanded the second attacking squad passed close to Schœlcher as the poor soldier fell. Schœlcher pointed out the fallen man to the officer, and said to him, "Lieutenant, look!"

The officer answered by a gesture of despair,

"What would you have us do?"

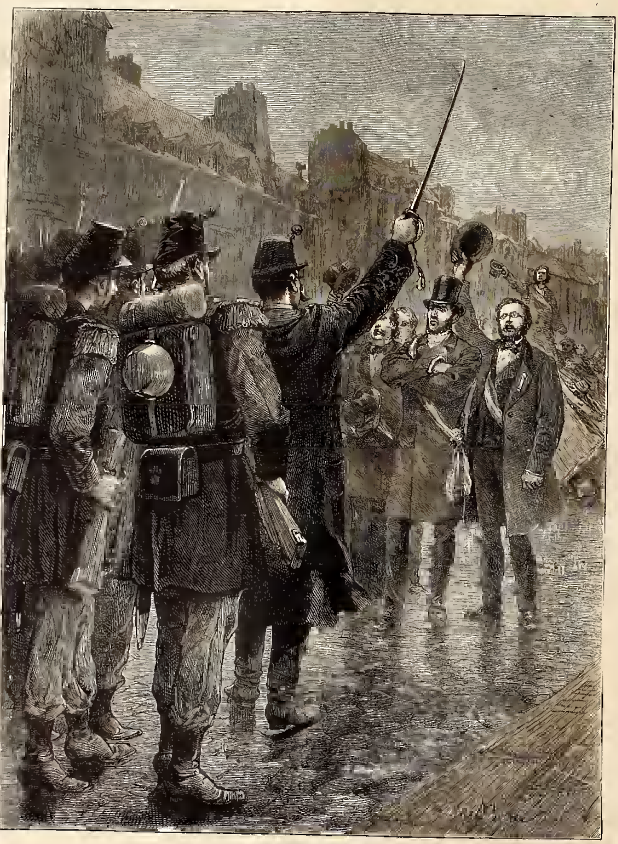
The two companies replied to the shot by a general volley, and rushed to the assault of the barricade, leaving behind them the seven Representatives astounded at being still alive.

The barricade replied by a volley, but it could not hold out. It was carried.

Baudin was killed.

He had remained standing in his position on the omnibus. Three balls reached him. One struck him in the right eye and penetrated into the brain. He fell. He never regained consciousness. Half-an-hour afterwards he was dead. His body was taken to the Ste. Marguerite Hospital.

Bourzat, who was close to Baudin, with Aubry (du Nord), had his coat pierced by a ball.



THE ST. ANTOINE BARRICADE

"Fix bayonets," said the captain. And turning towards the squads, "Charge!" "Vive la République!" cried out the Representatives.

We must again remark a curious incident,—the soldiers made no prisoner on this barricade. Those who defended it dispersed through the streets of the Faubourg, or took refuge in the neighbouring houses. Representative Maigne, pushed by some affrighted women behind a door, was shut in with one of the soldiers who had just taken the barricade. A moment afterwards the soldier and the Representative went out together. The Representatives could freely leave this first field of battle.

At this solemn moment of the struggle a last glimmer of Justice and of Right still flickered, and military honesty recoiled with a sort of dread anxiety before the outrage upon which they were entering. There is the intoxication of good, and there is an intoxication of evil: this intoxication later on drowned the conscience of the Army.

The French Army is not made to commit crimes. When the struggle became prolonged, and ferocious orders of the day had to be executed, the soldiers must have been maddened. They obeyed not coldly, which would have been monstrous, but with anger, and this History will invoke as their excuse; and with many, perhaps, despair was at the root of their anger.

The fallen soldier had remained on the ground. It was Schœlcher who raised him. A few women, weeping, but brave, came out of a house. Some soldiers came up. They carried him, Schœlcher holding his head, first to a fruiterer's shop, then to the Ste. Marguerite Hospital, where they had already taken Baudin.

He was a conscript. The ball had entered his side. Through his grey overcoat, buttoned to the collar, could be seen a hole stained with blood. His head had sunk on his shoulder, his pale countenance, encircled by the chin-strap of his shako, had no longer any expression, the blood oozed out of his mouth. He seemed barely eighteen years old. Already a soldier and still a boy. He was dead.

This poor soldier was the first victim of the Coup d'État, Baudin was the second.

Before being a Republican Baudin had been a tutor. He came from that intelligent and brave race of schoolmasters ever persecuted, who have fallen from the Guizot Law into the Falloux Law, and from the Falloux Law into the Dupanloup Law. The crime of the schoolmaster is to hold a book open; that suffices, the Church condemns him. There is now, in France, in each village, a lighted torch—the schoolmaster—and a mouth which blows upon it—the curé. The schoolmasters of France, who knew how to die of hunger for Truth and for Science, were worthy that one of their race should be killed for Liberty.

The first time that I saw Baudin was at the Assembly, on January 13, 1850. I wished to speak against the Law of Instruction. I had not put my name down; Baudin's name stood second. He offered me his turn. I accepted, and I was able to speak two days afterwards, on the 15th.

Baudin was one of the targets of Sieur Dupin, for calls to order and official annoyances. He shared this honour with the Representatives Miot and Valentin.

Baudin ascended the Tribune several times. His mode of speaking, outwardly hesitating, was energetic in the main. He sat on the crest of the Mountain. He had a firm spirit and timid manners. Thence there was in his constitution an indescribable embarrassment, mingled with decision. He was a man of middle height. His face ruddy and full, his broad chest, his wide shoulders announced the robust man, the labourer-schoolmaster, the peasant-thinker. In this he resembled Bourzat. Baudin leaned his head on his shoulder, listened with intelligence, and spoke with a gentle and grave voice. He had the melancholy air and the bitter smile of the doomed.

On the evening of the Second of December I had asked him, "How old are you?" He had answered me, "Not quite thirty-three years."

"And you?" said he.

"Forty-nine."

And he replied:

"To-day we are of the same age."

He thought in truth of that to-morrow which awaited us, and in which was hidden that "perhaps" which is the great leveller.

The first shots had been fired, a Representative had fallen, and the people did not rise! What bandage had they on their eyes, what weight had they on their hearts? Alas! the gloom which Louis Bonaparte had known how to cast over his crime, far from lifting, grew denser. For the first time in the sixty years that the Providential era of Revolutions had been open, Paris, the city of intelligence, seemed not to understand!

On leaving the barricade of the Rue Ste. Marguerite, De Flotte went to the Faubourg St. Marceau, Madier de Montjau went to Belleville, Charamaule and Maigne proceeded to the Boulevards. Schœlcher, Dulac, Malardier, and Brillier again went up the Faubourg St. Antoine by the side streets which the soldiers had not yet occupied. They shouted "Vive la République!" They harangued the people on the doorsteps—"Is it the Empire that you want?" exclaimed Schœlcher. They even went as far as to sing the "Marseillaise." People took off their hats as they passed, and shouted "Long live the Representatives!" But that was all.

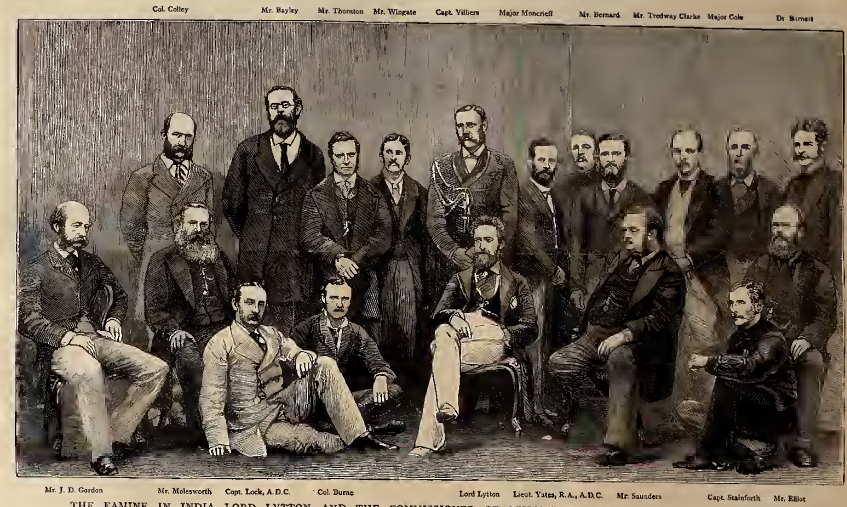
They were thirsty and weary. In the Rue de Reuilly a man came out of a door with a bottle in his hand, and offered them drink.

Sartin joined them on the way. In the Rue de Charonne they entered the meeting-place of the Association of Cabinet Makers, hoping to find there the Committee of the Association in session. There was no one there. But nothing discouraged them.

As they reached the Place de la Bastille, Dulac said to Schœlcher, "I will ask permission to leave you for an hour or two, for this reason: I am alone in Paris with my little daughter, who is seven years old. For the past week she has had scarlet fever. Yesterday, when the Coup d'État burst forth, she was at death's door. I have no one but this child in the world. I left her this morning to come with you, and she said to me, 'Papa, where are you going?' As I am not killed, I will go and see if she is not dead."

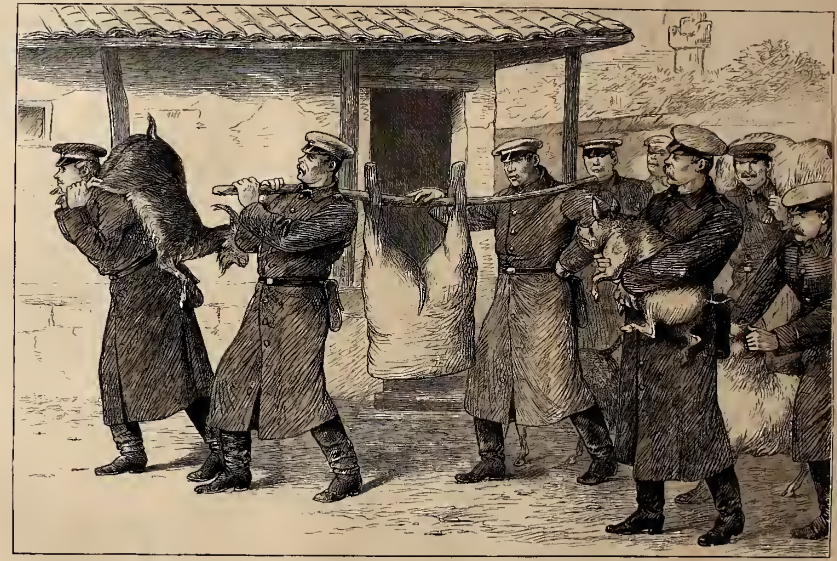
Two hours afterwards the child was still living, and we were holding a permanent sitting at No. 15, Rue Richelieu, Jules Favre, Carnot, Michel de Bourges, and myself, when Dulac entered, and said to us, "I have come to place myself at your disposal."

(To be continued)



Col. Colley
Mr. Bayley
Mr. Thornton
Mr. Wingate
Capt. Villiers
Major Moncrieff
Mr. Bernard
Mr. Tredway Clarke
Major Cole
Dr Barnett
Mr. J. D. Gordon
Mr. Molesworth
Capt. Lock, A.D.C.
Col. Burne
Lord Lytton
Lieut. Yates, R.A., A.D.C.
Mr. Saunders
Capt. Stainforth
Mr. Elliot

THE FAMINE IN INDIA—LORD LYTTON AND THE COMMISSIONER OF MYSORE HOLDING A COUNCIL AT BANGALORE



WITH THE RUSSIANS—OUTSIDE PLEVNA: THE LAND OF PLENTY, THE GUARDS DRAWING THEIR RATIONS

FOREIGN

THE WAR IN THE EAST.——The fortune of war has inclined to the Turks this week, and Suleiman Pasha reports an important victory over the Russians at Elena, which he occupied after a well-fought action, capturing a large number of prisoners and considerable quantities of arms and ammunition. As Elena is only twelve miles from Tirnova, Suleiman was expected to at once march upon this important strategical point, which, as far as can be gathered, has only been weakly garrisoned by the Russians. This success certainly does Suleiman Pasha great credit, as he completely deceived the Russians as to his real intentions by continued feints against the northern portion of the Czarevitch's army. If Tirnova falls the position of the Russian forces in the south will be seriously endangered, as a junction between the three armies of Suleiman, Reouf, and Mehemet Ali Pashas will be rendered probable, and Plevna may be relieved after all. On his side Mehemet Ali has been fighting hard on the Kamarli Heights on the southern side of the main ridge of the Balkans, where he has made a stubborn stand, after abandoning the important position of Orchanie, as well as Litakovo and Wrastschech. Driven fairly to bay, however, and able to entrench himself after the favourite manner of Ottoman commanders, Mehemet Ali has not only held his own, but on the 29th ult., and again on the 3rd inst., he inflicted a decided defeat upon the attacking army, and subsequently assuming the offensive, was reported on Thursday to be marching upon Wrastschech, whither the Russians had retreated. He is thought to have some 25,000 men under his command, but these are mainly composed of hastily levied, semi-drilled militia, who are little likely to prove any match for General Gourko's seasoned troops, amongst whom may be reckoned some regiments of the Imperial Guard, the flower of the Russian army. Moreover, several Cossacks have been seen in the neighbourhood of Sofia, so that there is some likelihood of a Russian force crossing the Balkans and taking both Reouf Pasha, at Shipka, and Mehemet Ali, at Kamarli in the rear, and thus opening the road for a formidable army to Sofia and Adrianople, unless the capture of Tirnova turn the tide of events. Suleiman Pasha's victory is all the more acceptable to the Turks, as it was evident that they were fast becoming hard pressed on every side. In Asia their most important fortress, Kars, has surrendered, Erzeroum is being actively besieged, while along the line in Europe the Russians were forcing them back step by step. Osman Pasha is still hopelessly surrounded at Plevna, while the Russo-Roumanian forces are energetically fighting their way westward, have captured Lom Palanka, and will speedily appear before Widdin, and effect a junction with Servia, which is now eager to join the fray.

The Servians, however, as yet have made no overt declaration of war, and their representative still remains at Constantinople remonstrating with the Porte against the "aggression" of the Turkish soldiers. It is said that the British Consul-General has remonstrated with the Servian Government as to its warlike preparations, and has even threatened that the guarantee of autonomy will be withdrawn. To this it is also rumoured that M. Ristics will vouchsafe no answer, while the date popularly fixed for the declaration of Servian independence and the issue of an order to cross the frontier is the 12th inst.—the fête of St. Andrew, the patron of the Principality. Montenegro is still actively prosecuting her little war on the Adriatic. But the only military news of importance is the bombardment of Fort Vodivica off Antivari by three Turkish men-of-war. There is considerable apprehension at Scutari, where the Mussulman merchants are removing their valuables to the Citadel.

At CONSTANTINOPLE there is naturally great excitement, owing to the calling-out of the reserves, and to the formation of the Civic Guard, in which all Christians from twenty to forty years of age are to be enrolled. The feeling against Mahmoud Damad continues, and ex-Sultan Murad is kept in close confinement—it being rumoured that his madness is only a story invented by Mahmoud and his seraglio intriguers. There is some chance of Chefket Pasha, the infamous hero of Batak, being at last brought to justice, as he is to be tried for abandoning Telis to the Russians. The Blockade question is still causing considerable difficulty. On the one hand, Mr. Layard demands the rigid enforcement of the blockade, while on the other, Count Conti, the Italian ambassador, urges the release of two Italian vessels which were seized in the Bosphorus, after having crossed the Black Sea without meeting a single cruiser. The recent Russian successes has again brought forward the rumour that if the Balkans are crossed Italy will at once occupy Dalmatia and Austria Bosnia.

FRANCE.——The political crisis is now fast assuming a very serious and alarming aspect. The Marshal's interview with the Presidents of the two Chambers, M. Grévy and the Duc d'Audiffret Pasquier, which had at first been regarded as a sign of conciliation, has resulted in nothing, while the majority of the Lower Chamber have refused to vote the Budget until the Marshal makes up his mind to take a parliamentary majority. Matters have been still further complicated by an interview between the Marshal and two deputies of the Left, MM. Lesseps and Duclerc, who without authority stated that the Left demanded a congress of the two Houses for revising the right of dissolving the Lower Chamber as now possessed by the Senate. The Marshal at once took this to be the official terms of the Left for a reconciliation, and thereupon issued an official Havas note declaring that he could accept no such proposal, nor allow to be impaired either the rights of the Executive Power or the prerogatives of the Senate. On this note becoming known on Tuesday the Left in both Chambers at once repudiated any connection with M. Duclerc's conditions; but the Budget Committee in the Lower House, feeling that the Marshal was predetermined upon a dissolution, at once announced to the House their intention not to pass the Budget until a Parliamentary Ministry should be installed in office; while M. Gambetta boldly declared that "the public purse will not be opened until the popular will be obeyed. We shall see whether it is the nation or a man who governs in France." On Wednesday, M. Gambetta, speaking at an electoral meeting in favour of Emile de Girardin's candidacy for the Ninth Arrondissement, called the situation the "political nightmare which threatens to strike at the vitality of our country." While urging resistance to the utmost, however, he recommended legality, and that no one should depart from the Constitution. M. Victor Hugo presided at the meeting and made a characteristic speech, declaring that France was struggling against Personal Power, which must be fought against and overcome—"No man, whoever he may be, must ever set himself above France."

The popular apprehension and excitement have not been allayed by the manner in which the Marshal secludes himself from all remonstrance. The commercial deputation which last week went to represent the bad state of trade to him was received by M. d'Harcourt, while the delegates of upwards of 2,000 Parisian trades, who visited the Elysée on Monday with a petition that the President would no longer hesitate to comply with the recent vote of the country was informed that the Marshal could not receive them, but that they must go to the Ministry of Commerce. This they declined to do, and retired to draw up the inevitable procès verbal, in which they reminded the Marshal that they were only the vanguard of an imposing demonstration—100,000 to-morrow, perhaps 1,000,000 the day after. This has terribly touched the pride of the Parisian bourgeoisie, who are very indignant at the Marshal's refusal. The Marshal, however, subsequently summoned to the Elysée the Presidents of the Paris Chamber and Tribunal of Commerce to consult with them upon the depression of trade, the extent of which can be judged from the fact that one Parisian house, which last year executed orders for nearly 80,000*l.*, this year has received only orders for little over a quarter that sum. The crisis, as usual, has been fertile in duels, which however have had no serious results except in one case, where M. Clovis Hughes, of the Jeune République, wounded M. Daymes, of the Bonapartist Aigle, fatally in the breast.

It would be as wearisome to recount all the details of the crisis —we have given the broad facts—as useless to repeat the innumerable rumours and surmises of its ultimate solution; but we may mention that the utmost uneasiness is manifest through France, and that the Marshal's conduct is universally blamed except by the Bonapartists, who it is said alone possess the key of the private entrance to the great "Wall of China" by which the Marshal is surrounded, and who are anxious to urge him on until he finds violent measures the only means by which he can solve the difficulty. That he will submit is thought most improbable, that he will resign equally so; while people can hardly bring themselves to believe that he will follow in the footsteps of his old master, Napoleon III., and repeat the crime of December, 1851. And yet one of these roads he must choose, for a continuance of the present crisis is impossible.

ITALY.——The Pope is now said to be hopelessly ill. Up to Tuesday visitors were still admitted to his room, and it was proposed to hold the Consistory earlier than appointed by conveying His Holiness to the reception room in a recumbent position on a wheeled bed, and bolstered with pillows. On Wednesday his hands and arms began to swell, his breathing became laborious, and it was thought in Rome that his end was rapidly approaching. It is said that the Pope has written an autograph letter to Queen Victoria, thanking her for her toleration in permitting the establishment of a Hierarchy in Scotland.—Parliament has been mainly occupied with social reform. Imprisonment for debt has been abolished, and women have been accorded the right of giving evidence in legal proceedings.

INDIA.——The expedition against the Jowakis is prospering, and on Saturday General Keyes captured the capital and principal stronghold, Jammoo, only four men being wounded on the British side, and the enemy losing forty-one men. The total British losses up to that morning were eleven wounded and nine killed. All the fortified towers have been destroyed in the Paiah Valley, but the houses, for the most part, have been spared. The terms of peace will be more stringent than at first expected, and the surrender of some of the chiefs will be demanded, the most important objects in contemplation being the destruction of the forts, the opening up of the country, the capture of some of the leaders of the recent marauding exhibition, and the surrender of all arms.

THE UNITED STATES.——The Annual Message of the President was read in Congress on Monday, the chief theme being the currency question. President Hayes is strongly in favour of a bi-metallic currency, but, above all, of paying bonds in gold—as to pay in coin of less value would involve a violation of public faith, which would work irreparable injury to the public credit. Civil Service reform was the next topic, the President taking the occasion to reaffirm his well-known views, the acceptance of the invitation to the Paris Exhibition was alluded to, and the President announced that the Extradition question with Great Britain was being amicably settled, that the Fishery award would soon be communicated to Congress, and that a treaty with Great Britain concerning trade-marks had been submitted to the Senate. An allusion to the non-recognition of the Diaz Government in Mexico and the Border disorders concluded the Message. —Mr. John Welsh, the new Ambassador to England, left for this country on the 1st inst.—The Senate, having concluded its electoral controversy, now consists of 39 Republicans, 36 Democrats, and 1 Independent. The Upper House, as a whole, continue to be somewhat unfriendly towards President Hayes, and has acted on very few of his nominations.

MISCELLANEOUS.——The Emperor of AUSTRIA has commuted the sentence of death upon Henry de Tourville, who now stands condemned to eighteen years' penal servitude.—GERMANY has announced her intention of contributing a further sum of 400,000*l.* towards the construction of the St. Gothard Railway. —In the TRANSKEI, the Colonial forces are still pursuing the Galekas, and Commander Griffiths reports the capture of 12,000 cattle. The war now is practically at an end.

THE COURT

THE Queen, the Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold have returned to the south for the winter. Before leaving Scotland Her Majesty gave a dance to the servants and gillies on the estate, at which the Queen and the Princess Beatrice were present, while on Sunday Her Majesty and the Princess attended Divine Service at Crathie Church, the Rev. A. Campbell officiating. In the evening Lord John Manners and the Rev. A. Campbell dined with the Queen, and next day Lord John Manners left the Castle. On Wednesday Her Majesty, with the Prince and Princess, left Balmoral and drove to Ballater, whence they came by special train to Windsor, arriving at the Castle to breakfast on Thursday morning.

The Princess of Wales' thirty-third birthday was duly kept on Saturday. Salutes were fired and bells were rung at Windsor and Sandringham, but at the latter place the usual tea to the women and children on the estate was deferred until Christmas, in consequence of the prevalence of scarlatina and whooping-cough in the neighbourhood. The Prince and Princess, however, gave a large ball on the previous evening, and on Saturday they, with their guests, went to the meet of the West Norfolk hounds at Anmer. The day was also kept as a holiday on board the Britannia at Dartmouth, and Princes Albert Victor and George made an excursion to the Start Lighthouse. On Monday the Sandringham party broke up, and the Prince went to Thetford for a few days' shooting with the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh.

A house for the Duke of Connaught is being built at Bagshot Park, Surrey, on the site of an old residence of the Duke of Gloucester. It is to be in the Tudor style, and built of red brick and Portland stone.—Princess Louise visited last week the Victoria Hospital for Children, Gough House, Chelsea, of which she is patron.—The Duchess of Teck is indisposed.—The Empress of Austria is expected soon after Christmas at Cottesbrook Park, Northampton, and will bring her hunting train with her, while Her Majesty's sister, the ex-Queen of Naples, with the ex-King has already arrived at Towcester Park for the hunting season.—The Crown Prince of Hanover has been visiting Mr. C. Sykes, M.P., at Brantingham Thorpe for a few days' hunting with the Holderness hounds, and is now staying with the Marquis and Marchioness of Hertford at Ragley Hall.—The Queen of Sweden is so much better in health from her stay at Heidelberg as to be able to take short rides on horseback.

CHURCH NEWS

THE CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE SOCIETY.——Last week the Record devoted a long article to a criticism of a little volume on "The Argument from Prophecy," written by the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, and issued under the auspices of this Society. The author, it seems, admits in his preface that "the tendency of modern critical research has been in the direction of reducing the proportions of the definitely predictive element, and raising doubts about the evidence of it generally, so as to make it less fitted than formerly to bear the weight of argument;" and he has the "boldness or audacity" to speak of the 26th chapter of Leviticus and the 28th of Deuteronomy as "rhetorical and minatory" rather than "predictive." The writer in the Record asks whether it is decent, right, or wise that such teaching should be circulated by the Society, and whether such concessions to "modern criticism" are not calculated to destroy rather than to strengthen the bulwarks of Divine Revelation and the evidences of Christianity. The author has since written to the Record, complaining that the reviewer has in his haste pelted his fellow-worker in defence of the truth with the missiles intended for their common opponents, and remarking that it is surely better to meet the impugners of prophetical inspiration on their own ground if, as he believes, they can be beaten there. The editor, however, thinks that Mr. Maitland's meaning has not been misrepresented, and remarks, "How will Bradlaugh laugh and his associates glory in such an admission."

THE RITUALISTS.——On Sunday last there was a renewal of the disgraceful disturbances at St. James's, Hatcham. The early morning "High Celebration," at which Mr. Tooth officiated, went off quietly, the congregation consisting mainly of the personal friends of the rector, who had been called together by private circular. At the eleven o'clock service the church, which had been restored to something like its appearance before Mr. Tooth's prosecution, was crowded by a mixed congregation; but, with the exception of some loud coughs and half-audible murmurs, order was preserved until the Rev. Malcolm MacColl had finished his sermon. When, however the clergy and choir in procession were passing into the vestry, cries of "Shame!" and "No Popery!" were raised, and a man named Evenden, who belongs to the "Protestant League," made a sudden dash at the chancel gates. This led to a general rush, and a free fight ensued in front of the communion rails, which was only stopped by the arrival of the police, who had to clear the building by force, Evenden being taken into custody. There was no service in the evening, but a large crowd assembled outside the church and sung rival hymns. Evenden has since been taken before the magistrate on a charge of "brawling" and wilfully damaging the chancel gate, and Mr. McClure, the President of the "Protestant League," has been summoned for having threatened to burn down the church rather than allow a continuance of "Popish mummeries."—Mr. Tooth has written a letter to some of the members of his old congregation who were contemplating presenting him with a testimonial, declining to accept it.—The Rev. C. Bodington, of Wolverhampton, last Sunday, announced from the pulpit that he had been in correspondence with the Bishop of his diocese (Lichfield), and that in future, on the second Sunday in each month, he would be prepared to conduct a plain Communion Service without music or altar-lights.—At St. Alban's, Holborn, the Rev. A. H. Stanton referred in his sermon to the threatened prosecution of Mr. Mackonochie by the Bishop of London, remarking that, with the beginning of the Christian year, they were entering upon a new prosecution.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.——Last Friday (St. Andrew's Day) was the day appointed for special prayer on behalf of Foreign Missions. The Rev. H. B. Bousfield, Bishop Designate of the Transvaal, preached at St. Paul's Cathedral, and Dean Stanley at Westminster Abbey, where also the Rev. Dr. Stoughton, of New College, Hampstead, delivered a lecture on "Missions." A special service was also held at St. Dunstan's Church, Fleet Street, the preacher being Dr. Valpy French, Bishop Designate at Lahore. At Sheffield a special service was held in the parish church, and 500*l.* was dropped into the collecting box by an anonymous donor, who accompanied it with a slip of paper on which was written "Answers to prayer."

VARIOUS.——The Archbishop of York, speaking at Sheffield last week on Ritualism and the Public Worship Act, said that unless the clergy could be got to work together they would themselve disestablish the Church.—On Monday the Bishop of Manchester addressed a public meeting at Preston, held under the auspices of the National Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church. His lordship quoted statistics showing that much more had been spent on Church of England schools than on all other schools, and said that they were most unjustly charged with simply looking after their own proselytising ends, and practically obstructing the work of education.—The Nonconformists of Penzance have been discussing the Bishop of Truro's recent diocesan address, and have come to the conclusion that, although his lordship's words were not quoted verbatim by Mr. Bright, yet that it is impossible to interpret the whole spirit and purport of the Bishop's speech otherwise than as an exhortation to Churchmen to contend with, and, if possible, to suppress dissent.

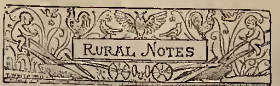
MUSIC

Her Majesty's Theatre.——There has been nothing new of any very essential importance since our last. We have had repetitions of various operas, a third performance of Signor Marchetti's Ruy Blas only strengthening the impression created by the first and second. Der Freischütz, however, which brought an audience that filled the theatre to the roof, gave a fresh impetus, bringing with it a revival of always pleasant memories. Weber's legendary opera—his masterpiece—is never unwelcome when adequately represented; and, though the general performance at Her Majesty's Theatre is by no means the best we can call to mind, there was quite enough of good in it to satisfy all but the most exacting connoisseurs. Madame Marie Rôze, while lacking physical power for some passages (such as the allegro which forms a climax to the well-known, and, in its way, incomparable scena of Act II.), was a more than acceptable Agatha. The clever lady showed a genuine feeling for that pensive character, and a thorough appreciation of the music by which Weber has immortalised it, more especially in those parts which call for tender and heart-felt sentiment—as for instance, the slow movement of the scena already mentioned and Agatha's expressive soliloquy on the eve of the expected Bridal ceremony. Each of these was charmingly sung. Madame Bauermeister, a natural and sprightly Anna, gives both her airs as well as could be desired, more particularly the "legend" of Act III., in which the viola obbligato accompaniment is so admirably played by Mr. Doyle. Signor Fancelli is hardly at his best in the character of Max, being at the most an indifferent actor, while the music does not lie conveniently for his voice. With Signor Foli (an evident favourite) as Caspar, and the subordinate parts more or less efficiently supported, it may readily be understood that in one important department the manager had done all within his means to provide his supporters with an adequate execution of one of the most popular operas ever written, though, at the same time, by no means an opera that in any circumstances can be absolutely fitted to the Italian mode of thought—a question, by the way, worth future discussion. We cannot honestly praise the efforts of the chorus in this performance of Der Freischütz; and, to name but a single example, we have never heard the famous "Huntsmen's Song"—a model in its way—delivered with so little spirit, or received with such provoking apathy. In earlier times, on the English, as well as the German stage, this used invariably to be a marked feature. The orchestra, under the direction of Signor Licalsi, was good, the magnificent overture being extremely well played. So, too, was the music in the scene of the "Incantation," which, according to custom, was made strange enough by means of its scenic accessories, the comparative inferiority of which made experienced playgoers look back with regret to the olden time. We have also had Faust, with two changes in the cast—Mdlle. Marimon taking Marguerite, in lieu of Mdlle. Caroline Salla; and Signor Runcio playing Faust, vice Signor Fancelli. Neither change was for the better; for though Mdlle. Marimon possesses more vocal fluency than Mdlle. Salla, the last-named lady is endowed with a dramatic sensibility to which the former can prefer no claim. Thus, while the "Jewel Song" (we refer particularly to this showy movement) was delivered with far greater ease and dexterity by Mdlle. Marimon, the innate charm, so engaging in the impersonation of Mdlle. Salla, is altogether wanting. There are but few artists who, like Adelina Patti and Christine Nilsson, combine the two indispensable qualities for a perfect realisation, vocal and dramatic, of Gounod's heroine; and among them, for different reasons, neither Mdlle. Marimon nor Mdlle. Salla can be named. Meanwhile, sanguine amateurs are looking forward with anxiety to the Forza del Destino, as remodelled by its composer. That Signor Verdi's Russian opera wanted remodelling quite as much as M. Gounod's Cinq Mars is unquestionable. Let us hope that La Forza del Destino may have been remodelled to as good purpose as Beethoven's Fidelio and Mendelssohn's Elijah. In that case we shall have a worthy addition to the extensive repertory of the greatest living Italian operatic composer.

Cherubini's "Water Carrier."——Dr. Hanslick, in one of his admirable ingenious contributions to the Neue Freie Presse, alluding to a revival of Cherubini's Deux Journées at Vienna, says that neither Italy, the land of Cherubini's birth, nor France, where Les Deux Journées was first produced, ever now gives this masterpiece of Florentine art, and therefore amateurs must go to Germany to hear it! Of course poor "unmusical" England, where the opera of Cherubini has been played over and over again, with marked success, by Mr. Carl Rosa's admirable company, is, as usual, left out in the cold. What, too, about the United States? Surely they may count for something.

London Ballad Concerts.——Nothing new was produced on Wednesday evening. Mr. Thurley Beale appeared, and delivered Diehl's "Jack's Yarn" with great vigour; while the Misses Allitsen sang several duets very sweetly. Mr. Sims Reeves is still indisposed. We attributed the words of Mr. Sullivan's song last week to the wrong Mr. Stewart, it seems. They are by Mr. W. J. Stewart, of the Inner Temple, barrister, who is still alive, and who is the author of various other songs which have been set to music.

Waifs.——Herr August Wilhelmj, the eminent violinist, is in London.—Mdlle. Anna de Belocca of Her Majesty's Theatre leaves London next week, her destination being Madrid. Mdlle. Mila Rodani has already left for Florence.—It is now believed that Madame Adelina Patti, in consequence of her great success at Milan, where she is re-engaged at the Scala for ten further representations, will pass the entire winter in Italy.—Verdi, as usual of recent years, will pass the winter at the Palazzo Doria, in Genoa.—Richard Wagner has won his action against a Viennese music publisher, àpropos of the new scena of the Venusberg in Tannhäuser. The Imperial Opera House can now give the work, thus remodelled, on its own terms.—The Teatro Rossini in Venice is put up for sale.—Wood's Theatre, in Chicago (U.S.), has been burnt to the ground.—Signor Sebira's opera, Selvaggio, so popular in Italy since its original production at Venice, has now found its way to Spain, being announced as in preparation at Barcelona.—In consequence of the Government "subvention" being reduced by 15,000 francs, the great theatre at Bordeaux has been obliged to close its doors. How is it that our English theatres can exist without Government subsidies?



RURAL NOTES

The Fat Stock Shows.——The general conclusion is that the show at Birmingham this year has not been equal to what it has seemed to be in previous years. There never has been an exhibition where a similar complaint has not been made. The complaints of the lack of "plums" is common; they are usually conspicuous by their absence on this particular occasion. The fact, however, stands out that animals that were considered not to be the charming creatures they were at one year old have turned out very well the next. A change of judges wonderfully effects the degrees of beauty in animals. There seems to have been little difference of opinion in the judges at Norfolk and at Birmingham in regard to Mr. Wortley's Hereford steer, which was champion at both places in its classes. The Herefords, however, do not come up to the Shorthorns, and the fat stock shows, so far as they have gone, prove that the blood of the "Teeswaters" is that which assimilates best with all other breeds under any climatic conditions. It was a Shorthorn that won the premier prize at Norfolk, and also at Oakham, and a Shorthorn gained first in its class and championship at Birmingham.

The Bucolic Holiday in the Metropolis.——Next week will be a jolly one for stock-feeders in London. They come from all points of the compass to witness the results of their own labours, and take lessons from the more successful work of others. But not alone do they come to view animals, but they come to rub each other up upon more general husbandry, "as iron sharpeneth iron." In addition to the treat they will have at the show this year, there is a meeting of the London Farmers' Club, where Mr. Mechi, the indefatigable Tiptree Hall farmer, will read a paper on the "Most Profitable System of Feeding Cattle;" the Council of the Central Chamber will hold a meeting next day, so also the Council of the Smithfield Club and the British Dairy Farmers' Association will have a discourse on "Dairy Cattle." On Wednesday there will be a Council Meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, a meeting of the Dairymen's Benevolent Institution; a lecture at the Society of Arts by the greatest scientific wheat-grower in the world, Mr. J. B. Lawes, of Rothamsted, on "Freedom in the Growth and Sale of the Crops on the Farm," and on Thursday the half-yearly general meeting of the R.A.S.E. If such a bill of fare is not tempting we cannot tell what would be. The only fear is that there is just a little too much for the money to be thoroughly enjoyable.

Miscellaneous.——Mr. John Thornton has issued his quarterly circular, which is full of information about shorthorns. The highest prices obtained for the period, noted in The Graphic before, were respectively 4,100 and 4,300 guineas for Duchesses, a consignment by Mr. Cochrane from Canada. These golden eggs being sold cheaply at first in this country, have fortunately come back across the sea unaddled.—The average of thirty-two cattle at that sale at Bowness was 510*l*. each, but a higher price was obtained by Mr. Stafford, as mentioned in Mr. Thornton's circular, when an average of 532*l*. was realised for twenty-five head.—On dit in connection with Shorthorns, it is rumoured that Lord Dunmore has paid 10,000*l*. for a young cow and calf.—The agricultural almanacks are now in the heyday of harvesting the treasures of the year. Bulky and beautifully got up is The Farmer and Gardeners' Almanack which has been a deservedly successful claimant for public favour for many years.—A new Richmond in the field is the Live Stock Journal Almanack, which is produced after the fashion of the Farmer Almanack, and contains useful articles by various writers whose names are given.—The Old Farmer's Almanack still retains its place as a useful record of agricultural proceedings, and the Agricultural Gazette Almanack has also much valuable information for all tillers of the soil. Last but not least is Morton's New Farmer's Almanack, established by one whose agricultural lore is shown by his "Encyclopædia," which is the right hand companion of all intelligent farmers. It is understood that it has gone out of his supervision.—In a lecture delivered by Professor J. P. Sheldon before the Cirencester Chamber of Agriculture last week, he stated that "the total annual meat production of the United Kingdom is calculated at 60,000,000*l*., where at least it might be 80,000,000*l*. but for foreign diseases." We do not know whether this calculation be altogether correct or not, but there cannot be the slightest doubt that more cattle could be raised in this country were more capital put into land, and this will not be done until we have more security of tenure. Rinderpest is a deadly disease which science and energy, it is proved, can easily "stamp out;" but foot-and-mouth disease is not so readily dealt with, as the experience of numberless years proves. If not frequently fatal, it is at all times deteriorating, and flock-masters and dealers have in many instances themselves to thank for its continuance. It has broken out again in Yorkshire, apparently through carelessness.—It is a curious fact that while the average of our wheat land has decreased from 3,698,200 acres in 1869 to 3,125,000 acres in 1876, an average price of 55*s*. 3*d*. this year failed to attract foreign supplies so largely as in 1876, when the price was only 46*s*. 3*d*.—From the somewhat enigmatical utterances of the Prime Minister about the introduction of a Bill regulating the foreign cattle traffic, several agricultural papers are hopeful that it will be altogether put a stop to. We scarcely think it will.—The exportation of grain from the Black Sea has been prohibited.—Africa is now in a fair way of being civilised. The Agricultural Implement Manufacturers have got the thin edge of the wedge in. At Kalaha's Kraal, Malmesbury, there has been a competition of reaping machines, and Mr. Walter A. Wood's new reaper was adjudged first prize.

LEGAL

Criminal Appeal.——At the meeting of the Law Amendment Society on Monday Mr. Serjeant Cox read a paper on the advisability of instituting a Tribunal of Criminal Appeal. He said that it seemed monstrous that an appeal should lie from the verdict of a jury upon a question of property, and that there should be no analogous appeal in a case involving life and reputation. If, however, appeals were made a matter of right every person convicted would avail himself of it, and thus give rise to a great deal of cost and trouble, besides which the rehearings would conduce to a vast amount of perjury, false evidence being suborned to rebut the strong points against the accused. On the other hand, if the appeal was to be made permissive the application must naturally be made to the judge who tried the case, who would refuse it unless he was dissatisfied with the verdict. He considered that the only practical solution of the difficulty was to form a second tribunal, consisting of the Home Secretary and two Common Law Judges, one of them the judge who originally tried the case, and who would be fully acquainted with all the circumstances of the case, and the other an independent judge, who would come fresh and unbiassed to its consideration; and this tribunal he would have sit in public and act, not as a Court for a new trial, but as a Court to review the proceedings of the Court below, with power either to revise, to reduce, or to increase the severity of the sentence.

An Irish Libel Case.——For more than a week the Dublin Court of Queen's Bench has been occupied in hearing a libel suit brought against Mr. John Sarsfield Casey, "the Galtee Boy," by Mr. Bridge, the agent of the Mitchelstown estates, who some months ago was shot at, and still carries four bullets in his body. The charge against Casey contained several counts, the most serious one relating to a letter which, it was alleged, contained an innuendo that it would be a venial offence to shoot Mr. Bridge. A number of the Mitchelstown tenants were called for the defence, and it was curious to note how disparagingly they all spoke of their holdings, to which, however, they cling with great tenacity. Chief Justice May summed up greatly in favour of the plaintiff, emphatically declaring the right of a landlord to have his lands revalued; but the jury returned a verdict for the defendant on two counts, and announced their inability to agree upon the others. This result was hailed with loud cheering, one of the most vehement applauders being a priest who was seated in the gallery. Mr. Butt, who was Casey's counsel, was loudly cheered, and Casey himself was carried shoulder high out of court by his triumphant friends.

Miscellaneous Items.——Vice-Chancellor Malins has been engaged for some days in hearing a case in which Mr. Whalley, M.P., is charged with having dealt in a fraudulent manner with some leases. On Wednesday the honourable gentleman stated on the question of adjournment that he was unwell, and that his doctor thought that the only means of saving his life was to go to Egypt or some other warm climate. The Vice-Chancellor replied that the best mode of recovering his health was to compromise this action as speedily as possible.—The proprietors of the Portsmouth Times, who were convicted at the assizes of having published a libel upon the Town Clerk, have obtained a rule for a new trial on the ground that the judge (Mr. Justice Lindley) had misdirected the jury that the defendants were criminally responsible for the publication although they had appointed a competent editor to conduct the newspaper, and the libel in question was inserted by him without their consent, knowledge, or authority. The decision in favour of the rule being made absolute was that of the majority, the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Lush being of that opinion, and Mr. Justice Mellor differing from them.—Sir Robert Menzies has recovered 21*l*. damages besides costs from the Highland Railway Company for an assault committed on him by some of their employés. Sir Robert had taken a "Saturday to Monday" ticket, which it was contended was not available on the intervening Sunday, and he was therefore forcibly ejected from the carriage in which he had taken his seat. Two summonses taken out by the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company against persons for travelling with tickets on days subsequent to the date of issue have been dismissed by the Darwen magistrates, who characterised the prosecutions as "paltry."—The Midland Railway Company were the other day mulcted in damages to the tune of 2,300*l*. by a Methodist minister whose sight had been injured by an accident which occurred on their line; but a rule has since been obtained for a new trial unless the parties consent that the plaintiff's eyes shall be examined by a person who is above all suspicion, and that his opinion upon the question of blindness shall be conclusive.—Mr. Justice Grove, sitting in the Common Pleas Division, has granted a rule calling upon Mr. Froggatt (recently convicted with the detectives) to show cause why he should not be struck off the roll of Solicitors.—Three men and two women have been arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the numerous burglaries that have recently been committed in South London. Two of the men are well known to the police, and at the lodgings of one of them has been found a quantity of stolen property and 83*l*. in money.—A cashier in the employ of Messrs. Cory Brothers, Cardiff, colliery proprietors, absconded last Saturday with 1,400*l*. with which he had been entrusted to pay the employés.—It is said that the three men who were wrongly convicted of an outrage on a woman at Blackburn, and who were released about a fortnight ago, have received letters from the Home Office offering to each a gratuity of 5*l*. 10*s*. We should like to know upon what basis this munificent "compensation" has been calculated.—One of the masons on strike from the New Law Courts has been sent to prison for three months for having deserted his wife and four children.—The man arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the robbery of the Countess of Aberdeen's jewels has been discharged from custody. It seems that his false confession was made while he was drunk. We have not learned whether the police have yet obtained another "clue."

◆

M. Charles Lecocq has completed a fresh opera-comique, Le Petit Duc, for the Paris Renaissance, MM. Meilhac and Halévy being the librettists.

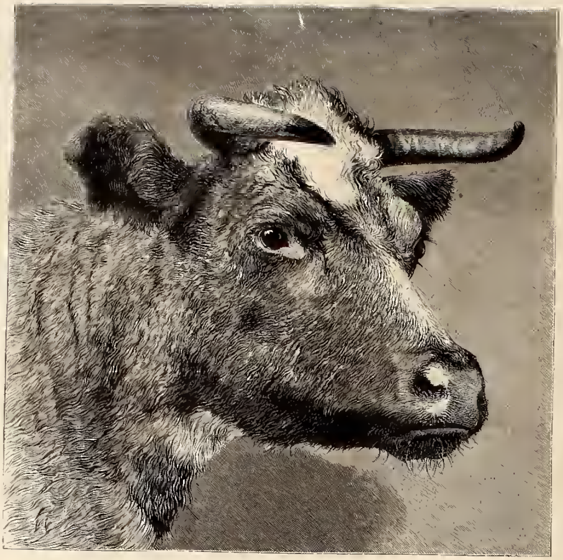
Experiments with the Telephone have been made between Aberdeen and Inverness with great success. Songs and choruses were distinctly transmitted and conversations well carried on at the distance of 108 miles.

The Darien Canal is attracting fresh attention in Paris, and Lieutenant Wyse, who made the preliminary survey last year has started afresh to complete his work. M. de Lesseps estimates the cost of the canal at 24,000,000*l*., and advocates a line starting from the river Tuyra, on the Pacific Coast, through a cutting to the Chucunaque river, thence up the valley of the Tiati, through a tunnel between eight and eight-and-a-half miles long, into the valleys of the Acanti and Tolo, reaching the Atlantic at Port Gandi.

African Exploration.——The French expedition to Equatorial Africa, composed of old African sharpshooters, under the command of a lieutenant of Turcos, Comte de Sémélé, starts on the 15th prox., and landing at the mouth of the Niger, will try to reach the Eastern Coast, while the King of the Belgians has sent out Captain Raymakers, of the Belgian Engineers, to work up from the West Coast at the Congo, towards the centre of Africa, in order to meet the Belgian Expedition, under Captain Crspal, which has begun operations from the Eastern Coast.

THE CHATHAM INSTITUTE

THIS excellent institution, for which our soldiers and sailors are mainly indebted to the munificence of Mr. J. M. Hamilton, of Hull, consists of a double house containing twenty-two apartments fitted up with every convenience. There are a library and reading room, a large saloon for meetings, entertainments, &c., a refreshment room (no intoxicating liquor being allowed), rooms for smoking, billiards and other games, and a night school and science classes, while on the upper floors are bed-chambers, and hot and cold baths. The history of the undertaking, which has cost 3,000*l.*, about 1,000*l.* of which has still to be collected, was narrated by the Rev. J. Burgess, Garrison Wesleyan Chaplain, on the occasion of the formal opening of the Home on the 23rd October last. He said that when he was first appointed to Chatham he was struck with the fact that though the soldiers were admirably provided for inside the barracks, there was absolutely no provision for them outside. He made up his mind to establish a home, and started on a lecturing mission for that purpose, but the subscriptions came in so slowly that he began almost to despair, when at last, after he had delivered a sermon at Hull, Mr. Hamilton came forward, exhibited great interest in the matter, visited Chatham, and almost immediately bought the houses which have now been fitted up as an Institution. The Home is to be open free to all soldiers and sailors, a subscription of fourpence per month being charged for the use of the library, baths, and billiard room, and civilians may become honorary members, and share in all the benefits of the institution by paying a yearly subscription of half-a-guinea. The management has been placed in the hands of Mr. Hilton, who was formerly a Colour Sergeant in the Royal Marines, and the undertaking promises to be a complete success. In the Library hangs a photographic portrait of the late daughter of Mr. Hamilton, Sarah Corthwaite, who died in Prussia last year at the early age of eighteen. The frame bears an inscription to the effect that it was as a memorial to this young lady that the Home was presented for the benefit of British soldiers and sailors.



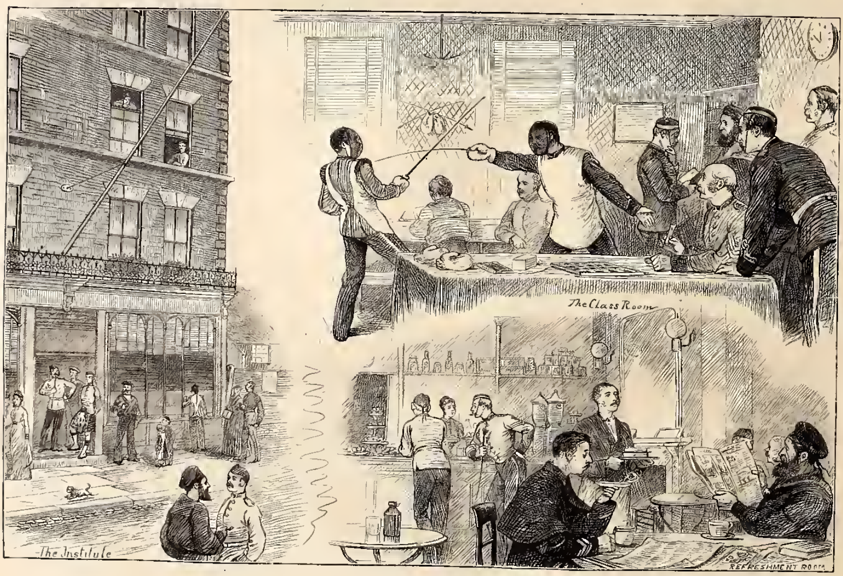
THE LATE "TENTH DUCHESS OF GENEVA"

PURCHASED BY THE EARL OF BECTIVE FOR 6,000 GUINEAS

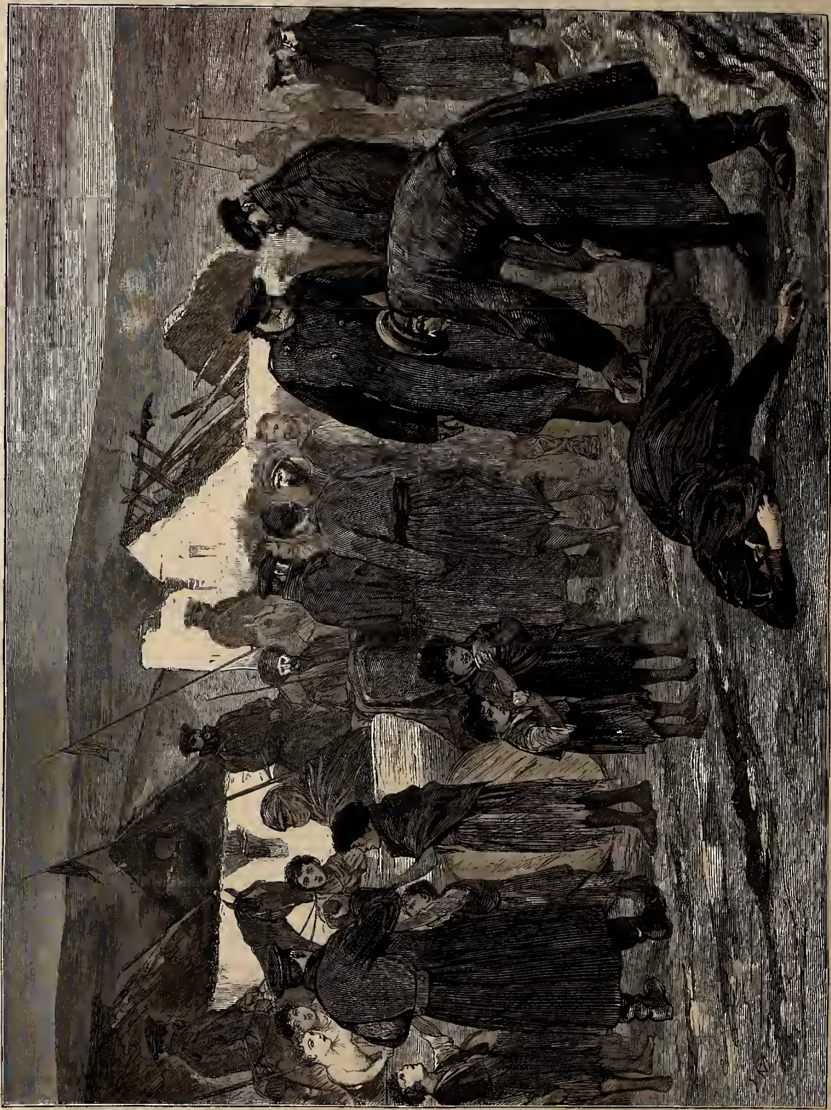
◆

A CELEBRATED SHORTHORN COW

THE personal and family history of the "Tenth Duchess of Geneva" is somewhat remarkable. Tradition ascribes the origin of the family to a breed of cattle possessed for centuries by the family of the Duke of Northumberland, but the actual records commence in the last century, when an ancestress of this cow passed into the possession of Mr. C. Colling, of Ketton, Durham, who was one of the founders of the shorthorn as a distinct and highly improved breed. In 1804 Mr. T. Bates, of Kirklevington, Yorkshire, purchased one of the "Duchess" cows, and recognising in her excellence and that of her male offspring the superiority of the family over the shorthorns he had



THE NEW SOLDIERS' AND SEAMEN'S HOME AT CHATHAM



WITH THE RUSSIANS—A PRESENT TO PLEVNA: THE RUSSIANS SENDING WOMEN AND CHILDREN FROM VRACA INTO THE BESIEGED CITY previously owned, he determined to secure more of the sort; and at Mr. Collings' great sale in 1810, when forty-seven animals of both sexes and all ages, from eleven years downwards, made the then unprecedented average of 151*l.* 8*s.*, he gave 183 guineas for the two-year-old heifer "Young Duchess," afterwards called "First Duchess," a daughter of "Comet" (sold on the same occasion for 1,000 guineas), and grand-daughter of the cow he had first purchased. From that heifer, in the female line direct, sprang those "Duchesses" which have at different periods won the chief honours of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, and for many years past have commanded the highest prices at public and private sales. Mr. Bates, while practising to a considerable extent the system of "in-and-in-breeding," crossed his "Duchesses" at different times with other approved shorthorn families, notably with those of Mr. Colling's Red Rose and Princess, thus combining what he considered three of the oldest and best shorthorn families in the kingdom. In 1853, at the Tortworth sale (after the death of Earl Ducie), "Sixty-sixth Duchess" was bought by Messrs. Pecar and Morris, of New York, for 735*l.* Her descendants, having changed owners in America, were finally dispersed by auction in 1873, when "Tenth Duchess of Geneva" was bought by Mr. Berwick for the Earl of Bective at 35,000 dollars (6,270*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*). She had bred in America the bulls "Third Duke of Oneida," "Sixth Duke of Oneida," and the heifer "Eighth Duchess of Oneida," bought also for Lord Bective, at the same sale, for 15,000 dollars (2,687*l.* 10*s.*). In this country she has produced the bull "Duke of Underley," and the heifers "Duchess of Underley" and "Duchess of Lancaster," all of which, with "Eighth Duchess of Oneida," are now in the herd at Underley Hall, Westmoreland. The "Tenth Duchess of Geneva" died in January last, and in the same month the Earl of Bective had the misfortune to lose his old bull "Second Duke of Tregunter."—Our engraving is taken from a sketch lent to us by Mr. Edwin Ward, F.Z.S., of Wigmore Street, who prepared the head as a trophy.

BIRTH.

On the 17th October, at Coconada, Madras Presidency, the wife of T. M. MAC LENNAN, of a daughter, still-born.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS'S LIST OF MUSIC.

"THE GREATEST SUCCESS IN PARIS."

LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE. OPERA COMIQUE DE ROBERT PLANQUETTE.

Now Ready.

Polka, by Arban 2s. 6d. net.
Polka Mazurka. 1s. 6d. net.
Suite de Valse, by O. Metra. Solo and duet. 2s. each net.
Quadrilles, by Arban. Solo and duet. 2s. each net.
Quadrilles, by O. Metra. Solo and Duet. 2s. each net.
Brilliant Fantasia, by E. Moniot. 1s. 6d net.
Rondeau Valse, by H. Richards. 1s. 6d. net.
Chanson du Mousse, by B. Richards. 2s. net.
Valse Brillante, by B. Richards. 2s. net.

In the Press.

Complete Opera, piano solo, 2s. 6d net.
Vocal Score, English and French Words.
Selections of Airs, in two books, by Cramer. 1s. 6d. each.
Also arrangements by W. Kuhe.

N.B.—The sole right of representation, &c., for Great Britain and Colonies belongs to Mr. Joseph Williams.

CH. NEWSTEDT'S CARILLON, LOUIS XIV. Piano Solo, net, 1s 6d.; Piano Duet, by J. Rummell, net, 1s. 6d.; Small Band Parts, 1s 6d.; Full Orchestra, 2s. net.

L. GREGH.—LES BERGÈRES WATTEAU. Piano Solo, net, 1s. 6d.; Duet, by J. Rummell, net, 1s. 6d; Orchestra, 2s. net.

ARDITI'S L'INGÉNUE. Morceau a la GAVOTTE. 3s. Performed at the Promenade Concerts with enormous success. Orchestra, 2s.

FLORIAN PASCAL'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

Berceuse. 3s. Also for Small Band, 1s. net.
La Princesse. 3s. (Gavotte) Also for Small Band, 1s. net.
Performed with great success at the Promenade Concerts.
Pres le Lac, Deuxième Meditation 3s.
Les Vieux Temps (Gavotte). 3s.
Pavane Royale de Louis XIV. 3s.
Air de Ballet. New Simplified Edition by Arthur Grenville. 3s.
Thematic Lists of this favourite Composer's sent free on application.

FLORIAN PASCAL.—AUTREFOIS (Souvenir de Marguerite de Valois). This charming little morceau has already run through several editions, and seems likely to rival the ever popular "Danse Favorite" of the same composer. Post free 18 stamps.

FLORIAN PASCAL.—UN BIJOU PERDU. "M. Pascal is to be congratulated upon having rescued from oblivion this really exquisite little gem, the melody of which is so captivating that we venture to predict for it great popularity." As Piano Solo, now ready, 18 stamps.

SPRING SONG. By J. Leybach. ENGLISH, FRENCH, AND ITALIAN WORDS. "A perfect little gem, easy to sing and play." Compass D to F (in C). Post free, 18 stamps.

NEW SONGS by J. Leybach.

LIFE'S AUTUMN (in A) Compass E to G flat.
THE SIRENS (in F) Compass C to F.
BRIGHT STARS OF HEAVEN (in C). Compass D to F.
MAIDEN AND THE BIRDS (in B flat). Compass D to F.
Post free, 18 stamps each.

CATALOGUES GRATIS and POST FREE.
Shipping Orders on most favourable terms.

LONDON: JOSEPH WILLIAMS,
24, BERNERS STREET, W.; and
123, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

Folio, price 7s. 6d each

THROUGH THE EYE TO THE MIND—THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOKS: a Series of Volumes illustrative of Natural History and of the Vegetable World, with Descriptive Letterpress.

"These volumes are among the most instructive picture books we have seen, and we know of none better calculated to rouse and gratify the appetite of the young for the knowledge of nature."—Times.

London. EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Tenth Edition, with Fifty-four Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 1: or, LESSONS FROM THE NATURAL HISTORY OF ANIMALS. By ADAM WHITE, late Assistant, Zoological Department, British Museum.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Fifth Edition, with many new Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 2: or, LESSONS FROM THE VEGETABLE WORLD. By the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," "The Herb of the Field," &c.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Third Edition, with Sixty Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No 3: LESSONS ON THE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS, or the Natural History of the Quadrupeds which characterise the Four Divisions of the Globe.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Second Edition, with Forty-eight Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No 4: SKETCHES FROM NATURE, or Pictures of Animal and Vegetable Life in all Lands.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Seventh Edition, with Thirty-six Oblong Coloured Illustrations, price 7s 6d

RECREATIVE ILLUSTRATION—THE NEW PICTURE BOOK; or, PICTORIAL LESSONS ON FORM, COMPARISON, AND NUMBER, for Children under Seven Years of Age. With Explanation by NICHOLAS BOHNY.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Map and Illustrations, price 6s.

THE HEROES OF YOUNG AMERICA. By ASCOTT R. HOPE, Author of "A Peck of Troubles," "A Book About Boys," "A Book About Dominoes," &c., &c.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, price 6s.

ADVENTURES IN THE AIR: being Memorable Experiences of Great Aeronauts. From the French of M. DE FONVIELLE. Translated and edited by JOHN S. KELTIE.

London. EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

DANCING MADE EASY.—COULON'S HANDBOOK OF DANCING is the most complete treatise on the subject, containing full descriptions of all dances, new and old, illustrated by upwards of forty woodcuts. Price 1s.; post free, 13 stamps.—A. HAMMOND and CO. 5, Vigo Street, W. All new music half-price

Now ready, at all Booksellers and Libraries, with Illustrations from Original Sketches, demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

UPPER EGYPT: A DESCRIPTIVE ACCOUNT Of the Manners, Customs, Superstitions, and Occupations of the People of the Nile River, the Desert, and the Red Sea Coast, with Sketches of the Natural History and Geology. Translated from the German of C. B. KLUNZINGER, M.D.

"Another good book about the land of the Khedive."—Graphic.

"A new and welcome volume on Egypt. . . . The work is thoroughly interesting and valuable."—World.

London: BLACKIE and SON, Paternoster Buildings.

In One Volume, with 13 Portraits and 13 Views in Permanent Photography, 2 Maps, and other Illustrations, royal 4to, price 52s. 6d. cloth, or Large Paper, imperial 4to, price £5 5s cloth

THE HISTORY of the IMPERIAL ASSEMBLAGE at DELHI, held on Jan. 1, 1877, to celebrate the Assumption of the Title of Empress of India by H.M. Queen Victoria; including Historical Sketches of India and her Princes Past and Present. By J. TALBOYS WHEELER, Author of "History of India," "Geography of Herodotus," &c.

London: LONGMANS and CO.

NOW READY, THE FIFTH EDITION OF

TOWNSEND'S MANUAL of DATES. Entirely Re-modelled and Edited by FREDERICK MARTIN, Editor of "The Statesman's Year-Book." Price 18s., 1,100 pp.

FREDERICK WARNE and CO., Bedford Street, Strand.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEE THE SPLENDID CHRISTMAS HOLIDAY NUMBER OF

DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE. It contains an unparalleled list of attractions. Beautiful Steel Engravings, Christmas Stories, Poems, &c., and a host of other entertaining Christmas Novelties. Price 1s., or by post, 1s. 2d.—THE WILLMER & ROGERS NEWS CO., 11, Bouverie Street, Fleet St., E.C., and all Booksellers

THE MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS' NEW CHRISTMAS ALBUM contains no less than 18 new and beautiful songs (which cannot be obtained in any similar publication), published Saturday, Nov. 24. Words, music, choruses, and pianoforte accompaniments. Price 1s., post free 14 stamps, addressed MANAGER, Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St. James's Hall.—Wholesale of J. WILLIAMS, 24, Berners Street, W.

BY DR. BARR MEADOWS.
Seventh Edition, cloth, post free 35 stamps.

ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Remarks on the Abuse of Arsenic and other reputed Specifics.—G. HILL, 154, Westminster Bridge Road.

HAVE YOU READ "BRIEF?"

WHAT IS "BRIEF"?

"BRIEF" IS THE NEW PENNY WEEKLY PAPER.

BRIEF, the CHEAPEST and BEST FAMILY PAPER ever Published.

Every Saturday, One Penny. Yearly, post free, 6s. 6d.

BRIEF: an Epitome of Current News, Thought, and Criticism. Contains the Cream of all the Daily and Weekly Papers. The best Family Paper. One Penny Weekly.

WYMAN and SONS, 81, Great Queen Street, London, W.C

WELDON and CO.'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL (Fourth Season). Now ready. Price 1s. Post free. Capitally Illustrated. PAN THE PILGRIM: a Vision of Judgment.

London: WELDON and CO., Wine Office Court, Fleet St.

RIMMEL'S Perfumed ALMANACS. "ARTS AND SCIENCES," richly illuminated, 6d. FAN ALMANAC, 6d. COMIC POCKET BOOK ALMANAC (Olympus), 1s. Sent on receipt of Stamps, 96, Strand; 128, Regent St.; 24, Cornhill

JUST PUBLISHED. — LYRICAL ILLUSTRATIONS OF MODERN ENGLISH POETS. By JOHN BARNETT, being a Collection of Fifteen Songs for soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass voices. Price 6s. net, cloth boards.—HUTCHINGS and ROMER, London.

THE WANDERERS' CLUB, Pall Mall. This Club having now reached 1,378 Members, there remain only 200 VACANCIES.

Annual Subscription: Town Members, 8 guineas; Country Members, 4 guineas; Members Abroad, 2 guineas. Present Entrance Fee, 10 guineas. Apply to the Secretary.

MALVERN COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will begin on Monday, January 28.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LONDON.— The extensive building now in course of erection on the site of the historical mansion of the Dukes of Northumberland at the corner of Northumberland Avenue, Trafalgar Square, will, when completed, be opened as a first-class Hotel

Messrs. GORDON and CO., Proprietors.

DRAWINGS BY THE OLD MASTERS.—Messrs. HOGARTH have for SALE a Selection of ORIGINAL DRAWINGS and SKETCHES by the Old Masters of the different Schools from the revival of Art in the Thirteenth to the Nineteenth Century.

96, Mount Street, Grosvenor Square, W

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' One Shilling Moist Colour Box. Unadulterated pigments. Box in japanned tin.—LECHERTIER, BARBE, and CO., 60, Regent St., Lond., and local Artists' Colourmen and Stationers

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO?—Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, book plates, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 20s. Solid gold ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked, with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 9d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourne Street, corner of St. Martin's Lane.

VISITING CARDS by Culleton.—Fifty, best quality, 2s. 8d., post free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate. Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 13s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25 Cranbourn St. (corner of St. Martin's Lane), W.C

CULLETON'S Guinea Box of Stationery contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn Street (corner of St. Martin's Lane)

FOR ARMS and CREST SEND NAME and COUNTY to T. MORING, Inns of Court Heraldic Office, 44, High Holborn, W.C. Sketch, 3s. 6d.; Coloured, 7s 6d. Seals, Dies, &c. Illustrated Price Lists Post free

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER OF 1877.

PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street.

300 PIECES RICH

BLACK and COLORED VELVETS, plain and brocaded in all the new designs, prices, Black and Plain Colours, from 4s. 11d., Brocaded, from 12s. 9d. Patterns free.

NEW COLORED LYONS SILKS, in White, Cream, Ivory, Tilleul, Moonlight, Corail, Eau de Nil, &c., &c., specially prepared for BRIDAL AND EVENING WEAR, also every new shade of Bronze, Navy, Claret, Prune, &c., &c., at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., 4s. 4½d., and 5s. 3d. per yard, 150 Shades to select from. Patterns free on application to PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

BLACK SILKS OF STANDARD QUALITY.
Heavily dyed and showy makes at low prices should be avoided.

PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, having kept for the past 25 years Black Silks produced by Messrs. Bonnet, Ponson, Jaubert, and Tapissier, which are found upon careful examination to be the best and purest makes, invites special attention to these fine qualities, as being cheaper than at any former period, and at the same time recommended with more confidence for really hard wear than any other make of Silk; in proof of purity and excellence the highest awards were given at Philadelphia. Each quality guaranteed not to cut.

Prices, 4s. 6d. to 11s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

BLACK AND COLOURED

SILK COSTUMES, made from the new Paris Models in eight different styles of the most approved designs, as shown in Engravings, prices, with bodice complete, Black, from 4½, Colours, from 5½ guineas.

Patterns of the Silk and Fashion Plates post free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

THE LATEST PRODUCTION IN

MANTLES AND PALETOTS,
Cashmere Circulars, lined Fur, 35s. to 5 guineas.
Cashmere Paletots, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas.
Silk Circulars, lined Fur, 5 to 10 guineas.
Silk Paletots, lined Fur, 6 to 15 guineas.

THE NEW DIAGONAL

CLOTH PALETOTS, 2 to 5 guineas.
The New Beaver Cloth Paletots, 28s 9d. to 5 guineas.
New Ulster Mantles, 17s. 6d. to 52s. 6d.
Waterproof Mantles and Ulsters, 17s. 6d to 42s.
Patterns and Engravings free from
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, London, W.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF NOVELTIES FOR

WINTER DRESSES, in every variety of Fabric and Shade of Colour, From 12s. 6d. to 42s. the Full Dress. Patterns free.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON.

CASHMERE MERINOES, all wool, This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 2s. 2d. to 2s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

NEW AND ELEGANT DESIGNS IN

WINTER COSTUMES.
Cashmere and Silk Costumes, 4 guineas.
Specialities in Costumes suitable for Travelling, Promenade, and Indoor Wear, 38s. 6d. to 7 guineas
Rich Velvet-Velveteen Costumes, 3½ to 7 guineas.
Illustrations and Patterns of Materials post free.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES REQUIRING

MADE BALL and Wedding Dresses. Now ready, several thousand charming Dresses in White, Black, and all colours, from 18s. 9d to 10 guineas. Engravings of the above, with many others, can be seen in the New Book of Fashions, which is sent post free.

A FAVOURITE DRESS IN TARLATAN.

THE "DORA" (any Colour or Black), profusely trimmed with flounces and ample train, 1 guinea, a substantial box included.

A pretty Brussels Net Dress, in White, Black, and all colours, for 29s. 9d., with material for bodice.

Patterns of Materials and Illustrations free from PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

GASK and GASK'S DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP. SALE of the WHOLE of their IMMENSE STOCK at incomparably low prices.

OXFORD STREET and WELLS STREET.

SALE of MANTLES, COSTUMES, SILKS, MILLINERY, UNDERCLOTHING, &c., being the latest delivery of goods ordered early, at exceedingly low prices.—GASK and GASK.

SALE of DRESS FABRICS, LINENS, BLANKETS, CURTAINS, LONG CLOTHS, &c. The whole of the Stock remaining is now being cleared off at exceptional prices.—GASK and GASK.

SALE of HOSIERY, GLOVES, LACE GOODS, FRENCH and FANCY ARTICLES innumerable, suitable for presents, all now marked at the lowest sale prices.—GASK and GASK.

GASK and GASK'S DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP, and SALE of the whole of their IMMENSE STOCK at incomparably low prices. See above. 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, Oxford Street; 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, Wells Street.

"WEAR-RESISTING" (Registered) BOYS' SUITS.

SAMUEL BROTHERS.
Suit for a Boy, 3 ft. 8 in. in height.
C Class, 27s.; D Class, 31s.
Prices varying according to height.
Patterns, &c., post free.
SAMUEL BROTHERS, Sydenham House,
65 and 67, Ludgate Hill, E.C

ÆGIDIUS.—A New ELASTIC OVER-SHIRT, as warm as wool, as soft as silk, 13s. 6d. each. Patterns of material and self-mensure free by post.—FORD and CO., 41 and 44, Poultry, London.

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.

BRUSSELS CARPETS.

VELVET CARPETS, &c.

EXHIBITION MEDALS, 1851, 1862: DUBLIN, 1865.
34 and 36, OLD BOND STREET, W.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS. REDUCTION OF PRICES.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 30 inches long, from 8 to 10 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 33 inches long, from 9 to 12 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 36 inches long, from 10 to 14 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 40 inches long, from 12 to 16 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 46 inches long, from 20 to 25 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 40 inches long, richly trimmed with real marten tails, 12 inches deep, 30 gs.; Real Sable, 10 inches deep, 40 gs.; Skunk, 20 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS can be sent on approval to any part of the United Kingdom by forwarding a reference in Town to

MESSRS. WAYRE, Manufacturing FURRIERS, 96, Oxford Street, and 335, Oxford Street (corner of Regent Circus). Established Half-a-Century.

THE CONNAUGHT.—"Messrs. Jay brought especially to our notice a new winter costume of their own design, which they have called 'The Connaught.' It consists of an ulster and skirt made of black serge cloth. The ulster is of a most graceful shape and cut; no trimming, except rows of machine stitching and a few black horn buttons, mars the simplicity of this ladylike costume, which is well suited for travelling or ordinary walking wear."—The Queen Newspaper, Nov. 24

BLACK SILKS. — Faithfully recommended to their Customers by Messrs. JAY. These silks are unweighted, pure in quality, and may be fully relied on to wear well.

Present price	3s. 9d.	Late	5s. 9d.
"	4s. 3d.	"	6s. 6d.
"	4s. 9d.	"	7s. 3d.
"	5s. 3d.	"	8s. 3d.
"	5s. 9d	"	9s. 6d.
"	6s. 9d.	"	10s. 3d.

ALL WOOL POPLIN COSTUMES, of the latest designs and fashion, 2½ guineas each, material for bodice included. "A remarkably cheap dress for this season of the year."

JAY'S,
THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
Regent Street, W.

HEALTHY SKIN and GOOD COMPLEXION.

PEARS'S TRANSPARENT SOAP, is the Best for the TOILET, NURSERY, and SHAVING. Recommended in the Journal of Cutaneous Medicine, edited by Mr.

ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S., used by

THE ROYAL FAMILY, and Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere.

HOLY BAZIL.—PIESSE and LUBIN.—This is a most rare perfume distilled from the HOLY BAZIL FLOWER OF HINDU (Ocymum sanctum), so remarkable for its unique fragrance. Sold in bottles, 2s. 6d., 5s., and 10s. 6d. each, at the Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London, and by their agents in all parts of the world.

COLD CREAM OF ROSES.—PIESSE and LUBIN prepare this exquisite COSMETIC with the greatest care, fresh daily, in jars, 1s.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London.

PIESSE and LUBIN.—HOLY BAZIL.—Soap perfumed with HOLY BAZIL, 2s. 6d. HOLY BAZIL Sachet, 1s. 6d. HOLY BAZIL Scented Toilet Powder, 3s. HOLY BAZIL in all compounds, cosmetiques, hair dressings, pomades, &c.—Royal Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London, W. Price Lists free.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO. Has been proved, by its unparalleled success of seventy years, to be the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and Fragrant Breath, being perfectly free from all deleterious and acid compounds which give a temporary whiteness to the teeth, but ultimately ruin the enamel. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers everywhere. Price 2s. 9d per box.

PROFESSOR BROWNE'S WIGS and SCALPS, from 35s.

47, FENCHURCH STREET.

PROFESSOR BROWNE'S Hair Department for Ladies comprises a large collection of Long Hair Head Dresses, Crop and Frizzy ditto, Chignons, Plaits, Coils, Coronets, Cache-peignes, and covered Stems in all shades of colour to suit the present fashion. Also Bands, Fronts, and Curls.—47, Fenchurch Street.

PROFESSOR BROWNE has the largest stock of Ladies' and Gentlemen's Ornamental Hair in the World always on view at his Establishment, 47, Fenchurch Street, London.

BREIDENBACH'S TALIPAT BLOSSOMS.—The NEW SCENT for 1877. A great novelty, and quite different to all others. 2s 6d., 3s 6d., 5s., 10s., 20s. Sole Address, 157B, New Bond Street, London. All kinds of Perfumery for Export duty free.

IF YOUR HAIR IS WEAK USE

BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE OIL, 1s.; or three bottles in one, 2s. 6d.—Sole Address, 157B, New Bond St. Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Drapers.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR

GLENFIELD STARCH SEE THAT YOU GET IT, As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the finest purifiers of the blood. They speedily correct all disorders of the liver and stomach, are invaluable in cases of dysentery, and as a general family medicine have no equal.

BLACK SILKS! BLACK SILKS!
The Best Value, from
2s. 11d. to 5s. 6d.
Patterns free—BAKER and CRISP, 198, Regent Street.

EVENING, WEDDING, and USEFUL SILKS. The Best Value, from 1s. 11½d. to 4s. 11d.
Patterns free—BAKER and CRISP'S, Regent Street.

NOTICE.—1,000 ODD SILK DRESSES and REMNANTS at Half-price
Patterns free.—BAKER and CRISP.

1,000 BOXES ROYAL SILK MOLESKIN VELVETEENS in Black, from 1s. 9½d.
All Colours, from 2s. 11d.—BAKER and CRISP.

INDIAN CASHMERES and FRENCH MERINOS.
500 Pieces From 1s 9d. to 2s. 11d. yard.
Patterns free.—BAKER and CRISP, Regent Street.

DRESSES! DRESSES! DRESSES!
Serges, Viennas, Saxony Flannels,
Camel Hair Cloths, Snowflakes,
and 100 other new Winter Materials, from
6d. to 2s 6d. yard.—BAKER and CRISP.—Patterns free.

EVENING DRESSES. EVENING DRESSES.
The New Grenadines and other light Fabrics, from 6s. 9d. full dress. Patterns free.

COSTUMES. COSTUMES. COS-TUMES. New Engravings free.
Cashmeres, Serges, Velveteens, Vicuna, Snowflake, and every other Fabric, from 29s. 6d. Patterns free.
BAKER and CRISP.

BAKER and CRISP'S PALETOTS, ULSTERS, &c.—Patterns and Engravings free.
The Jehu (last Novelty), and 1,000 others, from 10s. 9d. to 100s.—BAKER and CRISP.

NOTICE.—ODDS and ENDS.— WINTER BUNDLES of 50 yards of Best DRESS FABRICS, for 35s. 6d. and 45s. 6d. each. Send for P.O.O. to BAKER and CRISP, 198, Regent Street, London.

PETER ROBINSON'S
COURT AND GENERAL MOURNING
WAREHOUSE, REGENT STREET,
Is the Cheapest and the Largest
Warehouse of the kind
in London.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S
WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS,
REGENT STREET.
For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
In the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.
"ON RECEIPT of LETTER or TELEGRAM,"
MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—with an excellent fitting Dressmaker (if required), without extra charge.
PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.
DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
In the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by
PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
AN IMPORTANT PURCHASE
OF SEVERAL THOUSAND PIECES BY
PETER ROBINSON of Regent Street
OF THE BEST WEARING MAKES ONLY,
and highly recommended

Bonnet and Cie	at 5s. 0d.
Jaubert	at 4s. 0d.
Ponsons	at 5s. 3d.
Degoves	at 4s. 9d.

The above are from 2s. to 3s. per yard
under last year's prices.
The EMPRESS CACHEMIRE, at 6s.
Also Excellent Value at
2s. 6d., 3s 3d., 3s. 11d., 4s. 6d., and 4s. 11d.
For Patterns address to
PETER ROBINSON,
256 to 262, Regent Street.

BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS.
Exceedingly good qualities,
at 7s. 6d., 8s 9d., 10s 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d.
A Special Bargain
in Lyons Velvet, at 10s. 9d.
Black Silk Trimming Velvets.
at 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s 9d.
At PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.
Nos. 256 to 262.

FOR SIX GUINEAS.
A BLACK SILK COSTUME
made of RICH LYONS SILK.
with Velvet Garniture,
Exquisitely cut and fashioned.
Copies of expensive Paris Models.
Photos free.
PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

REMARKABLY CHEAP. For One Guinea, A Black Quilted SATIN PETTICOAT.
For 2½ Guineas, A Black Silk TRAINED SKIRT.
At PETER ROBINSON'S of REGENT STREET.

FOR TWO GUINEAS, and up to Seven,
Costumes in New Black Materials,
in various fashionable Styles,
At PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,

EVENING DRESSES, at One Guinea.
Black Brussels Net, at 29s. 6d.
Tulle (condition keeping), 50s.
Grenadine, 52s 6d.
New Styles, well cut, and elegantly trimmed.
Illustrations free.

THE NEW CRAPE.
The Pure Silk Gordian Crape,
for Widows and Families.
Its advantages are—that it is made
of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon
nor spot with rain.
It is a richer black, free from dress, and
the gummed appearance so objectionable in other Crape.
The wear of every yard is guaranteed.
The Gordian Crape is a Specialite,
only to be obtained at
PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET,
The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262.
Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s 6d., 9s. 6d.
Patterns free.

FUR-LINED CLOAKS
at SUMMER PRICES.
Good useful Cloaks at
3½ and 4½ guineas.

SEMI-FITTING SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long for 9½ guineas.
36 inches long for 11 guineas.
39 inches long for 13 guineas.
at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.

NOTICE.—In reference to the
above advertisement,
it is important that letters
should be clearly addressed to
256 to 262, REGENT STREET

FOR CHILDREN.
DR. RIDGE'S FOOD.
IS THE BEST.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN COMPANY, LIVERPOOL ROAD, LONDON, N., supply the best goods only. Whites for pastry, 10s. per bushel; households for bread, 9s. 4d.; wheat meal for brown bread, 8s. 8d; coarse Scotch oatmeal, 3s. 2d. per 14 lbs.; fine, 3s 4d.; American hominy, 4s.; barley, maize, and barley meal, 5s 8d. per bushel, or 21s. 6d. per sack; buckwheat, 5s per bushel, or 19s. per sack; oats, 4s. per bushel; crushed oats, 3s. 6d. per bushel, or 13s 6d. per sack; middlings, 2s. 4d. per bushel; ground pollard, 1s 8d; pease, 7s. 6d.; tick beans, 8s; split peas, 2s. 6d. and 3s per peck; meal biscuits, 20s. per cwt.; lentil flour for Invalids, in tins, 1 lb. size, 1s., and 7 lbs., 5s. All other kinds of grain and seed. Special prices for larger quantities. Post Office Orders and Cheques to be made in favour of GEORGE YOUNG

FOR BLANC-MANGE, PUDDINGS, CUSTARDS,
CHILDREN'S AND INVALIDS' DIET,
AND ALL THE USES OF ARROWROOT,
BROWN and POLSON'S CORN FLOUR
HAS A WORLD-WIDE REPUTATION,
AND IS DISTINGUISHED FOR
UNIFORMLY SUPERIOR QUALITY.

AMERICAN CENTENNIAL
PRIZE MEDAL.
FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
"A most delicious and valuable article."—Standard.
"The Caracas Cocoa of such choice quality."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.

FRY'S EXTRACT OF COCOA.
Of great value to Invalids who wish to avoid rich articles of diet.
"Which really consists of Cocoa Nibs deprived of the superfluous oil."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.
TENTH INTERNATIONAL MEDAL
awarded to J. S. FRY and SONS.

SCHWEITZER'S COCOATINA.
Anti-Dyspeptic Cocoa or Chocolate Powder.
Guaranteed Pure Soluble Cocoa, with excess of Fat extracted
Four times the strength of Cocoas Thickened yet Weakened with Arrowroot, Starch, &c., and really cheaper.
The Faculty pronounce it the most nutritious, perfectly digestive Beverage for "BREAKFAST, LUNCHEON, or SUPPER," and invaluable for Invalids and Children. Keeps in all Climates. Requires no Cooking. A teaspoonful in Breakfast cup costing less than a halfpenny. Samples gratis.
H. SCHWEITZER and CO., 10, Adam Street, London, W.C.

JOHNSTON'S (THE OLD HOUSE)
CORN FLOUR IS THE BEST.
"Is decidedly superior."—Lancet.
JOHNSTON'S SCOTCH OATMEAL, in packets, with plain directions for making Porridge, Brose, and Gruel.

NATURAL MINERAL WATERS.
VICHY.
Property of the French Government.
CELESTINS—The water of this spring is very agreeable, sparkling, and slightly acidulated. Remedy for complaints of the Kidneys, Gravel, Gout, Diabetes, Rheumatism, &c.
HAUTERIVE—This spring contains a greater quantity of carbonic acid, and is especially recommended as a table water.
GRANDE-GRILLE—For complaints of the Liver and Biliary Organs, Indigestion, &c.
HOPITAL—For Stomach complaints, &c.
VICHY WATERS are pleasant to the taste, and may be drank pure or mixed with wine or spirits.
CAUTION—See that the name of the particular water required is on the capsule.
Sold by all Chemists, Wine, and Mineral Merchants
Price One Shilling per Bottle.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD LIVER OIL (Registered).
No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.
Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.
"The natural nauseous taste of the Oil is disguised with considerable art. Children take it with avidity."—See Lancet, British Medical Journal, Sanitary Record, Medical Times, Medical Press, Medical Record, &c.
Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half-pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure
Retail of all Chemists and Druggists, and Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited), Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

THROAT IRRITATION.
EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Sold only in Boxes, 6d and 1s. labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS,
48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

TAMAR-INDIEN, a laxative, refreshing, and medicated Fruit Lozenge—the effectual Cure of Constipation, Headache, Bile, Hæmorrhoids, &c. Tamar (unlike pills and the usual purgatives) is agreeable to take, and never produces irritation. 2s. 6d. per box; post free, 2s. 8d.
E. GRILLON, Wool Exchange, E.C., and of all Chemists.

DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—Mr. Williamson, 9, South Street, Scarborough, writes:—"I have seen their beneficial effect for years in cases of Consumption, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, &c." 1s. 1½d.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CON-STIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children.
The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says: It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families."
Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists
Wholesale: 82, Southwark Street, London.

TOOTH-ACHE.
INSTANT CURE.
FORMS A STOPPING.
SAVES THE TOOTH.
J. Hounsell, Esq., Surgeon, Bridport, writes:—"I consider Hunter's Nervine a specific for Toothache. Very severe cases under my care have found instantaneous and permanent relief."
Of all chemists, at 1s. 1½d. per packet.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR INDIGESTION, WIND, HEARTBURN, &c.
Also unrivalled as a Tonic, Purifying, Family Aperient Medicine, without Mercury.
DR. SCOTT'S BILIOUS and LIVER PILLS, prepared by W. LAMBERT, 10, Vere Street, London, W. Price 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per Box; post free for 15 or 35 penny stamps, or of all Chemists. See you have the right Pills, "Dr. Scott's," which are wrapped in a square green package.

DR. LELIEVRE'S ICELAND MOSS POULTICE (Patented) is exempt from all the inconveniences inseparable from Poultices made with Linseed or Bread. These spoil the linen, bedding, &c., dry up on the edges, rapidly ferment, giving a most unpleasant odour; and no dependence can be placed on the quality and freshness of the linseed meal. This New Poultice is instantaneous, for it is ready in a few seconds. Sold retail by all Chemists.
Wholesale: RIGOLLOT and CO, 82, Southwark St., London.

NO WORM BREEDERS, FILTH COLLECTORS.—DOMESTIC FILTERS, self-filling, self-cleansing, 4 sizes, from 35s. 6d Prospectus. Gas, healthier, whiter light; cost saved in trouble, 25 to 30 per cent. consumption.—J. LISTER, 5, Woodland Hill, Norwood, E.C.

£10.—In return for a £10 Note, free and safe, per post, one of BENNETT'S LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, perfect for time, beauty, and workmanship, with keyless action, air tight, damp tight, and dust tight.—65, Cheapside, London. Good chains at manufacturer's prices. P.O.O. to John Bennett.
BENNETT, 65 and 64, Cheapside.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE (or NORTH LONDON) HOSPITAL.
SPECIAL CHRISTMAS APPEAL FOR AID.

Ordinary Annual Expenditure over	£13,000
Reliable Income from Dividends, Annual Subscriptions, &c.	7,600
Deficit	£5,400

The total amount of RELIEF AFFORDED TO SICK CASES FROM JANUARY 1 TO OCTOBER 31 THIS YEAR has been as follows:—In-Patients, 1,687. Out-Patients, 4,762. Casualties, 5,106. Ophthalmic Cases, 1,184. Cases of Diseases of the Skin, 655. Cases of Childbirth attended at the patients' own habitations, 1,237. Total, 14,721.
The Committee most earnestly appeal to the benevolent public for pecuniary assistance to enable them to PAY OFF the above liability of the past year. SUBSCRIPTIONS received by Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand, or at the Hospital.
NEWTON H. NIXON, Secretary

NATIONAL INSTITUTION FOR DISEASES OF THE SKIN, Gray's Inn Road.
Established 1864.
PHYSICIAN—Dr BARR MEADOWS, 47, Victoria Street, S.W.
Free to necessitous; payment required from other applicants.

MUNICIPAL COLLEGE OF BOU-LOGNE-SUR-MER, under the direct supervision of the MUNICIPAL COUNCIL. Founded in 1839. It offers to Families the following advantages:—A literary and scientific education or a superior commercial education. The pupils are examined quarterly by Inspectors of the French University, and prepared for the Ecoles Polytechnic, St. Cyr, Navy, &c. Prospectuses and particulars on application to M. BARET, Head-Master, or to M. DUTERTRE, House Steward, The College, Boulogne-sur-Mer, or HENRY JOHNSON, Esq., Merchant, 67, Lower Thames Street, London, E.C.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL (SELECT) FOR LADIES, BOLTON HOUSE, 191, Clapham Road, Surrey. Established 1867 A private home where patients suffering from serious diseases, and requiring special supervision, can obtain the best medical and surgical treatment without incurring anxiety in their own homes. Treatise of successful cures forwarded for twelve stamps. Physician, DAVID JONES, M.D. Consultations daily, 11 till 1 (Tuesday and Friday excepted), at 15, Welbeck St., London.

E. DENT and CO., 61, Strand, and 43, Royal Exchange, London. Manufacturers of CHRONOMETERS, WATCHES, CLOCKS, &c. (Catalogues free) to Her Majesty the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and Foreign Sovereigns.
Makers of the Great Westminster Clock and of the New Standard Clock of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

MAPPIN and WEBB,
MANUFACTURERS,
Mansion House Buildings, City, London.
The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S TABLE CUTLERY.—BEST QUALITY DOUBLE SHEAR STEEL.

	Table	Dessert	Carver
Ivory, per doz.	15s. 0d.	11s. 0d.	7s. 0d.
Ivory, balance, per doz.	19s. 0d.	15s. 0d.	7s. 0d.
Ivory, balance, per doz.	22s. 0d.	16s. 0d.	7s. 6d.
Ivory, stout, per doz.	32s. 0d.	22s. 0d.	9s. 6d.
4 inch fine Ivory, per doz.	34s. 0d.	24s. 0d.	10s. 6d.

Oak Boxes always kept ready in stock.
Illustrated catalogues post free.

MAPPIN and WEBB,
MANUFACTURERS,
76, 77, and 78, Oxford Street, West End, London.
The Highest Quality at Lowest Prices.

DEANE'S TABLE CUTLERY, celebrated for more than 150 years, remains unrivalled for quality and cheapness. The stock is extensive and complete, affording a choice suited to every purchaser.

Ivory Handles.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Table Knives, doz.	16 0	19 0	22 0	25 0	32 0	35 0	40 0
Dessert ditto ,,	14 0	16 0	19 0	21 0	27 0	30 0	34 0
Carvers, pair	6 0	6 6	7 0	8 0	9 0	10 6	13 0

DEANE'S FENDERS & FIREIRONS.
DEANE and CO.'s Show Rooms for these goods contain a large, cheap, and choice variety of patterns.

Fenders, Drawing Room	£2 5	£3 3	£6 6	£11 11	£15 0
Fire Irons ditto	1 5	1 15	2 2	4 10	5 10
Fenders, Dining Room	0 17	1 4	1 10	2 5	4 4
Fire Irons ditto	0 10	0 15	1 1	1 10	2 5

Bed Room Fenders, 3s. to 18s.; Fire Irons, 3s. to 12s.
Deane and Co.'s Catalogue, with furnishing Estimates post free.
DEANE and CO., 46, KING WILLIAM ST., LONDON BRIDGE.

GARDNERS' TOUGHENED GLASS and INDESTRUCTIBLE DINNERWARE, the Glass direct from De la Bastie's Manufactory. Wholesale price lists free on application.—GARDNERS', Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

GARDNERS' NEW DINNER SER-VICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons:—

The Osborne, in pink or green	£3 5 0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3 13 6
The Bramble, in all colours	4 4 0
The One Thousand and Two	5 5 0
The One Thousand and Two A	5 5 0
The Japanese Bamboo	6 6 0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNER'S, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

OSLER'S GLASS CHANDELIERS.
WALL LIGHTS AND LUSTRES.
CHANDELIERS IN BRONZE AND ORMOLU
KEROSENE AND OTHER LAMPS
FOR INDIA AND HOME USE.
TABLE GLASS OF ALL KINDS
AND NEWEST DESIGNS.
ORNAMENTAL GLASS, ENGLISH AND FOREIGN.
BIRMINGHAM: Manufactory and Show Rooms, Broad St.
LONDON: Show Rooms, 45, Oxford Street, W.

69, LUDGATE HILL.
TRELOAR'S—KAMPTULICON.
TRELOAR'S—COCOA NUT MATS.
TRELOAR'S—TURKEY CARPETS.
TRELOAR'S—ORIENTAL HEARTH RUGS
69, LUDGATE HILL.

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY | "THE PERFECTION OF WHISKY." UNRIVALLED FOR "TODDY."
Wholesale of the Sole Proprietors, GREENLEES BROS. 1, Gresham Buildings, E.C. (Distilleries, Argyleshire.)

CHRISTMAS CASES, One Guinea containing 3 Bottles of Port, 3 Sherry, 1 Gin, 1 Rum 1 Whiskey, 1 Brandy, 1 lb. Tea. All reputed quart bottles warranted pure and genuine. Sent bottles, case, and carriage free, to any Railway Station in England, by the VICTORIA WINE CO., 12, Mark Lane. P.O.O. to W. W. Hughes.

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.— Universally recommended by the Medical Profession. A pure old spirit, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome. Dr. HASSALL says:—"The samples were soft and mellow to the taste, aromatic and ethereal to the smell. The Whisky must be pronounced to be pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality."

HEDGES and Butler, 155, Regent Street, London, and 30 and 74, King's Road, Brighton, invite attention to their
CLARET, at 14s., 18s., 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s., to 84s.
SHERRY, at 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s., 48s., to 60s.
CHAMPAGNE, at 36s., 42s., 48s., 60s., 66s., to 78s.
OLD PORT, at 24s., 30s., 36s., 42s., 48s., 60s., to 96s.
Fine old Pale Brandy, 48s., 60s., 72s., 84s.

BENHAM and SONS,
WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON, W

BENHAM and SONS'
VENTILATING GLOBE LIGHTS.
The following are some of the advantages of this mode of lighting:—
1. It carries off all the heat and foul air from the burner.
2. It also ventilates the apartment by removing the heated and vitiated air.
3. It introduces a constant supply of external fresh air
4. The flame is powerful, steady, and cannot be affected by draughts.
5. No smoke escaping, the ceiling is not blackened

BENHAM and SONS'
SHOW ROOMS FOR CHIMNEY-PIECES

BENHAM and SONS'
SHOW-ROOMS FOR FENDERS

BENHAM and SONS'
STOVES FOR DRAWING-ROOMS.

BENHAM and SONS'
STOVES FOR DINING-ROOMS.

BENHAM and SONS'
STOVES FOR LIBRARIES.

BENHAM and SONS'
STOVES FOR ENTRANCE HALLS.

BENHAM and SONS'
STOVES FOR BEDROOMS.

BENHAM and SONS'
DOG STOVES AND DOGS.

BENHAM and SONS'
CHINA TILE STOVES.

BENHAM and SONS'
TILE HEARTHS.

BENHAM and SONS'
"COUNTRY PARSON" GRATES are recommended by Mr. Mechi and "another country parson."

BENHAM and SONS'
GERMAN PORCELAIN STOVE may be seen in operation. Keeps alight for twelve hours. Consumes only 14lb. coal in twenty-four hours.—50, 52, 54, Wigmore Street, W.

BENHAM and SONS'
PATENT COAL ECONOMISING GRATES. This Grate in its construction is exactly the reverse of an ordinary Register Stove; instead of being recessed in the mantel, all the heating surface stands out prominently in the room.—50, 52, 54, Wigmore Street, W.

BENHAM and SONS'
PATENT SLOW COMBUSTION GRATES keep alight for several hours, and save more than half the fuel.—50, 52, 54, Wigmore Street

BENHAM and SONS'
COOKING APPARATUS.—For cooking purposes, Benham and Sons have various patented arrangements adapted to the various requirements of hotels, club houses, hospitals, asylums, prisons, workhouses, schools, colleges.—50, 52, 54, Wigmore Street.

BENHAM and SONS'
KITCHEN RANGES.

BENHAM and SONS'
COOKING APPARATUS.

BENHAM and SONS'
LAUNDRY APPARATUS.

BENHAM and SONS'
HEATING APPARATUS.

BENHAM and SONS'
HOT-WATER APPARATUS.

BENHAM and SONS'
STEAM-ENGINES.

BENHAM and SONS'
LAUNDRY DRYING CLOSETS.

BENHAM and SONS are also prepared to undertake ENGINEERS' WORK of every description for Asylums, Workhouses, and other large establishments, comprising the following, viz.: Steam Engines and Boilers; Heating Apparatus, by means of hot water, hot air, or steam; Hot and Cold Water Tanks and Services, Pumps, &c.; Baths, Lavatories, &c.; Laundries, Washhouses, and Drying Closets; Gas-works and Gas-fittings; Hoists (or Lifts) for dinners; Coals, &c.—Wigmore Street, London, W. Factory, 66, Wigmore Street.

BENHAM and SONS'
LIFTS (or HOISTS), to work by Hand or Steam, or Hydraulic Power.—Wigmore Street, W.

BENHAM and SONS'
GAS-WORKS, GAS-FITTINGS, and GAS-COOKING APPARATUS.—50, 52, and 54, Wigmore Street.

BENHAM and SONS'
PATENT VENTILATING KITCHENER. It requires no brickwork to fix it. It roasts, bakes, boils, and steams with one fire, and supplies a bath if required.—50, Wigmore Street.

BENHAM and SONS'
PATENT COAL CELLARETTE or "Londonderry," is specially adapted for use in clubs, banking-houses, hotels, railway stations, Government offices, hospitals, steampackets, noblemen's mansions, entrance halls, &c. One Londonderry placed in a corridor or landing will supply fuel for a whole suite of rooms.—50, 52, 54, Wigmore Street.

BENHAM and SONS'
PLATED TEA SERVICES from £4.

BENHAM and SONS'
PLATED DISH-COVERS, on Nickel, from £9 per Set.

BENHAM and SONS'
PLATED DESSERT KNIVES and FORKS.

BENHAM and SONS'
PLATED FISH KNIVES and FORKS

BENHAM and SONS'
PLATED TEA-URNS, on Nickel, from £6 18s.

BENHAM and SONS'
PLATED TEA-KETTLES, on Nickel, from £4.

BENHAM and SONS'
PLATED BISCUIT BOXES, from 25s.

BENHAM and SONS'
PLATED TRAYS and WAITERS, from 30s.

BENHAM and SONS'
BRONZE TEA-URNS, from 50s.

BENHAM and SONS'
BRONZE TEA-KETTLES, from 45s.

BENHAM and SONS'
BATHS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

BENHAM and SONS,
WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.; and at 3, Mansfield Chambers, St. Ann's Square, Manchester.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER OF

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE, containing the following Popular Dance Music:

Trial by Jury Lancers	Charles D'Albert.
Constantinople Quadrille	Charles D'Albert.
Die Fledermaus Waltz	Johann Strauss.
Les Lointains Waltz	Emile Waldteufel.
Maiden's Dream Waltz	Edward Hoffmann.
The Schomberg Galop	Charles D'Albert.
Floretta Polka	Charles D'Albert.
Pizzicato Polka	J. and J. Strauss.
Forget-me-not Galop	A. Hecker.

And a New Quadrille,
MOLLIE DARLING, by CHARLES D'ALBERT.
Price One Shilling; post free, 1s. 2d.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CLEOPATRA GALOP. By Charles D'ALBERT, just published. "A splendid galop." Beautifully illustrated, 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE FANFARE POLKA. By Charles D'ALBERT. Illustrated. Price 1s. 6d. net. Orchestra, 3s.; Septett, 2s.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

	Net.
DISTANT SHORE WALTZ, on Arthur Sullivan's New Song	2 0
SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite Composer"	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Work	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	1 6
RINK GALOP	2 0

The above, arranged for Full Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s. each.
N B A Complete List of M. D'Albert's Popular Dance Music will be sent on application to
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

A NEW CHRISTMAS SONG,

THE KING OF OUR SAXON YULE. By W. F. TAYLOR. A jovial song for Baritone or Bass Voice, with chorus ad lib Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SPECIALITIES in PIANOFORTES.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S STUDENT'S PIANOFORTE. Compass 5 Octaves, 15 gs., or £1 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SCHOOL PIANINOS. From Canadian Walnut, 20 gs., or 2 gs. per qr. on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT PIANINOS, 30 gs., or £3 per quarter on the 3 years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR PIANINO, 35 gs., or £3 10s per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MODEL PIANETTE, 35 gs., or £3 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH MODEL, 40 gs., or £4 per quarter on the 3 years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S COLONIAL MODEL, 45 gs., or £4 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S FOREIGN MODEL, 50 gs., or £5 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH OBLIQUE, 55 gs., or £5 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S OBLIQUE GRAND, 70 gs., or £7 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IRON-FRAMED OBLIQUE, 90 gs., or £9 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MIGNON IRON GRAND, 80 gs., or £8 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR IRON GRAND, 110 guineas, or £11 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

UPWARDS of ONE HUNDRED VARIETIES on VIEW.

MAY BE HAD OF ALL PIANOFORTE DEALERS throughout the United Kingdom.

SHOW-ROOMS, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

STEAM FACTORY, CHALK FARM ROAD, N.W.

DANCE MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

HAMMOND'S MUSIC PORTFOLIO. Price 1s. each number. Post free 13 stamps. Violin and Cornet Accompaniments to each number, 6d. each.

No 1 CONTAINS:

Brise des Nuits Waltzes	Lamothe.
Hydropaten Waltzes	Gung'l.
Manuelita Waltzes	Waldteufel.
Autograph Waltzes	Strauss.
St. David's Quadrille	Dan Godfrey.
Bruder Lustig Galop	Budik.

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

Le Premier Baiser Waltzes	Lamothe.
Venus Reigen Waltzes	Gung'l.
Den Lieben Langen Tag Waltzes	Rudel.
Deutsche Herzen Waltzes	Strauss.
The 'Varsity Lancers	D'Egville.
The Pet Schottische	Bertrand.

CONTENTS OF No 3.
SIX WALTZES BY JOSEPH GUNG'L.

Soldaten Lieder	Waltzes.
Grafenberger	Waltzes.
Daheim!	Waltzes.
Jungherren Tänze	Waltzes.
Fantasiebilder	Waltzes.
Mein schönster Tag in Berlin	Waltzes.

CONTENTS OF No 4

Frühlingslieder Waltzes	Gung'l.
Lille Waltzes	Strauss.
Le Tour du monde Waltzes	Metra.
La Fiancee Waltz	Lamothe.
Hochzeit (Wedding) Quadrille	Strauss.
Pergola Polka	Marie.

CONTENTS OF NO. 5.

Amoretten Tänze Waltzes, duet	Gung'l.
Soldaten Lieder Waltzes, duet	Gung'l.

A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, London, W.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S Practical PianoFORTE SCHOOL.
Section 1. No. 1. PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

MUSICAL LIBRARY SERIES. Edited and carefully fingered, with Metronome marks by CHARLES HALLÉ.
58 Numbers now ready.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

CHARLES HALLÉS New Edition of POPULAR WORKS.
Carefully fingered and revised with Metronome marks.
For list of pieces already published Catalogues will be forwarded post free on application to
FORSYTH BROTHERS, 272a, Regent Circus, Oxford St., London; Cross Street, South King Street, Manchester

THE MUSICAL TIMES. Price 3d. The Largest and Best Musical Journal (64 Pages).

THE MUSICAL TIMES for December contains:—Holiday Music, by H. C. Lunn; The Great Composers, Sketched by Themselves; Mozart, by J. Bennett (continued); History of Music Printing, by Dr. Chrysander (concluded); Borrowed Plumes; Newcastle Concerts; Glasgow Choral Union; Edinburgh Choral Union; Monday Popular, Crystal Palace, and other Concerts; Her Majesty's Opera; Opera-Comique; Reviews; Foreign and Country News; Part Song, "In Memoriam Therese Titiens," by J. L. Roeckel; and Christmas Carol, "Hollyberries," by W. J. Westbrook. Postage free 4d. Annual subscription 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for December contains Part Song, "In Memoriam, Therese Titiens," by J. L. Roeckel, and Christmas Carol, "Hollyberries," by W. J. Westbrook. Music separately, 1½d.

NEW SONG BY JOSEPH BARNBY.

ELIZABETH'S SONG, from "The Saint's Tragedy," by the Rev. CHARLES KINGSLEY. Set to Music by JOSEPH BARNBY. 4s.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S MUSIC Primers. Edited by Dr. STAINER. The following are now ready:—

Third Edition.

THE PIANOFORTE PRIMER. By ERNST PAUER. Price 2s.

Second Edition.

THE ORGAN PRIMER. By Dr. STAINER. Price 2s.

Second Edition.

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC PRIMER. By W. H. CUMMINGS. Price 1s.

Second Edition.

THE ELEMENTS OF THE BEAUTIFUL IN MUSIC. By ERNST PAUER. Price 1s. (Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s Music Primers.)

Ready on December 15.

HARMONY PRIMER. By Dr. Stainer.

SIXTY HARMONIUM VOLUNTARIES. Arranged by J. W. ELLIOTT. 1s.

MENDELSSOHN'S ELIJAH.—Arranged for the Pianoforte by BERTHOLD TOURS. Folio size, 5s.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH.—Arranged for the Pianoforte by BERTHOLD TOURS Folio size, 5s.
All the above Works may be had of the Musicsellers in the Town, or direct from NOVELLO, EWER, and CO., 1, Berners Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C.

MUSICAL PRESENTS FOR THE NEW YEAR.—High-class Music for Amateurs, Students, and others.—To be had, gratis and post free, a LIST of 400 CLASSICAL WORKS, bound, at greatly reduced prices.—Published only by ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

MUSIC.—Just issued, gratis and postage free, a CATALOGUE of more than 500 popular publications for the Pianoforte, by BRINLEY RICHARDS and GEORGE FREDERICK WEST.—Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO.

CONCERTS, PENNY READINGS, &c.—POPULAR SONGS, Vocal Duets, Trios, and Quartets (Part Songs), selected from Messrs ROBERT COCKS and CO.'s Catalogue. This list may be had gratis and post free.

A FRAGMENT from MENDELSSOHN Arranged for the Pianoforte by C. A. CASPAR. The same as a Piano Duet. 4s. each; post free at half-price.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

A SINGING QUADRILLE, Composed for the Pianoforte by COTSFORD DICK (Illustrated Title). "Capital fun for all ages."—The Graphic. "Includes every imaginary nursery favourite song. Their reproduction in this now fashionable dance will delight both the old and young."—Vide Edinburgh Courant. Also, by the same Composer, the LOOK-OUT QUADRILLE, for Piano (Illustrated Title). 4s. each. Post free at half-price.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

THE CUCKOO'S CONCERT. New Song. Written expressly for the publishers by the Author of "Silver Threads among the Gold." A capital song for young people. Post free for 18 stamps. Also, by the same composer, "Chimes at Sea;" same price.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

A LIST OF 500 ONE SHILLING PIECES for the PIANOFORTE, arranged and fingered by André, Bellak, John Bishop, W. H. Callcott, Czerny, Gerville, Mattini, Muller, Oetten, Brinley Richards, W. Smallwood, Michael Watson, George Frederick West, &c. Also, a Series of 1s. Duets for the Piano. This valuable List may be had, gratis, post free, on application to the Publishers.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street. Order everywhere.

STOLEN KISSES WALTZ. By Hans WALDENFELDT. Free, 2s. Played nightly at the Globe with immense success "A decided hit."
OSMAN PASHA MARCH. By ADOLPH MEYER. Free, 2s. "A bold, inspiriting melody—the time well marked."
London: WOOD and CO., 3, Great Marlborough Street.

ROBERT STANLEY'S NEW SONGS.
DEAR LITTLE FLOWERS.
WHEN LOVE'S GLOW HATH GONE BY.
EASTING.
Price 2s. each net.
J. B CRAMER and CO., 201, Regent Street.

Price 1s. each Book; by post, 14 stamps.

BATH'S "MUSICAL MUSEUM" for THE HARMONIUM.

BOOK I., containing twenty-six Sacred Melodies, selected and arranged by W. Layland.

BOOK II., containing eighteen Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by A. S. Holloway.

BOOK III., containing twenty Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by Dr. Spark.

BOOK IV., selected and arranged by Michael Watson, is as cheap a shillingsworth as can be met with in the musical world. It contains twenty-two pieces for that instrument, including a popular "Volkslied," by Mendelssohn, a "Rondo," by Dussek, a "Bouree" and Gavotte, by Bach—in fact, most of our great ancient and modern composers have contributed a share to this excellent little work.—Vide Graphic, Oct. 27.

BOOK V., containing eighteen Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by J. F. Webster.

J. BATH, 40, Great Marlborough Street, W.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO (Cooperative price for cash). Seven octaves, strong, sound, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free. Drawings gratis on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., Portman Sq.

PIANOS, £16—Pianos, £18—Pianos, £20 —GREAT SALE of PIANOS returned from Hire. Full compass, 7 octaves. In excellent condition, equal to new, at half the original prices. Packed free and forwarded to any part of the kingdom. Descriptive lists post free on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., London, W.

EBONY and GOLD PIANOS, 28 Guineas, 35 Guineas, and 45 Guineas.—These charming and elegant Pianos, with ormolu embellishments, elaborately carved work, repetition action, and every recent improvement, may now be obtained at the above low prices for cash, or on the three years' system at one guinea per month. The Illustrated Catalogue gratis and post free.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

PIANO, £35 (Civil Service cash price).—Trichord Drawing Room Model, repetition action, grand, rich, full tone, handsome Italian walnut-wood case, elaborately carved fretwork front, and cabriole truss legs. The usual price charged for this instrument is 50 guineas.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

STEPHEN ADAMS'S TWO NEW SONGS.

YOUTH AND AGE. The words by the Rev. CHARLES KINGSLEY. The music by the composer of "Nancy Lee." Sung by Mr. Maybrick at the Ballad Concerts.

THE TAR'S FAREWELL. The words by F. C. BURNAND. The music by the composer of "Nancy Lee." Sung by Mr. Santley at the Ballad Concerts. Price 2s each net.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS in MUSIC, all handsomely bound in cloth, gilt edges.
THE ILLUSTRATED SONGS OF SCOTLAND (190 songs with twelve full-page Illustrations) 10s 6d
BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS. Edited by W. Dorrell 10s 6d.
MENDELSSOHN'S SONGS WITHOUT WORDS. 4s.
SCHUMANN'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM. 4s
CHOPIN'S WALTZES, NOCTURNES, and MAZURKAS. 4s
STRAUSS' WALTZ ALBUM (18 sets). 4s.
THE ROYAL SONG BOOKS.
RUBINSTEIN'S 50 SONGS. 4s.
RUBINSTEIN'S 18 VOCAL DUETS. 4s.
BEETHOVEN'S 76 SONGS. 4s.
MENDELSSOHN'S 60 Songs. 4s.
SCHUMANN'S 75 SONGS 4s.
THE SONGS OF GERMANY. 4s.
The above have all German and English words.
THE SONGS OF ENGLAND. 4s
THE SONGS OF SCOTLAND. 4s.
THE SONGS OF IRELAND. 4s.
THE SONGS OF WALES 4s.
The above form a complete collection of National Songs
SACRED SONGS, ANCIENT and MODERN. 4s.
HUMOROUS SONGS. 4s.
CHOICE DUETS FOR LADIES' VOICES. 4s.
All the 4s volumes can be had in paper covers, 2s. 6d. each.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

BOOSEY and CO.'S PIANOFORTE ROOMS.
GRAND and UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES,
by all the great makers, both English and Foreign,
for SALE or HIRE,
(subject to the largest discount obtainable in London.
Pianettes, from £20. Short Grands, from £40.
Sole Address, 295, Regent Street.

PRATTEN' PERFECTED FLUTES, Cylinder and Cone, commencing at 4 gs The Siccama Flute and the Boehm Old and New System of Fingering. Particulars of all these Instruments upon application to the Manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, W.

BOOSEY and CO.'S BRASS INSTRUMENTS FOR AMATEURS.
THE DISTIN CORNET, from £3 10s.
THE DISTIN CELEBRATED LIGHT VALVE CORNETS, 7 and 9 guineas, are the best Cornets manufactured.
THE DISTIN MINIATURE CORNET-A-PISTONS, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN BALLAD HORN in C, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN DRAG AND POST HORNS AND BAND INSTRUMENTS at all prices.
THE DISTIN MONTHLY BRASS BAND JOURNAL, 10s. 6d. per annum.
The above instruments were exhibited by Boosey and Co. at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and were awarded a Prize Medal "For power and good quality of tone, fine workmanship." Estimates for Bands of all sizes, also illustrations and prices, to be had of the sole manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

NEW WALTZES by OTTO MULLER —Composer of the famous Geliebt und Verloren (Loved and Lost). In making the present announcement DUFF and STEWART beg to point to the unprecedented success, and (for the few months it has been published) unparalleled sale of Geliebt und Verloren, and they now have great pleasure in submitting for public approval Otto Muller's Two New Sets of Waltzes,
ZART UND TREU (Tender and True), and
VERLOBT (Betrothed).
Post free 2s. each.—DUFF and STEWART, 157, Oxford St.

A PRETTY PRESENT for CHILDREN —WATCHING FOR PA. Juvenile Quadrille on popular melodies sung by Christy's Minstrels (beautifully illustrated), arranged without octaves and fingered throughout by JULES ROCHARD. Post free 2s.
DUFF and STEWART, 157, Oxford Street.

NEW and POPULAR WALTZES, performed at Arditi's Concert, Covent Garden Theatre.
Loved and Lost. Otto Muller. | The Last Kiss. Otto Muller.
Reve d'Amour. G. Lamothe. | Fontainebleau. G. Lamothe.
Juliette. G. Lamothe.
Post free 2s. each.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford St., and all Musicsellers.

MUSICAL-BOX Depot, 22, Ludgate Hill, London, E C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price, £4 to £120. Snuff-Boxes, 18s to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and M'CULLOCH, as above.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867.
BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.
Central Depot for the British Empire: 10, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.
A GREAT SECRET. Words by F E Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Trevor.
"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News.
Post free 24 stamps.
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row.

BUTLER'S MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Violins, Concertinas, Harmoniums, Flutes, Clarionets, Flageolets, Guitars, Zithers, Banjoes, Accordions, Flutinas, Cornets, Saxhorns, Drums, Fifes, and Musical Instruments of every description. Largest assortment in the kingdom at BUTLER'S MANUFACTORY, 29, Haymarket, London.—Illustrated catalogue, 50 pages, post free.

MUSICAL BOXES, by Nicole Freres. —KEITH, PROWSE, and CO., direct importers, have the largest Stock of really fine BOXES in Europe, £3 to £300. The new rooms devoted to the display of these instruments are now ready. Self-acting and Barrel Pianoforte, 18 to 1,200 gs.

FLUTES.—NEW MODEL, for beauty of tone unsurpassed, four guineas and seven guineas; Rudall's Prize-medal Flutes, new and second-hand. A great variety of second-hand Flutes, one guinea to 25 guineas, at KEITH, PROWSE, and CO.'s Manufactory, 48, Cheapside.

BANJOES.—CHEAPSIDE MODEL is best Covered back, machine head, &c., five guineas; including light case, £6. Other models one to twelve guineas. Self-instructing book, with airs, songs, &c., 6s. net.—KEITH, PROWSE, and CO., Manufacturers, 48, Cheapside.

WILLS' "BEST BIRD'S-EYE" CIGARETTES
Sold everywhere in Sixpenny Packets (containing Ten), protected by our Name and Trade Mark.—W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

WILLS' "THREE CASTLES." "There's no sweeter Tobacco comes from Virginia, and no better brand than the 'THREE CASTLES.'"—Vide "The Virginians." Sold only in Packets, protected by the Name and Trade Mark of
W. D. and H. O. WILLS.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE

PULVERMACHER's "GALVANISM, NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF EXHAUSTED VITAL ENERGY."
In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Bands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post free for three stamps, on application to
J. L. PULVERMACHER'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 194, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

NOTICE.—BLANKETS FOR CHARITIES.—OETZMANN and CO. are now offering a large stock of stout heavy Blankets, all wool, suitable for charities, large institutions, &c, also Quilts and Flannels; these goods having been bought for cash during the late depression, the prices will be found much below actual value. Reduced price list post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
OETZMANN & CO.
67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,
HAMPSTEAD ROAD,
NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZMANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PREMISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO. are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free

DINING-ROOM SUITES. — OETZMANN and CO.—Handsome Mahogany Dining-Room Suite, consisting of a Couch, Six Chairs, and Two Easy Chairs, well upholstered in best leather, price 20 guineas; Superior ditto in Oak or Spanish Mahogany, with handsome Lounge, Six Stuffed Back Chairs, and Two Easy Chairs, upholstered in best leather, and finished in a superior manner, price 28 guineas; Handsome Early English and Mediæval Dining-room Suites, in Oak, consisting of a large Divan Lounge, Six Chairs, and Two Noble Easy Chairs, upholstered in best leather and finished in the best possible manner, price 35 gs.

THE SANDRINGHAM EASY CHAIR, full size, upholstered very soft and comfortable, suitable for any room, price 25s.; lady's ditto, smaller size, 21s. Also the Sandringham Couch, upholstered very soft and comfortable, price 2 guineas. Every one about to furnish should see these marvels of excellence and economy. Packed free and despatched same day on receipt of order per post.
OETZMANN and CO.

THE "NONPAREIL" Bedroom Suite, complete, 6½ guineas, superior to any hitherto produced at the price, is enamelled imitation of Amboyna, Satinwood, or any other handsome Woods—also enamelled in Drab or White ground, decorated with fine lines—any colour. Ditto, but having a larger Wardrobe with Silvered Plate Glass in door, and a marble top to washstand complete, 9 guineas.
OETZMANN and CO.

CARPETS. FLOORCLOTH.
CARPETS. FLOORCLOTH.
CARPETS. FLOORCLOTH.

ANGLO-TURKEY CARPETS.—These superior Carpets, of which Messrs OETZMANN and CO. have the exclusive sale, are of first-class British manufacture, have all the style and appearance of real Turkey Carpets, at little more than the price of good Brussels, and are very durable. Price lists post free on application. For the convenience of those residing at a distance, a large piece showing the border and centre of carpet, sent on receipt of 5s., which will be deducted from price of carpet or refunded upon return of pattern. Hearth Rugs to match, 6 ft. long by 2 ft. 8 in. wide, £1 5s 6d. A large stock of real Turkey carpets at reduced prices.—OETZMANN and CO.

CARPET DEPARTMENT.—A quantity of ready-made carpets will be cleared out a bargain. Quotations forwarded per post upon receiving size and description required. Large size Hearthrugs, 4s. 9d each; super ditto, 8s. 11d.; Axminster ditto, 12s. 9d.; best Axminster ditto, 15s. 6d.—usual price, 21s.; stout Floor Cloth at 9d. per yard; Patent Linoleum Floor Cloth and Stair Cloth, from 1s. 9d per yard; Hemp Dutch Carpet, yard wide, 8d. per yard; large Kitchen Hearth Rug, 3s. 9d.; Sheepskin Hearthrugs, from 15s. 9d. upwards; ditto mats, from 2s.
OETZMANN and CO

CHEAP CARPET COVERS FOR WINTER.—OETZMANN and CO.—Stout Linen Damask Crumb Cloths, Brown or Slate, 2 yards by 2 yards, 4s. 9d.; 2 by 3, 6s. 9d.; 2½ by 3, 8s. 9d.; 3½ by 3, 13s. 6d.; other sizes equally cheap. Stout Plaid Scotch Drugget, bound all round, 2¾ yards by 2 yards, 10s. 9d.; 3 by 2¾, 15s 9d.; 4 by 3, 22s. 6d. Stout Felt Carpets, with borders, 8 ft. by 6 ft., 12s; 8 feet by 7 ft. 6 in., 15s.; 10 ft. 6 in. by 8 ft., 21s.; 12 ft. by 10 ft. 6 in., 31s. 6d.—OETZMANN and CO.

CURTAIN DEPARTMENT.— Handsome Damask and Rep Curtains, from 25s per pair, the largest, cheapest, and best assortment in London; Cretonne ditto, from 15s. per pair; Madrid stripe ditto, all wool, 15s. per pair; Muslin and Lace Curtains, elegant designs, 3 yards long by 40 and 52 inches wide, 4s. 11d. per pair, worth 7s. 6d.; very handsome ditto, 4 yards long by 52 to 64 inches wide, 10s. 6d., worth 16s 9d.; magnificent Guipure Lace Curtains, 4 yards long by 60 inches wide, 14s 9d per pair.
OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN & CO.'S WARRANTED TABLE CUTLERY.—Finest steel blades and fast handles. Each blade is stamped with name of the Firm, and guaranteed.

Order No.		Table Knives pt. doz.	Dessert Knives per doz.	Carvers per pair	Steels each.
11	3½ in. ivory handles	14 6	11 0	4 9	3 0
12	3½ in. fine ivory handles	18 6	14 6	5 9	3 6
13	4 in. ivory handles	25 0	20 0	7 6	3 9
14	3¾ in. fine ivory handles	28 0	22 0	8 9	4 6
15	4 in. fine ivory handles	31 6	25 6	9 6	4 9
16	4 in. fine ivory handles	35 0	27 6	10 6	5 6
17	Finest African ivory handles	35 0	27 6	10 6	6 0
18	Ditto ditto	42 0	32 0	13 9	6 9

Game or Poultry Carvers same price as meat carvers. Note in ordering per post, the Order Number will be sufficient to denote the quality required.

CLEOPATRA TOILET SERVICE.—OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGN, a beautiful Grecian shape, meets the great desideratum of art manufactures—viz., the shape best adapted for purposes of use required, combined with the most artistic design and decoration. Prices from 10s. 6d. per set. Descriptive Price List post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS, USEFUL AND ARTISTIC.—Intending Purchaser should inspect Oetzmann and Co.'s VAST DISPLAY of elegant Vases, Lustres, Figures, Clocks, Bronzes, Pictures, Cut Glass Decanters, Wines, &c., Electro-Silver Plate, Table Cutlery, and a large variety of other useful and ornamental articles suitable for Presents. Descriptive Catalogue post free. Orders per post receive prompt and faithful attention.
OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.
OETZMANN & CO.
HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by EDWARD JOSEPH MANSFIELD at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—DECEMBER 8, 1877.

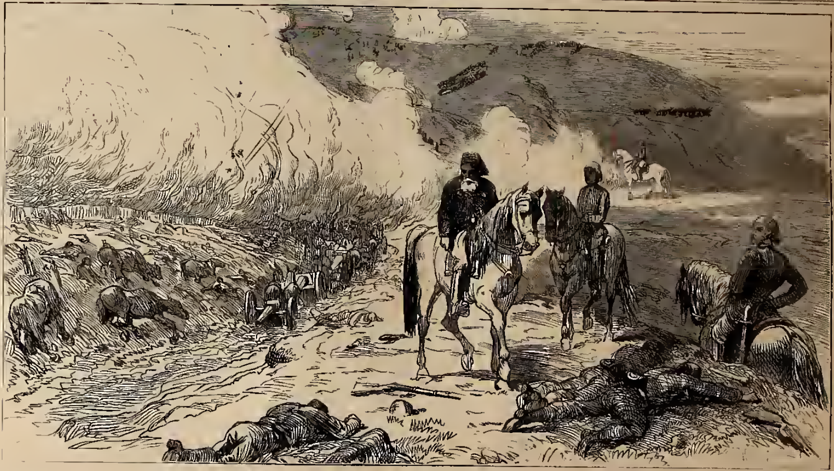
THE GRAPHIC

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

VOL. XVI.—NO. 420
Regd at General Post Office as a Newspaper

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1877

PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



PURSUING THE RUSSIANS OVER THE HEIGHTS: AHMET KAISERLI PASHA ON THE FIELD AFTER THE BATTLE

a, b. Russian Batteries.—c. Second Line of Russian Entrenchments.—d. First Line of Russian Entrenchments.—e. Chains of Russian Entrenchments, staunchly defended until the Death of the Commanding Officer.—f. Turkish Column advancing in Skirmishing Order towards the Village of Pyrgos.—g. Pyrgos Road.—h. Village of Pyrgos.—i. Russian Steamer Reconnoitring on the Danube.—j. Turkish and Egyptian Reserves.—k. Roumanian Villages and Russian Battery.

TAKING OF THE VILLAGE OF PYRGOS

WITH THE TURKS—THE ATTACK ON PYRGOS

Topics of the Week

The Fall of Plevna.——Since Plevna fell the English journals have been urgently counselling the Porte to put an end to the conflict in which it has sustained so many disasters. If the Czar were to offer fair terms it is probable they would be accepted, for the flower of the Turkish army has been destroyed, and the forces which remain confront sanguine and united enemies who have not failed to profit by the bitter experiences of the earlier part of the campaign. As yet, however, no one knows the conditions on which the Russian Government will insist. It began the war nominally for no other purpose than to secure good administration for the Christian populations. Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Freeman appear still to believe in its sincerity, but we should think that by this time few observers share their credulity. The most despotic Government in Europe can hardly be supposed to have a very violent enthusiasm for freedom; nor is it easy to believe, in view of its own excesses, that its humanity is of a very exalted quality. It meant all along, under the guise of high-sounding professions, to secure as many selfish advantages as it could manage to grasp; and if the popular party which complains that the war is ruining the country does not gain the upper hand, it is almost certain that the terms offered to Turkey will be such as only a State reduced to the utmost straits could ever be induced to accept. It is easy for Englishmen to tell the Sultan what he ought to do, but the difficulties by which he is confronted are enormous. His Mohammedan subjects are intensely, and with good reason, irritated at the manner in which the war has been conducted; and if he were inclined to accept what they would consider a dishonourable peace, it is possible that he himself would be the first victim of their fury. The war has never yet quite assumed the character of a religious struggle, but it is always in the power of the Sultan to appeal to the faithful to defend their creed, and it remains to be seen whether he will have recourse to this last weapon. The result, we believe, would be the same, for nothing but the intervention of one or more of the great Powers could now stop the victorious career of Russia; but the bloodshed would be fearful. The worst anticipations of those who resisted to the utmost the outbreak of war would be realised. The bare possibility of such a prospect ought to give serious matter for thought to the reckless enthusiasts who did everything they could to encourage Russia to enter upon one of the most disastrous and unjust of modern wars.

Foreign Imitations of the British Constitution.——In a noteworthy essay, entitled "The Ninety Years' Agony of France," in this month's Contemporary Review, Mr. Goldwin Smith makes some observations which are especially applicable to the existing crisis in France, and which also afford a useful lesson to ourselves at a time when some amongst us are planning a fresh alteration of our own political machinery. The numerous crises and revolutions which France has had to endure since 1789 are, in Mr. Smith's opinion, attributable to the blind admiration displayed by the Constitution-makers of that era for the English form of Government. They saw in this country, as they believed, the sovereign power carefully divided among three forces, King, Lords, and Commons, and to this threefold division they attributed that happy combination of freedom and order for which England stood unrivalled among the nations of Europe. Mr. Smith maintains that this apparent balance of political forces is a delusion, and that the sovereign power in a nation is indivisible. As the old proverb avers that if two ride on horseback one must ride behind, so in a nation the real ultimate authority rests, either in a monarch whom the nation obeys, or in a representative body chosen by the nation. From 1641 to 1688 a period of transition ensued, during which successive kings and successive Parliaments were fighting for supremacy; since the Revolution the House of Commons has been practically master, and at present the Monarch and the Lords retain only the shadow of authority. Neither of them dares to oppose the clearly-expressed will of the people. The corollary which Mr. Smith draws from this theory is that under a Republic, a Senate, which is usually intended as a drag on the political coach, is useless, and that a President is both useless and dangerous. In the United States, the law-abiding character of the people, and the removability of the Chief of the State at regular intervals, has hitherto averted serious mischief, though the Presidential elections are the cause of much unnecessary strife and bitterness. But in France, a country where men's heads are hotter, and where opinions are pushed to the extremest point, the illusive character of the imagined balance of Sovereignty is most plainly discernible; and if at the present time President and Senate could be made to vanish, and the country were governed, like Switzerland, by an Executive Council regularly elected by the Legislature, most of the existing anxieties would vanish also. Mr. Smith's essay deserves careful study from all those who desire to see a fair trial accorded to republican institutions.

Mr. Bright on India.——Mr. Bright's great speech on India ought to have a good effect on public opinion, for it brought out clearly the terrible need which now exists in that country, and its tone was generous and dignified. Englishmen are accustomed to pride themselves on all they have done for their immense dependency, but it may be doubted whether many natives would be found to agree with their sanguine representations. At any rate, we have to face the disagreeable fact that at this moment the country is vastly overtaxed, and that, nevertheless, there is an annual deficiency in the revenue. Mr. Bright partly blames for this state of things the undue development of the railway system. But how can we expect to make the most of the vast commercial resources of India if we do not provide adequate means of conveyance? Besides, the railways are of incalculable service in such periods as that through which Madras has just been passing. Irrigation works are the panacea indicated by Mr. Bright, but he failed to suggest any means by which the necessary funds are to be raised. England, herself overtaxed, can hardly be expected to make a present of the money to India, and so long as the existing system of government is maintained there the amount certainly cannot be raised from the natives. There is but one way, we believe, of relieving the pressure and creating a surplus, and that is the most rigid economy on the part of the administration. The salaries and pensions of necessary officers, civil and military, cannot be reduced, but there are undoubtedly many posts which might be altogether abolished, and it is questionable whether there is any necessity for so large an army as is now maintained. Mr. Bright argued that India ought to be cut up into a number of small Presidencies, but he must have forgotten that that would be to add enormously to the expense of administration. Many who have studied India are of opinion that an exactly contrary policy ought to be pursued; that, for the sake of cheapness and efficiency, we ought still further to centralise authority. Whatever may be the ultimate view on this question, it is certain that means of relieving the overburdened population must sooner or later be discovered; otherwise we may suddenly find ourselves in the midst of perplexities hardly less formidable than a Russian invasion.

The Wreck of the "European."——In the long catalogue of shipping disasters this wreck deserves a prominent place, because, although some of the conditions were of extreme peril, not a single life was lost. The night was pitch dark, and the vessel was, as it were, stabbed to the heart by the sharp rocks on which she struck, so that within a few minutes comparatively after the collision she sank immediately. On the other hand, the sea was smooth, the boats were in good order and easily accessible, the passengers were few in number, and excellent discipline was maintained. Hence all reached land in safety. We need not here discuss how it chanced that the European was so near to the fatal rocks which encircle Usbant—that point will doubtless be carefully investigated hereafter; but it is worth noting that if any of the favourable conditions above named had been absent, a terrible slaughter would have been the almost certain consequence of the wreck. A rough sea, a crowded emigrant-ship, unseaworthy boats—all or any of these contingencies would have rendered it impossible to save more than a fraction of lives from a vessel which foundered so rapidly. The provision of boats is an especially weak point on board crowded ships. There are rarely enough of them, and they are rarely stowed and fitted so as to be instantly available. Is it beyond the resources of modern science, which is so fertile in inventions for the destruction of life—to provide some wholesale substitute for boats? Would it be impossible to build ships in such a way that by the withdrawal of a certain number of bolts, or by the application of a few carpenters' saws, the whole of the deck might be detached bodily from the lower part of the vessel, and, by the removal of the masts, converted into a roomy and practicable raft? We throw out the suggestion in the crudest possible manner, and probably it has often been thought of before, but we should like to know if it is utterly chimerical. Such an apparatus would, of course, do nothing to save the cargo, but, after all, human life is somewhat more precious than merchandise.

The Conflict in France.——When our last number appeared it seemed as if France had seen the worst of the conflict in which she has been so long engaged. Marshal MacMahon had summoned M. Dufaure; and friends of the Republic were congratulating themselves that at last it was firmly established, and all the stronger for the trials through which it had passed. A few hours, however, sufficed to prove that the Marshal was not in earnest in his professed desire for peace. There is every evidence that he entered upon negotiations with M. Dufaure for no other reason than to find an opportunity for putting his opponents in the wrong. At all events, after giving the veteran statesman full liberty to form a Cabinet, he suddenly announced that the holders of three of the most important portfolios must be appointed by himself: a condition which, of course, made conciliation impossible. He ultimately announced to the Duc d'Audiffret Pasquier that he would have no more of compromise, and was resolved to pursue his own policy to the end. Since then all sorts of rumours have been going about; but fortunately it seems tolerably clear that he will not obtain a majority in the Senate in favour of dissolution. The Constitutionalists do not like the Republic; but they are honourable men, and see that after the decisive expression of the national feeling in the last general election there can be no real reason for a fresh appeal to the country, and that if it were made it would be attended by most serious perils. A few observers pretend to believe that the Marshal will attempt a plébiscite; but this would involve the illegal levying of taxes, and in the present temper of the army he could not hope to succeed in so high-handed a policy. Besides, whether he himself is aware of the fact or not, his advisers know very well that a plébiscite could only result in his overthrow. If the Constitutional Senators are firm, he will have to deal with the Chambers alone; and in that case, although he may hold out for some time, he will ultimately have to face the old alternative by which M. Gambetta so vexed and wounded him. The immediate danger is that the Mephistopheles of contemporary French politics, the Duc de Broglie, will once more rise to power, and encourage him in his mad obstinacy.

Early Closing.——The annual report of the Early Closing Association, which has just been issued, is well worthy of being read, as its operations are chiefly intended to benefit a class of industrial workers who, in the matter of prolonged hours of labour, have little power to help themselves. Certain artisans, whose employment is of a kind which is not readily learnt, or—what is perhaps nearer the truth—is popularly supposed to be difficult of attainment, are able to exercise a strong pressure on their employers regarding both time and wages. Clerks, shopmen, shopwomen, and sempstresses possess no such happy monopoly, they know too well how easily their places can be filled up, and how much they are at the mercy of their employers. Hence attempts to ameliorate their condition must come, for the most part, from without. In spite of the prophecies of laissez faire politicians, much good has already resulted from Government interference with individual freedom. Women and young children are no longer so shamefully overworked as they used to be, the sleeping accommodation provided for drapers' assistants and others who board and lodge with their employers has been improved, and when Mr. Cross's Bill (which was postponed last Session) for consolidating the Factory Acts becomes law, further advantages may be expected. But it should be borne in mind that none of these legislative measures, either contemplated or in actual existence, affect the people who serve in shops as regards their hours of labour. Thus it comes to pass that while the woman in the workroom at the back of the shop leaves at eight P.M., her sister-worker behind the counter is often kept there till nearly midnight. Here the benefit of the Early Closing movement comes in. At present it is purely voluntary, and needs the hearty co-operation of employers and of the public. The difficulty is not so great with those shops which are patronised by the wealthy, as the bulk of their business is over early in the evening. With establishments of a humbler rank, on the other hand, the busiest time begins about six or seven P.M., when the wives and daughters of clerks and artisans, many of whom have themselves been closely occupied all day, sally forth to inspect the shop-windows and make their purchases. If all retail shops were closed by Act of Parliament at six P.M., no doubt people would manage to do their shopping earlier, but society is not at present prepared for such a trenchant remedy as this, which would deprive women of the humbler classes of one of their chief pleasures. Could not more be done, at any rate in the larger shops, in the way of letting the assistants go out successively for recreation during the daytime, when business is comparatively slack? We shall endeavour to return to this subject hereafter.

Mr. Hardy in Scotland.——In addressing his Scotch friends Mr. Hardy was nervously anxious to dissociate his visit from that recently made to the north by Lord Hartington. He could scarcely, however, avoid reference to the utterances of the leader of the Liberal party; and impartial critics will admit that he did not always come off second best. Lord Hartington made much of the fact that the present Government has aimed mainly at relieving particular classes; but Mr. Hardy very fairly answered that that is a perfecly legitimate object, so long as the relief of a class does not mean injury to the nation. He was able to point to several measures, notably the chief of those with which the name of Mr. Cross is connected, which, by helping classes, have been of essential service to the whole community. In dealing with the question of the Church, also, Mr. Hardy was probably more in accord with popular sentiment than his opponent, for the Scotch, as a people, are very far from wishing to see the Kirk disestablished. At the same time, he must have felt that in Scotland his general political tendencies were not those of the mass of the nation. Mr. Hardy is not one of those modern Conservatives who are separated from moderate Liberals by so fine a line that it is almost imperceptible. He is a genuine Tory of the old school, opposed to innovation of all kinds, ready to give and receive the hard blows that used to be dealt in times when political discussion was fierce and bitter. Toryism of this kind still flourishes in some parts of England, but in Scotland it has long been extinct. The mass of the people, indeed, are so thoroughly Liberal on all great questions that it is incredible that the Conservatives should ever make much way among them. Perhaps the influence of the Presbyterian Churches, which are thoroughly democratic in constitution and spirit, has something to do with this state of things, but however we explain the facts, they are themselves beyond question. The less the Tories expect from Scotland, therefore, the better for their own peace of mind.

LIGHT SOVEREIGNS.——The man has been acquitted who was tried the other day for endeavouring to pass sovereigns which were considerably lighter than they ought to have become from natural wear and tear, but the ground of his acquittal shows that the law regarding such offences is in rather a defective condition. The uttering of counterfeit money is an offence much more easy of detection, because such coins are rarely so skilfully made as to escape discovery from tradesmen and others who are used to perpetual scrutiny of the money submitted to them. But a sovereign-sweater, if not so foolishly greedy as to abstract an unduly large percentage of the precious metal, might long flourish undiscovered, and even if he chanced to encounter a complaint, could either proffer a coin of standard weight or offer to pay the difference in cash. In the old days sovereigns (or guineas) used to be "sweated" by shaking them up and down in a leathern bag, but no doubt science has now devised more ingenious means of accomplishing this nefarious end. The Mint authorities would do well to investigate the subject, which they could easily manage by weighing a number of light sovereigns, and comparing their departure from the standard with the dates. Even with legitimate wear and tear, our gold coinage is an expensive luxury; but if "sweating" is a widespread offence, it might be worth considering whether some modification of the one pound notes—which are so dear to our Scotch and Irish brethren—might not be introduced with advantage to the public purse.

NOTICE.——The Half-Sheet this week, though delivered in the middle of the paper, must be placed for binding between pages 564 and 573.

AMUSEMENTS

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—On BOXING NIGHT, PUSS IN BOOTS. Mdlle. Cavalazzi and Ballet of 300. Prices and Day Performances as usual. Booking by Mr. E. Hall. No Fees.

GLOBE THEATRE.—Mr. J. L. TOOLE on MONDAY, Dec. 17, and following Evenings, in ARTFUL CARDS, TRYING A MAGISTRATE, BIRTHPLACE OF PODGERS.—Acting Manager, Mr. E. CLIFTON.

GLOBE THEATRE.—MORNING PERFORMANCE EVERY SATURDAY.—TO-DAY, Saturday, Dec. 15, at 2.30, JO. Miss Jennie Lee and Company.

BRITANNIA THEATRE, HOXTON.—Sole Lessee, Mrs. S. LANE.—Monday, Dec. 17, the Annual Benefit of Mrs S Lane. SMILES, TEARS, AND FROWNS OF LIFE. Followed by MISCELLANEOUS ENTERTAINMENT. Pollie Randall, Mrs. and Miss Brian, G. H. Macdermott, Fred Foster, and Ballet by Lupino Troupe. Concluding with MAN'S TALISMAN. Boxing Day, at 12, and in the Evening, the Grand Christmas Pantomime.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT.
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, SATURDAY,
at THREE and EIGHT.
Fauteuils, 5s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. No Fees.
Doors open at 2.30 for Day Performances, and at 7.15 for the Evening do.

EVANS'S, COVENT GARDEN.—NOTICE.—These celebrated SUPPER ROOMS are now open for the reception of Ladies. EVANS'S CHOIR OF BOYS, specially trained by and under the direction of Mr. F. Jonghmans, and the best comic talent. SUPPERS after the THEATRES. Proprietor, J. B. AMOR.

RIPON HOUSE, 1, WOBURN PLACE, RUSSELL SQUARE.—Mr. HENRI BEAUMONT (pupil of Mr. Charles Sleigh), begs to announce that TO-NIGHT (SATURDAY, Dec. 15), he will give a Selection of Poetic and Dramatic Readings in the Theatre of the School of Dramatic Art (as above). Commence at 8 p.m. Tickets, 1s., 2s., and 5s.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The SIXTEENTH WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES by the MEMBERS is NOW OPEN, at their Gallery, 5, Pall Mall East. Ten till five. Admission 1s.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

INSTITUTE of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.—The TWELFTH WINTER EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN from 10 till 6. Admission, 6d. Catalogue, 6d.
Gallery, 53, Pall Mall. H. F. PHILLIPS, Sec.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORE GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, by artists of the British and Foreign Schools, is NOW OPEN, at Thomas McLean's Gallery, No. 7, Haymarket. Admission, including catalogue, 1s.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.—CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.—On FRIDAY, December 21st, and following days, CHEAP THIRD-CLASS RETURN TICKETS will be issued by certain Trains from PADDINGTON, Victoria, Battersea, Chelsea, West Brompton, Kensington (Addison Road), Uxbridge Road, and Westbourne Park, to BARNSTAPLE, Ilfracombe, Exeter, Torquay, Plymouth, Weymouth, Yeovil, Wells, Highbridge, Bath, Bristol, Taunton, Falmouth, &c., also to stations in the Yeovil and Weymouth districts, and (with a few exceptions) to stations west of Bristol to Penzance inclusive, and vice versa, available to return up to and including Saturday, Dec. 29. These Tickets can be obtained at the Stations, and at the Company's Receiving Offices, 245, Holborn; 30, Charing Cross; 5, Arthur Street, London Bridge; 82, Queen Victoria Street; 43 and 44, Crutchedfriars; 4, Cheapside; and 351, Oxford Street.

On SATURDAY and MONDAY, December 22nd and 24th, the 5 p.m. FAST TRAIN from PADDINGTON to PLYMOUTH will be CONTINUED to FALMOUTH and PENZANCE, calling at all stations below Plymouth except Burngullow.

On the same day extra carriages will be attached to the 9 p.m. Limited Mail Train from Paddington, and First and Second-class passengers can obtain Tickets for Gloucester, Cheltenham, Bristol, and stations beyond, for these Trains, on and after Friday, December 21st.

Also, on the same days, a SPECIAL FAST TRAIN (1st, 2nd, 3rd class) will leave PADDINGTON at 10 p.m., for OXFORD, EXETER, and PLYMOUTH, calling at Reading, Didcot, Swindon, Bath, Bristol, Bridgwater, Taunton, Dawlish, Teignmouth, Newton, Totnes, and Kingsbridge Road. The cheap third-class return tickets to Exeter, Plymouth, &c., will be available by these trains.

With a few exceptions the Trains on Christmas Day will run as on Sundays. For further particulars see special bills.

Paddington Terminus. J. GRIERSON, General Manager.

BRIGHTON.—PULLMAN DRAWING-ROOM CAR TRAINS, leaving Victoria for Brighton every Weekday at 10.0 a.m. and 4.30 p.m., and from Brighton at 9.45 a.m. and 5.45 p.m., and on Sundays from Victoria 10.45 a.m. and from Brighton 8.30 p.m.

EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First Class Train from Victoria, 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY, Fast Trains from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m.; and London Bridge, 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon.

Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea, including admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion (Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds) available to return by any Train the same day, except the 5.45 p.m. Pullman Car Train.

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Direct Service from Victoria to Ventnor, for Bonchurch and the Undercliffe; also to Sandown, Shanklin, Newport, and Cowes, viâ Ryde. Through Fares, including all charges.

The Trains by this route now run direct to and from Portsmouth Harbour, alongside the Isle of Wight steamers.

J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

BRIGHTON THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA-HOUSE.—Proprietress and Manager, Mrs. H. NYE CHART.—Engagement for Six Nights only, commencing MONDAY, December 17, of the Eminent Tragedian, Mr. HENRY IRVING, will appear in a Round of his Popular Characters. In active preparation, and will be produced on MONDAY, Dec 24, a Grand Comic Christmas Pantomime, by F. W. Green, entitled JACK AND THE BEANSTALK.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon £50. Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS and CO., James Street, Liverpool.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The following are the Terms of Subscription for One Year, paid in advance, including Postage and Christmas Number, for which the publisher is prepared to supply THE GRAPHIC.

United Kingdom. £1 10 0 | United States . . £1 16 0

Africa, West Coast
Austria
Belgium
Brazil
Canada
Cape of Good Hope
Constantinople
Denmark
Egypt
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Holland
Italy
Jamaica
Malta
Mexico
Monte Video
Natal
Norway
Portugal
Russia
St. Thomas
Suez
Sweden
Switzerland
West Indies

£1 12 0 Thin Edition; or £1 16 0 Thick Edition.

The Postage of a Single Copy of THE GRAPHIC (either the Thick or Thin Edition) to any part of the United Kingdom is ½d.

To any other country mentioned in the above list the charge is 1d. thin and 2d. thick; but all Newspapers which are sent abroad must be posted within eight days after the date of publication.

Australia, Ceylon, China } Via Brindisi, 36s. thin edition. 45s. thick edition. { India, Japan, New Zealand

Postage of Single Copies, 2d. and 4d.

The Subscription can be paid by means of a cheque or post-office order made payable to E. J. MANSFIELD, 190, Strand, London.

All the Back Numbers of THE GRAPHIC can be obtained on application to the publisher

NOW READY.

"THE GRAPHIC"

CHRISTMAS NUMBER,
WHICH IS OF EXCEPTIONAL INTEREST.

AN entire novelty has been introduced this year, as a large number of the Engravings have been printed in colours, besides the Presentation Coloured Plate usually issued.

IN addition to this Plate one of the Sheets is also printed in Colours, illustrating a Tale called "THE ANIMATED PORTRAIT," so that with this Number there are

NINE PAGES OF COLOURED ENGRAVINGS, besides many others of seasonable interest, printed in Black and White. The following is a List of the Illustrations:

COLOURED PLATES.

ONCE UPON A TIME.
(PRESENTATION PLATE).

THE CALICO BALL AT GROBY CASTLE (Double-page).
"The dresses had been very carefully designed, and they attracted a great deal of attention, as they afforded a pretty complete panorama of costume from the Middle Ages up to a recent date."

THE CARICATURE.

LADY MILDRED AND HER LOVER.

LILIAN'S BIRTHDAY PRESENTS.
"It was a pretty sight to see her arrive, her face grave with excess of joy, and her little arms laden with gifts."

CUPBOARD LOVE.
"Hilda had coaxed several of the deer from the park into the hall to eat these dainties from her hand."

A COTTAGER'S CHRISTMAS HAMPER.
"None received her more gladly than old Mrs. Boscobel, who delighted in a visit from the great folks at the Castle."

A CHRISTMAS HAMPER.

BLACK AND WHITE ENGRAVINGS.

ANCESTOR RALPH.

THE CHRISTMAS GUEST.

BLISSON'S LAST ROUND. Six Illustrations.

THE BARLEY MOW. Ten Illustrations.

A HORRIBLE TALE (Double-Page).

THE TALES are by Mrs. OLIPHANT, ARTHUR LOCKER, T. W. SPEIGHT, and JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

PRICE ONE SHILLING, post free, 1s. 2½d.

OFFICE: 190, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

Our Illustrations

THE WAR IN THE EAST

SILISTRIA

SILISTRIA is one of the strongest and best fortified positions on the Turkish side of the Danube, and has already distinguished itself in three sieges by the Russians—the last being during the Crimean War in 1854. Notwithstanding all the efforts of Prince Paskiewitch and 30,000 men, its commandant, Mussa Pasha, not only bravely held his own, but finally compelled the enemy to raise the siege and retreat across the river, an event commemorated by the monument shown in one of our illustrations. To turn to the town itself, the houses, as usual in Turkey, are built of wood, the streets being mean and narrow. There is a population of some 20,000, who maintain themselves by an extensive trade in wood and cattle with Austria. During the present campaign the Russians have always kept a careful eye upon Silistria, as it would afford a splendid position for forming a permanent pontoon bridge. As yet, however, they have been unable even to besiege it, and the town has been the headquarters of Circassian raiders, who embark thence for cattle lifting expeditions in Roumanian territory; and moreover, as may be seen in another illustration, the Turks at the time our sketches were taken were beginning to construct a pontoon bridge to one of the numerous islands which here stud the river. The mysterious-looking craft to the left are mills, worked, like those on the Rhine, by the force of the current.

THE BRITISH FLEET AT BESIKA BAY—OFFICERS' SPORTS

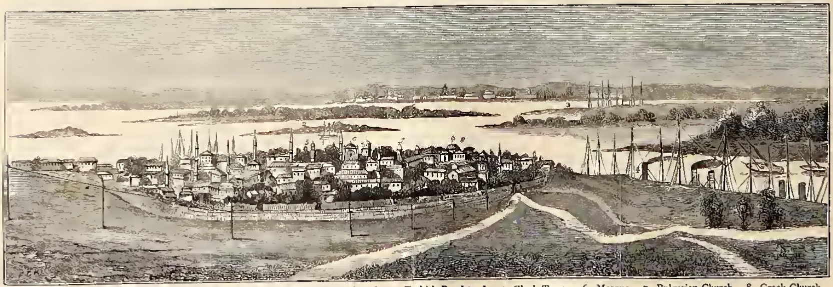
"EVEN in Besika Bay," writes the officer to whom we are indebted for this sketch, "the officers of the fleet find means of passing the time pleasantly, and my sketch illustrates a scene during the first meet of the "Mediterranean Fleet Beagles," when a buffalo cow, disturbed by the never-before-heard cries of a pack, fled before them, tail on end, while at the same time a shepherd's dog (one of a truculent race, as all travellers in the Levant know) left the flock consigned to his care and ran off at full speed, nor did he stop until he had ascended a steep rise in the ground, from which he could get a comparatively safe look about him. The beagles, consisting of nine couples, arrived in H.M.S. Wye in excellent condition; there were originally ten couples, but one dog died on board H.M.S. Tamar on the way out to Malta; and the other was accidentally run over at the latter place while out for exercise."

WITH THE TURKS—THE ATTACK ON PYRGOS

SULEIMAN PASHA, both in the Shipka Pass and more recently on the Lom, has evidently proved himself a "fighting" general, and our sketches portray one of the bold dashes of the northern portion of his army with which he misled the Czarewitch and his generals into thinking that his main object was to force a passage northwards, so that they left Elena and the more southern positions comparatively unguarded. Although skirmishing had been continually going on in the neighbourhood of Pyrgos, the chief battle took place on the 19th ult., when Salem Pasha, with six battalions, set forth on a reconnoitring expedition, drove the Russians from their foremost positions on the Yantra, carried the Russian fortifications on the Matchka heights, and the crest of the hill commanding Pyrgos, and set on fire the unfortunate town, which was thus reduced to ashes. Having accomplished this, and having pursued the Russians for some two hours, the Turks retired, and according to the Russian accounts were driven back to their former positions. During the battle, our artist writes, a Russian monitor left her moorings on the Roumanian side, and fired a few badly-aimed shots, which, however, had no effect whatever. Our sketch on page 556 was taken on the heights overlooking Pyrgos, and depicts the scene after the battle. In the distance Pyrgos may be seen in flames, and the Turks pursuing the Russian troops, while in the foreground is Admiral Ahmet Kaiserli Pasha—a worthy old veteran of some ninety years—who, having conducted the attack, is now riding over the field of battle inspecting the number of dead and wounded.—One of our two small sketches represents a sentinel of the advanced posts keeping watch in a little fort which he himself has constructed; while another depicts an incidant our artist saw on the road to Pyrgos. A soldier had just finished burying with his bayonet a comrade who had fallen beside him. The survivor then knelt down, repeated a short prayer, and resuming his arms, set off at the double to rejoin his regiment.

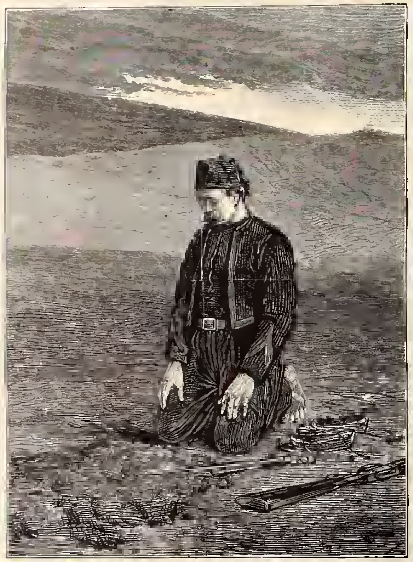
WITH THE RUSSIANS IN THE BALKANS—"ABOVE THE CLOUDS"

THESE two sketches depict a strategic movement of General Rauch, by which he was enabled to turn Mehemet Ali and the Turkish left flank position at the rear of the Pravca Pass in the Etropol Balkans, while General Gourko pounded away in front. For two whole days General Rauch had a terrible march across the mountains, the paths being so steep that the men had to drag the artillery up the mountains themselves on foot, and so narrow that one wheel frequently overlapped the precipice, and the carriages had to be kept from falling over by ropes being passed round the wheels. However, on the 23rd ult. General Rauch attained the desired heights, and speedily put the surprised Turks to flight down the mountain side, the pursuit being continued until a thick fog, which always pervades these valleys at night, put an end to further operations. From these positions the Turks retreated upon Orchanie, and subsequently to their present stronghold in the Somarli Pass. Our sketch was taken during the rising of the fog, when the whole scene, as may be imagined, presented a most singular aspect when viewed from above. The correspondent of the Daily News thus describes the scene:—"We were now on an island in a great grey sea, for the clouds had gathered in on all sides, hiding completely the earth below, and even the adjacent peaks. A faint streak of yellow still lingered in the western horizon, and all about us rose out of the rolling sea of mist the sharp purple peaks like islands in the frozen Arctic Sea. The soldiers lighted their camp-fires among the bushes, and we were all prepared to bivouac there. Perfect quiet reigned. The moon shone grandly out of the clouds, and lighted up the weirdly impressive landscape. On came great rolling waves of mist, appearing solid as snow in the cold moonlight. Around us were the forms of horses picketed in the undergrowth, groups of soldiers gathered about the fires, solitary sentinels motionless at their posts. It was a picturesque scene to be long remembered."—Our other sketch shows the relative positions of General Gourko and the Turks on the 23rd inst. On

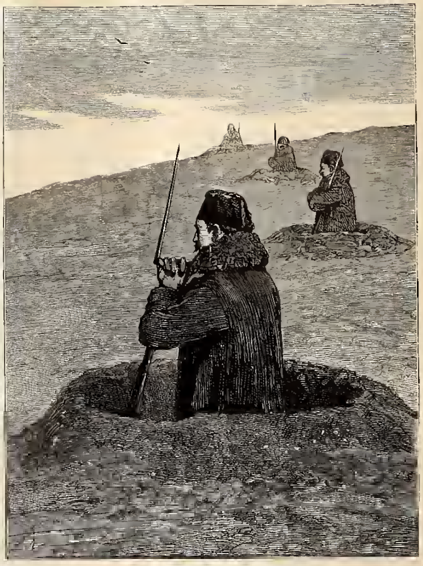


1. Nalârasche, Roumanian Town.—2. Turkish Batteries.—3. Roumanian Roadstead.—4. Turkish Roadstead.—5. Clock Tower.—6. Mosque.—7. Bulgarian Church.—8. Greek Church.

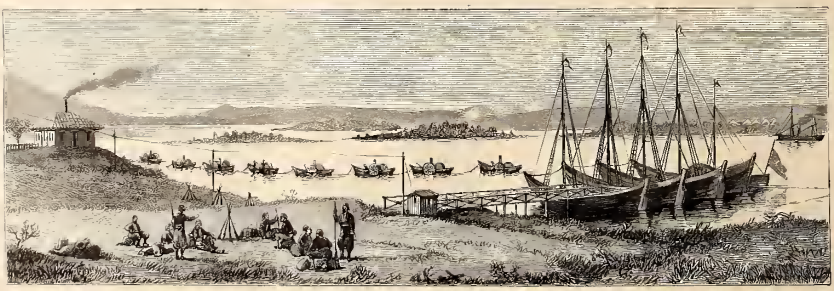
GENERAL VIEW OF SILISTRIA



TURKISH SOLDIER PRAYING BY THE GRAVE OF A COMRADE WHOM HE HAS JUST INTERRED

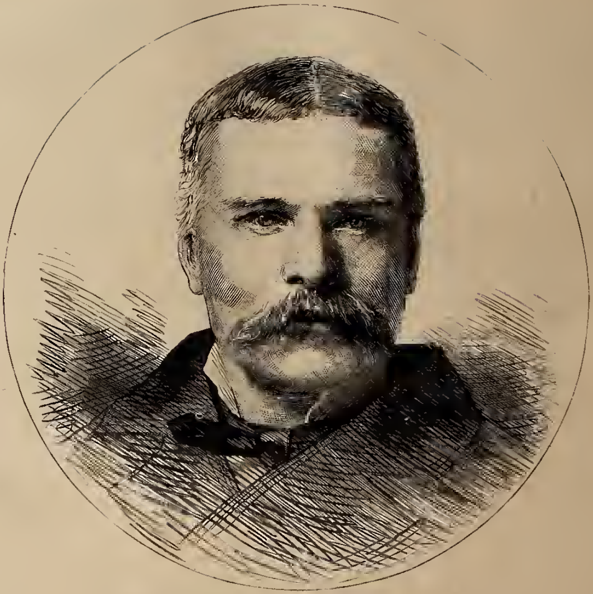


SENTINELS IN THE ADVANCED POSTS

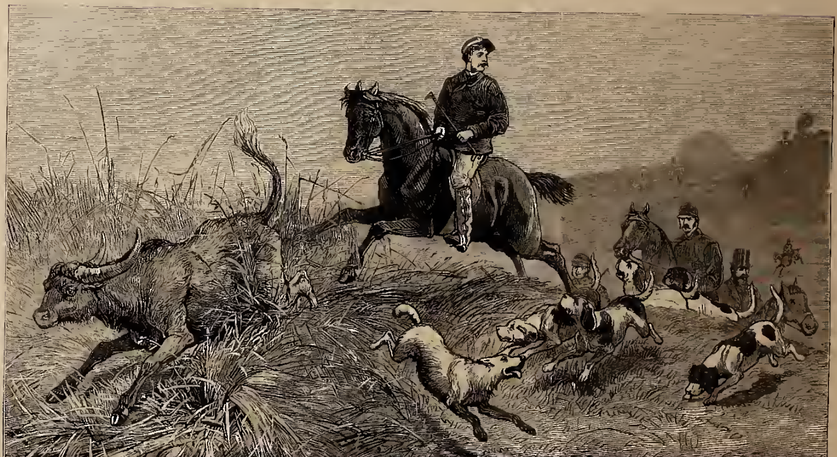


SILISTRIA—BEGINNING OF A PONTOON BRIDGE

WITH THE TURKS



ARCHIBALD FORBES
THE SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT OF THE "DAILY NEWS" WITH THE RUSSIANS



THE BRITISH FLEET IN BESIKA BAY—OFFICERS HUNTING WITH BEAGLES the left may be seen the peak over which General Rauch and his men appeared, and turned the Turkish position.

MR. ARCHIBALD FORBES

The name of Mr. Forbes, as the special war correspondent of the Daily News, is now pretty well known all over the civilised world; nor need we enter here into any lengthened description of his services, as we have already engraved his portrait during the Franco-German war (No. 63, Feb. 11th, 1871), together with those of Dr. W. H. Russell, of The Times, and of Mr. G. T. Robinson, of the Manchester Guardian, who was shut up in Metz during the investment. In those days Mr. Forbes wore a full flowing beard, which now he has discarded, wearing no hair on his face except a moustache. Mr. Forbes was born in 1839 at Boharm, Aberdeenshire, of which parish his father was for thirty-eight years minister. He was educated at the parish school of Boharm and at King's College, Aberdeen, after which he was induced, by a spirit of adventure, to enlist in the army as a private soldier, and he remained about six years in the service, thereby unwittingly gaining valuable experience for his subsequent duties as a war correspondent. He soon showed that he could wield the pen as well as the musket, he wrote essays on military topics in the Cornhill and in St. Paul's, he became editor and part proprietor of the London Scotsman, and joined the Daily News when the siege of Metz began. He was the first Englishman who rode into Paris after the German siege. As correspondent of the same journal he visited Spain during the Carlist war, and India during the Bengal famine, while his letters since the commencement of the Turko-Russian war have attracted especial attention. Being prostrated by illness while on duty in the Russian lines before Plevna, he recently returned home to recruit his health. While here he wrote an article on "Russians, Turks, Bulgarians," in the Nineteenth Century, which, on account of the unfavourable account given of the latter nationality, drew forth replies from Mr. M'Coll, Mr. Freeman, the historian, and that eminent but irrepressible letter-writer, Mr. Gladstone. During his brief holiday, also, Mr. Forbes received the compliment of a dinner from his brother journalists. Mr. Forbes set off once more for the seat of war on Thursday, the 6th inst., in company with our artist, Mr. Villiers, towards whom he has, ever since their first meeting, shown the most unvarying and assiduous kindness. They would probably arrive just in time to witness the many interesting incidents resulting from the fall of Plevna.—Our portrait is from a photograph.

THE FORTHCOMING PARIS EXHIBITION

The two buildings of the Paris Exhibition, which is to be opened in April next, are now rapidly approaching completion. They are being erected on the Champ de Mars and the Trocadéro, that on the first-named site being a temporary structure intended for the main exhibition, whilst the other is to be a permanent one. The area of the former is about 500,000 square yards, extending from the Avenue de Lamotte-Picquet to the Quai d'Orsay in the one direction, and from the Avenue de la Bourdonnaye to the Avenue de Suffren in the other. The building is of rectilinear form, 2,315 feet in length by 1,145 feet in width. The end vestibules, the fronts of which will form the principle façades, are flanked with lofty domed towers, the line being also broken by a central dome. These vestibules are connected by a number of longitudinal halls with open space between, and two transverse galleries intersect these buildings, dividing them into three portions. The floors of these various buildings is considerably above the natural level of the Champ de Mars for part of their length, as the ground slopes down towards the Seine; and the superstructure is principally of iron and glass; the roofs, however, are of timber, which is laid on in three thicknesses, over which zinc roofing plates are laid. The central space is occupied by the picture-galleries, the walls of which are of stone. Each group is divided into four sections, separated by transverse galleries, and terminates with a small vestibule surmounted by three domes. The area between these picture-galleries will be allotted to the City of Paris for various municipal exhibits, and will be occupied by small pavilions surrounded by gardens.

The palace on the other side of the river, though not so large, is of greater architectural pretensions than the one on the Champ de Mars. The site is a splendid one; the summit of the Trocadéro towering 100 feet above the level of the Quai de Billy, and overlooking not only the whole of the Exhibition, but also the greater part of the city itself. The Palace consists of a large central hall, similar in its purposes to our Albert Hall, which will contain a theatre capable of seating 7,000 persons; and from this hall will spread eastward and westward two wings, forming a semi-ellipse, each being struck from four different radii. These wings terminate in square dome-roofed towers, and contain a covered gallery forty-two feet in width, and in front an open promenade twelve feet wide, the roof of which is supported by stone columns elaborately carved. A similar terrace, but with more lofty columns, surrounds the central hall on its Trocadéro front, and from its base down the middle of the magnificent garden flows a wide cascade, which after breaking over eleven falls, disappears in a basin in the centre of the grounds. The chief entrance to the building is on the Place du Trocadéro, and consists of a large vestibule extending on both sides into spacious antechambers, which partially enclose the hall itself, and lead into the two wings.

The two buildings are separated by the Seine, but will be connected by the Pont de Jena, which will be widened to accommodate the immense flow of traffic which the circulation of visitors from one part of the Exhibition to the other will create. As the connecting roadway will also intersect the Quai d'Orsay on one side of the river, and the Quai de Billy on the other, subways are being constructed along each of these thoroughfares, in order that no public inconvenience may be caused by their stoppage.

The difficulty of making foundations in the Trocadéro, which was found to be perfectly riddled with abandoned quarries, has greatly increased the cost of erection. The men employed upon the work are well cared for, a medical staff having been organised for their benefit, and any workman injured by an accident, not only has surgical treatment gratis, but draws half-pay until he is well. If completely disabled he has half-pay for a year, while should the accident be fatal his widow may claim an indemnity of 24*l*.

BURNING OF THE OLD PARISH CHURCH, LAMERTON

The fire by which this fine old building was destroyed on Monday, November 19, is supposed to have originated from a small lamp usually kept in the organ to preserve it from damp, but soon after the alarm was given the flames had spread to the woodwork in the roof. In less than three-quarters of an hour the church was an immense furnace, the flames of which were seen for miles around, those issuing from the tower showing a blue colour when they came in contact with the bells, which were melted away. A fruitless attempt was made to check the flames by pouring buckets of water through the broken windows, and before the engine could arrive from Tavistock, a distance of three miles, the roof had fallen in, four arches of the north aisle and the massive pillars from which they sprang had fallen against the north wall, and nothing remained but the walls, the arches of the south aisle, and the tower.

The church and organ had been insured for 2,200*l*., the damages are estimated at 8,000*l*. It had been recently restored at the cost of 1,400*l*., and reopened on the 20th of July, 1876. The Vicar, the Rev. H. J. Phillpotts, and his parishioners, were justly proud of the beautiful church, with its old font of Roborough porphyry, its clustered granite columns, and family monuments, some of which dated back to 1588. The fine oaken roof had been opened out and renovated, the East windows contained valuable fragments of ancient glass, and a handsome West window, by Morris, had been presented only a few months ago. Subscriptions are already being raised and plans formed for the rebuilding of the church as nearly as possible in its former style.

An impromptu service was held within the ruined building, on the Sunday after the fire, and was attended by a large congregation gathered from the neighbouring villages joining heartily in the Psalms and hymns. Numbers who could find no place within the walls crowded around the windows and listened to a short and impressive address by the vicar.

A Restoration Fund has already been started by the Rev. H. J. Phillpots, by whom contributions will be thankfully received. His address is Lamerton Vicarage, near Tavistock.

THE "AVALANCHE" MEMORIAL CHURCH

It is in contemplation by the friends of those lost in the ill-fated ship Avalanche, which foundered in September last, after having been in collision with the Forest, to build in Portland a small memorial church "In Memoriam" of Capt. Williams and the passengers and crew of his vessel. It is felt that this will give, as nearly as may be, a sacred character to the resting place of those who lie beneath the waves opposite to the proposed church. A mortuary side-chapel will be attached for the reception of a monument upon which will be inscribed a record of the fatal occurrence, with the names of Capt. Williams, his passengers, and crew. The Captain of the Avalanche was very popular and much respected in New Zealand, whither he had made several voyages; numbers of those who have been passengers with him will no doubt—as this memorial is to be built by public subscriptions—gladly help to raise it in his memory as a recognition of the courtesy and kindness they have received from him. Subscriptions may be sent to the Rev. J. A. Beazor, Rector of Portland.

THE ISLINGTON CATTLE SHOW

The eightieth annual show of the Smithfield Club seems to have been as great a success as any of its predecessors, for although the number of animals exhibited was not so large as that of last year, the quality of the exhibits is acknowledged to have been superior. On Monday, while the judges were busy at work the Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Crown Prince of Hanover, the Duke and Duchess of Manchester, the Marquis of Huntly, Lord Chesham, and Sir G. Wombwell, paid a visit to the Show.

Her Majesty the Queen had ten entries, and took a first prize with a Hereford steer, bred on the Flemish farm at Windsor, and the Prince of Wales, who exhibited in the Devon, Shorthorn, Sheep, and Pig classes, won the first and second prizes, and the cup in the Devons, as well as being "highly commended," but was beaten for the Champion Prize by Mr. Catchpole, of Ipswich, with a shorthorn heifer. The Champion Prize for sheep went to Mr. John Pears for a fine pen of Lincoln ewes. Amongst the implement exhibits are several novelties, notably the combined reaper and binder, which won the medal at the recent Liverpool Show. The Show has been crowded with visitors on every day during the week, the number who attended on the opening day being far above the average of previous years.

"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

A new Story, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 565.

"IN WINTER TIME"

M. Tissot, although by birth a stranger to this country, resembles the late Charles Dickens in his fondness for the shores of our metropolitan river, the Thames. Not the upper reaches of the Thames, be it observed, where there are trim villas, and noble horse-chestnut trees dipping their boughs into the stream, and little green islands, and Corporation swans, and patient anglers in punts; nor yet the lower reaches, where the salt water commingles with the fresh, and where the flat marshy shores are scarcely visible from the centre of the water-way; but Old Father Thames as he is when flowing between the walls of our great Babylon. Dickens in his night-scenes loves to contrast the dark silent river with the gay gas-lighted streets, and is never tired of depicting crumbling wharves and dilapidated barges; while M. Tissot introduces us to those picturesque bow-windowed taverns overhanging the river, from whence we may look out upon a tangled forest of masts. Young ladies are always introduced in these pictures; but, as a rule, they are scarcely so good-looking as we, judging by the average standard of our countrywomen, think they ought to be. Here, however, in the single figure represented in our engraving, the artist has drawn a face which will be pronounced by most connoisseurs of female beauty to be of a decidedly attractive character.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

Victor Hugo's new work is continued on page 570.

◆

Nottingham Castle.——The Town Council of Nottingham have become the owners for 500 years of Nottingham Castle, and are expending a large sum of money in restoring it and adapting it as a permanent Midland Counties Art Museum. When the works are finished, Nottingham will have the finest art galleries of any town in the kingdom, London excepted. The Prince and Princess of Wales has promised formally to open the galleries to the public in the month of June, 1878.

Polar Exploration.——Commander Cheyne, R.N., delivered a lecture at the Birkbeck Institution on Wednesday evening. His Excellency the Danish Ambassador was present and the hall was crowded. A letter from Lieutenant Witti, of the I. R. Austrian Navy, to Commander Cheyne, on Polar Exploration, was read, together with the reply thereto. The proposed plan of a British expedition for Polar discovery was explained, the route and method of employing balloons was clearly shown. The lecture and entertainment proved a perfect success; the views and lecture alike evoking unanimous expressions of satisfaction.

HOME.

Political Affairs.——The inaugural banquet of the Scottish Conservative Club was held in Edinburgh on Tuesday under the presidency of the Earl of Galloway. Mr. Gathorne Hardy, who was the chief speaker, said that the Liberals had insulted the Conservatives, and had taken a great liberty with the name of Lord Beaconsfield, who had never shown any desire for either the acquisition or the pretension of power. After defending the action of the Government in respect of local rates and education, and remarking that Lord Hartington had invited the Scotch people to embark in a political South Sea Bubble, he passed to the Eastern Question, referred to the fall of Plevna, and the bravery of its defenders, and said that Her Majesty's Government looked forward with anxiety to an opportunity of bringing the contest to a conclusion by intervention. On Wednesday Mr. Hardy, replying to an address from the Conservative working men of the city, denied that the Conservatives had their supporters among the aristocracy, or that the Government legislated for classes in any other sense than that of making all classes politically equal. With regard to the War, we had no right to shed the blood of other people in order to enforce the kind of rule we thought to be the best. All we had to do was to stand up for British interests. He could not suppose that anything like a useful peace could be made without the intervention of England.—Speaking at Manchester on Tuesday, Mr. John Bright warmly supported an extensive scheme of canals and irrigation works in India, and urged that by an expenditure of 25 or 30 millions in that direction both India and England would be blessed at the same time. It was monstrous to suppose that half-a-dozen officials at Calcutta could govern a conquered people numbering 250 millions, comprising twenty nations and speaking twenty languages. He thought that the country should be divided into five or six separate Presidencies, each with its own Council and Governor. That would prepare the people to govern themselves, which was a contingency that we ought to look forward to, and which would perhaps occur sooner than we expected. We might make amends for the past wrong and mistakes by giving the people of India that good government and freedom to which all God's children were entitled.—At a meeting of the Birmingham National Federation of Liberal Associations, on Tuesday, it was reported that Bolton, Ryde, Reading, and Burnley had joined. Resolutions were passed condemning proportionate representation as opposed to the true principles of representative Government. It was also decided to issue a series of political pamphlets by members of the Federation, and to hold the annual meeting at Leeds next Easter.—Sir S. Northcote was last week entertained at Exeter by a number of Devonshire noblemen and gentlemen, the gathering being attended by about 700 leading men of the county, of both sides in politics. The Earl of Devon presided, and Sir S. Northcote, responding to the toast of the evening, spoke at some length of the constitution of the House of Commons, and said that he believed its future would be as great as its past had been.—Mr. Newdegate, M.P., addressing a Conservative gathering at Rugby last week, expressed a hope that the Government would firmly resist all further steps in the direction of democracy, and that the Ballot Act would not be renewed on its expiration in 1880.—Mr. Jacob Bright has resigned the care of the Women's Disabilities Bill on account of ill-health, and Mr. Leonard Courtney has consented to take charge of it.—Mr. O'Connor Power and Mr. Parnell addressed a meeting at Castlebar on Saturday last. Mr. Parnell said that the policy of England had always been consistently selfish. She had never been disposed to regard any interests but her own, and some force was always required to make her do justice to others. Mr. Power complained that English members of Parliament could understand and appreciate the advantages of Home Rule to every people except the Irish. They would visit the East to ascertain the grievances of the half-civilised subjects of Turkey, but how many English politicians had come to Ireland to study the condition of the Irish people?"—There is a Parliamentary vacancy at Greenock consequent on the resignation of Mr. Grieve, M.P.; but as yet neither party seem to have fixed upon a candidate.—Mr. Welsh, the new American Minister, arrived at Liverpool on Tuesday, where he was presented with addresses of welcome, and entertained by the Mayor. On Wednesday he reached London, and presented himself at the Court of St. James's.—Midhat Pasha has written to the Daily Telegraph contradicting the statement recently made by Mr. Gladstone that he had first bribed a man to commit murder, and afterwards hung him without legal trial. He remarks that "it is very sad to see a man so remarkable as Mr. Gladstone allowing himself to be carried away by passion to such an extent that he no longer knows what means to employ to combat my country, gives way to personal attacks, and does not seem able to choose a more dignified position to justify his unjust recriminations."

Miscellaneous.——The annual distribution of premiums to the students of the Royal Academy was made on Monday by Sir Francis Grant, who in a brief but excellent speech pointed out the importance of obtaining truth in art, as well as refinement in taste.—Temple Bar is to be removed at once. On Wednesday the erection of the scaffolding was commenced. The work itself will not interfere with the traffic, but unless more police are employed the crowd of gaping idlers will.—Lord Northbrook, speaking last week at the prize distribution of the Birkbeck Institute, said that although it had lately been the fashion to decry the system of competitive examinations, its results so far had been entirely satisfactory. Dr. Schliemann recomrecommended the study of modern Greek (a language which he had himself acquired in six months), and said that when they had mastered that, they could learn Latin "in no time."—A letter from the manager of the "Dogs' Home" at Battersea ought to have a reassuring effect upon those nervous persons who have been affected by the hydrophobia-phobia which has prevailed of late. He states that 1,500 dogs per month pass through the premises, and that though bites are of daily occurrence, and in some instances severe, no single case of hydrophobia has occurred there for seventeen years. Mr. Pavitt, the head keeper, has been bitten hundreds of times and is still alive and sane.—During a sham fight on Clapham Common on Saturday, a soldier belonging to the Scots Guards was shot in the arm with a ball-cartridge. How the deadly missile came to be served out with blank cartridges is not known, and will be the subject of searching investigation.—Kindly-disposed ladies—and we should be loth to believe that any ladies are not kindly disposed—cannot do better than join the Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants, a meeting in connection with which was held on Tuesday at the Society of Arts' Rooms. The work of the Society consists in watching over the welfare of young pauper girls after they have left the poor-house and been placed in domestic or other service. The responsibility of the relieving officer ceases when they leave their first situation, the very time when advice, guidance, and supervision is most needed by them, and it is at that period that the members of this excellent Association take the friendless ones in hand. It is pre-eminently women's work.

◆

WINTER EXHIBITIONS OF THE WATER-COLOUR SOCIETY AND INSTITUTE

I.

Both of these Exhibitions are of exceptional interest. They both contain a larger proportion than we have been used to see of those "sketches and studies" to which it was originally intended that the Winter Exhibitions should be in the main, if not entirely, confined. Unless this was done, it was felt that the result of opening the Galleries in the winter might be two weak Exhibitions of the same kind every year instead of one strong one. And such has been the result hitherto. Perhaps this has forced itself on the consideration of the governing bodies of both associations, so that we may hope, henceforth, for a more determined adherence to the original intention. To maintain a distinction between "studies" and "drawings" in water-colour is, however, difficult, for obvious reasons. Many if not most of our painters in water-colour really make their drawings out of doors. The "study," it is true, even in these cases undergoes more or less of working up in the studio before it is classed as a drawing. But this is, chiefly, in the way of finish, and giving force, as it is supposed, to certain points, in which the study may seem weak. Too often what is thus gained in seeming pictorial effect is lost in the freshness and spirit of the open air work. The number of members of either Society or Institute, who can really make a well considered "drawing" in which shall be brought to bear not particular studies only, but the accumulated experience of years of study, combined with exceptional powers of invention and imagination, is, and always must be, small. Failing the power to do this, less capable men, in what they call their finished work, fall back on the conventional recipes for picture-making, and the result, in which the freshness of Nature is wanting, and there is no vivifying breath of invention to supply its place, naturally fails to interest. In these days nothing in popular estimation will atone for lack of life and reality. Not that the number of those who can appreciate real imaginative invention or creation in landscape Art is smaller nowadays than it was in the past, but that these were always few.

In the Society's Winter Exhibition this year we find the old members in their usual "form," with much interesting work from the recent Associates, whom the Society admits so charily.

Sir John Gilbert's three drawings are all good examples of his characteristic qualities. Many will prefer his water-colour drawing of the "Reception of the fallen and dying Wolsey at Leicester Abbey," to his Academy oil picture of the same incident. "The Route" and the "Landscape," without figures, are good examples of the artist's somewhat rich, if sombre treatment, of rolling country, gnarled oaken-wood and copse, and deep-toned distance, and, where figures are introduced, of groups, always picturesque and spirited, and admirably calculated to enhance the effect of the landscape. Frederick Tayler is another veteran member of the Society, of whom it is safe to prophesy that he will please as long as he can paint, especially in those stirring and animated old-world hunting and hawking pictures of which his "Full Cry," in this Exhibition,—a stag-hunt in the Park of Haddon Hall,—is an unusually good example. F. Tayler is a true "creator" within his limits. George Fripp confines himself absolutely to landscape. It is very rare to find any figures at all in his drawings. But refined tastes of the more sober order will be quite satisfied with such perfectly understood treatment of mountain form as we find here, in his "Glen Sligachan," or the homely harmony and refreshing repose of his "Cornish Cottages" and his Thames hay-fields and willow-bordered river. George Dodgson, on the other hand, though many of his drawings of Yorkshire sea-cliffs, boulder-strewn becks, and heathery moorlands have no figure-element in them, thoroughly understands the use of figures, as he shows in such a picture as his larger one, here, of Knole—in which the gipsy group boiling their kettle in the foreground enhance the delightfulness of the green spring shade in which they have hung their kettle—or failing figures, of the suggestion of human labour, as by the felled trunks of his smaller woodland drawing here, also from Knole. E. Duncan, too, is thoroughly master of the right employment of figures in landscape, though in his drawings in the present Exhibition figures are not brought much into play. His "Chatham," however, one of the best, derives its effect as much from what it suggests of man's work as Nature's. C. Davidson's work by sea-shore, park and field, heath and weald, is as honest and unpretending as ever. J. D. Watson, the master par excellence of combined landscape and figure, besides some deep-toned riverside studies, with strongly contrasted effects of sunlight and shadow, sends a finished water-colour study for his oil-picture of a jester snowballing and snowbelled, among a bevy of laughing Christmas maidens. Naftel and Jackson, though both have had to struggle against certain infelicitous peculiarities of colour, are gradually taking the high place in the Society to which their powers and determined industry fairly entitle them. In the "Llan-y-Finan" and the "Torc Torrent at Killarney" to name two only of the many excellent examples of Naftel in this Exhibition, we are struck by the range of observation and the power of treating with the same mastery subjects as widely various as subjects can well be. In Jackson's "Atlantic Coast" there is a natural gloom which deprives his rather lurid under-colour of that oppressive effect which I am always sensible of in his sunnier and serener subjects, such as the Thames locks and weirs, of which we have more than one example here, and which the painter has always especially loved.

Alfred Hunt is one of the few water-colour painters whose pictures are something quite distinct from his "studies," though there can be no more reverent and loyal student of Nature. He has never exhibited two more beautiful little drawings than his views of "Whitby" on the screens, which probably served as the foundation of the two noble oil-pictures exhibited in the rooms of the Fine Arts Society two years ago. Samuel Palmer is we believe, the very oldest member of the Society who has always been faithful to his own creative power, and has never given in to the "realism" of the time in any, even the slightest, degree. His three small drawings here, one in sepia, are charming examples of his boldly imaginative dealing with the facts of Nature. F. Powell's three small drawings are so full of charm that one can only regret there are not more of them. G. P. Boyce's drawing of "Edward the Confessor's Shrine in Westminster Abbey" is a most masculine, if dryish, piece of work. He has just been elected a member of the Society, and no Associate more deserves the honour. The sobriety, strength, and individual character reflected in his work are as distinctive as delightful. H. S. Marks, A.R.A., as a landscape painter has the same strength and sobriety, though without the same marked individuality. His "Walberswick" is truth itself. His fat friar lovingly contemplating the conventual pigs in the beech wood just about Martinmas is full of quiet humour.

Tom Taylor

THEATRES

The Grasshopper at the Gaiety is an adaptation of MM. Meilhac and Halévy's La Cigale, which was brought out at the Théatre des Variétés in Paris this autumn, and is still very popular at that theatre. It is a piece which does not depend for its success in the slightest degree upon novelty of story or incidents; rather might it be said that the authors have exhibited an ostentatious disregard for originality of this kind in their proud confidence of being able to amuse by witty dialogue and clever combinations of absurd adventures. The theme of the piece is simply that of a travelling circus girl, who, being claimed as the stolen child of rich parents, greatly shocks her newly found relations and their friends by her incurable habit of reverting to the slang expressions and the ingenious contortions of her strolling career. This, as will be observed, is in essentials the subject of Donizetti's La Fille du Regiment and partly of Balfe's Bohemian Girl. The romantic drama entitled Preciosa, which Weber enriched with some pieces of music, is based on the same fable; which it may be observed is also the subject of Middleton and Rowley's old comedy, The Spanish Gipsy, those authors again being indebted for their plot to a tale by Cervantes, entitled La Gitanilla. It is needless to say that the French authors have engrafted on this thread of story a great many drolleries; and La Cigale, thanks partly to these qualities, and partly to the acting of Madame Chaumont, M. Dupuis, and other excellent performers, has unquestionably afforded great amusement to French audiences. Mr. Hollingshead having duly acquired the English rights of the French authors in accordance with the recently improved state of international copyright law, has translated this piece pretty closely save and except some compression, and the occasional retrenchment of jokes and allusions too essentially Parisian to be understood when not spoken by M. Dupuis before a Parisian audience. He has also removed the scene in accordance with our custom to English ground, and by changing the names to English names has endeavoured to convert La Cigale into an English piece. As it stands there is little to remind one very much of a foreign origin. The story, as we have shown, is of a somewhat cosmopolitan character; in its present form it represents little that corresponds to real life anywhere, and therefore may as well be English as French. Any way it makes in English an entertaining piece, and enables Miss Farren not only to exhibit as the "grasshopper" her unfailing spirit and vivacity, but to vary these qualities by occasional suggestions of tenderness which are essential to the effect of the part. Some jokes at the expense of the supposed heresies of modern English art, which reflect the original author's skits upon "the impressionistes," failed to be generally understood, though the joke about the picture of sky and sea, which being turned topsy-turvey did very well for a sandy desert under the deep blue heavens, was perfectly intelligible, and caused much laughter. The rather personal attack on Mr. Whistler which the adapter has introduced, and the caricatures of pictures by Gainsborough, Leighton, Millais, Miss Thompson, Signor Pellegrini, and Mr. Gordon Thomson, do not fulfil any very definite object, and their point is, we are afraid, not readily apprehended; but, as the caricatures are droll in themselves, they aroused much laughter. Mr. Terry in the English version of Dupuis's part is an entertaining if somewhat inconceivable representation of an artist of the present day; and Mr. Maclean, Mrs. Leigh, Mr. Royce, Mr. Farnes, Miss Marion West, and Mr. Soutar, may be said like the Prisoner of Chillon and his companions to have "each done well in his degree." The comedy precedes Mr. Byron's new burlesque of Little Doctor Faust, and altogether the Gaiety Theatre has not often had a more attractive programme. The Gaiety Theatre is to produce a pantomime at Christmas which, however, will not interfere with the ordinary evening programme, as it will be given only at daily morning performances throughout the holidays. The subject is the old nursery tale of Valentine and Orson.

Mr. J. L. Toole will make his first appearance in London this season at the Globe Theatre on Monday next.

Britannia Theatre, Hoxton.——Mrs. S. Lane has issued an attractive programme for her annual benefit, which is announced for Monday, Dec. 17. In addition to the numerous corps dramatique, Miss Marie Henderson, Miss Pollie Randall, Mr. Fred Foster, Mr. G. H. Macdermott, and the Lupino Troupe have kindly consented to appear. The performance will commence with The Smiles, Tears, and Frowns of Life, in which Miss M. Henderson and Mrs. S. Lane will appear, followed by the ballet of Robinson Crusoe, by the Lupinos, the Britannia Festival, a miscellaneous concert, and a new poetic drama, written expressly by Mr. E. Newbound.

◆

The Erection of Temple Bar on the Thames Embankment as a waterside gate to the Temple Gardens has been suggested, as the Bar would not only look well, but would thus retain its old associations with the Temple.

Founder's Day, Charterhouse.——Although the school has been for some years removed to Godalming, where it flourishes exceedingly, that portion of Thomas Sutton's foundation which accommodates the "Poor Brothers" still remains, as many of our readers are aware, in London; and here the annual festival of Old Carthusians, which has been held without intermission for more than 200 years, took place on Wednesday, the 12th inst. After a special service in the chapel, an appropriate sermon being preached by Canon Boyle, the company, to the number of about 150, assembled in the fine old monastic hall, which was subsequently the palace of the Dukes of Norfolk, where an excellent dinner was served. We may observe, by the way, that the "old boys" of few schools possess the privilege of holding their annual meetings in so ancient and interesting a chamber. The dinner passed off in the most enjoyable manner, and the various toasts were respectively proposed and responded to by the Master (the Rev. G. Currey), Mr. J. R. Kenyon, Q.C., Major Battiscombe, the Head Master (the Rev. J. Haig Brown), Canon Boyle, Rev. E. Palmer, Rev. F. Poynder, and Messrs. Webster, T. Collins, Arthur Locker, and J. P. Cobbold, M.P.

Scraps

Titian's Quatercentenary is to be kept in January a Berlin, by an exhibition of copies, drawings, and prints of the Venetian's pictures.

Roman Catholic Communities, looking forward to evil days for the faith, are seeking means of self-support, and a Florence convent has established a large factory for the making of poudre de riz.

Shakespearian Representations are quite the fashion in Berlin this winter, and the historical plays are being given with enormous success at the Royal Theatre. The hundredth anniversary of the production of Hamlet, in Germany, will be kept on Monday by a gala performance of the tragedy.

A Genuine Yellow Fog prevailed in Paris one day last week, much to the astonishment of the Parisians, and gave rise to all sorts of curious incidents. Many persons believed themselves in London, and attempted to talk English, people in debt ventured into streets through which they dared not venture in daylight, tapped at their creditors' windows, and, owing to the darkness, contracted some fresh accounts, while the general impression was that the sun had imitated the Republicans, and refused to vote the budget of supply.

The Companion Obelisk to Cleopatra's Needle, promised to the Americans, is not looked on with much favour across the Atlantic. With the example of our failure in the matter of transport before their eyes, the Americans are unwilling to spend either labour or money on the monument, and an irreverent New York correspondent suggests that the New Yorkers have the makings of a pyramid at home without sending to Egypt. There is an old reservoir close to Fifth Avenue which would answer admirably if it were carried up 200 feet to a point, and adorned with a few mummies from the museum.

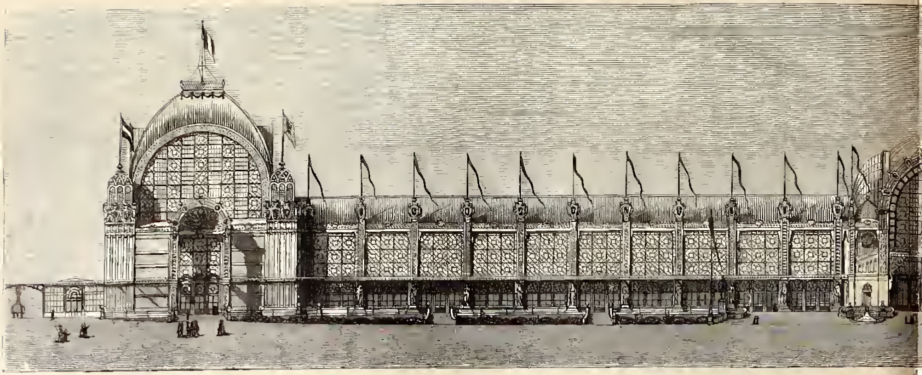
Kelly's Post Office London Directory.——"Good wine needs no bush," nor is it necessary for us to praise this invaluable Directory, which, for accuracy and fulness of matter comprised within comparatively moderate limits, stands unrivalled among publications of this character. The volume for 1878, which has just reached us, is the seventy-ninth of the annual series, it contains no novel features, but the whole has been, as usual, corrected down to the latest date, as an example of which we may instance the re-numbering of Gresham Street, which was commenced about the 30th October last, and which is duly noted throughout the book wherever Gresham Street is mentioned

M. Victor Hugo has been so delighted with Madlle. Sarah Bernhardt's performance of the heroine in Hernani, according to the Paris Figaro, that he sent her an autograph letter, offering her the most precious tribute he could present, the tear she had caused him to shed. The said tear, however, did not accompany the letter, much to the actress's regret, but next day appeared a velvet casket containing the tear on a satin cushion. Madlle. Bernhardt intends to set the gift, which though not large is of the finest water, in a ring or bracelet, and in return is painting a picture of Blanche, in the Roi s'Amuse, for the coming Salon, Blanche being represented as lying dead on her bier with the jester kneeling by her side.

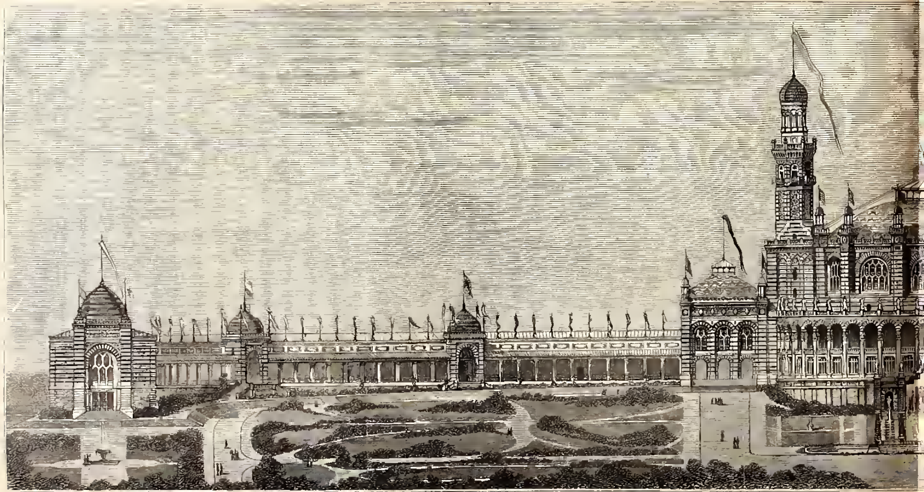
London Mortality decreased last week, and 1,547 deaths were registered against 1,579 during the previous seven days, a decline of 32, being 222 below the average, and at the rate of 22·8 per 1,000. There were 25 deaths from small-pox (a decline of 6), 76 from measles (a decrease of 5), 46 from scarlet fever (a decrease of 6), 5 from diphtheria, 36 from whooping-cough (an increase of 9), 27 from different forms of fever (a decline of 9), and 19 from diarrhœa (an increase of 3). Deaths referring to diseases of the respiratory organs numbered 397, a decline of 20, and were 89 below the average. There were 2,435 births registered, exceeding the average by 71. The mean temperature of the week was 43·4 deg., or 1·7 deg. above the average. The registered sunshine was only 4·5 hours out of 55·9 hours that the sun was above the horizon.

The Dog Show at the Alexandra Palace, which has been held this week under the auspices of the Kennel Club, has been a fair average show, specially noticeable for the fine specimens of bulldogs and bloodhounds, mastiffs and St. Bernards exhibited. There was also a good show of Irish setters, and foxhounds, but there was a somewhat small class of bull-terriers, while the toys were few and poor, except perhaps in the Pug Class, where some really handsome specimens were shown. The foreign dogs, also, were not largely represented, but the class was curious, and included two Japanese terriers, little miseries which look like shorn Italian greyhounds, one Chinese dog, a fine curly-haired fellow, a fine German boar-hound, and a couple of Danish mastiffs. The Dandie Dinmonts and the fashionable Dachshunds are also worth a special mention.

Women's Education Union.——We wish to draw the attention of our readers to the claims of the National Union for Improving the Education of Women of all Classes, which were strongly advocated a little while ago by Mrs. William Grey in letters to The Times and Daily News. The Union, which was founded in 1871 under the Presidency of H.R.H. Princess Louise, and which has during its six years of life done a large amount of valuable work, including the establishment of the Girls' Public Day School Company (Limited), and the Teachers' Training and Registration Society, has been lately so much eclipsed by its own children, now working as independent bodies, that it is in danger of collapsing from want of efficient support. Yet what large and useful functions the Union is still performing may be seen from the following enumeration of the work in hand, viz.: The establishment of a Working Women's College in the South-west of London; the award of Scholarships, to enable promising young women to pursue their studies at a place of advanced instruction; the Students' Library, for lending books at a small annual subscription to young women preparing for the University and other examinations; A Teachers' Education Loan Fund—for granting loans to teachers to enable them to pay education fees; the publication of the "Journal of the Women's Education Union," to give information respecting the education of girls and women in all parts of the world. To carry out this work effectually a large additional number of subscribers is needed; for the subscription for membership (10*s.* 6*d.*), which includes the journal, is so low, that an adequate income can be raised only by numbers. The Working Women's College, especially, though it will be organised with a view to becoming self-supporting, will have to be worked at a loss for some time. We refer our readers for further information concerning the work of the Union to the Secretary, Miss Louisa Brough, 112, Brompton Road, to whom all subscriptions and donations should be addressed.

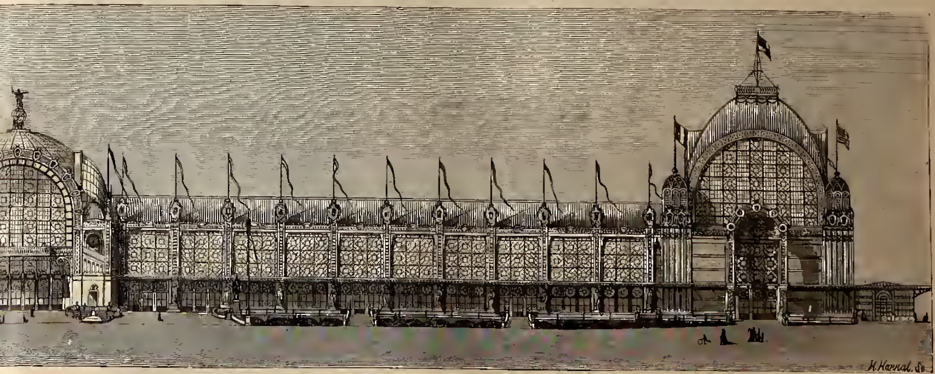


THE PRINCIPAL FACADE OF THE

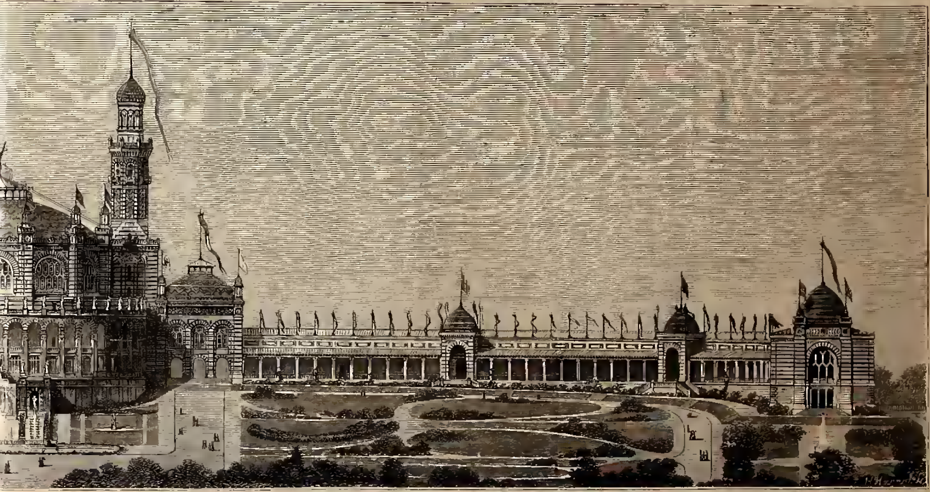


THE BUILDING

THE FORTHCOMING



UILDING ON THE CHAMP DE MARS



N THE TROCADÉRO

PARIS EXHIBITION

FOREIGN

THE WAR IN THE EAST.——After a heroic resistance of five months Plevna and its brave commander, Osman Pasha, have surrendered. For a long time past it has been manifest that the Turks have been terribly hard pressed for stores and food; and it appears that on Monday Osman Pasha determined to make one great final effort to break through the circle of steel with which the Russians had surrounded him, and force his passage either to Widdin or the Balkans. Thus in the early morning he attacked the Russians under General Daniloff on the left bank of the Vid, between Etrepol and Dolni Dubnik, and for some hours the Turks fought with most desperate energy. At one time the sortie seemed likely to succeed, as they succeeded in penetrating the line of entrenchments and batteries, but the Russian grenadiers held firm, and Osman Pasha, himself wounded, attempted to re-enter Plevna. Here, however, he was confronted by a Russo-Roumanian force from Gravitza, which having noticed the absence of the usually active garrison from that side had boldly advanced, and with comparatively little trouble had succeeded in seizing the town and its eastward defences. Thus taken between two fires Osman Pasha had no further choice, and he surrendered unconditionally to General Granetsky. By three o'clock in the afternoon Plevna was in complete possession of the allied troops, and the Grand Duke Nicholas celebrated the victory by sleeping in the town, which has cost him many thousands of men and five months of precious time to reduce to submission. The exact number of prisoners has not yet been ascertained, but Osman Pasha is calculated to have had from 30,000 to 40,000 men remaining. No provisions whatever were found in Plevna, the inhabitants having barely sufficient sustenance to last them through the day. Osman Pasha has been treated with every courtesy by the Russians, and the Czar has sent for his use his own carriage—a mark of respect only due to a brave general who in a few weeks turned an open town into an impregnable fortress, and for nearly half a year has held at bay a vastly superior force composed of the flower of the Russian army, and generaled with the best leaders Russia could supply, and who has finally only yielded to that invincible conqueror Famine.

Of course there have been great rejoicings at Bucharest and St. Petersburg, but amid all these there has sounded an official announcement that the capture of Plevna will not prevent hostilities being continued, "even though preliminary negotiations for peace should be commenced." As it is calculated that the capitulation of Plevna will set free nearly 80,000 men it is probable that a march southwards will at once take place upon the positions of Suleiman, Reouf, and Mehemet Ali Pashas. With regard to the first-named, he has been unable to follow up the advantage he gained last week by the capture of Elena, and although Kesrova and some unimportant positions nearer Tirnova have been carried Russian reinforcements were rapidly brought up, and have thwarted the Turkish general's designs upon the old Bulgarian capital. As for Mehemet Ali, there has been some more sharp fighting in the Somarli, where the Turks appear to be maintaining their position. At this critical moment, however, the Turkish home authorities have suddenly once more superseded Mehemet Ali, who has accordingly been recalled to Constantinople, being replaced by Chakir Pasha. The Minister of War, Mustafa Pasha, has also been changed, Reouf Pasha being the new Seraskier. Truly the Turks seem adepts at changing horses while crossing a stream.

At CONSTANTINOPLE the fall of Plevna was announced on Tuesday, and up to the time we are writing no popular manifestation has been recorded. Throughout Europe, however, this capitulation is looked upon as the beginning of the end, and numerous rumours respecting peace negotiations are in circulation. Still, all resistance has not yet been overcome—the armies of the Lom and the Balkans are as yet intact, and such fortresses as Rustchuk, Silistria, Rasgrad, and Schumla, in the Quadrilateral, will have to be reduced before the Russians can claim complete possession of Bulgaria. In the mean time the Czar will now take a brief holiday, and return for a time to St. Petersburg.

SERVIA, encouraged by the Russian success, is more than ever anxious to recommence hostilities, while GREECE—probably fearing to be left out in the cold in the division of the spoil—is announced to be likely to take the field simultaneously with Servia. Plucky little MONTENEGRO is still continuing her warfare in the west, and Prince Nikita has had a narrow escape from death, the house in which he was residing at Antivari having been undermined and blown into the air, the Prince being fortunately out at the time. In ASIA there is no change in the situation, Mukhtar is still at Erzeroum, and typhus is reported to be raging in the Russian army. It is now positively asserted that the fall of Kars was brought about by the treachery of a Turkish artillery colonel, Hussein Bey.

FRANCE.——The crisis has continued throughout the week, and has increased in intensity every day. At the close of last week Marshal MacMahon apparently resigned himself to circumstances, sent for M. Dufaure, and unreservedly commissioned him to form a Parliamentary Ministry. Subsequently, however, he intimated that he must retain the right of nominating three Ministers—those of War, Foreign Affairs, and Marine. As such an arrangement was not only unconstitutional, but had been the cause of great difficulties in a previous Cabinet, where, from the fact of the members entertaining diametrically opposite political opinions, harmony had been impossible, M. Dufaure declined to form a Cabinet unless the appointment of the complete Cabinet rested with him. The Marshal then abruptly broke off all negotiations, and a semi-official note announced that M. Batbie had been summoned to the Elysée to form a Cabinet, which it was understood would be not merely a Ministère du Combat, but one of dissolution. However, even the Conservatives began now to take alarm at the Marshal's conduct; no one could be found willing to enter the Cabinet; Bonapartists again began to show signs of hesitation in thus overriding Universal Suffrage; the Legitimist journals, inspired it is said by the Comte de Chambord, began to turn round, and ask whither the Marshal wished to lead France; while the Constitutionalists, at a meeting on Sunday, plainly told M. Bathie that he must not rely upon them to vote a second dissolution. This little body of Senators, who hold the destinies of France in their hands, have moreover been exceedingly angered with the Marshal for his very cavalier-like treatment of the Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier, who visited the Marshal on Monday in order to make a last effort in favour of a peaceful solution. The Marshal did not even ask the President of the Senate to sit down, and bluntly told him that henceforward he would have "neither conciliation nor compromise." The Duke withdrew deeply hurt, after saying a few plain words to the Marshal, regretting the "terrible responsibilities" he was bringing upon himself.

On Wednesday, however, matters looked a little brighter, as the Marshal not only received a deputation of Senators who came to present addresses from the manufacturers of Eastern France, but even voluntarily vouchsafed some civil declarations to the effect that he was not actuated by personal ambition, that he was not a man of any party, that he held neither for the Comte de Chambord, the Comte de Paris, nor the Prince Imperial, and that he would maintain the existing Republican institutions until 1880, "if," he added sadly, "I am still here." The Senators urged the Marshal to put an end to the crisis, saying, "You alone can do it," but the Marshal would make no promises, and dismissed them with the assurance that he was "animated by the best intentions, and will do nothing but what his conscience and the interests of the country dictate."

In Paris the utmost uneasiness is felt, being increased by the various rumours which are almost hourly circulated. Nevertheless social life is unaffected, and the theatres are in the full swing of their autumnal activity. At the Théâtre Italiens Signor Salvini has been playing Hamlet and Othello. At the Bouffes Parisiens a new comic opera, L'Etoile, has been produced with great success, the music by M. Chabrier. At the Ambigu there is a new six-act drama, Une Cause Célèbre, by MM. Ennery and Cormon, a dramatised version of the case of a noted murderer brought to justice through the the testimony of his six-year-old son. George Sand's François le Champi has been revived at the Odéon; while a new opera, Zilia, by M. G. Villate, the libretto founded on the Venetian Council of Ten, and written by M. Themistocles Solera, has been brought out at the Théâtre Italiens. M. Villate is a young composer, this is his first work, and he has manifestly placed Sig. Verdi's music before him as his ideal.—On Monday M. Victor Hugo gave a grand dramatic and literary dinner.

ITALY.——The Pope is said to be slightly better, although in a very hopeless condition, "oscillating between improvement and prostration." He still receives visits from certain cardinals, and has been presented by Cardinal Defalloux with an armchair bed on wheels, on which he is able to recline comfortably, and which can be moved at will by the occupant. The Consistory will still be held on Monday, the Pope being present in his chair-bed.—The Antonelli will case is now in course of trial before the Civil Tribunal at Rome.—The well-known Carlist General, Lizarraga, has died at Rome.

SPAIN.——King Alphonso has now officially communicated to his Ministry his intention of marrying the Princess Mercédes, daughter of the Duc de Montpensier, and the Grand Chamberlain of the Court has been despatched to the Duke, with the formal demand for the Princess's hand, while application has been made to the Vatican for the usual Papal dispensation necessary for the marriage of cousins. All popular opposition to the match has now ceased, and the wedding will take place about the 23rd of January.

INDIA.——The Jowaki expedition continues to be successful, and our forces having captured Jummoo and destroyed all the fortified places of the neighbourhood, have returned to their former positions without a single casualty. Great depression is said to exist among the Jowakis, who find no sympathy amongst the neighbouring tribes, who remain quiet. Another little war is threatened, this time on the North-Eastern frontier, where Angami Nagas, the most powerful of all the Nagas, are becoming troublesome, and the Government has determined to send an expedition again to them.

A little difficulty has arisen with Sir Salar Jung, owing to the Government having compelled the Nizam's Minister to dismiss his private Secretary, Mr. Oliphant, who is stated to have been a "bad adviser" to Sir Salar Jung, and to have taken part in "controversies embarrassing to the British Government."

UNITED STATES.——Internal political troubles of little interest to foreign nations still continue to prevail, the greatest controversy being the "silver" question, there being a widespread agitation to pay the interest on the National Debt in silver, directly contrary to the opinions expressed in President Hayes' recent message.

THE COURT

THE Queen is now at Windsor Castle, where Her Majesty has been receiving a number of visitors. At the end of last week the Queen gave audience to Lord Beaconsfield and Mr. Cross, and received the Bishop of Sodor and Man, who did homage on his appointment. On Saturday Princess Christian lunched with Her Majesty, while the Princess Beatrice came up to town, was present at the Saturday Popular Concert at St. James' Hall, and after calling on the Duchess of Cambridge returned to Windsor. Mr. Hardy joined the Royal party at dinner, and had audience of the Queen. Next day Her Majesty and the Princess Beatrice attended morning Service in the private chapel, and Princess Christian visited the Queen. The Princess Louise, the Crown Prince of Hanover, and the Marquis of Lorne arrived on Monday, and in the evening Her Majesty gave a dinner party, including, amongst others, Prince and Princess Christian, the Princesses Louise and Beatrice, the Prince of Hanover, Lord Lorne, the Dowager Duchess of Athole, and Baron Halkett. Next day the Queen's guests left the Castle, and Her Majesty came up to town to see the Duchess of Cambridge afterwards returning to Windsor. On Wednesday Her Majesty held a Council, and gave audience to the Chinese Ambassador and the Ministers of Salvador and the Hawaiian Islands, who presented their credentials.—Later in the afternoon Mr. Bryan Robinson, late Judge of the Supreme Court, Newfoundland; Mr. James Bain, late Provost of Glasgow; and Mr. Andrew Barclay Walker, late Mayor of Liverpool, were knighted by Her Majesty.—Her Majesty has sent an autograph letter of congratulation to Canon Beadon, of North Stoneham, Southampton, who celebrated his one-hundredth birthday last Wednesday.

The Prince of Wales concluded his visit to the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh at the end of last week, and came up to town, and on Saturday presided at a meeting of his Council. On Monday morning the Prince with the Crown Prince of Hanover visited the Cattle Show at the Agricultural Hall, where he has nine entries, and afterwards left town for a few days' shooting at Eastwell Park, the Duke of Edinburgh's residence near Tunbridge. He would return on Thursday or yesterday (Friday), and was expected to visit the Queen at Windsor. The Princess and her daughters remain at Sandringham.—The Prince of Wales goes to Cambridge on the 21st prox. to unveil the statue of the Prince Consort at the Fitzwilliam Museum.—Presents of game have been sent by the Prince to several of the London hospitals.

The Princess Louise and her husband visited the South Kensington Museum last week, to see Dr. Schliemann's arrangement of his Trojan collection.—Prince Leopold bore the journey to town very well.—The Empress of Austria leaves for England on the 28th inst. She will be accompanied by her only son, the Crown Prince Rodolph, who will make a tour in Scotland, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, returning to England to fetch his mother in March.

The marriage of King Alphonso of Spain and his cousin Mercédes is mentioned elsewhere. The Princess's wedding dress will be of white satin, quilted with pearls, a white raised velvet train, edged with silver, while her head will be adorned with diamonds and a lace mantilla.—Princess Charlotte of Prussia, eldest daughter of the Imperial Prince, is also preparing her trousseau, which is to be made entirely in Germany. Prussian Princesses have a dowry of 30,000*l.*, half of which is spent on their trousseau and establishment.

CHURCH NEWS

THE BISHOP OF LONDON'S FUND.——Dr. Jackson has issued a circular to the clergy of the diocese, asking them to aid this fund by having collections in their churches on the first Sunday in June next. He says that though the densely populated districts of London which were most prominently in view when the fund was established, have been for the most part, provided sufficiently with churches, and partially at least with clergy; in the northern and western suburbs whole districts are being rapidly covered with houses, inhabited to a great extent by the labouring class, where no provision for public worship and pastoral superintendence yet exists. He thinks that it may safely be said that twenty new churches with a staff of clergy are needed for neighbourhoods of this description.

THE HATCHAM RIOTS.——There were fresh disturbances at St. James's, Hatcham, last Sunday. The chief cause of hostility against the present vicar is the restoration of the candlesticks and altar decorations which gave offence in Mr. Tooth's time. The "early celebration" passed off quietly, but after the eleven o'clock service, a body of people endeavoured to force their way into the church, which was already crowded; and a general scrimmage was the result. A special force of 200 police were on duty in the vicinity, and these soon cleared the building. No arrests were made. The churchwardens complain that the ordinary congregation were excluded from the church by a number of strangers, who "packed" the building as soon as the doors were opened. Evenden and McClure have each been fined 40*s.* for taking part in the disturbances on the previous Sunday. The magistrate said that he was desirous that oil should be thrown over the troubled waters, and suggested that a conference should take place between the Rev. Mr. McColl and others, as to the kind of service to be conducted, so as not to cause dissatisfaction.

VARIOUS.——On Sunday week, the Rev. C. J. Fuller, vicar of St. Mary the Virgin, Primrose Hill, stated in the course of his sermon that some gentlemen in the parish had been the cause of the Bishop ordering him to conduct the Holy Communion in a very different manner to what he was in the habit of doing. He and twelve of the principal supporters of the church had held a meeting, and he had resolved to obey his Bishop. By so so doing he would have to officiate without the vestments, and the communicants would have to take the pure blood of Christ, as he had to discontinue using the mixed chalice. One thing he would promise them, however, that he would preach the Holy Catholic doctrines stronger than ever, for although he was prohibited from teaching them with outward signs he had still the liberty of the pulpit, which he would not fail to avail himself of.—At an Anti-Confessional meeting, held in the Brighton Pavilion, on Tuesday, the chairman announced that he and another gentleman had that day received anonymous letters, in which, beneath a rough sketch of a skull and crossbones, they were warned "on their lives" to abstain from speaking. Resolutions were passed condemning auricular confession as opposed to the Word of God, to the practice of the primitive Church, and the doctrines of the Church of England, and destructive of domestic peace, social virtue, and the best interests of morality.—On Monday night at a meeting at Mile End, convened by the Liberation Society, the Church people attended in large numbers, and taking advantage of a short delay on the part of the advertised chairman, elected one of their own body to preside. The lecturer, Mr. Kearly, being continually interrupted, at last proposed that this chairman should be removed, and that the Rev. T. W. Atkinson, the advertised chairman, should take his place. This was carried, but the chairman stuck to his seat, and an attempt to force him from it led to a free fight, which was stopped by the police, who cleared the room.—Here is a fine specimen of the "retort courteous" culled from the Rock: "The churchwardens of St. Margaret's, Lothbury, have returned to the Church Association—with 'their compliments' and an amiable wish 'that the association was bankrupt'—the sheets of the anti-confessional 'Memorial' to the Queen which had been sent to them from Buckingham Street. Only one name was found appended to the document, and this proved to be none other than that of 'The Devil' himself! Now this is by no means a solitary instance of this eminent personage having affixed his signature to the Memorial while sheets of the same were lying in Ritualistic hands! This curious fact cannot but suggest unpleasant reflections as to the sort of society one would be likely to meet in Ritualistic circles."

MUSIC

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.——Though two extra representations are announced for Monday and Tuesday next—the last being what is termed "a combined performance" (something like the once celebrated "Long Thursdays" when the late Benjamin Lumley was director of Her Majesty's Theatre)—Mr. Mapleson's winter operatic season virtually terminates this evening with a repetition of Il Flauto Magico. There is nothing to add to what has been already said with regard to the brief series of performances—welcome because of their unanticipated occurrence—except that the list of operas previausly given has been enriched by Don Giovanni, the lyrico-dramatic chef d'œuvre of Mozart. The cast of this great work was, all circumstances taken into considemtian, more than creditable. The executian of the music, fram the overture—which, remembering what use of it is made in the final scene, may be loaked upon as a striking illustmtion of Campell's aft-quoted line—was, under the vigilant direction af Signor Licalsi, for the most part all that could be wished. To expect a Doa Giovanni nowadays presenting the beau-ideal of Da Ponte's inimitable creation would be Utopian. The best Dan Giovanni since Tamburini is the Frenchaian, M. Faure—that is, when M. Faure sings it in his own language, he being an actor as well as a vocalist. We must confess, at the same time, that Signor Del Puente surprised us by his general partrayal of a chamcter sa exacting in every sense. This gentleman, or we are greatly mistaken, has the wherewithal to hecame a lyric artist of the first rank. The Donna Anna was Madame Marie Rôze, who both acted and sung with the highest intelligence, and who, were she gifted with the physical means, of such material significance in this arduous part, wauld leave nothing to desire. Mdlle. Anna de Belacca is a piquant and captivating Zerlina, possessed, mareover, of a voice which, with the help of assiduaus study, would enable her to give both the airs which Mozart has awarded to Zerlina in the original keys—just, in short, as Mozart conceived them. Signor Bettini's Dan Ottavio is what it has always been—a smooth commonplace; though it must be admitted that he sings the occasionally omitted air, "Dalla sua pace," with great taste and uniform correctness. His "Il mio tesoro," natwithstanding the fact that it won him a dauble call, pleased us less. Mdlle. Valleria, as Donna Elvira, displayed that musical knowledge and artistic perception for which she is invariably noted; Signor Monari Rocca was, though decidedly overweighted, a more or less acceptable Leporello; Signor Zoboli an admirable Masetto (a character too often ridiculausly averacted); and Signor Brocolini a Commendatore fully conscious of the importance of the music assigned to that important personage—as was specially shown in the last scene, not only the finest Mozart ever composed, but the finest in the whole range af lyric drama. As we have yet a few abservations to make upon the series of operatic performances which come to an end on Tuesday, with the varied pragramme above referred to—the accasion being "for the benefit" of Mr. Mapleson, far whose "benefit," in case of their being remunerative, one might imagine that every perfarmance was held—no more need be written at present. Enaugh that what the director of Her Majesty's Theatre has done has been a real gift-offering to the lavers of Italian apera at this time of year.

> Coming events cast their shadows before—

London Ballad Concerts.——At this, the last concert before Christmas, Mr. Sims Reeves reappeared, and sang three of his most favaurite pieces, namely, Blumenthal's "Requital," "Came into the Garden, Maud," and "My Pretty Jane." He was rapturously received, but steadfastly declined all encores. Mr. Santley in "The Bellringer" and Mr. Maybrick in "The Village Blacksmith" were admirable. Miss Orridge was very pleasing in Smart's "Lady of the Lea," and Miss Beata Francis sang two songs very nicely, namely, "The Scented Vine" and "Kirtle Red." Kucken's "Young Musicians" is one af the very best things in the London Vocal Union's répertoire, and we hope they will favour us with it again when the New Year begins.

Waifs.——Madle. Marie Rôze leaves for the United States on the 20th inst. That she will meet American appreciatars of her distinguished talent is beyand question.—It is pleasant to find that the Parisian journals are beginning to talk a little about the long-neglected Méhul, ane of the real glories of French art, a Gluck in his way, and author of many operas which might be revived with signal advantage. What the grand ald Florentine, Cherubini, thought of Méhul may be gathered from the language in which he dedicates to his French canfederate and worthy rival the superb opera, Medée. Méhul, with Boieldieu and Auber, farm the genuine triumvirate of French dmmatic composers.—The performance af Professar Macfarren's Joseph, at the Royal Albert Hall, an Tuesday evening, fully bore out the impression created on the occasion of its first production at the Leeds Festival, not long since. We find no reason to modify in any sense our opinion af the oratorio, a work of which every one who cares for the progress of genuine music in England has reason to feel proud. Although the general performance was certainly not comparable to that at Leeds (in the choral parts especially), it was on the whole highly creditable to Mr. Joseph Barnby, the conductor, and those under his control. The leading singers, but for the substitution of Madame Lemmens-Sherrington for Mdlle. Albani, were the same as at Leeds, viz.: Madame Patey, Messrs. Edward Lloyd, Foli, and Santley, Mrs. Osgood representing the character of Benjamin, and taking part, here and there, in the "dialogue music." The oratorio was received with marked favour, the composer being called to the platform and enthusiastically applauded at the end.—Mr. Carl Rosa's Operatic Company have been playing this week at Bolton. Owing to the destruction by fire of the Worcester Theatre, their ante-Christmas season is shortened by a week.—Madame Trebelli Bettini, having amicably settled her differences with Mr. Mapleson, will take part, on Monday, in the performance of Flotow's Martha, at Her Majesty's Theatre.—The Crystal Palace operatic representations have begun again very successfully, with a clever English version, by Mr. Grist, of Cimarosa's once famous opera, Il Matrimonio Segreto (our own Clandestine Marriage), the chief singers in which are Mesdames Cave Ashton and Alice Barth, Miss Florence St. John, Messrs. George Fox, Richard Temple, and Bernard Lane. The orchestra, as usual, is that of the Palace, conducted, of course, by Mr. August Manns.

SPORTING

The Turf.——Now is the "winter of our discontent;" but though Croydon and Sandown are over, the Bromley authorities provided on Tuesday and Wednesday some capital cross-country sport, which was well patronised by owners of horses and the general public, the Cattle Show visitors to the metropolis showing in great force. Many fair-class horses put in an appearance, Catinka taking the Maiden Hurdle Race, Lord Colney the Railway Steeple Chase, Bristol the Hunters' Hurdle Race, and King Sweep, who has run very unluckily for some weeks, the Selling Hurdle Race in a respectable field of fourteen. On the second day King Sweep scored another victory in the Bickley Hurdle Race, and old Industrious took the Beckenham Hurdle Handicap, while Swift beat eleven opponents in the Selling Hurdle Handicap.—Times have indeed changed from what they were twenty years ago. At the present moment nat a single professional book is open on the Derby, an amateur it is said being the only representative of "all-round" Derby betting.

Aquatics.——The Trial Eights at both Universities have been rowed. At Oxfard—or rather at Moulsford, where the race came off—Ellison's crew after a splendid contest won by six feet; and on the piece of water below Ely, where the Cambridge men row their trial, Bird's crew were victariaus by a length and a half. It is of course very difficult to compare the relative merits af the two winning crews, nor indeed is there any great necessity for endeavouring so to do. There seems however to be an impression that Cambridge has the best raw material to select from for the Putney race next spring. It is also impossible to speak with any certainty just now as to the number of "Old Blues" likely to be in either of the Putney crews.—An attempt has made, or rather is still being made, to bring Boyd and Nicholson together, and the chief difficulty in arranging it seems to be the question whether the former shall give the latter five seconds at the start or finish. We hardly think matches which pretend to be first-class ones shauld have this element of "giving and taking" in them at all.

Coursing.——The seasan, as far as it has gone, has been a mast successful ane, no interference fram the coursers' special enemies, frost and snow, having yet been experienced. The old dogs, as a rule, seem well up to the mark, and the youngsters are decidedly superior to their predecessors of seveml seasons, at least so think good judges.—Mr. Marley's Little Jack beat Mr. Hendersan's On Guard far the Ravensworth Cup at the North of England Club (Eslington) Meeting, where good caursing is invariably the order of the day; and Mr. Morris's Lizzie Parram toak the Eslington Stakes, running her courses brilliantly thraughaut.—The Stoneham Park and Pulborough Meetings were also very good, the veteran judge, Mr. Warwick, at the latter performing his arduous duties to the satisfaction of all concerned.—The Waterloo Cup is now the only medium for investment generally open to the public; and for this the nominations of Messrs. Briggs, the owner of last year's runner up, Hornby, and Darlinson, are in most request. Not a few would give a very considerable sum to know for whom last year's winner, Coomassie, will run, but the secret is as yet well kept.

Football.——The ball has been kept moving with great spirit during the last few days.—At Upton Park, Essex and Surrey, two leading football counties, have played their annual match under Association rules, the representatives of the land of calves and agues being successful by four goals to three after a well-contested game.—At Eton the "Collegers" have played Cambridge a "field" game, which resulted after a very fast match in favour af the Etonians by one goal to the Cantabs nil. The Eton boys, both Collegers and Oppidans, are in very good farm this season.—The Association Cup has now entered an the second round, the results being the victories of Cambridge over Maidenhead by four goals ta two, of the Royal Engineers over the Pilgrims by six ta none, and of Upton Park over Reading by a goal, the only one got in the game.—On Wednesday, in a Rugby Unian game at the Oval, Oxford defeated Cambridge.

Angling.——Anglers generally, and Thames anglers in particular, will be glad to hear that a very influential meeting of nearly 120 gentlemen has been held in Reading for the purpose of forming an Associatian for protecting and improving the angling between Mapledurham, and Sonning, and in the Lower Kennet and tributaries. There is hardly a finer stretch of water on the Thames for angling purpases than that just mentioned, and though much poached it still holds some very fine fish af all kinds. Every inch of the Thames should be protected by lacal Associatians, which canduce to the sport of the legitimate anglers af the working classes as well as to that of their richer brethren.

LEGAL

The Detective Case.——The law advisers af the Crawn have decided not to proceed with the remaining counts of the indictment against Inspector Clarke, and a nolle prosequi has accordingly been entered in the case. The statement that Meiklejohn had since his conviction written to the Treasury incriminating some other police officers is now said to be devoid of foundation. No other indictment will be preferred against him.—Last week a woman named Lena Chester was charged with having attempted to bribe one of the gaolers of the Mansion House Justice Room by offering him 500*l.* to procure the release of Frederick Dimsdale, a solicitor, who is in custody on remand, with three others, on a charge of obtaining money by means of fictitious leases. The gaoler at first accepted half-a-sovereign from the woman; but, thinking that it was a scheme to test his integrity, he got a detective to conceal himself beneath a table at the next interview, and after the offer of 500*l.* had been made the officer showed himself and took the woman into custody. The case is only part heard, and the accused is at liberty on bail.

Miscellaneous Items.——The result of the Michelstown trial has produced great rejoicings in the south of Ireland. Bonfires were lighted on the hills, and Mr. Casey had a grand reception on his arrival home from Dublin.—The two men Hibbert and Martin, who were suspected of being concerned in the robbery of Foreign Bonds from the mail train fram Calais to Paris, but who were discharged for lack of jurisdiction, were taken before Sir J. Ingham under the Extradition Acts, Hibbert being claimed by the French Government and Martin by the Austrian, for robberies in those countries of which they had been convicted en contumace. It turned out, however, that Hibbert was the man "wanted" in both countries, "Charles Martin" having been one of his numerous aliases; Hibbert was therefore handed over to the French authorities, who, when they have done with him, will probably pass him on to Austria, and Martin was discharged, the magistrate declining to entertain his application for "recompense" for his long detention in custody.—The Daily Telegraph has lately devoted some space to letters complaining of the manner in which Mr. Commissioner Kerr deals with cases at the Old Bailey Sessions. One of the allegations was that a prisoner accused of felony was discharged because of the temporary absence of the prosecutor when the case was called on, and that the prosecutor was fined £40 for his absence. On Monday the learned Commissioner requested the Clerk of Arraigns to search the records for any such case, and on Tuesday it was announced that no prosecutor had been mulcted as described, but that a prisoner had been discharged without prosecution. His lordship then explained the circumstances which led him to adopt the course he did, and expressed a hope that he should not again be called upon for a similar explanation. The Daily Telegraph has, however, returned to the charge with a number of fresh letters and a trenchant leading article, in which it is alleged that in each of the cases alluded to, "a dangerous criminal has been let loose upon society from no other motive than caprice." In another Court Serjeant Cox has been found fault with by Mr. Montagu Williams far having sentenced a client af his who was convicted of receiving stolen goods, but recommended to mercy by the jury, to three months' hard labour. The case has been referred to the Home Secretary.—The manager of the "Novelty Theatre Company" has been fined £20 for neglecting to furnish a list of the shareholders to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, an omission which had rendered him liable to a penalty of over 1,000*l.*—The Court of Criminal Appeal will soon be called upon to decide whether a man can commit forgery by signing his own name. The case in which the point arose is that of a man who, an having an executian put into his hause, declared that he had sold his furniture, and produced a receipt for the maney signed by himself.—Some af the rising generation display great precocity in crime. At Maidstone, two brothers, aged respectively eleven and thirteen, have been convicted of stealing rabbits, and sent to a reformatary at Shrewsbury; two other lads have been committed for trial for robbing their employers; and at Croydan four yauths, all under fourteen years old, have been sent to a reformatory for having stolen two bottles of whiskey from a grocer's cart. In reply to the magistmtes, they said that the liquor was nice, and did not make them drunk.—Another prosecutian under the Seeds Adulteration Act took place the other day in Southwark, the defendant being charged with selling "dyed" clover seed. The defence was that the process only improved the appearance of the seed, and did not simulate that of a different kind, and the magistmte expressed his regret that the Act was so worded that he felt bound to dismiss the summans.—The Canrt of Appeal has decided that na compensation is recovemble from an auctioneer who sells pigs which turn out to be affected with typhoid fever, as he is protected by the formal "no warranty" clause which is usually inserted in all sale catalogues.—It would seem that the penny dinners for which Glasgow is so famous are sometimes nasty as well as cheap. Last week a girl employed at an eating-house quarrelled with her employer because he insisted upon selling some soup which, amaugst other ingredients, contained a dead rat and a quantity of rotten cabbage. She was given into custody for "creating a disturbance," and fined 10*s.* or ten days' imprisonment.—The other day a waman, after being sentenced ta eighteen manths' hard labour for theft, coolly asked the judge to lend her half-a-sovereign to take her home after the expiratian of her sentence.—A young man is in custody on a charge of having stolen a meerschaum pipe, which was valued by tha owner at 15*l.* on accaunt of its having once been smoked by Frederick the Great.

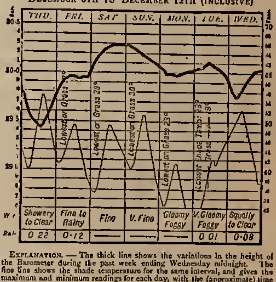
◆

A Quaint Reproduction of the Manners of the Thirteenth Century is to be given by a play, the Bonhomme Misère, to be braught out this week at the Paris Odéon. The play has been founded on an old legend, and the principal characters will be St. Peter, St. Paul, Misery, represented by an old beggar, and Death in the character af a young girl in white, crowned with myrtle, while the piece is to be got up after the paintings in mediæval missals, the scene taking place in a sort of Gathic reliquary or triptych, the wings af which will shut up after each act.

◆

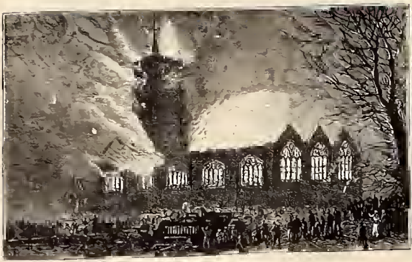
WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

December 6th to December 12th (inclusive)

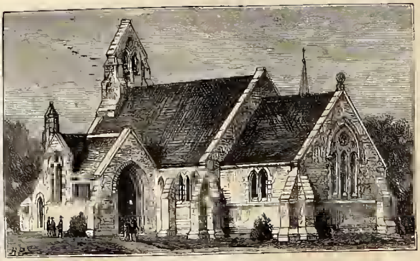


Explanation. — The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

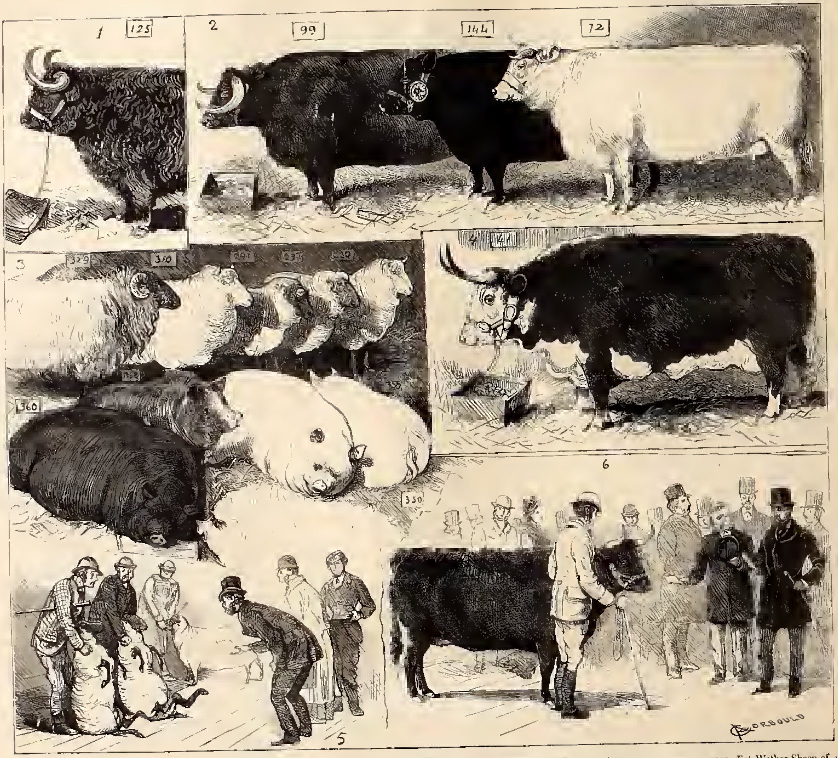
Remarks.— -The weather during this period has again been very unsettled. Several areas of low pressure have skirted our western and northern coasts, and their effects have been felt to some extent in all parts of the country. The first one appeared on Thursday morning, the 6th instant, and caused the rapid fall in the barometer shown at the beginning of the curve; but as it passed off during the day the mercury again rose and continued to do so, though not quite continuously, until Saturday evening, the 8th instant. A fall then set in, which continued gradually until Monday afternoon, the 10th instant, when the barometer rose slightly for a few hours, but on Tuesday, the 11th instant, another fall commenced. The winds have been south-westerly or westerly during the whole week, and for the most part moderate in force; but the depression which advanced over Scotland from the Atlantic on Tuesday night, the 11th instant, was more serious than its predecessors, and caused hard gales in the west and north, and a fresh gale even as far south as London. The weather was fine on Saturday, the 8th instant, and has cleared up in the rear of Tuesday's disturbance, but with these exceptions, cloud, rain, and sometimes fog have been general. Temperature has been on the whole a few degrees lower than in the previous week, and the nights have been very cold. The lowest temperature recorded was on Monday night, the 10th instant, when the thermometer fell to 28° in the shade, and 19° on the grass. Although the barometer was on Wednesday rising, and fine weather prevailed, the condition was very unsettled, and likely to become unfavourable again. The barometer was highest (30·28 inches) on Saturday, the 8th instant; lowest (29·45 inches) on Thursday afternoon, the 6th instant; range, 0·83 inches. Temperature, in the shade, was highest (55°) on Thursday, the 6th instant; lowest (28°) on Tuesday morning, the 11th instant, when 19° was recorded on the grass; range, 27°. Rainfall: Total fall, 0·43 inches, on four days; greatest fall, 0·22 inches, on Thursday, the 6th instant. The barometer began to fall again on the night of Wednesday, the 12th instant, and the wind was backing towards south-west.



BURNING OF THE OLD PARISH CHURCH OF LAMERTON



PROPOSED MEMORIAL CHURCH AT PORTLAND TO THE CREW AND PASSENGERS LOST IN THE "AVALANCHE," SEPT. 11



(1). 125, 1st Prize, Scotch Highland Breed.—(2). 99, 144, 72, Sussex Steers, Scotch Polled Heifers or Cows, Shorthorned Heifers.—(3). 329, 310, 291, 297, 220, Fat Wether Sheep of any Speckledfaced Mountain Breed, Fat Wether Sheep of Cheviot Breed, Fat Wether Sheep of Shropshire Breed, Fat Wether Sheep of Oxfordshire Breed, Fat Ewes of Kentish or Romney Marsh Breed; 360, 364, 355, 350, Pigs of any Black Breed, Berkshire, of any White Breed, White Long Hair Breed.—(4). 41, Hereford.—5. The Anxious Moment. Which is it to be?—(6). Mr. Sidney showing the Prince of Wales his Prize Taker,

THE CATTLE SHOW—LEAVES FROM OUR ARTIST'S SKETCH-BOOK

BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XXXI.

LEONARD CONTINUES HIS STORY

LEONARD stopped for a moment. The Captain's eyes were kindling with the light of battle, Celia's with the light of admiration.

"It did not take long to do. It takes no time to tell. The whole thing was a happy accident; but it was the one fortunate moment of my life. Our men, watching from the trenches, cheered again; a rush was made, and that rifle-pit never went back to the Russians."

"They ought to have given you the Victoria Cross, Leonard," I cried.

"No, no," he replied, "that was given for braver actions than mine. Captain Bouchier got it for taking the "Ovens," a rifle-pit which could hold a couple of hundred; such gallant fellows as Private Beckle, of the 41st, who stood over the body of his wounded Colonel against a dozen of the enemy—those are the things that make a man V.C. As for me, I was more than rewarded, as you shall hear.

"When we came off trench duty, and were marched to our own quarters, I was sent for by the Colonel. You may judge what I felt when he told me, after speaking of the affair in the kindest manner, that he should take care it was properly reported. He was better than his word, because the next day he ordered me to attend in the morning at Lord Raglan's head-quarters. I went up in trembling, but I had no occasion to fear. All the Generals were there, for a Council was to be held that day. General Burgoyne, when I was called in, very kindly explained to the Chief the importance of this rifle pit, and how its occupation by our men would facilitate matters in our advanced approaches towards the Redan, and then he told Marshal Pelissier and Omar Pasha in French, and in the handsomest terms, what I had done. Lord Raglan spoke a few words to my Colonel, and then he said, in his quiet, steady way, what I shall never forget.

"'Sergeant Coplestone, you have done a gallant action, and I hear a good report of you. I shall recommend you to the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief for promotion. I am sure you will not disgrace Her Majesty's Commission.'

"I could not speak—indeed, it was not for me to speak. I saluted, and retired. Those words of the gallant old chief—and that scene—I can never forget."

"Tell us," said Celia, "what he was like, Lord Raglan?"

"He was a grand old man," said Leonard, "with a grave face, squarely cut about the chin, overhanging brows, deep-set eyes, and wavy white hair gone off at the temples, his nose was aquiline, and the expression of his face was one of great beauty. Every one trusted him, the French and Turks as much as the English. He had left one arm in the Peninsular War thirty years before, and he was about sixty-nine years of age. He was never so happy, his staff used to say, as when he was under fire, and yet he was careful of his soldiers' lives. What killed him was disappointment at his failure of the 18th June. He wanted to wipe out the memory of Waterloo from the minds of French and English by a victory as brilliantly attained by both armies side by side on the anniversary of that battle. It was a muddle and a mess. What was to be the grand success of the campaign proved the most serious reverse that the allied armies experienced in the Crimea. Out of five general officers commanding columns four were killed or mortally wounded, and out of our small force fifteen hundred gallant fellows were killed in that terrible day. Death was very busy with us just then. General Estcourt, Adjutant-General, a splendid man, and worthy companion in arms with Lord Raglan, died a week later. Captain Lyons, the son of Sir Edmund, died about the same day; on Thursday, the 28th, the Chief himself expired; and Colonel Vico, the French Aide-de-Camp, attached to the English Headquarters, died also after this event, showing the depressing influence of even a temporary defeat on the best of men. Even one of the interpreters sickened and sunk. It was a sort of murrain among those at Headquarters.

"Well," Leonard went on after a pause. "That is all newspaper news. What the papers could not tell you was the grief of both armies and the profound sensation caused by Lord Raglan's death. There may have been better generals in the history of England's wars, but there never was one more loved and trusted. His life was perfectly simple, his headquarters contained nothing but camp furniture, a table on trestles, a red tablecloth, camp chairs, and no carpets, he was up at all hours, and he was without fear.

"Of the other generals I think Pelissier was the best. He was a little dumpy man, with a thick neck, and he was a little too fond of hurling his men at the enemy, but he did fight, and fought well. They made him Duke of Malakoff afterwards, which is as if we were to make a man Duke of Jones."

"Why?"

"Because the Malakoff was named after a man who had once kept a tavern on the spot. Malakoff was a purser in the Russian Navy, and being kicked out of the service for drinking, swindling, and smuggling,—this last he did in smuggling ship's stores—came ashore and started a drink shop outside Sebastopol, where he could combine profit with the pursuit of his favourite occupation. And as his drink was cheaper than could be got anywhere else, for he had the advantage of his old smuggling experiences in the laying in of his stores, the place became a favourite resort of the Russian sailors when they came ashore to get drunk. After a while the stony hill with Malakoff's shebeen upon it, became Malakoff's Redoubt. Sturdy Pelissier, however, did not look much like a Duke, as we picture dukes. When Soyer the cook came out, he was so like the General that we used to ask which was the cook and which was the General. Only Soyer wore more gold lace, and distinguished himself that way.

"My commission came out before the death of Lord Raglan. You may fancy what a trial it was to me, on that day, not to be able to write home, and tell you all about it. I did write, however; I wrote a full history of all I had done, with a note inside that it was to be sent to you, Captain, in case I fell. My brother officers gave me a hearty welcome, and we had a big dinner—as big as the materials at our disposal allowed, the day I joined—so to speak. I have been to many a better feast since, but none at which I was so entirely happy. I remember that the things to eat were scanty, as often happened in the year 1855—but I was eating what there was among gentlemen, with Her Majesty's commission in my pocket. We had no candlesticks fit to show on a mess table, but a dozen bayonets, with candles in them, stuck in the table, made a brilliant illumination."

Leonard paused again.

"The dinner was the last that some of us were to take together. On the 18th of June came our Repulse at the Redan, when we lost half-a-dozen from our mess.

"As soon as quiet days came I took an opportunity of telling the Colonel my little history—how I was ignorant of my parentage, how I was a gutter child, wandering about the streets, living on the charity of a kind and good woman, herself poor, and how the Captain picked me up, educated me—and allowed me to go out into the world to seek my fortune; how I was to get home after five years, if I could, to report myself, and how my dream had been to go home, somehow, as a gentleman."

"Always the best of old Captains," said Celia, patting the old man's cheek.

"Nonsense, my dear," said the Captain. "Best of boys, you mean. Go on, Leonard."

"The Colonel will call on you to-morrow, sir. You will remember that he has been my constant and most steady friend and adviser throughout."

"Ay—ay," said the Captain. "I shall find something to say to him. Go on."

"Of all the fifty fellows that made up our mess when I got the colours there are not a dozen left now. The winters, the trench work, the nightwork, and its after effects, killed those whom the Russian bullets spared. They fell around me, and I passed through it unharmed; we were in almost everything, and I think every man in the regiment did his duty, sir, as well as any of your old sea captains."

"I doubt it not," said the Captain, "we belong to a fighting people."

"And so we finished that war and came home again. I was a Lieutenant, when we landed at this very port and marched up the street, colours flying, amid the cheers of the people. I looked out for you again, sir, and for you, Celia and Laddy, but could not see any of you in the crowd. It was very hard not to call and tell you of my fortune, harder still not to ask for news of you, but only three years of the five were passed, and I had my promise to keep. We went to Chobham, and from there, after six months' rest, were ordered out to India.

"We will talk about the Mutiny another time. I got my company, as I had got my step, six months' later, by death vacancies. The same good fortune followed me in India as in the Crimea. The sun did not strike me as it struck some of ours. I caught no fever or cholera which killed some, and I got through the fighting without a scratch; and the only thing that troubled me towards the end was the fear that I might not get home in time. We had a long and tedious passage, but we arrived at last, and I have kept my promise and my appointment, Celia."

After the first surprise the Captain took the stories of the fighting with unconcern. In the matter of battles he was a fatalist, like all men who have been in action. Every bullet has its billet; there is a time for every man; skulkers always get the worst of it—these were the simple axioms of his nautical creed. That Leonard should have gained a commission was to him so surprising an event as to swallow up all minor things. That he should have borne himself bravely was only what he expected, and that he should have been spared to return was the special act of Providence in return for many prayers for which he had given thanks already.

But to Celia—

'Twas passing strange,
'Twas pitiful, 'twas wondrous pitiful.

Leonard was no longer her old friend, her playmate, the boy to whom she had looked as a girl for protection, help, and guidance; he was now a man who had looked in the face of Death and quailed not. For the first time she talked with one who had fought in the way which had, so to speak, surrounded her later years.

She took the medals again, when Leonard completed his tale, and kissed them reverently with glittering eyes before she gave them back to him.

"Leonard," she said, "when Laddy and I used to wonder where you were, and what you were doing, we never thought of this."

"And when we worked ourselves up into rages about the poor army starving in the cold of the Crimea, Cis," I said, "we never thought that Leonard was among them."

"We were all blind bats," said the Captain, "not to guess where he would go and what he would become. The only true profession for a gentleman is the profession of arms. There's no opening for volunteers in the navy, as there used to be, more's the pity. Cloudesley Shovel got on in that way, and in the good old times, Leonard, you might have risen to be a First Lieutenant by this."

"Are you not satisfied, sir?" asked Leonard, with a smile.

"Satisfied, my boy! Celia, my dear, tell him for me what we think."

Celia blushed very prettily.

"We are so proud and happy, Leonard," she said, "that we hardly know what we are saying. In all our talks about you we never hoped that you would be able to tell such a tale as this."

"Never," I repeated.

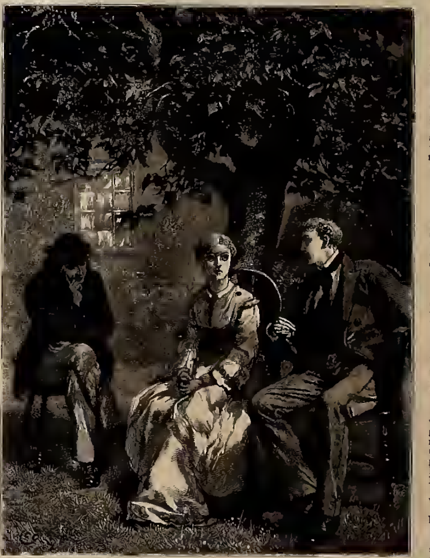
"We knew, did we not, Captain, that Leonard would bear himself bravely?"

"Ay, ay," said the Captain, laying his hand on Leonard's shoulder, "that we knew all along. We know sneaks and skulkers when we see them. Malingerers carry the truth in their faces, and by the same rule we know whom we can trust. Leonard and Laddy belong to them."

It was very good of the old fellow to say a word for me. Not that I wanted it, but it showed that he was anxious that I should not feel left out in the cold.

"Go on, Celia, my pretty," said the Captain; "is there any more to say?"

"No, sir," Celia replied. "Only—only——" And here her voice broke down, and her eyes filled with tears. "Only to thank God, Leonard, again and again, and all our lives, for keeping you safe through all these dangers, and for bringing you



We took our chairs out into the garden and sat, under the old mulberry tree, facing the milldam lake, and talked back to the Captain and to Laddy—and to Mrs. Jeram—and to me."

"Amen," said the Captain, "that's very well put, Celia, my dear, and if you were to stay here altogether—and I wish you would—I should promote you to be chaplain. And now, Mrs. Jeram, you and I had better go off to bed, and leave these young people to talk as long as they will. It's past twelve o'clock, ma'am. Kiss me, pretty. Laddy, we've got something to talk about now, you and I, in winter evenings. Leonard, my son, good night." He rested his hand on Leonard's head. "I am so glad, my lad; I am so glad."

They went away, and we three were left alone.

It was a night of full moon, without a cloud in the sky. We took our chairs into the garden and sat, under the old mulberry tree, facing the milldam lake, and talked.

We talked all the brief night, while the bright moon hid the stars, and we could only faintly distinguish Charles's Wain slowly moving round the Polar light, until the moon herself was paled by the grey of the early morning, and even long after the sun had lifted his head above the sky, and was pouring upon the sheet of water, making the little island redoubt upon it stand out clear cut against the sky, with a foreground of deep black shade.

What had we to talk about? Our hearts burned within us, even like those of the Disciples at Emmaus. We three who had grown up together and loved each other,—we were met again, and all in early man and womanhood, and we loved each other still. I, with my jealous eye, watched Celia, and could see the sweet shy look that told me, what indeed I knew before, how only a word was wanted to flash a spark into a flame, how but a touch was needed before a maiden would yield. I saw, too, Leonard's eyes stealing every moment to rest upon her sweet face. It was with a natural pang that I saw this. Nobody knew better than I that Celia could be nothing to me but my dear sister, my true and most trusted friend. I had battled with my passion, and it was dead. Now, I was ashamed of it. Who but Leonard was worthy of that sweet girl? She had no fault, nor has she any still, in my eyes. She is altogether incomparable. And who but Leonard, our hero, our Perseus, was fit to claim her for his own, love her, marry her, and keep her safe in his arms? Did I, sometimes, have thoughts, angry thoughts, of what might have been? Perhaps, we are but human; but on the whole I had learned by that time to look on Celia as my sister.

From time to time Leonard asked us about ourselves. We fenced with his question. It was not the season to parade Celia's troubles, or mine. We were there to listen to his story, to be gladdened by his successes. What good to be talking of ourselves when every moment seemed sacred to his welcome home? The broad daylight found us still talking. Celia's eyes were brighter, her cheek a little paler. Leonard was handsomer, I think, by day than he had seemed by the light of our modest pair of candles. I went to the larder, and found there a whole chicken, with the Captain's second bottle of champagne, and we had a late supper, or an early breakfast, at four, with no one to look at us but the sparrows, who peeped over the housetops and chirped to each other that there would be a most unusual and festive chance in the way of crumbs as soon as the foolish humans should go to bed.

We should have sat till breakfast time but that Leonard looked at his watch and sprang to his feet.

"Cis," he cried, quite in his old tones, "do you know what time it is? Half-past five. You must go to bed, if only for a couple of hours. Good night—till nine o'clock." He held her hand in his. "And—and—look in your glass when you go to your room—and think if I could have expected our little Cis to grow into—what you see there."

She shook her head, but did not answer, only holding out her hand timidly. But she was not displeased.

Then she ran away and left us.

"Laddy, old boy," said Leonard, "one doesn't come home to be made much of every day. I can't sleep if I go to bed. What are we to do?"

"Let us go out to the Castle and bathe, and be back by eight when the Captain gets up."

"We will, Laddy. How splendid the dear old Captain is looking! Is there anybody like him in the world, I wonder? And Celia——" Here he stopped. "You remember what I told you, Laddy, when I went away? Well, I have never forgotten it, and I mean it more than ever."

CHAPTER XXXII.

A FRIENDLY CHAT

"How fresh it is! And how jolly to be back in the old place!" Leonard cried, as we walked out into the silent streets.

Half-past five. The best part of the summer day. There was no one stirring yet, save here and there an early housemaid brushing away the morning dew upon the doorstep. Our feet echoed on the pavement with a clatter from wall to wall as if of many hundred feet, and when we spoke it was as if our voices were too loud as they reverberated along the houses. All just as it had been of old so many times when we two boys had run along the streets at six for a swim in the sea before school. Nothing changed save that the boy who used to run and jump, shouting in the overflow of strength and spirits, rejoicing in the breath of life, was become the splendid fellow who strode at my side. Of course I was just the same. A sleeping city and two boys going out to bathe. Nothing changed. The town asleep, and my brain filled with all sorts of weird fancies. I have read of deserted and ruined cities in the far east Syrian plains, on the edge of the great and terrible wilderness where the lion of prophecy roams round the heaps of Kouyounjik. Some of these cities still stand, with their rooms and their staircases perfect as when the terrified inhabitants fled before some conquering Shalmaneser who came from the mysterious East destroying as he went. Now there is not a single soul left to mourn over the greatness of the past. You may hear the cry of the lizard, the shrill voice of the cigale; your feet echo as you stride along the silent footway, and you speak in a whisper, for this is an image of Death the conqueror. As I go along with Leonard I somehow think of these old ruins. There is no connection between a ruined Syrian city and a sleeping modern town, except the stillness which smites the soul as you pass along deserted pavements between houses closed and barred, which might be houses bereft of their inhabitants, soulless, empty, haunted. Within, the children lying asleep; the little faces flushed with sleep, and the little limbs tossed carelessly upon the sheets, the wondering eyes just about to waken for the glories and fresh joys of another day. Within, the young men and the maidens, the old men and the ancient dames, each wrapped in the solemn loneliness of sleep, when spirits even of lovers dwell apart while the busy fingers of the restless Fates are weaving the many-coloured web and weft of life's short story. What stories behind those shutters! What dreams in those white-blinded rooms! What babble of infant voices to welcome the new-born day!

"What are you thinking of, Laddy? Dreamer, your eyes are always far away. This is just what we used to do years ago. Up at six and out across the common for a bathe! And you always dreaming! Look! there is the early bird. Good morning, Molly. Fine morning for door-steps—good for the complexion."

"Get along o' your nonsense," said Molly, not displeased.

"She's quite right; you are an officer now, Leonard, and it can't be allowed any more."

"Where is your mop, Molly?" he went on, with his light, boyish laugh.

"Mops have gone out," I replied; "so have pattens."

"Have they, really? Not the dear old mop that they used to trundle up and down their arms? I'm sorry for it, Laddy. The domestic mop used to be as good a weapon for the defence of housemaidenhood as any. And in a seaport town, too. Many is the time I have seen a too demonstrative Jack discomfited by a timely dab in the face from a dripping mop. Slaps and scratches are poor things compared with a dollop of wet mop. Even a Billingsgate broadside cannot be so effective. Something might be done, I dare say, with a garden hose, but, after all, nothing like a mop and a bucket. And even pattens gone, too,—the tinkling patten. I wonder no lovesick poet ever celebrated the musical clatter on the stones of the housemaid's pattens. These are the losses of civilisation, Laddy."

We passed through the gate, our heels clanking across the iron drawbridge. Beyond the bridge, and between the walls and the advanced works, was the guard house, where stood a sentry, who saluted us with as much astonishment as discipline would allow, expressed upon a not remarkably mobile set of features. Why should an officer, who was not obliged to stand at a sentry box during the small hours, be up and out so early? What good, in such a case, of being an officer at all?

And then we passed the awkward squad on their way to goose-step drill. They saluted, too, as we passed. The salute of those days was a thing of ceremony—extension of right arm, doubling of right elbow, hand square to the forehead, return double, drop of right arm. The Marines did it best, regulating the motions from a slovenly and irregular movement of the arm for a middy or a mate to a precise and clearly directed six-fold ceremonial, ending with a resonant slap of the right leg, for superior rank. They knew, the Marines, how to signify respect to rank. Any popular officer, particularly if he was also an Admiral, was saluted as he went down the street with a regular Kentish fire of open-handed slaps of right legs. That also is a thing of the past.

"I was like those honest fellows once," said our young Captain, gravely. "One of the awkward squad; sentry in the barracks; one of the rank and file; standing up to be drilled and ordered. Well; it's not a bad thing for a man."

"And the officers of the regiment, Leonard;—did that make any difference?"

"I became at once one of themselves—a brother officer. What else could their treatment be? I asked the Colonel, as a personal favour, to tell them who I was. Every regiment has its 'rankers'—every ranker has his story. I should be a snob if I were ashamed of having risen."

We crossed the broad common, where all the old furze had by this time been cut down and cleared away to make room for military evolutions; and we came to the castle standing upon the edge of the sea. There was not a soul upon the beach, not even our old friend the cursing coastguard; we sat down under the slope of stone, for it was now low tide, and made ready for a dip.

"There go the last fumes of last night's long talk. Sitting up all night, even with Celia, does fog the brain a bit." Thus Leonard, coming out of the water all glorious like Apollo. I suppose it is because I am so unshapely that I think so much of beauty of form. Then we dressed, and Leonard took out a cigar-case, to my astonishment, for somehow I had never thought of him in connection with tobacco—heroes of imagination neither smoke nor drink wine, as we all know—and then lying back on the shingle, he began to talk lazily.

"I am rather tired of telling about myself, Laddy; it is your turn now."

Of course I knew it was coming, sooner or later.

"You do not expect to hear much about me," I said. "I am organist at St. Faith's; that is my official position, and it brings me in six-and-twenty pounds a year. For ten shillings a week I hear three services on Sunday and two in the week."

"Poor old boy!" said Leonard. "Can't something better be got?"

"I rather like the church work. Then I give lessons in music and singing, and out of them I make about two hundred a year more."

"I see. But the house does not seem much improved by this enormous accession of wealth."

"No. The fact is, Leonard, that the Captain takes all the money, and I never ask what he does with it. If I made a thousand a year I am certain that extravagant old man would absorb it all."

"Ah! The crafty old Captain! Do you think he invests it in Russian stock or Turkish bonds?"

"No. I think he gives it away. Where does he go when every morning he disappears for three hours? Answer me that, Captain Leonard."

"He always did it and he always will. He is an incorrigible old mystery."

"In the afternoon he stays at home, unless it is half-holiday, when he goes out on the common to see the boys play, and talk to them with his hands behind his back. To be sure he knows every boy in the town."

Leonard laughed.

"I remember an incident or two—years ago—when we were children in the house. There was a woman—she had black hair, I know—and she used to come in the evening and ask for money. I suppose, from my personal experience, that she was drunk one night when she came, and went on—I forget what about—like another Jezebel. She wanted money, and the Captain was so upset by her inconsiderate conduct that he—behaved as the Captain always does."

"What was that?"

"Went to the Sailing Directions. Remembered that every sinner had to be forgiven at least seventy times seven, and so added one more to her score, which I should say must have already reached a pretty high total. He gives his money all away, Laddy, and if I were you I would not work too hard, because he will only give yours away too. The kind old man! What else have you to tell us about yourself?"

"I've been taking care of Cis," I said, evading the difficulty.

"So I saw last night. Good care, Laddy. There never was a better brother than you."

But he did not know all; and I could not tell him how near I had been, once, to betraying his trust.

"Cis—Celia—Oh! Laddy!" He threw away the cigar and started to his feet, gazing out to sea. "Did Heaven ever make a sweeter girl? Did you watch her face last night? And her eyes, how they softened and brightened!"

"Am I blind, Leonard?"

"Did you see how she lit up with pity and sympathy? Laddy, I must win that girl or I shall not care what happens.

"I have never ceased thinking of her," he went on; "never since I left you five years ago. To be sure, when I was a private soldier, or even a non-commissioned officer, it seemed too absurd to think of her, but when my promotion came then the old thoughts revived. All through the war I thought of her. In those dreadful nights when we sat and slept in the trenches, knee-deep in trampled mud and melting snow, I used to let my thoughts wander back to this old place. Always in Celia's Arbour, lying beneath the elms; play-acting beside the gun; running up and down the slopes with little Cis, wondering what she was like. You with her too, of course, with your great dreamy eyes and trusty face—Laddy and Cis. I suppose it was sentimental, all of it; but I am different from most men. There is no family life for you and me to look back on except that. In those days—I am not boasting—I had no fear, because it seemed as if every day brought me nearer to her, and higher up the ladder. In case of death I had a letter written to the Captain, enclosing one for you and one for Celia, telling you all about it. But I did not die. Then I had to come home and be near you, within a hundred miles, and yet not go to see you; that was very hard. When India came I lost my old fearlessness, and began to be anxious. It was want of faith, I suppose. At all events I escaped, and came out of the whole racket unwounded. Laddy, I should be worse than an infidel," he added, solemnly, "if I did not see in my five years of fortune the protection of the Lord."

"We pray—we who stay at home—for the safety of those who go abroad; and perhaps our prayers are sometimes granted. Is that sentiment, too?" I asked.

He was silent for a little space; then he shook himself as one who would change the current of his thoughts.

"Let us get back, old boy; the Captain will be up by this time. And now tell me more about yourself; there must be more to tell than that you have become a musician. Haven't you fallen in love, Laddy?"

"Fallen in love! Who is there to fall in love with a man like me? Look at my shadow, Leonard."

It was a gruesome-looking shadow, with high back and head thrust forward. I think that if Peter Schlemihl had been hump-backed he would have made an easier bargain for the rolling up and putting away of his shadow. A small annuity, paid quarterly, would have been considered ample on the part of the purchaser. And as for awkward questions—well—there are secrets in every family, and it would soon be understood that the absence of shadow must not be remarked upon. I only know that my own was a constant shame and humiliation to me. Unless I walked with my face to the sun there was no getting out of the deformity.

"Bah! You and your shadow. Laddy, look in the glass. You have eyes that would steal away the heart of Penelope, and a musical voice, and you are a genius."

"Nonsense. I am only a plain musician, and as for falling in love, have I not been every day with Celia? How could I fall in love with any other girl when I had known her?"

"That is true," he said reflectively. "That is quite true. Who could? She is altogether sweet and lovely. After dreaming of her every day for five years I am afraid of her. And you have been with her, actually with her, for five years."

I think he guessed my secret, for he laid his hand affectionately on my shoulder.

"Cis and I are brother and sister," I said; "that you know very well. But you are right to be afraid of her. Men ought to be afraid of such a girl. Only the priest, you know," I added, following up a little train of allegory that arose in my mind, "can touch the Ark of the Lord."

"You mean——"

"I mean that a man ought to be holy before he ventures upon holy ground."

"Yes; you are a Puritan, Laddy, but you are quite right. I have been saying to myself ever since she left us, 'She is only a woman after all.' And yet that does not seem to bring her any closer to me. It would bring all other women closer—but not Celia."

"She is only a woman to two men, Leonard, and to those two a woman of flesh and blood, with all sorts of hopes and fancies. One of these is myself, her brother, and the other—will be the man she loves. But there is a great trouble, and you ought to learn what it is."

I told him, in as few words as I could manage, part of the story. It seemed a breach of trust to tell him what I knew—though Celia only feared it—that this German had a hold upon Mr. Tyrrell which he threatened to use; but I was obliged to let him understand that Mr. Tyrrell wished her to accept the man, and I told how Celia suffered from the assiduity with which he followed her about, went to church with her, was everywhere seen with her, and how he hoped gradually to overcome, by quiet perseverance, the dislike which she, as well as her friends, would at first show to the marriage.

"He has not yet pressed for a reply," I concluded. "But he will very soon now."

"Why now?" I omit the remarks (which were un-Christian) made by Leonard during my narrative.

"Because you have come home. Because he will find out that Celia sat up all night with us talking. Because he will see her looking happier and brighter, and will suspect the cause."

"The cause, Laddy? Do you mean——"

"I mean nothing but that Celia is glad to see you back again, and if you expected anything less you must be very forgetful of little Cis Tyrrell. If you expected anything more, Leonard—why—perhaps you had better speak to her yourself."

"I remember Herr Räumer," Leonard went on. "He was always hanging about the streets with his blue spectacles and his big white moustache. I remember him almost as early as I remember anything. They used to say he was an exile from Germany for Republican opinions. During that year I spent learning French and Russian in the Polish Barracks he took an opportunity of speaking to me, was very friendly once or twice, and took a great interest in the Poles. I remember he wanted to know what they talked about. I wonder if he is a Russian spy?"

"Nonsense, Leonard. He dislikes the Russians."

"Does he? My dear Laddy, you know nothing about the country whose people are so pleasant, and whose government is so detestable. Russian spies are everywhere. The Russian Secret Service is like a great net spread over the whole world; they are the Jesuits of politics. Herr Räumer may not be one of the black gang, but he may be; and if he isn't, I should like to find out what keeps a German in this place, where we have got a great dockyard, and where improvements and new inventions are always being tried and talked of, where there are several regiments, half our fleet, and a lot of Poles. Do you think it is love of the town?"

"I suppose he is used to it," I said.

"What kind of man is he?"

"He is a cynic. He professes to live for his own enjoyment, and nothing else. Says the rest is humbug. I have never heard him say a generous thing, or acknowledge a generous motive. Yet he talks well, and one likes to be with him."

"I shall call upon him," said Leonard. "As for his own enjoyment and the selfish theory of philosophy, a good many Germans affect that kind of thing. They think it is philosophical and intellectual, and above their fellow creatures, to be wrapped in a cloak of pure selfishness. Well, Laddy, unless Celia wishes it——"

"She does not wish it."

"She shall not throw herself away upon this man. Great Heavens! my beautiful Celia," he said, "my beautiful Celia, to be thrown to an old——" He checked himself. "No use getting angry. But if there is no other way of stopping it, we'll carry her off, Laddy, you and I together, and stand the racket afterwards. I can't very well call him out and shoot him. I don't mean that I see at present how it is to be prevented, but we will find out."

"Perseus," I said, "had to borrow of other people two or three little things to help him when he went on that expedition of his. You had better take the Captain, as well as myself, into your confidence. Here we are at home, and there is the jolly old Captain at the door, beaming on us like the morning sun."

"Come in, boys," he shouted, "come in to breakfast. Celia is ready, and so am I. Ho! Ho! I am so glad, Leonard. I am so glad."

(To be continued)

*LIFE OF THE PRINCE CONSORT

Whether it be due to accident or design, there is no doubt that the volume here given to us appears just at the right moment, embracing as it does that period of the Prince Consort's life from the beginning of 1854 to the close of 1856, when as now the Eastern Question in its various aspects was the subject foremost in the thoughts of all men. The Prince's papers on the Eastern Question, placed by Her Majesty at Mr. Martin's disposal, fill no less than fifty folio volumes, and we can feel nothing but gratitude to the biographer for the copious selections from those documents, which enable us on matters of such vital importance to the interests of this country to learn the opinions of one to whom its welfare and honour were so precious—of one, moreover, as Mr. Martin justly says, "whose political sagacity was leant upon by some of the greatest and most experienced statesmen of his age." It is impossible to rise from the study of this volume without feelings of even enhanced respect and admiration for the illustrious and high-minded Prince, who shows himself to us, in the letters and memoranda which fill so many of its pages, a statesman of the very highest order, brave, wise, and clear-sighted, wholly free from the influence of passion or prejudice, but none the less resolute for his habitual calm. He shows himself, also, conspicuously an English statesman, one with whom "British interests" always stood first; and it is the more important to note this fact on account of the groundless and absurd rumours which, as some of us may remember, were current during the Crimean campaigns, that Prince Albert's sympathies with the Court of Berlin, then completely under Russian influences, led him to be indifferent, if not absolutely hostile, to our success in the war. It is with reference to this "monstrous aberration" of the public judgment that the Prince writes, in a memorandum here published, "I must rest mainly upon a good conscience, and the belief that, during the fifteen years of my connection with this country, I had not given a human soul the means of imputing to me the want of sincerity or patriotism." It was not sympathy with Turkey that caused the Prince to be an advocate for the war of 1854; he regarded it as necessary "for the vindication of the public law of Europe," and as a check to the restless ambition of Russia. "The overthrow of Turkey by Russia," he wrote at the time to Baron Stockmar, "no English statesman could view with equanimity; public opinion would have flung him to the winds like chaff." His own carefully-considered view of Russian policy would seem to have agreed with that expressed in the House of Lords by the late Lord Derby in 1854:—"For the last 150 years it has been a policy of gradual aggression—not a policy of conquest, but of aggression. It has never proceeded by storm, but by sap and mine." "Whether the Turkish Empire as such will be able to maintain its existence or not," writes the Prince in a memorandum of 8th March, 1854, "is not the question; and it would be useless to seek to determine this question by anticipation. But it is quite certain that, if Europe maintains a united front against Russia, this solution must be in accordance with European interests, because it makes the realisation of the schemes of Russia impossible." But it is impossible for us, in the few lines at our disposal, to do justice to the clear-sightedness and soundness of judgment displayed by the Prince at every crisis of the contest, from its beginning to its close.

The Prince Consort's account of the impression produced upon him by the Emperor Louis Napoleon, upon first making his acquaintance when visiting him at his request at the Camp at Boulogne in the summer of 1854, is highly interesting, and shows sometimes an insight almost prophetical in character. "The Emperor," he says, "appeared quiet and indolent from constitution, not easily excited, but gay and humorous when at his ease." He was struck by Louis Napoleon's frankness and evident sincerity of speech, and writes that "he is decidedly benevolent, and anxious for the good of his people; but has, like all rulers before him, a bad opinion of their political capacity." And then, as if with a prevision of the disasters under which the Second Empire was finally to sink, the Prince adds: "He will be exposed to one danger in his attempt at governing solely by himself, which has befallen almost every absolute monarch—that he will be crushed under the weight of a mass of unimportant details of business, whilst the real direction of affairs may be filched from him by his irresponsible Ministers." We hear much more concerning both the Emperor and the Empress Eugénie in an account we have here of their visit to Windsor from the pages of Her Majesty's private diary. The Emperor is spoken of as "very quiet and amiable, and easy to get on with . . . full of tact"—"il ne fait pas des phrases." And after her visit to him in Paris her Majesty writes: "I know few people whom I have felt involuntarily more inclined to confide in and speak unreservedly to—I should not fear saying anything to him. I felt—I do not know how to express it—safe with him." The Empress is characterised in the same pages as "full of courage and spirit, and yet so gentle, with such innocence and enjouement that the ensemble is most charming." And again, "Her manner is the most perfect that I have ever seen—so gentle, and graceful, and kind, the courtesy so charming, and so modest and retiring withal." We should like to dwell on the deep sympathy of the Queen and the Prince with the triumphs and sufferings of the troops in the Crimea, on the Prince's valuable services in the cause of army organisation and reform, and on many other topics of interest we are continually coming upon in the volume; but we have already exceeded our limits, and must conclude by saying that it throws a light upon an eventful—and we may add instructive—period of our history which probably could not have been obtained in its fulness from any less exalted source.

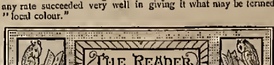
---

* "The Life of H.R.H. the Prince Consort." By Theodore Martin (Vol. III.: Smith and Elder).

"The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor'" (3 vols.: Sampson Low, Marston, and Co.).—We can have no hesitation in pronouncing this narrative of "the mutiny of the crew" of the Grosvenor, "and the loss of the ship when trying to make the Bermudas," the most masterly piece of work as a novel of adventure that we have come upon for many a day. We cannot, of course, take it upon ourselves to vouch for the correctness of the nautical details that so largely abound in its pages, still, they seem to come from an expert, and, at any rate, add much to the effect of the book. But the interest of the tale we may frankly call absorbing—sometimes almost uncomfortably so—and it is admirably sustained from first to last. The mutiny of the crew of the Grosvenor—who seem to have been well-intentioned and tractable enough, had they been fairly dealt with—is due to their villanous treatment in the matter of food. The ship is provisioned with pork and biscuit bought cheap at a dockyard sale of rotten stores by order of the Admiralty, and the captain, a harsh and violent man, to advance his own interests with the owners, has undertaken that the men shall put up with this nauseating fare until the vessel reaches Valparaiso. But when the crew, driven at last to madness by semi-starvation and incessant bullying, have risen in mutiny in the Mid-Atlantic and killed the captain and chief mate, the consciousness of their guilt changes them into a set of desperadoes, ready for any farther crime that may secure them from the penalties they know they have already incurred. They spare Edward Royle, the second mate, who tells the story, not so much because he has always stood their friend as far as his duty permitted, as because they know he is the only man on board capable of navigating the ship; and he consents to take the command with which they propose to invest him chiefly for the sake of the helpless passengers who are dependent solely on his protection, the old gentleman and his daughter, whom, almost in defiance of the captain, he has rescued from a water-logged wreck, only a few hours before the mutiny. Here the sagacious reader will see are all the elements for a most stirring tale; and we do not think they could have been more deftly and effectively handled than they are by the author. The devices to which Royle and the faithful boatswain—a very fine character—aided by Mary Robertson, who turns out a perfect heroine, though always gentle and womanly, resort to save their lives from the murderous scheme of the crew, the final hand-to-hand fight with the mutineers, and the furious storm through which the gallant ship, though manned only by four hands, one of them nearly helpless through clumsiness and terror, rides triumphantly till she at last springs a leak, are all told with marvellous force and spirit; and yet in a matter-of-fact and simple way that serves all the better to bring out the real horrors of the scenes through which we pass. The love that springs up between Mary and her young protector makes a very pretty and natural bit of romance, and is treated just as it should have been. The author's turn for descriptions of sea-scenery in storm or calm we could only do justice to by quotations for which we have not room, so can only give a hearty recommendation to readers to make acquaintance with them and the rest of this truly excellent story for themselves.

"Heir to Two Fortunes," by the author of "The Life of the Moselle" (3 vols.: Remington and Co.).—There is a good deal of amusement to be found here and there in this story; but it is rambling, made up out of episodes with little or no connection with each other, and altogether innocent of plot. We are introduced to the hero in early boyhood, and follow him to maturity; taking leave of him at the instant when he unexpectedly becomes the possessor of a fortune of 100,000*l.*, having just before lost by sudden death the girl whose love made life in his eyes worth living. The tragic catastrophe is simply "sprung upon" us at the last moment, and is jarringly out of keeping with the tone of the rest of the book. The best chapters in it, we think, are those that relate the boyish exploits and school troubles of little Seton Herold and his trusty friend and ally, Gus Tarleton. But the complicated law-suit which Seton, unfortunately for himself, is led to engage in, is by no means badly told, and gives occasion for some humorous sketches of members of the legal profession. The book, though of no special importance, is far from being a failure in its way, and, but for the glaring artistic blunder—we might almost say outrage—of its finale, we might perhaps have thought better of it than we do.

"Jaspar Deane, Wood-Carver of St. Paul's," by John Saunders, author of "Israel Mort, Overman," &c. (Sampson Low, Marston and Co.)—This is a story of youthful genius struggling with adversity, and finally triumphing over all the obstacles that have barred the road to recognition and success, pretty enough after a fashion, but not at all the kind of work we are accustomed to have from Mr. Saunders. It gives one the impression of having been written in moments of relaxation from graver labours. The story is one of the days of Sir Christopher Wren and the rebuilding of St. Paul's, and Mr. Saunders has at any rate succeeded very well in giving it what may be termed "local colour."



"Venise," par Ch. Yriarte (Rothschild, Paris; Dulau and Co., London).—It is only in "the fitness of things" that the city of Maitre Jenson and the Aldi should receive the honour of so sumptuous a chef d'œuvre of typography and engraving as this, of which we have now to acknowledge the second and concluding volume. Having disposed in his earlier chapters of the history and architecture of the Queen of the Adriatic, M. Yriarte now describes art, industry, and life in Venice as they were in the zenith of her greatness, or as they may even yet be seen in forms which have survived the slow decline of the last three centuries. Her school of painting, her famous printers, her workers in glass, in lace, in medals, the costumes of her ancient merchant princes and her fair dames of grand or demi-monde, the scenes that were or are to be encountered by her canals and lagoons, form subjects of successive chapters, each in its kind a compact and richly illustrated monograph. M. Yriarte's text, though aiming rather at popular description than minute research, is throughout the work of a master of his subject. More especially does it set clearly before the reader that union of the Oriental with the Latin genius which gives to all Venetian art its distinctive character—the charm that fully satisfies the sense while failing, as a rule, to touch the deeper springs of the intellect or emotions. The illustrations, however, are the great attraction of the work, and of these it is difficult to speak too favourably; whether we turn to the excellent engravings of the great works of Titian and Veronese to the drawings of the dainty glass-work of Murano, of the old "Venice point" for which even Titian did not disdain to trace a pattern, of the type, the binding, the decorated borders that issued from the hands of Aldus or the De Gregoris, or to the views of grand processions of the Doges, of old and modern scenes by moonlight on the Lido or at the close of the performances at the Fenice. Few even among our best illustrated books maintain the same high level so successfully throughout.

"The Voyage of the Challenger: the Atlantic," by Sir Wyville Thomson (2 vols.: Macmillan and Co.), or "the general results of the first and fourth years (1873 and 1876) of the exploring voyage of H.M.S. Challenger," may seem a little formidable to the general reader. To the scientific, and more especially to those whose favourite field of observation lies among the fauna of the lower deeps and oozy floor of the great ocean, its accurate descriptions and really admirable drawings of the new sponges, corals, foraminiferæ, &c., which the trawl-net was constantly bringing to the surface would alone make it a most delightful study. It is only, as will be seen, with the Atlantic cruises of the Challenger that Sir W. Thomson deals at present—with the outward voyages in zig-zag, from Teneriffe to the West Indian seas and the line of the Gulf Stream, from the Bermudas back to the Azores, from the Azores to Brazil, and across once more to Tristan d'Acunha and the Cape, and with the return cruise in 1876 from the Falklands by Ascension Isle for home. Our knowledge of the ocean world has been vastly modified since first—scarcely ten years ago—expeditions like that of the Challenger were set on foot. We have learned to regard its silent depths as the homes of countless living things akin in form to the creatures of previous geological epochs, its lonely islets as the last-known habitats of botanical species of an earlier era; to recognise in the great Atlantic or the still vaster North Pacific not independent oceans, but "tongues of water" projected forth from the great Southern water-hemisphere; to classify their inmates according to the depths at which they live, or the warmth or coldness of the strata they inhabit. Not the least interesting chapter indeed of Sir Wyville Thomson's volume is that which describes the delicate instruments by which such knowledge has been made possible; while next in attraction for less ardent students must rank the occasional good descriptions of places touched at on the way—of the Falkland Islands with their curious "stone rivers," of Ascension Isle, or, best of all, of the highly curious Bermuda group. We should add that though the fauna of the sea are decidedly the specialty of the work, for those who love to work their way through diagrams of depths and temperatures and isotherms, there are enough of these as well to give a very complete idea of the Atlantic strata between 40° N. and 40° S.

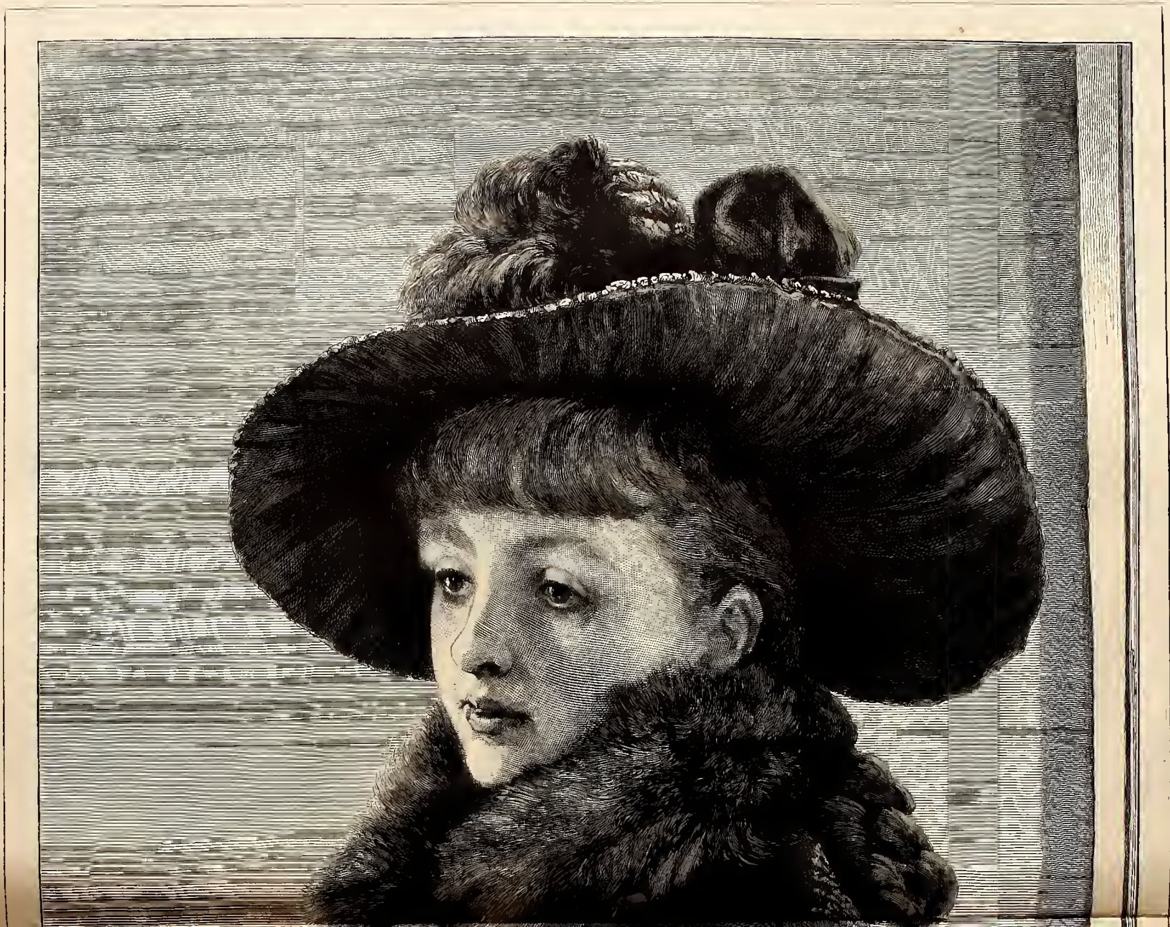
For a more complete treatise on the last-mentioned subject—a general survey of depths, and temperatures, and ocean currents, and of all that as yet is known or guessed about their causes and effects—we may turn to an essay by another member of the Challenger staff, the "Thalassa" of Mr. J. J. Wild (Marcus Ward and Co.). Based mainly on the Challenger explorations, yet taking due account as well of the kindred work of German, Norwegian, and U.S. surveying parties in the last few years, "Thalassa" gives us,.in a series of coloured diagrams, the contour, temperature, and currents of the great ocean basins of the world, with the various theories to which their examination seems to lead—theories which may even modify to some extent the favourite doctrines of the geologist. Readers who love to mount from careful registers of actual observations to speculations quaint and fascinating as to the formation of new lands, and the drying up of ancient seas in obedience to the tendency of the Northern Hemisphere to become all land and the Southern Hemisphere all ocean, or who would learn what little things, where winds and currents are concerned, can arrest the working of general laws, will be slow to weary of this pretty volume.

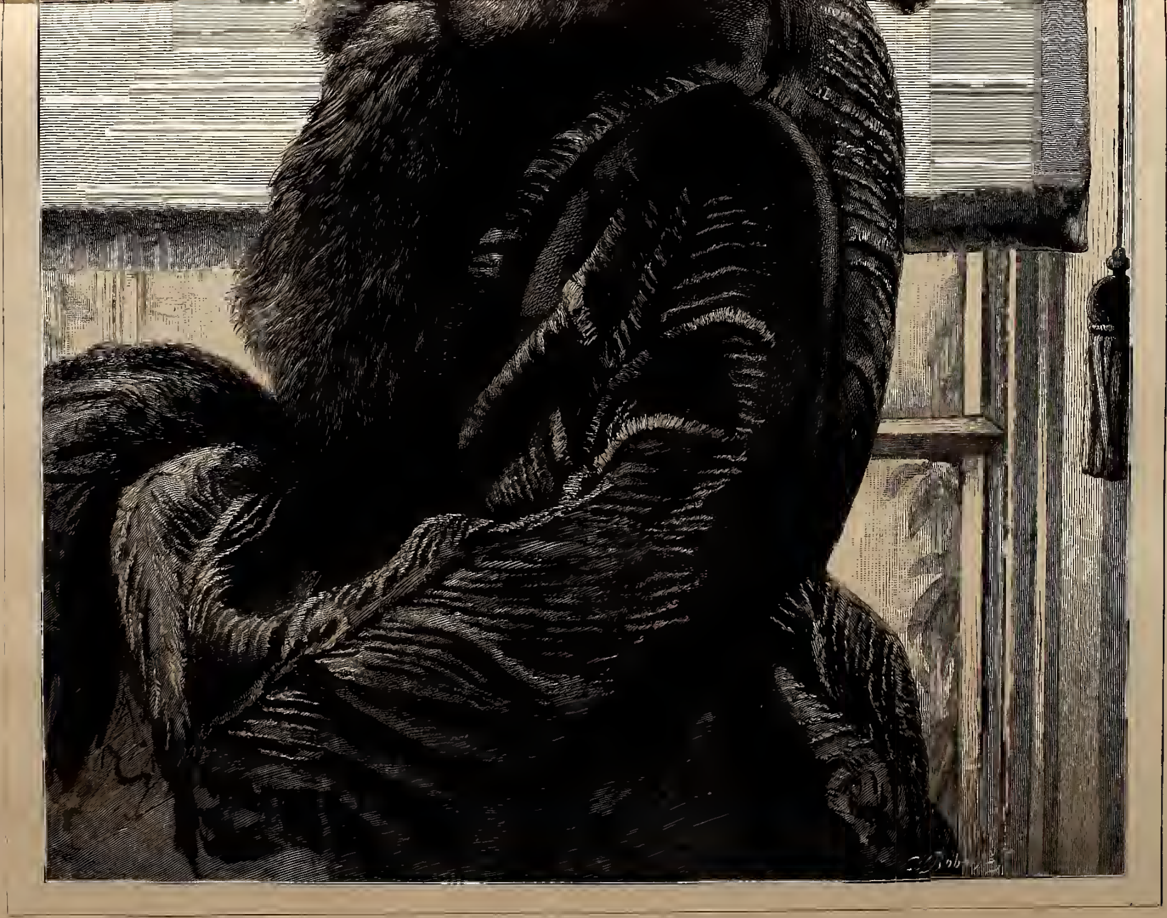
A new edition—the fifth—of Mr. C. Dudley Warner's "In the Levant" (Sampson Low and Co.), that liveliest of Yankee books about Palestine, Cyprus, Greece, and Constantinople, scarcely needs a word of introduction. Better accounts of ruins and holy places might easily be named. Few even approach its humorously faithful pictures of the strange folk who inhabit Eastern lands and the mixed crowd who go Eastwards to see them. If a book's raison d'être is to amuse, Mr. Warner's ought to live through many more editions.

"Selections," as a rule, are dreary things; but "Selections from the Writings of 'The Author of the Schönberg-Cotta Family,'" by a Friend (Dalby, Isbister, and Co.), have some pretence to be admitted as exceptions. Neatly classified, and not too "scrappy," they are good examples of the author's skill in reproducing for her readers' benefit the events and characters of other days, no less than of the tender sympathy and spiritual insight she can bring to bear on points of human duty, difficulty, and hope. The volume is quite worth dipping into for itself. It will perhaps still more fulfil its end by inducing many to refer to the works from which it takes its extracts.

A new edition, after many years, of "The Poetical Works of Thomas Cooper" (Hodder and Stoughton)—amended slightly in parts where the language of the ex-Chartist prisoner and sceptic jarred on the ears of the present lecturer on Christian evidences—will be not unwelcome, whether for its own intrinsic merits or as the work of a self-taught man and political prisoner in days when "the wrongs of the poor" and "the tyranny of the rich" were something more than phrases to round a sentence. For vigour of fancy and power of expression the "Purgatory of Suicides" has better claims to live than most of the second-class poetry of the age.

We feel some distrust of a critic who is always on his knees, and Mr. G. Barnett Smith, author of "Shelley: a Critical Biography" (D. Douglas, Edinburgh), between ecstatic admiration for Shelley as he was, an overwhelming sense of what he might





"IN WINTER TIME"

FROM THE PICTURE BY J. TISSOT, EXHIBITED AT THE GROSVENOR GALLERY have been had he lived, and a general horror of all who crossed his idol's path, hardly ever seems to rise from this posture of humility. Nor does his volume give us much that is very new either in the way of criticism or facts. The latter, it is true, are not badly put, and the former shows a just appreciation of the poems in which Shelley put forth his highest power. But on neither does Mr. Smith throw any very striking light, while the general atmosphere of eulogy is simply stifling.

Those who think précis-writing comes by nature should consult Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse's "Précis-Book" (Crosby Lockwood and Co.), a graduated series of exercises in précis-making, from the short abstract of the simple official letter to the careful analysis of some long and involved extract of poetry or prose. Invaluable to the student who is training for competitive examinations, "The Précis-Book" will be of use to all who seek a short, if toilsome road, to brevity and clearness of expression.

"A Dictionary of English Literature," by W. Davenport Adams (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin), is a book of reference of a most agreeable, and in many respects a novel class. It contains names of authors and their works, titles of poems, plays, novels, &c., familiar phrases and quotations in order of the "first striking word," famous characters in poetry and fiction, lists of noms de plume and special articles on the novel, the sonnet, the drama, &c., all ranged in alphabetical order, and varying from the dry reference to the pleasantly written critique. If fault there be it is that some names and subjects seem unduly favoured, that Swinburne, for instance, gets two columns, and Browning twenty lines, and that space which might be better filled is sometimes taken up with minute descriptions of unimportant characters in contemporary works of fiction. Thus under "Barnaby" we have ten lines for "B. Rudge," and five for Mrs. Trollope's Widow Barnaby, and none for "Drunken Barnabee" and his "Itinerary," the only one, after all, of the three for which the ordinary reader might require a reference.

From Messrs. De la Rue and Co. we have received specimen copies of their new publications for Christmas, comprising diaries, calendars of various kinds, and Christmas Cards. All these productions are distinguished for the solid workmanship as well as elegance for which this firm is justly celebrated.

From Messrs. Letts, Son, and Co. we have received a number of diaries of all shapes and sizes suitable both for business and for domestic purposes; from Messrs. Bemrose and Sons we have specimens of date calendars; from Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co. we have received a most choice collection of beautiful Christmas cards, and a series of ornamental placards (for placing on walls), bearing suitable inscriptions and texts for Christmas and the New Year; from Messrs. A. Ackermann and Co. we have specimens of Prang's American Christmas cards. We have also to acknowledge Whitaker's Almanac, a wonderful shillingsworth; and an old friend, Punch's Pocket Book, containing its usual agreeable mixture of gravity and gaiety.

Mr. Thorburn, of 22, Paternoster Row, sends us a packet of invitation notepaper and envelopes embellished with an artistic group of young people dancing, from a design by his father, Mr. Robert Thorburn, A.R.A.

◆

CHRISTMAS BOOKS

V.

"THE HISTORY OF THE IMPERIAL ASSEMBLAGE AT DELHI" (Longmans).—Mr. Talboys Wheeler has put together a gorgeous volume of photographic portraits, coloured pictures, maps, and plans, accompanied by historical sketches of India and her princes, both past and present. The volume does not claim to be an official narrative of the great event which took place last New Year's Day; but it is a fitting memorial of what in later times may come to be regarded even more than it is in the present day, as one of the most important historical events in the history of India during the present century.

"Examples of Contemporary Art" (Chatto and Windus) is a selection of etchings from representative works by living English and foreign artists, culled from the pages of "L'Art." They are splendid specimens of the etcher's art, from the delicious rendering of Burne-Jones's "Beguiling of Merlin," from the Grosvenor Gallery, to the powerful "Moors Playing with a Vulture," by Fortuny, the engraving of which was exhibited in the last Salon. The volume is edited with critical notes by Mr. J. Comyns Carr.

Mr. E. W. Cooke, R.A., has published, through Mr. Murray, a second series of "Leaves from my Sketch-Book," the subjects of this volume being chiefly Venetian and Egyptian views. They are full of delicate grace and beauty, and, though slight, are very suggestive, some of the Nile views more particularly so.

"The Bird World" (Nelson and Sons) is a beautifully got-up volume, with charming illustrations from the graceful pencil of M. Giacomelli. There are few artists of the present day whose sketches of bird-life are so true, and yet so delicate and artistic, as those of M. Giacomelli, but we prefer his studies of the smaller birds to those of the larger species, and think he is more successful in scenes of love and peace than he is in depicting strife and war.

Messrs. Chapman and Hall have published a charming edition of Thomas-a-Kempis' "Imitation of Christ," illustrated by etchings and miniature head and tail pieces and initials. The work is beautifully printed, and should for a long time rank as by far the most sumptuous edition of this world-renowned book of devotion.

Messrs. Longmans issue a fourth and revised edition of Mr. Eastlake's "Hints on Household Taste in Furniture and Upholstery." This volume, with its characteristic binding and carefully-executed wood-cuts, will commend itself to a large circle of readers at a time when the rage for art-furniture is so rampant. The minutest details of the requirements of a house, from the door-knocker to a preserve-jar, are faithfully described and illustrated.

"Floral Designs for the Table," by John Perkins (Wyman and Sons), is another proof, if proof were wanted, of the rapid spread of art, especially in its application to the comforts and elegancies of the home. Mr. Perkins, in his capacity as Lord Henniker's head-gardener for the last twenty-nine years, has evidently acquired not only a sincere love for the objects of his care, but also an artistic appreciation of their special adaptability to the decoration of the dinner-table. The twenty-four coloured designs here given are as striking for their beauty as for their utility, and will no doubt furnish many a useful hint to those who are desirous of enlivening the too often dull and uninviting appearance of the English dinner-table.

"North Italian Folk," by Mrs. Comyns Carr (Chatto and Windus), is an interesting volume of sketches of town and country life in the Riviera and the Appenines. The graphic sketches of Mrs. Carr are admirably illustrated by a series of character drawings by Mr. R. Caldecott, whose pencil we should be glad to see more frequently employed in book illustration.

"The Country of the Moors," by Edward Rae (John Murray), is an attractive record of a solitary journey in a land but little known, and though Mr. Rae does not claim to convey much original or novel information, his sketch of the existing state of the comparatively few remaining types of the race which shed the light of civilisation on the dark ages of Europe, will form a valuable contribution to the modern traveller's library, and will repay a careful study and perusal.

"Children's Toys" (Kegan Paul and Co.), is an ingenious attempt to convey elementary lessons in general knowledge by familiar objects more usually devoted to amusement than instruction. The style is a little preachy, and apt to be too scientific, but the effort is a praiseworthy one and deserving of encouragement.

Mr. H. C. Barkley, whose works on the Danube and Bulgaria have been recently published, has adventured upon a new theme in "My Boyhood: a Story for Boys" (John Murray). The result is a capital book, the natural history sketches in which are both graphic and amusing.

Messrs. Routledge publish an edition of Keble's "Christian Year," the speciality of which is a series of floral illustrations delicately printed in colours by Edmund Evans. This firm are amongst the most prolific of purveyors for the juveniles, and amongst their productions this season may be mentioned, "Leila, or the Island in England and at Home," by Miss Fraser-Tytler, a fascinating story for girls; "The Boys of Westonbury," a graphic exposé of the monitorial system by H. C. Adams; "Rosabella, a Doll's Christmas Story," by Auntie Bee, with clever illustrations by D. J. White; "The Holiday Album for Children," which is also divided into separate albums for boys and girls, and which gives a picture and a short story on alternate pages; "Narrative Poetry for the Young," beautifully illustrated by the Brothers Dalziel; "The Original Robinson Crusoe," a biography of Alexander Selkirk, by H. C. Adams; "A Story of a Wooden Horse," with drawings by Emile Bayard, a humorous story translated from the French; a neat edition of the Misses Taylor's "Hymns for Infant Minds;" a short story called "Sybil Grey," by Mrs. Perring; and a series of picture-books lavishly illustrated by Walter Crane, Harrison Weir, W. McConnell, and other artists, which will lose none of their attractions from the fact that they have pictures and text alike formed portions of "Little Wide Awake." Their titles sufficiently indicate their contents—"Mother Goose's Jingles," "Mother Goose's Melodies," "Little Rosy Cheeks' Story Book," "Little Curly Pate's Story Book," and "Little Blue Bell's Picture Book"—the last being again sub-divided by the art in which modern publishers have become so ingenious, that of making the same work do duty in various forms into "Little Primrose's Picture Book" and "Little Forget Me Not's Picture Book." "Hookeybeak the Raven" and "One Hundred Picture Fables" are two marvellously cheap, well illustrated volumes, the former from comical drawings by Wilhelm Busch, the latter by one hundred very pretty drawings by Otto Speckter. "Lily's Drawing-Room Book," by Mrs. Sale Barker, is a bright little volume full of taking pictures, illustrative of country and animal life.

Messrs. Frederick Warne and Co., who are also celebrated for the character and multitude of their juvenile works, have produced an original series of dainty volumes for very young children, printed in large bold type, and with appropriate illustration. The text is evidently of American origin, and is as interesting as our American cousins always make their books for the young, a department of literature for which they seem to have a special faculty. The series is called "The Nightcap Series." These are "Big Nightcaps, Little Nightcaps, Old Nightcaps, Fairy Nightcaps, Baby Nightcaps, and Nightcaps for Tiny Tots."—A new edition of "The Swiss Family Robinson," with an original and unabridged translation from the German edition is beautifully illustrated with drawings of most of the animals mentioned in the work.—"Elsie in Dreamland," a somewhat risky imitation of "Alice in Wonderland," by F. E. Weatherly, M.A., with illustrations by H. Cross, is by no means a plagiarism of that work, but possesses a good deal of original merit, and the author is ably seconded in his efforts to be funny by the thoroughly comic sketches of the artist.

Two stories by Mrs. Prentiss, "The Three Magic Wands," and "Six Little Princesses," are full of quaint ideas simply but powerfully wrought out by the talented author of "Stepping Heavenward."—"Margaret Woodward, or Summerleigh Manor," is a capital girl's book, and "The Young Woman's Book," edited by Mrs. Valentine, is a miniature encyclopædia of everything pertaining to everyday life, and gives counsel, suggestion, and advice on subjects as wide apart as killing beetles and avoiding scandal. The practical chapters on cleaning, cooking, washing, dress, and health, are full of valuable and interesting details.

Messrs. Daldy, Isbister, and Co., have republished "Lady Verney's Sketches from Nature with Pen and Pencil," which have been appearing in the pages of Good Words. The authoress has evidently a great affection for animals, and her sketches are written with considerable feeling, and are well calculated to inculcate habits of kindness and consideration, such as Mr. Bright desires to see extended to the lower creation. The same publishers issue a further volume illustrative of the same principles, but adapted for younger readers, under the title of "Story after Story of Land and Sea, Man and Beast," by the author of "Cheerful Sundays."

Chatterbox, The Prize (Wells Gardner), The Daisy (Warne). The two former are the annual volumes of well-known serials, of which it will be sufficient to say they fully maintain the claim to the popularity they so worthily possess, and the latter is a series of coloured pictures, the printing of which might be better.

(Continued on page 574)

◆

The History of a Crime:

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

II.

THE SECOND DAY—THE STRUGGLE

IV.

THE WORKMEN'S SOCIETIES ASK US FOR THE ORDER TO FIGHT

IN presence of the fact of the barricade of the Faubourg St. Antoine so heroically constructed by the Representatives, so sadly neglected by the populace, the last illusions, even mine, should have been dispersed. Baudin killed, the Faubourg cold. Such things spoke aloud. It was a supreme, manifest, absolute demonstration of that fact, the inaction of the people, to which I could not resign myself—a deplorable inaction, if they understood, a self-treason, if they did not understand, a fatal neutrality in every case, a calamity of which all the responsibility, we repeat, recoiled not upon the people but upon those who in June, 1848, after having promised them amnesty, had refused it, and who had unhinged the great soul of the people of Paris by breaking faith with them. What the Constituent Assembly had sown the Legislative Assembly harvested. We, innocent of the fault, had to submit to the consequence.

The spark which we had seen flash for an instant through the crowd—Michel de Bourges from the height of Bonvalet's balcony, myself from the Boulevard du Temple—this spark seemed extinguished. Maigne firstly, then Brillier, then Bruckner, later on Charamaule, Malier de Montjau, Bastide, and Dulac came to report to us what had passed at the barricade of St. Antoine, the motives which had decided the Representatives present not to await the hour appointed for the rendezvous, and Baudin's death. The report which I made myself of what I had seen, and which Cassal and Alexander Rey completed by adding new circumstances, enabled us to ascertain the situation. The Committee could no longer hesitate; I myself renounced the hopes which I had based upon a grand manifestation, upon a powerful reply to the Coup d'État, upon a sort of pitched battle waged by the guardians of the Republic against the banditti of the Elysée. The Faubourgs failed us; we possessed the lever—Right, but the mass to be raised, the People, we did not possess. There was nothing more to hope for, as those two great orators, Michel de Bourges and Jules Favre, with their keen political perception, had declared from the first, save a slow long struggle, avoiding decisive engagements, changing quarters, keeping Paris on the alert, saying to each, It is not at an end; leaving time for the Departments to prepare their resistance, wearying the troops out, and in which struggle the Parisian people, who do not long smell powder with impunity, would perhaps ultimately take fire. Barricades raised everywhere, barely defended, remade immediately, melting away and multiplying themselves at the same time, such was the strategy indicated by the situation. The Committee adopted it, and sent orders in every direction to this effect. At that moment we were sitting at No. 15, Rue Richelieu, at the house of our colleague, Grévy, who had been arrested in the Tenth Arrondissement on the preceding day, and who was at Mazas. His brother had offered us his house for our deliberations. The Representatives, our natural emissaries, flocked around us, and scattered themselves throughout Paris, with our instructions to organise resistance at every point. They were the arms and the Committee was the soul. A certain number of ex Constituents, intrepid men, Garnier-Pagès, Marie, Martin (de Strasbourg), Senart, formerly President of the Constituent Assembly, Bastide, Laissac, Landrin, had joined the Representatives on the preceding day. They established, therefore, in all the districts where it was possible Committees of Permanence in connection with us, the Central Committee, and composed either of Representatives or of faithful citizens. For our watchword we chose "Baudin."

Towards noon the centre of Paris began to grow agitated.

Our appeal to arms was first seen placarded on the Place de la Bourse and the Rue Montmartre. Groups pressed round to read it, and battled with the police, who endeavoured to tear down the bills. Other lithographic placards contained in two parallel columns the decree of deposition drawn up by the Right at the Mairie of the Tenth Arrondissement, and the decree of outlawry voted by the Left. There were distributed, printed on grey paper in large type, the judgment of the High Court of Justice, declaring Louis Bonaparte attainted with the crime of High Treason, and signed "Hardouin" (President), "Delapalme," "Moreau" (of the Seine), "Cauchy," "Bataille" (Judges). This last name was thus mis-spelt by mistake, it should read "Pataille."

At that moment people generally believed, and we ourselves believed, in this judgment, which, as we have seen, was not the genuine judgment.

At the same time they posted in the populous quarters, at the corner of every street, two Proclamations. The first ran thus:—

"TO THE PEOPLE.

"ARTICLE III.* The Constitution is confided to the keeping and to the patriotism of French citizens. LOUIS NAPOLÉON is outlawed.

"The State of Siege is abolished.

"Universal Suffrage is re-established.

"Long live the Republic.

"TO ARMS!

"For the United Mountain,

"The Delegate, VICTOR HUGO."

The second ran thus:—

"INHABITANTS OF PARIS.

"The National Guards and the People of the Departments are marching on Paris to aid you in seizing the TRAITOR, Louis Napoléon BONAPARTE.

"For the Representatives of the People,

"VICTOR HUGO, President.

"SCHŒLCHER, Secretary."

This last placard, printed on little squares of paper, was distributed abroad, says an historian of the Coup d'État, by thousands of copies.

For their part, the criminals installed in the Government offices replied by threats: the great white placards, that is to say the official bills, were largely multiplied. On one could be read:—

"WE, PREFECT OF THE POLICE,

"Decree as follows:

"ARTICLE I. All meetings are rigorously prohibited. They will be immediately dispersed by force.

"ARTICLE II. All seditious shouts, all reading in public, all posting of political documents not emanating from a regularly instituted authority, are equally prohibited.

"ARTICLE III. The Agents of the Public Police will enforce the execution of the present decree.

"Given at the Prefecture of Police, December 3, 1851.

"DE MAUPAS, Prefect of Police.

"Seen and approved,

"DE MORNY, Minister of the Interior."

---

* A typographical error—it should read "Article LXVIII." On the subject of this placard the Author of this book received the following letter. It does honour to those who wrote it:—

"CITIZEN VICTOR HUGO,—We know that you have made an appeal to arms. We have not been able to obtain it. We replace it by these bills which we sign with your name. You will not disown us. When France is in danger your name belongs to all; your name is a Public Power.

"FELIX BONY."
"DABAT.

On another could be read :—

"THE MINISTER OF WAR
"By virtue of the Law on the State of Siege,
"Decrees :
"Every person taken constructing or defending a barricade, or carrying arms, WILL BE SHOT
"General of Division
"Minister of War
"DE ST. ARNAUD"

We reproduce this Proclamation exactly, even to the punctuation. The words "To be Shot" were in capital letters in the placards signed "De St. Arnaud."

The Boulevards were thronged with an excited crowd. The agitation increasing in the centre reached three Arrondissements, the 6th, 7th, and the 12th. The district of the schools began to be disorderly. The Students of Law and of Medicine cheered De Flotte on the Place de Panthéon. Madier de Montjau, ardent and eloquent, went through and aroused Belleville. The troops, increased every moment, took possession of all the strategical points of Paris.

At one o'clock a young man was brought into us by the legal advisers of the Workmen's Societies, the ex-Constituent Leblond, at whose house the Committee had deliberated that morning. We were sitting in permanence, Carnot, Jules Favre, Michel de Bourges, and myself. This young man, who had an earnest mode of speaking and an intelligent countenance, was named King. He had been sent to us by the Committee of the Workmen's Society, from whom he was delegated. "The Workmen's Societies," he said to us, "place themselves at the disposal of the Committee of Legal Insurrection appointed by the Left. They can throw into the struggle five or six thousand resolute men. They will manufacture powder ; as for guns, they will be found." The Workmen's Society requested from us an order to fight signed by us. Jules Favre took a pen and wrote:

"The undersigned Representatives authorise Citizen King and his friends to defend with them, and with arms in their hands, Universal Suffrage, the Republic, the Laws."

He dated it, and we all four signed it.

"That is enough," said the delegate to us, "you will hear of us."

Two hours afterwards it was reported to us that the conflict had begun. They were fighting in the Rue Aumaire.

V.

BAUDIN'S CORPSE

WITH regard to the Faubourg St. Antoine, we had, as I said. lost nearly all hope, but the men of the Coup d'État had not lost all uneasiness. Since the attempts at rising and the barricades of the morning a rigorous supervision had been organised. Any one who entered the Faubourg ran the risk of being examined, followed, and, upon the slightest suspicion, arrested. The supervision was nevertheless sometimes at fault. About two o'clock a short man, with an earnest and attentive air, crossed the Faubourg. A sergent de ville and a police agent in plain clothes barred his passage. "Who are you?" "You see: a passenger." "Where are you going?" "Over there, close by, to Bartholomé's, the overseer of the sugar manufactory."—They searched him. He himself opened his pocket-book ; the police agents turned out the pockets of his waistcoat and unbuttoned his shirt over his breast ; finally the sergent de ville said, gruffly, "Yet I seem to have seen you here before this morning. Be off!" It was the Representative Gindrier. If they had not stopped at the pockets of his waistcoat—and if they had searched his great coat they would have found his sash there—Gindrier would have been shot.

Not to allow themselves to be arrested, to keep their freedom for the combat—such was the watchword of the members of the Left. That is why we had our sashes upon us, but not outwardly visible.

Gindrier had had no food that day ; he thought he would go home, and returned to the new district of the Havre Railway Station, where he resided. In the Rue de Calais, which is a lonely street running from the Rue Blanche to the Rue de Clichy, a fiacre passed him. Gindrier heard his name called out. He turned round, and saw two persons in a fiacre, relations of Baudin, and a man whom he did not know. One of the relations of Baudin, Madame L——, said to him, "Baudin is wounded !" She added : "They have taken him to the St. Antoine Hospital. We are going to fetch him. Come with us." Gindrier got into the fiacre.

The stranger, however, was an emissary of the Commissary of Police of the Rue Marguerite St. Antoine. He had been charged by the Commissary of Police to go to Baudin's house, No. 88, Rue de Clichy, to inform the family. Having only found the women at home he had confined himself to telling them that Representative Baudin was wounded. He offered to accompany them, and went with them in the fiacre. They had uttered the name of Gindrier before him. This might have been imprudent. They spoke to him ; he declared that he would not betray the Representative, and it was settled that before the Commissary of Police Gindrier should assume to be a relation, and be called Baudin.

The poor women still hoped. Perhaps the wound was serious, but Baudin was young, and had a good constitution. "They will save him," said they. Gindrier was silent. At the office of the Commissary of Police the truth was revealed.—"How is he?" asked Madame L—— on entering.—"Why?" said the Commissary, "he is dead."—"What do you mean! Dead?—"Yes ; killed on the spot."

This was a painful moment. The despair of these two women who had been so abruptly struck to the heart burst forth in sobs. "Ah, infamous Bonaparte!" cried Madame L——. "He has killed Baudin. Well, then, I will kill him. I will be the Charlotte Corday of this Marat."

Gindrier claimed the body of Baudin. The Commissary of Police only consented to restore it to the family on exacting a promise that they would bury it at once, and without any ostentation, and that they would not exhibit it to the people. "You understand," he said, "that the sight of a Representative killed and bleeding might raise Paris." The Coup d'État made corpses, but did not wish that they should be utilised.

On these conditions the Commissary of Police gave Gindrier two men and a safe conduct to fetch the body of Baudin from the hospital where he had been carried.

Meanwhile Baudin's brother, a young man of four-and-twenty, a medical student, came up. This young man has since been arrested and imprisoned. His crime is his brother. Let us continue. They proceeded to the Hospital. At the sight of the safe conduct the director ushered Gindrier and young Baudin into the parlour. There were three pallets there covered with white sheets, under which could be traced the motionless forms of three human bodies. The one which occupied the centre bed was Baudin. On his right lay the young soldier killed a minute before him by the side of Schœlcher, and on the left an old woman who had been struck down by a spent ball in the Rue de Cotte, and whom the executioners of the Coup d'État had gathered up later on ; in the first moment one cannot find out all one's riches.

The three corpses were naked under their winding sheets.

They had left to Baudin alone his shirt and his flannel vest. They had found on him seven francs, his gold watch and chain, his Representative's medal, and a gold pencil-case which he had used in the Rue de Popincourt, after having passed me the other pencil, which I still preserve. Gindrier and young Baudin, bareheaded, approached the centre bed. They raised the shroud, and Baudin's dead face became visible. He was calm, and seemed asleep. No feature appeared contracted. A livid tint began to mottle his face.

They drew up an official report. It is customary. It is not sufficient to kill people. An official report must also be drawn up. Young Baudin had to sign it, upon which, on the demand of the Commissary of Police, they "made over" to him the body of his brother. During these signatures, Gindrier, in the courtyard of the hospital, attempted, if not to console, at least to calm the two despairing women.

Suddenly a man who had entered the courtyard, and who had attentively watched him for some moments, came abruptly up to him :

"What are you doing there?"

"What is that to you?" said Gindrier.

"You have came to fetch Baudin's body?"

"Yes."

"Is this your carriage?"

"Yes."

"Get in at once, and pull down the blinds."

"What do you mean?"

"You are the Representative Gindrier. I know you. You were this morning on the barricade. If any other than myself should see you, you are lost."

Gindrier followed his advice and got into the fiacre. While getting in he asked the man :

"Do you belong to the police?"

The man did not answer. A moment after he came and said in a low voice, near the door of the fiacre in which Gindrier was enclosed :

"Yes, I eat the bread, but I do not do the work."

The two men sent by the Commissary of Police took Baudin on his wooden bed and carried him to the fiacre. They placed him at the bottom of the fiacre with his face covered, and enveloped from head to foot in a shroud. A workman who was there lent his cloak, which was thrown over the corpse in order not to attract the notice of passers-by. Madame L—— took her place by the side of the body, Gindrier opposite, young Baudin next to Gindrier. A fiacre followed, in which were the other relative of Baudin and a medical student named Dutèche.

They set off. During the journey the head of the corpse, shaken by the carriage, rolled from shoulder to shoulder ; the blood began to flow from the wound and appeared in large red patches through the white sheet. Gindrier, with his arms stretched out and his hand placed on its breast, prevented it from falling forwards ; Madame L—— held it up by the side.

They had told the coachman to drive slowly ; the journey lasted more than an hour.

When they reached No. 88, Rue de Clichy, the bringing out of the body attracted a curious crowd before the door. The neighbours flocked thither. Baudin's brother, assisted by Gindrier and Dutèche, carried up the corpse to the fourth floor, where Baudin resided. It was a new house, and he had only lived there a few months.

They carried him into his room, which was in order, and just as he had left it on the morning of the Second. The bed, on which he had not slept the preceding night, had not been disturbed. A book which he had been reading had remained on the table, open at the page where he had left off. They unrolled the shroud, and Gindrier cut off his shirt and his flannel vest with a pair of scissors. They washed the body. The ball had entered through the corner of the arch of the right eye, and had gone out at the back of the head. The wound of the eye had not bled. A sort of swelling had formed there ; the blood had flowed copiously through the hole at the back of the head. They put clean linen on him, and clean sheets on the bed, and laid him down with his head on the pillow, and his face uncovered. The women were weeping in the next room.

Gindrier had already rendered the same service to the ex-Constituent James Demontry. In 1850 James Demontry died in exile at Cologne. Gindrier started for Cologne, went to the cemetery, and had James Demontry exhumed. He had the heart extracted, embalmed it, and enclosed it in a silver vase, which he took to Paris. The party of the Mountain delegated him, with Chollet and Joigneux, to convey this heart to Dijon, Demontry's native place, and to give him a solemn funeral. This funeral was prohibited by an order of Louis Bonaparte, then President of the Republic. The burial of brave and faithful men was unpleasing to Louis Bonaparte—not so their death.

When Baudin had been laid out on the bed, the women came in, and all this family, seated round the corpse, wept. Gindrier, whom other duties called elsewhere, went down with Dutèche. A crowd had formed before the door.

A man in a blouse, with his hat on his head, mounted on a kerbstone, was speechifying and glorifying the Coup d'État, Universal Suffrage re-established, the Law of the 31st May abolished, the "Twenty-five francs" suppressed ; Louis Bonaparte has done well, &c.—Gindrier, standing on the threshold of the door, raised his voice : "Citizens! above lies Baudin, a Representative of the People, killed while defending the People! Baudin, the Representative of you all, mark that well! You are before his house ; he is there bleeding on his bed, and here is a man who dares in this place to applaud his assassin! Citizens! shall I tell you the name of this man? He is called the Police! Shame and infamy to traitors and to cowards! Respect to the corpse of him who has died for you!"

And pushing aside the crowd Gindrier took the man who had been speaking by the collar, and knocking his hat on to the ground with the back of his hand, he cried, "Hats off!"

VI.

THE DECREES OF THE REPRESENTATIVES WHO REMAINED FREE

THE text of the judgment which was believed to have been drawn up by the High Court of Justice had been brought to us by the ex-Constituent Martin (of Strasbourg), a lawyer at the Court of Cassation. At the same time we learned what was happening in the Rue Aumaire. The battle was beginning, it was important to sustain it, and to feed it ; it was important ever to place the legal resistance by the side of the armed resistance. The members who had met together on the preceding day at the Mairie of the Tenth Arrondissement had decreed the deposition of Louis Bonaparte ; but this decree, drawn up by a meeting almost exclusively composed of the unpopular members of the majority, might have no effect on the masses ; it was necessary that the Left should take it up, should adopt it, should imprint upon it a more energetic and more revolutionary accent, and also take possession of the judgment of the High Court, which was believed to be genuine, to lend assistance to this judgment, and put it into execution.

In our appeal to arms we had outlawed Louis Bonaparte. The decree of deposition taken up and counter-signed by us added weight to this outlawry, and completed the revolutionary act by the legal act.

The Committee of Resistance called together the Republican Representatives.

The apartments of M. Grévy, where we had been sitting, being too small, we appointed for our meeting-place No. 10, Rue des Moulins, although warned that the police had already made a raid upon this house. But we had no choice ; in time of Revolution prudence is impossible, and it is speedily seen that it is useless. Confidence, always confidence ; such is the law of those grand actions which at times determine great events. The perpetual improvisation of means, of policy, of expedients, of resources, nothing step by step, everything on the impulse of the moment, the ground never sounded, all risks taken as a whole, the good with the bad, everything chanced on all sides at the same time, the hour, the place, the opportunity, friends, family, liberty, fortune, life,—such is the revolutionary conflict.

Towards three o'clock about sixty Representatives were meeting at No. 10, Rue des Moulins, in the large drawing-room, out of which opened a little room where the Committee of Resistance was in session.

It was a gloomy December day, and darkness seemed already to have almost set in. The publisher Hetzel, who might also be called the poet Hetzel, is of a noble mind and of great courage. He has, as is known, shown unusual political qualities as Secretary-General of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs under Bastide ; he came to offer himself to us, as the brave and patriotic Hingray had already done in the morning. Hetzel knew that we needed a printing-office above everything ; we had not the faculty of speech, and Louis Bonaparte spoke alone. Hetzel had found a printer who had said to him : "Force me, put a pistol to my throat, and I will print whatever you wish." It was only a question, therefore, of getting a few friends together, of seizing this printing-office by main force, of barricading it, and, if necessary, of sustaining a siege, while our Proclamations and our decrees were being printed. Hetzel offered this to us. One incident of his arrival at our meeting-place deserves to be noted. As he drew near the doorway he saw in the twilight of this dreary December day a man standing motionless at a short distance, and who seemed to be lying in wait. He went up to this man, and recognised M. Yon, the former Commissary of Police of the Assembly.

"What are you doing there?" said Hetzel abruptly. "Are you there to arrest us? In that case, here is what I have got for you," and he took out two pistols from his pocket.

M. Yon answered, smiling :

"I am in truth watching, not against you, but for you ; I am guarding you."

M. Yon, aware of our meeting at Landrin's house, and fearing that we should be arrested, was, of his own accord, acting as police for us.

Hetzel had already revealed his scheme to Representative Labrousse, who was to accompany him and give him the moral support of the Assembly in his perilous expedition. A first rendezvous which had been agreed upon between them at the Café Cardinal having failed, Labrousse had left with the owner of the café for Hetzel a note couched in these terms :—

"Madame Elizabeth awaits M. Hetzel at No. 10, Rue des Moulins."

In accordance with this notice Hetzel had come.

We accepted Hetzel's offer, and it was agreed that at nightfall Representative Versigny, who performed the duties of Secretary to the Committee, should take him our decrees, our Proclamations, such items of news as may have reached us, and all that we should judge proper to publish. It was settled that Hetzel should await Versigny on the pavement at the end of the Rue de Richelieu which runs alongside the Café Cardinal.

Meanwhile Jules Favre, Michel de Bourges, and myself had drawn up a final decree, which was to combine the deposition voted by the Right with the outlawry voted by us. We came back into the large room to read it to the assembled Representatives, and for them to sign it.

At this moment the door opened, and Emile de Girardin appeared. We had not seen him since the previous evening.

Emile de Girardin—after dispersing from around him that mist which envelopes every combatant in party warfare, and which at a distance changes or obscures the appearance of a man—Emile de Girardin is an extraordinary thinker, an accurate writer, energetic, logical, skilful, hearty ; a journalist in whom, as in all great journalists, can be seen the statesman. We owe to Emile de Girardin this great work of progress, the cheap Press. Emile de Girardin has this great gift, a clear-headed stubbornness. Emile de Girardin is a public watchman ; his journal is his sentry box ; he waits, he watches, he spies out, he enlightens, he lies in wait, he cries "Who goes there?" at the slightest alarm, he fires volleys with his pen. He is ready for every form of combat, a sentinel to-day, a general to-morrow. Like all earnest minds he understands, he sees, he recognises, he handles, so to speak, the great and magnificent identity embraced under these three words, "Revolution, Progress, Liberty :" he wishes for the Revolution, but above all through Progress ; he wishes for Progress, but solely through Liberty. One can, and according to our opinion sometimes rightly, differ from him as to the road to be taken, as to the attitude to be assumed, and the position to be maintained, but no one can deny his courage, which he has proved in every form, nor reject his object, which is the moral and physical amelioration of the lot of all. Emile de Girardin is more Democratic than Republican, more Socialist than Democratic ; on the day when these three ideas, Democracy, Republicanism, Socialism, that is to say, the principle, the form, and the application, are balanced in his mind the oscillations which still exist in him will cease. He has already Power, he will have Stability.

In the course of this sitting, as we shall see, I did not always agree with Emile de Girardin. All the more reason that I should record here how greatly I appreciate the mind formed of slight and of courage. Emile de Girardin, whatever his failing may be, is one of those men who do honour to the Press of to-day; he unites in the highest degree the dexterity of the combatant with the serenity of the thinker.

I went up to him, and I asked him :—

"Have you any workmen of the Presse still remaining?"

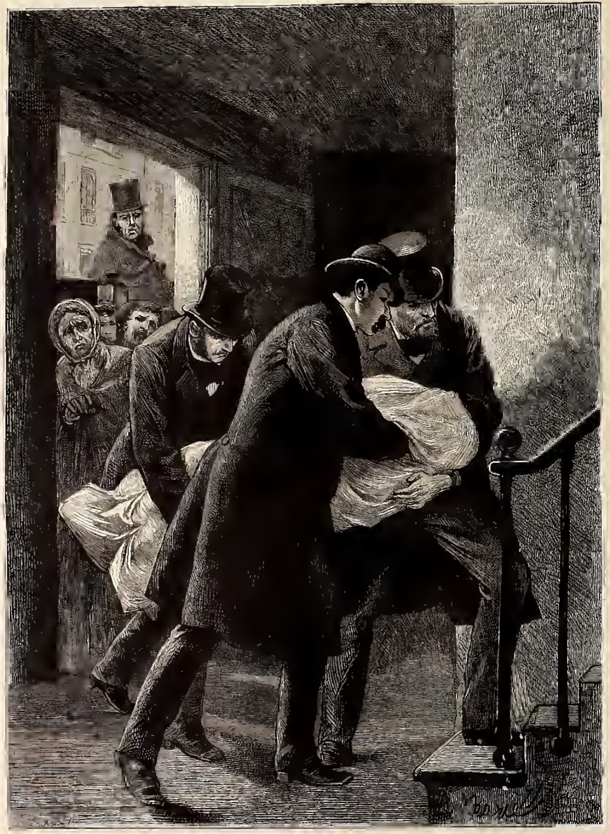
He answered me :—"Our presses are under seal, and guarded by the gendarmerie mobile, but I have five or six willing workmen, they can produce a few placards with the brush."

"Well then," said I, "print our decrees and our Proclamation." "I will print anything," answered he, "as long as it is not an appeal to arms."

He added, addressing himself to me :—



BAUDIN'S CORPSE

The neighbours flocked thither. Baudin's brother, assisted by Gindrier and Dutèche, carried the corpse up to the fourth floor, where Baudin resided

"I know your Proclamation. It is a war cry, I cannot print that."

They remonstrated at this. He then declared that he for his part made Proclamations, but in a different sense from ours. That according to him Louis Bonaparte should not be combatted by force of arms, but by creating a vacuum. By an armed conflict he would be the conqueror, by a vacuum he would be conquered. He urged us to aid him in isolating the "deposed of the Second of December." "Let us bring about a vacuum around him!" cried Emile de Girardin, "let us proclaim an universal strike. Let the merchant cease to sell, let the consumer cease from buying, let the workman cease from working, let the butcher cease from killing, let the baker cease from baking, let everything keep holiday, even to the National Printing Office, so that Louis Bonaparte may not find a compositor to compose the Moniteur, not a pressman to machine it, not a bill-sticker to placard it! Isolation, solitude, a void space round this man! Let the nation withdraw from him. Every power from which the nation withdraws falls like a tree from which the roots are divided. Louis Bonaparte abandoned by all in his crime will vanish away. By simply folding our arms as we stand around him he will fall. On the other hand, fire on him and you will consolidate him. The army is intoxicated, the people are dazed and do not interfere, the middle classes are afraid of the President, of the people, of you, of every one! No victory is possible. You will go straight before you, like brave men, you risk your heads, very good; you will carry with you two or three thousand daring men, whose blood mingled with yours already flows. It is heroic, I grant you. It is not politic. As for me, I will not print an appeal to arms, and I reject the combat. Let us organise a universal strike."

This point of view was haughty and superb, but unfortunately I felt it to be unattainable. Two aspects of the truth seized Girardin, the logical side and the practical side. Here, in my opinion, the practical side was wanting.

Michel de Bourges answered him. Michel de Bourges with his sound logic and quick reasoning put his finger on what was for us the immediate question; the crime of Louis Bonaparte, the necessity to rise up erect before this crime. It was rather a conversation than a debate, but Michel de Bourges and Jules Favre, who spoke next, raised it to the highest eloquence. Jules Favre, worthy to understand the powerful mind of Girardin, would willingly have adopted this idea, if it had seemed practicable, of the universal strike, of the void around the man; he found it great, but impossible. A nation does not pull up short. Even when struck to the heart, it still moves on. Social movement, which is the animal life of society, survives all political movement. Whatever Emile de Girardin might hope, there would always be a butcher who would kill, a baker who would bake, men must eat! "To make universal labour fold its arms is a chimera!" said Jules Favre, "a dream! The People fight for three days, for four days, for a week; society will not wait indefinitely." As to the situation, it was doubtless terrible, it was doubtless tragical, and blood flowed, but who had brought about this situation? Louis Bonaparte. For ourselves, we would accept it, such as it was, and nothing more.

Emile de Girardin, steadfast, logical, absolute in his idea, persisted. Some might be shaken. Arguments, which were so abundant in this vigorous and inexhaustible mind, crowded upon him. As for me, I saw Duty before me like a torch.

I interrupted him. I cried out: "It is too late to deliberate what we are to do. We have not got to do it. It is done. The gauntlet of the Coup d'État is thrown down, the Left takes it up. The matter is as simple as this. The outrage of the Second December is an infamous, insolent, unprecedented defiance to Democracy, to Civilisation, to Liberty, to the People, to France. I repeat that we have taken up this gauntlet, we are the Law, but the living Law which at need can arm itself and fight. A gun in our hands is a protest. I do not know whether we shall conquer, but it is our duty to protest. To protest first in Parliament; when Parliament is closed, to protest in the street; when the street is closed, to protest in exile; when exile is fulfilled, to protest in the tomb. Such is our part, our office, our mission. The authority of the Representatives is elastic; the People bestow it, events extend it."

While we were deliberating, our colleague, Napoleon Bonaparte, son of the ex-King of Westphalia, came in. He listened. He spoke. He energetically blamed, in a tone of sincere and generous indignation, his cousin's crime, but he declared that in his opinion a written protest would suffice. A protest of the Representatives, a protest of the Council of State, a protest of the Magistracy, a protest of the Press, that this protest would be unanimous and would enlighten France, but that no other form of resistance would obtain unanimity. That as for himself, having always considered the Constitution worthless, having contended against it from the first in the Constituent Assembly, he would not defend it at the last, he assuredly would not give one drop of blood for it. That the Constitution was dead, but that the Republic was living, and that we must save, not the Constitution, a corpse, but the Republic, the principle!

Remonstrances burst forth. Bancel, young, glowing, eloquent, impetuous, overflowing with self-confidence, cried out that we ought not to look at the shortcomings of the Constitution, but the enormity of the crime which had been committed, the flagrant treason, the violated oath; he declared that we might have voted against the Constitution in the Constituent Assembly, and yet defend it to-day in the presence of an usurper; that this was logical, and that many amongst us were in this position. He cited me as an example. Victor Hugo, said he, is a proof of this. He concluded thus: "You have been present at the construction of a vessel, you have considered it badly built, you have given advice which has not been listened to. Nevertheless, you have been obliged to embark on board this vessel, your children and your brothers are there with you, your mother is on board. A pirate ranges up, axe in one hand to scuttle the vessel, a torch in the other to fire it. The crew are resolved to defend themselves and run to arms. Would you say to this crew: 'For my part I consider this vessel badly built, and I will let it be destroyed?'"

"In such a case," added Edgar Quinet, "whoever is not on the side of the vessel is on the side of the pirates."

They shouted on all sides, "The decree! Read the decree!"

I was standing leaning against the fireplace. Napoleon Bonaparte came up to me, and whispered in my ear,

"You are undertaking," said he, "a battle which is lost beforehand."

I answered him, "I do not look at success, I look at duty."

He replied, "You are a politician, consequently you ought to look forward to success. I repeat, before you go any further, that the battle is lost beforehand."

I resumed, "If we enter upon the conflict the battle is lost. You say so, I believe it; but if we do not enter upon it honour is lost. I would rather lose the battle than honour."

He remained silent for a moment, then he took my hand.

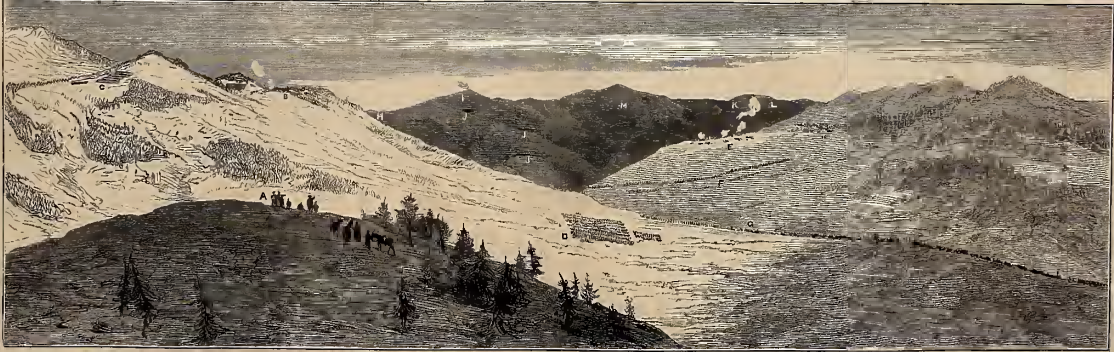
"Be it so," continued he, "but listen to me. You run, you yourself personally, great danger. Of all the men in the Assembly you are the one whom the President hates the most. You have from the height of the Tribune nicknamed him, 'Napoleon the Little.' You understand that will never be forgotten. Besides, it was you who dictated the appeal to arms, and that is known. If you are taken, you are lost. You will be shot on the spot, or, at least, transported. Have you a safe place where you can sleep to-night?"

I had not as yet thought of this. "In truth, no," answered I.

He continued, "Well, then, come to my house. There is perhaps only one house in Paris where you would be in safety. That is mine. They will not come to look for you there. Come, day or night, at what hour you please, I will await you, and I will open the door to you myself. I live at No. 5, Rue d'Alger."

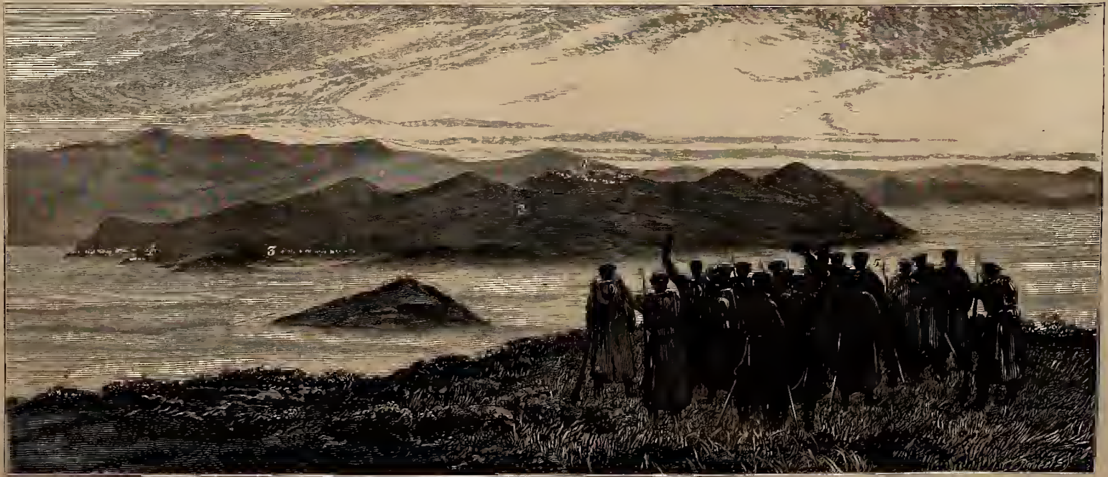
I thanked him. It was a noble and cordial offer. I was touched by it. I did not make use of it, but I have not forgotten it.

(To be continued)



A. General Gourko and Staff.—B. Russian Battery.—C. Russians.—D. Russian Reserves.—E. Russian Battery.—F. Russians.—G. Chaussée, with Troops and Caissons.—H. Turkish Earthworks.—I. Turkish Battery at Work.—J. Turkish Redoubt.—K. Turkish Reserves.—L. Peak over which General Rauch's Men Charged.

PRAVCA PASS—RELATIVE POSITIONS OF GENERAL GOURKO AND THE TURKS DURING THE RUSSIAN ATTACK ON NOV. 23



1. Rauch's Troops.—2. Turks Flying from their Positions.—3, 4. Rifle Pits at Work.—5. Cossacks Watching the Battle.

GENERAL RAUCH'S ATTACK ON PRAVCA: "ABOVE THE CLOUDS"—WATCHING THE ASSAULT

WITH THE RUSSIANS AND GENERAL GOURKO IN THE BALKANS

(Continued from page 570)

"The Kitchen and Market Garden" (Macmillan), is a handy volume of a thoroughly practical nature by contributors to the Garden. The publication in a concise form of the information necessary for the carrying out of every kind of market and kitchen garden cultivation in the best manner known to the most celebrated adepts of the time cannot fail to be of service to all who are interested in horticulture.

"The Legend of St. Christopher, and other Poems," by Mary E. Shipley (William Poole), is a little volume of devotional and other verses which, if not of the highest order, are still above the average.

From Messrs. De la Rue and Co. we have received specimen copies of their new publications for Christmas, comprising diaries, calendars of various kinds, and Christmas Cards. All these productions are distinguished for the solid workmanship as well as elegance for which this firm is justly celebrated.

From Messrs. Letts, Son, and Co. we have received a number of diaries of all shapes and sizes suitable both for business and for domestic purposes; from Messrs. Bemrose and Sons we have specimens of date calendars; from Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co. we have received a most choice collection of beautiful Christmas cards, and a series of ornamental placards (for placing on walls), bearing suitable inscriptions and texts for Christmas and the New Year; from Messrs. Ackermann and Co. we have specimens of Prang's American Christmas cards. We have also to acknowledge Whitaker's Almanac, a wonderful shillingsworth; and an old friend, Punch's Pocket Book, containing its usual agreeable mixture of gravity and gaiety.

The Fine Art Publishing Company send us a series of prize hand-painted Christmas and New Year's Cards, which are delicately and tastefully done, but which we cannot say compare too favourably with the many excellent specimens with which the art of chromo-printing has of late years rendered us familiar.

Mr. Thorburn, of 22, Paternoster Row, sends us a packet of invitation notepaper and envelopes embellished with an artistic group of young people dancing, from a design by his father, Mr. Robert Thorburn, A.R.A.

BIRTH.

On the 20th ult., at 47, Harrington Street, N.W., the wife of Mr. John Burnell of a son.

DEATHS.

On the 8th inst., at his residence, Bryantwood Road, Highbury, James Mansfield, aged 71, after a short, but painfully severe, illness.

On the 10th inst., at Muswell Hill, Richard Clay, Esq., of the firm of Messrs. R. Clay, Sons, and Taylor, in his 89th year.

"THE GREATEST SUCCESS IN PARIS."
LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE.
OPERA COMIQUE DE ROBERT PLANQUETTE.
Now Ready.
Polka, by Arban. 1s. 6d. net.
Polka Mazurka. 1s. 6d. net.
Suite de Valse, by O. Metra. Solo and duet. 2s. each net.
Quadrilles, by Arban. Solo and duet. 2s. each net.
Quadrilles, by O. Metra. Solo and Duet. 2s. each net.
Brilliant Fantasia, by E. Moniot. 1s. 6d. net.
Rondeau Valse, by B. Richards. 1s. 6d. net.
Chanson du Mousse, by B. Richards. 2s. net.
Valse Brillante, by B. Richards. 2s. net.
In the Press.
Complete Opera, piano solo, 2s. 6d. net.
Vocal Score, English and French Words.
Selections of Airs, in two books, by Cramer. 1s. 6d. each.
Fantasia, by W. Kohe. 2s. net.
Paraphrase, by W. Kohe. 2s. net.
N.B.—The sole right of representation, &c., for Great Britain and Colonies belongs to Mr. Joseph Williams.

CH. NEWSTEDT'S CARILLON, LOUIS XIV. Piano Solo, net, 1s. 6d.; Piano Duet, by J. Rummell, net, 1s. 6d.; Small Band Parts, 1s. 6d.; Full Orchestra, 2s. net.

L. GREGH.—LES BERGÈRES WATTEAU. Piano Solo, net, 1s. 6d.; Duet, by J. Rummell, net, 1s. 6d; Orchestra, 2s. net.

ARDITI'S L'INGÉNUE. Morceau a la GAVOTTE. 3s. Performed at the Promenade Concerts with enormous success. Orchestra, 2s.

FLORIAN PASCAL'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.
Berceuse. 3s. Also for Small Band, 1s. net.
La Princesse. 3s. (Gavotte). Also for Small Band, 1s. net.
Performed with great success at the Promenade Concerts.
Près le Lac, Deuxième Meditation. 3s.
Les Vieux Temps (Gavotte). 3s.
Pavane Royale de Louis XIV. 3s.
Air de Ballet. New Simplified Edition by Arthur Grenville. 3s.
Thematic Lists of this favourite Composer's sent free on application.

FLORIAN PASCAL.—AUTREFOIS (Souvenir de Marguerite de Valois). This charming little morceau has already run through several editions, and seems likely to rival the ever popular "Danse Favorite" of the same composer. Post free 18 stamps.

FLORIAN PASCAL.—UN BIJOU PERDU. "M. Pascal is to be congratulated upon having rescued from oblivion this really exquisite little gem, the melody of which is so captivating that we venture to predict for it great popularity." As Piano Solo, now ready, 18 stamps.

SPRING SONG. By J. Leybach.
ENGLISH, FRENCH, AND ITALIAN WORDS.
"A perfect little gem, easy to sing and play."
Compass D to F (in C). Post free, 18 stamps.

NEW SONGS by J. Leybach.
LIFE'S AUTUMN (in A). Compass E to G flat.
THE SIRENS (in F). Compass C to F.
BRIGHT STARS OF HEAVEN (in C). Compass D to F.
MAIDEN AND THE BIRDS (in B flat). Compass D to F.
Post free, 18 stamps each.

CATALOGUES GRATIS and POST FREE.
Shipping Orders on most favourable terms.

LONDON: JOSEPH WILLIAMS,
24, BERNERS STREET, W.; and
123, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

HY. KLEIN'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.
THE WINIFRED WALTZ. 2s. net.
ELECTRICITY VALSE. 2s. net.
LIEB GRETCHEN (Daisy Dear) WALTZ 2s. net.
IDA GALOP. 1s. 6d. net.
Post free of all Musicsellers and the Publishers, H. SMALL and CO., 2, Darville Road, Rectory Road, N.

DRAWINGS BY THE OLD MASTERS.—Messrs. HOGARTH have for SALE a Selection of ORIGINAL DRAWINGS and SKETCHES by the Old Masters of the different Schools from the revival of Art in the Thirteenth to the Nineteenth Century.
96, Mount Street, Grosvenor Square, W.

NOW READY, THE FIFTH EDITION OF TOWNSEND'S MANUAL of DATES.
Entirely Re-modelled and Edited by Frederick Martin, Editor of "The Statesman's Year-Book." Price 18s., 1,100 pp.
FREDERICK WARNE and CO., Bedford Street, Strand.

THE JANUARY NUMBER OF
THE ARGOSY,
Published December 20th, will contain the Opening Chapters of
POMEROY ABBEY,
A Serial Story by Mrs. Henry Wood,
Author of "East Lynne."
Chap. I. Joan Pomeroy.—Chap. II. At the White House.—Chap. III. The Keeper's Daughter.
Illustrated by M. Ellen Edwards.
"The best and cheapest of our magazines."—Standard.
Sixpence Monthly.
RICHARD BENTLEY and SON, 8, New Burlington St., W.

DANCING MADE EASY.-COULON'S HANDBOOK OF DANCING is the most complete treatise on the subject, containing full descriptions of all dances, new and old, illustrated by upwards of forty woodcuts. Price 1s.; post free, 13 stamps.—A. HAMMOND and CO. 5, Vigo Street, W. All new music half-price.

24th Edition, 8vo, cloth, pp. 1,102; price 16s.
HOMŒOPATHIC DOMESTIC MEDICINE. By J. Laurie, M.D. Completely re-arranged and revised, by R. S. Gutteridge, M.D. The most comprehensive Guide published for the use of families, emigrants, and missionaries, being free of all technicalities. The present edition contains, in addition to the symptoms and treatment of all general diseases, including those of females and children, many important new chapters, comprising among others the specific characteristic effects of all the new American remedies, plain directions for the treatment of accidents, and illustrations delineating the minor operations in surgery. Hydropathic appliances, affection of the eyes (with a description of the eyes and their appendages, and illustrations showing the various parts of the eye). Full directions are also given for the treatment of diseases prevalent in tropical climates. A new and concise Dictionary of Medical Terms and Treatment, with leading indications of treatment prefixed to the various chapters and divisions.—An Epitome of the above, 29th Edition, price 5s.
LEATH and ROSS, 5, St. Paul's Churchyard, and 9, Vere Street, London, W.

Folio, price 7s. 6d. each
THROUGH THE EYE TO THE MIND—THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOKS: a Series of Volumes Illustrative of Natural History and of the Vegetable World, with Descriptive Letterpress.
"These volumes are among the most instructive picture books we have seen, and we know of none better calculated to excite and gratify the appetite of the young for the knowledge of nature."—Times.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Tenth Edition, with Fifty-four Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 1: or, LESSONS FROM THE NATURAL HISTORY OF ANIMALS. By Adam White, late Assistant, Zoological Department, British Museum.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Fifth Edition, with many new Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 2: or, LESSONS FROM THE VEGETABLE WORLD. By the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," "The Herb of the Field," &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Third Edition, with Sixty Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 3: LESSONS ON THE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS, or the Natural History of the Quadrupeds which characterise the Four Divisions of the Globe.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Second Edition, with Forty-eight Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 4: SKETCHES FROM NATURE, or Pictures of Animal and Vegetable Life in all Lands.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Seventh Edition, with Thirty-six Oblong Coloured Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.
RECREATIVE ILLUSTRATION— THE NEW PICTURE BOOK; or, PICTORIAL LESSONS ON FORM, COMPARISON, AND NUMBER, for Children under Seven Years of Age. With Explanation by Nicholas Bohny.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Map and Illustrations, price 6s.
THE HEROES OF YOUNG AMERICA. By Ascott R. Hope, Author of "A Peck of Troubles," "A Book About Boys," "A Book About Dominoes," &c., &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, price 6s.
ADVENTURES IN THE AIR: being Memorable Experiences of Great Aeronauts. From the French of M. De Fonvielle. Translated and edited by John S. Keltie.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

ATLASES.—All the best Atlases by Keith Johnston, Dr. Wm. Smith, The Useful Knowledge Society, Sprüner, Stieler, Black, Philip, &c., in bindings suitable for presentation, from £1 to £6 6s., subject to a large discount for cash.
EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

STATIONERY.—"Stanford's Treasury Note," 4s. per ream, "Whatman's, Turkey Mill," Repp, and all the Ordinary and Special qualities of Note Paper, with corresponding Envelopes in Stock. Samples and prices on application. Card plates, dies, book plates, &c., &c., Engraved in the best manner.
EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

DIARIES AND OTHER ANNUALS, 1878.—Letts', Pettitt's, De La Rue's, Marcus Ward's, Harwood's, Goldsmith's, Whitaker's, and other Diaries, Pocket Books, and Almanacs; Peerages, Court Guides, Foreign and Colonial Office List, Parliamentary and Clerical Directories, &c., &c., supplied on the day of publication, at a large discount for cash.
EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

THE NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS.
Now ready at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.
DORIS BARUGH. By Mrs. Macquoid,
Author of "Patty," "Diane," &c.
UNDER THE WILL. By Mary Cecil Hay.
THE VILLAGE COMEDY. By Mortimer and Frances Collins.
THE SQUIRE'S COURTSHIP. By Mrs. M. Daniel.
A JEWEL OF A GIRL. By the Author of "Queenie," &c.
CHEAP EDITION of PHŒBE, JUNIOR. By Mrs. Oliphant. 1 vol. 5s. bound and illustrated.
HURST and BLACKETT, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

BY DR. BARR MEADOWS.
Seventh Edition, cloth, post free 32 stamps.
ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Remarks on the Abuse of Arsenic and other reputed Specifics.—G. HILL, 154, Westminster Bridge Road.

CONSUMPTION: its Proximate Cause and Specific Treatment by the HYPOPHOSPHITES, upon the Principles of Stœchiological Medicine, by
John Francis Churchill, M.D.,
With an Appendix on the Direct Treatment of Respiratory Diseases (Asthma, Bronchitis, &c.) by Stœchiological Inhalants. And Reports of nearly Two Hundred Cases by Drs. Churchill, Campbell, Heslop, Sterling, Bird, Santa Maria, Gomez, Maettre, Parigot, Reinvillier, Galvez, Leriverend, Denobele, Feldman, Pfeiffer, Vintras, Bougard, Titifahy, Lansi, Fabbri, Panegrotsi, Cerati, Gnaldi, Todini, Ascenti, Regnoli, Valentini, Casati, Blasi, Borromeo, Fiorelli, and Fedeli.
London: LONGMANS and CO. Price 21s.

THE MOORE and BURGESS MIN- STRELS' NEW CHRISTMAS ALBUM contains no less than 18 new and beautiful songs (which cannot be obtained in any similar publication), published Saturday, Nov. 24. Words, music, choruses, and pianoforte accompaniments. Price 1s., post free 14 stamps, addressed MANAGER, Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St. James's Hall.—Wholesale of J. WILLIAMS, 24, Berners Street, W.

CHRISTMAS and New Year's Cards. 100 post free for 4s. 6d., 1 dozen as sample, post free, 7d. CHRISTMAS ANNUALS, published at 1s. each. Six post free for 2s. 6d., sample copy, post free, 6d. PIANOFORTE MUSIC, One Pound's worth for 3s. 6d. 1 Song, Pianoforte Piece, or Dance Music, as sample, with complete catalogue, post free, 6d.
ROBINSON, Wholesale Stationer, &c., Romford.

CHRISTMAS and NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.—A large variety of BOOKS, CARDS, PICTURES, &c., may now be seen at the London Depositories of THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE, No. 77, Great Queen Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields; No. 48, Piccadilly (next door to Burlington House); No. 4, Royal Exchange (south side).

PHOTOGRAPHS and VIGNETTES beautifully coloured for 2s.
Mrs. RUSSELL, 30, Seafield, West Brighton.

£10.—In return for a £10 Note, free and safe, per post, one of BENNETT'S LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, perfect for time, beauty, and workmanship, with keyless action, air tight, damp tight, and dust tight.—65, Cheapside, London. Good chains at manufacturer's prices. P.O.O. to John Bennett.
BENNETT, 65 and 64, Cheapside.

MAPPIN and WEBB, Manufacturers,

76, 77, and 78, OXFORD, STREET, WEST END.

MANSION HOUSE BUILDINGS, CITY.

THE HIGHEST QUALITY AT LOWEST PRICES.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S PRESENTS.

PRESENTS—SPOONS and FORKS.

PRESENTS—TABLE KNIVES.

PRESENTS—NOVELTIES.

PRESENTS—ORNAMENTALS.

PRESENTS—USEFUL.

PRESENTS—IMMENSE ASSORTMENTS.

ELECTRO SILVER.—STERLING SILVER.

CATALOGUES POST FREE.

MAPPIN and WEBB, MANSION HOUSE BUILDINGS, CITY.

76, 77, and 78, OXFORD STREET, WEST END.

WATCHES and JEWELLERY, Good and Cheap.
KIBBLE, 22, Gracechurch Street.
Gold Watches, from 45s. Silver, from 21s.
Aluminium, 21s. Keyless ditto, 42s.
The Fashionable Silver Jewellery.
Whitby Jet Mourning Ornaments.
Christmas Presents in great variety.

THE "CLEOPATRA LOCKET."
(REGISTERED.)
CHRISTMAS NOVELTY.
Very fashionable; solid silver; a real work of art. The celebrated Obelisk, Cleopatra's Needle, is represented standing boldly out in high relief, the sculptured hieroglyphics being clearly shown. Price, with Open Face, 7s. each, or, with Double Case, taking Two Portraits, 10s. 6d. each. Sent free by registered post to any part of the United Kingdom.
WARRINGTON and CO. (Proprietors of the Registered Design), 9, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C.

CHUBB'S FIRE AND THIEF- RESISTING SAFES, steel-plated, and with their patent diagonal bolts, are the most secure. Chubb's Patent Latches and Locks for all purposes. Cash and Deed Boxes. Price List sent free.—CHUBB and SON, 128, Queen Victoria St., St. Paul's, E.C., and 68, St. James's Street, S.W.

DEANE and CO.'S London Kitcheners.— DEANE and CO. manufacture, supply, and fix complete Cooking Apparatus, Kitcheners, Ranges, Hot Water Circulation, Bath Fittings, &c. Estimates free.

London Patt'n Close Fire.		London Patt'n Open Fire.		Flavel's Kitcheners.		Cheap Kitcheners.
4 ft.	£13 10	4 ft. 6	£16 10	3 ft. 6	£10 0	3 ft.	£3 0
4 ft. 6	16 10	5 ft.	£20 0	4 ft.	£12 0	3 ft. 6	£6 0
5 ft.	19 10	5 ft. 6	£24 0	4 ft. 6	£13 10	4 ft.	£10 5

GAS CHANDELIERS and FITTINGS.
The mansion, the villa, or cottage fitted throughout.

	Two Light	Three Lights	Five Lights
	£ s. d. £ s. d.	£ s. £ s.	£ s. £ s.
Ormolu	0 18 6 to 2 0 0	2 10 to 6 6	4 10 to 10 10
Bronze	0 17 0 to 1 18 0	1 14 to 7 15	4 4 to 12 12
Crystal		2 15 to 9 9	6 6 to 15 0

Manufactory and Workshops, No. 1, Jacob Street, Dockhead.
Deane and Co.'s complete Illustrated Catalogue post free.
DEANE and CO., 46, King William Street, London Bridge.

MORTLOCK'S POTTERY

MINTON'S CHINA GALLERIES.

DINNER SERVICES.

BREAKFAST SERVICES.

TEA SERVICES.

TOILET SERVICES.

ENGRAVED AND PLAIN GLASS.

SOLE ADDRESSES: 202, 203, 204, OXFORD STREET; and 30, 31, and 32, ORCHARD STREET, LONDON.

DEEP BLUE DINNER SERVICES can be obtained at GARDNER'S, 453 and 454, West Strand, from £3 13s. 6d. The set for 12 persons complete. A few of the leading patterns are detailed:

	£	s.	d.
The Glengariff	£3	13	6
The Eccles	3	13	6
The Laurel	3	13	6
The Bramble	4	4	0
The Mudras	5	5	0

Photographs post free.

GARDNER'S NEW DINNER SER- VICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons:—

	£	s.	d.
The Osborne, in pink or green	£3	5	0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3	13	6
The Bramble, in all colours	4	4	0
The One Thousand and Two	5	5	0
The One Thousand and Two A	5	5	0
The Japanese Bamboo	6	6	0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNERS, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

MORGAN'S LIBRARY INDICATOR AND REGISTER.
(Adopted by the Birmingham Free Library).
NO BOOK-KEEPING—NO BOOKS LOST—
NO TIME LOST.
Apply for Prospectus and Model to WILLIAM MORGAN, 21, Cannon Street, Birmingham.

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.
JAMES SHOOLBRED and CO. beg to announce that TOTTENHAM HOUSE
will be closed from 2 o'clock on Saturday, the 22nd December, until half-past 8 a.m. Thursday Morning, the 27th December.
Arrangements will be made by which all mourning and other special orders will be attended to, so as to cause as little inconvenience to their customers as possible.
Tottenham Court Road,
Dec. 21, 1877.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS.
REDUCTION OF PRICES.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
30 inches long,
from 8 to 10 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long,
from 9 to 12 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
36 inches long,
from 10 to 14 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
40 inches long,
from 12 to 16 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
46 inches long,
from 20 to 25 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 40 inches long, richly trimmed with real marten tails, 12 inches deep, 20 gs.; Real Sable, 10 inches deep, 40 gs.; Skunk, 20 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS can be sent on approval to any part of the United Kingdom by forwarding a reference in Town to

MESSRS. WAYRE, Manufacturing FURRIERS, 96, Oxford Street, and 332, Oxford Street (corner of Regent Circus). Established Half-a-Century.

GASK and GASK'S DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP.
SALE of the WHOLE of their IMMENSE STOCK at incomparably low prices.
OXFORD STREET and WELLS STREET.

SALE of MANTLES, COSTUMES, SILKS, MILLINERY, UNDERCLOTHING, &c., being the latest delivery of goods ordered early, at exceedingly low prices.—GASK and GASK.

SALE of DRESS FABRICS, LINENS, BLANKETS, CURTAINS, LONG CLOTHS, &c. The whole of the Stock remaining is now being cleared off at exceptional prices.—GASK and GASK.

SALE of HOSIERY, GLOVES, LACE GOODS, FRENCH and FANCY ARTICLES innumerable, suitable for presents, all now marked at the lowest sale prices.—GASK and GASK.

GASK and GASK'S DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP, and SALE of the whole of their IMMENSE STOCK at incomparably low prices. See above. 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, Oxford Street; 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, Wells Street.

"WEAR-RESISTING" (Registered)

BOYS' SUITS.

SAMUEL BROTHERS.
Suit for a Boy, 3 ft. 8 in. in height.
C Class, 27s.; D Class, 31s.
Prices varying according to height.
Patterns, &c., post free
SAMUEL BROTHERS, Sydenham House,
65 and 67, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

ÆGIDIUS.—A New ELASTIC OVER- SHIRT, as warm as wool, as soft as silk. 13s. 6d. each. Patterns of material and self-measure free by post.—FORD and CO., 42 and 44, Poultry, London.

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.,
IMPORTERS.
TURKEY CARPETS.
PERSIAN CARPETS.
INDIAN CARPETS
35 and 36, OLD BOND STREET.

DR. LELIEVRE'S ICELAND MOSS POULTICE (Patented) is exempt from all the inconveniences inseparable from Poultices made with Linseed or Bread. These spoil the linen, bedding, &c., dry up on the edges, rapidly ferment, giving a most unpleasant odour; and no dependence can be placed on the quality and freshness of the linseed meal. This New Poultice is instantaneous, for it is ready in a few seconds. Sold retail by all Chemists.
Wholesale: RIGOLLOT and CO, 82, Southwark St., London.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD LIVER OIL (Registered).
No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.
Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.
"The natural nauseous taste of the Oil is disguised with considerable art. Children take it with avidity."—See Lancet, British Medical Journal, Sanitary Record, Medical Times, Medical Press, Medical Record, &c.
Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half-pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure.
Retail of all Chemists and Druggists, and Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited), Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

THROAT IRRITATION.
EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Sold only in Boxes, 6d. and 1s. labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS,
48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

CURES by DR. LOCOCK'S Pulmonic WAFERS.—"Coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, and bronchial affections are quickly and surely removed by them."—From Mr. Morris, 187, West Derby Rd., Liverpool. 1s. 1½d.

THOMPSON AND CAPPER'S
DENTIFRICE WATER
Arrests Decay in the Teeth and Sweetens the Breath. 55, Bold Street, Liverpool. Sold in 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. Bottles, by all Chemists.

PETER ROBINSON'S COURT AND GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, REGENT STREET, Is the Cheapest and the Largest Warehouse of the kind in London.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS, REGENT STREET. For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE, In the New Style (Princess Polonaise and Skirt), Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING. "ON RECEIPT of LETTER or TELEGRAM," MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required), without extra charge. PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS. DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery, and all made-up articles, In the most appropriate and best styles, at the lowest possible cost. Dressmaking and Millinery, by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by PETER ROBINSON, upon the most advantageous terms, to Families. The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS. AN IMPORTANT PURCHASE OF SEVERAL THOUSAND PIECES BY PETER ROBINSON of Regent Street OF THE BEST WEARING MAKES ONLY, and highly recommended

Bonnet and Cie	at 5s. 0d.
Jaubert	at 4s. 0d.
Ponsons	at 5s. 3d.
Degoves	at 4s. 9d.

The above are from 2s. to 3s. per yard under last year's prices. The EMPRESS CACHEMIRE, at 6s. Also Excellent Value at 2s. 6d., 3s. 3d., 3s. 11d., 4s. 6d., and 4s. 11d. For Patterns address to PETER ROBINSON, 256 to 262, Regent Street.

BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS. Exceedingly good qualities, at 7s. 6d., 8s. 9d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d. A Special Bargain in Lyons Velvet, at 10s. 9d. Black Silk Trimming Velvets, at 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 9d. At PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET, Nos. 256 to 262.

FOR SIX GUINEAS. A BLACK SILK COSTUME made of RICH LYONS SILK, with Velvet Garniture, Exquisitely cut and fashioned. Copies of expensive Paris Models. Photos free. PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

REMARKABLY CHEAP. For One Guinea, A Black Quilted SATIN PETTICOAT. For 2½ Guineas, A Black Silk TRAINED SKIRT, At PETER ROBINSON'S of REGENT STREET.

FOR TWO GUINEAS, and up to Seven, Costumes in New Black Materials, in various fashionable Styles, At PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

EVENING DRESSES, at One Guinea. Black Brussels Net, at 29s. 6d. Tulle (condition keeping), 50s. Grenadine, 55s. 6d. New Styles, well cut, and elegantly trimmed. Illustrations free.

THE NEW CRAPE. The Pure Silk Gordian Crape, for Widows and Families. Its advantages are—that it is made of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon nor spot with rain. It is a richer black, free from dross, and the gummed appearance so objectionable in other Crape. The wear of every yard is guaranteed. The Gordian Crape is a Specialité, only to be obtained at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET, The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262. Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 9s. 6d. Patterns free.

FUR-LINED CLOAKS at SUMMER PRICES. Good useful Cloaks at 3½ and 4½ guineas.

SEMI-FITTING SEAL PALETOTS, 33 inches long for 9½ guineas. 36 inches long for 11 guineas. 39 inches long for 13 guineas. at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.

NOTICE.—In reference to the above advertisement, it is important that letters should be clearly addressed to 256 to 262, REGENT STREET.

HOLY BAZIL.—PIESSE and LUBIN.—This is a most rare perfume distilled from the HOLY BAZIL FLOWER OF HINDU (Ocymum sanctum), so remarkable for its unique fragrance. Sold in bottles, 2s. 6d., 5s., and 10s. 6d. each, at the Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London, and by their agents in all parts of the world.

COLD CREAM OF ROSES.—PIESSE and LUBIN prepare this exquisite COSMETIC with the greatest care, fresh daily, in jars, 1s.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London.

PIESSE and LUBIN.—HOLY BAZIL.—Soap perfumed with HOLY BAZIL, 2s 6d. HOLY BAZIL Sachet, 1s. 6d. HOLY BAZIL Scented Toilet Powder, 2s. HOLY BAZIL in all compounds, cosmetiques, hair dressings, pomades, &c.—Royal Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London, W. Price Lists free.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS and NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.—The most appropriate at this festive period are ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, an improver and beautifier of the hair beyond all precedent; ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for imparting a radiant bloom to the complexion; ROWLAND'S ODONTO for giving a pearl-like whiteness to the teeth, and fragrance to the breath. Sold by all chemists and perfumers.

CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE.—A neat Perfume Case, registered by E. RIMMEL, of 96, Strand, London, on sale (price 1s.), at the principal Perfumery Stores.

BREIDENBACH'S TALIPAT BLOSSOMS.—The NEW SCENT for 1877. A great novelty, and quite different to all others. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., 10s., 20s. Sole Address, 157B, New Bond Street, London. All kinds of Perfumery for Export duty free.

IF YOUR HAIR IS WEAK USE BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE OIL, 1s.; or three bottles in one, 2s. 6d.—Sole Address, 157B, New Bond St. Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Drapers.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR GLENFIELD STARCH SEE THAT YOU GET IT, As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER OF 1877. PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street.

300 PIECES RICH BLACK and COLOURED VELVETS, plain and brocaded in all the new designs, prices, Black and Plain Colours, from 4s. 11d., Brocaded, from 12s. 9d. Patterns free.

NEW COLOURED LYONS SILKS, in White, Cream, Ivory, Tilleul, Moonlight, Coral, Eau de Nil, &c., &c., specially prepared for BRIDAL AND EVENING WEAR, also every new shade of Bronze, Navy, Claret, Prune, &c., &c., at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., 4s. 4½d., and 5s. 3d. per yard. 250 Shades to select from. Patterns free on application to PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

BLACK SILKS OF STANDARD QUALITY. Heavily dyed and showy makes at low prices should be avoided. PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, having kept for the past 25 years Black Silks produced by Messrs. Bonnet, Ponson, Jaubert, and Tapissier, which are found upon careful examination to be the best and purest makes, invites special attention to these fine qualities, as being cheaper than at any former period, and at the same time recommended with more confidence for really hard wear than any other make of Silk; in proof of purity and excellence the highest awards were given at Philadelphia. Each quality guaranteed not to cut. Prices, 4s. 6d. to 11s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free. PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

SPECIAL—BLACK SILKS. 160 PIECES. BLACK GROS GRAINS (fine make), at 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. per yard, guaranteed not to cut. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, London.

BLACK AND COLOURED SILK COSTUMES, made from the new Paris Models in eight different styles of the most approved designs, as shown in Engravings, prices, with bodice complete, Black, from 4½, Colours, from 5½ guineas. Patterns of the Silk and Fashion Plates post free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

THE LATEST PRODUCTION IN MANTLES AND PALETOTS, Cashmere Circulars, lined Fur, 35s. to 5 guineas. Cashmere Paletots, lined Fur, 3½ to 10 guineas. Silk Circulars, lined Fur, 5 to 10 guineas. Silk Paletots, lined Fur, 6 to 15 guineas.

THE NEW DIAGONAL CLOTH PALETOTS, 2 to 5 guineas. The New Beaver Cloth Paletots, 28s. 9d. to 5 guineas. New Ulster Mantles, 17s. 6d. to 52s. 6d. Waterproof Mantles and Ulsters, 17s. 6d. to 42s. Patterns and Engravings free from PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, London, W.

A LARGE COLLECTION OF NOVELTIES FOR WINTER DRESSES, In every variety of Fabric and Shade of Colour, From 12s. 6d. to 42s. the Full Dress. Patterns free.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON. CASHMERE MERINOES, all wool, This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 2s. 2d. to 2s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

EVERY NEW SHADE FOR BALL AND EVENING DRESSES, in Gauzes, Diamond Lustres, Fine Cashmeres, Japanese Silks, Lisse Muslins, and other thin fabrics, from 9s. 6d. to 23s. 6d. the Dress. The highest quality Japanese Silks at 1s. 11½d. per yard. Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

NEW AND ELEGANT DESIGNS IN WINTER COSTUMES. Cashmere and Silk Costumes, 4 guineas. Specialities in Costumes suitable for Travelling, Promenade, and Indoor Wear, 38s. 6d. to 7 guineas. Rich Velvet-Velveteen Costumes, 3½ to 7 guineas. Illustrations and Patterns of Materials post free.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES REQUIRING MADE BALL and Wedding Dresses. Now ready, several thousand charming Dresses in White, Black, and all colours, from 18s. 9d. to 10 guineas. Engravings of the above, with many others, can be seen in the New Book of Fashions, which is sent post free.

A FAVOURITE DRESS IN TARLATAN. THE "DORA" (any Colour or Black), profusely trimmed with flounces and ample train, 1 guinea, a substantial box included. A pretty Brussels Net Dress, in White, Black, and all colours, for 28s. 9d., with material for bodice. Patterns of Materials and Illustrations free from PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

FOR CHILDREN.

DR. RIDGE'S FOOD.

IS THE BEST.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN COMPANY, LIVERPOOL ROAD, LONDON, N., supply the best goods only. Whites for pastry, 10s. per bushel; households for bread, 9s. 4d.; wheat meal for brown bread, 8s. 8d.; coarse Scotch oatmeal, 3s. 2d. per 14 lbs.; fine, 3s. 4d.; American hominy, 4s.; barley, maize, and barley meal, 5s. 8d. per bushel, or 21s. 6d. per sack; buckwheat, 5s. per bushel, or 19s. per sack; oats, 4s. per bushel; crushed oats, 3s. 6d. per bushel, or 13s. 6d. per sack; middlings, 2s. 4d. per bushel; ground pollard, 1s. 8d.; peas, 7s. 6d.; tick beans, 8s.; split peas, 2s. 6d. and 3s. per peck; meat biscuits, 20s. per cwt.; lentil flour for invalids, in tins, 1 lb. size, 1s., and 7 lbs., 5s. All other kinds of grain and seed. Special prices for larger quantities. Post Office Orders and Cheques to be made in favour of GEORGE YOUNG.

THE CHRISTMAS HAMPER for 10s. 6d. contains 1 Good Hen Turkey, 1 lb. of Cambridge Sausages, and 1 lb. of Devonshire Butter. Basket included. P.O. Orders pre-paid to GILSON'S Old Established Devonshire House, 4, Lyall Place, Eaton Place, S.W.

COCK'S READING SAUCE Is the best and most economical Sauce ever manufactured FOR FISH, ENRICHING SOUPS, GRAVIES, &c. It only requires a trial to convince the purchaser of its excellence. CAUTION.—The genuine is protected by Trade Mark, viz., CHARLES COCKS' Signature on a white ground across the Reading Arms.

NEW YORK.

EPPS'S COCOA.

Wholesale Depôt: Smith and Vanderbeek, Park Place.

PARIS.

EPPS'S COCOA.

Depôt: A. Delafosse, Faubourg St. Honoré, 64.

WEIGH YOUR CANDLES. Many Foreign Light-Weights are about. All the Candles of PRICE'S PATENT CANDLE COMPANY (Limited) are intended to be the exact weight without the wrapper. Try their GOLD MEDAL PALMITINE, burning brilliantly but slowly and of the transparency of the finest Spermaceti. Try also their NEW PATENT NIGHT LIGHTS made without the paper case. Order of your own dealer.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS at HENRY RODRIGUES', 42, PICCADILLY. Polished Brass Writing Sets of special designs. Sets for the Writing Table and Boudoir, 21s. to £10.

Envelope Cases,	21s. to £5	Jewel Cases,	21s. to £5
Inkstands,	5s. to £5	Glove Boxes,	10s. 6d. to £2
Despatch Boxes,	21s. to £6	Handkerchief Boxes,	10s. to £2
Writing Cases,	10s. 6d. to £5	Caskets,	15s. to £5
Candlesticks (pair),	12s. to £3	Flower Vases,	21s. to £5
Candelabra,	42s. to £5	Jardinières (pair),	42s. to £5
Work Boxes,	15s. to £5	Card Trays,	21s. to £5

Rodrigues' Ladies' Dressing Case, silver-fitted, £10 10s. And a large and choice assortment of English, Viennese and Parisian NOVELTIES, for PRESENTS, from 5s. to £5.

RODRIGUES' DRESSING BAGS for TRAVELLING, with silver and plated fittings, from £3 3s. to £50; Hand Bags, Waist Bags, Carriage Bags, and Bags of all kinds, at very moderate prices.—42, Piccadilly.

PORTRAIT Albums at Rodrigues', with patent leather guards, interleaved for vignette and cabinet portraits, from 10s. 6d. to £5. Rodrigues' New Easel Album. Regimental and Presentation Albums.—42, Piccadilly.

RODRIGUES' Monograms, Crests, and ADDRESSES designed, and STEEL DIES engraved as gems. NOTE PAPER and ENVELOPES stamped in colour relief, and brilliantly illuminated in gold, silver, bronze, and colours to the highest style of art.—42, Piccadilly.

BALL PROGRAMMES at Rodrigues'.—All the new patterns of the season arranged, printed, and stamped in the latest fashion. BILLS OF FARE, GUEST CARDS, and INVITATIONS.—42, Piccadilly.

VISITING CARDS, at H. Rodrigues'. A card plate elegantly engraved, and 100 superfine cards printed for 4s. 6d. BOOK PLATES designed and engraved in Modern and Mediæval Styles at RODRIGUES', 42, Piccadilly.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO?—Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, book plates, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 20s. Solid gold ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked, with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 9d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourne Street, corner of St. Martin's Lane.

VISITING CARDS by Culleton.—Fifty, best quality, 2s. 3d., post free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate. Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 13s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25 Cranbourn St. (corner of St. Martin's Lane), W.C.

CULLETON'S Guinea Box of Stationery contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn Street (corner of St. Martin's Lane).

FOR ARMS and CREST SEND NAME and COUNTY to T. MORING, Inns of Court Heraldic Office, 44, High Holborn, W.C. Sketch, 3s. 6d.; Coloured, 7s. 6d. Seals, Dies, &c. Illustrated Price Lists Post free.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE (or NORTH LONDON) HOSPITAL. SPECIAL CHRISTMAS APPEAL FOR AID.

Ordinary Annual Expenditure over	£13,000
Reliable Income from Dividends, Annual Subscriptions, &c.	7,600
Deficit	£5,400

The total amount of RELIEF AFFORDED TO NEW CASES FROM JANUARY 1 TO OCTOBER 31 THIS YEAR has been as follows:—In-Patients, 1,687. Out-Patients, 4,762. Casualties, 5,106. Ophthalmic Cases, 1,164. Cases of Diseases of the Skin, 655. Cases of Childbirth attended at the patients' own habitations, 1,237. Total, 14,721.

The Committee most earnestly appeal to the benevolent public for pecuniary assistance to enable them to PAY OFF the above liability of the past year. SUBSCRIPTIONS received by Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand, or at the Hospital.

NEWTON H. NIXON, Secretary.

NATIONAL INSTITUTION FOR DISEASES OF THE SKIN, Gray's Inn Road. Established 1864. PHYSICIAN—Dr. BARR MEADOWS, 47, Victoria Street, S.W. Free to necessitous; payment required from other applicants.

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL, BROAD SANCTUARY, S.W.—The HOUSE COMMITTEE earnestly solicit aid in liquidation of a balance of about £7,000 still due on a total estimated cost of £15,000 for the thorough repair and structural improvement for sanitary purposes of the Hospital. Also donations and annual subscriptions for its current maintenance.

F. PLEYDELL BOUVERIE, Treasurer.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL (SELECT) FOR LADIES, BOLTON HOUSE, 192, Clapham Road, Surrey. Established 1867. A private home where patients suffering from various diseases, and requiring special supervision, can obtain the best medical and surgical treatment without incurring anxiety in their own homes. Treatise of successful cures forwarded for twelve stamps. Physician, DAVID JONES, M.D. Consultations daily, 11 till 1 (Tuesday and Friday excepted), at 15, Welbeck St., London.

MALVERN COLLEGE. The ANNUAL EXAMINATION for ENTRANCE EXHIBITIONS and SCHOLARSHIPS will be held on December 20th and 21st.

ACCIDENTS by FLOOD and FIELD.—Accidents of all kinds may be provided against by a Policy of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY. Hon. A. KINNAIRD, M.P., Chairman. Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000. £1,120,000 has been paid as compensation. No. 64, Cornhill, London. WILLIAM J. VIAN, Sec.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LONDON.—The extensive building now in course of erection on the site of the historical mansion of the Dukes of Northumberland at the corner of Northumberland Avenue, Trafalgar Square, will, when completed, be opened as a first-class Hotel. Messrs. GORDON and CO., Proprietors.

STATHAM'S PRESENTS for YOUTH. Endless Amusement for Holidays and Evenings. Illust. Catalogue, Polytechnic Amusements, Scientific Apparatus, Mechanical Models, Toys, Games. 3 stamps. W. E. STATHAM, 111½, Strand, London.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' One Shilling Moist Colour Box. Unadulterated pigments. Box in japanned tin.—LECHERTIER, BARBE, and CO., 60, Regent St., Lond., and local Artists' Colourmen and Stationers.

THE WIZARD'S BOX of MAGIC. Instructions and Apparatus for performing Ten Capital Conjuring Tricks. Sufficient for one hour's amusement. Post free, 14 stamps.—H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street.

THE MOST LAUGHABLE THING on EARTH.—A new Parlour Pastime, 50,000 Comical Transformations of Wit and Humour. Post free for 14 stamps. H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street, Covent Garden.

THE LOVE CHASE.—The Merriest Game out for any number of Players. 24 Engravings. Post free for 14 stamps. Catalogue, 1 stamp. H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street, Covent Garden.

Established in Seventeen Hundred and Seventy-Nine. BRIDES AND BRIDESMAIDS are invited to inspect, at CAPPER, SON, and CO.'S Warehouses, the various qualities and designs in Underclothing, Silks, Fancy Dress Materials, Costumes, Millinery, Mantles, Sheetings, Towellings, Table Linen, Blankets, Quilts, and all similar requisites for personal as well as for household use.

These articles are all made up on the premises, and Ladies can select at the counters their Silks, Linens, Laces, Madeira Works, Longcloths, and other fabrics, before they are sent to the various work-rooms.

Lists, with prices, On application to CAPPER, SON, and CO., Gracechurch Street and Fenchurch Street, London, E.C.

CHRISTMAS HAMPERS, (WITH PRESENTS), FOR CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR. MESSRS. BENTLEY, KEMP, and CO. make Christmas Hampers their speciality, offering the best value in rare old Wines and Spirits. Their Guinea Hamper is as well worth 21s. in the wholesale trade as one sovereign is worth another; and, with the view of securing future patronage, Bentley, Kemp, and Co. solicit the favour of your order for one or more of the following Christmas Hampers. The Wines have been carefully selected, and the Spirits are considered to be of the purest and best quality in the market, are well matured, from the most eminent distilleries in the world.

THE GUINEA HAMPER FOR £1.

CHRISTMAS GUINEA HAMPERS, Nos. 1 or 2, will be sent carriage paid to any address in the United Kingdom on receipt of post office order value £1.

THE GUINEA HAMPER, No. 1, contains a bottle each of Moet and Chandon's Champagne, Port Wine (five years in bottle), fine Pale Sherry, Martell's Single Star Brandy, St. Julien Claret, Kinahan's L.L. Whiskey, and Old Tom.

THE GUINEA HAMPER, No. 2, contains a bottle each of Perrier Jouet's Champagne, Port Wine (five years in bottle), Old Sherry Gold, Martell's Single Star Brandy, Loins Highland Whiskey, Wedderburn's Pure Rum, and Chablis.

With each Guinea Hamper the usual miniature Cigar Box, containing twelve Havanna Cigars (Le Figaro) is presented.

THE CHRISTMAS DOUBLE HAMPER, No. 3, will be sent carriage paid to any address in the United Kingdom, on receipt of post office order value £2.

THE CHRISTMAS DOUBLE HAMPER, No. 3, contains a bottle each of Moet and Chandon's White Dry Sillery Champagne, Roderer's Champagne, Fine Old Tawny Port, Amontillado Sherry, Sparkling Hock, Chateau Margaux, Hennessy's Brandy, Dunville's V.R. Irish Whisky, Glenlivet Old Scotch Whisky, Wedderburn's Rum, Old Tom, Still Hock. With each double Christmas Hamper is PRESENTED A SMALL CASKET, containing samples of three choice liqueurs in cut glass, models of ordinary decanters. A perfect little gem worthy of a place in the homes of all. The Liqueurs we guarantee to be of the very highest quality and of exquisite flavours.

Hampers to be returned within 3 months, or will be charged for. Carriage paid on all Orders of £1 and upwards to any part of the United Kingdom, and no charge is made for bottles. All orders for the Guinea Hampers must be accompanied with a Post Office Order, value £1, orders for Christmas Double Hampers with a Post Office Order, value £2, payable in favour of JAMES BENTLEY. When ordering Guinea Hampers, please mention whether you require Hamper No. 1 or No. 2, if no preference is given No. 1 will be sent. Address all letters and other communications, BENTLEY, KEMP, and CO., 325 Broad Street, Birmingham.

CHRISTMAS CASES, One Guinea containing 3 Bottles of Port, 3 Sherry, 1 Gin, 2 Rum, 2 Whiskey, 1 Brandy, 1 lb. Tea. All reputed quart bottles warranted pure and genuine. Sent bottles, case, and carriage free, to any Railway Station in England, by the VICTORIA WINE CO., 12, Mark Lane. P.O.O. to W. W. HUGHES.

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY | "THE PERFECTION OF WHISKY." UNRIVALLED FOR "TODDY." Wholesale of the Sole Proprietors, GREENLEES BROS. 1, Gresham Buildings, E.C. (Distilleries, Argyleshire.)

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—Universally recommended by the Medical Profession. A pure old spirit, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome. Dr. HASSALL says.—"The samples were soft and mellow to the taste, aromatic and ethereal to the smell. The Whisky must be pronounced to be pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality."

WILLS' "BRISTOL MIXTURE" MILD AND FRAGRANT. WILLS' "SMOKING MIXTURE." A CHOICE COMBINATION OF "FIRST GROWTHS." Sold everywhere in One, Two, and Four Ounce Packets, protected by our Name and Trade Mark, W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

NATURAL MINERAL WATERS.

VICHY. Property of the French Government.

CELESTINS—The water of this spring is very agreeable, sparkling, and slightly acidulated. Remedy for complaints of the Kidneys, Gravel, Gout, Diabetes, Rheumatism, &c.

HAUTERIVE—This spring contains a greater quantity of carbonic acid, and is especially recommended as a table water.

GRANDE-GRILLE—For complaints of the Liver and Biliary Organs, Indigestion, &c.

HOPITAL—For Stomach complaints, &c.

VICHY WATERS are pleasant to the taste, and may be drank pure or mixed with wine or spirits.

CAUTION—See that the name of the particular water required is on the capsule.

Sold by all Chemists, Wine, and Mineral Merchants. Price One Shilling per Bottle.

GOUT and RHEUMATISM.—The excruciating pain of gout or rheumatism is quickly relieved and cured in a few days by that celebrated medicine, BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS. They require no restraint of diet during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part. Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per box.

CONSUMPTION! CONSUMPTION! SILPHIUM CYRENAICUM (the celebrated plant of the Ancients) has now been acknowledged by the principal celebrities of the French faculty to be the only cure for Consumption, and all affections of the Pulmonary Organs, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c., &c. Its effect is magical, and the cure certain. To be obtained from all Chemists, with pamphlets, full instructions, &c. Wholesale from London Patent Medicine houses.

DINNEFORD'S FLUID MAGNESIA. The best Remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEADACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION; and safest aperient for delicate constitutions, ladies, and children. Of all Chemists.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the finest purifiers of the blood. They speedily correct all disorders of the liver and stomach, are invaluable in cases of dysentery, and as a general family medicine have no equal.

GOLDEN HAIR.—Robare's Aureoline produces, by two or three applications, the beautiful golden colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. of all perfumers and chymists. Wholesale, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, 5, Great Marlborough Street, W., and 93 and 95, City Road, E.C., London; Pinaud & Meyer, Boul. de Strasbourg, 37, Paris; 31, Graben, Vienna; and Rue des Longs Chariots, Brussels.

NUDA VERITAS.—Grey Hair restored by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials post free.—R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

PROFESSOR BROWNE'S WIGS and SCALPS, from 35s. 47, FENCHURCH STREET.

PROFESSOR BROWNE'S Hair Department for Ladies comprises a large collection of Long Hair Head Dresses, Crop and Frizzy ditto, Chignons, Plaits, Coils, Coronets, Cachepeignes, and covered Stems in all shades of colour to suit the present fashion. Also Bands, Fronts, and Curls.—47, Fenchurch Street.

PROFESSOR BROWNE has the largest stock of Ladies' and Gentlemen's Ornamental Hair in the World always on view at his Establishment, 47, Fenchurch Street, London.

GREY HAIR RESTORED to its Original Colour in one week by the use of CHARLES BOND'S HAIR RENOVATOR. The quickest, safest, and cheapest Hair Colour Restorer extant. Large Bottles, 5s 6d. each; carriage free for six extra stamps.—CHARLES BOND, 239, Oxford Street (opposite Marble Arch), W.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CONSTIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children. The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says "It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families." Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists. Wholesale, 82, Southwark Street, London.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER OF

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE, containing the following Popular Dance Music:

Trial by Jury Lancers	Charles D'Albert.
Constantinople Quadrille	Charles D'Albert.
Die Fledermaus Waltz	Johann Strauss.
Les Lointains Waltz	Emile Waldteufel.
Maiden's Dream Waltz	Edward Hoffmann.
The Schomberg Galop	Charles D'Albert.
Floretta Polka	Charles D'Albert.
Pizzicato Polka	J. and J. Strauss.
Forget-me-not Galop	A. Hecker.

And a New Quadrille,
MOLLIE DARLING, by CHARLES D'ALBERT.
Price One Shilling; post free, 1s. 2d.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

DISTANT SHORE WALTZ. By CHARLES D'ALBERT. New Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's Song. Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CLEOPATRA GALOP. By Charles D'ALBERT, Just published. "A splendid galop." Beautifully illustrated, 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE FANFARE POLKA. By Charles D'ALBERT. Illustrated. Price 1s. 6d. net. Orchestra, 3s.; Septett, 2s.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

	Net.
SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite Composer."	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Work	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	1 6
RINK GALOP	2 0

The above, arranged for Full Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s each.
N.B. A Complete List of M. D'Albert's Popular Dance Music will be sent on application to
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

A NEW CHRISTMAS SONG,

THE KING OF OUR SAXON YULE. By W. F TAYLOR. A jovial song for Baritone or Bass Voice, with chorus ad lib. Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SPECIALITIES in PIANOFORTES

CHAPPELL and CO.'S STUDENT'S PIANOFORTE. Compass 5 Octaves, 15 gs., or £1 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SCHOOL PIANINOS. From Canadian Walnut, 20 gs., or 2 gs. per qr. on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT PIANINOS, 30 gs., or £3 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR PIANINO, 35 gs., or £3 10s per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MODEL PIANETTE, 35 gs., or £3 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH MODEL, 40 gs., or £4 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S COLONIAL MODEL, 45 gs., or £4 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S FOREIGN MODEL, 50 gs., or £5 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH OBLIQUE, 55 gs., or £5 10s per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S OBLIQUE GRAND, 70 gs., or £7 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IRON-FRAMED OBLIQUE, 90 gs., or £9 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MIGNON IRON GRAND, 80 gs., or £8 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR IRON GRAND, 110 guineas, or £11 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

UPWARDS of ONE HUNDRED VARIETIES on VIEW.

MAY BE HAD OF ALL PIANOFORTE DEALERS throughout the United Kingdom.

SHOW-ROOMS, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

STEAM FACTORY, CHALK FARM ROAD, N.W.

DANCE MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

HAMMOND'S MUSIC PORTFOLIO. Price 1s. each number. Post free 13 stamps. Violin and Cornet Accompaniments to each number, 6d each.

No. 1 CONTAINS:

Brise des Nuits Waltzes	Lamothe.
Hydropaten Waltzes	Gung'l.
Manuelita Waltzes	Waldteufel
Autograph Waltzes	Strauss
St. David's Quadrille	Dan Godfrey
Bruder Lustig Galop	Budik.

CONTENTS OF No 2.

Le Premier Baiser Waltzes	Lamothe
Venus Reigen Waltzes	Gung'l.
Den Lieben Langen Tag Waltzes	Rudel.
Deutsche Herzen Waltzes	Strauss.
The 'Varsity Lancers	D'Egville.
The Pet Schottische	Bertrand

CONTENTS OF No. 3.
SIX WALTZES BY JOSEPH GUNG'L.

Soldaten Lieder	Waltzes.
Gräfenberger	Waltzes.
Daheim!	Waltzes.
Jongherren Tänze	Waltzes.
Fantasiebilder	Waltzes.
Mein schönster Tag in Berlin	Waltzes

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Frühlingslieder Waltzes	Gung'l.
Lille Waltzes	Strauss.
Le Tour du monde Waltzes	Metra.
La Fiancée Waltz	Lamothe.
Hochzeit (Wedding) Quadrille	Strauss.
Pergola Polka	Marie.

CONTENTS OF NO. 5.

Amoretten Tänze Waltzes, duet	Gung'l.
Soldaten Lieder Waltzes, duet	Gung'l.

A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, London, W.

NEW MUSIC by Mary Travers (post free)

Faithful	1s. 6d. net.
It Was Nothing But a Rose, E flat, F, A flat	2s od. net.
Wishing, E flat, F	1s. 6d. net.
Coquette, Morceau de Salon	1s. 6d. net.
Impromptu (in D)	2s. od. net.
Original Air, with Variations (in A)	1s. 6d. net.

ASHBEE and HOLLOWAY, 23, Spring St., Hyde Park, W.

BUTLER'S MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Violins, Concertinas, Harmoniums, Flutes, Clarionets, Flageolets, Guitars, Zithers, Banjoes, Accordions, Flutinas, Cornets, Saxhorns, Drums, Fifes, and Musical Instruments of every description. Largest assortment in the kingdom at BUTLER'S MANUFACTORY, 29, Haymarket, London.—Illustrated catalogue, 50 pages, post free.

THE MUSICAL TIMES. Price 3d. The Largest and Best Musical Journal (64 Pages).

THE MUSICAL TIMES for December contains:—Holiday Music, by H. C. Lunn; The Great Composers, Sketched by Themselves; Mozart, by J. Bennett (continued); History of Music Printing, by Dr. Chrysander (concluded); Borrowed Plumes; Newcastle Concerts; Glasgow Choral Union; Edinburgh Choral Union; Monday Popular, Crystal Palace, and other Concerts; Her Majesty's Opera; Opera-Comique; Reviews; Foreign and Country News; Part Song, "In Memoriam Therese Titiens," by J. L. Roeckel; and Christmas Carol, "Hollyberries," by W. J. Westbrook. Postage free 4d. Annual subscription 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for December contains Part Song, "In Memoriam, Therese Titiens," by J. L. Roeckel, and Christmas Carol, "Hollyberries," by W. J. Westbrook. Music separately, 1½d.

NEW SONG BY JOSEPH BARNBY.

ELIZABETH'S SONG, from "The Saint's Tragedy," by the Rev. CHARLES KINGSLEY. Set to Music by JOSEPH BARNBY. 4s.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S MUSIC Primers. Edited by Dr. STAINER. The following are now ready:—

Third Edition.

THE PIANOFORTE PRIMER. By ERNST PAUER. Price 2s.

Second Edition

THE ORGAN PRIMER. By Dr. STAINER. Price 2s.

Second Edition.

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC PRIMER. By W. H. CUMMINGS. Price 1s.

Second Edition.

THE ELEMENTS OF THE BEAUTIFUL IN MUSIC. By ERNST PAUER. Price 1s. (Novello, Ewer, and Co's Music Primers.)

Ready on December 15.

HARMONY PRIMER. By Dr. Stainer.

SIXTY HARMONIUM VOLUNTARIES. Arranged by J. W. ELLIOTT. 1s

MENDELSSOHN'S ELIJAH.—Arranged for the Pianoforte by BERTHOLD TOURS. Folio size, 5s.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH.—Arranged for the Pianoforte by BERTHOLD TOURS. Folio size, 5s. All the above Works may be had of the Musicsellers in the Town, or direct from NOVELLO, EWER, and CO., 1, Berners Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C.

FOR UNTO US A CHILD IS BORN (Handel). Transcribed for the Pianoforte by GEORGE FREDERICK WEST (No. 29 of his Gems selected from the Great Masters, 4th Series). 3s., post free at half-price.—London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO., of whom may be had gratis and post free a Catalogue of all Mr. West's Pianoforte Works.

HALF-HOURS with the ORATORIOS and other SACRED COMPOSITIONS. Arranged for the Pianoforte by GEORGE FREDERICK WEST, in six books. "Mr. West presents us with no less than 37 little sacred gems, selected from the sacred writings of Haydn, Spohr, Handel, Dr Arne, Mendelssohn, Rossini, Mozart, Cherubini, Mehul, and Naumann, and arranged easily for a solo pianist. These pieces are equally suitable for the harmonium or American organ."—Vide Sunday Times. Beautifully illustrated. Each book post free for 24 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

THE LIFEBOAT. New Song. Written by A. M. LIMPUS. Music by HENRY F. LIMPUS 3s., post free at half-price.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street. Order everywhere.

GAVOTTE in B flat (HANDEL), from his Overture to Otho. Arranged for the Pianoforte by GEORGE FREDERICK WEST. 4s., post free at half-price.
London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

MAYDAY (MULLER). Arranged for the Pianoforte by FREDERICK LEMOINE. 4s., post free at half-price.—London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street. Order everywhere.

HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE. 1,154th Edition.—Sixty-eight pages, 4s.; post free 28 stamps. The number of editions this work has passed through sufficiently guarantees its well-deserved and world-wide popularity. Appendix to the same work, by George Frederick West, 5s.; post free, 30 stamps.—London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

NEW DANCE MUSIC FOR THE PIANOFORTE. By COTSFORD DICK. "The Singing Quadrille," "The Look-out Quadrille," 4s each. "L'Eclair Galop," 3s (all with illustrated titles). Also his "Contre Danse," 3s. All post free at half-price.—London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street. Order everywhere.

NEW WALTZES by OTTO MULLER—Composer of the famous Geliebt und Verloren (Loved and Lost). In making the present announcement DUFF and STEWART beg to point to the unprecedented success, and (for the few months it has been published) unparalleled sale of Geliebt und Verloren, and they now have great pleasure in submitting for public approval Otto Muller's Two New Sets of Waltzes,
ZART UND TREU (Tender and True), and
VERLOBT (Betrothed).
Post free 2s. each.—DUFF and STEWART, 157, Oxford St.

A PRETTY PRESENT for CHILDREN—WATCHING FOR PA. Juvenile Quadrille on popular melodies sung by Christy's Minstrels (beautifully illustrated), arranged without octaves and fingered throughout by JULES ROCHARD. Post free 2s.
DUFF and STEWART, 157, Oxford Street.

LOUISA GRAY'S NEW SONGS.

Under the Lamplight. 4s. | My Highland Home. 3s.
Home of My Childhood 3s. | Jenny's Wedding. 3s.
Jeanette. 3s. | My Little Sister. 3s.

Half-price.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

BERTHOLD TOURS' NEW SONGS.

Stay, Sweet Swallow | The Miner.
Love and Time. | Only Love Can Tell.
One Love Alone. | The Charms that I Sing

Post free 2s. each.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford St.,

ROBERT STANLEY'S NEW SONGS.
DEAR LITTLE FLOWERS.
WHEN LOVE'S GLOW HATH GONE BY.
EASTING.
Price 2s each net
J. B. CRAMER and CO., 201, Regent Street.

STOLEN KISSES WALTZ. By Hans WALDENFELDT. Free, 2s. Played nightly at the Globe with immense success. "A decided hit."
OSMAN PASHA MARCH. By ADOLPH MEYER. Free, 2s. "A bold, inspiriting melody—the time well marked."
London: WOOD and CO., 3, Great Marlborough Street.

MUSICAL FUN FOR CHRISTMAS

HOLIDAY SYMPHONY. By Ed. MARLOIS. For Seven Toy Instruments (Violin and Cello ad. lib.), and Piano Solo or Duet. Price complete, Solo, 2s. 6d. net. Duet, 4s. net Sent post free.
W. CZERNY, 349, Oxford Street, W.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867. BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.
Central Depot for the British Empire: 40, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

BOOSEY and CO.'S NEW SONGS.

THE TAR'S FAREWELL. The words by F. C. BURNAND. The music by the composer of "Nancy Lee." Sung by Mr. Santley at the Ballad Concerts. Price 2s. net.

THE BETTER LAND. By F. H. COWEN. Sung by Madame Antoinette Sterling at the Ballad Concerts. 2s net.

AT LAST. By F. H. Cowen. Sung by Miss Anna Williams throughout Madame Trebelli's provincial tournée, and encored every night. "'At Last' was a brilliant triumph both for the composer and singer, the song being re-demanded with an enthusiasm which would brook no denial."—Manchester Examiner. Price 2s. net.

HAMILTON AIDÉ'S NEW SONG, COME AGAIN. New Ballad by the Composer of "Remember or Forget. Price 2s. net.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG, WHEN THOU ART NEAR. Sung by Edward Lloyd. Price 2s. net.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S PIANOFORTE ROOMS.
GRAND and UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES,
by all the great makers, both English and Foreign,
for SALE or HIRE,
subject to the largest discount obtainable in London.
Pianettes, from £20. Short Grands, from £40.
Sole Address, 295, Regent Street.

GEO. WOODS and CO.'S AMERICAN ORGANS.
BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street,
Sole Agents for the United Kingdom.
Pipe, Reed, and Pedal Organs, from £17 to £200.
Illustrated price lists post free.

PRATTEN's PERFECTED FLUTES, Cylinder and Cone, commencing at 4 gs. The Siccama Flute and the Boehm Old and New System of Fingering. Particulars of all these Instruments upon application to the Manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, W.

BOOSEY and CO.'S BRASS INSTRUMENTS FOR AMATEURS.
THE DISTIN CORNET, from £3 10s.
THE DISTIN CELEBRATED LIGHT VALVE CORNETS, 7 and 9 guineas, are the best Cornets manufactured.
THE DISTIN MINIATURE CORNET-A-PISTONS, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN BALLAD HORN in C, 9 guineas.
THE DISTIN DRAG AND POST HORNS AND BAND INSTRUMENTS at all prices.
THE DISTIN MONTHLY BRASS BAND JOURNAL, 10s. 6d. per annum.
The above Instruments were exhibited by Boosey and Co at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and were awarded a Prize Medal "For power and good quality of tone, fine workmanship." Estimates for Bands of all sizes, also illustrations and prices, to be had of the sole manufacturers, BOOSEY and CO., 295, Regent Street, London.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.
A GREAT SECRET. Words by F. E. Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Trevor.
"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News.
Post free 24 stamps.
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row

Price 1s. each Book; by post, 14 stamps.

BATH'S "MUSICAL MUSEUM" for THE HARMONIUM.

BOOK I., containing twenty-six Sacred Melodies, selected and arranged by W. Layland.

BOOK II., containing eighteen Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by A. S. Holloway.

BOOK III., containing twenty Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by Dr. Spark.

BOOK IV., selected and arranged by Michael Watson, is as cheap a shillingsworth as can be met with in the musical world. It contains twenty-two pieces for that instrument, including a popular "Volkslied," by Mendelssohn, a "Rondo," by Dussek, a "Bourée" and Gavotte, by Bach—in fact, most of our great ancient and modern composers have contributed a share to this excellent little work.—Vide Graphic, Oct. 27.

BOOK V., containing eighteen Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by J. E. Webster.
J. BATH, 40, Great Marlborough Street, W.

JUST PUBLISHED. — LYRICAL ILLUSTRATIONS OF MODERN ENGLISH POETS. By JOHN BARNETT, being a Collection of Fifteen Songs for soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass voices Price 6s. net, cloth boards.—HUTCHINGS and ROMER, London.

MUSICAL-BOX Depot, 56, Cheapside, London, E.C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price £4 to £120. Snuff-Boxes, 18s. to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and M'CULLOCH, as above.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S Practical PianoFORTE SCHOOL.
Section 1. No. 1. PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

SWING WALTZ. By C. Danzi.
Illustrated Title. Price 4s.
LAWN TENNIS SCHOTTISCHE.
By T. CAMPBELL. Illustrated Title. Price 3s.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, 272a, Regent Circus, Oxford St., London; Cross Street, South King Street, Manchester.

MUSICAL BOXES, by Nicole Freres.—KEITH, PROWSE, and CO., direct importers, have the largest Stock of really fine BOXES in Europe, £3 to £300. The new rooms devoted to the display of these instruments are now ready. Self-acting and Barrel Pianoforte, 18 to 1,200 gs.

FLUTES.—NEW MODEL, for beauty of tone unsurpassed, four guineas and seven guineas; Rudall's Prize-medal Flutes, new and second-hand. A great variety of second-hand Flutes, one guinea to 25 guineas, at KEITH, PROWSE, and CO.'s Manufactory, 48, Cheapside.

BANJOES.—CHEAPSIDE MODEL is best. Covered back, machine head, &c., five guineas; including light case, £6. Other models one to twelve guineas. Self-instructing book, with airs, songs, &c., 6s. net.—KEITH, PROWSE, and CO., Manufacturers, 48, Cheapside.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO (Co-operative price for cash). Seven octaves, strong, sound, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free. Drawings gratis on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., Portman Sq.

PIANOS, £16—Pianos, £18—Pianos, £20—GREAT SALE of PIANOS returned from Hire. Full compass, 7 octaves. In excellent condition, equal to new, at half the original prices. Packed free and forwarded to any part of the kingdom. Descriptive lists post free on application.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., London, W.

EBONY and GOLD PIANOS, 28 Guineas, 35 Guineas, and 45 Guineas.—These charming and elegant Pianos, with ormolu embellishments, elaborately carved work, repetition action, and every recent improvement, may now be obtained at the above low prices for cash, or on the three years' system at one guinea per month. The Illustrated Catalogue gratis and post free.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

PIANO, £35 (Civil Service cash price).—Trichord Drawing Room Model, repetition action, grand, rich, full tone, handsome Italian walnut-wood case, elaborately carved fretwork front, and cabriole truss legs. The usual price charged for this instrument is 50 guineas.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE

PULVERMACHER's "GALVANISM, NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF EXHAUSTED VITAL ENERGY."
In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Bands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post free for three stamps, on application to
J. L. PULVERMACHER'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 194, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—CURTAINS.—OETZMANN and CO. beg to announce that they have now received all their new designs in CURTAINS and CURTAIN MATERIALS, British and Foreign, of every description; some of the designs are very artistic. An early inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67 to 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
OETZMANN & CO.
67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,
HAMPSTEAD ROAD,
NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZMANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PREMISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free

READY MONEY versus CREDIT or BOOKING.—Messrs. OETZMANN and CO.'s business is conducted on the co-operative system of small profits and cash payments, with the extra advantages of centralised management and personal proprietary supervision, the public receiving all the benefit of the co-operative system without its inherent trouble and annoyances, and the prices will be found lower than those charged at Co-operative Stores. This system offers great advantages to those in a position to pay ready money.—OETZMANN and CO.

CABINET and UPHOLSTERY DEPARTMENT.—Elegant Drawing-room Suites, handsomely carved Italian walnut wood, upholstered in rich Worsted Damask, from 8 guineas; ditto in Rich Silk and Satin, 20 to 60 guineas; Elegant Black and Gold Suites, from 12 guineas; superior ditto, from 18 to 50 guineas; solid Mahogany Dining Room Suites, 8 guineas; ditto Fine Spanish Mahogany, upholstered in best Marone Leather, 14 guineas; Massive Mahogany Telescope Dining Tables, from £2 15s.; handsome walnut large OVAL Centre Table, 3 guineas.
OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO.'S BEDROOM SUITES.—One of the largest and best assortments in the kingdom to select from, displayed in Showrooms 228 feet long, with Bedsteads and Bedding fitted up for inspection. Bedroom Suite, consisting of Wardrobe, Chest of Drawers, Washstand, Toilet Table and Glass, Towel Airer, 3 Chairs, and Pedestal Cupboard, from 6½ guineas complete. Some new and elegant designs, at 15, 18, and 21 guineas. Large and handsomely decorated Bedroom Suites, in Ash, Pitch Pine, and other Woods, at 28, 36, 50, and 75 guineas Also in Black and Gold, 50 guineas upwards.—OETZMANN and CO.,

OETZMANN and CO.'S PATENT MATTRESS, the COMPENDIUM, requires no other mattress, palliasse, or bed to be used with it, and is at once the healthiest, softest, most economical, and complete bed extant. Descriptive catalogue post free.

ARTISTIC CANE WINDOW BLINDS and SCREENS.—These fashionable Blinds can now be had from stock or made to order in any size or design; also Cane and Wicker Chairs, Ladies' Needlework Mounts, Flower Stands, &c., in colours or black and gold. Prices considerably below those usually charged for these goods. Illustrated price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

PAPER-HANGINGS. — OETZMANN and CO.—PAPER HANGINGS at WHOLESALE PRICES.—A great reduction in price. All the new patterns are now on view at the Show Rooms.—OETZMANN and CO.

LINOLEUM.—OETZMANN and CO.—LINOLEUM.—Warm, soft, carpet-like in appearance, and very durable. ALL the NEW PRIZE DESIGNS are NOW in STOCK. A visit of inspection solicited. Prices below those usually charged for this favourite floor covering. The trade supplied.—OETZMANN and CO.

ANGLO-TURKEY CARPETS.—These superior Carpets, of which Messrs. OETZMANN and CO. have the exclusive sale, are of first-class British manufacture, have all the style and appearance of real Turkey Carpets, at little more than the price of good Brussels, and are very durable. Price lists post free on application. For the convenience of those residing at a distance, a large piece showing the border and centre of carpet, sent on receipt of 5s., which will be deducted from price of carpet or refunded upon return of pattern. Hearth Rugs to match, 6 ft. long by 2 ft. 8 in. wide, £1 5s. 6d. A large stock of real Turkey carpets at reduced prices.—OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s. 6d. There is nothing sold that can be compared with these for quality and cheapness. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and CLOTHING combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable with the least possible weight, and are of the very best quality. Price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

LINEN DEPARTMENT.—Fine white Linen Damask Table Cloths, 2 yards long, 3s. 11d.; 2½ yards long by 2 yards wide, 5s. 11d.; 3 yards by 2½ yards, 8s. 11d.; 3½ yards by 2½ yards, 12s. 6d; 4 yards by 2½ yards, 15s; Breakfast Cloths, from 1s. 11d.; strong Linen Kitchen Table Cloths, 1s. 11d. each; stout Huckaback, from 4½d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 4½d. per yard; stout White Calico Sheeting, 76 inches wide, 1s. per yard; 88 inches ditto, 1s. 6d. per yard; white Linen Sheeting, 76 inches wide, 1s. 11d.; 86 inches ditto, 2s. 6d. per yard; superfine quality ditto, 88 inches wide, 2s. 11d. per yard. Horrocks's Long Cloths and Sheetings at the Manufacturer's wholesale prices. Ladies should write for patterns, and compare price and quality.—OETZMANN and CO.

THE PORTLAND COAL VASE.—OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGNS for the Season, new shape, much admired, handsomely japanned and gold relieved, has bowl castors, opal handle, handscoop, and strong loose lining—a great convenience and saving in the wear. Price complete only 10s. 6d.

CHINA and GLASS DEPARTMENT.—Ironstone China Dinner Services—various neat and elegant designs, from 15s. 9d. the set; handsome ditto at 25s. and 35s per set; a large assortment of superb patterns for selection; dessert services complete, 17 pieces, 13s. 9d; best French China ditto, 18 pieces, very chaste, with burnished gold edges, 18s. 9d.; China Tea Services, complete, 28 pieces, 5s 9d.; elegant ditto, burnished gold and enamelled, 15s. 9d.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.
OETZMANN & CO.
HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by EDWARD JOSEPH MANSFIELD at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand both in the Parish of St Clement Danes, Middlesex.—DECEMBER 15, 1877

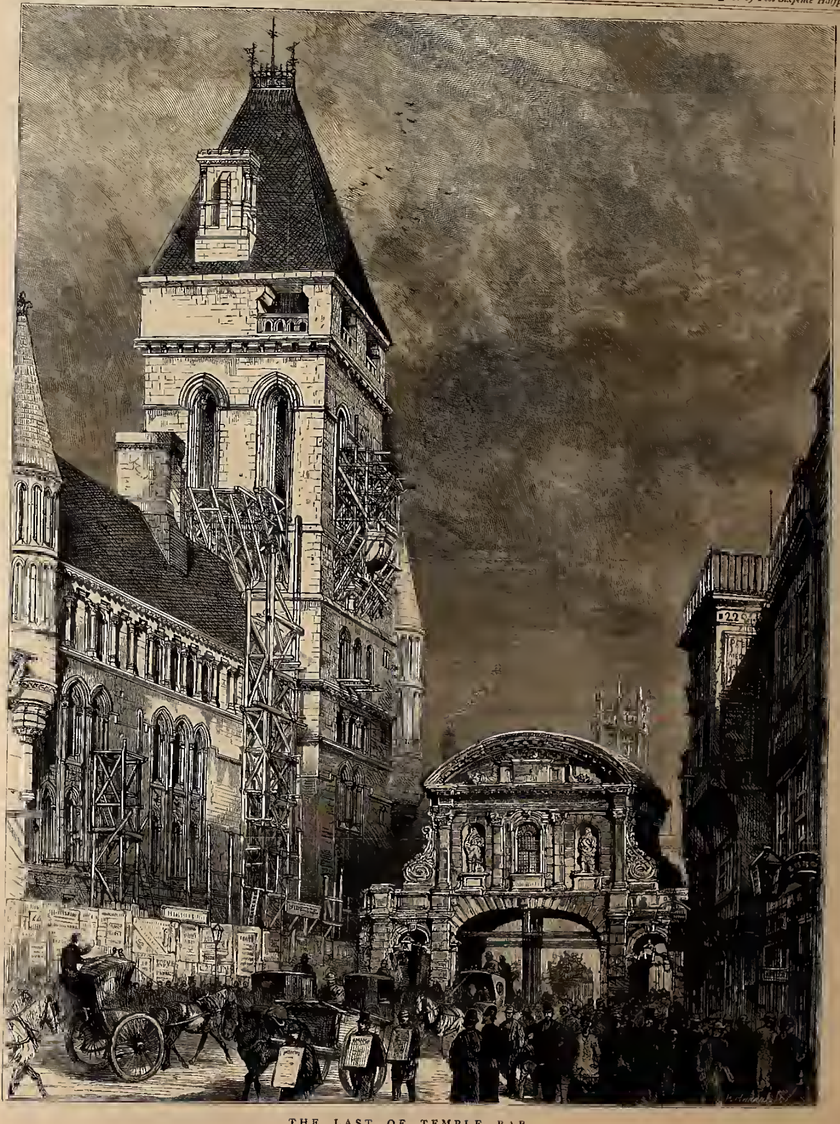
THE GRAPHIC

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

VOL. XVI.—No. 421
Regd at General Post Office as a Newspaper

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1877

PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



THE LAST OF TEMPLE BAR
ERECTED 1672—DEMOLISHED 1877

Topics of the Week

The Summoning of Parliament.——The action of the Government in summoning Parliament a little earlier than usual has been very generally approved. There can be no doubt that we are approaching a time of serious peril for the English nation. No one yet knows what are the terms of peace on which Russia means to insist. If true to her word, she would ask no more than that the Christian subjects of the Porte should be placed under a system of just rule; but even her admirers are forced to admit that it is at least possible she may ask a great deal more. She may demand that the Turkish fleet shall be given up to her, or that the Straits shall be opened, and opened only to her own ships of war; or her claims may be even more extravagant. In any case it is highly desirable that England should be prepared for the worst, and make up her mind in time as to the course she means to adopt should the worst be realised. In no way can the real opinion of the country be more directly discovered than by the meeting of the only body by which it authoritatively expresses its will. It will not be surprising if a small section of both Houses proclaims itself in favour of absolute non-intervention; but the vast majority will certainly not approve this policy. All parties are sincerely anxious that there should be peace; and the country would intensely dislike even to seem to fight for a State which has fallen so far short of its obligations as the Porte. But it is not the less a fact that we have interests of the most vital importance in the East; and everything indicates that if they are really endangered they will be vigorously defended. We can only hope that Russia will not seek to imperil them. There is reason to believe that she would not venture to do so if she were convinced that England has a decided policy, and intends to abide by it. But of late there have been so many discordant voices that she may be excused for not understanding our genuine purpose. Parliament will probably soon put an end to all doubts. Last Session there was practical unanimity as to the duty of the nation, and it will be strange if this state of things has been disturbed by the events which have since occurred.

An International Exhibition at the Antipodes——Fired by the example of other metropolitan cities in Europe and America, Melbourne now proposes in 1879 to hold an International Show, or World's Fair, as the Americans more vernacularly style it. We hope Sydney is not jealous. She is the eldest sister of the Australasian family group, but Melbourne exceeds her in wealth and population, and altogether, though inferior in situation, more thoroughly deserves to be regarded as the representative metropolis of the great Island-Continent. The progress of these Australian settlements has been really marvellous, when we remember that before the survey of Captain Cook (whose daughter died not many years ago), Australia was literally a terra incognita. But the chief progress has been within the last five-and-twenty years, since gold was discovered; and it makes us rub our eyes with astonishment to recollect that Melbourne, who now proposes to put herself on a par with London, Paris, Vienna, and Philadelphia, was in 1851 a little wool-exporting town of twenty thousand people, with a post-office like that of a country village, a single letter box sufficing for all the correspondence of the inhabitants. We admit that a year later, when the gold-fever was raging, there used to be a considerable jam around the said post-office window, still we cannot help contrasting the prosperous present with the humble past. But we have as yet left the most important point in the Australasian Exhibition programme unnoticed. It is this. Will H.R.H. the Prince of Wales consent to go and open the Show? Victorians are eagerly awaiting a reply to this momentous question.

Peace in France.——No event of our time has caused more general satisfaction throughout Europe than the sudden submission of Marshal MacMahon to the will of France. There was for a time real danger of civil war; and it was with a feeling of profound relief that the world received the announcement that the peril had been averted. A great many rumours have since been going about as to the reason why the Marshal yielded. According to one account, he sounded the leaders of the army as to the support he might hope to receive if he attempted a coup d'état; another theory is that a significant and startling hint was sent to him from Germany. It is, however, more probable that he simply became aware of the danger to which his obstinacy was exposing France, and that he shrank from running any further risks. This is the view generally accepted by the French themselves, and when we remember how carefully he was long prevented from learning the real drift of public opinion it is by far the most likely supposition. In that case he will continue to be regarded as an honest soldier, although one who has easily allowed himself to be misled, and whose very simplicity makes it necessary that he should be carefully watched. The Republicans were at first afraid of some hidden plot; but they were reassured by the unmistakeable terms of the Message read by the new Ministry, and M. Gambetta seems to have set off for the enjoyment of his Christmas holidays with a perfectly easy mind. If his followers are moderate, the Republic will be all the stronger for the trials through which it has passed; but everything depends upon their self-control. Any extravagance on their part would inevitably lead to the resignation of M. Dufaure, and then the Duc de Broglie would be sure to make his influence once more felt. The Bonapartists are doing their utmost to stir up strife among the victorious party, but under the guidance of M. Gambetta the Left may be trusted to meet their intrigues in a proper spirit. He is thoroughly persuaded of the necessity of moderation, and he is not likely to forfeit the confidence which he has gained by his skill in conducting the Chamber through its recent troubles.

Money Orders and Registered Letters.——Few entries in the gloomy calendar of crime which is unfolded month after month are sadder than those which relate to defaulting letter-carriers and sorters, who, if convicted, are invariably sentenced to five years' penal servitude. Compared with the punishments inflicted on habitual wife-beaters, or on persons convicted for the first time of other than Post Office thefts, this penalty seems terribly severe; but it is, we presume, rendered necessary by the fact that postmen are exposed to exceptional temptation. For years past the Post Office authorities have endeavoured to discourage the transmission of coin and other valuables in letters, but hitherto without much avail, a large portion of the public being utterly stupid and inconsiderate. Lord John Manners is now about to try another tack. By doubling the fee hitherto payable, he proposes to lessen the demand for money orders, which are a troublesome and unprofitable branch of Post Office business, while by lowering the registration fee he hopes to induce the public to send through the Post Office an increased number of letters containing coin and other valuables. Hitherto, many such packages have been sent, as it were, clandestinely; they have acted as a terrible temptation to dishonestly-inclined postmen, and so their contents have often been tampered with. As such enclosures will in future be placed in special envelopes supplied by the Post Office, the temptation under the new system will be reduced to a minimum; and as the registration fee is very moderate, as the Post Office authorities offer to recoup any loss not exceeding forty shillings, provided their regulations are complied with, and as the bother of obtaining and cashing money orders will be avoided, it is to be hoped that the public will heartily second the Postmaster-General's arrangement. For very small sums, however, postage stamps will, no doubt, still continue to be sent in unregistered letters, as people will decline to incur the expense of a twopenny registration fee for the sake of sending sixpence or a shilling; but since postage stamps are thus practically used as miniature bank-notes, it seems a pity that we do not abandon our prejudices in favour of a currency exclusively metallic—which is an expensive luxury—and, like many other countries, issue paper money for sums under five pounds and as low as sixpence.

The Action of Servia.——England has good reason to complain of the course Servia has just seen right to pursue. It was because of her intervention that the petty State was let off so easily after its vain attempt to upset the Porte; and the British Government begged that favourable terms of peace might be granted, on the express understanding that the Servians would not again make themselves troublesome. They have no ground whatever for proclaiming war, and there is something incredibly mean in their waiting till they could intervene without much danger of a second series of disasters. A number of persons in this country so loathe Turkey that they approve of almost anything that adds to her difficulties. But they surely do not realise what war may mean for the unhappy peasantry of Servia. These poor people suffered incredible hardships during the last enterprise into which they were rashly hurried; and what they want above all things is to be allowed peacefully to recover from their misfortunes. Now they are driven once more into scenes of violence and bloodshed, for no other reason than that a few ambitious men think there is a chance of picking up some good things in the midst of the general confusion. Englishmen would be as ready to admire a chivalrous spirit now as at any previous period in their history; but to call the conduct of the Servian rulers chivalrous is grossly to misapply language. To be defined truly, it must be spoken of in much less flattering language.

Free Libraries.——We have often had occasion before now to remark that London, in respect to many improvements, is far behind certain provincial towns. The cause of this is the vastness of London. It is so big that it has no corporate conscience. The municipal spirit —which implies a combination of individuals for the benefit of the community at large—scarcely exists beyond the frontiers of the ancient "City." Let us take Islington as an example,—"Merry Islington," as it used to be styled, but no more merry at present than any other metropolitan suburb, except on the bit of pavement between the Agricultural Hall and the "Angel," where, at any rate during the Cattle Show week, it is apt to be more merry than wise. Now Islington, judging from its wealth and population, would, if removed into the country, be a provincial city of the first magnitude, yet so dwarfed is it by its position in the great metropolitan ocean of bricks and mortar, that it has apparently little more municipal spirit than some sequestered hamlet where the parson and the squire manage everything. We gather this from the report of a public meeting held at Myddleton Hall, where Sir Andrew Lusk and other gentlemen made sensible speeches in favour of establishing free libraries in the parish, but met with strong opposition, and that chiefly from vestrymen, who from their position may be supposed officially to represent the feelings of their fellow Islingtonians. Why, said these spokesmen, should books be provided at the public expense any more than dinners? We can but reply that the two cases are very dissimilar. If we give a man a dinner when he is able to earn one, we run the risk of making him a pauper; but no such result follows from giving him the run of a free picture-gallery, or access to a free collection of books. We have, however, no patience with these malcontents when we think of the excellent public institutions which a city as big and as rich as Islington might have if the inhabitants possessed any genuine public spirit. As for expense, we engage to say that in one night there is as much money taken over the counters of the Islington taverns, from the "Angel" in the south to the "Whittington and Cat" in the north, as would support an excellent free library for a twelvemonth.

The Waits.——We should be sorry to say anything against the bands of young people who, at proper hours, herald the approach of Christmas by appropriate music. In these days it would be a pity to give up the few customs which still remind us of less prosaic times; and of late years most people have remarked an improvement in the singing and playing of the "waits." We do, however, most decidedly object to these persons carrying on their performances at two or three in the morning. They may not have been doing this all over London; but they have certainly been doing it in certain districts, and we fear the feelings the culprits have excited have not been of the benevolent sort supposed to befit the season. An overworked man, rendered nervous by the labours of the day, at last falls asleep. Suddenly he is awakened by a brass band blowing away about a mile off. Conceive the impotent rage with which he denounces his tormentors! He may congratulate himself if his night's rest is not completely ruined, for they slowly approach until they are just under his windows, and then as slowly move off in an opposite direction. The case of the overworked man is bad enough; but the suffering inflicted on invalids is far more serious. In a vast city like London there are, of course, many inevitable nuisances which must be quietly accepted; but this particular nuisance is by no means inevitable, and we venture to say that except England there is not a country in Europe in which it would be tolerated. If a householder chooses, he may order the "waits" away from his door as he may order away organ grinders. But so disagreeable a duty ought surely to be taken off his hands by the police.

Longevity.——A well-known anecdote tells us that when Lord Mansfield, the celebrated judge, had a very aged witness before him, it was his custom minutely to inquire into his or her habits of life, and he invariably found that whether their occupations were sedentary or active, whether they were drunken or sober, such old people were always early risers. As judges on circuit, when trying right-of-way cases, are frequently brought in contact with "the oldest inhabitant" of the neighbourhood, this evidence is valuable. and it is borne out by the experience of the centenarian, Canon Beadon, who, being asked for the secret of his long life and robust health, replied, "Never be out of bed after ten o'clock at night, nor be in bed after seven in the morning; never do any brain-work after dinner, and never wear a great coat." It is far easier, as most of us are aware, to praise early rising than to practise it, but it would not be so difficult of attainment if we went to bed at a reasonable hour. This achievement, however, is undoubtedly harder now than it was a hundred years ago. Modern discoveries have removed or alleviated those perils and dangers of the hours of darkness which to our ancestors were real causes of apprehension. To the inhabitants of towns, especially, with well-guarded and well-lighted streets, night and day are much alike, and hence they sit up late and rise late to the detriment of their health. Late hours of business, too, have been encouraged by the modern habit of suburban residence, and recently it was proposed, as a boon to bank-clerks, that those establishments should open an hour later than at present. We confess that we should prefer to see a change in the opposite direction, and that work should begin two hours earlier. It would, of course, be rather a "pull" during the winter months to arrive at the office at eight instead of ten, but then on the other hand, during the long days, it would be very pleasant to leave the office at four instead of six. The leaders of society might, if they pleased, inaugurate such a change (indeed, Her Majesty sets an admirable example in this respect), but we fear that the bulk of them are too fond of morning slumbers to do so. In conclusion, we do not incline to agree with Canon Beadon's anti-great-coat theory. If it be right to wear warmer clothing in winter than in summer—and Nature makes this provision for her furred and feathered children—it can scarcely be wrong to put on an extra wrap when going from a warm room to a cold road.

NOTICE.——The Half-Sheet this week, though delivered in the middle of the paper, must be placed for binding between pages 588 and 597.

AMUSEMENTS

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—On BOXING NIGHT, PUSS IN BOOTS. Mdlle. Cavalazzi and Ballet of 300. Prices and Day Performances as usual. Booking by Mr. E. Hall. No Fees.

TURN OF THE TIDE. By F. C. Burnand. EVERY EVENING at 8, preceded at 7 by A ROUGH DIAMOND. The most powerful company in London. Box Office Hours 11 to 5. No Booking Fees. Prices from 1s. to £3 3s.—ROYAL OLYMPIC THEATRE.

MESSRS. JOHN SANGER AND SON'S
GRAND CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR CARNIVAL.
ROYAL AGRICULTURAL GREAT HALL, ISLINGTON
Commencing BOXING DAY, Dec. 26, 1877, at Two o'clock.
The most Powerful Attraction ever submitted to the Public, Four Complete Entertainments in One.

Flat Racing, Hurdle Racing, Steeple Chasing, Pony Racing, Roman Racing, Roman Chariot Racing, Camel, Dromedary, and Elephant Racing. Three complete Circus Companies. Mons. Cannoruia and 10 Elephants, the Wonders from the East. Great Display of Fireworks, and the Grand Military Spectacle, entitled THE BOMBARDMENT AND FALL OF PLEVNA, in which Two Thousand Men and Horses, Camels, Oxen, Goats, &c., will take part. Seating Accommodation for Twenty Thousand People. Two Performances daily. Every Afternoon at Two; every Evening at Seven. Reserved Seats (select), 3s.; First-class, 2s.; Second-class, 1s.; and the Great Galleries, 6d.

SANGER'S GRAND NATIONAL AMPHITHEATRE,
WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD.

This commodious and elegant Theatre, the only establishment of its kind in the United Kingdom where the Circus, Hippodrome, and Hippodramatic Performances are given, once the home and pride of the great Astley and Ducrow, and the ambition of every large Equestrian Director of Europe and America, duly Licensed by the Lord Chamberlain, having been gorgeously redecorated, and now possessing all the modern improvements of the most recently erected Theatres in England, both as regards the comfort of the audience and stage requirements, will reopen on Boxing Day, December 26th, 1877, at Two o'clock, with a carefully-selected Burlesque, Pantomime, and Equestrian Company. Production on a scale of splendour of the Grand Christmas Double Pantomime, written by W. M. Akhurst, Esq., entitled WHITTINGTON AND HIS WONDERFUL CAT; OR, HARLEQUIN JOHNNY GILPIN AND HIS RIDE TO EDMONTON. The Pantomime of 1877-8 will (notwithstanding the liberality of the proprietors in their previous productions) by far eclipse any attempt that has been made in this Elegant Theatre. The twelve magnificent Scenes executed by those eminent Artists Messrs. Hayes and Caney. Properties by Mr. John Rogers and assistants; the gorgeous Costumes by Mrs Bovey and assistants; the brilliant Music composed by Giorgi. High-class Vocalists, Comedian Dancers, Double Harlequinade, and the Triple Circus Company. Two Performances Daily, every Afternoon at 2 and evening at 7. Box-office open from 10 till 4. Prices:—Private Boxes from £1 11s. 6d. to £3 3s.; Balcony Stalls, 4s.; Orchestra Stalls, 2s. 6d.; Boxes and Pit Stalls, 2s.; Amphitheatre, 1s. 6d.; Pit, 1s.; Gallery, 6d.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S HOLIDAY FESTIVITIES.
On BOXING DAY, WEDNESDAY NEXT, DECEMBER 26,
THE WORLD FAMED
MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS'
THIRTEENTH ANNUAL SERIES OF HOLIDAY PERFORMANCES will commence in the
ST. JAMES'S GREAT HALL,
Regent Street and Piccadilly,
which will be specially fitted up for these performances.
THE HOLIDAY PROGRAMME will as usual
BE THE RICHEST AND MOST ATTRACTIVE
amidst the entire round of Metropolitan Amusements.
FORTY ARTISTS OF KNOWN EMINENCE will take part in the
HOLIDAY ENTERTAINMENT.
FIVE THOUSAND SEATS
IN THE MOST LUXURIOUS
HALL IN EUROPE.
PERFORMANCES WILL BE GIVEN
EVERY DAY AT THREE, EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT,
UNTIL SATURDAY, JANUARY 12, 1878.

Prices of Admission—Great Area and Gallery (2,000 places), 1s.; Balcony, 2s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Fauteuils, 5s. Children under Twelve Half-price to Stalls and Balcony only. No fees. No charge for programmes. Tickets and places for any day or evening up to Jan. 12 may be secured at Austin's Office, St. James's Hall, without extra charge.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S HOLIDAYS
1877-78.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS'
THIRTEENTH ANNUAL CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S FESTIVAL PERFORMANCES will commence on
BOXING DAY, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26,
WHEN A NEW AND MOST DELIGHTFUL ENTERTAINMENT WILL BE PRESENTED,
in which the entire strength of this great company will be engaged.
PERFORMANCES WILL BE GIVEN
EVERY DAY AT THREE, and
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT,
from BOXING DAY, December 26, to SATURDAY, January 12, inclusive
FIVE THOUSAND SEATS.
Doors open every day at 2, every night at 7.
Places may be booked for any performance of the series without extra charge at Austin's Ticket Office, St. James's Hall.

ST. JAMES'S GREAT HALL,
REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS'
THIRTEENTH ANNUAL SERIES OF CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S HOLIDAY PERFORMANCES.
EVERY DAY AT THREE.
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT.
COMMENCING BOXING DAY.
FIVE THOUSAND SEATS

THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS
HOLIDAY FESTIVAL PERFORMANCES AT
ST. JAMES'S GREAT HALL.
EVERY DAY AT THREE.
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT
Omnibuses run direct to the doors of St. James's Hall from every Railway Station in London. Every West End Omnibus will also convey Visitors from all parts of London to the Doors of the Hall.

THE CANTERBURY.
The Brothers Kulper (Acrobats). Young and Dean (Negro Delineators).
Fred Albert (Comedian).
Miss Agnes Milnes, Miss Marie Rodan, Mr. Charles Butler, Carlo D'Angelis, Neale Campbell, Fred Coyne (Comedian).
Romah (Flying Trapezist). Benedetti (The Sword Swallower).
"Martha" (Selection from).
"PLEVNA,"
Panorama and Diorama.
F. Wilson (Comic). Wainratta (Invisible Wire Walker).
Colmar (Acrobat).
COMIC BALLET.

THE CANTERBURY.—Licensed to F. VILLIERS.
"PLEVNA."
This entertainment consists of a Panorama of the Seat of War from Constantinople to the scenes of the latest interest, with a Diorama of Plevna and the victory by Osman Pasha in September last. The views and costumes from Sketches taken by Mr. F. Villiers, the Special Correspondent and Artist, who visited every town and city given in the Panorama, and was an eyewitness of the celebrated battle when the Turkish forces gained so brilliant a success. The sketches and particulars of the whole are presented to the public through the kind permission of the proprietors of The Graphic. The Ballet in the Harem supported by Miss Phyllis Broughton and Madame Victor, and Corps de Ballet. The children have been instructed in the Turkish and Russian manœuvres by Colour-Sergeant White of the Grenadier Guards.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.—ONCE IN A CENTURY, A MUSICAL ALMANAC, by Mr. Corney Grain, and OUR NEW DOLL'S HOUSE. Next Wednesday, at 3 and 8; Thursday, at 3; Friday, at 3 and 8; and Saturday, at 3. Admission, 1s., 2s., 3s., and 5s.—ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place.

EVANS'S, COVENT GARDEN. — NOTICE. — Those celebrated SUPPER ROOMS are now open for the reception of Ladies. EVANS'S CHOIR OF BOYS, specially trained by and under the direction of Mr. F. Jongmans, and the best comic talent. SUPPERS after the THEATRES. Proprietor, J. B. AMOR.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS. —The SIXTEENTH WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES by the MEMBERS is NOW OPEN, at their Gallery, 5, Pall Mall East. Ten till five. Admission 1s.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

INSTITUTE of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.— The TWELFTH WINTER EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN from 10 till 6. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 6d.
Gallery, 53, Pall Mall. H. F. PHILLIPS, Sec.

DORE'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORE GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, by artists of the British and Foreign Schools, is NOW OPEN, at Thomas McLean's Gallery, No. 7, Haymarket. Admission, including catalogue, 1s.

BRIGHTON. — PULLMAN DRAWING-ROOM CAR TRAINS, leaving Victoria for Brighton every Weekday at 10.0 a.m. and 4.30 p.m., and from Brighton at 9.45 a.m. and 5.45 p.m., and on Sundays from Victoria 10.45 a.m. and from Brighton 8.30 p.m.
EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First Class Train from Victoria, 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY, Fast Trains from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m.; and London Bridge, 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon.
Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea, including admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion (Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds) available to return by any Train the same day, except the 5.45 p.m. Pullman Car Train

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Direct Service from Victoria to Ventnor, for Bonchurch and the Undercliffe; also to Sandown, Shanklin, Newport, and Cowes, viâ Ryde. Through Fares, including all charges.
The Trains by this route now run direct to and from Portsmouth Harbour, alongside the Isle of Wight steamers.
J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon £50. Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS and CO., James Street, Liverpool.

OUR ILLUSTRATIONS

THE LAST OF TEMPLE BAR

TEMPLE BAR is at last to be removed. After years of grumbling and public agitation, and much debating amongst the Civic authorities, the fiat has at length gone forth, and workmen are already engaged in erecting scaffolding for its removal. It was said that the work would be accomplished in a week or ten days, but at the present rate of progress we should not be surprised to see the year close before the last stones are removed. Messrs. Mowlem, Burt, and Freeman are the contractors for the demolition, and as the dispute as to the final destination of the Bar is still unsettled the stones will be marked so as to indicate their position in the structure, and they will be placed for a while on a vacant space of land in the Farringdon Road. Very little is known of the early history of the Bar. "Anciently," says Strype, "there were only posts, rails, and a chain, such as are now in Holborn, Smithfield, and Whitechapel Bars. Afterwards there was a house of timber erected across the street, with a narrow gateway, and an entry on the south side of it under the house." The date of the erection of this wooden house is unknown, but the present structure, built by Sir Christopher Wren, was commenced in 1670 and completed in 1672. It is of Portland stone, with four Corinthian pilasters, an entablature, and an arched pediment. The four statues—two on the western façade and two on the eastern—are supposed to represent Charles I., Charles II., James I. and Elizabeth his Queen. They are the work of an inferior sculptor named Bushnell, who died mad in 1701. The chief historical associations connected with the Bar are that many English monarchs have passed beneath on their way to the City or the Tower; and that in the good old times, when beheading was in fashion, the heads of traitors were exhibited thereon for the delectation of loyal people, who were accustomed to gaze at them through spyglasses, just as ladies of the present day sometimes use their lorgnettes at the Central Criminal Court.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO THE PREMIER

HER MAJESTY'S visit to Hughenden, on Saturday, was announced to be a "private" one, but the good people of Wycombe were by no means inclined to let slip such an opportunity of displaying their loyalty. With barely three days' notice they managed to decorate the town in a manner which did great credit to their taste and energy. There was a profusion of flags, flowers, and evergreens. Triumphal arches of verdure and blossom were erected in several places, and at one point there was an arch, constructed almost entirely of chairs, the staple commodity of the town,—chairs of every imaginable kind and material,—from the substantial "Windsor" to the delicate drawing-room structure, which is more elegant than reliable. The Queen, accompanied by the Princess Beatrice, left Windsor shortly before one o'clock, and on the arrival of the royal train at the Wycombe Railway Station, Her Majesty was received by Lord Beaconsfield, who returned thanks in her name for the inevitable address from the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses "in council assembled," which was handed up and "taken as read." Miss Phillips, the daughter of the Mayor, then presented Her Majesty and the Princess with magnificent bouquets, and amid great shouts of "welcome," and the strains of the National Anthem from the voices of the school children, Her Majesty passed on to the open carriage which was to take her to Hughenden Manor. The cortège passed slowly through the decorated streets of the town, and then quickly onwards to its destination. Her Majesty remained at Hughenden about two hours, lunching with Lord Beaconsfield, and afterwards planting a tree upon the lawn in commemoration of the visit. Princess Beatrice also planted a tree. On the way back to the railway station Her Majesty ordered her carriage to be stopped, in order that she might more closely inspect the arch of chairs. After the departure of the royal train for Windsor, the members of the corporation feasted together in celebration of the honour which had been done to the town.

It is said that the Queen has only twice before paid a visit to her Prime Ministers: to Lord Melbourne, at Brocket Hall, in 1841, and to Sir Robert Peel, at Drayton Manor, in 1843. The Times says "that there are some very wise persons at home, and there will be found many more abroad, who will see in the trip from Windsor to Wycombe a political event pregnant with portentous meaning. They will scarcely, perhaps, think that the visit was paid for the purpose of determining any question of domestic or foreign policy; but it may be construed by them as a special mark of Royal approbation of the special views of a special Minister, and an ordinary act of graceful courtesy will thus be twisted out of its natural significance."—Our artist desires to make his acknowledgements to Mr. J. P. Starling, of the Frogmore Portrait Studio, High Wycombe, whose photographs of the arch of chairs have greatly assisted us in our engraving.

QUEEN POMARE

AT the time when Captain Cook was making his discoveries in the South Seas, about a hundred years ago, the French were, as naval explorers, showing almost equal activity and enterprise; and, but for the disastrous political convulsions which shortly afterwards followed, and turned their thoughts in another direction, they might have proved formidable rivals to our colonists in the southern hemisphere. As matters now stand, the actual possessions of France in that quarter of the globe are small. New Caledonia is the most important of them, nor would the Australians regard that settlement with any jealousy if it were peopled by free emigrants in place of involuntary exiles.

Still, France, as befits a great naval Power, has exercised no small influence in that vast watery region which lies between Asia and South America, and part of which is studded with those lovely groups of islands where the bread-fruit and the cocoa-nut flourish, and which are, in respect of climate, scenery, and vegetation, perhaps the most attractive places in the world.

The Society Islands, which lie just within the Southern Tropic, are one of the most important of these groups, and of these islands the Princess Aimata, then only fourteen years old, became Queen on the death of her brother, Pomare the Third, in 1823.

She assumed the title of Pomare the Fourth on attaining to the royal dignity. The point in this lady's career of most interest to us is that, through the greater part of her long reign, French and English interests struggled for supremacy at her Court; and in 1844, when the missionary Pritchard was seized by the French, the two countries narrowly escaped going to war. Religious difficulties—the question whether Roman Catholicism or Protestantism should prevail at Tahiti—were at the bottom of these disputes. The French claim that Queen Pomare favoured them, and they fear that complications will arise in consequence of her death, as her son, Arxane, is married to a lady of British lineage.

As she had no children by her first husband, Queen Pomare, imitating the example of a French sovereign of celebrity, sent him about his business, and married Prince Ari-Faaite, her junior by seven years, and by whom she had seven children. The Queen, who in her youth was a handsome woman, was a determined enemy to etiquette, which she regarded as the most mischievous of all European importations. Her manners were very simple. She excelled in games, and was especially devoted to card-playing.—Our portrait is from a sketch from life.

OUR OBITUARY RECORD

MR. SYDNEY SMIRKE, R.A., who died a fortnight since in his 78th year, was one of the last survivors of the old school of English architects. He was brought up in the office of his brother, Sir Robert Smirke, R.A., the architect of the old Covent Garden Theatre; and he inherited the same taste for classical architecture. Among his principal works are the Conservative and Carlton Club houses in London; the restoration of parts of Lichfield Cathedral, York Minster (after the second fire), the Savoy Chapel, and the Temple, the Reading Room and other parts of the British Museum; and the alteration of that part of Burlington House occupied by the Royal Academy. He was elected Associate of the Royal Academy in 1848, Royal Academician in 1860, Professor of Architecture in 1861, and Treasurer in 1862. He was also a Trustee of the Academy and of the Soane Museum, and was a Fellow of the Royal Society, the Society of Antiquaries, and the Royal Institute of British Architects, and had received the Gold Medal of the Institute, the highest compliment they can bestow. Mr. Smirke has left a fortune of 100,000*l.*—Our portrait is from a photograph by Charles Watkins.

THE WAR IN THE EAST

REJOICINGS IN THE RUSSIAN CAMP

COMPARED with other Europeans, the Englishman is a very undemonstrative being, and nowhere is this more seen than in any Continental country during popular festivities in honour of some happy national event. The Russians in this present are especially direct contrast to our insular coldness, and celebrate their fêtes and national rejoicings with a semi-delirium wholly absent from the sober gladness of the Briton. The occasion in our picture, however, is one which deserves to be celebrated with more than ordinary fervour. After a weary siege of five months, in which the monotony has been varied by terrible battles, Plevna has surrendered to Russian arms, and one of the great obstacles to the long-looked-for southward march has been removed. Thus both officers and men throw off all military stiffness, and while the former embrace each other, sing patriotic songs, and brew the mysterious Djonka—a punch composed of Champagne, Burgundy, and any other wine which may happen to be handy, the latter indulge in thorough ursine hugs, unlimited vodka or raki, and above all in the quaint uncouth dances of their native villages.

WITH THE TURKS

The monument at Silistria was erected by Sultan Abd-ul-Medjid, in honour of the brave defence made by Mussa Pasha against the Russians in 1854, when the latter under Prince

LONG LIVE THE QUEEN WELCOME

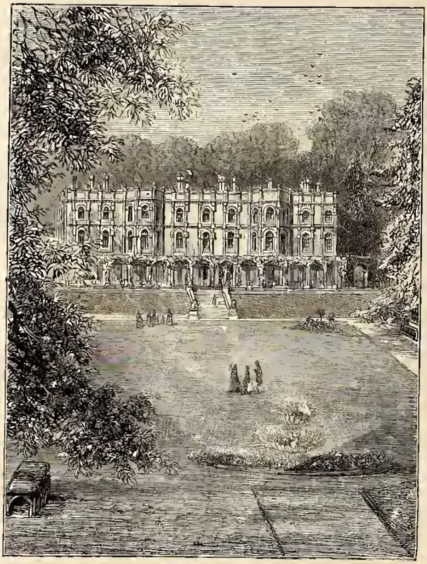
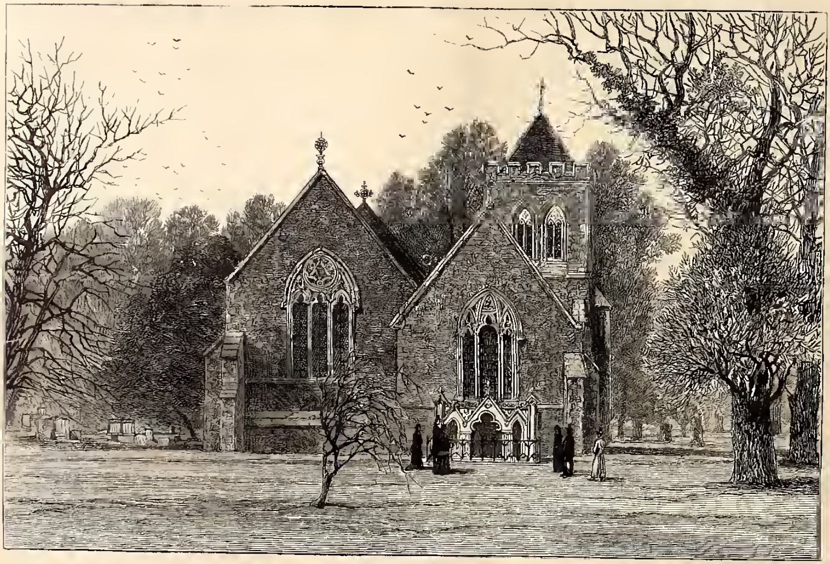
THE ARCH OF CHAIRS

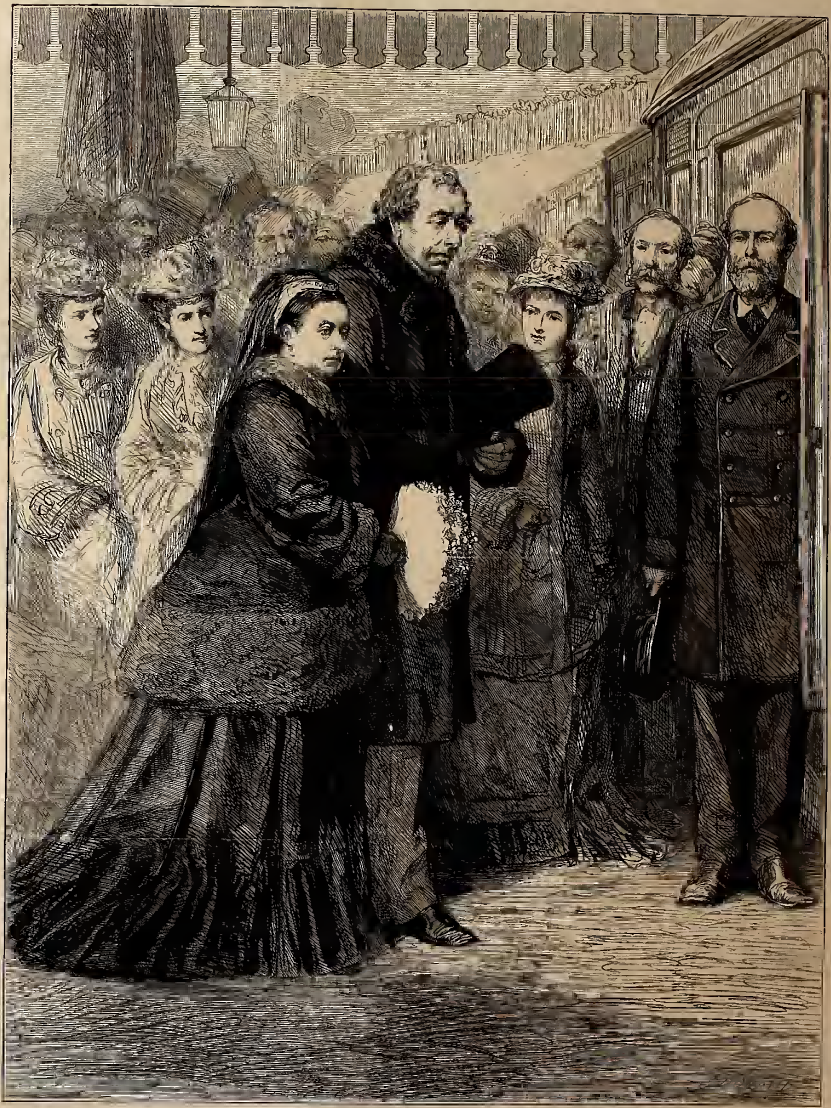


HUGHENDEN MANOR



HUGHENDEN CHURCH

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO HUGHENDEN



HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO HUGHENDEN—AT THE RAILWAY STATION, HIGH WYCOMBE

Paskiewitch to the number of 30,000 besieged the town, but were ultimately compelled to abandon the attempt and re-cross the river.

"Suleiman Pasha's Head Quarters" depict a little house at Rasgrad where Suleiman Pasha mostly resided during a short stay in that town, while making a visit of inspection of this line of army. The general occupied the room on the right of the sketch; his officers being quartered in the chamber on the left. "Despatching Mules for the Egyptian Artillery" is also a sketch at Rasgrad, which the Egyptian troops have now completely quitted; the mules in our sketch being the last remnants of the detachment. The animals are being dragged on to the railway trucks upon which they are to travel to Varna, and, with the habitual obstinacy of their race, they put their fore feet firmly down, and decline to mount into the conveyance. Six men accordingly are told off to each animal to push him on by main force, while a seventh leads the way and steers him by the bridle. "Welcome Loot" represents some soldiers dividing among themselves that incomparable and almost necessary luxury to a Turk—tobacco. "An Outpost Sentinel" speaks for itself, and "In the Trenches" depicts a body of Turks fairly surrounded and brought to bay by the Russians.

SULEIMAN PASHA'S AUTOGRAPH

SUBJOINED is a fac-simile engraving of the autograph, in Turkish, given by Suleiman Pasha, with his portrait, to our artist with the Turks.

The translation runs as follows, the last word (on the left) being the signature:—"To the correspondent of The Graphic, Aranian, offered as a present by his servant,

"SULEIMAN."

"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

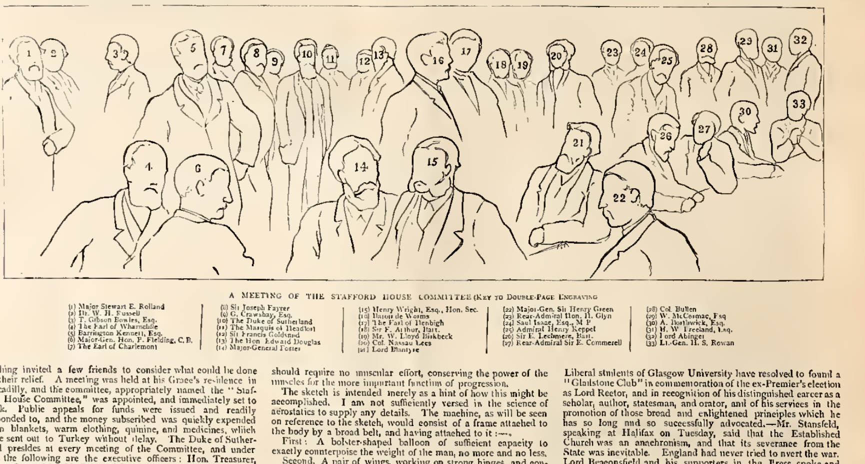
A NEW STORY, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 589.

THE STAFFORD HOUSE COMMITTEE

IT was about a year ago that the Duke of Sutherland, having heard of the great distress and suffering existing amongst Turkish soldiers, who were insufficiently supplied with food and clothing invited a few friends to consider what could be done for their relief. A meeting was held at his Grace's residence in Piccadilly, and the committee, appropriately named the "Stafford House Committee," was appointed, and immediately set to work. Public appeals for funds were issued and readily responded to, and the money subscribed was quickly expended upon blankets, warm clothing, quinine, and medicines, which were sent out to Turkey without delay. The Duke of Sutherland presides at every meeting of the Committee, and under him the following are the executive officers: Hon. Treasurer, Major-General Sir H. Green, C.B., K.C.S.I.; Hon. Secretary, H. Wright, Esq., Private Secretary to the Duke of Sutherland; Chief-Commissioner at the seat of war, V. Barrington Kennett, Esq., M.A., LL.M., of the Manor House, Dorchester, Oxon, Barrister-at-Law; Assistant-Commissioner E. R. Pratt, Esq., M.A., of Ryston Hall, Norfolk; and W. L. Stoney, Esq., a distinguished Civil Engineer, resident at Constantinople.

The medical staff, working under these gentlemen, consists of about forty surgeons and other assistants, including sixteen surgeons sent out at the expense of Lord Blantyre. At the present moment, the Committee have in full work two field ambulances and five fixed hospitals, at which there are always 1,000 wounded, in all, under treatment; also five soup kitchens, established along the lines of railway, at which over 30,000 rations of soup, rice, tobacco, &c., have been served to the wounded being transported to the rear. Stafford House surgeons accompany the sanitary trains, supply mattresses and medical comfort, and dress the severest cases en route. It is to be hoped that the British public will support the Committee in meeting the terrible distress which recent events have entailed.

Subscriptions should be sent to Major-General Sir H. Green, at Stafford House; or to Messrs. Drummond, Charing Cross; Smith, Payne, and Co., Lombard Street; Barnett, Hoare, and Co., Lombard Street; H. King and Co., Pall Mall.



A MEETING OF THE STAFFORD HOUSE COMMITTEE (KEY TO DOUBLE-PAGE ENGRAVING

(1) Major Stewart E. Rolland
(2) Dr. W. H. Russell
(3) T. Gibson Bowles, Esq.
(4) The Earl of Wharncliffe
(5) Barrington Kennett, Esq.
(6) Major-Gen. Hon. P. Fielding, C.B.
(7) The Earl of Charlemont
(8) Sir Joseph Fayrer
(9) G. Crawshay, Esq.
(10) The Duke of Sutherland
(11) The Marquis of Headfort
(12) Sir Francis Goldsmid
(13) The Hon. Edward Douglas
(14) Major-General Foster
(15) Henry Wright, Esq., Hon. Sec.
(16) Baron de Worms
(17) The Earl of Denbigh
(18) Sir F. Arthur, Bart.
(19) Mr. W. Lloyd Birkbeck
(20) Col. Nassau Lees
(21) Lord Blantyre
(22) Major-Gen. Sir Henry Green
(23) Rear-Admiral Hon. H. Glyn
(24) Saul Isaac, Esq., M.P.
(25) Admiral Henry Keppel
(26) Sir E. Lechmere, Bart.
(27) Rear-Admiral Sir E. Commerell
(28) Col. Bullen
(29) W. McCormac, Esq.
(30) A. Borthwick, Esq.
(31) H. W. Freeland, Esq.
(32) Lord Abinger
(33) Lt.-Gen. H. S. Rowan

"THE RHINE, FROM ITS SOURCE TO THE SEA"

THERE are mightier streams in the world than the Rhine, but there are none, we venture to think, fraught with more interesting historical recollections, or which flow through scenery of a more diversified character, than that noble river which has afforded a motive for so many a stirring ditty in the manly Teuton tongue. These reflections are not unnaturally aroused by the sight of a magnificent volume, just published by Messrs. Bickers and Son, of Leicester Square, and entitled, "The Rhine, from its Source to the Sea." It is a most creditable product of German art and German enterprise; for the four hundred and twenty-five illustrations (of whose excellence our readers can judge by the three specimens here given) are all by German artists, and the letterpress (translated by Mr. G. C. T. Bartley) is by German authors of high repute, including the lately deceased and much-respected F. W. Hackländer. Like other rivers, the Rhine has a youth, a middle life, and an old age, at the close of which it pours its waters into that emblem of eternity, the Sea. Its infancy begins amid vast glaciers and towering peaks; then passing through the Lake of Constance it tumbles with multitudinous roar over the rocks at Schaffhausen, and flows swiftly past the historic city of Basle, with its tiled roofs of purple-brown. Castle-crowned hills, slopes clad with vineyards, and more and more historic cities follow in rapid succession. Their names it is needless to mention here, for this middle part of the stream is the favourite waterway of tourists from all quarters of Christendom, and all we could say is already written in Murray, Baedeker, and Bradshaw. Below Cologne, old age creeps on the brave river, his banks flatten, his current grows muddy and sluggish, and it is as difficult to recognise the wild torrent that erewhile brattled over Swiss rocks as it is to believe that a gouty double-chinned valetudinarian was once a blithe Eton boy. Peacefully, at length, the river sinks to rest in the bosom of the German Ocean, and, appropriately enough, the last sketch in the book shows us the Dunes, or sand-hills, which prevent the said ocean from overwhelming the Low Countries. Those who make an armchair tour along the Rhine "by their ain firesides," with this book in hand, will confess when they get to the end of it that they know the Rhine better than they are ever likely to do from any personal inspection.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

VICTOR HUGO's new work is continued on page 593.

A SUGGESTION FOR A FLYING MACHINE

THE radical defect in all attempts hitherto made to construct a flying machine appears to be that inventors have made no provision to counterbalance the enormous specific gravity of the human body as compared with what would be the specific gravity of a flying bird of the same bulk. The first consideration should be to bring the body into equilibrium with the air—that is to say, so to support it that the mere lifting of the body should require no muscular effort, conserving the power of the muscles for the more important function of progression.

The sketch is intended merely as a hint of how this might be accomplished. I am not sufficiently versed in the science of aerostatics to supply any details. The machine, as will be seen on reference to the sketch, would consist of a frame attached to the body by a broad belt, and having attached to it:—

First: A bolster-shaped balloon of sufficient capacity to exactly counterpoise the weight of the man, no more and no less.

Second. A pair of wings, working on strong hinges, and constructed of the lightest materials compatible with strength. The ribs might be of angle-steel, similar to the "Paragon" frames of umbrellas, and the web of strong silk. The points of the ribs being attached to the heels, the action of the wings might be produced by the upward and downward movement of the legs; which, it must be borne in mind, would have no lifting work to do, that being accomplished by the balloon-bolster before described. The resistance of the air to the wings would, therefore, be no greater than if they were worked by a man standing on the ground.

Third. A fan or tail made of some light but tough material such as papier maché, attached by a ball-and-socket joint to the end of the frame, and worked with tiller lines in the hands.

Perhaps some of your readers with a mechanical turn of mind might improve upon the idea, of which I only profess to give the first initiative thought.

T. P. A.

A DAY'S FISHING AT ST. HELENA

THE first sketch represents the descent of the Ladder (which is 612 feet high vertically). The next is the capture of a cat-fish (as it is called at St. Helena)—a species of octopus which makes excellent bait cut up into small pieces—they cling to the rocks just under the water's edge, and are only captured after considerable practice, as, unless they are taken hold of in a particular way and very sharply, they instantly cling to the rock with their suckers on being touched, and it would be impossible to pull them off. In the following sketch the boat is represented rounding a point which gives the first view of Egg Island, which swarms with sea-birds, and constitutes a very good fishing ground. It is a very common thing to get fixed hard to a rock, when there is sometimes doubt whether it may not be a large conger eel who is turned round a rock himself. These congers are very formidable in a boat, as they bite everything they can get hold of, and they are despatched by means of a thick club, called a "conger stick," which the fishermen always take with them. The final sketch represents the Ladder, as seen from Jamestown, with Ladder Hill Fort and Signal Station at the top of it—a formidable obstacle to a party of tired fishermen returning from a long day's fishing under a tropical sun.—The above details, and the sketches from which our engravings are executed are by Mr. George E. Giles, of Rock Cottage, St. Helena.

NOTE.——We last week omitted to state that our portrait of Mr. Archibald Forbes was from a photograph taken at midnight by the new Van der Weydelight process, at the Studio, 182, Regent Street.

HOME.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS.——Parliament is to meet on the 19th of January, some three weeks earlier than usual.—Mr. Gladstone's attention having been called by "A Sheffield Liberal" to some recently-quoted statements of his, denouncing Russian aggression at the time of the Crimean War, he has written a letter saying that he does not doubt he said, and it was quite true if he did, that the immediate object of the war in 1854 was to repel the aggression of Russia upon Turkey. Russia made a demand at that time which did not concern the redress of the Christian grievances, but in the opinion of all Europe attacked Turkey in violation of all public law. The war aimed at repressing that violation of law; but with it were combined measures which were then believed to be realities, and to provide for the redress of grievances.—The ex-Premier has also written two other letters during the week—one acknowledging with thanks the gift of an "American" axe, manufactured in Sheffield; and the other declining to compete with a Derbyshire tree-feller who is anxious to back himself to the extent of a sovereign to bring down a tree in less time than the illustrious amateur. Mr. Gladstone regards the challenge as a great compliment, but modestly repudiates ever having had any pretensions to excellence in the craft.—The Liberal students of Glasgow University have resolved to found a "Gladstone Club" in commemoration of the ex-Premier's election as Lord Rector, and in recognition of his distinguished career as a scholar, author, statesman, and orator, and of his services in the promotion of those broad and enlightened principles which he has so long and so successfully advocated.—Mr. Stansfeld, speaking at Halifax on Tuesday, said that the Established Church was an anachronism, and that its severance from the State was inevitable. England had never tried to avert the war. Lord Beaconsfield and his supporters in the Press spoke and wrote as if their object were to goad Russia into war by insults, and lure Turkey to her doom. The action of Great Britain ought to have been to secure as far as she could a permanent peace.—At a meeting of the Sheffield Liberal Association, Professor Goldwin Smith spoke hopefully of the prospects of the Liberal party at the next election. He regretted that Mr. Gladstone had resigned the Liberal leadership, but hoped that he would soon resume it, because he believed that at present the Liberal party savoured too much of the clubs and too little of the people. He condemned the Government for its want of sympathy with young nations struggling with liberty, and for its support of Turkey.—Speaking at Whitworth on Saturday Mr. E. Hardcastle said that it was "monstrous" to use such expressions as Mr. Bright had done in his recent speech at Manchester, to the effect that our power in India was founded upon crime, and that sooner or later we should have to withdraw from India. Such expressions were unjust to the country, and all Englishmen ought to protest against them. He approved of the policy of the Government, for if England had attempted to coerce Turkey the position of this country would have been unenviable. He was sorry that the Turks had suffered such reverses, and in his opinion Russia had been actuated, not by a desire to help the Christians, but by ambition.—At a public meeting convened by the National Reform Union at Manchester on Wednesday, a resolution was adopted urging the Government to observe strict neutrality between Russia and Turkey.—Mr. Alderman Cotton, M.P., speaking at the inaugural dinner of the new Sheriffs, regretted that "the Houses of Parliament" were not sitting in the present critical times, and consequently any act—even a declaration of war—would be the act of the Ministry alone. He hoped the Ministry would not declare war, but feared that mischief was brewing, and that the Premier having prophesied ill of Russia desired to prove his prophecy true by forcing England into war.—Provost Lyle, one of the Liberal candidates for Greenock, has retired from the contest, thus leaving Mr. Donald Currie and Mr. Stewart, of Garvocks, now before the constituency in the Liberal interest. Sir Michael Shaw Stewart will probably be the Conservative candidate.—Mr. T. Burt, the member for Morpeth, contradicts the statement that he was about to resign his seat.

MISCELLANEOUS.——Sir J. Bennett has received 600*l.* as the first instalment of subscriptions for defraying his expenses in the recent contest for the Ward of Cheap. He intends to apply it to the founding of a scholarship at the City of London School, to be competed for by the children of the Board Schools of the City.—The Exeter Town Council have resolved to purchase the waterworks of that town. The arrangement will involve an immediate outlay of 90,000*l.*, and as the water supplied is scarcely fit for drinking purposes it is proposed to expend from 50,000*l.* to 100,000*l.* in going to Dartmoor or boring into the red sandstone for a further supply. The subject has been under discussion for ten years, but the old Company showed no inclination to come to terms until a new Company was started.—Mr. De Morgan and his coadjutor, Mr. Peach, have been lodged in Holloway Gaol for renewed disobedience to the injunction of the Court of Chancery to abstain from further agitation pending the decision of the Court as to the disputed manorial rights on Selston Common.—Some Admiralty experiments took place at Portsmouth on Tuesday for the purpose of testing the relative resisting powers of iron and steel plating for war-vessels, but the results were not considered conclusive.—More than 1,500*l.* has been collected for the proposed Memorial to be erected to Sir Rowland Hill, the originator of the penny postage. A large number of subscriptions were in pence.—The anniversary of shutting the gates of Derry was observed on Tuesday in the customary fashion. There was a procession and a service in the Cathedral, where the Dean preached, and in the evening a colossal effigy of Lundy, which had been suspended on the Walker Testimonial during the day, was burnt.

THEATRES

IF Mr. Toole's absence from London does not quite suffice to "eclipse the gaiety of nations," it is at least a substantial loss to the amusements of the metropolis. The reappearance, therefore, of this popular comedian for the first time this season at the GLOBE Theatre, after a long absence in provincial cities, is a fact on which London playgoers may be congratulated. He has brought with him, it is true, no novelty in the shape of play or farce—the programme of pieces at the Globe consisting simply of Mr. Burnand's version of a French farcical comedy, which he entitles Artful Cards, and the humorous satirical sketch by Mr. Hollingshead, entitled The Birthplace of Podgers. Between the performance of these pieces, however, in which Mr. Toole sustains his original characters, he presents himself in the simple evening costume of a quiet lecturer at a Literary Institute, and delivers, standing at a little table, a very amusing sketch entitled Trying a Magistrate. It is recorded in the biography of Charles Dickens—under a date antecedent to the period when Mr. Toole first became known to the public as an actor—that going by some chance one evening into a little lecture-room somewhere on the Surrey side of the water, the great novelist—who was not likely to be at fault in a matter of that kind—believed himself to have discovered histrionic genius of a high order in the obscure person of an amateur entertainer whose name was Toole. The correctness of this impression has since been abundantly established; but it is interesting to know that the performance on that occasion was simply the sketch which, hitherto regarded as too slight for the stage, and for many years rarely repeated by Mr. Toole except under the inspiration of a good-natured desire to please a family circle or a private party of friends, is now raised to the position of an "interlude" at the Globe. The matter of this little scene is very simple. It is a monologue—for though there are supposed to be eight or nine interlocutors, each and all of these are impersonated by the lecturer by dint of rapid changes of tone and manner. The theme is a magisterial inquiry into a certain—or, perhaps, we ought to say an uncertain—charge of assault; and a no less difficult case of collision which appears to have occurred in Leadenhall Street, though such is the garrulity, obstinacy, obtuseness, and self-sufficiency of some of the witnesses, that nothing is really certain about that perplexing and Protean charge of wilful damage to an unoffending omnibus. The sketch affords much amusement to the audience. Mr. Toole was received by the Globe on Monday evening with cordial demonstrations of satisfaction at the renewal of relations with an old favourite.

The Adelphi of Terence was performed this week for the second and third time by the Westminster Boys on the well-appointed stage of the old Dormitory of St. Peter's College. Additional interest was imported to the performance on these occasions, from the fact that owing to the lamented decease of Lady Augusta Stanley, followed by the sad occurrence which resulted in the death of the youthful Captain of the School, Mr. Rogers, no performance of any kind took place last year. The play has been carefully studied, and the performers evince something more than the average of talent, the Demea of Mr. Williams, the Micio of Mr. Bulkley, the Syrus of Mr. Robinson, and the Sostrata of Mr. Tepper, being especially noteworthy for their spirit and humour, and for the elocutionary qualities which they displayed. The prologue, spoken for the first time at the second performance on Tuesday last, referred as usual chiefly to the position of the school, and to other local and domestic matters. The theme of the prologue, in which all the personages of the comedy reappear in modern costume, is this year the vexed question of "The Endowment of Research," which is made to yield as much amusement as the subject seems to admit of. Crowded and distinguished audiences have assembled on each occasion to witness the performance.

Although the new Christmas pantomime at the GAIETY Theatre is only to be given at morning performances—continued daily during the holidays—it is to be produced in the most elaborate fashion in the way of scenery, costume, and harlequinade. The introduction, written by Mr. Charles Merion, is founded on the nursery tale of "Valentine and Orson." A double company of pantomimic artists, a brilliant and original transformation scene, a grand ballet introducing la petite Blanche and numerous other clever little dancers, and new comic business in which quadrupeds as well as bipeds will play a part, are among the features of this entertainment. The comfort and order of all arrangements at the Gaiety Theatre under Mr. Hollingshead's management are always appreciated by visitors who have children with them in the crowded holiday season; and the young folks are, we observe, to be admitted at half-prices.

Friday, Dec. 28th, will be the 950th night of Our Boys at the VAUDEVILLE.

◆

RECENT POETRY AND VERSE

"ENTRE NOUS," by Le Marquis de Leuville (Chapman and Hall).—These poems are evidently the outcome of a strong, tender, chivalrous nature, and the union of these qualities has been productive of spirit-stirring, heart and taste enthralling results. Pathos and passion permeate these songs of love and chivalry, and, in fact, the verse of Le Marquis de Leuville is alight with love, but it is clean fire. In the climax of the most tragically passionate of all, "The Turkish Improvisation" there is nothing that the greatest patriot can desire to see eliminated, although all the bitter sweetness, all the grandeur of the guileless guilty ones is brought before us vividly. His pictures of love and life are painted in with powerful strokes, but their almost painful beauty is never marred by a coarse touch. Essentially human as they are, they are so full of music and manly sentiment that only a prurient mind will disapprove of them as being too "fleshly." Space does not admit of our indulging in quotations, otherwise we would bring some of the chiselled and highly polished beauties of "Une Legende de Leuville" before our readers, and give them the whole of "Chez l'Ambassadeur," a narration of one of the noblest repulses that a loving woman ever received.

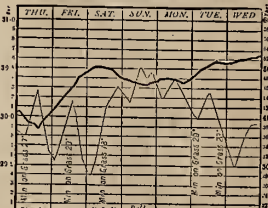
The author of "Constance: a Tale" (Smith, Elder), has many of the qualities which go to make a poet; he has great command of metre and a certain amount of fancy, as well as a strong sympathy with Nature. Nevertheless, the poem can hardly be called satisfactory—there is a want of that power which makes the reader in unison with the writer. Added to which, the story is too slight for a work of such dimensions, and, as if feeling this, the author has indulged overmuch in the didactic vein. It narrates the adventure of Constance de Walden, daughter of an Indian officer, who is loved both by the young soldier, Vernon, and by a mysterious traitor, St. Clair, who has saved her life. The latter rouses the natives to mutiny, and the heroine, her father, and her chosen lover are beset, during a mountain storm, by an insurgent band; but St. Clair is struck by lightning, and the lovers are rescued, and happily married. The scene where the traitor fires the beacon is about the best part of the poem. Amongst the minor pieces, "The Wanderer's Return" is good and pathetic.

From our recollections of "Rosamund" we had expected something finer in "Morning Clouds," by Henry Bellyse Baildon (Edinburgh: Douglas). Perhaps the author's talent lies rather in dramatic than in lyric renderings. And, indeed, where that element can be made appreciable, he is most successful in the present volume; "A Child of Shame" and "Two Friends" are extremely powerful—the latter is worthy of Browning in his best days. There is a strain of delicate fancy throughout the minor pieces, treating of Nature, which is happily exemplified by the poems named "Autumn Moods," "'Twixt Bank and Island," and "The Bee and the Wheat." But why will not Mr. Baildon recognise the fact that Nature knows nothing of the colours beloved by painters and milliners, and did he not probably mean "thurible" when, at page 130, he wrote "thurifer?"

◆

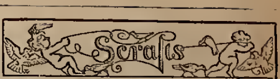
WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

DECEMBER 13TH TO DECEMBER 19TH (INCLUSIVE)



EXPLANATION.—The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

REMARKS.——The weather during this period has been on the whole much finer than for some time past. The barometer fell for a few hours on Thursday morning, the 13th instant; but from the afternoon of that day until midday on Saturday, the 15th instant, it rose steadily, and the weather during the whole period was fine and dry, with cold nights. The thermometer, in the shade, fell below the freezing point on both Thursday and Friday nights the 13th and 14th, while that on the grass went as low as 20° and 18° respectively. From Saturday, the 15th instant, until Monday afternoon, the 17th instant, however, the barometer was more unsteady, and the winds backed from north-west to south-west, with dull and damp weather. The thermometer, in the shade, rose to 50° on Sunday afternoon, the 16th instant, being the highest point reached during the week. On Monday evening, the 17th instant, the mercury once more rose, and this change continued pretty steadily until Thursday, the 20th, the barometer having reached the exceptional height of 30·65 inches on Wednesday night, the 19th instant. The weather both on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 18th and 19th, was fine and cold, but thick fog came up on Wednesday night and continued throughout Thursday, so that the air had a very raw feeling. The thermometer fell to 23° on the grass early on Wednesday evening; but the formation of the fog soon put a stop to radiation, and at 8 a.m. the following morning (Thursday) the grass temperature was 1° higher than the shade reading. The barometer was highest (30·65 inches) on Wednesday, the 19th instant; lowest (29·89 inches) on Thursday, the 13th instant; range, 0·76 inches. The temperature was highest (50°) on Sunday, the 16th instant; lowest (28°) on Saturday, the 15th instant, on which occasion 18° was recorded on the grass; range, 22°. Rainfall: Total fall, 0·10 inches, on three days; greatest fall in 24 hours, 0·08 inches, on Thursday, the 13th instant.



Scraps

"BELATED SISTERS" is the latest title for old maids across the Atlantic.

TWO ROYAL ACADEMICIANS were elected last week—Mr. W. Q. Orchardson and Mr. R. Norman Shaw, the architect.

THE AMERICAN LADY PEDESTRIAN, Miss Bertha von Hillern, of Philadelphia, is going to attempt a walk of 150 miles in 50 hours.

THE SKETCHES AND DRAWINGS OF THE LATE M. GUSTAVE BRION, the French artist, were to be sold in Paris this week. The only finished picture of any importance among the collection is his Alsatian painting, "Le Reveil," which was exhibited at this year's Salon.

THE INVENTOR OF INK has been deified by the Chinese, and is believed by the Celestials to keep a record of all the evil ends to which that useful fluid is adapted. Whenever a bad sentence, word, or joke is written, a black mark is scored against the author in the deity's books.

MR. H. M. STANLEY'S EUROPEAN COMPANIONS in his late expedition, the two Pococks, have been commemorated by a tablet in Upnor School Church, Upnor being their birthplace. The tablet also records the death of their uncle, who was lost in Sir John Franklin's Expedition.

PRIZE CATTLE.——"Vivisectionist" writes as follows:—"At this time of the year a very unnecessary piece of cruelty is perpetrated by some of the butchers of the metropolis, who buy a fat sheep or ox from the Cattle Show. Their unfortunate victim may be seen tied up in the midst of his kin, who are hung, drawn, and quartered around him. Is not mental worse than bodily suffering?"

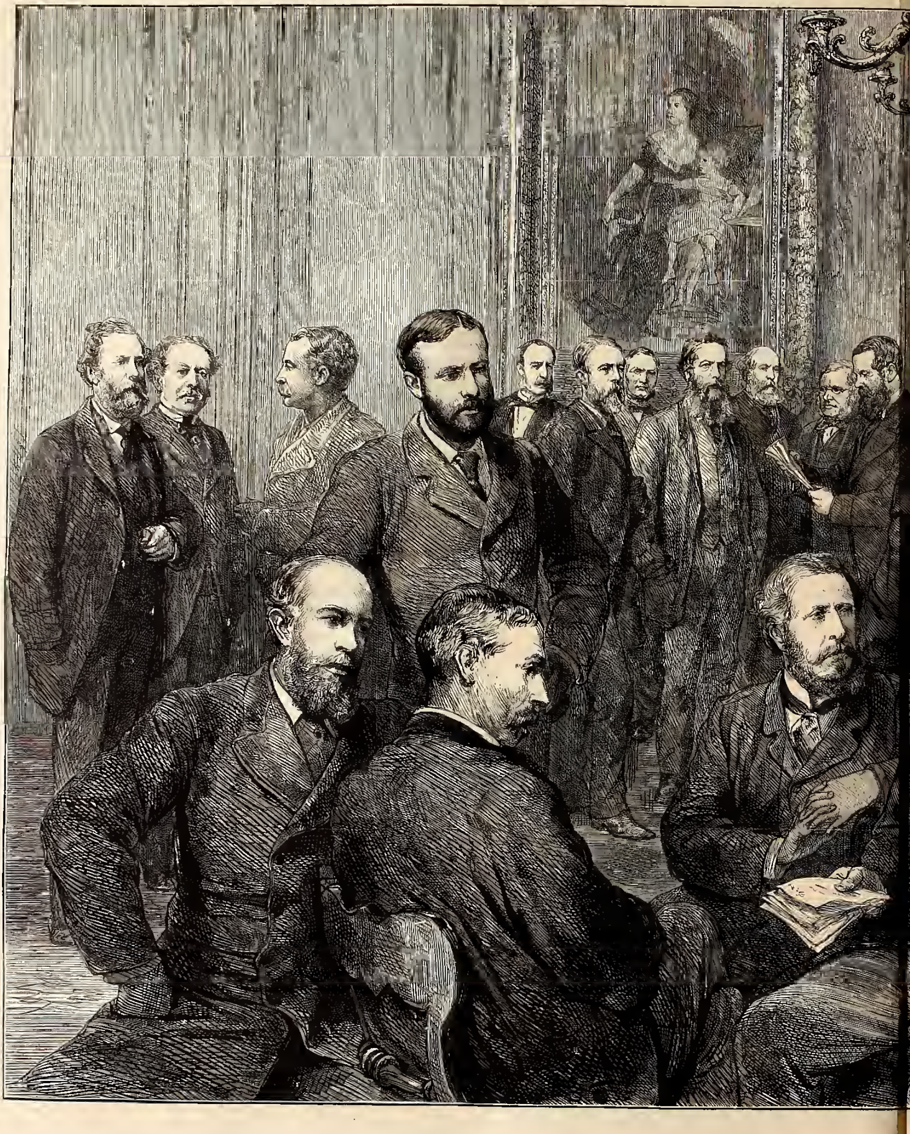
THE PRESENT FRENCH MINISTRY is not remarkable for beauty of physiognomy, and the Royalist Figaro gives a not over flattering description of their appearances. Thus, M. Dufaure, the President, has "the most eloquent of noses—resembles a broom, both physically and morally, and has the bearing of an old notary disguised as a wild boar." The Minister of the Interior, M. de Marcère, is "crabbed, and thick-lipped." M. Léon Say, the Finance Minister, is "fat, flowery, smiling, like a theatrical speculator, and as sceptical as Don Juan." M. Waddington, Minister of Foreign Affairs, is "an English gentleman farmer, with carefully-combed hair." The Minister of Education has the head of a curé. M. Teisserenc de Bort, the Minister of Commerce, resembles Offenbach's violoncello; while in the War and Naval Ministers the uniform has stifled the man.

CHRISTMAS APPEALS.——The Gray's Yard Ragged School Committee are anxious to give a meat breakfast to 800 destitute persons on the first Sunday in the New Year, and ask for donations, which will be received by the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. A. Woods, 78, Mount Street, Grosvenor Square.—The Bell Alley Mission and Ragged School also appeals for funds towards a Christmas dinner for the poor people and children attending the Mission, as well as towards the free Sunday breakfasts given to children during the winter. The smallest offering of food, money, or clothing will be gratefully received by the Superintendent, Mr. J. Salmon, 6, Bell Alley, Goswell Road, E.C.—A special appeal, too, is made on behalf of Viscountess Strangford's British Hospital at Sofia for Turkish Wounded, where 160 beds are always filled, and hundreds of cases refused admission for want of space. Contributions may be sent to the London and Westminster Bank, Lothbury, or to the Hon. Sec., Mr. E. H. Baverstock, 36, Queen's Square.

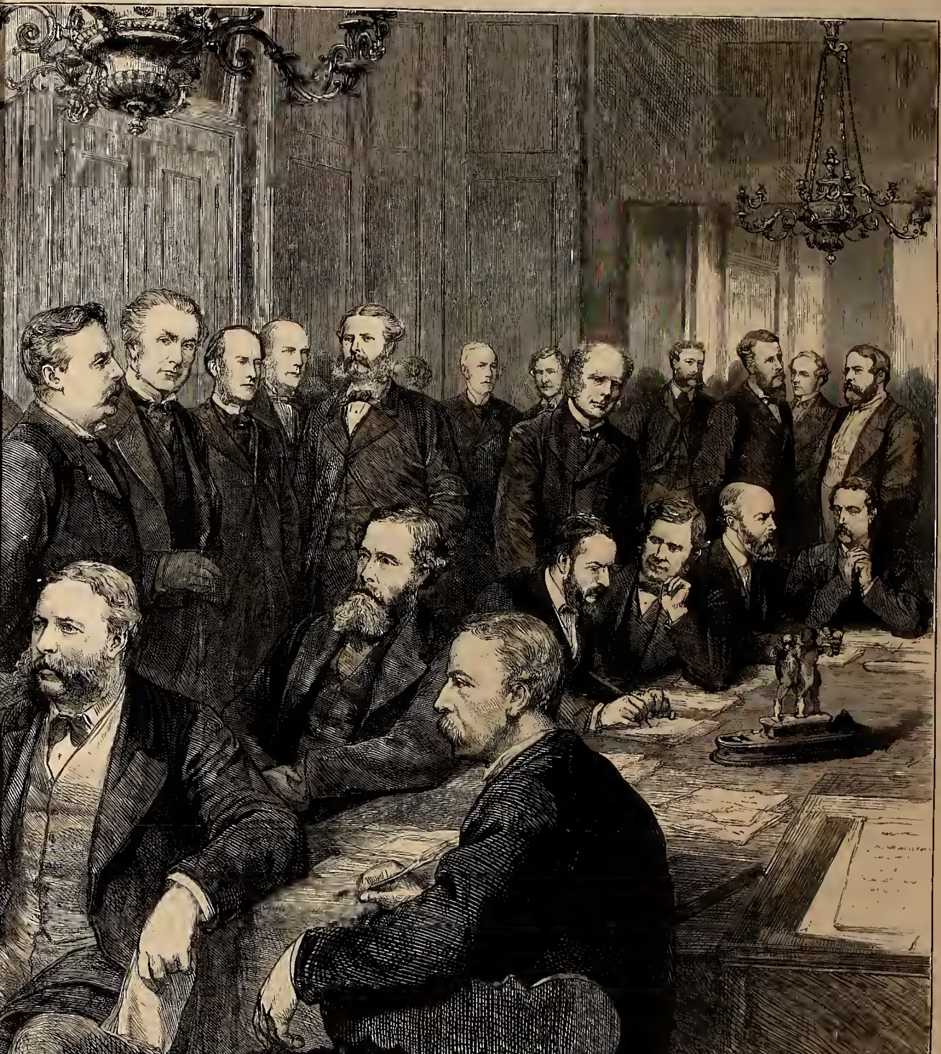
THE ANNIVERSARY DINNER OF THE WAREHOUSEMEN AND CLERKS' SCHOOLS, was held on Thursday last at the Freemason's Tavern. The Chairman, Mr. John Holms, M.P., warmly advocated the claims of this institution to public support, as saving from destitution the orphan children of poor and respectable clerks, who are by its aid enabled to make a provision in the event of death to give their children a claim on this school, for none but the children of subscribers are eligible for election; a wise provision to encourage habits of providence. However, it appears that each child costs about 42*l.* per annum, while the permanent income is only about 3*l.* per child, and the deficiency has to be made up by the efforts of the patrons and the committee, and appeals to the public, who cannot better bestow a little aid on this excellent institution that is in want of funds to complete the new wing to the buildings at Caterham. Mr. Thos. White, the secretary, will give every information by application to the Office, 97, Cheapside.

LONDON MORTALITY rose last week from 1,547 to 1,613 deaths, an increase of 66, but was 184 below the average, and at the rate of 23·8 per 1,000. These deaths included 92 from measles (an increase of 16, and exceeding the average by 40), 54 from scarlet fever (an increase of 8), 10 from diphtheria (an increase of 5), 25 from whooping-cough (a decline of 11), 26 from different forms of fever, 10 from diarrhœa (a decline of 9), and 31 from small-pox (an increase of 6). The Metropolitan Asylums Small Pox Hospitals contained 294 patients on Saturday last, 85 new cases having been admitted during the week. Deaths from diseases of the respiratory organs numbered 415 (an increase of 17, but being 81 below the average), of which 265 resulted from bronchitis and 104 from pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 55 deaths, 48 being the result of accident or negligence. There were 2,542 births registered against 2,435 during the previous week, being 110 above the average. The mean temperature was 39·0 deg., or 1·8 deg. below the average. The registered amount of sunshine was 6·0 hours out of 54·8 hours that the sun was above the horizon.

CHRISTMAS BOOKS, &c.——The subscription plate of the Art Union of London this year is a line engraving by Mr. A. Willmore of E. Duncan's picture, "The Return of the Life Boat." It is a very effective picture, admirably engraved, and will, we believe, prove one of the most popular of the many annual issues of this meritorious association.—Messrs. Pilgeram and Lefevre, of 1A, King Street, St. James's, have published a suggestive Christmas engraving by J. B. Pratt, from a picture by Mrs. Staples (M. E. Edwards), exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1876. It is entitled "My Neighbour," and represents a pretty girl cutting slices of bread for two poor children. The execution is excellent, and reflects the highest credit both on artist and engraver.—Messrs. T. J. Smith, Son, and Downes, have issued a magnificent photographic album (similar to the Floral Album which they published a year or two ago) called the "Album du Moyen Age," and embellished with twenty-six mediæval illustrations taken from missals in the British and Parisian Museums.—Lastly, from the London Stereoscopic Company we have received a box of Christmas Novelties, comprising magical toys, &c., which we have not yet had time to examine, but which will doubtless be as acceptable to "little folk" as in former years.



A MEETING OF THE STAF



SEE KEY, PAGE 582

ORD HOUSE COMMITTEE

FOREIGN

THE WAR IN THE EAST.——The fall of Plevna has caused a slight lull in military operations, the Czar has returned to Bucharest on his way to St. Petersburg, and the Porte has issued a circular letter to the Powers, suggesting that as both armies have covered themselves over with glory on the battle field, the moment has come when the two countries might conclude peace without forfeiting their dignity, and when Europe might usefully interpose its good offices. Unfortunately the circular goes on to state that "the independence and integrity of the Fatherland" would be maintained at every sacrifice, so that the Porte's ultimate appeal in the name of humanity to the "sentiment of justice of the Great Powers" is little likely to bear fruit, and, indeed, has been received with marked coldness by all the European Powers. In Austria, Count Andrassy manifests a staunch determination not to interfere, owing to Germany's evident disposition to support Russia to the bitter end, while France is equally held in check by Prince Bismarck's pro-Russian sympathies. England, in the person of Mr. Layard, has repeated to the Porte her determination to remain neutral, and there is a general feeling throughout Europe that any mediation now would be worse than useless as it would encourage the Turks to further resistance, and that the two combatants must be left to negotiate directly with each other.

SERVIA, as had been expected, has declared war against Turkey—Prince Milan issuing a species of manifesto, in which he states that this step was rendered necessary by the bad treatment Servian refugees had received at the hands of the Turks, and by Turkey continually plotting and conspiring against the internal security of Servia. Accordingly war was formally declared against the Porte, and the army of the frontier, amounting to some 40,000 men, under Horvatovitch, was directed to cross the frontier, while a state of siege was decreed throughout the country, and every male Servian without distinction of age announced to be liable to military service. At present the hostilities have been mainly confined to the capture of Mramo and preparations for the investment of Nisch under Generals Leschjanin and Benitzki, but it is thought likely that the Servian army will be utilised by the Russians in their march upon Sofia.

That a march southwards has been resolved upon by the Russians there seems little doubt, and it is thought that the Shipka Pass will be the first point of attack, and this being carried, a general advance upon Sofia and Adrianople will take place. There appears to be little fear of Suleiman Pasha, who since the fall of Plevna has retreated from the position at Elena and Metchka, which he recently captured from the Russians. They have now reoccupied them, and being strongly reinforced along the line of the Lom, are considered wholly equal to keeping the Pasha and his army in check.

As for the Turkish forces in the Souraili Pass, they have been holding their position, and have been fighting briskly under Nedjib and Baker Pashas, but that is all, while further south at Adrianople and Sofia the Turks are doing their best to put those important positions in an efficient state of defence.

At CONSTANTINOPLE considerable despondency manifestly exists, as is evidenced by the mediation circular, and, as usual, England is in disgrace—this time for permitting Servia to declare war after the advantageous terms that Prince Milan obtained last year through British intervention. The Sultan opened Parliament last week with considerable ceremony, but in his speech made little noteworthy mention of the war, dwelling mainly upon the equalisation of Mussulmans and Christians by the recent decree, which admits the latter to the ranks of the National Guard. He also "bitterly regretted" that the war delayed the complete application of the "Constitution," the benefits of which he rehearsed at length. In ASIA there has been little or no fighting, but the investiture of Erzeroum is being continued by the Russians with that slow caution which the siege of Plevna has recently taught them. From MONTENEGRO there is no news save that the siege of Antivari is continued, and that the garrison have shown signs of capitulating. From GREECE we hear of an increased feeling in favour of war, and of a popular demonstration to that effect on Sunday evening.

At BUCHAREST there have been great rejoicings and numerous interchanges of civilities and decorations between Prince Charles and the Czar and his generals; while St. Petersburg, for which the Czar started on Tuesday, is preparing a grand welcome for the victorious Emperor.

FRANCE.——Marshal MacMahon has "submitted." M. Dufaure, with a Republican and Parliamentary Cabinet, has at last been placed at the head of affairs, the crisis is over for the present, and France is rapidly resuming her normal quietude. This change in the Marshal's attitude was quite sudden and completely unexpected, being, according to the usually well-informed correspondent of The Times, wholly due to an outspoken burst of M. Pouyer-Quertier, who while visiting the Marshal was informed that a regular Dissolutionist and possible Plebiscitary Cabinet had been formed. Upon this M. Pouyer-Quertier, with all the honest frankness of a Norman, spoke fairly out, and appears to have opened the eyes of the Marshal, who declared that he would have no more schemes—"being not a schemer but a soldier," and at once wrote out his resignation. He however was ultimately persuaded to withdraw this, and then immediately sent for M. Dufaure, to whom he unreservedly entrusted the formation of a Parliamentary Ministry, which was ultimately composed as follows:—Premier and Minister of Justice, M. Dufaure; Minister of the Interior, M. de Marcère; of Foreign Affairs, M. Waddington; of Public Instruction, M. Bardoux; of War, General Borel; of Marine, Vice-Admiral Pothuau; of Finance, M. Léon Say; of Commerce, M. Teisserenc de Bort; and of Public Works, M. Freycinet. The entry of the new Ministry into office was accompanied by a Presidential Message, in which the Marshal announced that he had formed the Cabinet in accordance with Parliamentary rules and the result of the elections of October 14, and declared that the right of dissolution could not be erected into a form of Government, and that the Constitution, by establishing his irresponsibility, had instituted the joint and individual responsibility of the Ministers, whose independence is the condition of their new responsibility.

This conclusion to the crisis which for the last seven months has been paralysing commercial France has been hailed by all but the extreme political classes with unmitigated satisfaction. Of course the Conservatives are furious, and the various Prefects appointed under the "combative" régime have been writing the most insulting letters to the Marshal, forestalling their dismissal by M. Dufaure by handing their resignations in to the Marshal. The Extreme Republicans also are discontented that the victory was not complete, and that the Marshal was not forced to resign, but all moderate parties—the great majority of the nation, whose opinions are justly represented by the Temps and the Débats—loudly express their relief at the Marshal's patriotic conduct in thus subjugating his private opinions to the good of his country.

The new Ministry has been well received by the Chamber, which at once agreed to M. Léon Say's proposal that, as there would not be sufficient time to pass the Budget before the New Year, the four direct taxes should be passed at once. In the Senate the same willingness to assist the new Cabinet was shown on Tuesday, when the vote for the direct taxes was unanimously confirmed. M. Dufaure has lost no time in repealing the various repressive measures of M. de Broglie. Only four Prefects remain unchanged, the sale in the streets has been restored to those newspapers to whom it had been prohibited, the various arbitrary prosecutions are to be abandoned, while the fines imposed in cases already tried are not to be enforced. M. Bonnet Duverdier will now probably be speedily released, while M. Gambetta will hear no more of the action against him for declaring that the Marshal must "resign or submit."—A Conservative Senator has died this week, General d'Aurelles de Paladines, who, at Orleans, gained the solitary French success during the recent war. He was buried with military honours on Wednesday.

Paris is exceedingly jubilant that the political crisis will no longer interfere with the prospects of the 1878 Exhibition, and an official notice has been issued to the English exhibitors stating that all misgivings have been removed by the Marshal's patriotic act, and that the Exhibition would definitely open on May 1, 1878. There is little "gossip" proper beyond the capture of two English female pickpockets, who had gone to Paris with a carefully organised scheme for wholesale plunder, and the production of three new pieces—at the Théâtre Italien La Morte Civile, a five-act drama by P. Giacometti, a great success; at the Odéon Le Bonhomme Misère, in verse by MM. Ernest d'Hervilly and A. Grévin, which was well received and cleverly acted; and at the Théâtre Historique La Centième d'Hamlet, by the late Théodore Barrière, a five-act drama, containing a series of conflagrations of all kinds, a fairly good piece, but unfortunately a thick fog which penetrated into the theatre almost obscured the stage from the spectators.

GERMANY.——Home politics in Prussia are by no means in a wholly satisfactory condition. There seems a general feeling that the whole Cabinet will resign, and that the Conservatives will have to give way to the National Liberals. On Tuesday the Ultramontanes made a regular onslaught, in the Prussian Lower House, upon the Government, one speaker even going the length of prophesying that Prince Bismarck would be assassinated.—A telegraph treaty has been concluded with France, by which telegrams are to be charged at the rate of twopence a word. Telephones appear to be coming into almost universal use in the various centre stations in Germany.—On Monday night the centenary performance of Hamlet took place at the Theatre Royal, Berlin, the audience being presented with bills with the original cast, as played on Dec. 17, 1777.

ITALY.——The Pope has rallied, and is pronounced to be very much better, particularly in the morning, when his receptions usually take place. The Consistory, however, has been put off to the 28th inst., by the advice of his doctors. He is said to be "gay," and to joke about deceiving those who thought him at the last gasp.—There is a serious Ministerial crisis prevailing at Rome, where, as the existing Cabinet is scarcely able to muster a majority of a score, the Premier Signor Depretis has been requested by the King to form a new Ministry. This, however, owing to the proposed railway convention and various other difficulties, he as yet has been unable to do.

SPAIN.——The King's marriage with the Infanta Mercèdès has now been definitively fixed for the 23rd prox., and great fêtes, to last five days, are announced for the occasion; theatrical representations and bull-fights are to be provided free; a banquet will be given to a thousand poor people; there will be historical processions, and all children born on that day will be dowered.

INDIA.——The Jowakis have now been completely cowed, and offer no active resistance, but the chiefs decline to treat until the British troops leave the country. The Indian Government naturally declines to withdraw the troops until the tribes send in their unconditional and unqualified submission. The Naga expedition has also prospered, and has occupied Mozema, the principal village of the raiders.

UNITED STATES.——The conflict between the Senate and President Hayes, regarding the nominations to the Custom House, continues, and at present the Senate refuses to confirm the appointments made by the President, and which up to recently have long been left to the discretion of the Senators. There is a pause in the action of the Silver Party, and some hope may be entertained that, warned by the fall of American securities over here, the proposal to pay the national interest in silver, and not gold, may after all be negatived.

THE COURT

THE Queen will spend Christmas at Windsor Castle instead of Osborne as at first intended. At Her Majesty's dinner on Christmas Day the sideboard will contain a baron of beef weighing 300 lbs., cut from a shorthorn bred and fed on the Prince Consort's farm, a boar's head, and a game pie. At the end of last week the 16th anniversary of the Prince Consort's death was commemorated by the usual services at the Mausoleum at Frogmore, when the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince and Princess Christian, and the Princesses Louise and Beatrice were present. The Prince and Princess of Wales returned to London immediately after the ceremony, but the Princess Louise did not leave the Castle until the next day. On Saturday the Queen and the Princess Beatrice visited Lord Beaconsfield at Hughenden Manor. Of this an account will be found in another column. Prince and Princess Christian dined at the Castle in the evening, and next morning Princess Beatrice alone attended the service in the private chapel, Princess Christian visiting the Queen in the afternoon. On Monday Her Majesty gave audience to the Judge Advocate-General, and on Tuesday Lord Beaconsfield arrived, and dined at the Castle, leaving Windsor next morning.—The Queen's New Year's gifts to the poor of St. John's, New Windsor, Holy Trinity, and Clewer will be distributed on the 1st prox. in the Riding School at Windsor Castle.

The Prince of Wales presided on Saturday at a meeting of the Commission for the Paris Exhibition, and in the evening accompanied the Princess to the Olympic Theatre. On Tuesday evening the Prince and Princess went to the Gaiety Theatre.—The Princess of Wales will accompany the Prince on his visit to Critchel, near Wimborne, Dorsetshire, next month.—The renovation of Marlborough House is still going on, and all the old drains are being removed.

Princess Christian has sent a donation to Mrs. Hilton's crèche at Stepney, of which she is patroness.—The Duchess of Teck has been suffering from an attack of measles, but is now much better. Her children also have been ill at Richmond with the same complaint.—The Crown Prince of Hanover visited Oxford last week.

At the coming marriage of Princess Charlotte of Germany with Duke Bernhardt of Saxe-Meiningen, there will, according to Mayfair, be forty bridesmaids, each of whom will be presented with a brooch in memory of the event. Anent Royal marriages, the ex-Queen Isabella will give a splendid diadem of brilliants to her son's bride, Princess Mercèdès.

CHURCH NEWS

THE RITUALISTS.——The services at St. James's, Hatcham, last Sunday passed off without any actual riot, although the congregation appeared disinclined to leave until the police were called in to clear the building. The Rev. Malcolm M'Coll has asked the Greenwich magistrate to reduce the fine inflicted upon Evenden, who is said to be only a poor working man. It is rumoured that the Bishop of the diocese intends to shut up the church rather than allow it to continue a battle-ground for the contending factions. The English Church Union have passed resolutions expressing satisfaction with the recent judgment of the Queen's Bench, with regard to Mr. Tooth's case, as confirming their view that the Public Worship Act created "a new jurisdiction."—At the Rolls Court on Monday, before commencing the case of Peek v. Trower, Sir George Jessel asked whether, being an Ecclesiastical Commissioner, he could, the Estates Committee of that body being co-defendants, try it at all. Mr. Southgate, Q.C., informed his lordship that not being a member of the Church of England he was not a Commissioner, on which the Master of the Rolls said it was very odd, as he regularly received the official documents and reports, and although otherwise too busy to act had up to that moment no doubt but that, like his predecessors, he held the position.—Last Sunday the Rev. A. H. Ward, of St. Raphael's, Bristol, read a correspondence which he had had with his Bishop respecting the use of vestments, lighted candles, mixing water with wine, the use of incense, the elevation of the elements, making the sign of the Cross when reading the Absolution in the Communion Service, and the pictures representing the Stations of the Cross and the Crucifixion. He said that in the short space of a week his lordship required him to bring about distinct changes in the mode of conducting Divine service which had prevailed there for twelve years, and of the character of which his lordship had been fully aware. He desired to yield obedience to his Bishop in all matters in which he could do so without disloyalty to the Church of England, but had not had time to consider all his directions. No change was made in the conduct of the service.

VARIOUS.——The statement that Bishop Colenso had been seriously hurt by the upsetting of his carriage is contradicted. His lordship escaped with a slight bruise.—The Queen has nominated the Ven. Edward Trollope, M.A., Archdeacon of Stow, to be Bishop Suffragan of the See of Nottingham, in the room of Dr. Henry Mackenzie, resigned.—The Bishop of Salisbury says that Disestablishment has already literally taken place in the parish of Anstey, in his diocese. For many years the Lords of Arundel, of Wardour Castle, have been in the habit of paying a yearly donation of 22*l.* 10s. in lieu of what was supposed to be a small tithe; but the present Lord Arundel, being a Roman Catholic, declines to continue this donation; hence the appeal of the Bishop for money to assist in propping up the Church in this small parish with a population of 299. The Arundels own all the property in the place; and from their influence the Bishop fears there is a danger of it becoming a Roman Catholic parish in the midst of an English diocese, but hopes that the injurious system of donatives will soon be entirely done away with.—The Record says that Lord Shaftesbury has addressed a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, calling attention to the latitudinarian publications of the Christian Knowledge Society, including the "Argument from Prophecy," which disparages the authority of the Pentateuch, and that his Grace has sent his Lordship's letter to the Secretary and asked for information as to the responsibility of the Standing Committee, or the Tract Committee, or the Episcopal Referees, for the books in question.—In consequence of the Bishop of Lincoln's recent prohibition of the use of unfermented wine in the Holy Communion, the "opinion" of Dr. A. J. Stephens, Q.C., has been taken as to the law upon the subject. He says that the question whether unfermented fluid can scientifically be called "wine" has never been raised or decided under the Acts of Uniformity, that the Bishop's power to prohibit depends on the construction of the expression "wine," that if the Bishop of Lincoln's interpretation of that word be sustained, the Rector would be guilty of a breach of ecclesiastical law, and be liable to a monition, and probably to the payment of costs; but he does not think that the question is so free from doubt that the act of the Rector, in administering the Holy Communion in unfermented wine, can be legitimately stigmatised as "scandalous and illegal."—Lord Beaconsfield, replying to a letter of inquiry from the Manchester Orange Institution, says that he is aware of no foundation for the rumour that the Pope had written an autograph letter to the Queen thanking Her Majesty for the freedom of action given him in the re-establishment of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy in Scotland.—The Roman Catholic priesthood of Ireland have set their faces against the national custom of "wakes." No one in future is to attend at wakes except the immediate relatives of the deceased, and no spirituous or intoxicating liquors are to be used on such occasions. For disobedience of these injunctions the clergy are commanded not to visit the house, not to attend the interment, and not to celebrate mass for the deceased.

SPORTING

The Turf.——With the exception of a day's hurdle racing and steeplechasing at Kingsbury on Tuesday, a remanet from the sport of last week which was interfered with by the frost, there is absolutely nothing to put on record as to the public doings of the "noble animal." As a rule, a postponement militates against sport, but this was an exception, and though the local magistrates still relentlessly refuse to let any one sell alcoholic refreshment on Mr. Warner's ground, the company assembled thoroughly enjoyed themselves. The victorious Tutor put in an appearance for the Kenton Hunters' Race, and started with the odds of 2 to 1 on him; but great was the consternation of his friends at seeing him absolutely last in a field of six. It must be remembered, however, that he had 12st. 12lb. to carry, whereas the winner, Sleight-of-Hand, had only 11st. 6lb. Bounce, a recent victor also, did better, as in a field of ten for the Metropolitan Hunt Steeplechase he won by twelve lengths.—The decision of the Grand National Hunt Committee, to the effect that "no hurdle race be run under two miles and over less than eight flights of hurdles," will meet with acceptance among all true lovers of sport, and all interested in keeping up the standard of our English horses. Could not some further legislation be effected as to the height and stability of the hurdles? The deaths of two gentlemen well known in connection with the Turf are recorded, the one being that of Mr. Kitchener, solicitor to the Jockey Club; and the other of Mr. James Manning, formerly Clerk of the Scales to that body.

Football.——The present has been as lively a week as last among the "footers." The second round of the Association Challenge Cup is being got through, the result being generally in accordance with anticipations. Though the Old Foresters at the Oval held their own manfully for some time against the Oxford men, the latter at last forced the game, and won by three goals to nothing.—On their own ground Barnes beat the Marlow team by three goals to one.—The High Wycombeites, though they have cause to rejoice at the recent visit of the Queen, have had the pain of witnessing, hard by their pretty little town, a horrible defeat of their champions at the hands of the Wanderers, nine goals to love being the score.—The Wanderers have also been victorious in another first-class match at Kennington Oval, beating Harrow School with great ease. From the great strength the Wanderers have shown this season, it seems by no means improbable that they will retain the Challenge Cup in their possession.—In a Rugby Union game on Saturday last at the Oval, two strong teams representing the North and South of England played their annual match, which resulted in a victory for the South by a goal and two tries to nothing.—By the way, our medical contemporary, the Lancet, which recently indulged in a tilt against "tame stag-hunting," has now fallen foul of football, and maintains that "evidence is accumulating of an overwhelming character to prove the brutality of the game, and its highly dangerous character when played by adults." It may be admitted that the game is a rough one, that many accidents occur in it, and that men suffer more than boys; but when we take into consideration the tens and hundreds of thousands who now play the game during the winter months, it can hardly be said that the pastime is unjustifiably dangerous. When our contemporary further adds that "this noble game ought to be rescued from the degraded condition into which it has fallen," it must surely be in ignorance of the fact that, so far from the game having fallen into a degraded condition, the tendency of all legislation on it since its revival has been to ameliorate the conditions of play.

Coursing.——The Ridgway Club (Lytham) Meeting showed some excellent sport, though the divisions of several chief stakes spoilt a good deal of the interest. The Lytham Cup fell to Mr. Mallabey's Banner Blue.

Aquatics.——The London compositors connected with the Press have taken a further step in aquatics, and on Saturday last the members of the Press Rowing Club brought off their first Sculling Handicap over the West London Course on the Thames. The representative of the "leading journal" very appropriately headed his competitors at the finish.

MUSIC

Crystal Palace Concerts.——The Directors of the Crystal Palace are doing good service to English music. Among the most recent productions at these concerts was a manuscript symphony in G minor, by Mr. Ebenezer Prout, one of our ablest and best informed composers. His work is modelled after the classical form of which so many examples have been bequeathed to us by Haydn and Mozart. It does not attempt to emulate the larger development distinguishing the symphonies of Beethoven from those of his illustrious predecessors, but keeps discreetly within the old prescribed limits which the genius of Beethoven, as it expanded more and more, enabled him to outstep. Mr. Prout's symphony, however, shows the hand of a musician thoroughly familiar with the elements of the art he professes, and as thoroughly practised in their use. Being uniformly regular in construction, and preserving no marked characteristics calling for special description, it is a genuine example of abstract music, equal to the majority of things of the kind for which we are indebted to modern German writers, who, in defiance of the so-called "forward" (really backward) school, adhere to the principles so emphatically illustrated in the efforts of the earlier masters. There is no "dreaming" in it; all is simple, straightforward, and, at the same time, scholarly. The symphony consists of four movements, which seem to constitute a happy family group. The opening movement, allegro moderato e con fuoco, is legitimate parent to its three successors; the larghetto is melodious and expressive, the scherzo, as in Beethoven's first quintet, and one of the symphonies of Schumann, is supplemented by two trios; and the finale, a movement of well-sustained vigour, exhibits such ingenious application of the fugal style as proves its author to be well versed in the art of counterpoint, once the indispensable study of musicians, but in the present day not sufficiently taken into consideration. If Mozart and Beethoven when young laboured arduously to acquire a command of this important agent, the one could never have written the finale to his Jupiter, the other the finale to his Eroica; nor, deprived of its aid, could Mr. Prout, with all his enthusiasm, have produced the last movement (vivace assai) of his Symphony in G Minor. The work was admirably executed under the direction of Mr. Manns, and the composer unanimously called forward at the conclusion. About Mr. J. L. Hatton's new oratorio Hezekiah, or rather, "sacred drama," as he somewhat irrelevantly styles it—seeing that it has nothing dramatic in it—we shall take another opportunity of speaking, having some further general remarks to offer upon the ante-Christmas series of Crystal Palace Concerts. Enough, for the moment, to record that it was listened to with interest and received with marked favour.

Her Majesty's Theatre.——The brief winter season has come to an end, and there is reason to believe that its success will encourage the director of Her Majesty's Theatre in other undertakings of the kind. Only one of the two "novelties" announced in the prospectus was given—the Ruy Blas of Signor Marchetti, about which more than enough has been written. This opera was played several times, but failed to make any extraordinary impression. The Forza del Destino of Verdi, as remodelled by its eminent composer, was, at the eleventh hour, abandoned, for reasons with which we are unacquainted. Nevertheless, the mere fact of his having produced no fewer than sixteen operas in so short a space of time, the greater number of them with more or less efficiency, entitles Mr. Mapleson to the confidence of his patrons and supporters. The last performance (on Tuesday night) comprised a miscellaneous selection from various operas, "for the benefit of the director." At Christmas time Her Majesty's Theatre will be devoted to ballet and one-act operetta.

Waifs.——The Africaine of Meyerbeer has been revived at the New Grand Opera with great splendour. Meanwhile Auber, chief of the French dramatic composers, with his Muette de Portici, Gustave III., and other admirable works, is left out in the cold. It is difficult to imagine that M. Halauzier is a Frenchman.—A young singer is just now exciting enthusiasm among the frequenters of the Opéra Comique. The Parisians, sometimes difficult to satisfy, are as often easily impressed by a new comer, especially if the new comer be a pretty woman. But, from all accounts Mdlle. Bilbaut-Vauchalet has achieved a real and legitimate success, as Isabelle, in Hérald's Pré-aux-Clercs.—Tamberlik has left Paris for Madrid, his farewell performance being as Manrico in the Trovatore, added to the scene of the duet with Iago in Rossini's Otello.—Madame Christine Nilsson has been greeted with the same enthusiasm at St. Petersburg as only lately at Moscow. The local papers, including the not always too lenient Journal de St. Petersburg, are in raptures with her performance of Marguerite in Gounod's Faust. We are not surprised.—Abbé Liszt, the pianist and composer, will pass the winter in his native country, at Buda-Pesth, not at Rome, as has been stated.—The success of Miss Minnie Hauck at Brussels goes on increasing. Her most recent appearance was in the Don Pasquale of Donizetti. She sings the part of the Norina in Italian, while her comrades sing their parts in French.—Herr Max Bruch has been invited by the directors to compose a choral and instrumental work for the Birmingham Festival of 1879.—A new grand hall is about to be erected for the concerts held in the Leipsic Gewandhaus, which Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy did so much to render famous.—The valuable library of Herr Julius Rietz, friend and successor of Mendelssohn, is to be sold by auction. The report of its having been purchased by the city of Dresden is without foundation.—Dr. Hans von Bülow has been writing a series of letters to the Leipsic Signale, which, however amusing to those who delight in seeing their friends held up to ridicule, are condemned by all judicious observers. The celebrated pianist, who himself lives in a glass house, is hardly discreet in throwing stones so freely.—Madame Charton Demeur, who thirty years ago found so many admirers at the French operatic performances organised by the late Mr. John Mitchell at our St. James's Theatre, attracted general attention the other day by her singing in the Chapel of the École Fénelon.—Judas Maccabæus was given at the last performance of the Sacred Harmonic Society, under the direction of Sir Michael Costa, in Exeter Hall.—The annual Christmas performances of the Messiah are already announced, and for some time we shall have nothing else in the shape of oratorio music.

LEGAL

A Spurious Picture.——A curious action was dealt with by the Common Pleas Division on Wednesday. The plaintiff, a picture-dealer, having bought a picture bearing what was supposed to be the signature of Mr. J. R. Herbert, R.A., took it to that gentleman to ascertain whether it was genuine. Mr. Herbert not only pronounced it to be a forgery, "a mere daub," but refused to give it up unless the owner would undertake not to sell it again. Hence the action, which resulted in the order of the Court for the picture to be given up, or the payment of 10*l*., the amount at which the jury had assessed its value. It is rather humiliating to reflect that with all our boast of culture, taste, and art-education, there are people who will gladly give 250*l*. for a picture which bears some celebrated name, but that if that name turn out to be a forgery, the work itself, hitherto so highly prized, becomes in their estimation a "mere daub."

Miscellaneous Items.——It is announced that Inspector Clarke, of the Detective Department, Scotland Yard, has been reinstated on full pay, with arrears of salary from the date of his arrest, and that he will shortly retire from the service on full pension, to which he is now entitled.—The woman Lena Chester, who attempted to bribe a gaoler attached to the Mansion House, has been discharged. It was shown that her acquaintance with Dimsdale was very slight, that she had no means of fulfiling her promise of giving 500*l*. for his release, and that the motive for her conduct was simply a silly desire for notoriety. Dimsdale and his associates Moore, Tait, and Dmke have at last been committed for trial. They are charged with having fraudulently obtained about 300,000*l*. by means of fictitious leases upon property to which they had no title whatever.—The other day a curious application was made by the owner of a picture, "The Raising of Lazarus;" which had been sent to a dealer to be restored. When the upper paint or dirt had been removed a valuable portrait of a lady, by Lely, was discovered beneath, and the dealer threatened, unless a sum, in addition to the amount he had originally agreed to take, were given to him, to paint over the picture again with some indelible substance. The Master of the Rolls granted an interim injunction restraining the defendant from mutilating or destroying the picture, and also made an order for the inspection of the picture by the person serving the injunction. Travellers who are unreasonable enough to expect hotel-keepers to be responsible for the safety of everything left upon their premises would do well to note the decision of the Exchequer Division in the case of "Hale v. Sinclair." The defendant, proprietor of the Golden Cross, Strand, was sued for 280*l*., the value of a case of jewellery which had been stolen from his hall, where it had been placed amongst ordinary baggage, no information being given as to its contents. Mr. Hale was non-suited by a jury, who considered that it was he who had been negligent rather than the hotel-keeper, and their sensible verdict has now been confirmed.—Mr. Hankey, the builder of the "Queen Anne's Mansions" in St. James's Park, has been summoned for alleged infringement of the Building Act. The charges are that the building has been carried to a greater height than that permitted by the statute, that the flooring was not constructed of incombustible materials, and that the openings in the party walls were not closed by wrought-iron doors, as required. The case is only part heard.—It is not often that a lady is mulcted in heavy damages for "breach of promise;" an Irish jury has, however, awarded 250*l*. to a love-lorn linendraper, although the fair defendant urged as an excuse for her faithlessness, that she had not been very much in love, and that she did not like being "dictated to" during courtship.—There was another prosecution under the Seeds Adulteration Act on Saturday. The defendant, who had mixed some inferior "dyed" clover seed with some of a more valuable kind, was fined 5*l*. and costs.—Messrs. Menzies, the distillers of Edinburgh, have been robbed of nearly 4,000*l*. worth of grain by two of their workmen, who have been sent to penal servitude for five years. A railway porter and a miller, who were concerned in the theft, have been sentenced to eighteen months' hard labour, and one Litster, a grain dealer, who was also an accomplice, and who has absconded, has been outlawed.—At the Middlesex Sessions a furniture dealer has been sentenced to eighteen months' hard labour for defrauding the Fulham Board of Works by charging for articles which had never been supplied. In order that the terrible plague of small-pox might be stopped, it was necessary that all goods taken from infected houses should be destroyed; but the prisoner, aided by a sanitary inspector, named Keall, who has since absconded, had worked up these very articles and sold them again to poor people, who had received orders from the Board. Dummy beds, &c., being burnt on the Common to deceive the authorities.—At Bedford a farmer is being prosecuted for perjury, in having sworn positively to the identity of two men who, upon his evidence, were recently convicted of highway robbery and sentenced to twelve years' penal servitude and the "cat." The Home Secretary has ordered the lashing to be stopped pending the inquiry.—William Flynn, one of the twenty-four men who were apprehended on suspicion of being concerned in the fatal assault on a policeman at Batley, in Yorkshire, has been found guilty of wilful murder.—At Liverpool a lad of nineteen is in custody on a charge of killing his father. The deceased and his wife were both intoxicated at the time, and the son admits that he also was "too drunk to know what he was about."

CHRISTMAS CAROL

Long ago went summer pleasures,
  Welcome! winter joys:
With a song unlock our treasures,
  Costly Christmas toys.

Let us air our hoarded riches,
  Lest December rust them;
Tales of fairies, dwarfs, and witches,
  Take them out, and dust them.

Quips, conundrums, quantum suff.,
  Bring them round the fender;
Children! who's for blind-man's buff?
  Who "my thought" will render?

Bid them rest from romp and riot,
  Nor delight shall fail—
Keep our English youngsters quiet
  With our "Winter's Tale."

Baubles would ye? painted playthings
  Grown-up children cry for?
Here's a heap of gilded stray things,
  Hundreds live and die for.

Youth and light and music muster,
  Round the dancers fly;
Whirling in the silvery lustre
  Flash the faces by.

Sweets would ye? Why, here's a crockful
  Of the thymiest honey;
Never fear! the cupboard's chockful;
  Sweets too dear for money.

Sweetest lips to hunger after,
  Chatting round the blaze;
Sweetest words, and looks, and laughter,
  Sweetest woman's ways.

Two in their accustomed places,
  And a babe asleep—
Love, and hope, and darling faces,
  Joy—to make one weep.

Grandames by the cottage fires,
  Where the kettles sing;
Twinkle go their knitting wires,
  And their wedding ring.

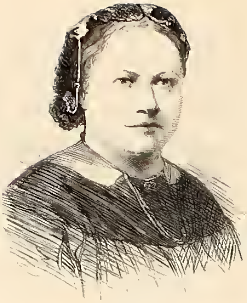
Fenced about by health and quickness,
  Where the hearth-flame glows,
Now the patient face of sickness
  Takes a fitful rose.

Quarrels left outside to cool,
  O'er the heart of home,
Brought out by the roaring Yule—
  Tender scriptures come.

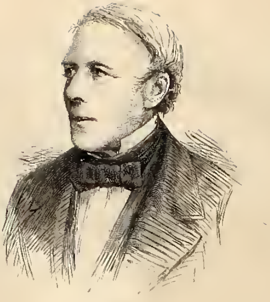
Let not this year leave another
  Scores of wicked spite;
Hast thou aught against thy brother?
  Blot it out to-night.

Blot it out! and adding, bravely,
  "Finis" to the scroll,
Turn the New Leaf softly, gravely—
  Twelve begins to toll.

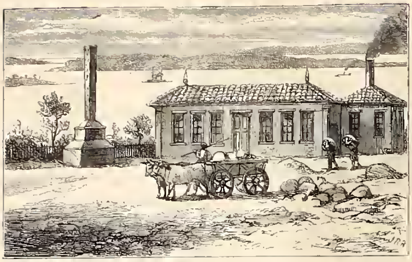
Mary Brotherton



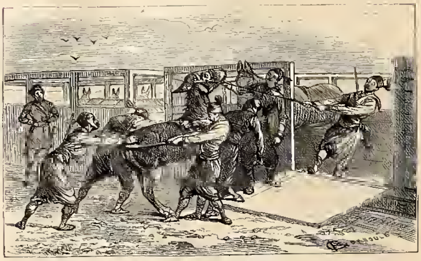
POMARE, QUEEN OF TAHITI
Died 1877, aged 68



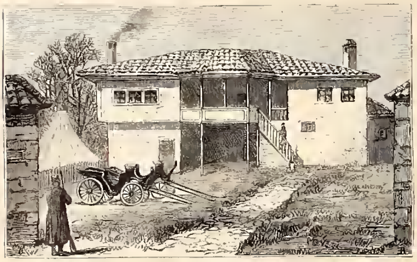
SYDNEY SMIRKE, R.A.,
Died Dec. 8, aged 78



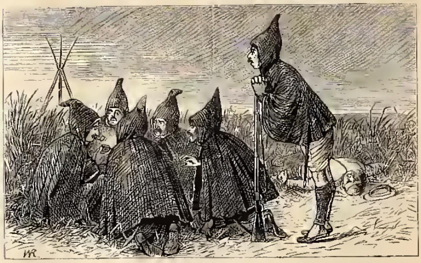
MONUMENT AT SILISTRIA COMMEMORATIVE OF THE SUCCESSFUL DEFENCE OF THE TOWN AGAINST THE RUSSIANS IN 1854



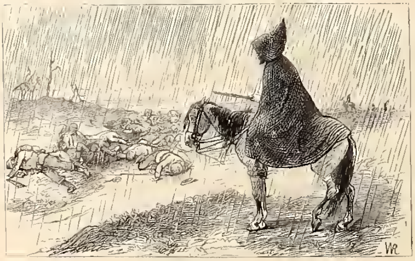
AT THE RAILWAY STATION, RASGRAD—DESPATCHING MULES FOR EGYPTIAN ARTILLERY



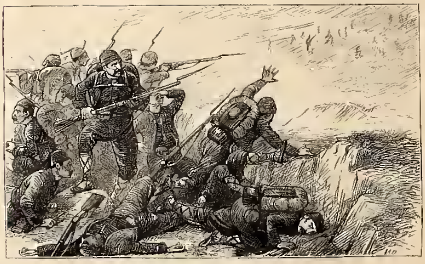
SULEIMAN PASHA'S HEADQUARTERS AT RASGRAD



"WELCOME LOOT"



"AN OUTPOST SENTINEL"



IN THE TRENCHES—"SURROUNDED"

WITH THE TURKS

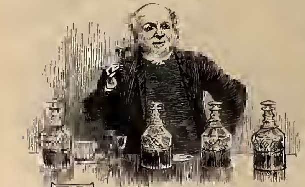
BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF-VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

A TRIUMPHAL PROCESSION

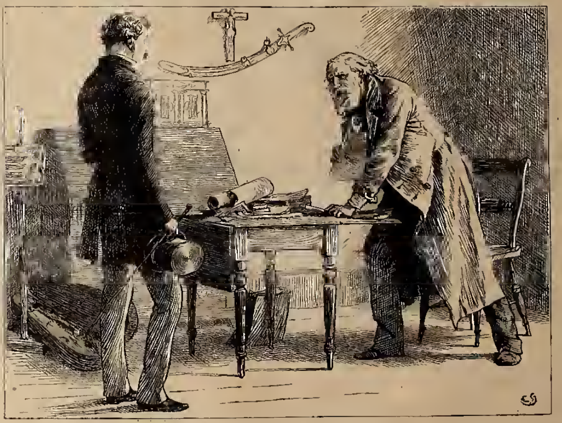


THESE were the days of a grand triumphal procession, in which we led our hero about to be congratulated by his friends. There were not many of these, it is true. That made it all the better, because the chances of the hateful passion of envy being aroused were lessened. To be sure, there were none who could be envious. Leonard's road to honour is a Royal road, open to all. But it is beset with difficulties. Stout is the heart and strong the will of him who dares to tread that pipe-clayed and uncertain way. None of the boys with whom we had been at school knew Leonard as a friend, or even as an old acquaintance. The reserved school boy who fought his way to freedom from molestation was not likely now to search out the lads who had once stung his proud soul by references to the price of soap. They were now chiefly engaged in promoting the commercial interests of the town, and would have saluted the young officer had they known who he was, hat in hand.

We went round, therefore, among our little circle of friends.

Mr. Broughton promptly invited us to dinner.

There were present at the banquet—to furnish it forth all the resources of the reverend gentleman's cellar were put under contribution—the Captain, Mr. Pontifex, Leonard, and myself. The dinner was simple, consisting of salmon, lamb, and chicken, cutlets, with early peas and asparagus. A little light Sauterne, which his reverence recommended in preference to sherry, as leaving the palate clean for the port, accompanied the meal. There was also champagne, which, he said, was a wine as Catholic as the Athanasian Creed, inasmuch as it goes equally well with a simple luncheon of cold chicken, and with the most elaborate Gaudy. After dinner, solely in deference to the uncorrupted digestion of youth, he ordered a dish of strawberries.



At sight of a stranger he sprang to his feet and clutched his papers

"It is not the right time to eat them," he said, in a voice almost as solemn for the occasion as that of Mr. Pontifex. "Their proper place is after breakfast. A good dinner port would be better. But young men expect these things. When you and I were undergraduates, Pontifex, we liked them." And then, while we absorbed the strawberries, he arose and brought from a sideboard, with great care and with his own hands, four decanters of port.

They stood all in a row before him, a label hanging from each. He put out his hands over them like a priest pronouncing a blessing.

"We ought, brother Pontifex," he said, "to have a form of thanksgiving for port."

"When I was a young man," said Mr. Pontifex, with a sigh, "I was called by some of my reckless companions—ahem!—Two-Bottle Pontifex. . . . Two-Bottle Pontifex—such was my appetite for port-wine at that period! I am now never allowed by Mrs. Pontifex—alas!—even to taste the—ahem!—the beverage."

"This," said Mr. Broughton, affectionately caressing one of the decanters, "is a bottle of 1820. I sincerely wish, Leonard, that I could entertain the hope of bequeathing you a few dozens in token of regard to my old pupil. But I have not more than enough for my own use, always supposing that I reach the allotted time of threescore years and ten. It is generous still, this wine." He poured out a glass, and held it to the light. "Mark the colour; refresh yourself with this bouquet; taste the noble wine." He suited the action to the "recommendation." "What a combination of delight for all the senses at once! Nature never raised a sweeter colour—a more divine fragrance—a more Olympian taste than she has united——"

"Under Providence, brother Broughton," said Mr. Pontifex, shaking his head.

"—united in this one glass of the finest wine ever grown. How my good grandfather, the Bishop—whose piety was only equalled by his taste for port—would have enjoyed this moment! The day before he died his chaplain, on pouring him out his single glass—the Bishop was then too feeble for more—said, 'We shall drink, my lord, in a better world, a more delicious wine.' He was a learned and sound divine, but young, and with a palate comparatively untrained. 'We cannot,' said the good old Bishop. 'Better wine than this is not to be had.'

"The next decanter," he went on with a sigh for the good Bishop's memory, "is a bottle of 1834. I do not know aright how to sing its praises. After what I have said of 1820 I would only say—

> O matre pulchrâ filia pulchrior!

You shall taste it presently. Thirteen years later, we come to 1847. What a year for port! and to think that it should be followed—that year of generous and glorious vintages—by the year of rebellion and social upheaving! As if Heaven's choicest blessings were altogether thrown away upon ungrateful man! The last is a bottle of 1851, now four years in bottle and still a little too full. The four bottles do not make altogether a bottle a head—nothing to your old days, Pontifex—but we three are advanced in years, I am sorry to think, and the boys have been trained in a different school. Perhaps a better one.

"And now," he resumed, looking round with smiles twinkling in his eyes and playing over his jolly red face, "a Toast. The health of Leonard—our brave lad who has come home from the wars with medals and honours which make us all proud of him. It was in this room, my dear boy, that you first read the wars of antiquity told in heroic verse. It was here that your ear and your heart became attuned to the glorious aspects of heroism, and the din of battle. Remember, when you have some of your own, that nothing succeeds like putting a boy through the good old mill of Homer and Virgil. You were educated by me for your work, not by cramming yourself with a bundle of scientific facts, which they would persuade us is what soldiers want, but by the deeds of the great men of Greece and Rome. You have not forgotten Diomede, I hope."

"No sir," said Leonard. "Nor Sarpedon, nor the cowardly Paris, nor Turnus, nor Nedin and Euryalus—nor any of them. Who can forget the jolly old battles?"

"When I was a schoolboy," Mr. Pontifex said, solemnly, "I once fought a battle with another boy in which, I remember, I was worsted, owing to the superior strength of my antagonist. This breach of rules was subsequently discovered by the master of the school, and I was summoned before his presence. As I had nothing to say in—ahem!—vindication of the offence, I was instantly condemned to be—ahem!—in fact—birched! The—the necessary preliminaries having been performed, they proceeded to search for the rod, an instrument which was kept for that purpose under wet straw in the garden. When this had been found, I sustained a most fearful infliction."

We all laughed at this graphic reminiscence of a school battle and its consequences, and Mr. Broughton bade us charge our glasses and begin the '34. Mr. Pontifex grew more solemn as well as paler under the influence of the port as the evening went on, and Mr. Broughton more purple in the face, more jolly, and more animated. I had frequently seen this opposite effect of wine upon both clergymen. After the second bottle, the wine passed chiefly from one to the other, because the Captain had already exceeded a double ration and Leonard was moderate in his libations.

In the course of the evening, the Perpetual Curate of St. Faith's pronounced a eulogium on the world generally, on those who know how to enjoy life, and on the good things life has to give. It was in the middle of the last bottle, and his face was a deep purple, while Mr. Pontifex, perfectly white, sat with his long upper lip grown half an inch longer, and the solemnity of Rhadamanthus upon his brow.

"What good things they are," he said, enthusiastically, "to those few who know how to cultivate their senses. Wine such as this; the meats and fruits which come in their season; music such as Laddy here can play; the poetry of those divine men who made the language of a little peninsula survive for ever to fill our hearts with wonder and delight; the beauty of women to take us out of ourselves when we are young—you have been in love, Captain?"

The Captain laughed.

"Was there ever a sailor," he asked, "who has not been in love? And was there ever a lover like a sailor? What does the song say?" The Captain lifted up his pipe.

> "And the toast—for 'twas Saturday night—
> Some sweetheart or wife whom he loved as his life,
> Each drank and he wished he could hail her.
>   But the standing toast
>   That pleased the most
>   Was the wind that blows,
>   And the ship that goes,
> And the lass that loves a sailor."

"And the lass that loves a sailor," echoed Mr. Broughton, to his colleague's astonishment. "I knew you had, Captain. Catch a salt neglecting such a chance of completing his education. It did you good—own that; and it did me good, too, after the fit was over. Come, Pontifex, your wife is not here. Confess."

Mr. Pontifex shook his head very solemnly, and made answer with many parentheses.

"It is a sad—sad reminiscence of an ardent and perhaps (in this and in one or two other particulars which I have already at various times, as you may remember, Johnnie, in the course of conversation touched upon) ill-regulated youth, that I once imagined myself—actually in Love"—he spoke in a tone of the greatest surprise—"with a—a—in fact—a young person of the opposite sex, who vended perfumes, unless my memory greatly deceives me, at an establishment in the High——"

"And I daresay it was a very good thing for you," returned his jovial brother, interrupting the further particulars of this amour. "It was for me, and no worse for the girl I loved, because she preferred somebody else, and married him. It was an education for us all. As it is now, Captain, at our time of life we may say—

> Old as we are, for ladies' love unfit,
> The power of beauty we remember >   yet.

And the sight of a pretty face, like that of Celia Tyrrell—bless her!—I drink this glass of the Forty-one to her—is like the shadow of a rock in the wilderness. Age has its pleasures; they are, besides the drinking of good port, the contemplation of beautiful women and active youth. We have lived—let us sit down and watch those who are living. You, Leonard, boy," he resumed the familiar tone of our old tutor, "you had the impudence to tell me five years ago, that you would rather help to make history than to write it. And that is what you have been doing ever since. And it does us good—us old stagers, to see you doing it."

Presently he became more serious, and spoke from the Christian's point of view.

"A Christian scholar and a gentleman. His race is nearly extinct now. But he had his uses, and many were his virtues. When I read Robert Browning's poem of 'Bishop Blougram's Apology,' I read for Blougram, Broughton. And yet he only touched that Right Reverend Father in a few points. Above all, a scholar; and with it, a kindly heart, a simple faith, and a robust, full nature which enabled him to enjoy all that could be got from life. He is gone now, with his purple face, his short fat figure, and his dogmatic sermons. I do not like the present man—who is Earnest—so well. Nor do I love the fussiness of the new school."

The next day we called upon Mrs. Pontifex, who received Leonard as cordially as that lady could make a greeting. Nothing was said about her husband's excesses in port the previous evening. She said that news had reached them of Leonard's happy return; that she rejoiced at his success, which was doubtless, she was good enough to say, deserved, though she wished it had been in more Christian fields; that the army was a bad school for those who wished to be serious; and that he must specially beware of that inflation which prosperity brings upon the heart. Then she said hospitably that she proposed, after consideration, to name an early day, for Tea. Leonard laughed and accepted, leaving the day open. He always laughed, this favourite of Fortune. I do not think that festive gathering ever came off, owing to other circumstances which interfered.

In the afternoon of what Celia called "the day after," leaving the rest of the phrase to be filled up, Leonard's Colonel called upon us. There was one thing remarkable about the Captain. He was the simplest of sailors—no retired Bo's'n could be simpler—in his habits of thought, his speech, and his way of life. But with an officer of his own or the sister service, his manner changed instinctively. To the quiet simplicity of his habitual air he added the bearing and dignity of his rank. He was, he remembered on these occasions, a Captain in the Royal Navy, and the carpet of his dining-room became a Quarterdeck.

The Colonel came to say great things of Leonard, and said them, Leonard not being present.

"He was observed by his officers, sir, from the first. Reported on his joining at his Depôt as a smart well set up lad. Found to be of superior rank and education to the men. Proved himself excellent at drill. Made a corporal first and a sergeant shortly after. And sir, if it were not for his own interests, I should say I wish he was a sergeant still.

"You have heard of his gallant action, I suppose," he went on. "Nothing finer ever done. Lord Raglan sent for him, sir. He has told you that, I dare say. But he did not tell you what the chief said afterwards. It was that if he had it in his power he would have knighted him on the field of battle. He has been a credit to the regiment since the first day he joined it. We are proud of him, sir: we are proud of him, and I am happy in being able, this day, to beat up your quarters and tell you so."

The Captain answered simply. He said that Leonard was always a brave and trustworthy lad: that for his own part he had endeavoured to make the boy think of duty before all things: that it gave him unspeakable pleasure to hear what the Colonel had said and to know that it was the truth without exaggeration: that the boy was still young, and, as yet, only at the beginning of his career. I felt proud of the Captain as he made his little speech, full of dignity and good feeling.

"At all events, he owes everything to you," said the Colonel. "And now, will you dine with us to-morrow, you and Mr. Pulaski? It is guest night.

The Captain accepted for both of us.

"I should like to ask," said the Colonel, "if it is not an impertinent question—do you think there is any chance of Copleston finding out something of his family?"

"I have thought of it more than once," the Captain replied. "His mother died in giving him birth; with the last breath she said his name was to be Leonard Copleston, 'her husband's name.' It is not a very common name. To find him one would have to consult army and navy lists of five-and-twenty years ago. If we found him, what might we not find too? That his father was a scoundrel is certain to me, from the circumstance of the boy's birth. He may be dead; he may have dishonoured the name; he may be unwilling to recognise his son—why not let things go on as they have done, without further trouble? The boy bears the Queen's Commission; he is no disgrace, but a credit to his regiment. Let us remain satisfied."

The Colonel shook his head.

"I shall look up the lists," he said. "And if I find out anything I will tell you first. If it is anything calculated to do Copleston harm, we will keep it to ourselves."

Guest night at the Hundred-and-Twentieth. The tables covered with the regimental plate, and crowded with officers. The Colonel has our old Captain on the right, his own guest. I sit beside Leonard. The band is playing. There is a full assemblage. The younger officers are full of life and spirits. What is it like—this world I have never seen till to-night—this world of animal spirits, laughter, and careless fun? I look about me dreamily. This, then, I think, was the kind of life led by my father, Roman Pulaski, of the Imperial Guard, before Nicholas exchanged it for the Siberian mines. It must be pleasant for a while. These young fellows are neither creating, like artists; nor criticising, like scholars; nor working for money, like professional men; nor selling their wit and spirits, like authors; nor contriving schemes for making money, like merchants; they are simply living to enjoy things. They have had a hard time of it in India: a few of them—very few, alas!—had a hard time in the Crimea: now they are back to garrison and English life, and they are rejoicing as heartily as they fought.

They tell me that the officer of to-day is scientific, and plays Kriegspiel. I am sure he is not braver, more genial, kindlier, or more generous than Leonard's brothers in arms of twenty years ago. I dare say, even in those brainless times, even among the jovial faces around that mess table, there were some who cared about their profession, had strategic genius, and studied the art of war. At least one did. Everybody challenges the Captain. He was Copleston's guardian. Everybody knows all about him. Then they challenged me, and had I drained all the bumpers they came offering me, my course at that table would have been brief indeed.

"Gentlemen, 'The Queen!'"

It is the President, and then we fall into general talk.

What sort of mess would that be into which Wassielewski was going to introduce me? A mess of peasants sitting round a fire of sticks in a forest. Instead of the Queen's health we should drink to Poland, instead of claret we should have water, instead of a circle of faces in which the enjoyment of life—the mere fact of living—was the prevailing feature I should see round me everywhere the grim and earnest faces of those who were looking forward sadly to defeat and death. I suppose when a man is going to be martyred he goes to meet his doom with a certain exaltation which enables him to pass through the agony of death with heroic mien. The most disagreeable part about it must be the steady looking forward to the supreme moment.

"Dreamer," whispered Leonard, "where are your thoughts?"

"I was thinking what sort of a regimental mess I should find in Poland," I replied, forgetting that Leonard knew nothing.

"What mess? Poland?" he replied. "What have you to do with Poland now?"

I told him in a few words. It was not the place or the time after dinner at a regimental mess to go into any heroics. Besides, I felt none—only a sad despondency at the necessity which was going to drag into the trouble one who had such small stomach for the fight.

Leonard was aghast.

"The thing is absurd, Laddy, ridiculous. You must not go."

"I have pledged my word," I said, "and I must. You would not have me break old Wassielewski's heart?"

"I don't know. It must be a tough old heart by this time. But I would rather break that than let him break your head. We will talk about it to-morrow, old boy. What with Celia's troubles and yours it seems as if we shall have our hands full for awhile. Pray, has the Captain, by accident, got any secret sorrow?"

"No," I replied, laughing. It was beautiful to see the calm way in which Leonard faced difficulties.

"He is not engaged to Mrs. Jeram, I hope, or contracted a secret marriage with his cook? He's not going to be tried by court martial for intoxication, is he? Really, Laddy, you have given me a shock. Are you sure there is no more behind?"

"Quite sure?"

"Good. There is going to be a move. We will get away early. I will go and see this fireeater, and appeal to his common sense."

It was twelve, however, before we escaped the kindly hospitalities of the mess, and the Captain came away amid a storm of invitations to dine with them again. He accepted them all, in great good spirits, and became a sort of privileged person in the barracks so long as that regiment stayed in the place, dividing his time in the afternoon between the officers and the boys at play. When the regiment was ordered away he returned entirely to the boys.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

AN APPEAL TO COMMON SENSE

"We will appeal," said Leonard, "to the man's common sense first. The thing is absurd and preposterous."

He did make that appeal to Wassielewski, and as it was a complete failure, I suppose the old conspirator had no common sense.

He called in the morning at his lodgings, that one room which I have described, where the old man told me my own story in all its hideous details, sparing nothing. The Pole was sitting at the table, the map of Poland in his hand, preparing for the campaign. Long lists and estimates lay beside him, with which he was estimating the progress and duration of the struggle. The longer the revolt, the more lives sacrificed, the greater the exasperation and cruelties of the Muscovs, the better for Poland. Tears of women, he used to say in his grim way, and blood of men together fructify the soil, so that it produces heroes.

At sight of a stranger he sprang to his feet, and clutched his papers.

"You do not remember me," said Leonard.

"I do not," replied the old man, gazing keenly and suspiciously into his face. Spies and police assume so many forms that they might even be looked for beneath the guise of a young Englishman. "Who are you, and what do you want with me?"

"My name is Leonard Copleston. I am the old friend of Ladislas Pulaski. One of his only friends."

"He has many," said Wassielewski. "Friends in his own country."

"Friends who will make him the tool of their own purposes, and lead him, if they got their own will, to death. I am one of the friends who want him to live."

Wassielewski made no reply for a moment.

Then he seemed to recollect.

"I know you now," he said. "You went away to seek your fortune. You used to come to our barrack and learn things. The Poles were good to you, then."

"Some of your people taught me French and Russian, riding; fencing, all sorts of useful things. I am grateful to them."

"And your fortune—it is found?"

"Yes; I am an officer in the army; I have been in the Crimea."

The old man's face brightened.

"Aha! you fought the Muscovite. We were watching, hoping to fight him too, but our chance never came. Why—why did you not make a demonstration in Poland?"

"We did what we could, and we got the best of it."

The Pole sighed. Then he resumed his suspicious look.

"Why do you come to see me? Can I fiddle for you? I can march before troops of your men playing a hornpipe. What else can I do for you? Ah! I see—I see," his face assumed a look of cunning. "You are a friend of Ladislas Pulaski, and you come here to persuade me not to take him. That is too late. He has pledged himself, and he must keep his word. Say what you have to say and leave me. I have much to think of."

"What I have to say is short. It is absurd to drag into the meshes of your conspiracy a man like Ladislas, the most peaceful, the most unpractical, the most dreamy of men. Even now, when you half-maddened him with some horrible story of death and torture, his sympathies are only half with you. He cannot speak Polish; he is a quiet English musician, as unfit for a campaign as any girl. Why do you seek to take away his life? What earthly good can his death do to Poland?"

"He is a Pulaski. That is why he must come with us. His father, Roman Pulaski, dragged out ten years of misery in a Siberian mine. Ladislas must strike a blow to revenge him."

"Revenge! revenge!" Leonard cried, impatiently.

"Yes, young gentleman!" Wassielewski rose to his full height, looking something like an eagle. "Revenge! That is the word. For every cruel and treacherous murder there shall be revenge full and substantial. Did Ladislas tell you the story of his father?"

"No, not yet."

"That is not well. His mother, too, was murdered when the Russians stole her boy, and she ran after the carts through the winter snow, bareheaded, crying and imploring for her child till she could run no longer, and so fell down and died. Did Ladislas tell you of his mother?"

"No."

"It is not well. Ladislas should tell everybody these things. He should repeat them to himself twice a day; he should never let them go out of his brain."

"Why did you disturb the current of his peaceful life with the story?"

"To fire his blood; to quicken his sluggish pulse. The boy is a dreamer. I would spur him into action."

"You cannot do that. But you might spur him into madness. What is the use of filling his thoughts with revenge which can only be dreamed of?"

"Only be dreamed of!" Wassielewski cried, almost with a shriek. "Why, man, I have dreamed of revenge for twenty years and more. Only be dreamed of? Why, we shall put the revenge into action at once. Do you hear?—at once—next week. We start next week—we—but you are an Englishman," he stopped short, "and you would not betray me."

"I betray no one. But Ladislas shall not go with you."

"I say he shall," Wassielewski replied, calmly. "I have persuaded him. He is expected. Revenge? Yes; a long scourge from generation to generation."

"An unworthy thing to seek. I thought you Poles were patriots."

"It is because we are patriots that we seek revenge. How easy it is for you English, who have no wrongs to remember, to talk with contempt of revenge. What do you know of backs scarred and seamed with Russian sticks? What murdered sons have you for the women to lament? What broken promises, ruined homes, outraged hearths, secret wrongs, and brutal imprisonments? Go, sir; leave me alone with my plans; and talk to no Pole about living in peace."

"He is deformed."

"So much the better. All the Pulaskis for centuries have been tall and straight. Who crippled the boy? The Russians. Let the people see his round back and hear his story."

"He is weak; he cannot march; he cannot even carry a gun."

"Yes; he is strong enough to carry a rifle, and use it, too."

"He is a dreamer. Let him dream away his life in peace."

"He may dream, if he likes—in the next world," said the conspirator, grimly. "Poland claims all her sons—dreamers, and poets, and all. This is a levée en masse, a universal conscription, which knows of no exceptions. He must join the rest, and march to meet his fate. Shall a son of Roman Pulaski stay in inglorious exile while the Poles are rising again?"

Leonard made a gesture of impatience.

"It is madness. Man, it is murder."

Wassielewski sighed and sat down—he had been walking up and down the room. Resting one hand upon his papers, he looked up sorrowfully at Leonard, speaking in low tones of conviction and with softened eyes.

"It is what I have said to myself a thousand times. Ladislas is not a soldier: let him live. I say it still, in the day time. But at night, when I am quite alone in the moonlight, I sometimes see the form of his mother, the Lady Claudia. She is in white, and she points to Poland. Her face is not sad but joyous. Perhaps that is because she is going to have her son again, in Heaven—after the Russians have killed him. I asked her, once, because I wished to save the boy, if he should go. She smiled and pointed her finger still. After that, I knew. She wants to have him with her."

"That was a dream of the night, Wassielewski."

"No—no," he shook his head and laughed; "I am not to be persuaded that it was a dream. Why, I should be mad indeed if I were to take the injunctions of my dear and long lost mistress to be a dream."

"People are sometimes deceived," said Leonard, "by the very force of their thoughts—by illusions of the brains—by fancies——"

"It seems a cruel thing," Wassielewski went on, unheeding, "but it cannot be cruel, if his mother orders it. The boy must come with me: he must join the villagers: he must learn their language—if he has time: march with them: eat with them: and carry his life in his hand until Death comes for him. It will be bad for him at first, but he will grow stronger, and then he will feel the battle fever, so that when I am killed he will be better able to protect himself. And perhaps he will escape—a good many Poles have escaped. Then you will have him back again. But I do not think he will, because in the night I see visions of battles between the Russians and the Poles, and I never see him among them, even myself."

"Poor Wassielewski," said Leonard, touched with his fanatic simplicity.

"He is a good lad," the old man went on. "I loved him first for his mother's sake, but learned to love him for his own. He has a tender soul, like a woman's, and a face like a girl's. We shall have to accustom him to scenes that he knows nothing of. We do not make war in Poland with kid gloves. We kill and are killed: we shoot and are shot: we use every weapon that we can find and call it lawful. We slaughter every Muscov who falls into our hands, and we expect to be slaughtered ourselves. It is war to the knife between us, and the Poles are always on the losing side."

"Then why make these mad attempts at insurrection?"

"Because the time has come round again. Once in every generation, sometimes twice, that time comes round. Now it is upon us, and we are ready to move. You wish to save your friend. It is too late; his name is here, upon the roll of those who dare to die."

"Why," said Leonard, "you are a worse dreamer than poor Ladislas. On whose head will the guilt of all this bloodshed lie, except on yours and the madmen among whom you work?"

Wassielewski shook his head.

"The crime be on the head of the Czar. Rebellion is my life. I think of it all day, and dream of it all night. By long thinking you come to learn the wishes of the dead. They whisper to me, these voices of the silent night, 'What we died for you must die for, what we suffered for you must suffer for; the soil of Poland is rank with the blood of her martyrs. Do you, too, with the rest, take the musket, and go to lie in that sacred earth.' They have chosen me, the noble dead; they have elected me to join in their fellowship. Ladislas shall sit beside me, with them. I have spoken."

He finished, and pointed to the door. There was nothing more to be said, and Leonard came away, disheartened.

"It is no use, Ladislas," he said. "The man is mad with long brooding over his wrongs. I have never been much in the conspiracy and rebellion line, but now I understand what a conspirator is like in private life, and I don't like him. When I read henceforth of Guy Fawkes, Damiens, Cassius, Brutus, and other gentlemen of their way of thinking, I shall always remember old Wassielewski, with his deep-set eyes, his overhanging eyebrows, that far-off look of his, and the calm way in which he contemplates being killed. Even Havelock and his saints never marched to death with greater composure. And killed he certainly will be, with all the madmen who go with him."

"I must go with him, Leonard. I have promised. I am pledged."

"We shall see," he replied.

The vague words brought a little hope to my soul. The thirst for revenge, alien to my nature, was gone now, despite the burning wrongs, the shameful and horrible history which the old man had told me. I looked forward with unutterable disgust to a campaign among Polish rebels. I was indeed an unworthy son of Poland.

(To be continued)

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Hazlehurst Mystery (2 vols.): J. Sale Lloyd; An Innocent Sinner (3 vols.): Mabel Collins; Thomas Browne's Will (3 vols.); Ida Milton (3 vols.); Children of Nature (2 vols.). Tinsley Brothers.

In Love and War (3 vols.): Charles Gibbon. Bentley.

A New Testament Commentary; Vol II: C. J. Elliott, D.D. Cassell.

Annus Sanctus: T. Davis. Hodder and Stoughton.

15,000 Miles on the Amazon: Brown and Lidstone; Africa; Keith Johnston. Stanford.

The Via Media of the Anglican Church, Vol. II.: J. H. Newman. Pickering.

The Flooding of the Sahara: Donald Mackenzie; In a Minor Key (2 vols.); History of a Crime (2 vols.). S. Low and Co.

Miss Misanthrope (2 vols.): Justin M'Carthy. Chatto and Windus.

History of the Indian Navy (2 vols.): C. R. Low. Bentley.

Etchings from the National Gallery. Seeley, Jackson, and Halliday.

Mediæval Church History: Archbishop Trench. Macmillan.

Under the Will (3 vols.); History of English Humour (2 vols.) Hurst and Blackett.

Biology; Anthropology; Frank Raleigh (3 vols.). Chapman and Hall.

Faust: Trans. by T. J. Arnold. Hachette and Co.

A Parcel of Diaries from Messrs. Letts and Son, and a number of Christmas Books, Cards, Almanacks, &c., from Messrs. Routledge, Marcus Ward, J. F. Shaw, Cassell, the Wesleyan Sunday School Union, Religious Tract Society, &c., &c.

THE READER

"FIELD PATHS AND GREEN LANES," by Louis J. Jennings (John Murray).—Not far afield, with one exception—the paths by Wye of the concluding chapter—are the walks which Mr. Jennings has here described, and Mr. J. W. Whymper enticingly illustrated. Many could be taken in a single day from London. All lie within the compass of the weekly rest from Saturday to Monday. Yet saving for the ardent pedestrian or the member of the County Archæological Society very many of them are quite a world unknown; examples of the intensely rural scenes to be met with not thirty miles from smoky Babylon, scenes through which one may wander hour after hour along the ridges of the silent Downs or for miles of solitary green roads trodden only by the herdboy or the woodcutter; "streets" and villages whose outward aspect has hardly been altered for the last two hundred years; wildernesses of brake and fern that might have been transplanted bodily from some New World solitude; thickets that are veritable survivors of the old Andreades' Weald, where the ancient Briton held out long against the South Saxon incomer. You need the compass and the map at times—for finger-posts are often deceitful—to find your way from place to place. You light on bits of ancient English life and fragments of the old English phrase. You come out on churches where the "restorer" is beginning his work, and mansions with quaint old legends—on ruined Cowdray for instance burned down within a month of the day its last lord was swept over the falls of Laufenberg, or on Cuckfield, the original of Mr. Ainsworth's "Rookwood." With the exception of the opening visits to Winchelsea and Rye, and the parting chapter about Ross and Chepstow, the walks are all on the Sussex and Surrey Downs or the wooded tract between the North Downs and the South—their westernmost limit the old Portsmouth Road, where Nicholas Nickleby halted to recount to Smike the story of the Devil's Punch Bowl, their easternmost Hever Castle, well-known to readers of Mr. Froude or Hepworth Dixon. It is not, however, to its recollections of the past so much as to its pure and withal expert appreciation of the country side, of the birds that sing among the branches, the fronds and foliage of heath and thicket, the colouring and the contour of Down and Weald and old-world building that the volume owes its most especial charm. And Mr. Jennings, who, like Thoreau, loves to walk alone, has ample power of enjoying these to the full. His volume, it is true, is far from perfect, with the perfectness, say, of Walton when he ceased for the nonce to talk of fish; there are even in it detestable bits (e.g. page 194) of the modern "chiel amang you takin' notes;" but if not of the highest order, it is a very delightful volume of the second-class, and should be serviceable to very many who in a few months may be doubting where to pass a pleasant day in spring, in summer, or in early autumn.

The dedication (to Mr. Gladstone) of Signor G. B. Testa's "History of the War of Frederick against the Communes of Lombardy: A Translation from the Italian, Revised by the Author" (Smith, Elder, and Co.), is dated May 24th, 1853. From passages in the body of the work which allude to the Austrian eagle as still fluttering over Venice and Milan, we should infer that the reviser troubled himself little with things that have happened since that date. Such old-fashioned disregard of modern changes prepares us somewhat for an archaic style suggestive of over-literal translation from ancient chronicles and annals. Apart, however, from the question of style, Signor Testa's volume has many merits. The successful efforts of the Lombard cities, headed by Milan, to raise themselves to the rank of free communities, owing only a pro formâ allegiance to the Emperor—the earliest in date of a series of similar efforts from the Papal borders to far down the Rhine valley, out of which only the Swiss Cantons emerged as free Republics in the end—are among the most interesting incidents in mediæval Italian history. And Signor Testa has given us, out of the old annalists, a vigorous narrative of the fortunes of the war which ended in the Peace of Constance, no less than of the intestine feuds which already harbingered the swift decline of the enfranchised commonwealths into a group of "tyrannies." To the student of the rise and growth of States, these pictures from the birth-period of modern Italian nationality will be decidedly acceptable.

Two of the Messrs. Cassell's popular Illustrated Histories are brought to a conclusion at the same time. In Vol. III. and last of the "Illustrated History of India" Mr. Grant sweeps us through the last half-century of our Indian reign—the period of war with Burmese, Afghans, Ameers of Scinde, Sikhs, Persians, Mutineers—in a stream of picturesque description of daring deeds in single combat or on the battle-field that should win the heart of every youthful reader. Nor are the less stirring works of peace neglected, fair space being given to the account of changes in the government and administration, to the silent labours of the engineer and the missionary, or the peaceful pageantry of royal and vice-regal receptions. War again claims the larger moiety of the last volume of Mr. E. Ollier's most useful "History of the United States"—a volume which, commencing, like Mr. Grant's, just two-and-fifty years ago, at the death, within a few days of one another, of the two last, and all but the two greatest, of the men who had made the Republic, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, leads on, through the somewhat uninteresting period when the politics of the Union were mainly of the "parochial" sort, varied only by Indian and Filibuster wars and not very magnanimous bickerings with the British Government, to the time when Southern ascendancy at Washington breaks down at last, and Slave-holders and Emancipationists, State Right men and Federalists, grapple with one another in the great struggle of the War of Secession. The story of the war itself is told with much fairness and at ample length, while a brief sketch of the "reconstruction" policy, and of the difficulties with which the new President had to deal, brings to a fitting close a work which we would willingly see in every household.

A whole department of curious literature has been "boiled down" for Mr. Bonwick's "Pyramid Facts and Fancies" (C. Kegan Paul and Co.). "Who Built the Great Pyramid, and Why?" has been a puzzle for a thousand years. Not earlier; for the artistic Greek and Roman, who saw little more than a huge pile of stones, took quietly down the story of the priests, turned Khufu into Cheops, and put his note-book by. Not till the Saracens swarmed into the land do we get fairly among the legends of giant kings before the Flood, of Pharaoh's treasure-houses, and so forth; while it has been reserved for modern mystics to discover in the Gizeh Pyramid not only an edifice for the preservation of the sacred standards of length, and weight, and time, or the divinely revealed determinations of the "precession of the equinoxes," the sun's mean distance from the earth, the diameter and density of our planet, &c., but a chronological key to the past and future history of the world from the Flood to the Incarnation, and from the Incarnation to the commencement (in 1881-2, not, it is now thought, in 1877) of the Millennium. Merely to enumerate the fifty or so "fancies" which Mr. Bonwick has condensed and classified with most judicial, if slightly ironic, impartiality would more than fill our entire space. Much less can we dwell on the many interesting "facts" that bear on the structural design and measurements of the Great Pyramid, its place in the "pyramidal system" of the Nile-land, its comparison with similar and hardly less colossal buildings of extinct races in the Eastern and the Western Worlds. The whole volume is a most curious study—a book not to be read and cast aside, but to be welcomed as a permanent edition to the library.

In juxtaposition with Mr. Bonwick's work we might briefly note as an average example of what Mr. Proctor styles the new "Pyramid religion," Mr. W. Rowbottom's "Mystery of Bible Dates Solved by the Great Pyramid" (W. H. Guest). How Mr. Rowbottom adjusts Bible chronology to the inch scale of the great passage in the Pyramid by a general shifting forward of dates, and how he winds up with still more mysterious chapters on the identification of the British with the lost tribes of Israel, and the prophetic import of the squares, circles, and cubes of the Freemason, we must leave our readers to find out if they will. The majority, we fear, will deem such lucubrations of slender value even as exercises in arithmetic.

A fifth edition, remodelled and edited by Frederick Martin, of "Townsend's Manual of Dates" (F. Warne and Co.), will be found of very general service as a book of reference. The articles, with few exceptions, are well selected and to the point; the tables of dates under special headings—cities, countries, scientific discoveries, &c., more than usually full and accurate.

Last, far from least, as a volume of real usefulness let us commend "The Official Handbook of the National School of Cookery" (Chapman and Hall). Its recipes are not all for lordly dishes—we should turn to it with more hope of finding instructions for a "toad-in-the-hole" than a Chateaubriand, for "poor man's goose" than for pâté du foies gras; its tables of prices are hardly always after the scale of Bond Street or Piccadilly butchers. But the hammer-like force and directness of its rules—line upon line from the "now we will show you" of the beginning to the "and now it is finished" of the conclusion are unsurpassed by any book of cookery we know. Certainly there can be no better guide for those who set themselves down to cook a dinner untrammelled by any previous knowledge.

"Science, Art, and Literature, in the Middle Ages" (Bickers and Sons), is the fourth and concluding volume of M. Paul Lacroix's admirable illustrated series of Mediæval manners and customs. The subjects treated range from a chapter on Universities, Schools, and Students, in which an admirable account is given of the rise and growth of that curious Paris University System inaugurated by the unfortunate Abelard, and where the four "nations," France, England, Normandy, and Picardy, studied side by side until war destroyed the unity, to learned though popular disquisitions on Medicine, Mathematics, Philosophy, Chemistry, Alchemy, and those occult sciences which prospered far and wide under the fostering care of Thiébault, and the famous Nostradamus and his disciples. The Ptolemeian theory of Astronomy and the subsequent emendations and rectifications are fully discussed, while the Geographical lore of the time is dealt with in an admirable chapter illustrated with quaint maps from the old Roman charts of the then known world to a Spanish atlas of America executed in 1582. Here we may say a word of praise for the illustrations, which include thirteen chromolithographic prints and four hundred wood engravings, all exceedingly well executed, particularly those devoted to Alchemy and to Heraldry, which latter science is fully treated from the time of Cain, whose descendants are reported to have inaugurated the use of armorial bearings by painting implements of husbandry on their bucklers. The book, however, is by no means wholly confined to scientific treatises,—"Proverbs," "Romances," "Popular Songs," and the "Stage," meet with a fair share of notice, and certainly those who wish to obtain a general idea of literary and scientific life in the Middle Ages will find a fund of information in this volume which, although one of a series, is complete in itself. To any one interested in Mediæval life we should certainly recommend the study of the whole series, if only for the sake of the illustrations and engravings, which are not merely extremely good in themselves, but being taken from contemporaneous works, missals, chronicles, &c., are thoroughly authentic and characteristically representative of the subjects they illustrate. The copyright of the whole of this series, as well as of M. Lacroix's "Eighteenth Century," we have been requested to state, has been purchased from Messrs. Chapman and Hall by Messrs. Bickers and Son.

◆

CHRISTMAS BOOKS

VI.

SEAFARING exploits and the adventures of castaways in desert regions still remain the favourite themes for Christmas books; and a trio of entertaining volumes on these familiar subjects, bright with gay bindings and illustrations, come from Messrs. Marcus Ward. "The Swiss Family Robinson" is not yet dethroned from favour by age and rivals, and appears in a new translation, wherein young people may duly admire that walking encyclopædia Pastor Velli, who is equally ready to build a house, concoct savoury messes from mysterious roots, hunt wild beasts, and preach a sermon. Slave-dealer chasing on the African coast is the exciting profession of "The Flag Lieutenant," by S. W. Sadler, and right bravely does the gallant officer do his duty, despite wounds, captivity, and shipwreck, until he wins promotion and a wife. A sadder strain runs through "Coralie," by C. H. Eden. Here a French vessel is wrecked on one of the Coral Islands, and captain and crew soon fall in a desperate encounter with the savages, leaving baby Coralie and her mother to the tender mercies of their enemies. The unlucky pair are, however, kindly treated, and with the aid of an old priest convert the tribe. The fate of the French navigator La Pérouse has supplied Mr. Eden with the leading idea, but the story is otherwise purely imaginary. These two books are printed in large type, excellent for delicate eyes, and the title-page of "Coralie" is specially tasteful. From fiction to fact, Mr. Eden also furnishes a compact and readable account of the chief features of the Celestial Empire, in "China, Historical and Descriptive" (M. Ward), a companion volume to those on Japan, India, &c. The work is but slight in character; and the details of the geography, history, religion, customs, &c., are mainly superficial; but Mr. Eden has collected the chief information necessary for the general reader, and refers the student to more pretentious works, while he writes in so agreeable and easy a style as to convey a good amount of knowledge in a small compass. Appended is a sketch of Corea, necessarily brief from meagreness of detail, as the Corean peninsula is jealously guarded from foreign eyes. The illustrations are plentiful.

A stirring and pathetic record of African exploration is Mr. N. D'Anvers' "Heroes of North African Discovery" (M. Ward). The author lightly sketches the early explorers, and begins a more complete and detailed history with Bruce's travels on the Blue Nile, not only chronicling the main points of African history—the tracking of the Niger by Park, Laing, Denham, Clapperton, and the Landers; Caillé's visit to Timbuctoo, Burckhardt's and Baker's exploration of the Nile, Richardson and Barth's journeys in the desert, Burton's trips among the Somali Arabs, and the expeditions in Abyssinia and Ashantee—but noting the numerous minor attempts, so many of which ended in failure. The work of Speke, Livingstone, Stanley, and Cameron lies too far below the Equator for treatment in the present volume, and is to be described in a work on South Africa. Tersely and plainly written, the "Heroes" is well worth careful study.—Mr. D'Anvers' other biography dates from the canine world, "Pixie, or the Tale of a Terrier" (C. Kegan Paul), and although the little Skye's adventures are not over exciting they will amuse by the simplicity of the pretended narrator. The accompanying engravings of the four-footed race by R. Moore are capital.

While adventurous boyish spirits are supplied with thrilling tales lads of a quieter temperament are furnished with the experiences of a workaday life. Thus "Martin Noble," by J. G. Watts (F. Warne), shows the reward of industry and high principles, and instils sound moral lessons. Martin is as noble in nature as in name, and the only fault we can find with him is that his goodness sometimes becomes oppressive—a drawback shared by "Boy and Man" (Religious Tract Society), wherein the moralising will very surely be skipped. The latter story, however, is well constructed, and some of the characters are evidently drawn from the Dickens model, while a quaint old-fashioned tone runs throughout.—To thoughtful people and lovers of the country the "Harvest of a Quiet Eye" (Religious Tract Society) will be a valued companion for a quiet hour or a solitary ramble. Full of graceful ideas, clad in refined poetic language, the volume draws a solemn lesson from each varied aspect of Nature as the seasons roll by, and points out freshly and forcibly the resemblance of our life to the growth and fall of the year. The illustrations are worthy of the text, and the floral headings are most dainty.—David's advice to the sign painter paraphrased into "too much red" might well be applied to the gaudy pictures of "My Pet's Gift Book" (same publishers), which is more tasteful outside than in. Nevertheless, non-critical childish eyes will like the floral alphabet and the stories in large print. Another children's favourite will be "Mother Goose's Fairy Tales" (Routledge), in which the time-honoured nursery traditions find due place, with ample illustrations. The same publisher sends a republication of a child's story by the poet Bloomfield, "Davy's New Hat," long since out of print, the original manuscript being in the British Museum. It is a simple little tale in Miss Edgeworth's style. "Peter Pengelly" and "Chronicles of Capstan Cabin," by J. J. Wray (Wesleyan Conference Office), are two more instructive stories, the former illustrative of the virtues of punctuality, the latter a series of short anecdotes. Mr. M. G. Pearse contributes a pleasant collection of Christmas stories in "Good Will" (Wesleyan Conference Office), showing the happiness of doing good to others, and some religious tracts in "Short Stories" (same publishers).

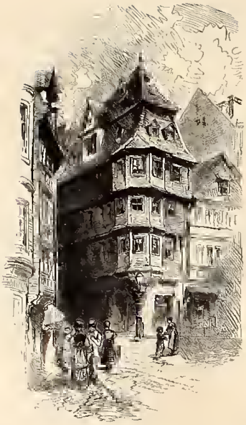
An odd little volume of a satirical turn is "The Book of Daubitoo," by J. Boshwell (A. H. Moxon), of which the illustrations are better than the jokes. The original of Dr. Johnkins is easily identified, and most of the characters are equally transparent.

Mr. W. S. Cadman, of 53, Hatton Garden, sends us numerous specimens of his cosaques, or Christmas crackers. What a contrast to the humble Waterloo crackers of our youth, which only contained a sugar plum and a slip of paper bearing a couplet of indifferent verse! The only fault about Mr. Cadman's cosaques is that they are "quite too lovely" to be pulled to pieces. It is really a shame to destroy such artistic productions. The only excuse is that if the outside is enchanting, the inside contains all sorts of pretty things, such as Japanese umbrellas, Normandy caps, ladies' hoods, capes, &c. Others, again, contain perfumes, and some are full of bonbons. Mr. Cadman also sends us some Christmas games, which we shall submit to the criticism of the young fry as soon as the holidays begin.

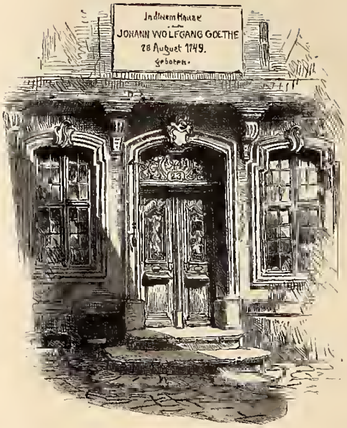
The New "Dexter" Playing Cards, patented by Messrs. De La Rue and Co., are a great improvement on those hitherto in use. They are thin, strong, flexible, and brightly burnished on both sides, and may be had with either square or rounded corners. The patent "Index-Pips" facilitate the sorting into suits, and enable the player to read his entire hand with ease when the cards are only slightly fanned out. The new system obviates the use of additional solid pips and figures at the sides of the cards, the marginal pips themselves being marked with the name of the card. The "Court Cribbage Board" received from the same firm is another ingenious novelty which ought to meet with universal approval. The old-fashioned loose pegs, which were seldom to be found when required, and which were so liable to be knocked or shaken out of their holes, are replaced by neat little buttons which slide to and fro in grooves from which it is impossible to remove them without destroying the board.

◆

MR. BEAUMONT'S READINGS.——A new candidate for popular favour as a public reader, bearing the name of Henri Beaumont, made his appearance on Saturday last, at the Theatre of the School of Dramatic Art, No. 1, Woburn Place, Russell Square. The term "reading" is in this case almost a misnomer, for though the contents of the programme occupied nearly two hours and a half in delivery, Mr. Beaumont never once faltered for a word, and only in one piece did he have a book before him. His powers of memory are decidedly remarkable. His action also is praiseworthy, being quiet, unexaggerated, and yet appropriate to each successive situation. As a reciter, though his voice in the more piano passages somewhat lacks that far-reaching quality which is requisite to fill large rooms, he achieved a decided success. "The Dream of Eugene Aram" was very powerfully rendered, as was also Barham's grisly-humorous legend, "Look at the Clock." As, besides the above, the programme included such pieces as Barham's "Execution" and "The Chamber Scene" from Hamlet, both very effectively given, there was an undue preponderance of the horrible, and we recommend Mr. Beaumont in future to vary his bill of fare by the introduction of some specimens of unadulterated humour. There is an occasional staginess in his pronunciation of certain words, such as "true" and "blue," which he would do well to modify, but altogether he does credit to his instructor, Mr. Sleigh, the director of the above named School of Dramatic Art.

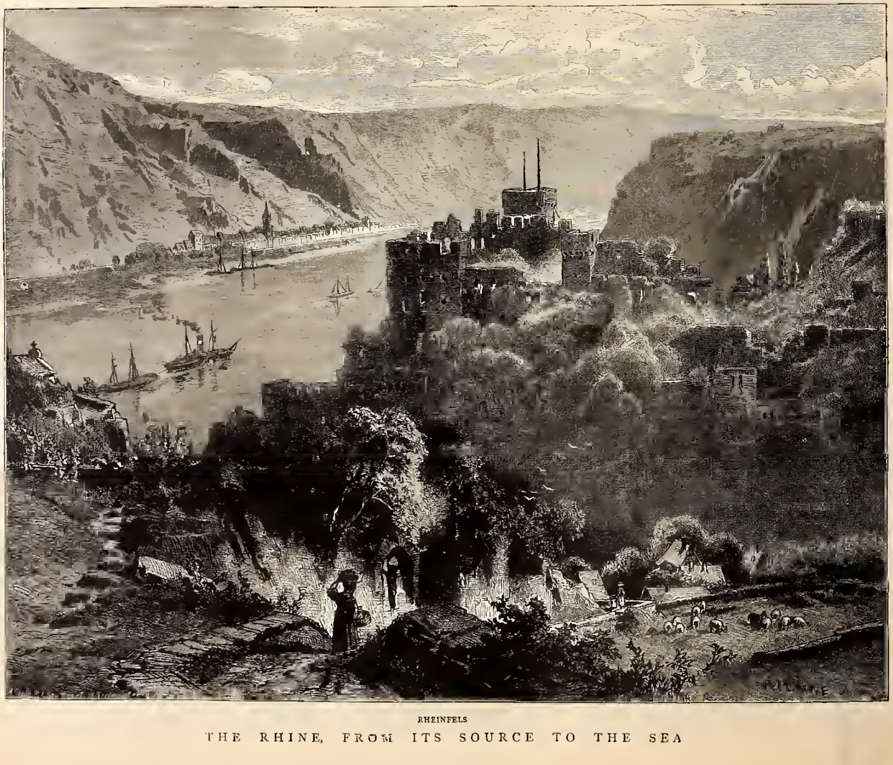


LUTHER'S HOUSE, FRANKFORT



In diesem Hause
JOHANN WOLFGANG GOETHE
28 August 1749.
geboren.
23

GOËTHE'S HOUSE, FRANKFORT



RHEINFELS

THE RHINE, FROM ITS SOURCE TO THE SEA

THE HISTORY OF A CRIME:

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

II.

THE SECOND DAY—THE STRUGGLE

VI.

THE DECREES OF THE REPRESENTATIVES WHO REMAINED FREE

(continued)

THEY cried out anew, "Read the Decree! Sit down! Sit down!"

There was a round table before the fireplace, a lamp, pens, blotting-books, and paper were brought there; the members of the Committee sat down at this table, the Representatives took their places around them on sofas, on arm-chairs, and on all the chairs which could be found in the adjoining rooms. Some looked about for Napoléon Bonaparte. He had withdrawn.

A member requested that in the first place the meeting should declare itself to be the National Assembly, and constitute itself by immediately appointing a President and Secretaries. I remarked that there was no need to declare ourselves the Assembly, that we were the Assembly by right as well as in fact, and the whole Assembly, our absent colleagues being detained by force; that the National Assembly, although mutilated by the Coup d'État, ought to preserve its entity and remain constituted afterwards in the same manner as before; that to appoint another President and another staff of Secretaries would be to give Louis Bonaparte an advantage over us, and to acknowledge in some manner the Dissolution; that we ought to do nothing of the sort; that our decrees should be published, not with the signature of a President, whoever he might be, but with the signature of all the members of the Left who had not been arrested, that they would thus carry with them full authority over the People, and full effect. They relinquished the idea of appointing a President. Noël Parfait proposed that our decrees and our resolutions should be drawn up, not with the formula: "The National Assembly decrees, &c.," but with the formula: "The Representatives of the People remaining at liberty decree, &c." In this manner we should preserve all the authority attached to the office of the Representatives of the People without associating the arrested Representatives with the responsibility of our actions. This formula had the additional advantage of separating us from the Right. The people knew that the only Representatives remaining free were the members of the Left. They adopted Noël Parfait's advice.

I read aloud the decree of deposition. It was couched in these words:—

"DECLARATION.

"The Representatives of the People remaining at liberty, by virtue of Article 68 of the Constitution, which runs as follows:—

"'Article 68.—Every measure by which the President of the Republic dissolves the Assembly, prorogues it, or obstructs the exercise of its authority, is a crime of High Treason.

"By this action alone the President is deposed from his office; the citizens are bound to refuse him obedience; the executive power passes by right to the National Assembly; the judges of the High Court of Justice should meet together immediately under penalty of treason, and convoke the juries in a place which they shall appoint to proceed to the judgment of the President and his accomplices.'

"They decree:—

"Article I.—Louis Bonaparte is deposed from his office of President of the Republic.

"Article II.—All citizens and public officials are bound to refuse him obedience under penalty of complicity.

"Article III.—The judgment drawn up on December 2nd by the High Court of Justice, and which declares Louis Bonaparte attainted with the Crime of High Treason, shall be published and executed. Consequently the civil and military authorities are summoned under penalty of treason to lend their active assistance to the execution of the said judgment.

"Given at Paris, in permanent session, December 3rd, 1851."

The decree having been read, and voted unanimously, we signed it, and the Representatives crowded round the table to add their signatures to ours. Sain remarked that this signing took time, that in addition we numbered barely more than sixty, a large number of the members of the Left being at work in the streets in insurrection. He asked if the Committee, who had full powers from the whole of the Left, had any objection to attach to the decree the names of all the Republican Representatives remaining at liberty, the absent as well as those present. We answered that the decree signed by all would assuredly better answer its purpose. Besides, it was the counsel which I had already given. Bancel had in his pocket an old number of the Moniteur containing the result of a division.

They cut out a list of the names of the members of the Left, the names of those who were arrested were erased, and the list was added to the decree.

The name of Emile Girardin upon this list caught my eye. He was still present.

"Do you sign this decree?" I asked him.

"Unhesitatingly."

"In that case will you consent to print it?"

"Immediately."

He continued:

"Having no longer any presses, as I have told you, I can only print it as a handbill, and with the brush. It takes a long time, but by eight o'clock this evening you shall have five hundred copies."

"And," continued I, "you persist in refusing to print the appeal to arms?"

"I do persist."

A second copy was made of the decree, which Emile de Girardin took away with him.

The deliberation was resumed. At each moment Representatives came in and brought items of news: Amiens in insurrection — Rheims and Rouen in motion, and marching on Paris—General Canrobert resisting the Coup d'État—General Castellane hesitating—the Minister of the United States demanding his passports. We placed little faith in these rumours, and facts proved that we were right.

Meanwhile Jules Favre had drawn up the following decree, which he proposed, and which was immediately adopted:—

"DECREE.

"FRENCH REPUBLIC.

"Liberty,—Equality,—Fraternity.

"The undersigned Representatives remaining at liberty, assembled in Permanent Session:

"Considering the arrests of the majority of our colleagues, and the urgency of the moment:

"Considering that for the accomplishment of his crime Louis Bonaparte has not contented himself with multiplying the most formidable means of destruction against the lives and property of the citizens of Paris, that he has trampled under foot every law, that he has annihilated all the guarantees of civilised nations:

"Considering that these criminal madnesses only serve to augment the violent denunciation of every conscience and to hasten the hour of national vengeance, but that it is important to proclaim the Right:

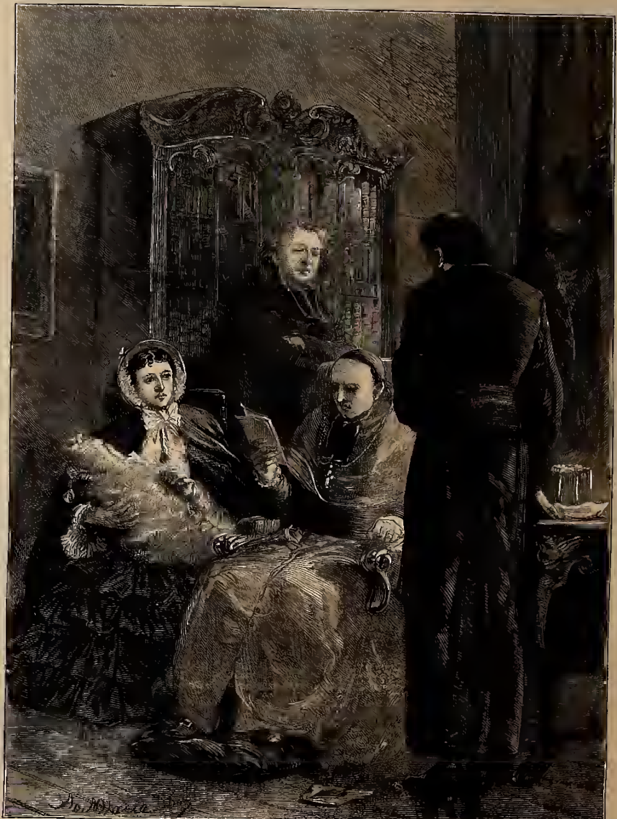
"They decree:

"Art. I.—The State of Siege is raised in all Departments where it has been established, the ordinary laws resume their authority.

"Art. II.—It is enjoined upon all military leaders under penalty of treason immediately to lay down the extraordinary powers which have been conferred upon them.

Art. III.—Officials and agents of the public force are charged under penalty of treason to put this present decree into execution.

"Given in Permanent Session, 3rd December, 1851."



THE ARCHBISHOP

Madame Arnauld handed to M. Sibour the two letters of her husband and the workman. The Archbishop read them

Madier de Montjau and De Flotte entered. They came from outside. They had been in all the districts where the conflict was proceeding, they had seen with their own eyes the hesitation of a part of the population in the presence of these words, "The Law of the 31st May is abolished, Universal Suffrage is re-established." The placards of Louis Bonaparte were manifestly working mischief. It was necessary to oppose effort to effort, and to neglect nothing which could open the eyes of the people.

I dictated the following Proclamation:—

"PROCLAMATION.

"People! you are being deceived.

"Louis Bonaparte says that he has re-established you in your rights, and that he restores to you Universal Suffrage.

"Louis Bonaparte has lied.

"Read his placords. He grants you—what infamous mockery!—the right of conferring on him, on him alone, the Constituent power; that is to say, the Supreme power, which belongs to you. He grants you the right to appoint him Dictator for ten years. In other words, he grants you the right of abdicating and of crowning him. A right which even you do not possess, O People! for one generation cannot dispose of the sovereignty of the generation which shall follow it.

"Yes, he grants to you, Sovereign, the right of giving yourself a master, and that master himself.

"Hypocrisy and treason!

"People! we unmask the hypocrite. It is for you to punish the traitor!

"The Committee of Resistance:

"Jules Favre, De Flotte, Caruot, Madier de Montjau, Mathieu (de la Drôme), Michel (de Bourges), Victor Hugo."

Baudin had fallen heroically. It was necessary to let the People know of his death, and to honour his memory. The decree below was voted on the proposition of Michel de Bourges:

"DECREE.

"The Representatives of the People remaining at liberty considering that the Representative Baudin has died on the barricade of the Faubourg St. Antoine for the Republic and for the laws, and that he has deserved well of his country, decree:

"That the honours of the Panthéon are adjudged to Representative Baudin.

"Given in Permanent Session, 3rd December, 1851."

After honour to the dead and the needs of the conflict it was necessary in my opinion to enunciate immediately and dictatorially some great popular benefit. I proposed the abolition of the octroi duties and of the duty on liquors. This objection was raised: "No caresses to the people! After victory, we will see. In the mean time let them fight! If they do not fight, if they do not rise, if they do not understand that it is for them, for their rights that we, the Representatives, that we risk our heads at this moment—if they leave us alone at the breach, in the presence of the Coup d'État—it is because they are not worthy of Liberty!" Bancel remarked that the abolition of the octroi duties and the duty on liquors were not caresses to the People, but succour to the poor, a great economical and reparatory measure, a satisfaction to the public demand—a satisfaction which the Right had always obstinately refused, and which the Left, master of the situation, ought to hasten to accord. They voted, with the reservation that it should not be published until after victory, the two decrees in one; in this form.

"DECREE.

"The Representatives remaining at liberty decree:

"The Octroi Duties are abolished throughout the extent of the territory of the Republic.

"Given in Permanent Session, 3rd December, 1851."

Versigny, with a copy of the Proclamations and of the Decree, left in search of Hetzel. Labrousse also left with the same object. They settled to meet at eight o'clock in the evening at the house of the former member of the Provisional Government, Marie, Rue Neuve des Petits Champs.

As the members of the Committee and the Representatives withdrew I was told that some one had asked to speak to me. I went into a sort of little room attached to the large meeting-room, and I found there a man in a blouse, with an intelligent and sympathetic air. This man had a roll of paper in his hand.

"Citizen Victor Hugo," he said to me, "you have no printing office. Here are the means which will enable you to dispense with one."

He unfolded on the mantelpiece the roll which he had in his hand. It was a species of blotting book made of very thin blue paper, and which seemed to me to be slightly oiled. Between each leaf of blue paper there was a sheet of white paper. He took out of his pocket a sort of blunt bodkin, saying, "The first thing to hand will serve your purpose, a nail or a match," and he traced with his bodkin on the first leaf of the book the word "Republic." Then turning over the leaves, he said, "Look at this."

The word "Republic" was reproduced upon the fifteen or twenty white leaves which the book contained.

He added, "This paper is usually used to trace the designs of manufactured fabrics. I thought that it might be useful at a moment like this. I have at home a hundred books like this on which I can make a hundred copies of what you want—a Proclamation, for instance—in the same space of time that it takes to write four or five. Write something, whatever you may think useful at the present moment, and to-morrow morning five hundred copies shall be posted throughout Paris."

I had none of the documents with me which we had just drawn up. Versigny had gone away with the copies. I took a sheet of paper, and, leaning on the corner of the chimney-piece, I wrote the following Proclamation:—

"TO THE ARMY

"Soldiers!"

"A man has just broken the Constitution. He tears up the oath which he had sworn to the people; he suppresses the law, stifles Right, stains Paris with blood, chokes France, betrays the Republic!

"Soldiers, this man involves you in his crime.

"There are two things holy; the flag which represents military honour and the law which represents the National Right. Soldiers, the greatest of outrages is the flag raised against the Law! Follow no longer the wretched man who misleads you. Of such a crime French soldiers should be the avengers, not the accomplices.

"This man says he is named Bonaparte. He lies, for Bonaparte is a word which means glory. This man says that he is named Napoléon. He lies, for Napoléon is a word which means genius. As for him, he is obscure and insignificant. Give this wretch up to the law. Soldiers, he is a false Napoléon. A true Napoléon would once more give you a Marengo; he will once more give you a Transnonain.

"Look towards the true function of the French army; to protect the country, to propagate the Revolution, to free the people, to sustain the nationalities, to emancipate the Continent, to break chains everywhere, to protect Right everywhere, this is your part amongst the armies of Europe. You are worthy of great battle fields.

"Soldiers, the French army is the advanced guard of humanity.

"Become yourselves again; reflect; acknowledge your faults; rise up! Think of your Generals arrested, taken by the collar by galley sergeants and thrown handcuffed into robbers' cells! The malefactor, who is at the Elysée, thinks that the Army of France is a band of mercenaries; that if they are paid and intoxicated they will obey. He sets you an infamous task, he causes you to strangle, in this nineteenth century, and in Paris itself, Liberty, Progress, and Civilisation. He makes you—you, the children of France—destroy all that France has so gloriously and laboriously built up during three centuries of light and in sixty years of Revolution! Soldiers! you are the 'Grand Army!' respect the 'Grand Nation!'

"We, citizens; we, Representatives of the People and of yourselves; we, your friends, your brothers; we, who are Law and Right; we, who rise up before you, holding out our arms to you, and whom you strike blindly with your swords—do you know what drives us to despair? It is not to see our blood which flows; it is to see your honour which vanishes.

"Soldiers! one step more in the outrage, one day more with Louis Bonaparte, and you are lost before universal conscience. The men who command you are outlaws. They are not Generals—they are criminals. The garb of the galley slave awaits them; see it already on their shoulders. Soldiers! there is yet time—Stop! Come back to the country! Come back to the Republic! If you continue, do you know what History will say of you? It will say, 'They have trampled under the feet of their horses and crushed beneath the wheels of their cannon all the laws of their country; they, French soldiers, they have dishonoured the anniversary of Austerlitz, and by their fault, by their crime, the name of Napoléon sprinkles as much shame to-day upon France as in other times it has showered glory!

"French soldiers! cease to render assistance to crime!"

My colleagues of the Committee having left I could not consult them—time pressed—I signed:

"For the Representatives of the People remaining at liberty the Representative member of the Committee of Resistance.

"VICTOR HUGO."

The man in the blouse took away the Proclamation, saying:

"You will see it again to-morrow morning." He kept his word. I found it the next day placarded in the Rue Rambuteau, at the corner of the Rue de l'Homme-Armé and the Chapelle-Saint-Denis. To those who were not in the secret of the process it seemed to be written by hand in blue ink.

I thought of going home. When I reached the Rue de la Tour d'Auvergne, opposite my door, it happened curiously and by some chance to be half open. I pushed it, and entered. I crossed the courtyard, and went upstairs without meeting any one.

My wife and my daughter were in the drawing-room round the fire with Madame Paul Meurice. I entered noiselessly; they were conversing in a low tone. They were talking of Pierre Dupont, the popular song-writer, who had come to me to ask for arms. Isidore, who had been a soldier, had some pistols by him, and had lent three to Pierre Dupont for the conflict.

Suddenly these ladies turned their heads, and saw me close to them. My daughter screamed. "Oh, go away," cried my wife, throwing her arms round my neck, "you are lost if you remain here a moment. You will be arrested here!" Madame Paul Meurice added: "They are looking for you. The police were here a quarter of an hour ago." I could not succeed in reassuring them. They gave me a packet of letters offering me places of refuge for the night, some of them signed with names unknown to me. After some moments, seeing them more and more frightened, I went away. My wife said to me:—"What you are doing, you are doing for justice. Go, continue!" I embraced my wife and my daughter; five months have elapsed at the time when I am writing these lines. When I went into exile they remained near my son Victor in prison; I have not seen them since that day.

I left as I had entered. In the porter's lodge there were only two or three little children seated round a lamp, laughing and looking at pictures in a book.

VII.

THE ARCHBISHOP

ON this gloomy and tragical day an idea struck one of the people.

He was a workman belonging to the honest but almost imperceptible minority of Catholic Democrats. The double exaltation of his mind, revolutionary on the one side, mystical on the other, caused him to be somewhat distrusted by the people, even by his comrades and his friends. Sufficiently devout to be called a Jesuit by the Socialists, sufficiently Republican to be called a Red by the Reactionists, he formed an exception in the workshops of the Faubourg. Now, what is needed in these supreme crises to seize and govern the masses are men of exceptional genius, not men of exceptional opinion. There is no revolutionary originality. In order to be something, in the time of regeneration and in the days of social combat, one must bathe fully in those powerful homogeneous mediums which are called parties. Great currents of men follow great currents of ideas, and the true revolutionary leader is he who knows how best to drive the former in accordance with the latter.

Now the Gospel is in accordance with the Revolution, but Catholicism is not. This is due to the fact that in the main the Papacy is not in accordance with the Gospel. One can easily understand a Christian Republican, one cannot understand a Catholic Democrat. It is a combination of two opposites. It is a mind in which the negative bars the way to the affirmative. It is a neuter.

Now in time of revolution, whoever is neuter is impotent.

Nevertheless during the first hours of resistance against the Coup d'État the democratic Catholic workman, whose noble effort we are here relating, threw himself so resolutely into the cause of Justice and of Truth, that in a few moments he transformed distrust into confidence, and was hailed by the people. He showed such gallantry at the raising of the barricade of the Rue Aumaire that with an unanimous voice they appointed him their leader. At the moment of the attack he defended it as he had built it, with ardour. That was a sad but glorious battle-field; most of his companions were killed, and he escaped only by a miracle.

However, he succeeded in returning home, saying to himself bitterly, "All is lost."

It seemed evident to him that the great masses of the people would not rise. Thenceforward it appeared impossible to conquer the Coup d'État by a Revolution; it could be only combatted by legality. What had been the risk at the beginning became the hope at the end, for he believed the end to be fatal, and at hand. In his opinion it was necessary, as the people were defaulters, to try now to arouse the middle classes. Let one legion of the National Guard go out in arms, and the Elysée was lost. For this a decisive blow must be struck—the heart of the middle classes must be reached—the "bourgeois" must be inspired by a grand spectacle which should not be a terrifying spectacle.

It was then that this thought came to this workman: "Write to the Archbishop of Paris."

The workman took a pen, and from his humble garret he wrote to the Archbishop of Paris an enthusiastic and earnest letter, in which he, a man of the people and a believer, said this to his Bishop; we give the substance of his letter:—

"This is a solemn hour. Civil War sets by the ears the Army and the People, blood is being shed. When blood flows the Bishop goes forth. M. Sibour should follow in the path of M. Affre. The example is great, the opportunity is still greater.

"Let the Archbishop of Paris, followed by all his clergy, the Pontifical cross before him, his mitre on his head, go forth in procession through the streets. Let him summon to him the National Assembly and the High Court, the Legislators in their sashes, the Judges in their scarlet robes; let him summon to him the citizens, let him summon to him the soldiers, let him go straight to the Elysée. Let him raise his hand in the name of Justice against the man who is violating the laws, and in the name of Jesus against the man who is shedding blood. Simply with his raised hand he will crush the Coup d'État.

"And he will place his statue by the side of M. Affre, and it will be said that twice two Archbishops of Paris have trampled Civil War beneath their feet.

"The Church is holy, but the country is sacred. There are times when the Church should succour the Country."

The letter being finished it he signed it with his workman's signature.

But now a difficulty arose; how should it be conveyed to its destination?

Take it himself?

But would he, a mere workman in a blouse, be allowed to penetrate to the Archbishop?

And then, in order to reach the Archiepiscopal Palace, he would have to cross those very quarters in insurrection, and where, perhaps, the resistance was still active. He would have to pass through streets obstructed by troops, he would be arrested and searched, his hands smelt of powder, he would be shot, and the letter would not reach its destination.

What was to be done?

At the moment when he had almost despaired of a solution, the name of Amauld de l'Ariége came to his mind.

Arnauld de l'Ariége was a Representative after his own heart. Arnauld d'Ariége was a noble character. He was a Catholic Democrat like the workman. At the Assembly he raised aloft, but he bore nearly alone, that banner so little followed which aspires to ally the Democracy with the Church. Arnauld de l'Ariége, young, handsome, eloquent, enthusiastic, gentle, and firm, combined the attributes of the Tribune with the faith of the knight. His open nature, without wishing to detach itself from Rome, worshipped Liberty. He had two principles, but he had not two faces. On the whole the democratic spirit preponderated in him. He said to me one day, "I give my hand to Victor Hugo. I do not give it to Montalembert."

The workman knew him. He had often written to him, and had sometimes seen him.

Amauld de l'Ariége lived in a district which had remained almost free.

The workman went there without delay.

Like the rest of us, as has been seen, Arnauld de l'Ariége had taken part in the conflict. Like most of the Representatives of the Left, he had not returned home since the morning of the Second. Nevertheless, on the second day, he thought of his young wife whom he had left without knowing if he should see her again, of his baby of six months old which she was suckling, and which he had not kissed for so many hours, of that beloved hearth, of which at certain moments one feels an absolute need to obtain a fleeting glimpse, he could no longer resist; arrest, Mazas, the cell, the hulks, the firing party, all vanished, the idea of danger was obliterated, he went home.

It was precisely at that moment that the workman arrived there.

Amauld de l'Ariége received him, read his letter, and approved of it.

Amauld de l'Ariége knew the Archbishop of Paris personally.

M. Sibour, a Republican priest appointed Archbishop of Paris by General Cavaignac, was the true chief of the Church dreamed of by the liberal Catholicism of Arnauld de l'Ariége. On behalf of the Archbishop, Arnauld de l'Ariége represented in the Assembly that Catholicism which M. de Montalembert perverted. The Democratic Representative and the Republican Archbishop had at times frequent conferences, in which acted as intermediatory the Abbé Maret, an intelligent priest, a friend of the people and of progress, Vicar-General of Paris, who has since been Bishop in partibus of Surat. Some days previously Arnauld had seen the Archbishop, and had received his complaints of the encroachments of the Clerical party upon the episcopal authority, and he even proposed shortly to interpellate the Ministry on this subject and to take the question into the Tribune.

Amauld added to the workman's letter a letter of introduction, signed by himself, and enclosed the two letters in the same envelope.

But here the same question arose.

How was the letter to be delivered?

Amauld, for still weightier reasons than those of the workman, could not take it himself.

And time pressed!

His wife saw his difficulty, and quietly said:—

"I will take charge of it."

Madame Amauld de l'Ariége, handsome and quite young, married scarcely two years, was the daughter of the Republican ex-Constituent Guichard; worthy daughter of such a father, and worthy wife of such a husband.

They were fighting in Paris; it was necessary to face the dangers of the streets, to pass among musket balls, to risk her life.

Amauld de l'Ariége hesitated.

"What do you want to do?" he asked.

"I will take this letter."

"You yourself?"

"I myself."

"But there is danger."

She raised her eyes, and answered:

"Did I make that objection to you when you left me the day before yesterday?"

He kissed her with tears in his eyes, and answered, "Go."

But the police of the Coup d'État were suspicious, many women were searched while going through the streets; this letter might be found on Madame Arnauld. Where could this letter be hidden?

"I will take my baby with me," said Madame Arnauld.

She undid the linen of her little girl, hid the letter there, and refastened the swaddling band.

When this was finished the father kissed his child on the forehead, and the mother exclaimed laughingly:

"Oh, the little Red! She is only six months old, and she is already a conspirator!"

Madame Arnauld reached the Archbishop's Palace with some difficulty. Her carriage was obliged to take a long round. Nevertheless she arrived there. She asked for the Archbishop. A woman with a child in her arms could not be a very terrible visitor, and she was allowed to enter.

But she lost herself in courtyards and staircases. She was seeking her way somewhat discouraged, when she met the Abbé Maret. She knew him. She addressed him. She told him the object of her expedition. The Abbé Maret read the workman's letter, and was seized with enthusiasm—"This may save all," said he.

He added, "Follow me, Madam, I will introduce you."

The Archbishop of Paris was in the room which adjoins his study. The Abbé Maret ushered Madame Arnauld into the study, informed the Archbishop, and a moment later the Archbishop entered. Besides the Abbé Maret, the Abbé Deguerry, the Curé of the Madeleine, was with him.

Madame Arnauld handed to M. Sibour the two letters of her husband and the workman. The Archbishop read them, and remained thoughtful.

"What answer am I to take back to my husband?" asked Madame Arnauld.

"Madam," replied the Archbishop, "it is too late. This should have been done before the struggle began. Now, it would be only to risk the shedding of more blood than perhaps has yet been spilled."

The Abbé Deguerry was silent. The Abbé Maret tried respectfully to turn the mind of his Bishop towards the grand effort counselled by the workman. He spoke eloquently. He laid great stress upon this argument, that the appearance of the Archbishop would bring about a manifestation of the National Guard, and that a manifestation of the National Guard would compel the Elysée to draw back.

"No," said the Archbishop, "you hope for the impossible. The Elysée will not draw back now. You believe that I should stop the bloodshed—not at all; I should cause it to flow, and that in torrents. The National Guard has no longer any influence. If the legions appeared the Elysée could crush the legions by the regiments. And then, what is an Archbishop in the presence of the Man of the Coup d'État? Where is the oath? Where is the sworn faith? Where is the respect for Right? A man does not turn back when he has made three steps in such a crime. No! no! Do not hope. This man will do all. He has struck the Law in the hand of the Representative. He will strike God in mine."

And he dismissed Madame Arnauld with the look of a man overwhelmed with sorrow.

Let us do the duty of the Historian. Six weeks afterwards, in the Church of Notre Dame, some one was singing the Te Deum in honour of the treason of December—thus making God a partner in a crime.

This man was the Archbishop Sibour.

VIII.

MOUNT VALÉRIEN

Of the two hundred and thirty Representative prisoners at the barracks of the Quai d'Orsay fifty-three had been sent to Mount Valérien. They loaded them in four police vans. Some few remained who were packed in an omnibus. MM. Benoist d'Azy, Falloux, Piscatory, Vatimesnil, were locked in the wheeled cells, as also Eugène Sue and Esquims. The worthy M. Gustave de Beaumont, a great upholder of the cellular system, rode in a celled vehicle. It is not an undesirable thing, as we have said, that the legislator should taste of the law.

The Commandant of Mount Valérien appeared under the archway of the fort to receive the Representative prisoners.

He at first made some some show of registering them in the gaoler's book. General Oudinot, under whom he had served, rebuked him severely:

"Do you know me?"

"Yes, General."

"Well then, let that suffice. Ask no more."

"Yes," said Tamisier. "Ask more and salute. We are more than the Army; we are France."

The Commandant understood. From that moment he was hat in hand before the generals, and bowed low before the Representatives.

They led them to the barracks of the fort and shut them up promiscuously in a dormitory, to which they added fresh beds, and which the soldiers had just quitted. They spent their first night there. The beds touched each other. The sheets were dirty.

Next morning, owing to a few words which had been heard outside, the rumour spread amongst them that the fifty-three were to be sorted, and that the Republicans were to be placed by themselves. Shortly afterwards the rumour was confirmed. Madame de Luynes gained admission to her husband, and brought some items of news. It was asserted, amongst other things, that the Keeper of the Seals of the Coup d'État, the man who signed himself Eugène Rouher, "Minister of Justice," had said, "Let them set the men of the Right at liberty, and send the men of the Left to the dungeon. If the populace stirs they will answer for everything. As a guarantee for the submission of the Faubourgs we shall have the head of the Reds."

We do not believe that M. Rouher uttered these words, in which there is so much audacity. At that moment M. Rouher did not possess any. Appointed Minister on the 2nd December, he temporised, he exhibited a vague prudery, he did not venture to install himself in the Place Vendôme. Was all that was being done quite correct? In certain minds the doubt of success changes into scruples of conscience. To violate every law, to perjure oneself, to strangle Right, to assassinate the country, are all these proceedings wholly honest? While the deed is not accomplished they hesitate. When the deed has succeeded they throw themselves upon it. Where there is victory there is no longer treason; nothing serves like success to cleanse and render acceptable that unknown thing which is called crime. During the first moments M. Rouher reserved himself. Later on he has been one of the most violent advisers of Louis Bonaparte. It is all very simple. His fear beforehand explains his subsequent zeal.

The truth is, that these threatening words had been spoken not by Rouher, but by Persigny.

M. de Luynes imparted to his colleagues what was in preparation, and warned them that they would be asked for their names in order that the white sheep might be separated from the scarlet goats. A murmur which seemed to be unanimous arose. These generous manifestations did honour to the Representatives of the Right.

"No! No! Let us name no one, let us not allow ourselves to be sorted," exclaimed M. Gustave de Beaumont.

M. de Vatimesnil added: "We have come in here all together, we ought to go out all together."

Nevertheless a few moments afterwards Antony Thouret was informed that a list of names was being secretly prepared, and that the Royalist Representatives were invited to sign it. They attributed, doubtless wrongly, this unworthy resolution to the honourable M. de Falloux.

Antony Thouret spoke somewhat warmly in the centre of the group, which were muttering together in the dormitory.

"Gentlemen," said he, "a list of names is being prepared. This would be an unworthy action. Yesterday at the Mairie of the Tenth Arrondissement you said to us: 'There is no longer Left or Right; we are the Assembly.' You believed in the victory of the People, and you sheltered yourself behind us Republicans. To-day you believe in the victory of the Coup d'État, and you would again become Royalists, to deliver us up, us Democrats! Truly excellent. Very well! Pray do so."

A universal shout arose.

"No! No! No more Right or Left! All are the Assembly. The same lot for all!"

The list which had been begun was seized and burnt.

"By decision of the Chamber," said M. de Vatimesnil smiling.

A Legitimist Representative added:

"Of the Chamber? No, let us say of the Chambered."

A few moments afterwards the Commissary of the fort appeared, and in polite phrases, which, however, savoured somewhat of authority, invited each of the Representatives of the People to declare his name in order that each might be allotted to his ultimate destination.

A shout of indignation answered him.

"No one! No one will give his name," said General Oudinot.

Gustave de Beaumont added:

"We all bear the same name: Representatives of the People."

The Commissary saluted them and went away.

After two hours he came back. He was accompanied this time by the Chief of the Ushers of the Assembly, a man named Duponceau, a species of arrogant fellow with a red face and white hair, who on grand days strutted at the foot of the Tribune with a silvered collar, a chain over his stomach, and a sword between his legs.

The Commissary said to Duponceau:

"Do your duty."

What the Commissary meant, and what Duponceau understood by this word duty, was that the Usher should denounce the Legislators. Like the lackey who betrays his masters.

It was done in this manner.

This Duponceau dared to look in the faces of the Representatives by turn, and he named them one after the other to a policeman, who took notes of them.

The Sieur Duponceau was sharply castigated while holding this review.

"M. Duponceau," said M. Vatimesnil to him, "I always thought you an idiot, but I believed you to be an honest man."

The severest rebuke was administered by Antony Thouret. He looked Sieur Duponceau in the face, and said to him, "You deserve to be named Dupin."

The Usher in truth was worthy of being the President, and the President was worthy of being the Usher.

The flock having been counted, the classification having been made, there were found to be thirteen goats, ten Representatives of the Left: Eugène Sue, Esquiras, Antony Thouret, Pascal Duprat, Chanay, Fayolle, Paulin Durrieu, Benoît, Tamisier, Teillard-Latérisse, and three members of the Right, who since the preceding day had suddenly become Red in the eyes of the Coup d'Etat; Oudinot, Piscatory, and Thuriot de la Rosière.

They confined these separately, and they set at liberty one by one the forty who remained.

(To be continued)

New Novels

"The World Well Lost," by E. Lynn Linton (2 vols.: Chatto and Windus).—This is another variation on the theme which always forms, so to say, the backbone of Mrs. Lynn Linton's novels—the rightful supremacy of simple human feelings, "the claims of nature and individualism," over "the law of social needs," and perhaps also some accepted moral notions. The tale is eminently interesting, and told with all the author's wonted force and skill in the delineation of character, at least of character sufficiently strong or marked to suit her hand. It is also most cunningly contrived to serve as a medium for the expression of her theories. There has always been a mystery about Mrs. Smith of Owlett, who has been living at Grantley Bourne rather more than fourteen years, when we first make her acquaintance in the opening pages of the story. A refined and gracious lady, absolutely without reproach in her conduct, she has lived persistently in the closest retirement, holding altogether aloof from society for her own part, and keeping her two children, Derwent and Muriel, out of it as much as lay in her power without giving occasion for too much comment. But the young people, as they grew up, could not be hindered from making friends; and they have formed ties of special intimacy with their near neighbours—as country neighbours go—the Machells of Machells, one of the oldest and proudest of the county families, though now only the owners of acres mortgaged up to the hilt, and beyond it. And then we come to learn that both the Machell brothers, Wilfrid and Arthur, are in love with Muriel Smith, whilst a boy-and-girl passion is growing up between Derwent Smith and Hilda Machell. But Wilfrid, the slave of "the law of social needs," crushes down his love so that its existence is never suspected. His manifest duty, in his own eyes, is to save Machells, and to do this he must marry money—marry the money that is to be had for the asking, coupled with the hand of Miss Brown de Paumelle, the daughter of the wealthy ex-soapboiler. Arthur, disciple of "the claims of nature and individualism," casts family traditions to the winds, boldly avows his love, and wins love in return, and in spite of opposition from all quarters is resolved to carve out fortune for himself. Then comes "the bolt out of the blue"—Mr. Smith, whose recent appearance at Owlett has been as strange and unexplained as his prolonged absence from his home, is discovered to have been passing the last fifteen years of his life in penal servitude for forgery—forgery committed in one of those moments of desperation to which weak men are specially liable to save wife and little ones from the ruin he had brought upon them. This is the explanation of the mystery which has hung over his wife—true, loving, and devoted to him in dishonour as once in honour. How Derwent and Muriel take the discovery of their father's shame, and how Arthur bears himself towards the girl who must come to him now, if she comes at all, not only empty-handed, but branded more or less with social disgrace, we had better let readers find out for themselves, for we have not the space to tell them even if we wished. The title of the book will reveal a good deal of its secret. Though it does not contain any one character that takes such hold upon the imagination as Leam Dundas, it is as a whole fully equal in cleverness and power to any novel we have had from the gifted hands of its author.

"Mirage," by George Fleming, author of "A Nile Novel" (3 vols.: Macmillan).—This story seems built much on the same lines, and shows much the same characteristics, as "A Nile Novel." Here, too, we have a group of Americans, nearly all enormously rich, and most of them highly cultivated, who "do" Syria instead of, as formerly, Egypt; landing at Jaffa, and going up thence to Jerusalem, and then "camping it" over the land, as needs must be the course pursued by Syrian travellers, until we finally lose sight of them at Damascus. And here, too, we have the same delicate and subtle insight into and analysis of mood and character, the same graceful play of thought and feeling, and the same sense of a certain indefinable harmony established between the emotions of the human actors and the outward scenes in which they are experienced. Only the tale is much sadder; for Constance Varley's dream of happiness is but "mirage;" and the man to whom she has long given her loyal heart, and who is ready to love her—for his passion hardly seems to have risen higher than this—parts from her unconscious that he, and he only, occupies her thoughts, and she is powerless to clear up the fatal mistake which shatters one life and mars another. Those readers—and their number seems to have been many—who found a charm in "A Nile Novel" may take up "Mirage" without fear of disappointment; people who demand an exciting plot, and a story that it never needs any trouble to understand, are not likely to care for the one book any more than the other.

"Disappeared from Her Home," by Mrs. F. E. Pirkis (Remington and Co.).—This is the story of the sudden disappearance from her home of one Miss Amy Warden, a beautiful damsel of seventeen, the only child of a gentleman of fortune and position, who vanishes one fine August morning, without a single assignable cause, and without leaving a trace behind her. The tale is a slight one, but really very ingenious, and very well put together, all things considered, and shows that Mrs. Pirkis has a decided turn for the novel of mystery. We can recommend the story to any one in search of materials for an hour's gentle excitement, and all the more readily because the clouds clear away satisfactorily at the last.

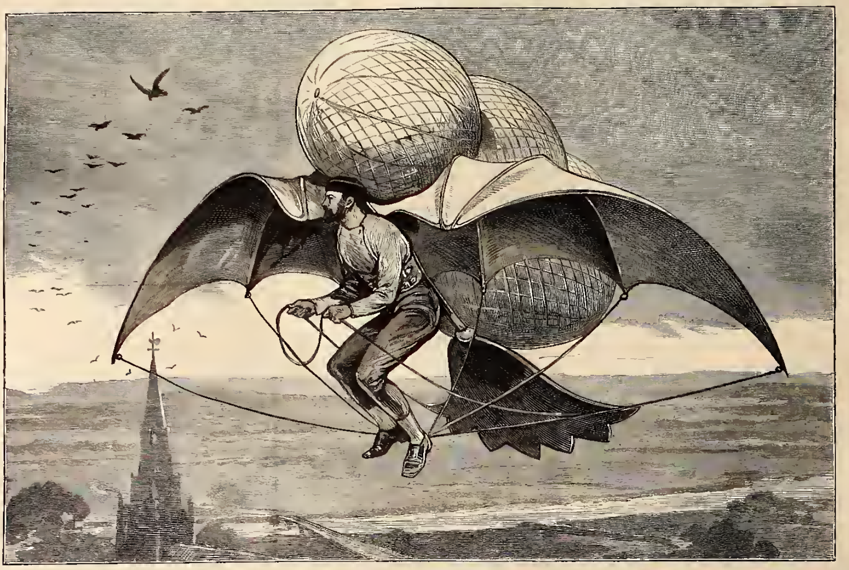
Rural Notes

Our Christmas Cattle.——Most butchers who have been in the habit of attending what is called the "Great Christmas Cattle Market" have declared that this is the best one they have ever seen—that the beasts from Scotland were never equalled for quality, and that the Norfolks seldom before came out in such good form. Perhaps it might be well to mention that Norfolks, as they are called, do not mean beasts bred in Norfolk, but as a rule those that are fed in that county. Shorthorn crosses are the favourites. On all breeds the shorthorns make their mark, on none better than a polled; but on Herefordshires, Devonshires, and Ayrshires, the quality of the Teeswater tells. The shorthorns gained the chief award this year at the Agricultural Hall fairly enough, although Mr. Catchpole's white heifer was by no means among the best that have been seen at Islington. She fairly beat, however, the Prince of Wales's Devon ox, pretty as he was; and the Devon scarcely should have been in competition with the shorthorn, as a Highland ox in the Hall was better. The polled and crosses from Scotland made the highest prices in the Christmas market, some of them reaching from 45*l.* to 60*l.* each, and in one exceptional case 80*l.* The sales of cattle were not so brisk at the Smithfield Club during the week as usual, and not a few of the younger ones shown went back to be kept on for another year. The black heifer belonging to Sir W. Gordon Gordon Cumming, that stood in competition with Mr. Catchpole's Champion, was sold to an Aberdonian for 150*l.*, and once more it is understood she will return to win laurels in the south.

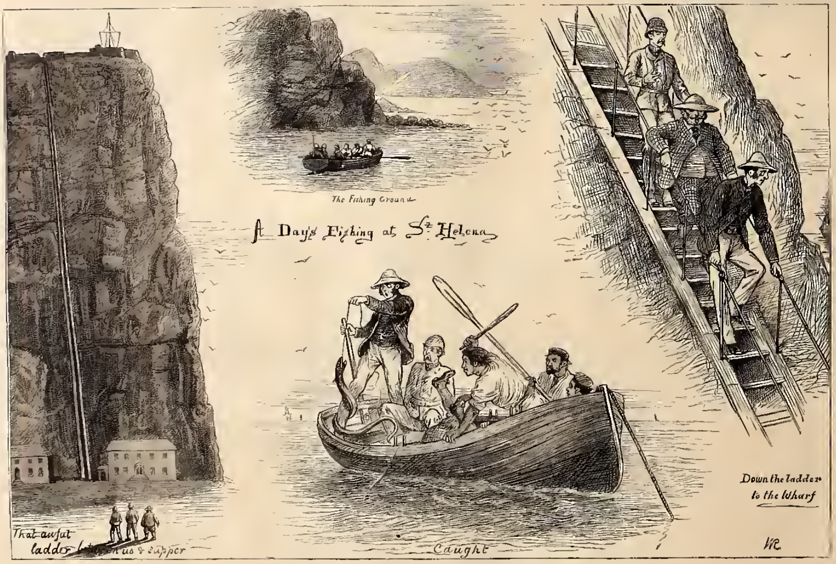
The Year's Account.——The farmers' holiday may be said to be over. They know the best and the worst of their welfare now. Their grain has been threshed, their stock has been sold. On many farms the straw cannot be taken off the steading, so that it need not much be taken into account, beyond the mention that it would be much better to leave farmers to their own discretion as to what they should do as to cropping and selling the produce. The restrictive clauses in leases have done more harm to agriculture than all the game which creates such rows throughout the country, and which is the bête noir of political agitators. On the whole, the year has not been a profitable one. In some localities it has been quite the opposite. The corn has not threshed out so favourably as the bulk of straw indicated, and the Christmas stock has not produced the amount it was expected to realise. At least 6*s.* 4*d.* was anticipated as a current top for the best Scots, but 6*s.* 2*d.* only was obtained, and for the best Southdowns but 7*s.* instead of 7*s.* 4*d.* Will the butchers reduce the Christmas dinners owing to the fall? It is pleasurable to notice that some generous landowners are giving back a reduction of from 20 to 30 per cent. this year on the rents. It would be better were they permanently to reduce them, for, as a rule, they are too high. The farmers' ledger, taking corn and cattle together, will balance favourably with those of the last three years.

The Weather.——During the past week the weather has been very variable. There have been days mild as spring, and

(Continued on page 598)



A SUGGESTION FOR A FLYING MACHINE



The Fishing Ground
A Day's Fishing at St. Helena
Down the ladder to the Wharf
That awful ladder between us & supper
Caught WR

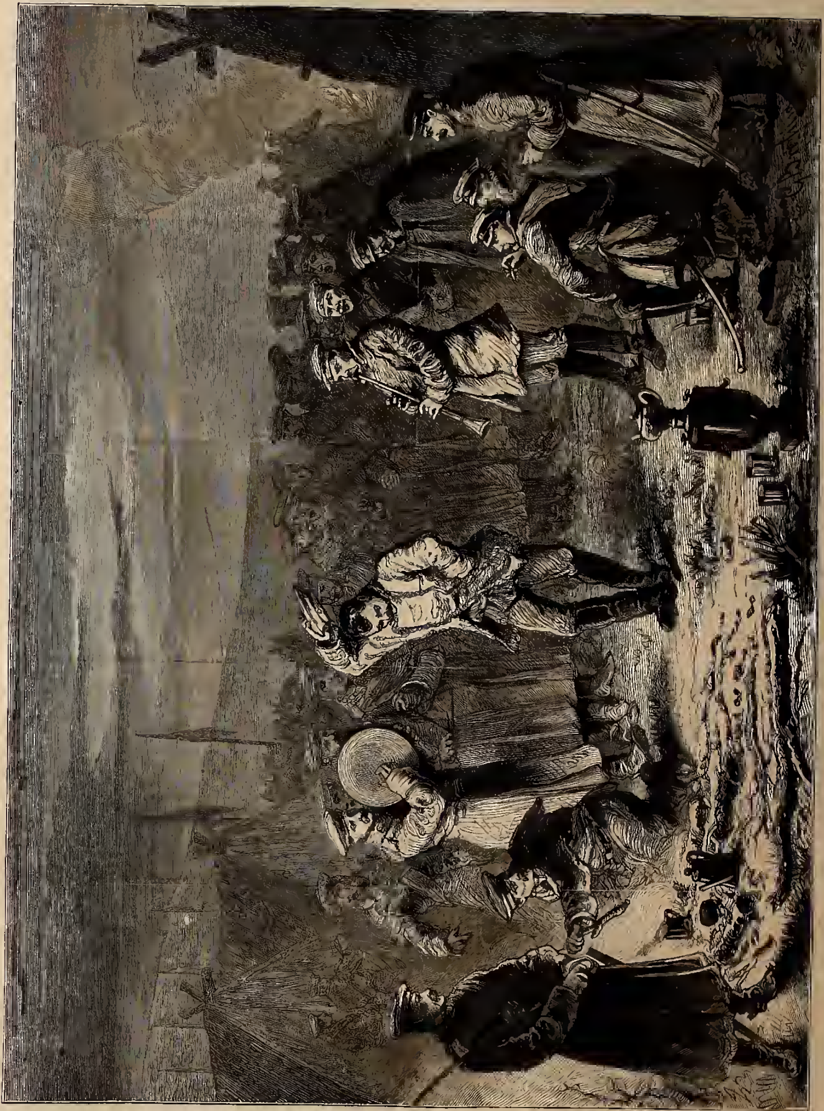
FISHING NOTES AT ST. HELENA



WITH THE RUSSIANS—SOLDIERS REJOICING AFTER THE FALL OF PLEVNA

(Continued from page 595)

some cold as wintry weather should be. Farm work has progressed favourably, and except in districts where the harvest was late, everything in the way of field work is quite as far advanced as it usually is at this season of the year.

MISCELLANEOUS.——A writer in The Country, with reference to the four-horned sheep which so much attracted the notice of the Prince of Wales and his attendants, makes the following pregnant remark: "If Mr. Watts can produce a sheep with five legs of mutton he may be considered a benefactor; but the less horns in a sheep the better."—The Duke of Bedford has been elected President of the Smithfield Club.—The Lord President of the Privy Council spoke no more explicitly to the joint deputation of the Farmers' Club and Central Chamber of Agriculture about the future legislation as to cattle disease than the Prime Minister did three weeks ago. He would not enter into details about the promised Bill because that would be "impossible," and added, "anything which I might let fall would obviously lead to misconception, and I think—at least I hope—that you will be satisfied with the assurance from me that the subject is one that has received our very serious attention, and that we shall be prepared at a very early period to introduce a Bill; and I think that the manner in which we shall deal with the subject will be satisfactory to all classes in the country." The Bill may be satisfactory when it comes; but we doubt that agricultural legislation can be perfect or approaching to perfection until such time as we have a Minister specially appointed to consider the subject, and to whom wars and rumours of wars bring no nervousness; whose whole energies shall be devoted to the interests of those who own ploughshares, instead of being divided between them and the wielders of spears.—The owners of locomotive traction engines on roads, representing 1,800 engines, have taken a step in the right direction in memorialising the Government to take up at an early period of the Parliamentary Session the subject of the petty persecutions to which they are liable under the present Act by county magistrates, and to bring in a Bill in accordance with the recommendations of the Select Committee of 1873.

Folio, price 7s. 6d. each.
THROUGH THE EYE TO THE MIND—THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOKS: a Series of Volumes illustrative of Natural History and of the Vegetable World, with Descriptive Letterpress.
"These volumes are among the most instructive picture books we have seen, and we know of none better calculated to excite and gratify the appetite of the young for the knowledge of nature."—Times.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Tenth Edition, with Fifty-four Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 1: or, LESSONS FROM THE NATURAL HISTORY OF ANIMALS. By ADAM WHITE, late Assistant, Zoological Department, British Museum.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Fifth Edition, with many new Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 2: or, LESSONS FROM THE VEGETABLE WORLD. By the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," "The Herb of the Field," &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Third Edition, with Sixty Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 3: LESSONS ON THE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS, or the Natural History of the Quadrupeds which characterise the Four Divisions of the Globe.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Second Edition, with Forty-eight Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.
THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 4: SKETCHES FROM NATURE, or Pictures of Animal and Vegetable Life in all Lands.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Seventh Edition, with Thirty-six Oblong Coloured Illustrations, price 7s. 6d.
RECREATIVE ILLUSTRATION—THE NEW PICTURE BOOK: or, PICTORIAL LESSONS ON FORM, COMPARISON, AND NUMBER, for Children under Seven Years of Age. With Explanation by NICHOLAS BOHNY.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Map and Illustrations, price 6s.
THE HEROES OF YOUNG AMERICA. By ASCOTT R. HOPE, Author of "A Peck of Troubles," "A Book About Boys," "A Book About Dominoes," &c., &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, price 6s.
ADVENTURES IN THE AIR: being Memorable Experiences of Great Aeronauts. From the French of M. DE FONVIELLE. Translated and edited by JOHN S. KELTIE.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

ATLASES.—All the best Atlases by Keith Johnston, Dr. Wm. Smith, The Useful Knowledge Society, Sprüner, Stieler, Black, Philip, &c., in bindings suitable for presentation, from £1 to £6 6s., subject to a large discount for cash.
EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

STATIONERY.—"Stanford's Treasury Note," 4s. per ream, "Whatman's, Turkey Mill," Repp, and all the Ordinary and Special qualities of Note Paper, with corresponding Envelopes in Stock. Samples and prices on application. Card plates, dies, book plates, &c., &c., Engraved in the best manner.
EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

DIARIES AND OTHER ANNUALS, 1878.—Letts', Pettitt's, De La Rue's, Marcus Ward's, Harwood's, Goldsmith's, Whitaker's, and other Diaries, Pocket Books, and Almanacs; Peerages, Court Guides, Foreign and Colonial Office List, Parliamentary and Clerical Directories, &c., &c., supplied on the day of publication, at a large discount for cash.
EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

THE MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS' NEW CHRISTMAS ALBUM contains no less than 18 new and beautiful songs (which cannot be obtained in any similar publication), published Saturday, Nov 24. Words, music, choruses, and pianoforte accompaniments. Price 1s., post free 14 stamps, addressed MANAGER, Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St. James's Hall.—Wholesale of J. WILLIAMS, 24, Berners Street, W.

Just published, cloth, 3s. 6d.; morocco, 7s. 6d.
POEMS.
By WILLIAM FREDERICK ROCK.
WM. KENT and CO., Paternoster Row; and all Booksellers.

Now ready at all Booksellers.
LETTS'S DIARIES and POCKET BOOKS for 1878, to suit all classes. 116 varieties of size, from 6d. to 14s. each. Catalogues gratis.
LETTS, SONS, and CO. (Limited), 33, King William St., E.C.

BY DR. BARR MEADOWS.
Seventh Edition, cloth, post free 32 stamps.
ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Remarks on the Abuse of Arsenic and other reputed Specifics.—G. HILL, 154, Westminster Bridge Road.

HAVE YOU READ "BRIEF?"

WHAT IS "BRIEF"?

"BRIEF" IS THE NEW PENNY WEEKLY PAPER

BRIEF, the CHEAPEST and BEST FAMILY PAPER ever Published.

Every Saturday, One Penny. Yearly, post free, 6s. 6d.
BRIEF: an Epitome of Current News, Thought, and Criticism. Contains the Cream of all the Daily and Weekly Papers. The best Family Paper. One Penny Weekly.
WYMAN and SONS, 81, Great Queen Street, London, W.C.

ASK FOR THE NEW YORK CONSOLIDATED CARD COMPANY'S "SQUEEZER"
PLAYING CARDS
The highest finish, back and front, and handle like highly polished Ivory.
Retail of every Stationer, and Wholesale of
LAWRENCE BROTHERS, SOLE AGENTS,
Viaduct Works, Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' One Shilling Moist Colour Box. Unadulterated pigments. Box in japanned tin.—LECHERTIER, BARBE, and CO., 60, Regent St., Lond., and local Artists' Colourmen and Stationers.

TO THE LADIES OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.
SYLVIA'S HOME JOURNAL of Tales, Stories, Fashions, and Needlework. Price 6d. An Illustrated Monthly Magazine, for Home Reading and Home Use.
On December 1st will be published
SYLVIA'S HOME JOURNAL for JANUARY, containing the opening chapters of an original story, by JULIA CHANDLER, entitled JANETTA; or, MARRIED FOR MONEY.
In the same Number is also begun a powerful Story, by Miss MARLITT,
THE SECOND WIFE.
The Literary Contents will also comprise:
SYLVIA'S LETTER of GENERAL GOSSIP. HOME and HOME WORK, by JULIA CHANDLER. PARIS FASHIONS for JANUARY.
THE ENGLISH FASHIONS; or, Mutiny in Millinery.
SYLVIA'S ANSWERS TO HER CORRESPONDENTS Under the Three Divisions:
Sylvia's Drawing Room, Sylvia's Work Room, Sylvia's Housekeeper's Room, with Contributions by a Cricket on the Hearth.
FASHION ENGRAVINGS of a SUPERIOR DESCRIPTION, including Winter Mantles for Ladies and Children, Bride's Dresses, Bonnets, and Hats, Ties, Cuffs, Evening Dresses, Walking Costumes, Fichus, Collarettes, &c.
With the JANUARY NUMBER of SYLVIA'S HOME JOURNAL will be GIVEN AWAY
A Large COLOURED PLATE of the LATEST PARISIAN FASHIONS.
FULL-SIZED PATTERNS for CUTTING out a COMPLETE SUIT for a LITTLE BOY.
A PATTERN of a LADY'S JACKET of the very LATEST FASHION, and a COPY of
The GOLDEN CHILDHOOD MAGAZINE for JANUARY, 1878.
Nothing shall be wanting on the Editor's part to render SYLVIA'S HOME JOURNAL the Most Useful, the Cheapest, and the Best Magazine of the day.
Subscription, post free, yearly, 8s.; half-yearly, 4s.; quarterly, 2s.
London: WARD, LOCK, and CO., Warwick House, Salisbury Square, E.C.

THE BOOK WHICH ENGLISH LADS TAKE MOST DELIGHT IN.
THE BOY'S OWN BOOK. A Complete Encyclopædia of Sports and Pastimes, Athletic, Scientific, and Recreative, of Boyhood and Youth. New Edition, revised, and greatly enlarged, price 8s. 6d. cloth, or 12s. morocco elegant. 732 pages, and over 600 Illustrations. Postage 7d.
"Mr. Lockwood's 'Boy's Own Book' is the real original work which we knew in days gone by, but in a new and much enlarged form. To name it is to praise it."—Saturday Review.
CROSBY LOCKWOOD and CO., 7, Stationers' Hall Court.

FORTY FAVOURITE TALES, WITH 200 PICTURES.
MERRY TALES for LITTLE FOLK. Edited by Madame DE CHATELAIN, containing forty of the old and favourite Nursery Tales, such as the House that Jack Built, Little Bopeep, Old Mother Hubbard, the Three Bears, Jack the Giant Killer, Jack and the Beanstalk, Tom Thumb, Puss in Boots, Little Red Riding Hood, Little Goody Two Shoes, the Fair One with the Golden Locks, Beauty and the Beast, Cinderella, &c. In elegant binding, cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d.; gilt edges, 4s.; postage 5d.
"A charming collection of favourite stories."—Athenæum.
"Ought to be placed in every nursery by Act of Parliament."—Aunt Judy's Magazine.
CROSBY LOCKWOOD and CO., 7, Stationers' Hall Court.

EDITED BY DR. WHITTEMORE.
GOLDEN HOURS.
Contents for JANUARY. Price Sixpence.
1. Maurice Grey's Vow. By Mary E. Beesley. Chaps. I.—IV.
2. Invalid Cookery. By Letitia M'Clintock.
3. Our Mothers' Meeting. By the Author of "Life's Noontide."
4. Americans at Home. By Catherine C. Hopley.
5. Lights and Shades of a Curate's Life. By His Wife.
6. The Overland Route—Ceylon. By Charles H. Allen, F.R.G.S.
7. Wade Robinson. With a Portrait.
8. A Holiday in Penmaenmawr. By Madame Coulin.
9. Badenweiler. By the Author of "The Poor of Paris."
10. To Jesty in Illinois. By the Author of "Mary Powell."
11. Madge Lorimor's Legacy. By the Author of "Phœbe of Plasthwaite." Chapters I.—V.

SUNSHINE.
Contents for JANUARY. Price One Penny.
Little Battista: an Italian Boy who became a Great Musician. By the Author of "Phœbe of Plasthwaite."
Hilton Grange; or, Cousin Martha's Trouble. By the Author of "Philip Dene."
Hope's Secret, and How it was found Out. By the Author of "Gracie's Puzzle."
Picture Stories. The Hundred and Ninth.
Our Feathered Favourites. A True Account of some Wonderful Chickens.
Historical Enigmas. A New Series. By Kate Wood.
These Magazines will be Ready by December 20th, and may be obtained through any Bookseller.
GOLDEN HOURS for 1877. A superb Volume, handsomely bound, 7s. 6d. Illustrations on Toned paper.
SUNSHINE for 1877. 1s. 6d. plain cloth; 2s. 6d. cloth extra, gilt. Cheapest of Gilt Books.
London: W. POOLE, 12A, Paternoster Row.

DO POULTRY PAY?—1,580 eggs laid by 22 hens in the winter half-year (26 weeks), from October, 1876, to April, 1877, with simplest management. Per post, 1s.—Mr. SPENCER GREY, 8, Fernal Heath, Worcester.

CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE: WITH BRIEF NOTES ON EGYPT AND EGYPTIAN OBELISKS. By ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S. With Illustrations. Cloth, price 5s.; post, 5s. 6d.
BRAIN and CO., 26, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Now ready, Royal 8vo, cloth, price 38s.
BURKE'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE and KNIGHTAGE for 1878, contains a record of the families of Privy Councillors, Knights of various Orders, and Knights Bachelors, and important information as to precedence. In this edition the Club Addresses have been added.
HARRISON and SONS, 59, Pall Mall, London, S.W., Booksellers to the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

NEW WALTZES by OTTO MULLER—Composer of the famous Geliebt und Verloren (Loved and Lost). In making the present announcement DUFF and STEWART beg to point to the unprecedented success, and (for the few months it has been published) unparalleled sale of Geliebt und Verloren, and they now have great pleasure in submitting for public approval Otto Muller's Two New Sets of Waltzes,
ZART UND TREU (Tender and True), and
VERLOBT (Betrothed),
Post free 2s. each.—DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford St.

A PRETTY PRESENT for CHILDREN—WATCHING FOR PA. Juvenile Quadrille on popular melodies sung by Christy's Minstrels (beautifully illustrated), arranged without octaves and fingered throughout by JULES ROCHARD. Post free 1s.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

UNDER THE MISTLETOE. Juvenile Quadrilles on Popular Melodies. By CHARLES GODFREY. "Very pretty and very easy. Just the thing for juvenile players. The illustrated title page is exceedingly good."—Orchestra. Solo or Duet, 2s. post free.
DUFF and STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

MAPPIN and WEBB, Manufacturers,

76, 77, and 78, OXFORD, STREET, WEST END.

MANSION HOUSE BUILDINGS, CITY.

THE HIGHEST QUALITY AT LOWEST PRICES.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S PRESENTS.

PRESENTS—SPOONS and FORKS.

PRESENTS—TABLE KNIVES.

PRESENTS—NOVELTIES.

PRESENTS—ORNAMENTALS.

PRESENTS—USEFUL.

PRESENTS—IMMENSE ASSORTMENTS.

ELECTRO SILVER.—STERLING SILVER.

CATALOGUES POST FREE.

MAPPIN and WEBB, MANSION HOUSE BUILDINGS, CITY.

76, 77, and 78, OXFORD STREET, WEST END.

WATCHES and JEWELLERY, Good and Cheap,
KIBBLE, 22, GRACECHURCH STREET.
Gold Watches, from 45s. Silver, from 21s.
Aluminium, 21s. Keyless ditto, 42s.
The Fashionable Silver Jewellery.
Whitby Jet Mourning Ornaments.
Christmas Presents in great variety.

THE "CLEOPATRA LOCKET."
(REGISTERED.)
CHRISTMAS NOVELTY.
Very fashionable; solid silver; a real work of art. The celebrated Obelisk, Cleopatra's Needle, is represented standing boldly out in high relief, the sculptured hieroglyphics being clearly shown. Price, with Open Face, 7s. each, or, with Double Case, taking Two Portraits, 10s. 6d. each. Sent free by registered post to any part of the United Kingdom.
WARRINGTON and CO. (Proprietors of the Registered Design), 9, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C.

MORTLOCK'S POTTERY
MINTON'S CHINA GALLERIES.
DINNER SERVICES.
BREAKFAST SERVICES.
TEA SERVICES.
TOILET SERVICES.
ENGRAVED AND PLAIN GLASS.
SOLE ADDRESSES: 202, 203, 204, OXFORD STREET; and 30, 31, and 32, ORCHARD STREET, LONDON.

DEEP BLUE DINNER SERVICES can be obtained at GARDNER'S, 453 and 454, West Strand, from £3 13s. 6d. The set for 12 persons complete. A few of the leading patterns are detailed:

	£	s.	d.
The Glengariff	£3	13	6
The Eccles	3	13	6
The Laurel	3	13	6
The Bramble	4	4	0
The Madras	5	5	0

Photographs post free.

GARDNER'S NEW DINNER SERVICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons:—

	£	s.	d.
The Osborne, in pink or green	£3	5	0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3	13	6
The Bramble, in all colours	4	4	0
The One Thousand and Two	5	5	0
The One Thousand and Two A	5	5	0
The Japanese Bamboo	6	6	0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNERS, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

ELECTRO-Silver Plate and Cutlery.—DEANE & CO.'S Catalogue, with Engravings, post free.
1. Dish Covers, sets of four, £11 11s., £13 13s., £18 10s.
2. Corner Dishes, sets of four, £7 10s., £10, £13 5s.
3. Cruets; 6-glass, 30s. to 84s.; 7-glass, 48s. to £6 6s.
4. Liqueur Frames, 40s., 60s., 90s., £6 6s.
5. Tea and Coffee Sets, 67s., £5 10s., £9, £12 10s., £24 10s.
6. Fruit Stands and Centre Pieces, from 22s. to £12.
7. Biscuit Boxes, 12s., 18s., 30s., 42s., 70s., £5.
8. Waiters, from 8 to 26 inches, 22s. to £6 10s.
9. Fish Carvers, Ivory and plated handles, 16s. to £3 10s.
10. Fish Knives and Forks, per dozen pairs, 84s. to £12.
11. Dessert Knives and Forks, per dozen pairs, 50s. to £8 8s.
12. Spoons—Table, per doz., 24s. to 66s., Forks, 24s. to 64s.
13. Spoons—Dessert, per doz., 16s. to 48s., Forks, 16s. to 46s.
14. Table Knives—Ivory, per doz., 19s., 25s., 35s., 40s.
15. Dessert Knives—Ivory, per doz., 16s., 21s., 30s., 34s.
DEANE & CO., 46, King William St., London Bridge. A.D. 1700.

OSLER'S GLASS CHANDELIERS.
WALL LIGHTS AND LUSTRES.
CHANDELIERS IN BRONZE AND ORMOLU.
KEROSENE AND OTHER LAMPS FOR INDIA AND HOME USE.
TABLE GLASS OF ALL KINDS AND NEWEST DESIGNS.
ORNAMENTAL GLASS, ENGLISH AND FOREIGN.
BIRMINGHAM: Manufactory and Show Rooms, Broad St.
LONDON: Show Rooms, 45, Oxford Street, W.

DINNER, DESSERT, BREAKFAST, TEA, and TOILET SERVICES
CUT TABLE GLASS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION
The Stock consists of the newest and best patterns, selected with much care, and is conveniently arranged for parties furnishing to choose from.
First-class quality—superior taste—low prices.
Catalogue on application.
ALFRED B. PEARCE, 39, Ludgate Hill, E.C.
(Established 1760).

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.
JAMES SHOOLBRED and CO. beg to announce that TOTTENHAM HOUSE will be closed from 2 o'clock on Saturday, the 22nd December, until half-past 8 a.m. Thursday Morning, the 27th December.
Arrangements will be made by which all mourning and other special orders will be attended to, so as to cause as little inconvenience to their customers as possible.
Tottenham Court Road,
Dec. 11, 1877.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, REDUCTION OF PRICES.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 30 inches long, from 8 to 10 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 33 inches long, from 9 to 12 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 36 inches long, from 10 to 14 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 40 inches long, from 12 to 16 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 46 inches long, from 20 to 25 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 40 inches long, richly trimmed with real marten tails, 12 inches deep, 30 gs.; Real Sable, 10 inches deep, 40 gs.; Skunk, 20 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS can be sent on approval to any part of the United Kingdom by forwarding a reference in Town to

MESSRS. WAYRE, Manufacturing FURRIERS, 96, Oxford Street, and 335, Oxford Street (corner of Regent Circus). Established Half-a-Century.

GASK and GASK'S DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP.
SALE of the WHOLE of their IMMENSE STOCK at incomparably low prices.
OXFORD STREET and WELLS STREET.

SALE of MANTLES, COSTUMES, SILKS, MILLINERY, UNDERCLOTHING, &c., being the latest delivery of goods ordered early, at exceedingly low prices.—GASK and GASK.

SALE of DRESS FABRICS, LINENS, BLANKETS, CURTAINS, LONG CLOTHS, &c. The whole of the Stock remaining is now being cleared off at exceptional prices.—GASK and GASK.

SALE of HOSIERY, GLOVES, LACE GOODS, FRENCH and FANCY ARTICLES innumerable, suitable for presents, all now marked at the lowest sale prices.—GASK and GASK.

GASK and GASK'S DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP, and SALE of the whole of their IMMENSE STOCK at incomparably low prices. See above. 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, Oxford Street; 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, Wells Street.

THE CONNAUGHT, £2 18s. 6d. complete.—Messrs. JAY brought especially to our notice a new winter costume of their own design, which they have called 'The Connaught.' It consists of an ulster and skirt made of black serge cloth. The ulster is of a most graceful shape and cut; no trimming, except rows of machine stitching and a few black horn buttons, mars the simplicity of this lady-like costume, which is well suited for travelling or ordinary walking wear."—The Queen Newspaper, Nov. 24.

BLACK SILKS.—Faithfully recommended to their Customers by Messrs. JAY. These Silks are unweighted, pure in quality, and may be fully relied on to wear well.

Present price	3s. 9d.	Late	5s. 9d.
"	4s. 3d.	"	6s. 6d.
"	4s. 9d.	"	7s. 3d.
"	5s. 3d	"	8s. 3d.
"	5s. 9d.	"	9s. 6d.
"	6s. 9d.	"	10s. 3d.

EVENING DRESSES. Two Guineas and Two and a Half Guineas each. The newest and most fashionable style, and made of non-crushing silk net. Pencil Drawings of the same postage free on application.
JAY'S,
THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Regent Street, W.

"WEAR-RESISTING" (Registered)
BOYS' SUITS.
SAMUEL BROTHERS.
Suit for a Boy, 3 ft. 8 in. in height.
C Class, 27s.; D Class, 31s.
Prices varying according to height.
Patterns, &c., post free.
SAMUEL BROTHERS, Sydenham House,
65 and 67, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.
BRUSSELS CARPETS.
VELVET CARPETS, &c.
EXHIBITION MEDALS, 1851, 1862; DUBLIN, 1865.
34 and 36, OLD BOND STREET, W.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.
SANGSTER and CO.,
UMBRELLA MAKERS.
Six Prize Medals Awarded.
SANGSTER'S SILK and ALPACA UMBRELLAS, upon Fox's Celebrated Paragon Frames, all bearing Trade Mark, and fitted with the new AUTOMATIC RUNNER, are the Cheapest, Smallest, Lightest, and Best in the world.
NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR THE AUTOMATIC.
This invention has been long sought after.
THE PATENT AUTOMATIC RUNNER
Is Self-opening—Self-closing. Always ready.
140, Regent Street, W. | *75, Cheapside, E.C.
10, Royal Exchange, E.C. | 94, Fleet Street, E.C.
* Also Wholesale and Shipping Depôt.
Philadelphia Exhibition, Prize Medal and Diploma awarded.

E. DENT and CO., 61, Strand, and 43, Royal Exchange, London, Manufacturers of CHRONOMETERS, WATCHES, CLOCKS, &c. (Catalogues free) to Her Majesty the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and Foreign Sovereigns.
Makers of the Great Westminster Clock and of the New Standard Clock of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

PETER ROBINSON'S
COURT AND GENERAL MOURNING
WAREHOUSE, REGENT STREET,
Is the Cheapest and the Largest
Warehouse of the kind
in London.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S
WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS,
REGENT STREET.
For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
in the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.
"ON RECEIPT of LETTER
or TELEGRAM,"
MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—
with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required),
without extra charge.
PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.
DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
in the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well
as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by
PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
AN IMPORTANT PURCHASE
OF SEVERAL THOUSAND PIECES BY
PETER ROBINSON of Regent Street
OF THE BEST WEARING MAKES ONLY,
and highly recommended

Bonnet and Cie	at 5s. 0d.
Jaubert	at 4s. 0d.
Ponsons	at 5s. 3d.
Degores	at 4s. 9d.

The above are from 2s. to 3s. per yard
under last year's prices.
The EMPRESS CACHEMIRE, at 6s.
Also Excellent Value at
2s. 6d., 3s. 3d., 3s. 11d., 4s. 6d., and 4s. 11d.
For Patterns address to
PETER ROBINSON,
256 to 262, Regent Street.

BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS.
Exceedingly good qualities,
at 7s. 6d., 8s. 9d., 10s. 6d., 11s. 6d., 15s. 6d.
A Special Bargain
in Lyons Velvet, at 10s. 9d.
Black Silk Trimming Velvets,
at 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 9d.
At PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.
Nos. 256 to 262.

FOR SIX GUINEAS.
A BLACK SILK COSTUME
made of RICH LYONS SILK,
with Velvet Garniture,
Exquisitely cut and fashioned.
Copies of expensive Paris Models.
Photos free.
PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

REMARKABLY CHEAP. For One Guinea, A Black Quilted SATIN PETTICOAT. For 1½ Guineas, A Black Silk TRAINED SKIRT. At PETER ROBINSON'S of REGENT STREET.

FOR TWO GUINEAS, and up to Seven,
Costumes in New Black Materials,
in various fashionable Styles,
At PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,

EVENING DRESSES, at One Guinea.
Black Brussels Net, of 29s. 6d.
Tulle (condition keeping), 50s.
Grenadine, 51s. 6d.
New Styles, well cut, and elegantly trimmed.
Illustrations free.

THE NEW CRAPE.
The Pure Silk Gordian Crape,
for Widows and Families.
Its advantages are—that it is made
of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon
nor spot with rain.
It is a richer black, free from dress, and
the gummed appearance so objectionable in other Crape.
The wear of every yard is guaranteed.
The Gordian Crape is a Specialité,
only to be obtained at
PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET,
The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262.
Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 9s. 6d.
Patterns free.

FUR-LINED CLOAKS
at SUMMER PRICES.
Good useful Cloaks at
3½ and 4½ guineas.

SEMI-FITTING SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long for 9½ guineas.
36 inches long for 11 guineas.
39 inches long for 13 guineas.
at PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.

NOTICE.—In reference to the
above advertisement,
it is important that letters
should be clearly addressed to
256 to 262, REGENT STREET

WHITE AND DELICATE HANDS (the Secret).—FAVART'S CYTHERIAN CREAM, with Instructive Treatise, renders the hands beautifully soft, however chapped or disfigured. Pots, 1s., 2s., 3s. 6d. Order from any Chemist or Perfumer.—SANGER, 150, Oxford Street. Post free, 15 or 28 stamps.

HOLY BAZIL.—PIESSE and LUBIN. —This is a most rare perfume distilled from the HOLY BAZIL FLOWER OF HINDU (Ocymum sanctum), so remarkable for its unique fragrance. Sold in bottles, 2s. 6d., 5s., and 10s. 6d. each, at the Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London, and by their agents in all parts of the world.

COLD CREAM OF ROSES.—PIESSE and LUBIN prepare this exquisite COSMETIC with the greatest care, fresh daily, in jars, 1s.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London.

PIESSE and LUBIN.—HOLY BAZIL, —Soap perfumed with HOLY BAZIL, 2s. 6d. HOLY BAZIL Sachet, 2s 6d. HOLY BAZIL Scented Toilet Powder, 2s. HOLY BAZIL in all compounds, cosmetiques, hair dressings, pomades, &c.—Royal Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond Street, London, W. Price Lists free.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS and NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.—The most appropriate at this festive period are ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, an improver and beautifier of the hair beyond all precedent; ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for imparting a radiant bloom to the complexion; ROWLAND'S ODONTO for giving a pearl-like whiteness to the teeth, and fragrance to the breath. Sold by all chemists and perfumers.

BREIDENBACH'S TALIPAT BLOSSOMS.—The NEW SCENT for 1877. A great novelty, and quite different to all others. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., 10s., 20s. Sole Address, 157B, New Bond Street, London. All kinds of Perfumery for Export duty free.

IF YOUR HAIR IS WEAK USE
BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE OIL, 1s.; or three bottles in one, 2s. 6d.—Sole Address, 157A, New Bond St. Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Drapers.

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER OF 1877.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street.

300 PIECES RICH
BLACK and COLORED VELVETS,
plain and brocaded in all the new designs,
prices, Black and Plain Colours, from 4s. 11d., Brocaded, from 12s. 9d. Patterns free.

NEW COLORED LYONS SILKS,
in White, Cream, Ivory,
Tilleul, Moonlight, Coral, Eau de Nil, &c., &c.,
specially prepared for
BRIDAL AND EVENING WEAR,
also every new shade of Bronze, Navy, Claret, Prune, &c., &c., at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., 4s. 4½d., and 5s. 3d. per yard.
250 Shades to select from. Patterns free on application to
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

BLACK SILKS OF STANDARD QUALITY.
Heavily dyed and showy makes at low prices should be avoided.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street,
having kept for the past 25 years Black Silks produced by Messrs. Bonnet, Ponson, Jaubert, and Tapissier, which are found upon careful examination to be the best and purest makes, invites special attention to these fine qualities, as being cheaper than at any former period, and at the same time recommended with more confidence for really hard wear than any other make of Silk; in proof of purity and excellence the highest awards were given at Philadelphia.
Each quality guaranteed not to cut.
Prices, 4s. 6d. to 11s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON.
CASHMERE MERINOES, all wool,
This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 1s. 2d. to 2s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

EVERY NEW SHADE FOR BALL AND EVENING DRESSES,
in Gauzes, Diamond Lustres, Fine Cashmeres, Japanese Silks, Lisse Muslins, and other thin fabrics, from 9s. 6d. to 23s. 6d. the Dress.
The highest quality Japanese Silks at 1s. 11½d. per yard.
Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES REQUIRING
MADE BALL and Wedding Dresses.
Now ready, several thousand charming Dresses in White, Black, and all colours, from 18s. 9d. to 10 guineas.
Engravings of the above, with many others, can be seen in the New Book of Fashions, which is sent post free.

A FAVOURITE DRESS IN TARLATAN.
THE "DORA" (any Colour or Black),
profusely trimmed with flounces and ample train,
1 guinea, a substantial box included.
A pretty Brussels Net Dress, in White, Black, and all colours, for 28s. 0d., with material for bodice.
Patterns of Materials and Illustrations free from
PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

69, LUDGATE HILL.
TRELOAR'S—KAMPTULICON.
TRELOAR'S—COCOA NUT MATS.
TRELOAR'S—TURKEY CARPETS.
TRELOAR'S—ORIENTAL HEARTH
RUGS.
69, LUDGATE HILL.

NATURAL MINERAL WATERS.
VICHY.
Property of the French Government.

CELESTINS—The water of this spring is very agreeable, sparkling, and slightly acidulated. Remedy for complaints of the Kidneys, Gravel, Gout, Diabetes, Rheumatism, &c.

HAUTERIVE—This spring contains a greater quantity of carbonic acid, and is especially recommended as a table water.

GRANDE-GRILLE—For complaints of the Liver and Biliary Organs, Indigestion, &c.

HOPITAL—For Stomach complaints, &c.

VICHY WATERS are pleasant to the taste, and may be drank pure or mixed with wine or spirits.

CAUTION—See that the name of the particular water required is on the capsule.

Sold by all Chemists, Wine, and Mineral Merchants.
Price One Shilling per Bottle.

THROAT IRRITATION.
EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Sold only in Boxes, 6d. and 1s. labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS,
48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

CORPULENCE.—YATE HOLLAND'S EMACERATING POWDERS speedily and safely absorb superfluous fat and reduce corpulency, however long standing. 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. a box.—MARTIN and CO., 3, Paradise Road, London, S.W.; or through any Chemist.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD LIVER OIL (Registered).
No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.
Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.

"The natural nauseous taste of the Oil is disguised with considerable art. Children take it with avidity."—See Lancet, British Medical Journal, Sanitary Record, Medical Times, Medical Press, Medical Record, &c.

Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half-pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure.

Retail of all Chemists and Druggists, and Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited), Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

DR. LELIEVRE'S ICELAND MOSS POULTICE (Patented) is exempt from all the inconveniences inseparable from Poultices made with Linseed or Bread. These spoil the linen, bedding, &c., dry up on the edges, rapidly ferment, giving a most unpleasant odour; and no dependence can be placed on the quality and freshness of the linseed meal. This New Poultice is instantaneous, for it is ready in a few seconds. Sold retail by all Chemists.
Wholesale: RIGOLLOT and CO., 82, Southwark St., London.

TAMAR-INDIEN, a laxative, refreshing, and medicated Fruit Lozenge—the effectual Cure of Constipation, Headache, Bile, Hæmorrhoids, &c. Tamar (unlike pills and the usual purgatives) is agreeable to take, and never produces irritation. 2s. 6d. per box; post free, 2s. 8d. E. GRILLON, Wool Exchange, E.C., and of all Chemists.

MORSON'S
PEPSINE,
AND ITS PREPARATIONS
FOR INDIGESTION.
SEE NAME ON LABEL.
HIGHLY RECOMMENDED BY THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.

As WINE, in bottles, at 3s., 5s., 9s.
LOZENGES, at 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d.
GLOBULES, at 2s., 3s. 6d., and 6s. 6d.
And as POWDER, in one-ounce bottles, at 4s. each.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS, AND THE MANUFACTURERS,
MORSON and SON,
SOUTHAMPTON ROW, RUSSELL SQUARE,
LONDON.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR INDIGESTION, WIND,
HEARTBURN, &c.
Also unrivalled as a Tonic, Purifying, Family Aperient
Medicine, without Mercury.
DR. SCOTT'S BILIOUS and LIVER PILLS, prepared by W. LAMBERT, 1a, Vere Street, London, W. Price 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per Box; post free for 15 or 35 penny stamps, or of all Chemists. See you have the right Pills, "Dr. Scott's," which are wrapped in a square green package.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS at HENRY RODRIGUES', 42, PICCADILLY.
Polished Brass Writing Sets of special designs
Sets for the Writing Table and Boudoir, 21s. to £10.

Envelope Cases,	21s. to £5	Jewel Cases,	21s. to £5
Inkstands,	5s. to £5	Glove Boxes,	10s. 6d. to £5
Despatch Boxes,	21s. to £6	Handkerchief Boxes,	10s. to £5
Writing Cases,	10s. 6d. to £5	Caskets,	15s. to £5
Candlesticks (pair),	15s. to £1	Flower Vases,	21s. to £5
Candelabra,	45s. to £5	Jardinières (pair),	42s. to £5
Work Boxes,	15s. to £5	Card Trays,	21s. to £5

Rodrigues' Ladies' Dressing Case, silver-fitted, £10 10s.
And a large and choice assortment of English, Viennese and Parisian NOVELTIES, for PRESENTS, from 5s. to £5.

RODRIGUES' DRESSING BAGS for TRAVELLING, with silver and plated fittings, from £3 3s. to £50; Hand Bags, Waist Bags, Carriage Bags, and Bags of all kinds, at very moderate prices.—42, Piccadilly.

PORTRAIT Albums at Rodrigues', with patent leather guards, interleaved for vignette and cabinet portraits, from 10s. 6d. to £5. Rodrigues' New Easel Album. Regimental and Presentation Albums.—42, Piccadilly.

RODRIGUES' Monograms, Crests, and ADDRESSES designed, and STEEL DIES engraved as gems. NOTE PAPER and ENVELOPES stamped in colour relief, and brilliantly illuminated in gold, silver, bronze, and colours in the highest style of art.—42, Piccadilly.

BALL PROGRAMMES at Rodrigues'.— All the new patterns of the season arranged, printed, and stamped in the latest fashion. BILLS OF FARE, GUEST CARDS, and INVITATIONS.—42, Piccadilly.

VISITING CARDS, at H. Rodrigues'. A card plate elegantly engraved, and 100 superfine cards printed for 4s. 6d. BOOK PLATES designed and engraved in Modern and Mediæval Styles at RODRIGUES', 42, Piccadilly.

FOR ARMS and CRESTSEND NAME and COUNTY to T. MORING, Inns of Court Heraldic Office, 44, High Holborn, W.C. Sketch, 3s. 6d.; Coloured, 7s. 6d. Seals, Dies, &c. Illustrated Price Lists Post free.

THE WIZARD'S BOX of MAGIC. Instructions and Apparatus for performing Ten Capital Conjuring Tricks. Sufficient for one hour's amusement. Post free, 14 stamps.—H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street.

THE MOST LAUGHABLE THING on EARTH.—A new Parlour Pastime, 50,000 Comical Transformations of Wit and Humour. Post free for 14 stamps. H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street, Covent Garden.

THE LOVE CHASE.—The Merriest Game out for any number of Players. 24 Engravings. Post free for 14 stamps. Catalogue, 1 stamp. H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick Street, Covent Garden.

HEALTHY SKIN and GOOD COMPLEXION.
PEARS'S TRANSPARENT SOAP,
is the Best for the
TOILET, NURSERY, and SHAVING.
Recommended in the Journal of Cutaneous Medicine, edited by Mr.
ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S.,
used by
THE ROYAL FAMILY, and Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere.

PROFESSOR BROWNE'S WIGS and
SCALPS, from 35s.
47, FENCHURCH STREET.

PROFESSOR BROWNE'S Hair De-partment for Ladies comprises a large collection of Long Hair Head Dresses, Crop and Frizzy ditto, Chignons, Plaits, Coils, Coronets, Cachepeignes, and covered Stems in all shades of colour to suit the present fashion. Also Bands, Fronts, and Curls.—47, Fenchurch Street.

PROFESSOR BROWNE has the largest stock of Ladies' and Gentlemen's Ornamental Hair in the World always on view at his Establishment, 47, Fenchurch Street, London.

SUNNY RAYS for GOLDEN HAIR, a few applications of which produce the most charming golden tint, varying in brightness by its frequency of use. It is perfectly harmless both to health and hair; an occasional use has a lovely effect upon any shade of brown, without producing a perceptible change. In bottles at 5s. 6d., per post four extra stamps.—CHARLES BOND, 239, Oxford Street, W.

THE NEAREST RESEMBLANCE TO NATURE.—WALLER'S invisible fabric for covering BALD HEADS, or where the HAIR has become thin. PARTINGS of LADIES' FRONTS, BANDS, &c., thus made, are not only perfection in appearance, but most durable in wear. TRESSES of HAIR (best quality only), either PLAIN or as PLAITS or TWISTS, 16 inches, 10s. 6d.; 18 inches, 17s. 6d. Forwarded per return of post to any part of the Kingdom.—W. WALLER, Court Hairdresser, 86, Camden Road, London, N.W.

GOLDEN HAIR.—Robare's Aureoline produces, by two or three applications, the beautiful golden colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. of all perfumers and chymists. Wholesale, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, 5, Great Marlborough Street, W., and 93 and 95, City Road, E.C., London; Pinaud 44, Meyer, Boul. de Strasbourg, 37, Paris; 31, Graben, Vienna; and Rue des Longs Chariots, Brussels.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CON-STIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children.
The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says: It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families."
Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists.
Wholesale: 82, Southwark Street, London.

MR. HERON, 10, Arthur Street, Bel-fast, writes: "DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS allayed the inflammation of my throat, relieved the cough, and gave me ease at once." Price 1s. 1½d.

FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH.— This excellent Family Medicine is the most effective remedy for indigestion, bilious and liver complaints, loss of appetite, drowsiness, giddiness, spasms, and all disorders of the stomach and bowels; or where an aperient is required, nothing can be better adapted.

For FEMALES, these Pills are truly excellent, removing the distressing headache so very prevalent, depression of spirits, dulness of sight, nervous affections, blotches, pimples, and sallowness of skin, and give a healthy bloom to the complexion. Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per box.

WEIGH YOUR CANDLES.
Many Foreign Light-Weights are about.
All the Candles of
PRICE'S PATENT CANDLE COMPANY (Limited)
are intended to be the exact weight without the wrapper.
Try their GOLD MEDAL PALMITINE, burning brilliantly but slowly and of the transparency of the finest Spermaceti.
Try also their NEW PATENT NIGHT LIGHTS made without the paper case.
Order of your own dealer.

WILLS' "BEST BIRD'S-EYE"
CIGARETTES
Sold everywhere in Sixpenny Packets (containing Ten), protected by our Name and Trade Mark.—W. D. and H. O. WILLS, Wholesale and Export only, Bristol and London.

WILLS' "THREE CASTLES." "There's no sweeter Tobacco comes from Virginia, and no better brand than the 'THREE CASTLES.'"—Vide "The Virginians." Sold only in Packets, protected by the Name and Trade Mark of
W. D. and H. O. WILLS.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR
GLENFIELD STARCH
SEE THAT YOU GET IT,
As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON. —LONDON DEPARTMENT OF FINE ARTS.—The Classes for Drawing, Painting, &c., will begin on JANUARY 3. Early application for admission is advisable, as there are but few vacancies.
Prospectuses may be obtained from the office of the College.
TALFOURD ELY, M.A.,
Secretary.

MUNICIPAL COLLEGE OF BOU-LOGNE-SUR-MER, under the direct supervision of the MUNICIPAL COUNCIL. Founded in 1630. It offers to Families the following advantages:—A literary and scientific education or a superior commercial education. The pupils are examined quarterly by Inspectors of the French University, and prepared for the Ecoles Polytechnic, St. Cyr, Navy, &c. Prospectuses and particulars on application to M. Barry, Head-Master, or to M. DUTERTRE, House Steward, The College, Boulogne-sur-Mer, or HENRY JOHNSON, Esq., Merchant, 67, Lower Thames Street, London, E.C.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE (or NORTH LONDON) HOSPITAL.
SPECIAL CHRISTMAS APPEAL FOR AID.

Ordinary Annual Expenditure over	£13,000
Reliable Income from Dividends, Annual Subscriptions, &c.	7,600
Deficit	£5,400

The total amount of RELIEF AFFORDED TO NEW CASES FROM JANUARY 1 TO OCTOBER 31 THIS YEAR has been as follows:—In-Patients, 1,687. Out-Patients, 4,762. Casualties, 5,106. Ophthalmic Cases, 1,184. Cases of Diseases of the Skin, 655. Cases of Childbirth attended at the patients' own habitations, 1,137. Total, 14,721.

The Committee most earnestly appeal to the benevolent public for pecuniary assistance to enable them to PAY OFF the above liability of the past year. SUBSCRIPTIONS received by Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand, or at the Hospital.
NEWTON H. NIXON, Secretary.

NATIONAL INSTITUTION FOR DISEASES OF THE SKIN, Gray's Inn Road.
Established 1864.
PHYSICIAN—Dr. BARR MEADOWS, 47, Victoria Street, S.W.
Free to necessitous; payment required from other applicants.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL (SELECT) FOR LADIES, BOLTON HOUSE, 191, Clapham Road, Surrey. Established 1867. A private home where patients suffering from serious diseases, and requiring special supervision, can obtain the best medical and surgical treatment without incurring anxiety in their own homes. Treatise of successful cures forwarded for twelve stamps. Physician, DAVID JONES, M.D. Consultations daily, 11 till 2 (Tuesday and Friday excepted), at 15, Welbeck St., London.

SCHOOL SHIP CONWAY, LIVER-POOL.—Established for teaching Young Gentlemen with a view to their becoming officers in the Mercantile Marine. Terms, 50 guineas per annum, including uniform and all other extras. The sons of Officers of the Navy and Mercantile Marine are received at the reduced rate of 40 guineas. Age for admission, 11 to 16. Quarter Days, Feb. 1, April 10, August 1, and October 10.—Apply to Captain E. B. H. FRANKLIN, R.N., Rock Ferry, Birkenhead.

PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL
LIFE ASSOCIATION,
27, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON,
Established 1840.
Mutual Assurance for all Classes.
W. T. LINFORD, Secretary.

PROVIDENT CLERKS' AND GENERAL GUARANTEE
ASSOCIATION (LIMITED)
61, COLEMAN STREET, LONDON.
Guarantees for fidelity in situations of trust. The Bonds of this Association are accepted by all Government Departments.

PROVIDENT CLERKS' AND GENERAL ACCIDENT
INSURANCE COMPANY (LIMITED).
61, COLEMAN STREET, LONDON.
Every description of Accidental Insurance on favourable terms.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LONDON.— The extensive building now in course of erection on the site of the historical mansion of the Dukes of Northumberland at the corner of Northumberland Avenue, Trafalgar Square, will, when completed, be opened as a first-class Hotel.
Messrs. GORDON and CO., Proprietors.

MALVERN COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will begin on Monday, January 28.

EDUCATION.—High Class, Richmond Hill. French and German, for Gentlemen's Daughters. Exceptional English (Oxford and Cambridge Examinations) also, French, German, Italian, Sciences, Music (Sir Julius Benedict, &c.) Singing, Harmony, Dancing, Drawing, Painting. English, French and German Governesses (Diplômées). Sixteen Masters. Forty to Seventy Guineas.—THETA, Richmond, Surrey.

SCHWEITZER'S COCOATINA.
Anti-Dyspeptic Cocoa or Chocolate Powder.
Guaranteed Pure Soluble Cocoa, with excess of Fat extracted.
Four times the strength of Cocoas Thickened yet Weakened with Arrowroot, Starch, &c., and really cheaper.

The Faculty pronounce it the most nutritious, perfectly digestive Beverage for "BREAKFAST, LUNCHEON, or SUPPER," and invaluable for Invalids and Children. Keeps in all Climates. Requires no Cooking. A teaspoonful in Breakfast cup costing less than a halfpenny. Samples gratis.
H. SCHWEITZER and CO., 10, Adam Street, London, W.C.

AMERICAN CENTENNIAL
PRIZE MEDAL.
FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
"A most delicious and valuable article."—Standard.
"The Caracas Cocoa of such choice quality."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.

FRY'S EXTRACT OF COCOA.
Of great value to invalids who wish to avoid rich articles of diet.
"Which really consists of Cocoa Nibs deprived of the superfluous oil."—Food, Water, and Air, edited by Dr. Hassall.
TENTH INTERNATIONAL MEDAL
awarded to J. S. FRY and SONS.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN COMPANY, LIVERPOOL ROAD, LONDON, N., supply the best goods only. Whites for pastry, 10s. per bushel; households for bread, 9s. 4d.; wheat meal for brown bread, 8s. 8d.; coarse Scotch oatmeal, 3s. 2d. per 14 lbs.; fine, 3s. 4d.; American hominy, 4s.; barley, maize, and barley meal, 5s. 8d. per bushel, or 21s. 6d. per sack; buckwheat, 5s. per bushel, or 19s. per sack; oats, 4s. per bushel; crushed oats, 3s. 6d. per bushel, or 13s. 6d. per sack; middlings, 2s. 4d. per bushel; ground pollard, 1s. 8d.; peas, 7s. 6d.; tick beans, 8s.; split peas, 2s. 6d. and 3s. per peck; meat biscuits, 20s. per cwt.; lentil flour for invalids, in tins, 1 lb. size, 1s., and 7 lbs., 5s. All other kinds of grain and seed. Special prices for larger quantities. Post Office Orders and Cheques to be made in favour of GEORGE YOUNG.

NEW YORK.
EPPS'S COCOA.
Wholesale Depôt: Smith and Vanderbeek, Park Place.
PARIS.
EPPS'S COCOA.
Depôt: A. Delafosse, Faubourg St. Honoré, 64.

CHRISTMAS CASES, One Guinea, containing 3 Bottles of Port, 3 Sherry, 1 Gin, 1 Rum, 1 Whiskey, 1 Brandy, 1 lb. Tea. All reputed quart bottles, warranted pure and genuine. Sent bottles, case, and carriage free, to any Railway Station in England, by the VICTORIA WINE CO., 12, Mark Lane. P.O.O. to W. W. HUGHES.

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY | "THE PERFECTION OF WHISKY." UNRIVALLED FOR "TODDY."
Wholesale of the Sole Proprietors, GREENLEES BROS.
1, Gresham Buildings, E.C. (Distilleries, Argyleshire.)

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—
THE CREAM OF OLD IRISH WHISKIES.
Pure, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome.
Universally recommended by the Medical Profession.
Dr. HASSALL says—"The Whisky is soft, mellow, and pure, well matured, and of very excellent quality."
20, GREAT TITCHFIELD STREET, W.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER OF

CHAPPELL'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE, containing the following Popular Dance Music:

Trial by Jury Lancers	Charles D'Albert.
Constantinople Quadrille	Charles D'Albert.
Die Fledermaus Waltz	Johann Strauss.
Les Lointains Waltz	Emile Waldteufel.
Maiden's Dream Waltz	Edward Hoffmann.
The Schomberg Galop	Charles D'Albert.
Fleretta Polka	Charles D'Albert.
Pizzicato Polka	J. and J. Strauss.
Forget-me-not Galop	A. Hecker.

And a New Quadrille,
MOLLIE DARLING, by CHARLES D'ALBERT.
Price One Shilling; post free, 1s. 2d.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

DISTANT SHORE WALTZ. By CHARLES D'ALBERT. New Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's Song. Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CLEOPATRA GALOP. By Charles D'ALBERT, just published. "A splendid galop." Beautifully illustrated, 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

THE FANFARE POLKA. By Charles D'ALBERT. Illustrated. Price 1s 6d net. Orchestra, 3s.; Septett, 2s.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHARLES D'ALBERT'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

	Net.
SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite Composer."	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Work	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	2 0
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	1 6
RINK GALOP	2 0

The above, arranged for Full Orchestra, 3s.; Septet, 2s. each.
N.B. A Complete List of M. D'Albert's Popular Dance Music will be sent on application to
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

A NEW CHRISTMAS SONG.

THE KING OF OUR SAXON YULE. By W. F. TAYLOR. A jovial song for Baritone or Bass Voice, with chorus ad lib. Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond Street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SPECIALITIES in PIANOFORTES.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S STUDENT'S PIANOFORTE. Compass 5 Octaves, 15 gs., or £1 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SCHOOL PIANINOS. From Canadian Walnut, 20 gs., or 2 gs. per qr. on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT PIANINOS, 30 gs., or £3 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR PIANINO, 35 gs., or £3 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MODEL PIANETTE, 35 gs., or £3 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH MODEL, 40 gs., or £4 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S COLONIAL MODEL, 45 gs., or £4 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S FOREIGN MODEL, 50 gs., or £5 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ENGLISH OBLIQUE, 55 gs., or £5 10s. per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S OBLIQUE GRAND, 70 gs., or £7 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IRON-FRAMED OBLIQUE, 90 gs., or £9 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S MIGNON IRON GRAND, 80 gs., or £8 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S BOUDOIR IRON GRAND, 110 guineas, or £11 per quarter on the 3-years system of purchase.

UPWARDS of ONE HUNDRED VARIETIES on VIEW.

MAY BE HAD OF ALL PIANO-FORTE DEALERS throughout the United Kingdom.

SHOW-ROOMS, 50, NEW BOND STREET.

STEAM FACTORY, CHALK FARM ROAD, N.W.

DANCE MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

HAMMOND'S MUSIC PORTFOLIO. Price 1s. each number. Post free 13 stamps. Violin and Cornet Accompaniments to each number, 6d. each.

No. 1 CONTAINS:

Brise des Nuits Waltzes	Lamothe.
Hydropaten Waltzes	Gung'l.
Manuelita Waltzes	Waldteufel.
Autograph Waltzes	Strauss.
St. David's Quadrille	Dan Godfrey.
Bruder Lustig Galop	Budik.

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

Le Premier Baiser Waltzes	Lamothe
Venus Reigen Waltzes	Gung'l.
Den Lieben Langen Tag Waltzes	Rudel.
Deutsche Herzen Waltzes	Strauss.
The 'Varsity Lancers	D'Egville.
The Pet Schottische	Bertrand.

CONTENTS OF No 3.
SIX WALTZES BY JOSEPH GUNG'L.

Soldaten Lieder	Waltzes.
Gräfenberger	Waltzes.
Daheim!	Waltzes.
Jungherren Tänze	Waltzes.
Fantasiebilder	Waltzes.
Mein schonster Tag in Berlin	Waltzes.

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Frühlingslieder Waltzes	Gung'l.
Lille Waltzes	Strauss.
Le Tour du monde Waltzes	Metra.
La Fiancee Waltz	Lamothe.
Hochzeit (Wedding) Quadrille	Strauss
Pergola Polka	Marie.

CONTENTS OF NO. 5.

Amoretten Tänze Waltzes, duet	Gung'l.
Soldaten Lieder Waltzes, duet	Gung'l.

A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, London, W.

MUSICAL BOXES, by Nicole Freres.—KEITH, PROWSE, and CO., direct Importers, have the largest Stock of really fine BOXES in Europe, £3 to £300. The new rooms devoted to the display of these instruments are now ready. Self-acting and Barrel Pianoforte, 18 to 1,200 gs.

FLUTES.—NEW MODEL, for beauty of tone unsurpassed, four guineas and seven guineas; Rudall's Prize-medal Flutes, new and second-hand. A great variety of second-hand Flutes, one guinea to 25 guineas, at KEITH, PROWSE, and CO.'s Manufactory, 48, Cheapside.

BANJOES.—CHEAPSIDE MODEL is best. Covered back, machine head, &c., five guineas; including light case, £6. Other models one to twelve guineas. Self-instructing book, with airs, songs, &c., 6s. net.—KEITH, PROWSE, and CO., Manufacturers, 48, Cheapside.

NEW SONG BY JOSEPH BARNBY.

ELIZABETH'S SONG, from "The Saint's Tragedy," by the Rev. CHARLES KINGSLEY. Set to Music by JOSEPH BARNBY. 4s.

NOVELLO, EWER, and CO.'S MUSIC Primers. Edited by Dr. STAINER. The following are now ready:—

Third Edition.
THE PIANOFORTE PRIMER. By ERNST PAUER. Price 2s.

Second Edition
THE ORGAN PRIMER. By Dr. STAINER. Price 2s.

Second Edition
THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC PRIMER. By W. H. CUMMINGS. Price 1s.

Second Edition.
THE ELEMENTS OF THE BEAU-TIFUL IN MUSIC. By ERNST PAUER. Price 1s.

Ready on December 15.
HARMONY PRIMER. By Dr. Stainer.

SIXTY HARMONIUM VOLUN-TARIES. Arranged by J. W. ELLIOTT. 1s.

MENDELSSOHN'S ELIJAH.—Arranged for the Pianoforte by BERTHOLD TOURS. Folio size, 5s.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH.—Arranged for the Pianoforte by BERTHOLD TOURS. Folio size, 5s.
London: NOVELLO, EWER, and CO., 1, Berners Street, W., and 80 & 81, Queen Street, E.C.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.
A GREAT SECRET. Words by F. E. Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Trevor.
"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News
Post free 24 stamps.
B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row.

ROBERT STANLEY'S NEW SONGS.
DEAR LITTLE FLOWERS.
WHEN LOVE'S GLOW HATH GONE BY.
EASTING.
Price 2s. each net.
J. B. CRAMER and CO., 201, Regent Street.

Price 1s each Book; by post, 14 stamps.

BATH'S "MUSICAL MUSEUM" for THE HARMONIUM.

BOOK I., containing twenty-six Sacred Melodies, selected and arranged by W. Layland.

BOOK II., containing eighteen Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by A. S. Holloway

BOOK III., containing twenty Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by Dr. Spark.

BOOK IV., selected and arranged by Michael Watson, is as cheap a shillingsworth as can be met with in the musical world. It contains twenty-two pieces for that instrument, including a popular "Volkslied," by Mendelssohn, a "Rondo," by Dussek, a "Bourée" and Gavotte, by Bach—in fact, most of our great ancient and modern composers have contributed a share to this excellent little work.—Vide Graphic, Oct. 27.

BOOK V., containing eighteen Popular Pieces, selected and arranged by J. E. Webster
J. BATH, 40, Great Marlborough Street, W.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867.

BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.

Central Depot for the British Empire: 10, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S Practical Piano-FORTE SCHOOL.
Section 1. No. 1. PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

SWING WALTZ. By C. Danzi.
Illustrated Title. Price 4s.
LAWN TENNIS SCHOTTISCHE.
By T. CAMPBELL. Illustrated Title. Price 3s.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, 272a, Regent Circus, Oxford St., London; Cross Street, South King Street, Manchester.

"THE GREATEST SUCCESS IN PARIS"

LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE.
OPERA COMIQUE DE ROBERT PLANQUETTE.
Now Ready.
Polka, by Arban. 1s. 6d. net.
Polka Mazurka. 1s. 6d. net.
Suite de Valse, by O. Métra. Solo and duet. 2s each net.
Quadrilles, by Arban. Solo and duet. 2s. each net.
Quadrilles, by O. Métra. Solo and Duet. 2s each net.
Brilliant Fantasia, by E. Moniot. 1s. 6d. net.
Rondeau Valse, by B. Richards. 1s. 6d. net.
Chanson du Mousse, by B. Richards. 2s. net.
Valse Brillante, by B. Richards 2s. net.
In the Press.
Complete Opera, piano solo, 2s. 6d. net
Vocal Score, English and French Words.
Selections of Airs, in two books, by Cramer 1s. 6d each.
Fantasia, by W. Kuhe. 2s. net
Paraphrase, by W. Kuhe. 2s. net.
N.B.—The sole right of representation, &c., for Great Britain and Colonies belongs to Mr. Joseph Williams.

CH. NEWSTEDT'S CARILLON, LOUIS XIV. Piano Solo, net, 1s. 6d.; Piano Duet, by J. Rummell, net, 1s. 6d.; Small Band Parts, 1s. 6d.; Full Orchestra, 2s. net.

L. GREGH.—LES BERGÈRES WATTEAU. Piano Solo, net, 1s. 6d.; Duet, by J. Rummell, net, 1s. 6d; Orchestra, 2s. net.

ARDITI'S L'INGÉNUE. Morceau a la GAVOTTE. 3s. Performed at the Promenade Concerts with enormous success. Orchestra, 2s.

FLORIAN PASCAL'S LATEST COM-POSITIONS.
Berceuse. 3s. Also for Small Band, 1s. net.
La Princesse. 3s. (Gavotte). Also for Small Band, 1s. net.
Performed with great success at the Promenade Concerts.
Près le Lac, Deuxième Meditation. 3s.
Les Vieux Temps (Gavotte). 3s.
Pavane Royale de Louis XIV. 3s.
Air de Ballet. New Simplified Edition by Arthur Grenville. 3s.
Thematic Lists of this favourite Composer's sent free on application.

FLORIAN PASCAL.—AUTREFOIS (Souvenir de Marguerite de Valois). This charming little morceau has already run through several editions, and seems likely to rival the ever popular "Danse Favorite" of the same composer. Post free 18 stamps.

FLORIAN PASCAL.—UN BIJOU PERDU. "M. Pascal is to be congratulated upon having rescued from oblivion this really exquisite little gem, the melody of which is so captivating that we venture to predict for it great popularity." As Piano Solo, now ready, 18 stamps.

SPRING SONG. By J. Leybach.
ENGLISH, FRENCH, AND ITALIAN WORDS.
"A perfect little gem, easy to sing and play."
Compass D to F (in C). Post free, 18 stamps.

NEW SONGS by J. Leybach.
LIFE'S AUTUMN (in A). Compass E to G flat.
THE SIRENS (in F). Compass C to F.
BRIGHT STARS OF HEAVEN (in C). Compass D to F.
MAIDEN AND THE BIRDS (in B flat). Compass D to F.
Post free, 18 stamps each.

CATALOGUES GRATIS and POST FREE.
Shipping Orders on most favourable terms.

LONDON: JOSEPH WILLIAMS,
24, BERNERS STREET, W.; and
123, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

VICTORIA. New National Song. Written by W. CLARK RUSSELL. Music by HENRY SMART. 3s. Post free at half-price. As a part song post free two stamps. London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO. Order everywhere.

DEAR ENGLAND. Song. Words by CHARLES MACKAY. Music by LOUIS DIEHL. 3s. Post free 18 stamps. As a part Song post free 2 Stamps. Signor Foli always receives an ovation with this popular Song. London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS and CO. Order everywhere.

OUR DEAR OLD CHURCH OF ENGLAND. Song. Words by Dr. CARPENTER. Music by J. L. HATTON. Dedicated by permission to the Right Hon. the Earl of Beaconsfield. Illustrated Title. "The music is well adapted to the words, and the song deserves the widest possible circulation."—Vide Jackson's Oxford Journal. 3s., post free 18 stamps; as a part song two stamps. London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S MUSICAL BOX. Caprice for the Pianoforte. By J. LIEBICH. "An agreeable and clever piece, which is very popular among amateurs."—Vide Musical World.—Free by post for 24 stamps.

POPULAR QUADRILLES for the PIANOFORTE, as Solos and Duets. 4s. each, post free at half-price.

The United Service.	F. Godfrey.
The Osborne.	S. Glover.
The Globe.	Do.
The Gypsy.	Do.
The Holiday.	Do.
The True Friends.	Do.
The Scarborough.	Do.
A Singing Quadrille.	C. Dick.
The Pussey.	A. Leduc.
Pretty Polly.	Do
The Canary	R. Linter.
The Goldfinch	Do.
The Garden Party.	W. Smallwood
The Moselle.	Do.
The English Fleet.	J. Pridham.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington St.

CONCERTS, PENNY READINGS, &c.—POPULAR SONGS, Vocal Duets, Trios, and Quartets (part songs), selected from Messrs. ROBERT COCKS and CO.'s CATALOGUE. This list may be had gratis and post free on application at New Burlington Street.

A SINGING QUADRILLE. (Cotsford DICK. A most amusing combination of Song and Dance. Has been adopted for nightly performance, and with considerable success by Mr. and Mrs. German Reed in their Christmas entertainment. Post free for 24 stamps. Illustrated. London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS are to be had of every Musicseller and Bookseller in Great Britain, Ireland, the Colonies, and India, or will be sent direct post free at half the marked price (bound works and cheap vocal part music excepted) to any part of the world on receipt of remittance or satisfactory reference.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S CATA-LOGUES of MUSIC.
Part 1. PIANO, ORGAN, HARMONIUM.
Part 2. VOCAL.
Part 3 HARP, CONCERTINA.
Part 4 VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, ORCHESTRA, &c.
Part 5. FLUTE, CORNET, CLARIONET, &c.
Sent gratis and post free to any part of the World.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

MARRIOTT'S NAVAL QUADRILLE. A new and extremely effective set on popular melodies. Price 4s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

MARRIOTT'S MILITARY QUAD-RILLE. Just published. A remarkably attractive and vigorous set on popular martial airs. Price 4s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

Now Ready, at all Music and Book Sellers, or sent post free for thirteen stamps.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S THIRD ALBUM OF DANCE MUSIC.

CONTENTS:—

Valse	Pauline	C. Coote, jun.
Quadrille	Chilperic	Marriott.
Galop	After Dark	Montgomery.
Polka	Blush Rose	C. Godfrey.
Lancers	Princess Louise	C. Godfrey.
Schottische	Jenny Bell	H. C. Swatton.
Quadrille	England and Wales	Marriott.
Valse	Kathleen Mavourneen	Montgomery.
Galop	Wind Up	C. Godfrey.
Country Dance	Off She Goes	Old English.

Price One Shilling.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

CARE IS ALL FIDDLE-DE-DEE. A merry Christmas Song with Chorus (from the Extravaganza "The Miller and His Man"). Words by F. C. BURNAND; Music by ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Price 3s.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

KING CHRISTMAS. J. L. HATTON'S celebrated Song. The popularity of this capital baritone Song is ever on the increase. Price 3s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIECES.

Figaro. Fantasia on Mozart's Opera	4	0
Cynthia. Serenade	4	0
Souvenir de Bal	4	0
Air Danois	4	0

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

SYDNEY SMITH'S NAZARETH.—Transcription of Gounod's grand composition for the Piano. Solo, 4s.; Duet, 5s.
London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

POPULAR CLASSICS.—A series of sterling compositions for the Pianoforte Solo. Selected, edited, and fingered by WALTER MACFARREN. Sixty Numbers, price from 2s. to 5s. each. The series contains some of the most celebrated and beautiful works of Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Steibelt, Dussek, Hummel, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Chopin, &c. Detailed Lists forwarded gratis post free to any part of the world.
ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

NEW and POPULAR DANCE MUSIC.
STOLEN KISSES WALTZ (WALDEFELDT). Free, 2s.
TORPEDO GALOP (MEYER). Free, 1s. 6d.
OSMAN PASHA MARCH (MEYER). Free, 2s.
London: WOOD and CO., 3, Great Marlborough Street, W.

MUSICAL-BOX Depot, 22, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price, £4 to £120. Snuff-Boxes, 18s. to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and M'CULLOCH, as above.

BUTLER'S MUSICAL INSTRU-MENTS.—Violins, Concertinas, Harmoniums, Flutes, Clarionets, Flageolets, Guitars, Zithers, Banjoes, Accordions, Flutinas, Cornets, Saxhorns, Drums, Fifes, and Musical Instruments of every description. Largest assortment in the kingdom at BUTLER'S MANUFACTORY, 29, Haymarket, London.—Illustrated catalogue, 50 pages, post free.

NOTICE of REMOVAL and SALE. RUDALL, CARTE and CO., Musical Instrument Makers to Her Majesty, the Army, Italian Operas, &c., are now selling their Stock of Pianofortes, Violins, Flutes, Cornets, Band Instruments, Music, &c., at very reduced prices previous to the removal of their manufactory from 20, Charing Cross to 23, Berners Street, W.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE

PULVERMACHER'S "GALVANISM, NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF EXHAUSTED VITAL ENERGY."

In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Bands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post free for three stamps, on application to
J. L. PULVERMACHER'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 194, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

NOTICE.—BLANKETS FOR CHA-RITIES.—OETZMANN and CO. are now offering a large stock of stout heavy Blankets, all wool, suitable for charities, large institutions, &c.; also Quilts and Flannels; these goods having been bought for cash during the late depression, the prices will be found much below actual value. Reduced price list post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
OETZMANN & CO.
67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,
HAMPSTEAD ROAD,
NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZ-MANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PRE-MISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO. are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.

THE SANDRINGHAM EASY CHAIR, full size, upholstered very soft and comfortable, suitable for any room, price 25s.; lady's ditto, smaller size, 21s. Also the Sandringham Couch, upholstered very soft and comfortable, price 2 guineas. Every one about to furnish should see these marvels of excellence and economy. Packed free and despatched same day on receipt of order per post.
OETZMANN and CO.

DRAWING-ROOM SUITES.—OETZ-MANN and CO.—Elegant Drawing Room Suite, richly carved Italian walnut-wood, upholstered very soft and comfortable, in best rep, consisting of a Couch, two Easy Chairs, and six Chairs, price 15 guineas; ditto, very handsome design, upholstered in rich Pekinade, made and finished in superior style, 20 guineas; ditto, very elegant design, richly upholstered in finest satin, and finished in the best possible manner, 33 guineas; also a variety of other Drawing-Room Suites, in Black and Gold, Early English, and other designs.

ARTISTIC FURNISHING.—OETZ-MANN & CO. are introducing a variety of Elegant Persian and Indian designs in RUGS and MATS, to meet the requirements for artistic furnishing at moderate cost. Large Rugs (excellent copies of real Persian and Indian) from 10s. each. A visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN & CO.

TURKEY CARPETS.—CLEARANCE SALE.—OETZMANN and CO.—A quantity of Turkey, Indian, Persian, Jubbalpore, Massalapatam, Farahan, Khorassan, Serabend, Koula, Ghiordes, and Kelim Carpets and Rugs, clearing out or greatly reduced prices, ranging from 15s. 9d. to 80 guineas. A reduced Price List, with sizes and description, sent post free on application. Prices will be found much below those usually charged. A quantity of Indian Rugs, 15s. 9d. each; some very handsome ditto, at 35s. to 45s.
OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s. 6d. There is nothing sold that can be compared with these for quality and cheapness. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO.

MADRID STRIPED CURTAINS, all wool, 3 yards long by 48 inches wide, 15s. per pair; 3½ yards, 17s 6d.; 4 yards, 20s.; best Worsted Damask Curtains, in green, crimson, or any self colour, plaited top, bordered with best embroidered silk lace, 3 yards long by 51 inches wide, 25s. per pair; 3½ yards, 30s.; 4 yards, 35s.; best rep, ditto, 3 yards by 54 inches wide, 42s.; 3½ yards, 50s.; 4 yards, 57s. 6d. Forwarded same day on receipt of order. One trial will ensure recommendation. No common damask or rep used, sold, or advised. Descriptive lists post-free.
OETZMANN and CO.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and CLOTHING combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable with the least possible weight, and are of the very best quality. Price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO.'s XL ELECTRO SILVER PLATE, for which this Establishment has long been celebrated, is the best substitute for silver yet discovered, being the same material as our XL Nickel Silver Plate, coated with Sterling Silver by Messrs. Elkington's Patent Process. Has stood the test of many years' wear. Cleans the same as silver. Cannot be distinguished from real silver, and cannot be surpassed at higher prices, being the best quality electro silver plate that is manufactured, and the prices are the lowest possible at which the best quality can be supplied.

—	Either Fiddle Pattern or Old English.	Beaded or Thread Pattern.	King's or Shell, with Thread
Table Spoons or Forks, per doz.	30s. 0d.	40s. 0d.	42s. 0d.
Dessert Spoons or Forks, per doz.	22s. 0d.	27s. 0d.	30s. 0d.
Tea Spoons, per doz.	13s. 6d.	18s. 0d.	20s. 0d.
Egg Spoons, gilt bowl, each	1s. 6d.	2s. 0d.	2s. 3d
Salt Spoons, ditto, each	1s. 6d.	2s. 0d.	2s 3d
Mustard Spoons, ditto, each	1s. 6d	2s. 0d.	2s. 3d.
Sugar Tongs or Bows, each	2s. 6d.	3s 6d.	4s 0d
Sauce Ladles, each	3s. 0d	4s. 0d.	4s. 6d.
Gravy Spoons, each	6s. 0d.	8s. 0d.	9s 0d
Soup Ladles, each	9s. 0d.	11s. 0d.	12s. 0d

A single article in any of the above can be had at the same rate. Orders of 40s. and upwards for Electro Plate forwarded carriage paid. A Tea Spoon sent as sample, if desired, post free on receipt of 15 stamps.—OETZMANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77, and 79, Hampstead Road.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY DE-PARTMENT.—Superior Electro Plate Tea and Coffee Pots, Spoons, Forks, Cruets, &c. (quality guaranteed); best warranted Table Cutlery; handsome Coal Vases, from 3s. 11d. upwards; Dish Covers; Japanned Toilet Sets, full size, bath, pail, and can, various neat designs in colours, 8s. 11d. per set. Kitchen Ironmongery of every description. Mats, Matting, Brooms, Brushes, Pails, &c. Bronze Umbrella Stands, from 3s. 9d. Table Lamps, complete, good style, 3s. 11d.
OETZMANN and CO.

EXHIBITION PATTERN COAL VASE.—OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGNS for the season, much admired, handsomely japanned, and rich burnished gold ornamentation, with opal handles, strong loose lining, a great convenience and saving in wear. Price complete, 21s.—OETZMANN and CO.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS, USEFUL AND ARTISTIC.—Intending Purchaser should inspect OETZMANN and CO.'S VAST DISPLAY of elegant Vases, Lustres, Figures, Clocks, Bronzes, Pictures, Cut Glass Decanters, Wines, &c., Electro-Silver Plate, Table Cutlery, and a large variety of other useful and ornamental articles suitable for Presents. Descriptive Catalogue post free. Orders per post receive prompt and faithful attention.
OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.
OETZMANN & CO.
HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by EDWARD JOSEPH MANSFIELD at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—DECEMBER 22, 1877.

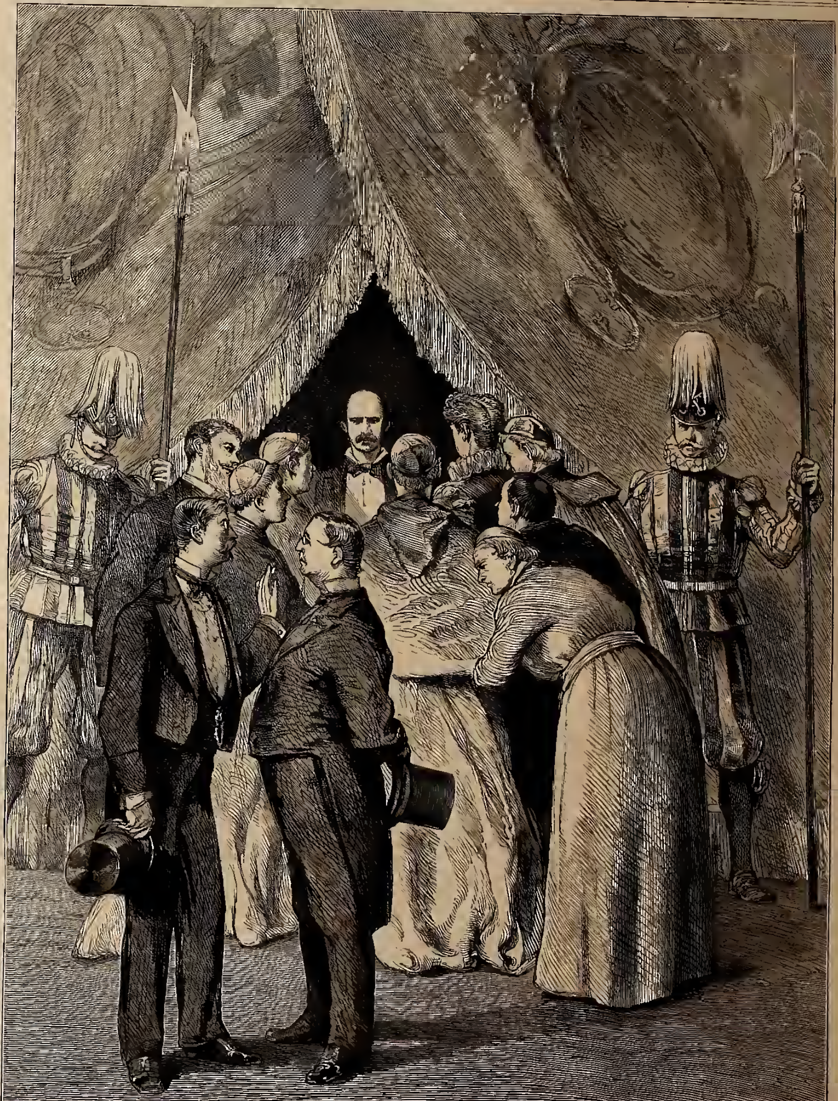
THE GRAPHIC

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

VOL. XVI.—No. 422
Regd at General Post Office as a Newspaper

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1877

PRICE SIXPENCE
Or by Post Sixpence Halfpenny



INQUIRING AFTER THE POPE'S HEALTH AT THE VATICAN—DR. CECCARELLI LEAVING THE SICK CHAMBER OF PIUS IX

Topics of the Week

THE ACTION OF ENGLAND.——All Europe awaits with interest the meeting of the British Parliament; and Englishmen themselves are far from looking forward to it with light hearts. Most of the theories which have been started to account for the early summons may be dismissed as wild rumours; but there can be little doubt that the Ministry will at least ask for some increase of our naval and military armaments. Ardent admirers of Russia will denounce the request as likely to encourage the hopes of the Turks; but it will be approved by the vast majority of the sober and intelligent classes of the community. So far as can be seen, there is no immediate prospect of peace. The Porte does not offer concessions which Russia will accept; and the longer the struggle lasts the more formidable are the Czar's demands sure to become. We may, then, confidently expect that the Russians will push on till they are in possession of Adrianople; and if they are further resisted, they will be only too glad to advance to Constantinople. Are we willing to see the latter city pass, even temporarily, into their hands? If we are, of course all warlike preparations are absurd, for that would practically mean that we were ready to let them act according to their inclination in South-Eastern Europe. But if we are not willing to let Russia have her own way, then it is simply a matter of course that we should add to our strength. All Englishmen who have coolly watched the course of events have given up the idea that we can effect anything in this struggle by moral influence. Our moral authority must be backed by material support. In the meantime, it would tend to prevent war if the English Government would openly say at what point it would deem intervention necessary. At present no one feels any certainty on this subject; and the result is, not only that there is a great deal of violent misunderstanding among ourselves, but that both Turks and Russians are misled. It is to be hoped that when Parliament meets, Lord Beaconsfield will not be allowed to conceal his policy under a cloud of grand but vague phrases.

THE PLEVNA CHARNEL-HOUSE.——It is to be hoped that the charge made against General Loris Melikoff of having forcibly ejected two thousand wounded Turks from Kars and driven them a hundred and forty miles through frost and snow to Erzeroum may prove to be either false or grossly exaggerated. As at first it was reported that only two hundred reached Erzeroum alive, whereas now, according to the official circular of the Porte, only one half of these miserable wretches perished, it seems probable that what actually occurred, though bad enough, and conducing neither to the honour nor to the humanity of the Russian General, was less horrible than the tale as originally told. Concerning Plevna, however, our sources of information are far more trustworthy, as they are supplied by eye-witnesses among our own countrymen. Few persons, however case-hardened, could have read the Daily News of Wednesday last without a thrill of horror. When Osman Pasha and the effective remnant of his troops tried to burst out of Plevna, he left his wounded, who were some thousands in number, behind, and these poor wretches were left for three days untended, without food, without water, so that in addition to their festering and undressed wounds they were perishing of hunger and thirst. At last, when the Russians had finished rejoicing over the capture of Plevna, it bethought them that some of the enemy's wounded might be somewhere hidden away in the town. Then it was that these unparalleled horrors were disclosed. Now, we are quite ready to admit that Osman Pasha seems to have treated his heroic soldiers when sick or wounded with a callousness which to us Westerns seems inexplicable; but that does not exonerate the Russians from the performance of the ordinary duties of humanity. Even if we excuse them from not having found these wounded wretches at once, they ought to have taken more active measures when they did find them. Surely a hundred thousand Russians with nothing to do—for their occupation had ceased with the surrender of the Turks—might have themselves looked after the wounded, instead of forcing a few miserable Bulgarians to do that which was obviously their own first duty on entering the town. It is to be feared that in this most horrible of modern wars the savagery is far from being altogether on the side of the Turks.

GERMANY AND RUSSIA.——The Emperor William could not have more plainly indicated the direction of German policy than by conferring the Iron Cross on the leaders of the Russian army. This action has not been much commented upon; but, as has been well pointed out, the Queen of England would have been freely enough blamed if she had sent the Victoria Cross to Osman Pasha and his officers. There is something repulsive in a Government going out of its way in this manner to associate itself with the enemies of a country with which it is at peace. All through, however, Germany has displayed the same spirit. It is notorious that Prince Bismarck did everything in his power to encourage Russia to enter upon the war; and if he is not greatly maligned, he is now doing everything he can to induce her to continue it. And he has brought such pressure to bear upon Austria that she apparently feels her hands tied; at any rate, the Hungarians loudly assert that they do not exercise on the policy of the Empire the influence they may fairly claim to exert. What is the motive of the German Chancellor for this remarkably "benevolent neutrality?" The question will probably not be fully answered in our time; but some light is certainly thrown on it by the fact that the Russians cannot now talk with a good grace of allying themselves with the French against Germany, and that if they did they would find themselves much less able to cope with their powerful rival than they were six months ago. Russia, in short, has been at once weakened and made more friendly to Germany. This may not altogether explain the policy of Prince Bismarck; but those who fancy that it counts for nothing must have very imperfectly studied the aims of that statesman and the means by which he attempts to achieve them.

PERMANENT EMPLOYMENT versus HIGH WAGES.——There are signs that the unparalleled industrial prosperity of this country, which has now continued with few breaks for thirty years past, is likely to suffer serious interruption. This is especially the case in the iron and coal trades. As iron and coal are two of the prime necessities of every manufacturing enterprise, these industries are likely to feel the first effects of any slackness. Besides this, there are special causes of depression. America and the Continent have learnt to make their own iron, while the construction of railways—which formerly consumed a vast amount of these commodities—has practically come to an end. And it is by no means unlikely that the strenuous efforts of workmen to obtain higher wages during periods of prosperity have helped to hasten on the present distress. Wherever employers have been coerced by strikes, or by the fear of strikes, into giving higher wages than the condition of the market warranted, they have diminished their own capability for bearing up under a period of adversity, and hence are compelled to discharge their workmen sooner than they would otherwise have done. The wages fund is not unlimited, and if it is unduly dipped into at one time, there will be less left for another. This fact deserves especial consideration at the present time, when the manufacturing pre-eminence of England, which once was admitted on all sides, is so closely pressed by Continental and Transatlantic rivals. We cannot succeed in the race if workmen force employers to give higher wages than they can really afford to pay. But while believing that, for the most part, the rate of wages will be more effectually settled by the inevitable fluctuations of the market than by any artificial interference, we think that trades' unions might do much to further the well-being of workmen by demanding permanency of employment as one of the conditions of service. The spectacle of the mining population of Glamorganshire, reduced within a few weeks to a condition of pauperism, is most discreditable to our boasted civilisation, and these poor fellows would be far better off if their average pay was lower, but if their position was more secure. Nothing tends more to the general shiftlessness of the working classes than their liability to instant dismissal, and this is a weapon of defence resorted to by employers far more frequently than formerly in order to relieve themselves in some degree from the burden of paying higher wages than they can genuinely afford.

THE TEACHING OF LATIN.——At the Conference of head masters, held the other day, the question was discussed whether the teaching of Latin verse should be compulsory. No decision, so far as we learn from the published reports, was arrived at, but, however the head masters may have settled it, there can be no doubt as to the opinion of the great majority of the educated public. The making of Latin verses may be tolerable discipline for boys who display a natural aptitude for it, but a more utter waste of time in the case of those who dislike it could hardly be imagined. It not only gives them no real insight into Latin poetry, but so disgusts them with the whole subject that the chances are that they never open a Latin book after leaving school. The entire problem, how Latin may be most efficiently taught, is one that requires to be thoroughly reconsidered, for at present the results obtained in our public schools are very disproportionate to the amount of time and energy expended in securing them. Dr. Schliemann has just been telling us—and he is emphatically supported by Professor Blackie—that the best way to learn Greek is to begin with the language now spoken in Greece. Whether this is true or not, there is no reason to doubt that in learning both Latin and Greek most boys would make much more rapid progress if teachers made larger use of the conversational method. In German schools masters and pupils habitually talk Latin to each other, and although their style may not be of the purest, the custom soon gives clever lads a mastery of the language which is attained by comparatively few Englishmen. So many things have now to be learned, that teachers are morally bound to inquire whether there are no means of abridging the labour of school without injury to its quality.

MANCHESTER AND THIRLMERE.——If the health of Manchester is really suffering for want of a sufficient supply of water, and such a supply can be furnished more cheaply and conveniently from Thirlmere than from anywhere else, then lovers of the picturesque must consent, for the sake of a great public benefit, to permit the natural beauties of one of their favourite recreation-grounds to be diminished, or altogether spoilt. We are unable, however, to believe that the conversion of a lake into a reservoir, if skilfully managed, must necessarily deprive it of all its original attractiveness, and at the worst it seems to be a less reprehensible act than the pouring of mining refuse into a lake. By this means, at Ullswater and in several Welsh localities, fish have been poisoned, and water rendered unfit for drinking. But if the Thirlmere scheme be designed principally for the purpose of extending the industries of Manchester, we confess that we shall regard it far more unfavourably. The enormous development of manufacturing industry in this country during the last century has immensely increased the wealth of the nation; but it has also blotted out the beauty of many parts of the country—in parts of Warwickshire and Staffordshire, for example, in South Wales, and especially in South Lancashire. When we add to this the still more important fact that the manufacturing districts are the districts where crime most abounds, and that the manufacturing population is below the average in point of health, and would speedily be extinguished but for continuous rural immigration, ought the nation collectively to lend its aid to the further development of manufacturing enterprise? It is far more important that the mass of the population should be strong and healthy—and this they cannot be while factory life is what it now is—than that a few more men should have the chance of accumulating large fortunes.

SHAKESPEARE IN GERMANY.——A curious mistake was made this week by a correspondent of The Times writing from Berlin on certain representations of Hamlet which have just taken place in that city. "It is hardly too much to say," he asserted, "that before Lessing, Schiller, and Goethe wrote, Shakespeare was the most popular dramatist and Hamlet the most favourite tragedy on the German stage." The gentleman who wrote this must have tolerably large confidence in the ignorance of his readers. It is quite true that before Lessing's time the name of Shakespeare was known in Germany; but much more than this cannot be said. And he was known not as the greatest poet of modern times, but as a wild and eccentric genius who had so rudely set law at defiance that his work was of little or no value. Lessing first dissipated this notion, and proclaimed Shakespeare to be not only a greater dramatist than Corneille, but one who was in closer accord with the spirit of ancient tragedy. So well known is this, that historians of German literature have often tried to determine how Lessing's attention happened to be attracted to Shakespeare. We believe his curiosity was aroused by the study of contemporary English writers, in whom he could not but find many allusions to the poet, who was even at that time considered one of the most splendid we had produced. When he had pointed the way it was easy for others to follow, and the effect of the reading of Shakespeare was immense and almost instantaneous. To this Goethe owed the best stimulus of his early years; and Goethe only represented the general tendency of the young poets of his day. Ever since that time Shakespeare has done more than any other foreign influence to foster the intellectual life of the nation.

REGISTRATION FEES.——An ingenious gentleman is now in custody charged with defrauding a number of ladies. He professed to be the manager of a "Fine Art Company," and offered the aforesaid ladies employment as flower-painters, provided they paid a guinea registration fee and deposited specimens of their work. These specimens were invariably pronounced to be "unsatisfactory;" and as the applicants could get back neither guineas nor pictures, the matter was placed in the hands of the police. All thieving is mean, but this species of thieving is one of the meanest and cruellest possible, since it is practised on needy persons who part with money which they can ill afford, in the belief that it will enable them to earn an honest livelihood. We hope, therefore, that this man, if proved guilty, will receive exemplary punishment, and we think that a dozen lashes from the "cat" would be quite as appropriate a penalty for this class of offenders as for robbers who inflict bodily harm. But as clever rogues can manage to perpetrate these sort of frauds, and yet keep on the safe side of the law, it would be well for persons in quest of employment to use more circumspection when answering offers of the character described above. The bare fact of the heavy registration fee demanded in this case was sufficient to excite suspicion. Respectable establishments in want of ladies to paint flowers could easily obtain them either by advertisement or by private inquiry, and would be more anxious to secure really competent workwomen than to obtain preliminary guinea fees. It is painful to reflect that there are so many fairly well-educated people wanting employment, and also that so many of these same people are ready to fall into the trap of any plausible scoundrel.

NOTICE.——With this Number is presented an EXTRA COLOURED SUPPLEMENT, forming a CALENDAR for 1878.—The Half Sheet this week, though delivered in the middle of the paper, must be placed for binding between pages 612 and 621.

AMUSEMENTS

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—EVERY EVENING, PUSS IN BOOTS. Mdlle. Cavolarzl and Ballet of 300. Prices and Day Performances as usual. Booking by Mr. E. Hall. No Fees.

GLOBE THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING, at 7.0, CRYPTO. 8.0, ARTFUL CARDS, TRYING A MAGISTRATE, and BIRTHPLACE OF PODGERS. Mr. J. L. Toole, Messrs. Macklin, H. Westland, C. Collette, Darley; Mesdames Clifton, Hewitt, and Johnstone.

BRITANNIA THEATRE, HOXTON.—Sole Lessee, Mrs. S. LANE.—EVERY EVENING, and until further notice, at 6.45, the Grand Christmas Pantomime, entitled ROMANOL-ROBIS, OR THE TAIL OF A CAT. Mrs. S. Lane, Miss Pollie Randall, Mr. Fred Foster, &c., Grand Transformation Scene. Harlequinade by the Lupino Troupe. Concluding with MAN'S TALISMAN.

NEW GRECIAN THEATRE, City Road.—Sole Proprietor, Mr. George Conquest.—EVERY EVENING, at 7, the Grand New Pantomime, by Messrs. George Conquest and Spry, entitled, HARLEQUIN ROLEY POLEY, OR, EARTH, AIR, FIRE, WATER, AND THE CHARMED UMBRELLA. Novel Ballet of Insects. Daring Phantom Fight by Messrs. George Conquest and Son 2,000 Leagues under the Sea, and Grand Transformation Scene, entitled "The Pearly Palace in the Starry House of Diana."

TO-MORROW AND NEW YEAR'S EVE
(Monday), Dec. 31,
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS will give
TWO EXTRA GRAND PERFORMANCES
in the
ST. JAMES'S GREAT HALL,
When the New and Immensely Successful HOLIDAY PROGRAMME will be given in the AFTERNOON at THREE,
in the
EVENING at EIGHT.
FIVE THOUSAND SEATS.
Doors Open at 2.0 for the Day Performance, and at 7.0 for the Evening Performance.
Great Area and Gallery, 1s.; Balcony, 2s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Fauteuils, 5s. No fees. No charge for programmes.

ON TUESDAY, January 1, NEW YEAR'S DAY,
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS' will RESUME their PERFORMANCES in their OWN ELEGANT HALL, which has been
SPLENDIDLY RE-DECORATED during the interval in which the Company have been performing in the Grand Hall.
The STAGE FITTED
with
NEW and BEAUTIFUL SCENERY,
Painted by that eminent Artist, Richard Oanglass, Esq.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, Piccadilly.
NEWLY and BEAUTIFULLY DECORATED.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS'
New and Immensely Successful
HOLIDAY ENTERTAINMENT.
EVERY DAY at THREE O'CLOCK.
EVERY NIGHT at EIGHT.
FORTY ARTISTS OF KNOWN EMINENCE.
Fauteuils, 5s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; Area, raised and cushioned seats, 2s. Gallery, 1s. Doors open at 2.30 on and after Tuesday, and at 7.0. No fees. No charge for programme. Ladies can retain their bonnets in all parts of the Hall.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, Piccadilly.
NEWLY and BEAUTIFULLY DECORATED.
THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS'
HOLIDAY ENTERTAINMENT will be given
EVERY AFTERNOON, at THREE,
EVERY NIGHT, at EIGHT,
UNTIL SATURDAY, Jan. 12, inclusive; after which date
Performances will be given in the usual order.
Places can be booked for any day or evening throughout the Holidays, at Austin's Ticket Office, St. James's Hall.

EVANS'S, COVENT GARDEN. — NOTICE. — These celebrated SUPPER ROOMS are now open for the reception of Ladies. EVANS'S CHOIR OF BOYS, specially trained by and under the direction of Mr. F. Jonghmans, and the best comic talent. SUPPERS after the THEATRES. Proprietor, J. B. AMOR.

BRIGHTON. — PULLMAN DRAWING-ROOM CAR TRAINS, leaving Victoria for Brighton every Weekday at 10.0 a.m. and 4.30 p.m., and from Brighton at 9.45 a.m. and 5.45 p.m., and on Sundays from Victoria 10.45 a.m. and from Brighton 8.30 p.m.
EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First Class Train from Victoria, 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY, Fast Trains from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m.; and London Bridge, 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon.
Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea, including admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion (Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds) available to return by any Train the same day, except the 5.45 p.m. Pullman Car Train

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Direct Service from Victoria to Ventnor, for Bonchurch and the Undercliffe; also to Sandown, Shanklin, Newport, and Cowes, viâ Ryde. Through Fares, including all charges.
The Trains by this route now run direct to and from Portsmouth Harbour, alongside the Isle of Wight steamers.
J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

BRIGHTON THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA-HOUSE. — Proprietress and Manager, Mrs. H. NYE CHART.—On MONDAY, Dec. 31, and during the week, a Grand Comic Christmas Pantomime, by F. W. Green, entitled JACK AND THE BEANSTALK. Special Engagements, Miss Mabel Hayes, Miss Kate Lawler, The Sisters Belton, Mr. William Elton, and the celebrated Kellino Troupe.

CITY STEAMERS for CALCUTTA DIRECT.—Sailing from Liverpool every alternate Saturday. Average passage 32 days. Saloon £50. Highest Class and Speed. Excellent accommodation.—ALLAN BROTHERS and CO., James Street, Liverpool.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The SIXTEENTH WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES by the MEMBERS is NOW OPEN, at their Gallery, 5, Pall Mall East. Ten till five. Admission 1s.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

INSTITUTE of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.—The TWELFTH WINTER EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN from 10 till 6. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 6d.
Gallery, 53, Pall Mall.
H. F. PHILLIPS, Sec.

DORE'S GREAT WORKS, "THE BRAZEN SERPENT," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," and "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," each 33 feet by 22 feet; with "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Christian Martyrs," "Battle of Ascalon," &c., at the DORE GALLERY, 35, New Bond Street. Daily 10 to 6. 1s.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The following are the Terms of Subscription for One Year, paid in advance, including Postage and Christmas Number, for which the publisher is prepared to supply THE GRAPHIC.

United Kingdom, £1 10 0 | United States . . £1 16 0

Africa, West Coast
Austria
Belgium
Brazil
Canada
Cape of Good Hope
Constantinople
Denmark
Egypt
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Holland
Italy
Jamaica
Malta
Mexico
Monte Video
Natal
Norway
Portugal
Russia
St. Thomas
Suez
Sweden
Switzerland
West Indies

£1 12 0 Thin Edition; or £1 16 0 Thick Edition.

The Postage of a Single Copy of THE GRAPHIC (either the Thick or Thin Edition) to any part of the United Kingdom is ½d.

To any other country mentioned in the above list the charge is 1d. thin and 2d. thick; but all Newspapers which are sent abroad must be posted within eight days after the date of publication.

Australia, Ceylon, China } Via Brindisi, 36s. thin edition. 45s. thick edition. { India, Japan, New Zealand

Postage of Single Copies, 2d. and 4d.

The Subscription can be paid by means of a cheque or post-office order made payable to E. J. MANSFIELD 190, Strand, London.

All the Back Numbers of THE GRAPHIC can be obtained on application to the publisher

Our Illustrations

AT THE VATICAN—INQUIRING AFTER THE POPE'S HEALTH

OUR illustration represents a frequent scene at the door of the Pope's apartments in the Vatican, for as no one is admitted to Pius IX.'s sick chamber when His Holiness consults his medical adviser, Dr. Ceccarelli, the Pope's ordinary doctor, is always beset on leaving the room by an anxious group of inquirers. Thus in our sketch, Dr. Alessandro Ceccarelli, is being met after his daily visit by Cardinals Giacchino, Pecci, the Camerlengo, or official appointed to take charge of the Vatican at the death of the Pope, Giovanni, and Simeoni, the Papal Secretary of State, together with Baron Pereira, the Secretary of the Austrian Legation to the Papal See; Father Beckx, the General of the Jesuits; and Senor de Carderas, the Spanish Ambassador to the Holy See; the seventh figure being that of a private gentleman. "Il Diritto and the well-informed Osservatore Romano," writes our artist, "tell us that much of the information about the state of the Pope's health which passes over the telegraph wires of Europe and America is pure invention. Truly enough La voce della verita non e sempre verita."

J. A. ROEBUCK, ESQ., M.P.

AT first sight it may appear somewhat remarkable that Mr. Roebuck, who has sat in the House of Commons for the greater part of the last forty-five years, and who certainly deserves to be classed among its more eminent members, has never held any Government post. The simple explanation of this fact is that, although styling himself a Liberal, Mr. Roebuck has always been characterised by a remarkable independence of mind, and has probably never felt able to accept en bloc—as an official subordinate is bound to accept—the policy of any Cabinet whatever, whether Liberal or Conservative. He has, moreover, a habit which is not always palateable to cautious statesmen, namely, that of boldly stating his opinions on any given topic without minding who is offended by his plain speaking. Some years ago he was usually known by the nickname of "Tear-'em, the British watch-dog;" and we may well believe that he was proud of the title. But, unlike some Liberals, who though ready to attack persons of higher rank and position than themselves, take mighty good care to flatter the prejudices of the multitude, Mr. Roebuck is no more afraid of the working classes than he is of the House of Lords. His vigorous denunciation of the Trades' Union outrages cost him his seat for Sheffield in 1868; but after six years of ostracism the electors of the knife-grinding metropolis practically admitted that he was right and that they were wrong by sending him to Parliament at the head of the poll in 1874, and he has since fully maintained all his ancient popularity. Mr. Roebuck is a man of such an original and such a valuable stamp that we cannot help feeling a pang of regret in remembering that he was born so long ago as December 28, 1802. He is the son of the late E. Roebuck, Esq., of Madras, is a barrister by profession, and was made a Q.C. and Bencher of the Inner Temple in 1843. He sat first for Bath, and afterwards for Sheffield with few breaks from 1832 up to the present time. He has written several noteworthy books, and numerous essays in the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews. He was in 1834 Agent in England for the House of Assembly of Lower Canada, and in the same year he married Henrietta, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Falconer, of Bath.—Our portrait is from a photograph.

THE WAR IN THE EAST

THE CONSCRIPTION AT RASGRAD

THIS sketch was taken at the Konak or Town Hall of Rasgrad, and represents the official registration of the names of those liable to enrolment in the ranks. "The scene was characteristic," writes our artist. "At the bottom of the room three persons were seated on a divan, one of whom was a military delegate, while two clerks squatted on the floor with huge registers before them, checking the names of the peasants who stood at the other end of the room near the entrance door. The Prefect on the left was seated in his armchair, and while transacting other business kept a sharp eye upon the registering clerks."

DELEGATES OF THE STAFFORD HOUSE COMMITTEE DISTRIBUTING SOUP

THIS sketch represents a train of 450 Turkish soldiers who had been wounded at Plevna being received at the Stafford House soup-kitchen, established at Constantinople Railway Station. The poor fellows had had a long journey in ox-waggons from Plevna to Tatar Bazardjik, and thence two days' train brought them to Constantinople. Immediately on arrival large bowls of bouillon, with the meat and rice, were placed inside the waggons, round which the wounded sat and eagerly devoured the contents. Each man was supplied with half a loaf of bread, a packet of cigarettes, and a cup of coffee. Those too seriously wounded to sit up were attended to by the Stafford House staff present. The Government Commissariat arrangements utterly break down under great pressure, hence the five soup kitchens established by the Stafford House Commissioner along the lines of railway have done excellent service. Over 30,000 rations as above have been distributed, and hundreds of brave men have been spared having their sufferings aggravated by hunger and exhaustion, while mattresses provided by the Stafford House staff higher up the line enable the wounded to lie down during the journey at the bottom of the large luggage waggons in which they are conveyed. Mr. Barrington Kennett superintended personally these arrangements. Dr. Barker was the surgeon especially appointed to accompany the train, and Col. Coope, of the Gendarmerie, came to assist on this occasion as a volunteer.

THE MEETING OF OSMAN PASHA AND THE GRAND DUKE NICHOLAS

On the tenth of this month, after a weary siege of five months, and a last desperate effort on the part of the besieged to break through General Todleben's inexorable circle of steel, a white flag was seen in the Turkish ranks, and a loud shout went up from a thousand Russian throats. Plevna was on the point of surrender. A Turkish officer, Tewfik Bey, chief of Osman Pasha's staff, then rode up to General Skobeleff and his staff with a flag of truce, and informed the Russians that Osman Pasha was wounded and ready to treat for surrender. After a few words with General Strukoff, of the Czar's staff, Tewfik Bey rode back to his chief. A conference took place between General Ganetsky and Osman Ghazi, and in an hour the latter had surrendered with his whole army to the Russians. The greatest sympathy and regard was shown on all sides to Osman Pasha, whose bravery and skill all admired, and the wounded General was placed in a carriage and driven into Plevna. Hearing, however, that the Grand Duke Nicholas was coming in his direction, Osman Pasha turned back to meet him, and the subsequent interview is thus graphically described by the correspondent of the Daily News:—

"The Grand Duke rode up to the carriage, and for some seconds the two chiefs gazed into each other's faces without the utterance of a word. Then the Grand Duke stretched out his hand, and shook the hand of Osman Pasha heartily and said:—

"'I compliment you on your defence of Plevna. It is one of the most splendid military feats in history.' Osman Pasha smiled sadly, rose painfully to his feet in spite of his wound, said something which I could not hear, and then re-seated himself. The Russian officers all cried, 'Bravo!' 'Bravo!' repeatedly, and all saluted respectfully. There was not one among them who did not gaze on the Hero of Plevna with the greatest admiration and sympathy. Prince Charles, who had arrived, rode up, and repeated unwittingly almost every word of the Grand Duke, and likewise shook hands. Osman Pasha again rose and bowed, this time in grim silence.

"He wore a loose blue cloak, with no apparent mark on it to designate his rank, and a red fez. He is a large, strongly-built man, the lower part of whose face is covered with a short black beard, without a streak of grey. He has a large Roman nose, and black eyes. The face is a strong face, with energy and determination stamped on every feature—yet a tired, wan face also, with lines on it that hardly were graven so deep I fancy five months ago; and with a sad, enduring, thoughtful look out of the black eyes.

"'It is the face of a great military chieftain,' said young Skobeleff. "I am glad to have seen him. Osman Ghazi he is, and Osman the Victorious he will remain, in spite of his surrender."

WITH THE RUSSIANS IN THE BALKANS—A DIFFICULT CORNER

OUR sketch represents a detachment of General Rauch's army dragging cannons up the steep mountain path of the Etropol Pass. A difficult corner has been reached, and the soldiers have fastened a rope to the muzzle of one of the guns to keep it from falling over the precepice.

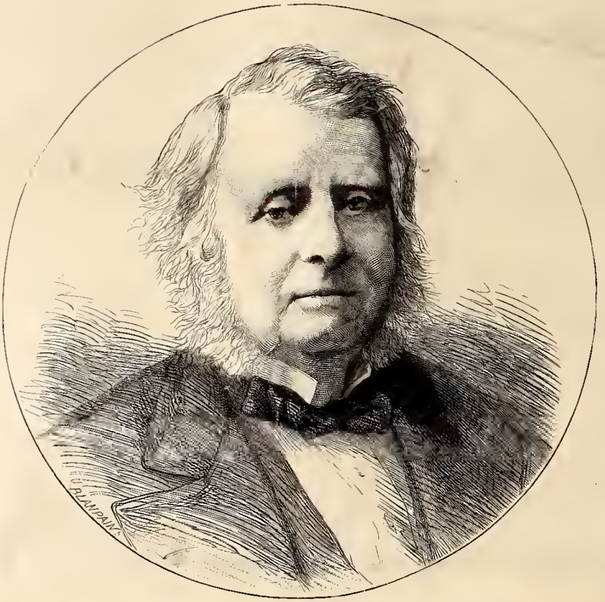
THE "MARLBOROUGH" TRAINING SCHOOL

H.M.S. Marlborough (131 guns), nearly the last of the monster three deckers afloat, was launched (after a little mishap on the slipways) twenty-two years ago last August by Her Majesty the Queen amidst the cheers of thousands of excursionists from all parts of the kingdom. She has seen very little service, having been commissioned but twice, the last time in the Mediterranean being in 1863; she then returned home, almost an obsolete vessel, and she now lies within a few hundred yards from her cradle, moored alongside the wharf of the large new basin in the Portsmouth Dockyard Extension Works, and connected with the shore by chain cables, as well as by fresh water pipes and gas mains. On Tuesday next, the first day of the new year, the Marlborough will be opened as a school for naval engineer students under the new system of training. The accommodation will be at the commencement for about forty, which number is in a few months later to be increased to 100. The upper deck will be used as a gymnasium, and the lower ones for instruction and sleeping apartments, while the hold below, now divested of engines, &c., leaving nothing but the bare sides, uprights and partitions, will be converted into a bowling alley. In fact, nothing remains of the good old ship but the mere wooden shell.

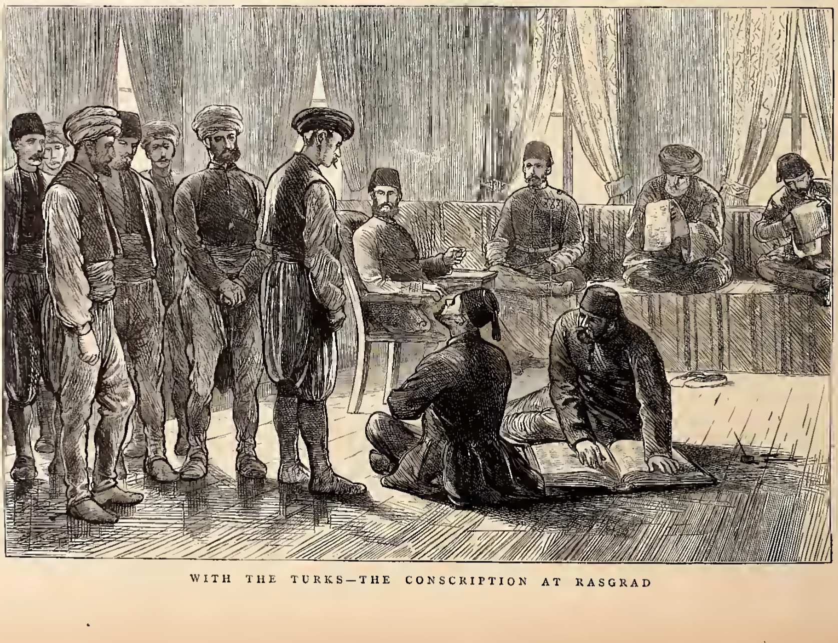
The officers for instruction are Chief Engineer C. J. Martin, and Messrs. H. C. Goldsmith and M. R. Mills, Engineers, all borne on the books of H.M.S. Asia.

FEEDING THE GUILDHALL PIGEONS

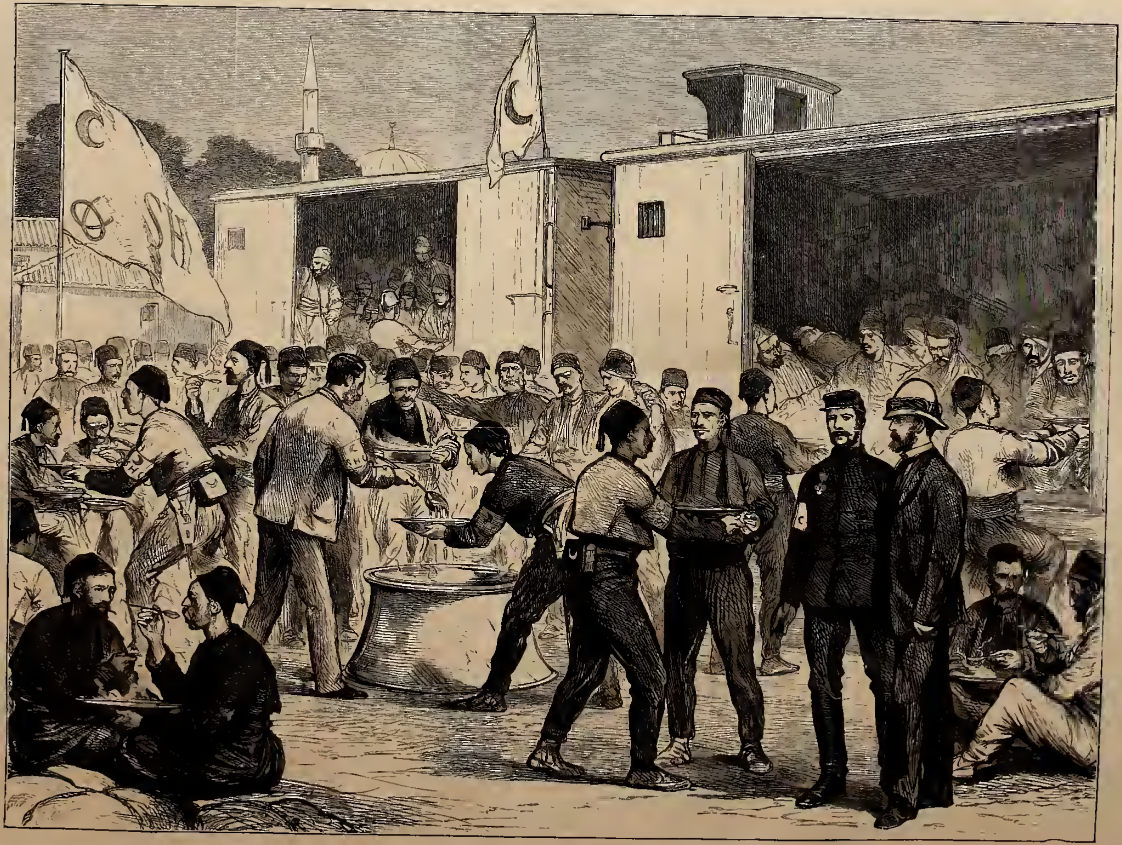
SUCH a sight as this, met with in the very centre of the bustle and turmoil of City life, has a soothing and grateful effect upon the chance wayfarer whose mind is not altogether occupied with business thoughts. The pigeons, of which there are some hundreds, are the property of the Corporation, and, according to tradition, are the descendants of a few wild birds which many years ago came suddenly from no one knows where, and establishing themselves as a colony upon the roof of the Guildhall, were forthwith taken under Civic protection. They are fed regularly every morning at ten o'clock by the venerable chief officer of the Guildhall Police Court, Mr. John Roe, who has occupied that post for more than half a century, and who, previous to the establishment of the City Police Force, was one of the City Marshal's men, and acted as a detective officer at the Bank of England. The old gentleman is very proud of his



J. A. ROEBUCK, ESQ., M.P. FOR SHEFFIELD



WITH THE TURKS—THE CONSCRIPTION AT RASGRAD



WITH THE TURKS—DELEGATES OF THE STAFFORD HOUSE COMMITTEE DISTRIBUTING SOUP TO WOUNDED SOLDIERS AT CONSTANTINOPLE RAILWAY STATION feathered favourites, who flock round him as soon as he appears with their daily ration of peas. Kind treatment and continued association with featherless bipeds has long ago eradicated all signs of timidity, and they strut about the Guildhall Yard at all times of the day even when it is most crowded, with an air which betokens a deep sense of their importance and personal beauty, as well as a profound conviction of their perfect security from molestation. There is one thing, however, which is very remarkable considering that they are London-bred birds, and that is the aversion which they display to fogs. In "thick" weather they invariably sulk, and not all the blandishments of their kind-hearted custodian can induce them to descend—even to breakfast.

"CELIA'S ARBOUR"

A new Story, by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," is continued on page 613.

NORTH ITALIAN FOLK

See page 619.

"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"

The First Part of "The History of a Crime," Victor Hugo's new novel, is concluded in this number.

GOETHE'S "FAUST"

See page 620.

BRIDGE OVER THE NILE AT MANSURAH

This bridge, which is to be constructed from the designs of Signor Alfredo Cottran, a well-known engineer of Naples and managing director of a large engineering establishment at Castellamare, which has erected more than one thousand metallic bridges in Italy, Spain, and Turkey. It is to be built partly of stone and partly of iron, and the construction will be a combination of the suspension principle with straight girders, a method frequently adopted in America for large spaces. The two main piers are constructed of wrought iron, cast iron, and masonry, and the superstructure will be composed of two stages superimposed, the lower being intended for a railway and the upper for an ordinary roadway, with pathways for foot passengers on either side.

HOME

Political Affairs.—Mr. Gladstone has made a public apology to Midhat Pasha for having, in his recent lecture in reply to Mr. Forbes, made a charge against him on authority which he thinks it his duty to treat as anonymous, as the authorship cannot be clearly traced; but he reminds him that he still remains his accuser upon the far more flagrant matters which form the subject of "Lessons in Massacre," and remarks that he shall be glad to be placed in a position to withdraw or qualify any of them.—The Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, and those of Edinburgh and Bristol, have resolved to memorialise the Government to continue to maintain a strict neutrality with regard to Turkey and Russia.—The Executive of the Workmen's Peace Association have resolved, in the event of the Government departing from its position of neutrality, to "use its utmost influence to prevent any armed interference until the country has been directly appealed to." A meeting of representative working men is to be held to-night (Saturday), at Cannon Street Hotel.—The Birmingham Post says that the reports of the various Presidents of the National Liberal Federation reveal the existence of a strong feeling of alarm in many large towns as to the possibility of Lord Beaconsfield adopting a policy of intervention; and that a series of meetings will probably be held throughout the country. The same journal says that the Members for Birmingham are likely to address their constituents at an earlier date than usual, on account of the serious state of public affairs and the early summoning of Parliament.—Great confusion is alleged to exist in the ranks of the Home Rulers, and it is rumoured that Mr. Butt intends to resign his membership of the League.—Mr. Baxter, M.P., speaking at Forfar, last week, on the Eastern Question, said "That jealousy of Russia was the sole cause of our present isolated and unenviable position. He was sure that Russia would not seek the annexation of territory in Europe; but one thing the Powers would have to face was the free navigation of the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus." Mr. Phipps, M.P., on the same day, expressed a completely opposite opinion, attributing the war to Russian desire for territory to which she had no title, and maintaining that at such a time as the present it was the duty of the people to strengthen the hands of the Government by a spirit of confidence in them.—On Saturday Sir M. H. Beach was waited on by a deputation representing forty-two of the trades of Dublin, who protested against the Irish Sunday Closing Bill, contending that it was mainly supported by the United Kingdom Alliance, and was not desired by the people of Ireland. He promised that their views and statements should be carefully examined by the Government. —The Fenian, Michael Davitt, who was last week released from Dartmoor Prison on a ticket of leave, attended a meeting of the Irish Political Visiting Committee on Friday, and related some of his prison experience. Mr. O'Donnell and several Nationalists were present.

The Holidays.——It is several years since Londoners have been favoured with such fine weather at this season of the year. Business was very generally suspended from Saturday until Thursday, and every advantage was taken of the multifarious means of enjoyment provided at the theatres and other places of amusement. Many Londoners left town to spend the holidays, and, on the other hand, there was a large influx of country visitors. The 230 German workmen at the Law Courts celebrated the festival in their national manner with a gigantic Christmas tree, which was set up in the centre of the crypt, and they had also religious services and a concert. The weather in most parts of England was clear and frosty, but in some places, especially in the Midland district, there were heavy falls of snow; while around the coasts the wind was very rough, several wrecks being reported.

Miscellaneous.——The Globe announces that Mr. Dixon has given bail in the Admiralty Court to the owners of the steamer which picked up the Cleopatra in the Bay of Biscay, and that the Needle is to be at once fetched from Ferrol by a steam-tug, under the command of Captain Carter, with a picked English crew.—Sad accounts are given of the condition of the labour market especially in the coal and iron districts. More than 8,000 miners are locked out in Northumberland, and in South Wales most of the collieries are working half-time, and that only for the sake of the miners, the present price of coal involving an actual loss of 6*d.* to 9*d.* per ton. Hundreds of people are in a state of semi-starvation, and the spread of pauperism is so great that the Cardiff guardians are erecting temporary iron sheds to supplement the workhouse accommodation.—A dreadful accident happened last week in Edinburgh. A fire broke out in the upper part of an hotel, and was extinguished without much difficulty, but subsequently the burnt part collapsed, and the people inhabiting the rooms beneath were buried in the ruins. Eight persons were killed, and four others injured; one poor fellow lay in the débris for twelve hours, and died soon after he was extricated.

SPORTING

The Turf.——Why should not a truce be agreed on, for one week at least in the year, and horses and jockeys have at least a seven days' rest? A few years ago the Christmas week was held sacred from hurdle-racing and steeple-chasing, but now "enterprising lessees" on the home circuit, bearing in mind that tens of thousands of Londoners really do not know what to do with themselves on Boxing Day, offer attractions in more than one quarter. We cannot say we regret that the sport both at Streatham and Kingsbury has been poor; nor should we be sorry to find that another year the old custom of having no racing in the Christmas week were reverted to.—Of course there has been nothing doing on future events in the speculation market, the Two Thousand and Derby remaining a dead letter. If, however, there were any betting, Beauclere, the Middle Park winner, would of course be first favourite for both. Those who indulge in making "fancy" handicaps for the two-year-olds, i.e., the three-year-olds about to be, put Beauclere at the top of the tree, with Jannette second; and some do not hesitate to make the filly the equal of the colt.—A sporting contemporary, anent the remarkable fact that on two occasions during the past racing season three horses ran a dead heat, has taken the trouble to teach us the number of times similar dead heats have taken place since the beginning of 1850. This number appears to be twenty-one, but it includes the dead heats for "places," of which there were seven, thus leaving fourteen for first place. In two instances—in 1851 and 1855—four horses ran dead heats for first place.

Coursing.——For once in a way we have to record the comparative failure of a coursing gathering, namely, that of the Three Counties Union Club. The ground coursed over was near Chester, but "fur" was so scarce that it was impossible to run out any of the stakes, which consequently had to be divided. —The Southminster Open Meeting was as usual most successful. The Dog Puppy Stakes fell to Mr. Ede's Pomfret, while that for the Young Ladies was won by Mr. Salter's Selection. The County Cup was divided between the Duke of Hamilton's Hiemy-Nannie and Mr. Billing's Merry Heart II.; the last named also winning the D'Arcy Cup outright.—If we can trust to the quotations given in the papers Mr. Briggs's nomination still stands at the head of the list, those of Messrs. Hornby and Coleman being next.

Football.——Three more important games have been played in the second round of the Association Challenge Cup. That between the Clapham Rovers and the Swifts at the Oval on Saturday last resulted in an easy victory to the former by four goals to none, while the Old Harrovians on the same day at Flodden Road, Camberwell, made short work of the First Surrey Rifles. At Anerley the Hawks had to succumb to the Remnants.—The Wanderers have played an Association game with the Herefordshire Rangers, to the discomfiture of the latter. The game was a remarkable one, as during the first half of it the Wanderers were completely pinned by their adversaries, and had their goal twice captured, but the tables were completely turned in the second half, the Wanderers securing four goals in quick succession.—A Rugby Union game has been played for the first time between the Clapham Rovers and Blackheath, when the latter, which is fast becoming one of our most powerful clubs, just managed to win.

Angling.—Mr. Mundella, M.P. for Sheffield, has promised to bring a Bill into Parliament for the protection of "coarse" fish, such as roach, perch, jack, &c., during the spawning season. This is urgently required in the interests of anglers, who would get much better sport during the rest of the season, if during the months, say, of April, May, and June, it were made illegal to capture these fish. All "good" anglers should be up and doing, with a view to support Mr. Mundella, who has taken up the matter at the request of a very large body of his constituents. There are in his borough over two hundred angling clubs, comprising more than 8,000 members, so numerous are the disciples of "old Izaak" in a single town.

Swimming.—No less than twelve members of the Serpentine Club plunged into the water at an early hour on the morning of Christmas Day, to compete in the Annual Christmas Handicap. Who shall say our youth and manhood is growing up effeminate? We doubt whether a dozen men in the whole Continent of Europe, unless they happened to be Anglo-Saxons, could be found to go and do likewise!

New Novels

"Cherry Ripe!" a Romance, by the author of "Comin' Thro' the Rye," &c. (3 vols.: Bentley).—Though there is, no doubt, much in this novel that reminds us of Miss Broughton—a result due probably to more or less conscious imitation—we can hardly suppose that, even if its authorship still remained unknown, it would, like its predecessor, "Comin' Thro' the Rye," have been generally attributed to that lady. We are no great admirers of Miss Broughton, as our readers scarcely need to be told, but we must allow that her novels rarely fail to exhibit a certain amount of verve and humour, though neither quality is of a high order. But verve and humour will both be looked for in vain in the story before us; such attempt at "fun" as there is being of a forced and feeble kind, consisting chiefly, as far as we can make out, in emphasising the heroine's speeches in her earlier and happier days by the lavish use of italics. As for the "situation" which serves as basis for the story, perhaps the less said the better. We cannot undertake to give any idea of it here, for the truth is it would be too puzzling a task to explain it in language which we should consider sufficiently seemly. It might not, perhaps, surprise us in a French novel of the looser sort; it is with pained astonishment that we come upon it in a work emanating from an English lady. Such a theme could only be excusable, if at all, on the score of the powerful and pathetic treatment for which it offered opportunities; but for such treatment the author is altogether without the needful means. When she essays passion or tenderness she always seems to us to tend to be hysterical or maudlin. Nor is the situation the only thing in the book that must be pronounced objectionable; there is a vein of unhealthy and unpleasant suggestion running through it almost from end to end. "It is not a nice story," says one of the prominent characters in "Cherry Ripe,"—a singularly "frisky matron"—of a highly spiced chronique scandaleuse, which she is detailing for the benefit of an ingénue, and it is a pity that it did not occur to the author that the same criticism was applicable to the whole of her unfortunate book. There seems no occasion to take up space with minor criticisms, so we will confine ourselves to remarking that the author's language on the subject of Henry the Eighth and his six wives gives the impression that she supposes every one of those ladies in succession to have been put to death by the monarch's orders.

"A Jewel of a Girl," by the author of "Queenie," &c. (3 vols.: Hurst and Blackett).—Its rather silly title is almost the only point to take exception to in this story, which is singularly fresh, natural, and pleasing, and a marked advance on anything we have hitherto had from the author's hands. The gentle and saintly Miss Ina Colbert, and her niece, the beautiful, high-spirited, and strong-willed Bridget, the heroine of the tale, win our interest and sympathy from the beginning, and these characters are excellently sustained throughout. Bridget is no ideal maiden, as there are elements in her at variance with her higher nature, and the working of these is indicated to us with considerable skill. The stern and self-centred Sir James Wilde, a true man of iron, who by his wiles has dispossessed the Colberts of their ancestral domain in the north of Ireland, is another good character, at once out of the common and yet true to nature. But the best scenes in the book are the pictures of Dutch family life which follow on the removal of Miss Ina and Bridget to the home of their far-away, but generous and kindly, cousin, Mynheer Hugo Colbert of Haarlem, another descendant from the same old Huguenot stock. These scenes show the author to be intimately acquainted with Holland, its people, and its ways, and are enough of themselves to give a value to the book. Bridget's love story—for, of course, she has a love story —we need not touch upon here.

"A Very Old Question," by T. Edgar Pemberton, author of "Under Pressure," &c. (3 vols.: Samuel Tinsley).—The "very old question" submitted to us here is that in Hamlet, "Whether Love lead Fortune, or else Fortune Love." What answer Mr. Pemberton arrives at, or whether he arrives at any, we are unable to say, for we must own that his book proved too much for our endurance. It is intolerably dull and tiresome, rather silly, and more than a little vulgar. Not a single character excites a spark of interest, and most are repulsive without being striking. As for the style, let it suffice to say that it is not of sufficient fascination to lead us for its sake to overlook the other defects of the book.

We have also received "Cosmo's Violets," by Cecil Rushton, author of "George Goring," &c. (Charing Cross Publishing Company), a novel in no way remarkable, but perhaps up to the average of excellence—at least not conspicuously below it.

◆

CHRISTMAS AMUSEMENTS

Though Boxing Day is perhaps the most important of all days from the point of view of the theatrical manager, as marking the commencement of the season of crowded houses, it has never been very remarkable for the production of new pieces save and except the Christmas pantomimes, which are only performed at certain theatres. In these days, at least, few dramatic authors would care to risk the chances of a first performance before a Boxing Night audience. There was a time, not very far removed, when it was deemed indispensable that the business of Harlequin, Clown, and Columbine should be preceded by the performance of a stiff and solemn old blank verse play by the poet Rowe, whereof the heroine was Jane Shore; or, failing this, by Lillo's George Barnwell, an oppressively moral and sententious drama, wherein the impropriety of shooting a benevolent old uncle in order to gain one's own private ends was set forth with more emphasis and elaboration than so obvious a moral might seem to demand. All this, however, was but a concession to the grave and reverend personages who, objecting to stage plays in the abstract as entertainments at holiday time for servants and 'prentice boys, were supposed to be conciliated and induced to look with a more kindly eye on these forbidden recreations when accompanied by such salutary correctives. Little harm, however, and, it may be added, little good, was done by these introductory performances, and for the simple reason that no one among the audience ever bestowed upon them the slightest attention. Inexplicable dumb show on the stage and noise in pit and gallery were the sole results of this conventional usage. Nowadays, to the great relief of holiday audiences, both Rowe and Lillo are condemned on Boxing Night to that golden silence which Mr. Carlyle has so eloquently commended.

Last Wednesday evening was no exception to the rule of Boxing Night entertainments. There were, of course, new pantomimes, not at every house, it is true, but still at so many houses that nothing could be more incorrect than to describe this established form of holiday entertainment as declining. Rather should it be said to be extending and growing in popularity—always bearing in mind that the old Grimaldian business, though flourishing greatly at the suburban theatres, has at the West End suffered considerably from the encroachments of introductions. One of the most observable features this season is the large number of little performers who have been trained to take part in the pantomimes. The Adelphi, which theatre may claim the credit of having produced the first "children's pantomime," that is, a pantomime in which none but children perform —presents this year another entertainment of this kind, written, if we may be forgiven for divulging a secret, by Mr. E. L. Blanchard, the inventor of "children's pantomimes," who has long modestly concealed himself under the signature of "An Old Boy." Robin Hood is on this occasion Mr. Blanchard's hero. It is an excellent feature of these pretty performances that they are strictly confined to the day time. Every afternoon the little performers, including a wonderfully clever little Clown, Pantaloon, Harlequin, and Columbine here go through their duties gravely or humorously as the case requires, while in the evening the Adelphi performances also recognise the holiday time by producing after the drama a new extravaganza, including a fairy ballet. The grand fairy ballet pantomime at HER MAJESTY'S Theatre, entitled Rose and Marie; or, the Reward of Filial Love, is actually represented by 300 little performers, who are understood to have been in training in the intervals of educational studies very properly insisted upon by the School Board daily for three months past. It is a brilliant and picturesque piece, though the fact that the little people are limited to dumb show—we presume because little voices cannot well be rendered effective in so vast a house—may strike most spectators as strange. This is, however, really a return to the old fashion of pantomime in its purest form, as, indeed, the very term indicates. The popularity of DRURY LANE will probably not be easily shaken by the increased rivalry to which this favoured home of pantomime is this year subject. Here the Countess D'Aulnoy's fairy tale of The White Cat has served the turn of Mr. Blanchard, who has so often furnished holiday visitors with rhymed introductions. The clever Vokes Family are conspicuous again among the performers. The pantomime, or "the Annual," as Mr. Blanchard prefers to call it, has been illustrated once more by Mr. Beverly, and goblin dwarfs and demons are in great force, though, of course, too weak to resist the benignant influences of the fairies, who give effect to the splendour of the ballet divertissement. COVENT GARDEN observes more strictly the old custom of taking a nursery story for its subject. Puss in Boots is the title of the piece, which is furnished with all the customary pictorial splendours to which a large stage is so favourable. Singers of some note are engaged in the introduction, which is of a more musical character than usual; but the harlequinade and the mechanical contrivances were unfortunately marred on Wednesday evening by more than the usual proportion of disasters.

Mr. Hollingshead is also one of those managers who treat the pantomime visitors as a class to be specially provided for at reasonable hours of the day. Those Conservative tendencies which are so conspicuous in Mr. Hollingshead's published writings have naturally led him also to take his stand upon the ancient practice of choosing a nursery story for a pantomime introduction. Hence Valentine at the GAIETY flourishes his sword, and Orson wields his club, and the bear remains no passive spectator of the scene. As part and parcel of the performance of Valentine and Orson immense fun is created by the entertainment of Lieut. Cole's wonderful puppets; deep interest is excited in the proceedings of the bear and the wild man; and intense delight follows upon the marvellously dexterous and graceful feats of the Lenton Family. If anything Valentine and Orson is even too full of drolleries and surprises; it has the advantage of being altogether free from the vulgarity which sometimes characterises the boisterous fun of Christmastide entertainments. The Gaiety pantomime is performed in the morning only, the evening performance going on as usual. At the ROYAL AQUARIUM Theatre pantomime also flourishes greatly under the title of A Frog he would a Wooing go. This exhausts the list of West End theatres at which pantomimes properly so called are produced; but as we have often said, the suburban houses, which are with scarcely an exception true to this custom of the season, are scarcely behind their more fashionable rivals in the spectacular part of the entertainment, and often superior in the spirit which they are enabled to infuse into the whole business. Among the most important of these is the BRITANNIA, at Hoxton, where under the experienced management of Mrs. S. Lane, there is a pantomime of imposing and magnificent proportions bearing the title of Rominagrobis, which has no doubt some meaning, though it may escape the general eye. The sub-title, "or, the Tail of a Cat," seems, however, to throw a glimmer of light; but no doubt it is deemed good policy at Hoxton to excite a sort of curiosity which can only be completely satisfied by paying at the doors and enjoying the performance. Equally remarkable for the elaborate character of the pantomimic performances are the SURREY, the NATIONAL STANDARD, the NEW GRECIAN, the MARYLEBONE, the PARK Theatre, and the PAVILION. And we must not omit to mention that HENGLER'S CIRCUS, in Argyll Street, and the Messrs. SANGERS' at Lambeth endeavour to blend with their equestrian performances some slight amount of the pantomime element. To keep pace with all this multitude of Christmas amusements is, of course, beyond our power. Nevertheless we are able to speak more particularly below of one or two of the most popular houses.

At the FOLLY Theatre a version by Messrs. Wyndham and Matthison of a French comedy, entitled La Poudre d'Escampette, has achieved a well deserved success. The proverbial and colloquial title of the original might be freely rendered as A Clean Pair of Heels, but the adaptors have chosen to call it A Night of Terrors. It is a bustling, farcical, extravagant piece, full of droll situations, many of which are due to the invention of the English authors. Mr. Hill's performance of the blacksmith is humorous—though bordering slightly on the vulgar. Miss Munroe, Mr. Day, Miss Cameron, and Mr. Howson lend efficient aid in the representation. The management have also revived here the entertaining piece entitled Peacock's Holiday, a piece of similar character, also of French extraction.

At the OLYMPIC Mr. Neville has revived Mr. Burnand's drama, entitled the Turn of the Tide, which is a dramatic version of Mrs. Edwardes's novel, "The Morals of Mayfair." The drama comprises many striking scenes; and though the story is rather complex and not very skilfully set forth it is amusing. A very numerous and efficient company is engaged, including Mr. Neville, Mrs. John Wood, Mr. Anson, and Miss Florence Terry. The revival is likely to prove successful.

THE SURREY.—At this theatre the subject of the pantomime is Dick Whittington and his Cat, and Mr. Frank W. Green has produced a very attractive version of the old story. Miss Topsy Venn makes a very bright and pleasing hero, and Miss Nellie Moon is charming as Alice Fitzwarren. Mr. Arthur Williams as Betsibella, and Mr. Henry Taylor as the Idle Apprentice, create roars of laughter by their quaint sallies. A word must be said for Master David Abraham's clever performance of the Cat. We need not speak of the excruciating puns, the patriotic songs, and the manifold allusions to passing events—these are inseparable from a legitimate pantomime. The dresses are superb, and the floral ballet, in which the Sisters Elliott display their Terpsichorean powers, is a decided success. For many, however, the chief attraction will doubtless be the transformation scene, by Mr. C. Brooke, which is an imposing scenic master-piece. This gentleman, with Mr. J. Gray, is also to be complimented on the other very beautiful scenes which contribute to the attractions of the piece, more especially, "Highgate Hill with a View of Old London," and "The Chepe-side of the Period." With Tom Lovell as Clown, and Albert de Voy as Pantaloon, there can be little doubt that the pantomime at the Surrey will be a great favourite.

At the CRYSTAL PALACE the pantomime is founded on the old fairy tale of the Sleeping Beauty, and is written by Messrs. Augustus Harris and W. R. Osman, and produced under the auspices of Mr. Charles Wyndham. The orthodox story is followed throughout. The evil fairy Maligna, offended at not being invited to Beauty's christening, dooms her to an early death from the prick of a spindle—a sentence commuted by the good fairies to a century's sleep. Despite all the decrees of King Cockawax (Mr. F. Wyatt) that every spindle shall be banished from the realm, and all the efforts of her mother, Queen Sophynisba (Mr. Coote), Beauty, alias the Princess Deliciosa (Miss Isabelle Bryant), is duly wounded by a spindle, and together with the whole Court falls asleep for a hundred years, when all are once more awakened to health and happiness by the advent of Prince Perianderprettyman (Miss Edith Bruce), who together with his father, King Muddlehead (Mr. Ridley), braves all all the dangers of the enchanted wood, and foils all Maligna's machinations in order to kiss the lips of the pretty princess whose legend had so excited his curiosity. Although the pantomime is perhaps hardly equal to that of last year either in composition or acting it is eminently amusing, and exceedingly well mounted. One scene, wherein the fairies dancing before a "magic mirror" are exactly imitated by similarly dressed figures on the other side of a muslin screen, deserves especial mention, while the fourfold transformation scene, depicting the varied aspects of spring, summer, autumn, and winter, was a triumph of scenic art and machinery. The harlequinade, though short, is as spiritedly amusing as usual, and on the whole the Sleeping Beauty may be pronounced well worth a visit by all lovers of pantomime.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.——A profusion of attractions are offered just now at this popular suburban resort. Besides what may be designated as the permanent features of the Palace there is a Little Folks' Doll Show, which is well worthy of a visit; there are the Living Marionettes; there is Lam, the Bodiless Lady, a remarkable optical illusion; and there is a Circus, where, in addition to the usual horse-riding feats, there is M. Ravioli, the Lion Tamer (Van Amburgh redivivus), and performances with elephants, zebras, bears, monkeys, and other tame wild animals. Last, but assuredly not least at Christmastide, is the pantomime, St. George and the Dragon, in which the Payne Family are very comic, and the Transformation Scene one of the prettiest we ever saw.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.——Like most public entertainers, the Moore and Burgess Minstrels work hardest when other folks are enjoying a respite from labour. During this holiday season they migrate into the big hall, which is invariably crammed, and give two performances a day. Nor do the public show any signs of wearying of their black visages, for this is their thirteenth season of Christmas Holiday Entertainments, and they are as popular as ever. The programme on the afternoon of Boxing Day was a very attractive one. Of the new sentimental songs we were most attracted by "Kiss me, good night, mother," sung by Mr. Sydney Herbert, "Kitty May," by Little Freddie, "Sweet Aileen," by Mr. Rudolph, and "Robin, pretty Robin," by Mr. Vernon Reed. Mr. John Romer's fine bass voice, and Mr. W. S. Leslie's exquisite alto, were also heard to considerable advantage. Mr. G. W. Moore carried off the comic vocal honours in his "Patrick, mind the Baby," but he was run hard by Mr. Walter Howard in "Dancing at the Ball," and in his banjo song, "The Comic Alphabet," the political allusions in which were highly relished. As for the Gee-hards, their contortions—which really rival those of the Girards—are painfully wonderful to witness; Mr. Frank Pieri was, as usual, a most fascinating prima-donna, with a tendency to get from the soprano into the bass; while "Walking for dat Cake," though less humorous than some of its predecessors, is quite an idyll of negro life in the States.

MR. AND MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.—In view of the festivities of the season, on Friday an alteration was made in the programme of St. George's Hall, Mr. Corney Grain producing a new sketch, entitled A Musical Almanack, and Our New Doll's House being substituted for No. 204. Mr. Grain divides his calendar into six periods:—the domestic, classical, operatic, social, troubadour, and the festive; and it will be readily understood that this programme affords full scope for the exercise of his amusing and peculiar talent. Of the fairy (re-)vision, in one peep, Our New Doll's House, by W. Wye, music by Cotsford Dick, we need only say that it is admirably suited to the young folk, and is provocative of much laughter, the music being bright and appropriate. Once in a Century still remains a favourite; and altogether Mr. and Mrs. Reed and their clever little company provide a very pleasant and seasonable entertainment.

THE ROYAL POLYTECHNIC.——The holiday programme at this institution is as diversified and attractive as ever. Mr. J. L. King gives a lecture on torpedo warfare, a subject which, for different reasons, recommends itself both to the adult and juvenile portion of his audience—at least, to the male members thereof. Professor Gardner teaches something of chemistry in a charming, chatty way, that makes the hearer think it the easiest of studies, and Dr. Holden's conjuring is at least as wonderful as that of any of his prestidigitorial brethren. There is also a shadow pantomime and a semi-dramatic entertainment, entitled The Rose and the Ring, the libretto of which is adapted from Thackeray (and spoiled in the process, by the bye), which, being read by Mr. Seymour Smith, and enacted in dumb show by a troup of clever actors, contributes greatly to the amusement of the youthful visitors.

THE FRENCH PAINTER, COURBET, is seriously ill, and according to Galignani his condition affords little hope of recovery.

THE POPE has received a curious selection of presents from some converted Indians at Ottawa, one chief, named Nadowekessa, sending the Holy Father a number of scalping knives, and suggesting that they may be used for shaving monks.

CONSUMPTIVE PATIENTS in New York are now sent daily to the city slaughter-houses to drink the blood of the freshly-killed bullocks, which has proved a decided cure in several cases. This has long been a common practice in the abattoirs of Paris.

THE CHARACTER OF "CAPITAL" was assumed by the wife of a prominent New York banker at a recent fancy ball. Her skirt was covered with 100*l*. United States Treasury Notes, and her bodice and sleeves were 200*l*. bonds. She is said to have been worth about 60,000*l*. as she stood.

A NEW JOURNAL, the Week, will appear in London next Saturday. It is intended to give an outline of the principal news of the day, for the benefit of those who do not read the daily papers, and will contain special articles on English trade and finance, as well as the usual reviews and criticisms. The price will be sixpence.

PARLIAMENT, Mayfair tells us is, after all, only going back to its ancient customs in meeting so early in the year as the 17th of January. Last year it met on the 8th of February. But except when there has been an autumnal session, Parliament has only four times within the last twenty years met so late in the year. The four occasions were in 1870, 1876, 1871 (when Parliament did not meet till the 9th of February), and 1874, when, the general election bursting upon the country in February, the Houses were not able to meet till March.

TEMPLE BAR.——A correspondent of The Times sends the following lines, which were published in the year 1788:—

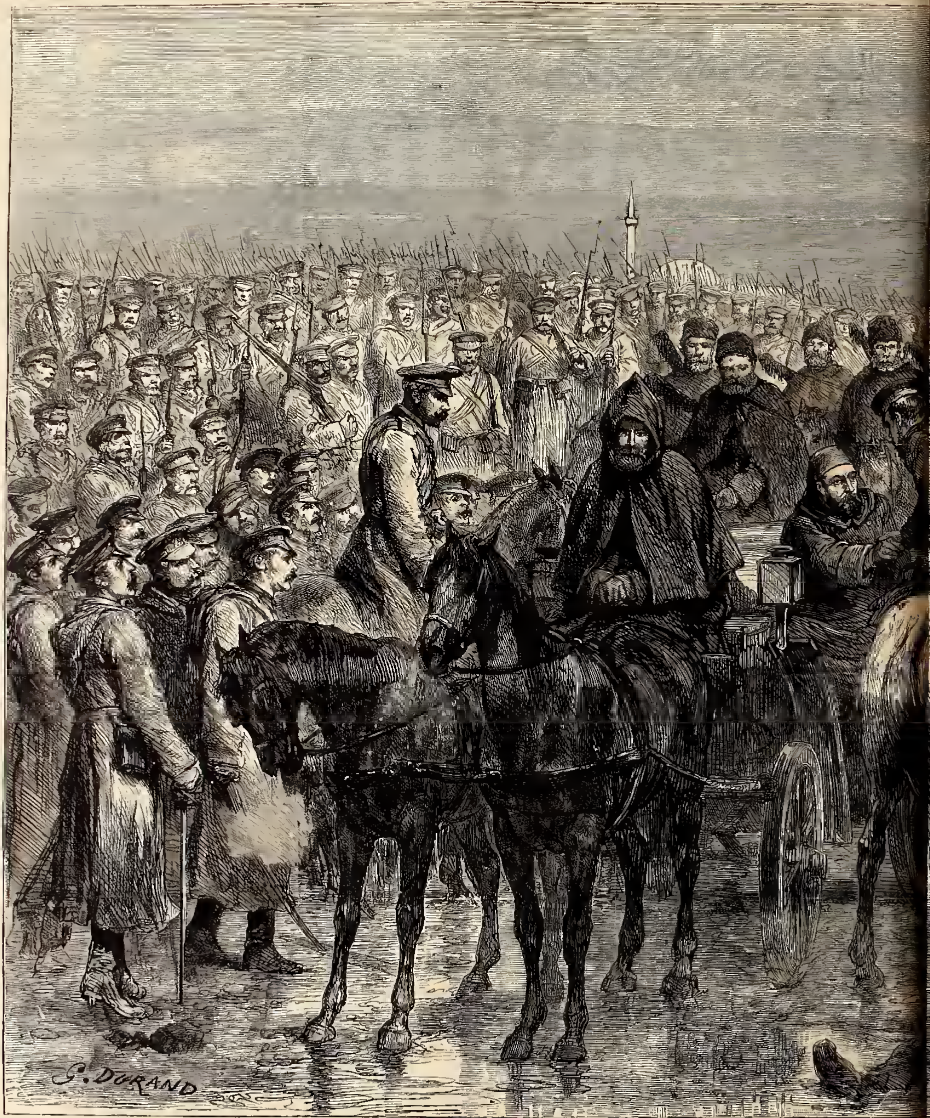
"If the Gate is pulled down 'twixt the Court and the City,
You'll blend in one mass prudent, worthless, and witty;
If you league cit and lordling as brother and brother,
You'll break order's chain, and they'll war with each other
Like the Great Wall of China, it keeps out the Tartars
From making irruptions where industry barters.
Like Samson's wild foxes, they'll fire your houses,
And madden your spinsters, and cozen your spouses.
They'll destroy in one sweep both the mart and the forum,
Which your fathers held dear, and their fathers before them."

THE ACCLIMATISATION OF BEAVERS IN SCOTLAND, where the race has long been extinct, is likely to prove very successful on the Marquis of Bute's estate. A park has been constructed for the beavers in a pine wood near Rothesay, through which runs a small stream, and across this the little creatures have formed three dams, building themselves a house of driftwood on the lowest dam. Their house is shaped like an inverted bird's nest, and the entrance is under water, while, to form the dams, the beavers have gnawed through several of the trees in the park. The beavers are still very shy, although now quite accustomed to their quarters, and several young ones have been born in the new beavery, thus raising the number to twelve. They live chiefly upon willow boughs.

SOLAR HEAT AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR COAL ON EASTERN RAILWAYS has been proposed by the well-known African traveller Dr. Rohlfs, who suggests the construction of a railway through the Desert of Sahara from Tripoli to Lake Tschad, wherein steam could be generated by boiling the water by the heat of the sun with the aid of glasses. As cooking by solar rays has already proved successful in Bombay the inventor of the process writes to the Times of India to support Dr. Rohlfs' theory, alleging that the burning glasses employed should consist of a conical reflector, like a lamp-shade reversed, with its base towards the sun, while the boiler should be vertical and cylindrical, with a hollow rise in the bottom like that in a bottle, leaving a ring of water about an inch deep. The outer shell of the boiler should be continued below the water space, and be perforated to admit the hot air. A somewhat similar invention was tried in 1866 by a French mathematician, M. Mouchot, who exhibited a solar steam-engine at Mentone before Napoleon III.

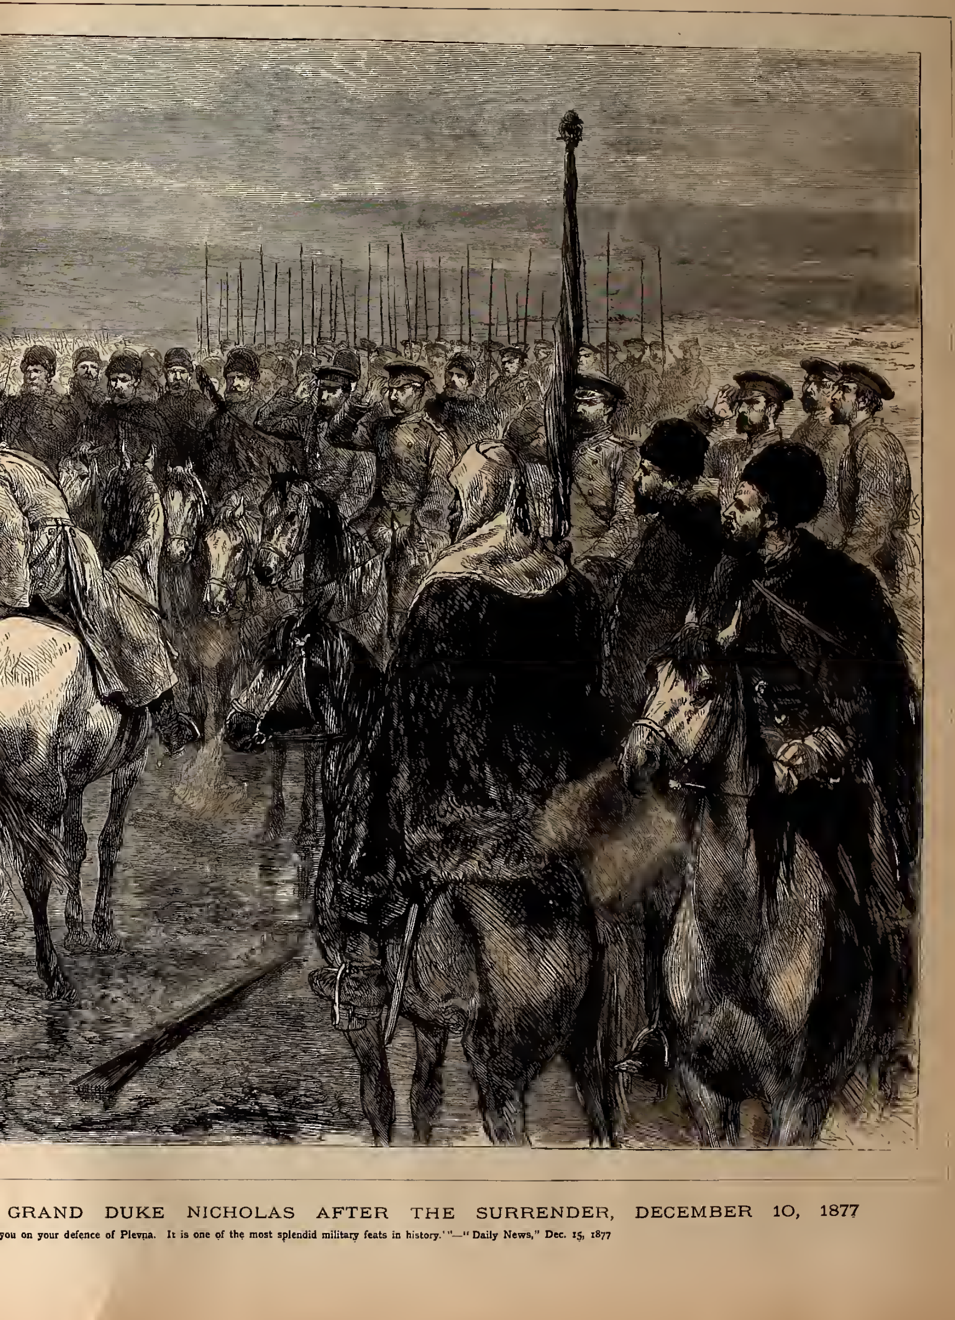
DR. SCHLIEMANN'S TROJAN TREASURE is now on view in the South Court of the Kensington Museum, each specimen being carefully labelled according to the period to which it belongs. Foremost among the collection stands the supposed treasure of Priam. Here are the two gold diadems—one of which we represented in our portrait of Madame Schliemann some time since—composed of rows of chains weighted with the image of the owl-faced goddess; eardrops in chain and tassel shape, bracelets so small as to fit only a child, and no fewer than 8,750 tiny golden jewels of all shapes and sizes. All this jewellery was concealed in one of the silver vessels exhibited, which has a handle like a jug and is rounded underneath. Close by are two golden cups—one, boat-shaped, having two handles and two mouths, supposed to have been used for libations to the gods—a quaint globular flask, and several silver cups, bottles, and vases, as well as some strips of silver conjectured to be Homeric talents. Turning to the weapons, there is a large copper-bronze shield, sword and dagger blades, lance-heads, and ancient stone instruments; while further on are a number of terra-cotta objects—notably some mysterious discs or "spindle-whorls," ornamented with figures, and thought to be votive offerings. The pottery includes specimens from the four layers of cities in the Hissarlik mound, and is mainly rude, and not over graceful. Many vessels are in the form of animals, the goblets being rounded like amphoræ, while the owl-faced goddess appears on the majority. Lastly we must mention the fine metope from the ruins of the Doric Temple of Phœbus Apollo, representing the god driving the four horses of the sun.

NEW YEAR'S APPEALS.——The "Christian" Blind Society, which grants weekly and monthly pensions to the poor blind, young or old, irrespective of religious qualifications, asks for assistance towards giving its pensioners their annual tea and entertainment on the 29th prox. Donations may be sent to the Honorary Secretary, Mr. Clarke, 59, Burdett Road, E. —An appeal is also made by the Reformatory and Refuge Union, which on the principle of the Hospital Sunday Fund assists the various London Refuges. In these refuges, which now contain 4,000 destitute inmates, each child is taught a trade. Subscriptions to be sent to the offices, 435, West Strand, W.C. —A similar request for assistance comes from the Metropolitan and National Nursing Association, which provides nurses for the sick at their own homes, and maintains four districts for this purpose. 5,000*l*. are wanted, and contributions will be received at the office, 23, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.—Another Nursing Society, the House and Sisterhood of St. John the Evangelist, issues a fresh appeal on behalf of the proposed Maternity Home and Training School where poor women may be received and monthly nurses duly taught. An effort to erect the Home was made last year, but the funds were so inadequate that the School is now to be begun at Chelsea on a much humbler scale. Donations will be received by the Superior at 8, Norfolk Street, Strand.—Commander Dawson, R.N., pleads for the Mission to Seamen Agents' Association Fund, which is designed to relieve any of the fifty-three chaplains and readers belonging to the society who may be disabled, and who are greatly exposed to the weather in open boats during their labours in forty roadsteads and harbours. Contributions to be sent to the office, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand.—The Victoria Hospital for Children, Gough House, Chelsea, also pleads for New Year donations towards the balance of the purchase money (1,500*l*.) of the recently acquired land on either side of the Hospital, and the 700*l*. owing for repairs and expenses. Since its establishment in 1866, 3,040 in-patients and 149,000 out-patients have been relieved. Seventy beds are maintained, ten of these at a convalescent home in Margate, and as the institution is unendowed funds are urgently needed. Subscriptions should be sent to the Secretary, Commander W. C. Blount R.N., at the above address.



THE FALL OF PLEVNA—THE MEETING OF OSMAN PASHA AND THE

"Then the Grand Duke stretched out his hand and shook the hand of Osman Pasha heartily, and said, 'I complimen



GRAND DUKE NICHOLAS AFTER THE SURRENDER, DECEMBER 10, 1877

you on your defence of Plevna. It is one of the most splendid military feats in history.'"—"Daily News," Dec. 15, 1877

FOREIGN

The War in the East.——Winter seems to have set in with great severity in Bulgaria, and for the time active military operations—except on the part of the Servians—have been almost suspended. On the Danube ice has been drifting, and seriously endangering the Russian bridges. One of them, near Ibraila, has been broken through, while a steamer has been completely closed in by the ice. Southwards also in the Shipka Pass there has been heavy snow and hard frost, while fog and snow have equally prevailed in the Kamarli Pass, so that the only fighting reported from Russian sources has been a little skirmishing beyond the Lom, where the Czarevitch has now advanced and firmly established his positions. General Todleben has been appointed to the command of the army of Rustchuk, and an energetic siege of that town, together with the investment of the remaining fortresses of the Quadrilateral, is now expected to begin, especially as the Lom army has been heavily reinforced. Suleiman Pasha also has been withdrawing his troops from this direction, and sending them, viâ Constantinople, to the Sofia army, with which the Turks now hope to be able to resist the Russian advance when the Balkans shall have been crossed. To return to the Danube, on the west Widdin is being gradually invested, and here the Servians are pushing actively forward. Horvatovitch has already effected a junction with the Russians near Lom Palanka, there has been sharp fighting along the whole of the Servian line, and, as far as can be gathered from conflicting reports, Prince Milan is having better fortune than during his campaign of last year. Thus Nisch has been completely invested, and the Prince himself has superintended the opening of the bombardment, on the 19th inst. the Servians carried the St. Nicholas Pass, while they are even reported so far southwards as Pirot, though here the Turks claim to have repulsed them. The Servians, however, captured Ak-Palanka on the 24th, with its surrounding fortifications, a large quantity of arms and ammunition also falling into their hands. The Turks have also been defeated in the direction of Novi Bazar.

The Russian plan of action certainly seems to be a general march southwards as soon as the weather will permit, while the various northern fortresses still in Turkish hands are to be closely invested. The main portion of the army of Plevna will therefore probably attack the Kamarli and Shipka Passes in force, while the Servians will make a flank attack on the Turkish position from the west. The Turks are making every preparation to receive the enemy, and are placing great faith in the army of Sofia, which is expected shortly to number nearly 200,000 men. This is manifestly an exaggerated estimate, but it is probable that the army will be powerful enough to give the Russians considerable trouble in their advance.

At Constantinople all is quiet save for the continued passage of troops, and every one is asking what England intends to do, and what the early session of Parliament really means. The Turks still cherish a firm belief that we shall ultimately come to their relief; and in fact the future action of England is the general theme of speculation and discussion throughout Europe, even the Czar himself—if we are to credit the Pester Lloyd's—openly partaking of the general uneasiness by remarking to a congratulatory deputation from the German Foreign Office that "England alone was desirous to exercise pressure on the freedom of our movements. We shall not agree to mediation, however, and we are armed against intervention." At present certainly mediation does not appear to have the slightest chance of success. The Turkish Note has fallen utterly flat, and has received little or no notice; while England, amongst other things, has been credited with having privately asked Russia if if she would entertain any idea of mediation, and of having received a very decided negative for her pains. A general feeling prevails that Germany is determined to uphold Russia to the end, and as no country cares to quarrel just now with Emperor William and his legions the other Powers are fain to let things take their course. In the meantime the German press is roundly laughing at us for our helplessness, and the National Zeitung declares that as Prince Gortchakoff regards Turkey as the sick man so Prince Bismarck looks upon England as the sick woman—a simile truly flattering to British national vanity.

In Asia the weather is better than in Europe, and General Melikoff is bringing up his troops to the positions before Erzeroum, and is said to be getting round to the north of that town. Great cruelties are asserted to have been committed by the Russians upon the Turkish prisoners, and according to a report from Mukhtar Pasha, out of a detachment of 2,000 wounded sent from Kars to Erzeroum, half succumbed on the journey to cold and fatigue, the survivors arriving in a most lamentable condition. In Plevna, also, three days elapsed before any attention was bestowed upon the Turkish sick and wounded. St. Petersburg has been greeting her victorious Czar with great enthusiasm—in fact the Imperial journey from Bucharest has been little else than a triumphal progress.—In Roumania Prince Charles has addressed a most laudatory order of the day to his soldiery on the fall of Plevna, and the Prince has received warm thanks from the Czar, and the Order of the Iron Cross from Emperor William. According to an official Roumanian report of the taking of Plevna, Osman Pasha is said to have surrendered to the Roumanians, and not to the Russians.—Greece celebrated her King's birthday on Monday, and the occasion was taken for making various demonstrations in favour of war, but it is said that the Cabinet wishes first to see what the the British Parliament will do.

France.—M. Dufaure and his colleagues have lost no time in thoroughly reorganising the Government upon sound Republican principles, and have been busily cancelling the arbitrary acts of their predecessors, and reinstating the innumerable officials, ranging from the all powerful prefect to the humble village schoolmistress, who were so summarily dismissed by M. de Broglie for their anti-Conservative opinions. The prefects have also been instructed to abandon all Press and political prosecutions, while M. Marcère, in receiving them, impressed upon them that the policy of the new Cabinet was one of "reparation and conciliation." M. Waddington also, in a reception of the officials of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, warned them all against publicly manifesting any anti-Republican opinions. "I know," he remarked, "that there are not many Republicans among you, but I hope that none of you will give me an occasion for perceiving the fact." This little speech has created some little stir, especially in diplomatic circles, for the French Diplomatic Staff have never warmly represented the Republican cause at foreign Courts. There are several rumoured diplomatic changes, one of which has been made,—the Comte de St. Vallier replacing the Viscomte de Gontaut Biron at Berlin.

The only other home political items of interest have been the Sessions and the elections of the Bureaux of the General Councils, in which the Republicans have secured a slight majority. The deliberations of the General Councils plainly manifested the intense relief and satisfaction with which the "submission" of the Marshal has been received. M. Bardoux, the Minister of Public Instruction, addressing the council at Puy de Dôme, paid a high compliment to the Marshal, "by whose patriotism the crisis had been solved." Echoes of the crisis, however, are still heard in the form of angry articles from the Conservative organs, a reported quarrel between M. Batbie and the Duc d'Audiffret Pasquier, which, it is said, threatened at one time to result in a duel at five paces; and a prosecution of La Petite République Française for libel by MM. de Broglie and de Fourtou. In the meantime all but the Ministers have abandoned politics for the moment; the Marshal has gone to his country seat, and M. Gambetta to Nice; while lesser stars are giving themselves up to the enjoyment of the Christmas and New Year holidays, which, now that the crisis has ended, promise to be brighter than usual.

Thus Paris has been exceedingly gay and festive this week, the boulevards have been crowded with the usual toy booths, and with purchasers and holiday makers, while the journals now find space to praise the last new novels of Adolphe Belot and Alphonse Daudet—the latter a clever work, entitled Le Nabab, and giving a lively picture of French life and society during the Second Empire. Foreign politics are also at last attracting attention and M. Lemoinne in the Journal des Débats has been gravely warning England of her responsibilities with regard to the solution of the Eastern Question. What has perhaps contributed as much as anything else to the restoration of the normal state of things in the French capital has been the Marshal's visit on Saturday to the works of the forthcoming Exhibition, which are now rapidly approaching completion. Marshal MacMahon warmly complimented Mr. Cunliffe Owen upon the forward state of the British section. The Parisians now feel that at last there is a really good chance of their again being the centre of European attention for a few months, as in 1867 under Napoleon III. There is little other gossip of interest, save that Racine's 238th birthday was celebrated last week at the Théâtre Français by the performance of Esther and Les Plaideurs, and a first representation at the Cluny of Madeleine, a four-act drama by M. Charles Corthey, which, however, does not promise to be highly successful. On Monday the Paris law students walked in procession to Père Lachaise to place a crown on M. Thiers' tomb. The weather this Christmas has been singularly bleak and foggy, which produces one curious effect, namely, of filling certain churches, for instance, St. Germain l'Auxerrois, where numerous poor old men and women crowd round the heating apparatus to obtain the warmth which is absent from their own homes. Finally, we may record the annual meeting of Miss Leigh's home for young Englishwomen, where, according to the report, there had been 315 admissions during the year, making a total of 1,196 since the opening of the Home in 1872. The visits of girls needing and asking advice or assistance had numbered 3,613, or a total aggregate of 18,683. Funds are urgently asked for to meet the rising responsibilities of the Home.

Italy.——The Pope is much better, and has been able to be removed into his private library, where he has received several Cardinals, and has given a special audience to Cardinal Manning, who arrived in Rome on Saturday.

The political crisis is at an end, and Signor Depretis has been able to form a Ministry.—The King has been summoned to Turin by the dangerous illness of the Countess of Mirafiori.—Don Carlos, who has been staying at Milan, has been robbed of the Order of the Golden Fleece, a jewel of great and historic value, and which had belonged to Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy.

India.——Although active hostilities have been suspended for the present, the Jowaki campaign can hardly be regarded at an end, as the Chiefs maintain an attitude of defiance, and it is thought that further military measures will have to be undertaken to reduce them to submission. According to the Pioneer the much-vaunted Commissariat department broke down most hopelessly in the hour of need.

United States.——Little news beyond a disturbance of the Texan-Mexican frontier, where some States troops were besieged by a mob at San Elisario, and a reported re-entry of Sitting Bull and his troops into United States territory.—President Hayes has opened a Museum of Natural History in New York.—At a boiler explosion which took place at a confectionery manufactory in New York, twelve people were killed and thirty injured.

Miscellaneous.——In New South Wales there has been a general election, resulting in an increased majority supporting the Robertson administration. A new Ministry has also been formed, composed as follows: Mr. Farnell as Secretary for Land, Mr. Cohen as Colonial Treasurer, Mr. FitzPatrick as Colonial Secretary, Mr. Burns as Attorney-General.—In Queensland there have been special religious services in consequence of the long-continued drought. At the gold diggings the Chinese are said to be determined to resist the collection of fees levied under the Gold Fields Act.—From Norway we hear of a terrible fire in the small town of Levanger, near Drontheim, the entire town being destroyed with the exception of twenty-three houses.—In South Africa considerable uneasiness exists on the borders of Kaffraria, although the volunteers are returning to their homes. On the 2nd inst. 800 Galekas attacked a night patrol of 125 volunteers and police, but were defeated with a loss of eighty men, one volunteer being killed and seven wounded.

THE COURT

The Queen has been spending Christmas at Windsor Castle. At the end of last week Her Majesty held a Council, when Sir T. M. Biddulph was sworn in a member, and also gave audiences to Lord Beaconsfield, Lord Derby, and the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, and received the late and the present United States Ministers, Messrs. Pierrepont and Welsh, who presented their respective letters of recall and credentials. On Saturday the Queen and Princess Beatrice drove through Windsor to see the Christmas Show made by the Royal tradespeople; the Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne arrived at the Castle to spend Christmas; and Lord John Manners joined the Royal party at dinner. Next morning the Queen, the Princesses Louise and Beatrice, and the Marquis of Lorne attended the service in the private chapel, and in the afternoon Princess Christian visited Her Majesty, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Martin also arriving at the Castle. On Monday Prince and Princess Christian with their children visited the Queen, and Sir T. M. Biddulph dined with Her Majesty. On Christmas Day Her Majesty, with the Princesses Louise and Beatrice and the Marquis of Lorne, attended morning service in the private chapel. Yesterday (Friday) the Queen with Princess Beatrice would leave Windsor for the Isle of Wight. According to Mayfair Her Majesty may probably open Parliament in person.—The Queen's Bounty to the London poor was distributed on Friday, Saturday, and Monday, at the Almonry Office, Whitehall. The recipients numbered 1,250, and differed in age from 60 to 95 years, two persons being aged respectively, 99 and 100, while the alms varied from 5*s.* to 13*s.*—Princess Beatrice has been suffering from a cold.

Christmas was kept by the Prince and Princess of Wales at Sandringham. The Princess and her sons arrived from town on Saturday afternoon, and were afterwards joined by the Prince of Wales on the conclusion of his visit to Mr. Amherst at Didlington. On Sunday the Prince and Princess and their five children attended Divine Service at St. Mary Magdalene's, and next day the usual Christmas gifts of beef to nearly 200 cottagers and tenants on the Sandringham estate were distributed in the Royal Mews, the Prince of Wales and the young Princes being present at the distribution. On Christmas Day the Prince and Princess and their family attended Divine Service at St. Mary Magdalene's. The usual tea and New Year's presents to the school-children at Sandringham will also be given this week.

Prince and Princess Christian returned to Cumberland Lodge on Saturday from visiting the Earl and Countess of Normanton at Somerley, Ringwood.—The Duke of Connaught, as Senior Grand Warden, will preside at the eightieth anniversary festival of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys.—The Duchess of Teck and her children have quite recovered from their attack of measles, and the young Princes and Princesses have joined their mother at Kensington Palace.

Crown Prince Rudolph of Austria intends to pass several months in England, to study British institutions and agricultural and scientific matters, and will make a tour through the principal manufacturing districts. He will arrive with the Empress on Monday next.—King Alphonso of Spain, accompanied by his sister, the Princess of the Asturias, has spent Christmas with his fiancée and her family at Seville.—The Queen of Wurtemburg is staying at San Remo.

CHURCH NEWS

The Christmas Services at all the metropolitan churches were well attended. Dean Church preached at St. Paul's Cathedral, and said that the lessons we should learn from the birthday of Christ were those of reverence, purity, humility, and trust in God. Dean Stanley at Westminster Abbey dwelt eloquently on the significance of Christian Emblems; the Rev. J. T. Papillon at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, told his hearers that it was their duty to oppose the growing tendency of modern thought to regard the life of Christ from its human side alone, but the only argument which could avail was a broad and tolerant view of all difficulties and all diversities of opinions, maintaining strictly all that was true, but never losing sight of the gift of charity. At the Chapel Royal, St. James's, the Rev. F. Garden chose for his subject the method of observing the Christian festival. Earthly enjoyment and amusements with family and friends, although not wrong, were inadequate. The sentimental associations of the time should hover on the mere outskirts of that great and lofty mystery for the realisation of which the festival was consecrated. At the Roman Catholic Pro-cathedral, Kensington, after the celebration of Pontifical High Mass by Monsignor Withers, Bishop of Amycla, a sermon was preached by the Rev. M. O'Neill, one of the Passionist Fathers, who said that not only were magnificent temples to the true God rising up all over the world, but the highest and brightest intellects were turning from the world to the Church, and even kings were leaving their thrones and casting away their sceptres with the same object: but on the other hand worldly men in the pride of their so-called science were seeking to lead away the youth of the century from the knowledge of God, and endeavouring to account for His creation of the world by their own material theories. The danger thus created was worse than the worst assaults of paganism in the olden time.—Dr. Parker opened his discourse at the City Temple by asking whether the purpose of Christ's birth had succeeded or failed so far as England was concerned? We might disguise it, or quote accidental circumstances in mitigation, but there was the humiliating and infamous fact that, after centuries of Christian civilisation, this country was in a worse moral condition, and was more shocked and stunned by daily crime, than at any previous period of its history; we were more cunning in our wickedness, more delicate in our iniquity, more courteous in our blasphemy, but the whole head was sick, and the whole heart faint, and the Saviour was still weeping over the land. His hope, however, was still in Christ. What His method might be he could not tell; it was his to watch and pray and wait.

A Triple Episcopal Consecration.——On Friday last (St. Thomas's Day), the Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Bishop of Winchester, Bishops Piers Claughton, and Anderson, and the Metropolitan of Australia, consecrated the Ven. Edward Trollope, D.D., Archdeacon of Stow and Rector of Leasingham, to the Suffragan Bishopric of Nottingham, in succession to Bishop Mackenzie; and Drs. Jonathan Holt Titcomb, and T. Valpy French, to the new Indian Sees of Rangoon and Lahore. The preacher was Canon Kay, formerly Principal of Bishop's College, Calcutta, who applied his text (Acts xxviii. 30, 31) to the encouragement of Missionary work. As St. Paul had preached the Gospel in the very heart of the Roman Empire, after three years' long waiting, so the English Church, shut out 300 years ago from intercommunion with the Latin Churches, was assisted by the civil power, but had bonds thrown around her. For years she was not even permitted to consecrate a bishop for America; yet now she preached the Gospel to an empire as extensive as ancient Rome. Even her bonds were overruled for the furtherance of the Gospel, for he verily believed that the delay in the foundation of the new sees of Lahore and Rangoon was not unproductive of good.

Various.——The Rev. R. Moffat, DD., F.R.G.S., was last week presented with the freedom of the Turners' Company, "in consideration of his services to civilisation, and his geographical discoveries in Southern Africa." The ceremony took place at the Mansion House, and Dr. Moffat, in returning thanks, said that when he first went to Africa, in 1816, there were no missionaries beyond the boundaries of the colonies; but now the bearers of the Gospel were pressing upward to the north in a phalanx stronger than a Macedonian one, 80,000 members of Christian Churches existed in Africa, and missionaries had reached a point 700 miles beyond that where the work commenced. What might not be expected of the country fifty years hence, remembering what it had been fifty years back?—Lord Shaftesbury having written to the Archbishop of Canterbury requesting his Grace's permission to withdraw from the Christian Knowledge Society because of the "active distrust" he feels towards the Committee on account of their publications, which he considers at one time lead the people to Romanism and at another to Infidelity; and having received a reply asking him to defer his retirement until he heard from him again, has since written to his Grace saying that he cannot comply with the request, as "no opinion either in favour or disfavour of the book complained of can alter the resolution he has formed."

Her Majesty's Theatre.——The director of this establishment, who, like his brother managers, gives a special Christmas entertainment, has revived the English adaptation of Adolphe Adam's pretty operetta, Le Chalet, the libretto of which, as most amateurs are aware, was constructed by Scribe and Mélesville upon the Betley of Goethe, more than forty years since. The music is even now generally ranked with the best of its composer, although the strong influence exercised upon the young composer by Auber, whose Fiancée and Fra Diavolo were in the height of their popularity at the time he wrote it, takes away all that might otherwise have laid claim to originality. But, apart from this, though a lively and, when happily inspired, a brilliant composer, Adolphe Adam was rarely, if ever, original in the strict signification of the term. Story and music, however, of the Chalet—in its normal shape, as well as in its foreign dress as The Swiss Cottage, are too well known to render it necessary to dwell further upon either. That the work should have survived so long, and still be constantly performed all over France and Germany, is a fair proof of its claims, from whatever point of view those claims may be considered; and perhaps no better example may be cited of the truth of Samuel Johnson's homely apophthegm—"That which pleases many must have merit." Adam's music to Le Chalet has unquestionably merit; hence its comparative longevity and the hold it keeps upon the stage. The performance at Her Majesty's Theatre is for the most part good—in some respects excellent. The orchestra, under the able and praved direction of Mr. Weist Hill, is thoroughly efficient; while the chorus seldom lays itself open to criticism. The leading singers, it is true, are all more or less novices—at any rate before the lamps. Mr. George Power, who plays Daniel, Betley's persistent and in the end successful, lover, has a tenor voice which promises favourably; Mr. George Fox, to whom the character of Max (Betley's soldier-brother) is assigned, possesses, our concert-goers need scarcely be reminded, a well-trained baritone; and Mdlle. Hélène Crosmond, charged with the important part of the heroine, is a soprano from whom a great deal may reasonably be expected. Mdlle. Crosmond has evidently studied with care, and though, it being her first appearance on the stage, she was inevitably nervous, did herself infinite credit, winning the unqualified approval of the house. The performance generally pleased; and the Chalet may be regarded as a legitimate success.

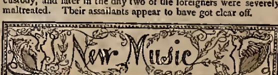
Dr. Hans von Bulow is still directing concerts at Glasgow. His "Notes of Travel," addressed to the Leipsic Signale, become more and more personal. The "half dozen petticoat pianists," with whom, to the learned Doctor's infinite dissatisfaction, he had to contend in St. James' Hall, having, together with M. Ambroise Thomas, composer of Hamlet, been disposed of, Dr. Ferdinand Hiller, of Cologne, and his favourite pupil, Herr Max Bruch, were the next victims. The last sufferer is the distinguished violinist, Herr Wilhelmj, who, in anything but courteous terms, is accused of having been the cause of inveigling his illustrious friend, Richard Wagner, into the disastrous pecuniary failure which attended the Wagner Concerts this year in the Royal Albert Hall.

Waifs.——Mdlle. Albani has been singing in oratorio at Leeds and Nottingham. At Leeds the oratorio selected was the Messiah, at Nottingham it was Elijah, in which, for the first time, the charming Canadian undertook the whole of the leading soprano music. If she continues to progress as she has been progressing of late, we may expect in Albani a worthy successor to Titiens. Like the great Teutonic singer, she is now fairly dividing her attention between opera and oratorio.—The death of M. Chevillard, the eminent Antwerp violoncellist, is announced at the age of sixty-seven. It was this artist who (some forty years ago) introduced the later quartets of Beethoven to the Parisian public. His successor as the Conservatoire, as professor of the violoncello, will in all likelihood by M. Léon Jacquard.—A new journal devoted to the promulgation of Wagnerian doctrine is about to appear at Bayreuth under the title of Bayreuther Blätter.—Herr Krebs, the well-known Hofcapellmeister, and father of Mdlle. Marie Krebs, the admirable pianist, denies, in a letter to the Dresdener Presse, the truth of a report that he is about to resign his past as Director of Music in the Court Roman Catholic Church in Dresden. Why should he relinquish duties he is still so thoroughly capable of fulfilling?—Herr Richard Wagner is again domiciled at Bayreuth, where, at the house he built for himself and christened "Wahnfried," he is busily employed on his new opera, Parcival.—The Variety Theatre at Pittsburg (U.S.) has been burnt to the ground.—Señor Sarasate, the Spanish violinist, who appeared some time since at the Crystal Palace Concerts, has been playing with much success at Berlin.—The Philharmonic orchestra of Vienna, during the Opera recess, will not only give concerts at the Paris International Exhibition, but also at our own Crystal Palace. If the Viennese could pay us a visit any time between October in one year and April in the year following, they would assuredly find and—like artists who are artists for art's sake—acknowledge, that the Sydenham orchestra under the direction of Mr. August Manns is at least equal to their own.—Madame Marie Roze, accompanied by her husband, Mr. Henry Mapleson, has left England to fulfil her engagement in the United States.—M. Gounod's new opera, Cinq Mars, is to be produced at the Scala, Milan, during the season of the Carnival.—Madame Annette Essipoff, the accomplished Russian pianist, has returned from Venice to St. Petersburg, and there is some reason to apprehend that she may not visit us this year—at least during that part of the season which presents most favourable opportunities for the exhibition of her remarkable talent as a genuine interpretess of classical music.

A "Fine Art Company."——The Government have undertaken the prosecution of a man named Alfred De Lara, who with two young girls whom he employed have been arrested on a charge of conspiring to defraud. It appeared that the defendant had advertised for ladies to do flower painting at their own homes, and that a large number of applicants had been induced to pay registration fees of a guinea each to have their names placed on the books of the "Company." They were told to supply specimens of their skill, which were invariably found fault with. The profitable nature of the swindle may be judged of by the fact that after the affair came to the knowledge of the police, a detective who was set to watch the premises saw in one day no fewer than thirty ladies visit the "art-emporium," all of whom complained of the fraud, but declined to prosecute, considering that to do so might be socially injurious to themselves. On another day about twenty ladies visited the place, and as none of them could be prevailed upon to come forward the officer sent his own wife, who paid the fee and got a printed receipt. The prisoner, who was subsequently arrested on a warrant, protested against the prosecution as tyrannical, and declared that even if he had done wrong the two young ladies who were charged with him were entirely innocent of all complicity. They were all, however, remanded, the girls being admitted to bail, but De Lom himself being detained in custody.

A Nice Child.—A boy, aged twelve, was last week charged at Brighton with having thrice attempted to commit suicide. The mother, a labourer's wife, stated that on the previous day the boy sulked about, refusing to dress, or to eat his breakfast, threatened to cut up his new boots, and did, in fact, throw them on the fire; and on her snatching them off, he became so violent that she left the room. Returning shortly afterwards she heard a strange noise in the bedroom, and found the boy hanging to the bed-post, his feet being clear of the floor, and his face quite black. She ran forward and held him up until some neighbours came and cut the cord; but the boy, on recovering consciousness, broke from them, and attempted to cut his throat with a knife, which she wrested from him, and he then caught up a kettle of boiling water and hurled it at her, upon which she went for the police. She added that the boy, who was of a dreadful temper, had thrown knives and forks at her, and had once flung the cat on the fire. The lad attributed his conduct to the drunken habits of his father, and a police officer said that the prisoner had been neglected by his parents until at last he had got the upper hand of them. This "nice child" was remanded for "further inquiries," which will probably lead to some interesting revelations.

Miscellaneous.——The Departmental Commission on the Detective Branch of the Metropolitan Police have concluded their inquiry, and their report will shortly be issued. Sir H. Selwin Ibbetson has acted as chairman.—A curious action for slander has just been heard in the Scotch Court of Session. A Miss Cosgrove, teacher in a Roman Catholic school at West Calder, who had been dismissed and re-instated, sued the Rev. Father Goldie, who one Sunday in October last year had stated publicly certain reasons for her dismissal, but added that there were "other serious faults." This phrase was regarded as an impeachment of her moral character, and the lady, who claimed 500*l.* damages, was awarded 250*l.*—A Manchester policeman, somewhat over-careful of public morals, last week summoned a gentleman for indulging in the popular exclamation, "Whoa, Emma!" which he considered an "obscene expression." He however failed to make out the charge to the satisfaction of the magistrate (Sir J. Mantell), who though unable to decide what "Whoa, Emma!" really meant dismissed the case, and reproved the constable for his ridiculously exuberant zeal.—An extensive swindle has been discovered at Birmingham, where a firm calling themselves "Bentley, Kemp and Co.," wine merchants, took premises some six weeks ago, and have since been advertising largely their "Renowned Guinea Christmas Hamper" (the newspapers in nearly every instance giving credit). They appear to have reaped a rich harvest, but the non-delivery of the goods led to complaints being made to the police, and on Tuesday Bentley was arrested just as he was preparing to leave the town, his confederates having already taken to flight. There was not a trace of wine, spirits, or goods of any kind upon the place, and no wine dealer's license could be found.—The Dundee police have made some novel and significant preparations for the approaching New Year convivialities, each station being provided with a bran-new double-springed wheelbarrow for the conveyance of any "drunk and incapable" who may be found in the streets.—On Christmas Day some of the foreign workmen employed at the New Law Courts while on the way to their lodgings were attacked by a number of English roughs. One of the Germans, who drew his knife and stabbed a man in the head, was taken into custody, and later in the day two of the foreigners were severely maltreated. Their assailants appear to have got clear off.



Messrs. Ransford and Sons.——A song which made its mark many years ago has been resuscitated by this firm, "A Cheer to keep our Hearts up," the dreary words—a narrative of a shipwreck—by the Hon. Mrs. Norton, the music by R. J. Spiers; this dismal song is scarcely worthy of revival.—A pretty ballad of an ordinary type and medium compass is "Come back, ye dreams," written and composed by J. Campbell and J. R. Thomas.—Piquante and original are both words and music of "If you love me, tell me so," a ballad written and composed by E. L. Whiting and H. Millard; bachelors will do well to take the advice therein contained; this song is published in two keys.—Foolish words and common-place music, the former by Percy Middleton, the latter by H. Millard, will be met with in "My Ship comes in."—Of two songs written and composed by E. Oxenford and M. Watson, the more pleasing of the two is "Homeward he is sailing," for a contralto.—"Thy Sentinel am I," a bass song, will find but few admirers.—As a rule Irish ballads are popular. "Eileen's Farewell" is an average specimen of its species, although there is nothing new either in its lively words, by J. Campbell, or its tuneful melody by E. Southwell.—The last-named poet has written some rather pretty words, "The Swiss Exile," and, with the help of M. Watson, adapted them to an air by C. M. von Weber; the result of their joint labours is far from satisfactory.—Two useful drawing-room pianoforte pieces are "Pleasing Moments," a musical sketch by Allan Macbeth, and "Moonlight Musings," by Henry Kleber.—"Helen's Babies" is the taking title of a galop by Jules Lemaire; neither the frontispiece nor the contents are worthy of the subject.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co.——A well-written anthem, for Advent, by W. Carter, is adapted for a church choir of limited capability and numbers; it is entitled "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand;" the words are from Holy Writ.—There is considerable promise in two selections from a cantata, "Adoration," composed by Austin T. Turner, although they bear strong evidence of the composer's admiration for and imitation of Mendelssohn. "The Lord is my Shepherd," is a solo for a contralto or mezzo-soprano. "Early in the Morning," a duet for contralto and tenor.

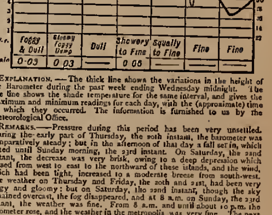
C. Jefferys.——One of the most reliable composers of the day, both vocal and instrumental, is Julia Woolf, from whom come three pianoforte pieces, tastefully and grammatically written; they are entitled respectively "Fascination," "La Harpe Magique"—the prettiest of the three—and "Shades of Evening."

Miscellaneous.——So numerous and efficient are the publications now in circulation for the benefit of old and young pianoforte students that it is surprising to find Lindsay Sloper adding yet another to the multitude. "Technical Guide to Touch, Fingering, and Execution on the Pianoforte," is the title of a number of carefully chosen, but for the most part familiar exercises and scales; there are also some valuable hints and suggestions by the compiler which will be found useful to the student (Messrs. Ashdown and Parry).—A pleasing song for a mezzo-soprano is "When love's glow hath gone by," written and composed by Mrs. Lees and Robert Stanley (Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co.).—"The Shadowless Shore," a pathetic poem by Helen Burnside, has been allied to an appropriate melody by David H. Wilson, M.A. (Messrs. Weekes and Co.).—Two fairly well written and simple tenor songs are "Philomel," words and music by Henry Guy, and "I Don't Mean to Tell You Her Name," by J. W. Cherry (J. A. Mills).—There is nothing very original in the "Grand March" from the Cantata "Christian the Pilgrim," by Wilford Morgan (Messrs. W. Morgan and Co.)—We have heard the like of "Galop de Bayazid," by Lady Cecil Gordon, scores of times before (W. Reeves).—The Christmas Number of Chappell's Musical Magazine contains ten sets of popular dance music by favourite composers; most of them are old friends, for example, "The Molly Darling Quadrille" and "The Constantinople Quadrille," by Charles d'Albert (Messrs. Chappell and Co.).—"Six Transcriptions for the Organ," by G. Shinn, are neat and useful arrangements of popular subjects from various oratorios by ancient great composers, suitable for inexperienced professors and amateurs (Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co.).—Brief, correct, and carefully written, "Six Pieces for the Pianoforte," by J. L. Summers, will be found useful studies for the schoolroom (Messrs. Goodwin and Tabb).—A pretty song for the drawing-room, is "The Prayer of the Fisher's Wife," written and composed by E. Oxenford and J. T. Field, published in C and E flat (C. Jefferys).—There is more promise for the future than present merit in a "Romance for the Pianoforte," by F. M. L. Pattison. "The Fairy Gavotte," by F. de Solla, is a tuneful composition of an ordinary type (Messrs. Weekes and Co.).

◆

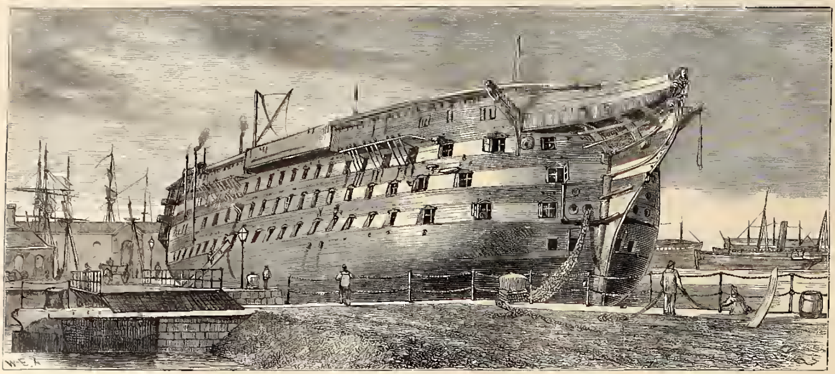
WEATHER CHART FOR THE WEEK

December 20th to December 26th (inclusive)

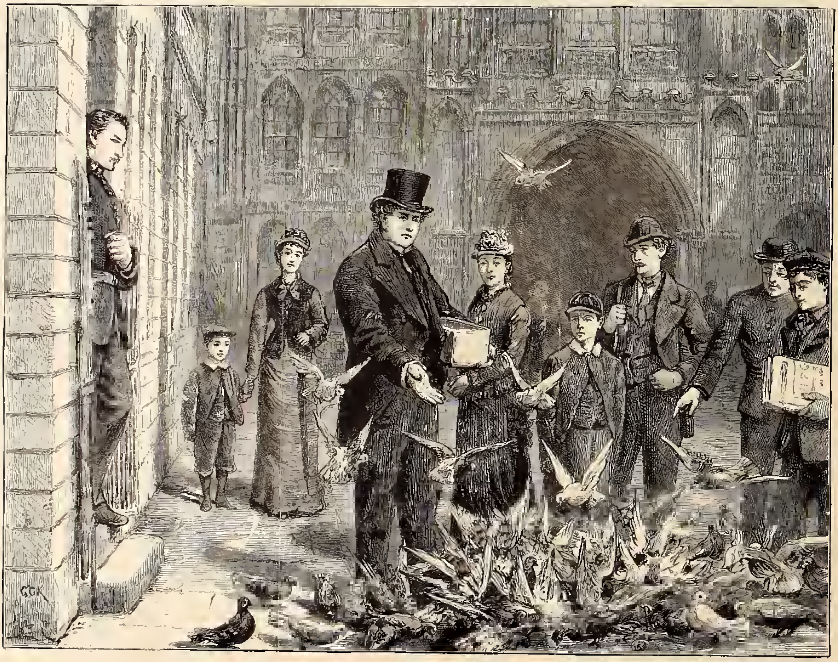


Explanation.——The thick line shows the variations in the height of the Barometer during the past week ending Wednesday midnight. The fine line shows the shade temperature for the same interval, and gives the maximum and minimum readings for each day, with the (approximate) time at which they occurred. The information is furnished to us by the Meteorological Office.

Remarks.——Pressure during this period has been very unsettled. During the early part of Thursday, the 20th instant, the barometer was comparatively steady; but in the afternoon of that day a fall set in, which lasted until Sunday morning, the 23rd instant. On Saturday, the 22nd instant, the decrease was very brisk, owing to a deep depression which passed from west to east to the northward of these islands, and the wind, which had been light, increased to a moderate breeze from south-west. The weather on Thursday and Friday, the 20th and 21st, had been very foggy and gloomy; but on Saturday, the 22nd instant, though the sky remained overcast, the fog disappeared, and at 8 a.m. on Sunday, the 23rd instant, the weather was fine. From 8 a.m. and until about 10 p.m. the barometer rose, and the weather in the metropolis was very fine. The next morning (Monday, the 24th instant), however, the barometer was falling again very quickly, and cloudy, squally weather prevailed. The influence of this depression ceased at about 2 p.m., the wind veered to north-west, the weather became very fine, and the barometer rose. This recovery only lasted for a few hours, and during Tuesday and Wednesday morning, the 25th and 26th, the barometer again fell briskly, the weather became overcast, and at about midnight on Tuesday, the 25th instant, rain and snow fell. Since that time the barometer has again risen, and the weather improved, with north-westerly breezes. Temperature has not changed much. It was rather high on Saturday, the 22nd instant; but has been generally about the average for the time of year. On Tuesday morning, the 25th instant, the thermometer fell to 28°. Very little rain has fallen. The barometer was highest (30·69 inches) at noon on Thursday, the 20th instant; lowest (29·34 inches) at 8 a.m. on Wednesday, the 26th instant; range, 1·35 inches. The thermometer was highest (50°) on Saturday, the 22nd instant; lowest (28°) on Tuesday, the 25th instant; range, 22°. Rain fell on three days; total, 0·12 inches.



H.M.S. "MARLBOROUGH," THE NEW TRAINING COLLEGE FOR NAVAL ENGINEER STUDENTS



FEEDING PIGEONS IN THE GUILDHALL YARD

BY CELIA'S ARBOUR.

BY THE AUTHORS OF

"READY-MONEY MORTIBOY," "THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY," "THIS SON OF VULCAN," &c.

CHAPTER XXXV.

A DIPLOMATIST

IT was not with any view of appealing to Herr Räumer's generosity that Leonard called upon him. Quite the contrary. He went to see what manner of man this alien would appear to him seen in the light of extended experience. And he avoided all reference to Celia. It was in the forenoon that he went. The German was sitting at his piano playing snatches of sentimental ditties and students' songs with a pipe between his lips, which he occasionally put down to warble something in French or German about Mariette remembering Lindor, and all the rest of it, or "How Love survives Absence," "How Hard it is for Friends to Part." His love for music never carried him beyond the ballad stage, and all the things he played were reminiscences of sometime spent among students or young officers at Heidelberg, Vienna, or Paris.

He got up—big, massive, imposing—and greeted his visitor cordially.

"Who comes to see me, drinks with me," he said, hospitably, "always excepting Ladislas Pulaski, who drinks with no one. Sit down, Captain Copleston. I am glad to see you so early. That shows that you are going to talk. So—a cigar——Lieb fraumilch—and good—so. When Fortune means most kindly to a man, she makes him a soldier. I congratulate you."

"You have served yourself?"

"I have—in the Austrian cavalry. I had an accident, and could ride no more. That is why I abandoned my career."

"Ah!" said Leonard, thoughtfully, "I knew you had been a soldier. One never quite loses the reminiscences of drill."

They went on talking in idle fashion.

"And you still keep up the same interest in the Poles, Herr Räumer?"

"Poles?" He started. "What interest?"

"When last I saw you, I was learning French at the Polish Barrack, and you used to ask me about them—you remember."

"Ah!—Yes.—So.—Yes. I remember perfectly. The poor Poles. But they are all gone now, except one or two, and I had forgotten them."

"Wassielewski remains. You know him?"

"By name, Ladislas talks about him." This was not true. "He is the irreconcileable Pole—the ideal Pole. A harmless enthusiast."

"Enthusiast, perhaps. Harmless, no."

"There are plenty like him about the world," said the German, quietly. "They seldom do mischief. They are in London, Paris, New York, and Stamboul. They are even in Moscow. Let them conspire."

"No mischief!" Leonard echoed. "The Russians prevent that by their secret service, I suppose." He looked at his friend steadily. "We know by Crimean experience how well that is conducted. Why—they had a Russian spy, disguised as a German, all through the war, in our own London War Office. But that you have heard, of course." Herr Räumer laughed.

"It was very neatly done. Any other but the English would have foreseen a Russian war, and taken care that some of their officers learned Russian."

"At all events, we get on, somehow."

"Yes; because you have a good geographical position; because you have money; and because you have the most wonderful luck. Wait till Russia gets Stamboul."

"When will that be?"

"And commands the Valley of the Euphrates. It is very clever of you to make of Moldavia and Wallachia an independent State; but who is to guard it? Suppose a time were to come when Austria—she is always Austria the Unready—was fettered with diplomatic chains, when France either would not or could not interfere in the Eastern Question, what is to prevent Russia from marching across the frontier of your Roumania? Treaties? Why, the whole history of the world is the history of broken treaties. Sooner or later she will try for Asia, from the Levant to Pekin. Of course that will include Afghanistan. Then she will try for India, and win it by force of numbers. Where will your greatness be then?"

"We have fought her before, and we will fight her again."

"Oh, yes; you can fight, you English. Perhaps you can fight better than any other people. That is to say, you can do with a hundred soldiers what Russia wants a hundred and twenty to accomplish. But you have only that hundred, and Russia has behind her hundred and twenty ten times a hundred and twenty more. You are commercially great because London has taken the place which the Constantinople of the future will hold, the commercial centre of the world. You have a great fleet. You will lose your great empire because you will not have a great army. England will become less formidable as armies grow greater. If you wish to preserve the power of England make every Englishman a soldier."

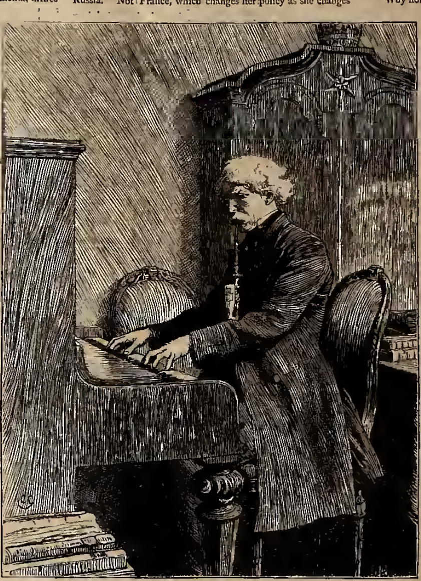
"That will never be," said Leonard.

"Then the days of England's supremacy are done."

He knocked out the ashes of his pipe, refilled it slowly, and lit up again.

"It is by her secret service which you despise that Russia defends herself, and steadily advances. She throws out her secret agents to watch, report, and, if necessary, make mischief. They are the irregular cavalry of politics. Sometimes they are called merchants or scientific explorers, sometimes they are disguised as missionaries, sometimes they are the ministers and rulers of the country corrupted by Russian gold or flattered with Russian skill. Russia makes no move till she has felt her way. Persia will be hers when the last relic of British influence has been bought out or wheedled out, and when Russian counsels have been able, unmolested, to bring the country into a fit condition for Russian occupation."

"I suppose that Russian influences are already at work in England itself?"



The German was sitting at his piano playing snatches of sentimental ditties and students' songs with a pipe between his lips

"Not yet," said Herr Räumer, laughing. "The conquest of England would cost too much. But Russian influences are already at work against British interests, wherever they can be met and injured. You have no enemy in the world except Russia. Not France, which changes her policy as she changes her Government once in every generation. Not America, which is a peaceful country, and more afraid of war than England. The enemy of England, the persistent and ever watchful enemy of England, is Russia, because it is England alone, at present, that can keep Russia from Constantinople."

"Well, you have forewarned us, at all events."

"Forewarned is nothing. You may forewarn a consumptive man that he will suffer in the lungs. That will not prevent the disease. You will go on in England, as you always do, learning nothing, preparing for nothing, acting always as if you had to do with men who tell the truth. Could any country be more stupid?"

"Why" asked Leonard, "should not nations be as honest as men?"

"So they are," he replied, "only you Englishmen will persist in supposing that men are not liars. An English gentleman, I will admit, always speaks the truth. At least he has been taught to do so, and it comes natural to him. But a common Englishman does not. The man who sells things to you lies habitually, in order to make his profit—lies like a Syrian—goes to church on Sundays, and thinks he is a Christian. An American, I suppose, is pretty nearly the same thing as an Englishman, unless he happens to be an Irish Catholic. I believe that Dutchmen, Danes, Swedes, and Norwegians—small nations without ambition—have a singular preference for the truth. But all other nations lie. I am a German, and I state that unblushingly. Those get on best who lie hardest."

"Suppose that one here and there were to speak the truth?"

"It would do him no good, because he would not be believed, unless he were an Englishman. Diplomacy is a game in which no one believes any one else. The truth lies behind the words—somewhere. It is our business—I mean the business of diplomatists—to find it out. First, you have the actual assurance of the Czar, we will say, conveyed by his ambassador. Of course no one, except, perhaps, an English newspaper, pretends for a moment to believe a pacific assurance. You receive it, and you try to find out what Russia is actually doing, which is a great deal more important. If you find that out, and are able to watch the movements of other Powers, you have a chance of understanding the truth.

"Everything stated openly is stated with intentions to deceive. That is the first rule in diplomacy. All friendly assurances must be received with suspicion. That is the second rule. The statement of disinterested action which is always made is, of course, received with derision. No nation is disinterested, except, sometimes, England. There has not been a disinterested action done by any single nation since the world began, save only one or two done by England. I grant you that. Statesmanship means lying for the good of your country, and there is a regular method which is known and adopted everywhere. Except to the ignorant people, it means nothing, and imposes on no one."

"Why not start fair again all round, and speak the truth?"

"What? and spoil the game? Heaven forbid! We have our little fictions in society, why not in diplomacy also? I do not want, as I once told Ladislas Pulaski, to live in a world gone good. It would be tedious to me, that kind of world. And, at my age, I cannot unlearn things. Let us go on as we have always gone on—one nation trying to cheat every other—ambassadors lying—secret service reduced to one of the fine arts—and let us watch the splendid spectacle, unequalled in history, of a nation following a line of policy from generation to generation, beaten at one point and carrying it forward at another—always advancing, always aided everywhere by a swarm of secret agents."

Afterwards repeating the conversation to me,

"The man," said Leonard, "is a Russian agent himself. I am certain of it. No German ever talked English so well: he has the best Russian manner: he is rusé, polished, and utterly cynically frank, unscrupulous, like all the people connected with the Russian Government. He has an important mission here, no doubt, and must have picked up a good deal of information during all these years. I wonder what his name is, and what his real rank in the police."

"You are only guessing, Leonard."

"Perhaps, but I am sure, all the same. My dear boy, I know them. There were Russian papers on the table, too. I saw the Golos, of Moscow, among others. He is no more a German than you or I. 'Served in the Austrian Cavalry.' Fudge and flapdoodle! as Mrs. Pontifex says. Curious, to see the patronising way in which he talked: I am only a young officer of that stupid nation where diplomatists speak the truth. I should like to check-mate our friend on his own ground."

"But,—Celia?"

"Do you think I am going to let Celia be handed over to a Russian spy?" he asked, grandly. "A Russian officer would be a different thing. There are splendid fellows among them. But a spy? Pah! The thought makes me feel ill. Besides, Laddy," he laughed, "I don't think we will let Celia go out of England at all. She is too good for any but an Englishman."

CHAPTER XXXVI.

THE FOURTH ESTATE

I WAS sitting in Leonard's quarters two days afterwards, idling the time with him, when I became aware of a familiar figure walking slowly across the barrack yard. It was that of Mr. Ferdinand Brambler. I had not seen any of the family for some time, having been entirely occupied with Celia, Leonard, and my Polish schemes. He bore himself with quite his old solemnity, but there was something in his manner which showed change and decay—a kind of mouldiness. As he drew nearer it became too evident that his outer garments were much the worse for wear, his boots down at heel, and his whole appearance pinched and hungry.

Things must have been going badly with the children. My heart smote me for neglecting the Bramblers. Were all of them, including my poor little bright-eyed Forty-four, in the same hungry and dilapidated condition?

He made straight for Leonard's quarters, and, coming in out of the broad sunlight, did not at first see me.

"Captain Copleston?" he asked timidly.

"I am Captain Copleston," said Leonard. "What can I do for you?"

"Sir," said the great Ferdinand, drawing himself up, "I introduce myself as representing the Fourth Estate. I am the Printing Press."

"You don't look like one," replied Leonard, flippantly. "But go on."

"Don't you know me, Mr. Ferdinand?" I asked, jumping up and shaking hands with him. "Leonard, this is my old friend, cutting, and entered it. It was then seen what this mournful procession meant. The mob was composed of two distinct groups. The first carried on its shoulders a plank, on which could be seen stretched an old man with a white beard, stark, the mouth open, the eyes fixed, and with a hole in his forehead. The swinging movement of the bearers shook the corpse, and the dead head rose and fell in a threatening and pathetic manner. One of the men who carried him, pale, and wounded in the breast, placed his hand to his wound, leaned against the feet of the old man, and at times himself appeared ready to fall. The other group bore a second litter, on which a young man was stretched, his countenance pale and his eyes closed, his shirt stained, open over his breast, displaying his wounds. While bearing the two litters the groups sang. They sang the "Marseillaise," and at each chorus they stopped and raised their torches, crying, "To arms!" Some young men waved drawn swords. The torches shed a lurid light on the pallid foreheads of the corpses and on the livid faces of the crowd. A shudder ran through the people. It appeared as though they again saw the terrible vision of February, 1848.

This gloomy procession came from the Rue Aumaire. About eight o'clock some thirty workmen gathered together from the neighbourhood of the markets, the same who on the next day raised the barricade of the Guérin-Boisseau, reached the Rue Aumaire by the Rue de Petit Lion, the Rue Neuve-Bourg-l'Abbé, and the Carré St. Martin. They came to fight, but here the combat was at an end. The infantry had withdrawn after having pulled down the barricades. Two corpses, an old man of seventy and a young man of five-and-twenty, lay at the corner of the street on the ground, with uncovered faces, their bodies in a pool of blood, their heads on the pavement where they had fallen. Both were dressed in overcoats, and seemed to belong to the middle class. The old man had his hat by his side; he was a venerable figure with a white beard, white hair, and a calm expression. A ball had pierced his skull.

The young man's breast was pierced with buck-shot. One was the father, the other the son. The son, seeing his father fall, had said, "I also will die." Both were lying side by side.

Opposite the gateway of the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers there was a house in course of building. They fetched two planks from it, they laid the corpses on the planks, the crowd raised them upon their shoulders, they brought torches, and they began their march. In the Rue St. Denis a man in a white blouse barred the way.—"Where are you going?" said he to them. "You will bring about disasters! You are helping the 'Twenty-five francs!'"—"Down with the police! Down with the white blouse!" shouted the crowd. The man slunk away.

The mob swelled on its road; the crowd opened out and repeated the "Marseillaise" in chorus, but with the exception of a few swords no one was armed. On the Boulevard the emotion was intense. Women clasped their hands in pity. Workmen were heard to exclaim: "And to think that we have no arms!"

The procession, after having for some time followed the Boulevards, re-entered the streets, followed by a deeply-affected and angry multitude. In this manner it reached the Rue de Gravilliers. Then a squad of twenty sergents de ville suddenly emerging from a narrow street rushed with drawn swords upon the men who were carrying the litters, and overturned the corpses into the mud. A regiment of Chasseurs came up at the double, and put an end to the conflict with bayonet thrusts. A hundred and two citizen prisoners were conducted to the Prefecture. The two corpses received several sword-cuts in the confusion, and were killed a second time. The brigadier Revial, who commanded the squad of the sergents de ville, received the Cross of Honour for this deed of arms.

At Marie's we were on the point of being surrounded. We decided to leave the Rue Croix des Petits Champs.

At the Elysée they commenced to tremble. The ex-commandant Fleury, one of the aides-de-camps of the Presidency, was summoned into the little room where M. Bonaparte had remained throughout the day. M. Bonaparte conferred a few moments alone with M. Fleury, then the aide-de-camp came out of the room, mounted his horse, and galloped off in the direction of Mazas.

After this the men of the Coup d'État met together in M. Bonaparte's room, and held council. Matters were visibly going badly; it was probable that the battle would end by assuming formidable proportions. Up to that time they had desired this, now they did not feel sure that they did not fear it. They pushed forward towards it, but they mistrusted it. There were alarming symptoms in the steadfastness of the resistance, and others not less serious in the cowardice of adherents. Not one of the new Ministers appointed during the morning had taken possession of his Ministry—a significant timidity on the part of people ordinarily so prompt to throw themselves upon such things. M. Rouher, in particular, had disappeared, no one knew where—a sign of tempest. Putting Louis Bonaparte on one side the Coup d'État continued to rest solely upon three names, Morny, St. Arnaud, and Maupas. St. Arnaud answered for Magnan. Morny laughed and said in a whisper, "But does Magnan answer for St. Arnaud?" These men adopted energetic measures, they sent for new regiments; an order to the garrisons to march upon Paris was despatched in the one direction as far as Cherbourg, and on the other as far as Maubeuge. These criminals, in the main deeply uneasy, sought to deceive each other. They assumed a cheerful countenance; all spoke of victory; each in the background arranged for flight; in secret, and saying nothing, in order not to give the alarm to his compromised colleagues, so as, in case of failure, to leave the people some men to devour. For this little school of Machiavellian apes the hopes of a successful escape lie in the abandonment of their friends. During their flight they throw their accomplices behind them.

X.

WHAT FLEURY WENT TO DO AT MAZAS

DURING the same night towards four o'clock the approaches of the Northern Railway Station were silently invested by two regiments; one of Chasseurs de Vincennes, the other of gendarmerie mobile. Numerous squads of sergents de ville installed themselves in the terminus. The station master was ordered to prepare a special train and to have an engine ready. A certain number of stokers and engineers for night service were retained. No explanation however was vouchsafed to any one, and absolute secresy was maintained. A little before six o'clock a movement was apparent in the troops. Some sergents de ville came running up, and a few minutes afterwards a squadron of lancers emerged at a sharp trot from the Rue de Nord. In the centre of the squadron and between the two lines of horse-soldiers could be seen two police-vans drawn by post-horses, behind each vehicle came a little open barouche, in which there sat one man. At the head of the lancers galloped the aide-de-camp Fleury.

The procession entered the courtyard, then the railway station, and the gates and doors were reclosed.

The two men in the barouches made themselves known to the Special Commissary of the station, to whom the aide-de-camp Fleury spoke privately. This mysterious convoy excited the curiosity of the railway officials; they questioned the policemen, but these knew nothing. All that they could tell was that these police vans contained eight places, that in each van there were four prisoners, each occupying a cell, and that the four other cells were filled by four sergents-de-ville placed between the prisoners so as to prevent any communication between the cells.

After various consultations between the aide-de-camp of the Elysée and the men of the Prefect Maupas, the two police-vans were placed on railway trucks, each having behind it the open barouche like a wheeled sentry-box, where a police agent acted as sentinel. The engine was ready, the trucks were attached to the tender, and the train started. It was still pitch dark.

For a long time the train sped on in the most profound silence. Meanwhile it was freezing, in the second of the two police vans the sergents-de-ville, cramped and chilled, opened their cells, and in order to warm and stretch themselves walked up and down the narrow gangway which runs from end to end in the police-vans. Day had broken, the four sergents-de-ville inhaled the outside air and gazed at the passing country through a species of port hole which borders each side of the ceiling of the passage. Suddenly a loud voice issued from one of the cells which had remained closed, and cried out:—"Hey! there! it is very cold, cannot I relight my cigar here?"

Another voice immediately issued from a second cell and said, "What! it is you! Good morning, Lamoricière!"

"Good morning, Cavaignac!" replied the first voice.

General Cavaignac and General Lamoricière had just recognised each other.

A third voice was raised from a third cell.

"Ah! you are there, gentlemen. Good morning, and a pleasant journey."

He who spoke then was General Changarnier.

"Generals!" cried out a fourth voice. "I am one of you!"

The three generals recognised M. Baze. A burst of laughter came from the four cells simultaneously.

This police-van in truth contained, and was carrying away from Paris, the Questor Baze, and the Generals Lamoricière, Cavaignac, and Changarnier. In the other vehicle, which was placed foremost on the trucks, there were Colonel Charras, Generals Bedeau and Le Flô, and Count Roger (du Nord).

At midnight these eight Representative prisoners were sleeping in their cells at Mazas, when they heard a sudden knocking at their doors, and a voice cried out to them, "Dress, they are coming to fetch you." "Is it to shoot us?" cried Charras from the other side of the door. They did not answer him.

It is worth remarking that this idea came simultaneously to all. And in truth, if we can believe what has since transpired through the quarrels of accomplices, it appears that in the event of a sudden attack being made by us upon Mazas to deliver them, a fusillade had been resolved upon, and that Saint Arnaud had in his pocket the written order, signed "Louis Bonaparte."

The prisoners got up. Already on the preceding night a similar notice had been given to them. They had passed the night on their feet, and at six o'clock in the morning the gaoler said to them: "You can go to bed." The hours passed by; they ended by thinking it would be the same as the preceding night, and many of them, hearing five o'clock strike from the clock tower inside the prison, were going to get back into bed, when the doors of their cells were opened. All the eight were taken downstairs one by one into the clerk's office in the Rotunda, and were then ushered into the police-van without having met or seen each other during the passage. A man dressed in black, with an impertinent bearing, seated at a table, with pen in hand, stopped them on their way, and asked their names: "I am no more disposed to tell you my name that I am curious to learn yours," answered General Lamoricière, and he passed outside.

The aide-de-camp Fleury, concealing his uniform under his hooded cloak, stationed himself in the clerk's office. He was charged, to use his own words, to "embark" them, and to go and report their "embarkation" at the Elysée. The aide-de-camp Fleury had passed nearly the whole of his military career in Africa in General Lamoricière's division; and it was General Lamoricière who in 1848, then being Minister of War, had promoted him to the rank of major. While passing through the clerk's office, General Lamoricière looked fixedly at him.

When they entered the police-vans the generals were smoking cigars. They took them from them. General Lamoricière had kept his. A voice from outside cried three separate times: "Stop his smoking!" A sergent de ville who was standing by the door of the cell hesitated for some time, but however ended by saying to the general: "Throw away your cigar."

Thence later on ensued the exclamation which caused General Cavaignac to recognise General Lamoricière. The vehicles having been loaded they set off.

They did not know either with whom they were or where they were going. Each observed for himself in his box the turnings of the streets, and tried to speculate. Some believed that they were being taken to the Northern Railway Station; others thought to the Havre Railway Station. They heard the trot of the escort on the paving-stones.

On the railway the discomfort of the cells greatly increased. General Lamoricière, encumbered with a parcel and a cloak, was still more jammed in than the others. He could not move, the cold seized him, and he ended by the exclamation which put all four of them in communication with each other.

On hearing the names of the prisoners their keepers, who up to that time had been rough, became respectful. "I say there," said General Changarnier, "open our cells, and let us walk up and down the passage like yourselves."—"General," said a sergent de ville, "we are forbidden to do so. The Commissary of Police is behind the carriage in a barouche, whence he sees everything that is taking place here." Nevertheless, a few moments afterwards, the keepers, under pretext of cold, pulled up the ground-glass window which closed the vehicle on the side of the Commissary, and having thus "blocked the police," as one of them remarked, they opened the cells of the prisoners.

It was with great delight that the four Representatives met again and shook hands. Each of these three generals at this demonstrative moment maintained the character of his temperament. Lamoricière, impetuous and witty, throwing himself with all his military energy upon "the Bonaparte;" Cavaignac, calm and cold; Changarnier, silent, and looking out through the port-hole at the landscape. The sergents-de-ville ventured to put in a word here and there. One of them related to the prisoners that the ex-Prefect Carlier had spent the night of the First and Second at the Prefecture of Police. "As for me," said he, "I left the Prefecture at midnight, but I saw him up to that hour, and I can affirm that at midnight he was there still."

They reached Creil, and then Noyon. At Noyon they gave them some breakfast without letting them get out, a hurried morsel and a glass of wine. The Commissaries of Police did not open their lips to them. Then the carriages were reclosed, and they felt they were being taken off the trucks and being replaced on the wheels. Post horses arrived, and the vehicles set out, but slowly; they were now escorted by a company of infantry gendarmerie mobile.

When they left Noyon they had been ten hours in the police-van. Meanwhile the infantry halted. They asked permission to get out for a moment.—"We consent," said one of the Commissaries of the Police, "but only for a minute, and on condition that you will give your word of honour not to escape." —We will not give our word of honour," replied the prisoners. "Gentlemen," continued the Commissary, "give it to me only for one minute, the time to drink a glass of water." "No," said General Lamoricière, "the time to do the contrary," and he added:—"To Louis Bonaparte's health." They allowed them to get out, one by one, and they were able to inhale for a moment the fresh air in the open country by the side of the road.

Then the convoy resumed its march.

As the day waned they saw through their port-hole a mass of high walls, somewhat overtopped by a great round tower. A moment afterwards the carriages entered beneath a low archway, and then stopped in the centre of a long courtyard, steeply embanked, surrounded by high walls, and commanded by two buildings, of which one had the appearance of a barrack, and the other, with bars at all the windows, had the appearance of a prison. The doors of the carriages were opened. An officer who wore a captain's epaulettes was standing by the steps. General Changarnier came down the first.—"Where are we?" said he.

The officer answered, "You are at Ham."

This officer was the Commandant of the Fort. He had been appointed to this post by General Cavaignac.

The journey from Noyon to Ham had lasted three hours and a half. They had spent thirteen hours in the police-vans, of which ten were on the railway.

They led them separately into the prison, each to the room that was allotted to him. However, General Lamoricière having been taken by mistake into Cavaignac's room, the two generals could again exchange a shake of the hand. General Lamoricière wished to write to his wife; the only letter which the Commissaries of Police consented to take charge of was a note containing this line:—"I am well."

The principal building of the prison of Ham is composed of a storey above the ground floor. The ground floor is traversed by a dark and low archway, which leads from the principal courtyard into a back yard, and contains three rooms separated by a passage; the first floor contains five rooms. One of the three rooms on the ground floor is only a little ante-room, almost uninhabitable; there they lodged M. Baze. In the remaining lower chambers they installed General Lamoricière and General Changarnier. The five other prisoners were distributed in the five rooms of the first floor.

The room allotted to General Lamoricière had been occupied in the time of the captivity of the Ministers of Charles X. by the ex-Minister of Marine, M. d'Haussez. It was a low, damp room, long uninhabited, and which had served as a chapel, adjoining the dreary archway which led from one courtyard to the other, floored with great planks slimy and mouldy, to which the foot adhered, papered with a grey paper which had turned green, and which hung in rags, exuding saltpetre from the floor to the ceiling, lighted by two barred windows looking on to the courtyard. These windows had always to be left open on account of the smoky chimney. At the bottom of the room was the bed, and between the windows a table and two straw-bottomed chairs. The damp ran down the walls. When General Lamoricière left this room he carried away rheumatism him; M. d'Haussez went out crippled.

When the eight prisoners had entered their rooms, the doors were shut upon them; they heard the bolts shot from outside, and they were told:—"You are in close confinement."

General Cavaignac occupied on the first floor the former room of M. Louis Bonaparte, the best in the prison. The first thing which struck the eye of the General was an inscription traced on the wall, and stating the day when Louis Bonaparte had entered this fortress, and the day when he had left it, as is well known, disguised as a mason, and with a plank on his shoulder. Moreover, the choice of this building was an attention on the part of M. Louis Bonaparte, who having in 1848 taken the place of General Cavaignac in power, wished that in 1851 General Cavaignac should take his place in prison.

"Turn and turn about!" Morny had said, smiling.

The prisoners were guarded by the 48th of the Line, who formed the garrison at Ham. The old Bastilles are quite impartial. They obey those who make Coups d'État until the day when they clutch them. What do these words matter to them, Equity, Truth, Conscience, which moreover in certain circles do not move men any more than stones? They are the cold and gloomy servants of the just and of the unjust. They take whatever is given them. All is good to them. Are they guilty? Good! Are they innocent? Excellent! This man is the organiser of an ambush. To prison! This man is the victim of an ambush! Enter him in the prison register! In the same room. To the dungeon with all the vanquished!

These hideous Bastilles resemble that old human justice which possessed precisely as much conscience as they have, which condemned Socrates and Jesus, and which also takes and leaves, seizes and releases, absolves and condemns, liberates and incarcerates, opens and shuts, at the will of whatever hand manipulates the bolt from outside.

XI.

THE END OF THE SECOND DAY

WE left Marie's house just in time. The regiment charged to track us and to arrest us was approaching. We heard the measured steps of soldiers in the gloom. The streets were dark. We dispersed. I will not speak of a refuge which was refused to us.

Less than ten minutes after our departure M. Marie's house was invested. A swarm of guns and swords poured in, and overran it from cellar to attic. "Everywhere! everywhere!" cried the chiefs. The soldiers sought us with considerable energy. Without taking the trouble to lean down and look, they ransacked under the beds with bayonet thrusts. Sometimes they had difficulty in withdrawing the bayonets which they had driven into the wall. Unfortunately for this zeal, we were not there.

This zeal came from higher sources. The poor soldiers obeyed. "Kill the Representatives," such were their instructions. It was at that moment when Morny sent this despatch to Maupas: "If you take Victor Hugo, do what you like with him." These were their politest phrases. Later on the Coup d'État in its decree of banishment, called us "those individuals," which caused Schœlcher to say these haughty words: "These people do not even know how to exile politely."

Dr. Véron, who publishes in his "Memoires" the Morny-Maupas despatch, adds: "M. de Maupas sent to look for Victor Hugo at the house of his brother-in-law, M. Victor Foucher, Councillor to the Court of Cassation. He did not find him."

An old friend, a man of heart and of talent, M. Henry d'E——, had offered me a refuge in rooms which he occupied in the Rue Richelieu; these rooms, adjoining the Théâtre Français, were on the first floor of a house which, like M. Grévy's residence, had an exit into the Rue Fontaine Molière.

I went there. M. Henry d'E—— being from home, his porter was awaiting me, and handed me the key.

A candle lighted the room which I entered. There was a table near the fire, a blotting-book, and some paper. It was past midnight, and I was somewhat tired; but, before going to bed, foreseeing that if I should survive this adventure I should write its history, I resolved immediately to note down some details of the state of affairs in Paris at the end of this day, the second of the Coup d'État. I wrote this page, which I reproduce here, because it is a life-like portrayal—a sort of direct photograph:

"Louis Bonaparte has invented something which he calls a 'Consultative Committee,' and which he commissions to draw up the postscript of his crimes.

"Léon Faucher refuses to be in it; Montalembert hesitates; Baroche accepts.

"Falloux despises Dupin.

"The first shots were fired at the Record Office. In the Markets, in the Rue Rambuteau, in the Rue Beaubourg I heard firing.

"Fleury, the aide-de-camp, ventured to pass down the Rue Montmartre. A musket ball pierced his képi. He galloped quickly off. At one o'clock the regiments were summoned to vote on the Coup d'État. All gave their adhesion. The students of law and medicine assembled together at the École de Droit to protest. The Municipal Guards dispersed them. There were a great many arrests. This evening, patrols are everywhere. Sometimes an entire regiment forms a patrol.

"Representative Hespel, who is six feet high, was not able to find a cell long enough for him at Mazas, and he has been obliged to remain in the porter's lodge, where he is carefully watched.

"Mesdames Odilon Barrot and De Tocqueville do not know where their husbands are. They go from Mazas to Mont Valérien. The gaolers are dumb. It is the 19th Light Infantry which attacked the barricade when Baudin was killed. Fifty men of the gendarmerie mobile have carried at the double the barricade of the Oratoire in the Rue St. Honoré. Moreover, the conflict reveals itself. They sound the tocsin at the Chapelle Bréa. One barricade overturned sets twenty barricades on their feet. There is the barricade of the Schools in the Rue St. André des Arts, the barricade of the Rue du Temple, the barricade of the Carréfour Phélippeaux defended by twenty young men who have all been killed; they are reconstructing it; the barricade of the Rue de Bretagne, which at this moment Courtigis is bombarding. There is the barricade of the Invalides, the barricade of the Barrière des Martyres, the barricade of the Chapelle St. Denis. The councils of war are sitting in permanence, and order all prisoners to be shot. The 30th of the Line have shot a woman. Oil upon fire.

"The colonel of the 49th of the Line has resigned. Louis Bonaparte has appointed in his place Lieutenant-Colonel Négrier. M. Brun, Officer of the Police of the Assembly, was arrested at the same time as the Questors.

"It is said that fifty members of the majority have signed a protest at M. Odilon Barrot's house.

"This evening there is an increasing uneasiness at the Elysée. Incendiarism is feared. Two battalions of engineer-sappers have reinforced the Fire Brigade. Maupas has placed guards over the gasometers.

"Here are the military talons by which Paris has been grasped: Bivouacs at all the strategical points. At the Pont Neuf and the Quai aux Fleurs, the Municipal Guards; at the Place de la Bastille twelve pieces of cannon, three mortars, lighted matches; at the corner of the Faubourg the six-storied houses are occupied by soldiers from top to bottom; the Marulaz brigade at the Hotel de Ville; the Sauboul brigade at the Panthéon; the Courtigis brigade at the Faubourg St. Antoine; the Renaud division at the Faubourg St. Marceau. At the Legislative Palace the Chasseurs de Vincennes, and a battalion of the 15th Light Infantry; in the Champs Elysées infantry and cavalry; in the Avenue Marigny artillery. Inside the circus is an entire regiment; it has bivouacked there all night. A squadron of the Municipal Guard is bivouacking in the Place Dauphine. A bivouac in the Council of State. A bivouac in the courtyard of the Tuilleries. In addition, the garrisons of St. Germain and of Courbevoie. Two colonels killed, Loubeau, of the 75th, and Quilio. On all sides hospital attendants are passing, bearing litters. Ambulances are everywhere; in the Bazar de l'Industrie (Boulevard Poissonnière); in the Salle St. Jean at the Hotel de Ville; in the Rue du Petit Carreau. In this gloomy battle nine brigades are engaged. All have a battery of artillery; a squadron of cavalry maintains the communications between the brigades; forty thousand men are taking part in the struggle, with a reserve of sixty thousand men; a hundred thousand soldiers upon Paris. Such is the Army of the Crime. The Reibell brigade, the first and second Lancers, protect the Elysée. The Ministers are all sleeping at the Ministry of the Interior, close by Morny. Morny watches, Magnan commands. To-morrow will be a terrible day."

This page written, I went to bed, and fell asleep.

END OF THE SECOND DAY OF THE "HISTORY OF A CRIME."

Important Notice.

WE SHALL SHORTLY PUBLISH (WITH ILLUSTRATIONS)
THE CONCLUDING PORTION OF M. VICTOR HUGO'S NARRATIVE, WHICH CARRIES
"THE HISTORY OF A CRIME"
UP TO
THE FALL OF SEDAN.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC ADMIRER sends us the following sonnet on

VICTOR HUGO

MARVELLOUS master of the potent pen;
  Meteor-brilliant genius of France;
  Wizard of wonder; ruler of romance;
Weaver of webs that catch the minds of men
In filaments of fancy; denizen
  In mental mazes; Liberty's free-lance;
  Magical minstrel whose weird songs entrance,
Thrilling cold hearts, that throb with fire again,
Thrilling and chilling with grim imagery
  Born on Thought's marge, where Madness faces Mind;
Friend of the children; great heart who would see
  The loving brotherhood of all mankind;—
In thee we find the love of Liberty
  With love of Law and love of Man combined!

LETO

PANTOMIMES PAST AND PRESENT

I WONDER if any little boy who, after having all his moral lessons turned topsey-turvey by witnessing a pantomime, was ever seized by a secret desire to rob butchers' shops, cut policemen in half, sit upon "Baby" until it was flattened, and afterwards run-a-muck with its lifeless body for a weapon? I know there's many a one would think it capital fun. But as so many generations of children have revelled in the villainies of Clown without any such direful results following, I suppose it would be useless for me, even if I had the desire, which I have not, to preach against a form of entertainment without which a great many people could not realise that Christmas is Christmas. So I will e'en content myself with giving what may prove more acceptable—a brief sketch of the origin and rise of this species of entertainment.

The characters of our modern pantomime are, with the exception of Clown, borrowed from the Italians; they were introduced into France by a company of those comedians in the time of Catherine de Medicis. Arlecchino was the alias of one of the actors, the word signifying a greedy fellow. He wore a mask, carried a magic bat, and his dress was of patches, though loose—resembling our clown's. But he was not dumb, on the contrary, he was a very witty fellow, who had a quip and a crank upon his tongue for everybody; he was "the abstract and brief chronicle of the time," holding up vice and folly to ridicule. He had his Columbine, his Pantaloon, and the French gave him Scaramouche. Harlequin and his merry troup were brought over to England by a French company in 1717. In 1719 Harlequin Hydaspes, or the Greshamites, was performed at the theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields. The next year witnessed, at the same house, the birth of what was really the first English pantomime. It was entitled Harlequin Executed, and was described in the advertisement in the Daily Courant as "A new Italian mimic scene, between a Scaramouche, a Harlequin, a country farmer, his wife, and others." Rich, the manager, was the original of the dumb Harlequin, and was the first who donned the tight-spangled dress, which costume, however, did not become general until Byrne wore it at the beginning of the present century. Rich made him dumb because he could not deliver a word of dialogue. But in pantomimic expression, whether it were comic or pathetic, his talents rose almost to genius, and he could equally convulse his audience with laughter, or melt them to tears. From that time, pantomime took a firm hold of our stage, and became an entertainment so popular that no manager could afford to dispense with it. Its construction, however, was very different to that to which we are now accustomed. The opening and harlequinade were blended. A classic or mediæval fable, illustrated by handsome scenery, dresses, music, and dancing, formed the plot, the serious portions being varied by scenes between Harlequin, Columbine, and Scaramouche, much as the old Coburg and Surrey melodramas used to be relieved by front scenes between the comic characters. Harlequin was always the master of the situation, and could in an instant transform a palace into a hovel, men and women into trees or stools, or any form he thought fit. Even in the earlier decades of this century much of the old form was preserved, except that the harlequinade was distinct from the opening.

"How different were the Christmas pantomimes of my younger days," sighs Planché. "A pretty story—a nursery tale—dramatically told, in which the course of true love never did run smooth—formed the opening; the characters being a cross-grained old father, with a pretty daughter who had two suitors—one a poor young fellow, whom she preferred, the other a wealthy fop, whose pretensions were of course favoured by the father. There was also a bad servant of some sort in the old man's establishment. At the moment when the young lady was about to be forcibly married to the fop she despised, or on the point of eloping with the youth of her choice, the good fairy made her appearance, and changing the refractory pair into Harlequin and Columbine, the old curmudgeon into Pantaloon, and the body-servant into Clown, the two latter, in company with the rejected 'lover,' as he was called, commenced the pursuit of the happy pair, and 'the comic business' consisted of a dozen or more cleverly constructed scenes in which all the tricks and changes had a meaning, and were introduced as contrivances to favour the escape of Harlequin and Columbine when too closely pursued by enemies."

In the employment of machinery, and even in those rapid transformations technically called "tricks," the old pantomimes were by no means contemptible. In Perseus and Andromeda (1748) the playbill informs us that a dome rose from beneath the stage; that Perseus, mounted on his horse, suspended in air, attacked a fiery dragon; streets were changed into beds of tulips, and shops into twisting serpents; while in another an effect, supposed to have been first introduced into a recent pantomime, (The House That Jack Built), the building of a house before the audience was represented.

Rich's pupil and successor was the celebrated Woodward, who restored the speaking Harlequin to the stage, and was besides an admirable actor in the legitimate drama. His wit and vivacity in this rôle are highly spoken of by contemporaries. He was also the author of some of the most successful pantomimes of his day. Yates, of the Garrick time, was another delightful Harlequin to Kitty Clive's Columbine. So also was King, the original Sir Peter Teazle. Liston and Miss Kelly once appeared as the pantomime hero and heroine. Elliston and Edmund Kean both in their time donned the spangled dress.

These entertainments were not, in the last century, restricted to Christmas, but were produced at any period of the season most convenient. They always proved enormously successful. Fleetwood, the manager of Drury Lane, in an address published in the Public Advertiser in 1747, says:—"The receipts of the house are a sufficient evidence, it being notorious how necessary the addition of such pieces is towards procuring the best play a numerous audience."

Although the costly and elaborate Transformation Scene was then unknown, large sums were spent upon the mounting of these pieces. Even at Sadler's Wells in 1757, Victor tells us, in his "History of Theatres," 500*l*. was expended upon one.

In 1758 the Grimaldis arrived in England, and from that year may be dated the rise of the Clown—a character for which the son, Joseph Grimaldi, did what Rich had done for Harlequin. "Joe" made his first appearance at Drury Lane in the famous pantomime of Mother Goose. Like many other celebrated productions which have taken the public by storm, it was only after many rejections that this venerable old lady was first brought forward. Thomas Dibdin, the author, the Blanchard of his day, tells us in his "Reminiscences" that, although engaged to write a pantomime each year for Drury Lane, the autumn of 1806 was advanced so far without his receiving any instructions that he imagined none was to be produced. But six weeks before Christmas, Harris, the manager, called upon him one day in a great hurry. "We must have a pantomime, after all," he said. He had evidently been trying to do without it, and found he could not. "You have some sketches by you that you can work up in the time?" "Yes," replied Dibdin, "I have one I have particularly recommended you for the last five years, and which you have always refused." "Oh, what, that Mother Goose? Well, let's look at her again. She has certainly one recommendation—she wants no finery, no grand scenery; so e'en set everybody to work at once." And so Mother Goose was produced on Boxing Night, with Joe Grimaldi as Clown, and proved the most successful pantomime ever produced. Between that and the following Christmas it was performed on 111 nights, and put thousands into the pockets of the managers.

With Grimaldi pantomime rose to its greatest height—"to fall again as low." "There is no describing," says Planché, "the richness of his humour, the expression of his countenance, the variety of his resources, and his skill in their employment. Those alone who, like me, can remember him as Kasrack in Pocock's Aladdin, and as the Black Pirate in a drama of that name, can conceive the power of his acting parts of character and depicting the passions."

Mr. William Beverly may justly claim to be the inventor of the present gorgeous transformation scene. It was in 1847, in an extravaganza at the Lyceum, entitled The Golden Branch, that his artistic abilities in this line were first brought prominently forward. Then followed The King of the Peacocks and The Seven Champions at the same house. In the Island of Jewels, Planché tells us that a transformation scene, which consisted simply of the leaves of a palm-tree falling and discovering six fairies supporting a coronet of jewels, made an immense sensation. And that was little more than a quarter of a century ago!

Without such a reminder we could scarcely realise how rapid has been the growth of that marvellous complexity of mechanism, painting, gilding, lime-lights, coloured fires, and ballet-girls which we now call a Transformation Scene. Upon this one effect now depends the success or failure. Dancers, singers, plot, pantomimists are all secondary to this consideration. The glories of Clown and Harlequin have paled before these brilliancies, and pantomime, as our fathers and grandfathers knew it, is a thing of the past.

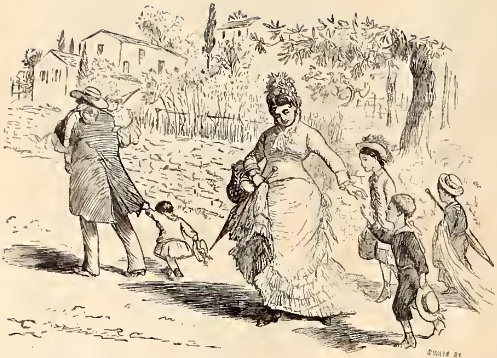
H. BARTON BAKER

"NORTH ITALIAN FOLK"

WE have already briefly noticed this charming little work by Mrs. Comyns Carr (Chatto and Windus), with its quaint and characteristic drawings by Mr. Randolph Caldecott, whose clever pencil so admirably illustrated the editions of "Old Christmas" and "Bracebridge Hall," which were published last Christmas and the preceeding year. "North Italian Folk" is assuredly one of the very few really noteworthy books which English publishers have brought out this season, and Mrs. Comyns Carr may be congratulated upon having written some bright and lively sketches of the peasant folk of the Riviera and the Northern Apennines, picturing them when at their daily work, and when decked out for the numerous festas which so rejoice the heart of the Italian contadini. While handling her subject as one she loves Mrs. Comyns Carr does not attempt to hide the faults of her protégés, but tells with a slight but amusing cynicism how lightly the villagers esteem their priest and his cassock, save at the solemn moment of "elevation," at a wedding, or at the bedside of the dying. Nor are Mrs. Carr's sketches confined to people alone: her descriptions of the glorious scenery of the Apennines and of the picturesque streets of Genoa are most stirring and life-like, and make the reader long for a few weeks' rest in the calm and peaceful valley if only to make the acquaintance of the various worthies whose portraits she draws, whose cheerful welcome and hospitality to a stranger she so warmly describes, and of whom she relates so many amusing anecdotes. Mrs. Carr—as the examples we publish will show—has found a powerful ally in Mr. Caldecott, whose drawings are true to the life, and reproduce to every detail the characteristic features of the personages of whom Mrs. Carr treats. Thus, "In Villeggiatura" portrays the worthy Signor and Signora Paretto, of Genoa, arriving at the village, where they purpose to spend their summer holiday. In "Shopman and Purchaser," the Comtessa Capramonte is bargaining, in true Italian style, with Signor Giordano, evidently the Shoolbred of Genoa; while the "Parish Priest" depicts the worthy village Parroco giving sage advice to a hesitating damsel on the wisdom of accepting a suitor. The "Love Letter" represents his subordinate the Cappellano, who also acts as village scribe, inditing a love-letter at the instance of a fair client; while in another illustration the same worthy ecclesiastic is represented being good-humouredly "chaffed" by a somewhat juvenile member of his congregation—also of the fair sex. In the "Priest's Servant" we see that the Parroco, although, of course, a bachelor, is none the less under petticoat government, and his faithful housekeeper is administering to him a sharp reproof for bringing home an unexpected guest to dinner on the day when she has the "holy wafers" to bake.

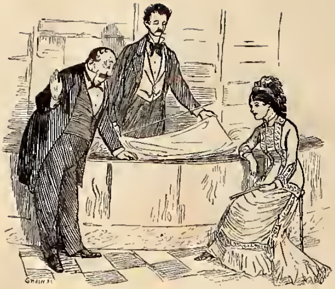
◆

TELEPHONES are being constructed by the Eton boys out of the bottoms of preserved meat tins, on the principle of the Tamil Coolies in Ceylon, who place parchment in two circular pieces of tin, connect them with a thread, and speak at the end of the thread into the tin, their remarks being distinctly heard at the other end. In Germany the telephone is coming into regular use, and a code of directions has been published instructing the speaker to pronounce every syllable slowly, and stop after each sixth word, while the hearer repeats each sentence to prevent mistake.

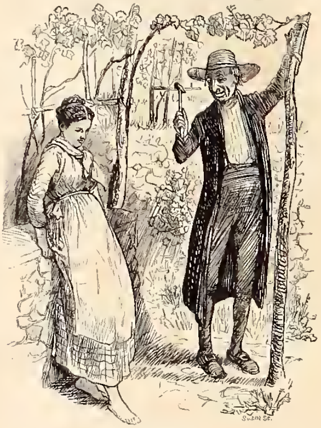


IN VILLEGGIATURA

"MADONNA, WHAT A TREAT!" COMPLAINS THE TOWN LADY, WHILE THE PAPA TRUDGES ON WEARILY IN FRONT, WITH BABIES TWO AND THREE

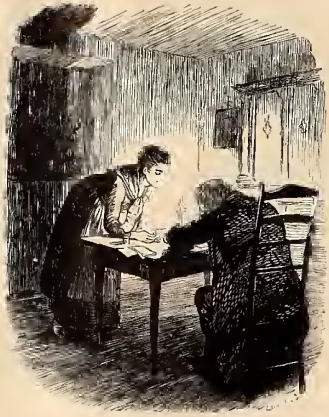


SHOPMAN AND PURCHASER



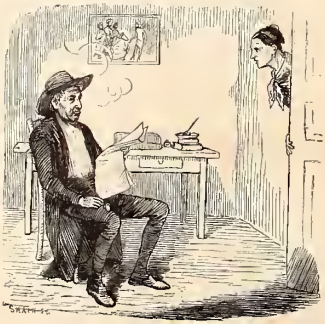
THE PARISH PRIEST

"A DAMSEL MUST LET NO MAN SEEK HER HIMSELF," SAYS THE OLD MAN, AS HE HAMMERS AT THE ROTTEN WOOD OF HIS PERGOLA

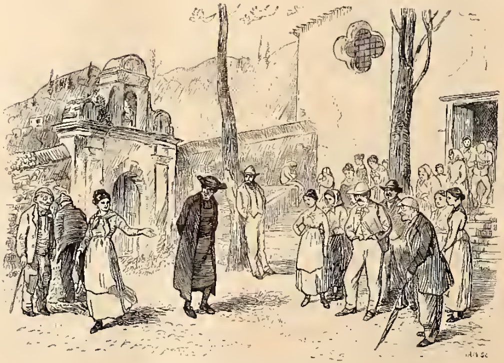


THE LOVE LETTER

THE FINE STEEL PEN PROCEEDS TO WORK, AND MAKES A FEW FLOURISHES ON THE PINK PAPER WHILE THE GIRL LOOKS ON, EAGER AND INTENT



THE PRIEST'S SERVANT ADMINISTERING A REPROOF



IL SIGNOR CAPPELLANO

A PLUMP, HARDY-LOOKING GIRL OF SOME TWENTY-FIVE YEARS ACCOSTS HIM WITH ROUGH RAILLERY

"NORTH ITALIAN FOLK," BY MRS. COMYNS CARR
ILLUSTRATED BY RANDOLPH CALDECOTT

THE HISTORY OF A CRIME:

THE TESTIMONY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

II.

THE SECOND DAY—THE STRUGGLE

IX.

THE LIGHTNING BEGINS TO FLASH AMONGST THE PEOPLE

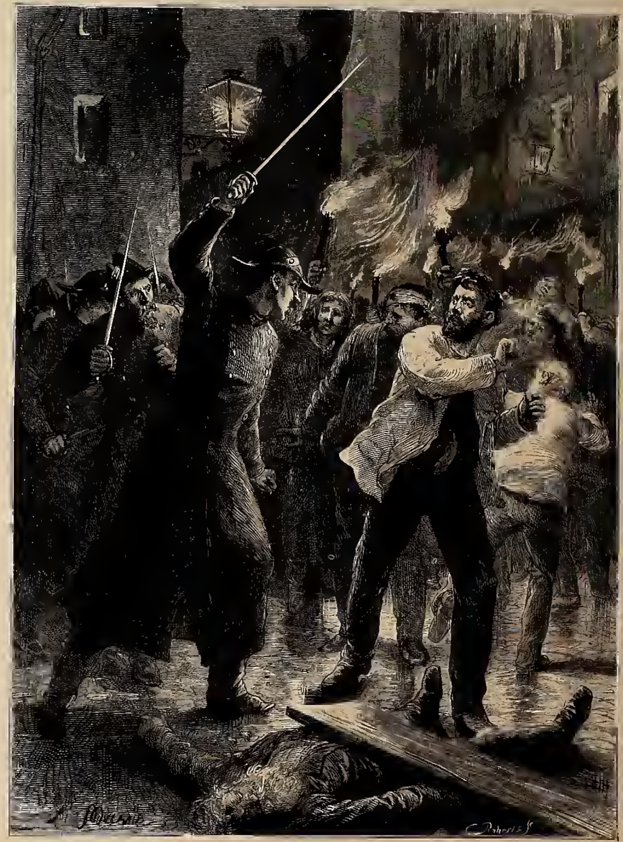
THE evening wore a threatening aspect.

Groups were formed on the Boulevards. As night advanced they grew larger and became mobs, which speedily mingled together, and only formed one crowd. An enormous crowd, reinforced and agitated by tributary currents from the side streets jostling one against another, surging, stormy, and whence ascended an ominous hum. This hubbub resolved itself into one word, into one name which issued simultaneously from every mouth, and which expressed the whole of the situation: "Soulouque!" * Throughout that long line from the Madeleine to the Bastille, the roadway nearly everywhere, except (was this on purpose?) at the Porte St. Denis and the Porte St. Martin, was occupied by the soldiers—infantry and cavalry, ranged in battle order, the artillery batteries being harnessed; on the pavements on each side of this motionless and gloomy mass, bristling with cannon, swords, and bayonets, flowed a torrent of angry people. On all sides public indignation prevailed. Such was the aspect of the Boulevards. At the Bastille there was a dead calm.

At the Porte St. Martin the crowd, hemmed together and uneasy, spoke in low tones. Groups of workmen talked in whispers. The Society of the 10th December made some efforts there. Men in white blouses, a sort of uniform which the police assumed during those days, said: "Let us leave them alone; let the 'Twenty-five francs' settle it amongst themselves! They deserted us in June, 1848; to-day let them get out of the difficulty alone! It does not concern us!" Other blouses, blue blouses, answered them: "We know what we have to do. This is only the beginning, wait and see."

Others told how the barricades of the Rue Aumaire were being rebuilt, how a large number of persons had already been killed there, how they fired without any summons, how the soldiers were drunk, how at various points in the district there were ambulances already crowded with killed and wounded. All this was said seriously, without loud speaking, without gesture, in a confidential tone. From time to time the crowd were silent and listened, and distant firing was heard.

The groups said, "Now they are beginning to tear down the curtain."



THE FUNERAL PROCESSION IN THE RUE DE GRAVILLIERS

A squad of twenty sergents de ville suddenly emerging from a narrow street rushed with drawn swords upon the men who were carrying the litters, and overturned the corpses into the mud

We were holding Permanent Session at Marie's house in the Rue Croix des Petits Champs. Promises of co-operation poured in upon us from every side. Several of our colleagues, who had not been able to find us on the previous day, had joined us, amongst others Emanuel Arago, gallant son of an illustrious father; Farconnet and Roussel (de l'Yonne), and some Parisian celebrities, amongst whom was the young and already well-known defender of the Avènement du Peuple, M. Desmarets.

Two eloquent men, Jules Favre and Alexander Rey, seated at a large table near the window of the small room, were drawing up a Proclamation to the National Guard. In the large room Sain, seated in an arm-chair, his feet on the dog-irons, drying his wet boots before a huge fire, said, with that calm and courageous smile which he wore in the Tribune: "Things are looking badly for us, but well for the Republic. Martial law is proclaimed; it will be carried out with ferocity, above all against us. We are laid in wait for, followed, tracked, there is little probability that we shall escape. To-day, to-morrow, perhaps in ten minutes, there will be a miniature massacre of Representatives. We shall be taken here or elsewhere, shot down on the spot or killed with bayonet thrusts. They will parade our corpses, and we must hope that that will at length raise the people and overthrow Bonaparte. We are dead, but Bonaparte is lost."

At eight o'clock, as Emile de Girardin had promised, we received from the printing office of the Presse five hundred copies of the decree of deposition and of outlawry, endorsing the judgment of the High Court, and with all our signatures attached. It was a placard twice as large as one's hand, and printed on paper used for proofs. Noël Parfait brought us the five hundred copies, still damp, between his waistcoat and his shirt. Thirty Representatives divided the bills amongst them, and we sent them on the Boulevards to distribute the Decree to the People.

The effect of this decree falling in the midst of the crowd was marvellous. Some cafés had remained open, people eagerly snatched the bills, they pressed round the lighted shop windows, they crowded under the street lamps. Some mounted on kerbstones or on tables, and read aloud the Decree.—"That is it! Bravo!" cried the People. "The Signatures!" The Signatures!" they shouted. The signatures were read out, and at each popular name the crowd applauded. Charamaule, merry and indignant, wandered through the groups, distributing copies of the Decree; his great stature, his loud and bold words, the packet of handbills which he raised, and waved above his head, caused all hands to be stretched out towards him. "Shout 'Down with Soulouque!'" said he, "and you shall have some." All this in the presence of the soldiers. Even a sergeant of the line, noticing Charamaule, stretched out his hand for one of those bills which Charamaule was distributing.

"Sergeant," said Charamaule to him, "cry, 'Down with Soulouque!'" The sergeant hesitated for a moment, and answered, "No."

"Well, then," replied Charamaule, "shout 'Long live Soulouque.' This time the sergeant did not hesitate, he raised his sword, and, amidst bursts of laughter and of applause, he resolutely shouted, "Long live Soulouque!"

The reading of the Decree added a gloomy warmth to the popular anger. They set to work on all sides to tear down the placards of the Coup d'État. At the door of the Café des Variétés a young man cried out to the officers: "You are drunk!" Some workmen on the Boulevard Bonne-Nouvelle shook their fists at the soldiers, and said, "Fire, then, you cowards, on unarmed men! If we had guns you would throw the butts of your muskets in the air." Charges of cavalry began to be made in front of the Café Cardinal.

As there were no troops on the Boulevard St. Martin and the Boulevard du Temple, the crowd was more compact there than elsewhere. All the shops were shut there; the street lamps alone gave any light. Against the glass of the unlighted windows heads might be dimly seen peering out. Darkness produced silence; this multitude, as we have already said, was hushed. There was only heard a confused whispering.

Suddenly a light, a noise, an uproar burst forth from the entrance of the Rue St. Martin. Every eye was turned in that direction; a profound upheaving agitated the crowd; they rushed forward, they pressed against the railings of the high pavements which border the cutting between the theatres of the Porte St. Martin and the Ambigu. A moving mass was seen, and an approaching light. Voices were singing. This formidable chorus was recognised, Aux armes, Citoyens! Formez vos bataillons!

Lighted torches were coming, it was the "Marseillaise," that other torch of Revolution and of warfare which was blazing.

The crowd made way for the mob which carried the torches, and which were singing. The mob reached the St. Martin

---

* A popular nickname for Louis Bonaparte. Faustin Soulouque was the negro Emperor of Hayti who, when President of the Republic had carried out a somewhat similar coup d'état in 1848, being subsequently elected Emperor. He treated the Republicans with great cruelty, putting most of them to death.

Mr. Ferdinand Brambler, the brother of Augustus Brambler, whom you recollect, I am sure."

"Of course I do," said Leonard. "How do you do, Mr. Brambler? Your brother was a little man, with a comical face that looked as if he was too jolly for his work. I remember now. Is he in the Legal now, in the Clerical, or in the Scholastic? And will you take a glass of wine or a brandy and soda?"

"My brother Augustus devotes his whole energies now to the Legal," said Ferdinand, slowly. "I will take a brandy and soda, thank you. With a biscuit or a sandwich, if I may ask for one."

"Send for some sandwiches, Leonard," I said. "And how are you all in Castle Street?"

"But poorly, Mr. Pulaski. Very poorly. The children are—not to disguise the truth—ahem—breaking out again, in a way dreadful to look at. Forty-six is nothing but an Object—an Object—from insufficiency of diet. Too much bread and too little meat. Ah! the good old days are gone when things were going on—things worthy of a historic pen—all round us, and money flowed in—literally flowed in, Captain Copleston. What with a prize ship here, an embarkation of troops there, the return of the wounded, an inspection of militia, and all the launches, I used to think nothing of writing up to a leg of mutton in three or four hours, turning off a pair of boots as if it was nothing, putting a great coat into shape in a single evening, throwing in a gown for Mrs. Augustus and a new frock for Forty-four, or going out in the morning, and polishing off a day's run into the country for the whole family out of a visit from the Commander-in-Chief. I used to laugh at that as only a good day's work. Happy time! You remember how fat and well-fed the children were once, Mr. Pulaski. But those days are gone. I despised, then, what I used to call the butter and eggs. Alas! the butter and eggs are nearly all we have to live upon now."

"You mean——"

"I mean, gentlemen, the short paragraphs poorly remunerated at one penny for each line of copy. One penny! And at least half of the sum goes in wear and tear of shoe leather worn out in picking up items about the town. I am a chiffonier, gentlemen, as we say in the French. I pick up rags and tatters of information as I peregrinate the streets. Nothing is too trifling for my degraded pen. I find myself even, in the children's interests, praying for a fire or a murder, or a neat case of robbery. Here, for instance, is a specimen of how low in the literary scale we can go."

He pulled a little bundle of papers out of his pocket.

"'SINGULAR ACCIDENT

"'As our esteemed townsman, Alderman Cherrystone, was walking along the pavement of High Street on the morning of Monday last, he stepped upon a piece of orange peel, and falling heavily, dislocated his arm. The unfortunate gentleman, who has been removed to the hospital, is now doing well."

"Mr. Pulaski," he asked in withering sarcasm, "that is a pleasant thing to come to after all my grandeur, is it not? Think of it, you who actually remember my papers on the arrival and departure of troops. But it is sixpence," he added with a sigh. "Here is another of the same sort. I call it," be added in a sepulchral voice,

"'A LIKELY STORY.

"'On Thursday, before His Worship the Mayor, a young man of dissipated appearance, who gave the name of Moses Copleston——'

"What?" cried Leonard, "Moses Copleston?"

"Yes, sir, your own name was that given by that individual."

"Go on," said Leonard, looking at me.

"'And said he was the son of a general in the army, was charged with being drunk and disorderly in the streets. The police knew him well, and various committals made in another name were reported of him. He was fined 40s. and costs, or a fortnight. The money was instantly paid, and the prisoner left the Court laughing, and saying there was plenty more to be got where that came from.

"'The Mayor recalled him——'"

"Will you give me that paragraph?" Leonard interrupted, and with an excited air. "Will you allow me to keep that out of the paper? I have a reason—it is my own name, you see."

"Certainly, sir," said Ferdinand. "I have no wish to put it into the paper, except that it is worth fourteenpence. And that goes some way towards the children's dinner, poor things."

"I will give you more than fourteen-pence for it, my good friend," said Leonard. "Where is this prisoner—this Moses—do you know?"

Of course I perceived the suspicion that had entered his mind. He was jumping at conclusions, as usual, but it was hard not to believe that he was right. I began to think what we knew of our old enemy Moses, and could remember nothing except what Jem Hex—Boatswain Hex—told me—that he was not a credit to his education. This was but a small clue. But some shots in the dark go straight to the bull's-eye. Leonard's eye met mine, and there was certainty in it.

I saw he wanted to talk about it, and so I got rid of Ferdinand by proposing to bring Leonard to his house in the evening, when he should pump him, and extract materials for a dozen papers.

"It is very kind of you, sir," he said. "You will enable me to confer on the children next week—ahem—a sense of repletion that they have not experienced for many months."

"I will tell you anything you want," said Leonard. "But you must ask me, because I cannot know, beforehand, what you would most like to have."

"Sir," said Ferdinand fervently, "I will pump you to good purpose if you will allow me. Your own exploits, ahem——"

"No—no," said Leonard, laughing. "I must make conditions. You must keep my name out of your story."

Ferdinand's countenance fell.

"If you insist upon it—of course. But personalities are the soul of successful journalism"—it will be seen that Ferdinand Brambler was in advance of his age—"and if I could be permitted to describe these modest quarters in detail—camp bed, two chairs, absence of ornament—ah—'The Hero's Retreat;' your personal appearance, tall, with curling brown hair, square shoulders, manly and assured carriage, eagle eye—ah!—'The Hero at Home:' your conversation, 'with difficulty can he be induced to speak of those hairbreadth escapes, those feats of more than British pluck, those audacious sorties'—'The Hero in Modesty;' your dress when not on duty, a plain suit of tweed, without personal decoration of any kind, simple, severe, and in good taste—'The Hero in Mufti:' and your early life, a native of this town, educated partly by Mr. Hezekiah Ryler, B.A., at the time when Mr. Augustus Brambler formed part of his competent and efficient staff, and partly by the learned Perpetual Curate of St. Faith's—'The Hero's Education'; your entrance into the army, 'The Hero takes his First Step'"——

"Stop—stop—for Heaven's sake," cried the Hero. "Do you believe I am going to consent to that kind of thing?"

Ferdinand collapsed.

"If you really will not allow it," he said, "there is nothing more to be done. Just as I was warming into the subject, too. Well, Captain Copleston, if you will not let me describe your own exploits by name, I shall be grateful for any particulars you may be kind enough to give me."

"Yes—on those conditions, that my name is kept out—I shall be glad to help you."

"Sir," said Ferdinand, "you are very good. I will pump you like—like—an organ blower. I will play on you like—like a Handel. At what time, sir, will you honour our humble abode?"

"We will be with you about eight," I said. "And—and—Mr. Ferdinand, will you give my compliments to Mrs. Augustus, and my love to Forty-four, and say that we hope to have the pleasure of supper with them. Early supper, so as to suit Forty-six and the rest."

Ferdinand sighed, and then smiled, and then with a deep bow to the Hero, retired.

"What about Moses?" cried Leonard.

"How do you know it is the real Moses?"

"There can be but one Moses," said Leonard; "and how should any other get hold of my name? Do you think he is in the town, now?"

I began to make inquiries that very afternoon, bethinking me that Mrs. Hex, Jem the Bo's'n's wife, might know something about it. Jem had been married some time now, and was the father of a young family, who lived in one of the streets near Victory Row in a highly respectable manner. Mrs. Hex had been a young lady connected on both sides with the service, so that it was quite natural that she should marry a sailor, and it was an advantageous match on both sides. She remembered Moses perfectly well; he was always going and coming, she said; would be seen about for a day or two, and would then disappear for a long time; he had been in prison once for something or other; then he disappeared for some years; then he came back in rags; and then—just a short time ago—he suddenly blossomed out into new and magnificent toggery, with a gold watch-chain and a real watch, with rings on his fingers, and money in his pocket. And he got drunk every night. Also, he called himself Copleston, which Mrs. Hex thought should not be allowed. Most likely we might find him at the Blue Anchor in the evening, where there was a nightly free-and-easy for soldiers and sailors, at which he often appeared, standing drinks all round in a free and affable manner.

"Quite the Moses we used to love," said Leonard in a great rage. "We will go to the Blue Anchor and wring the truth out of him."

For that day we had, however, our engagement at the Bramblers, which we duly kept, and were ushered into the front room, Ferdinand's "study." He was sitting at the table in expectation of us, with paper and pencil before him. He was hungering and thirsting for information. Beside him stood Augustus, as cheerful and smiling as though the children were not breaking out. Except that he was shabbier than usual, there was no mark of poverty or failure upon him.

"This, Captain Copleston," he said, "is a real honour. I take it as a recognition of my brother Ferdinand's genius. My brother Ferdinand, sir, is a Gem."

"Brother Augustus," murmured the author bashfully, "nay—nay."

"A Gem—I repeat it—a Gem. And of the first water. What says the poet?—

> Full many a time, this Gem of ray serene,
> Outside the Journal Office may be seen.

He will do you justice, sir. Mr. Pulaski," he sank his voice to a whisper, "shall we leave these two alone? Shall we retire to the domestic circle, not to disturb History and Heroism? At what time shall we name supper, Captain Copleston? Pray, fix your own time. Think of your convenience first. We are nothing—nothing."

"I never take supper, thank you," said Leonard, who was beginning to be a little bored with the whole business.

"Don't speak of supper to me," said Ferdinand. "This is my supper," he patted the paper affectionately. "This is my evening beer." He pointed to the inkstand. "This is my pillow," indicating the blotting-pad. "And for me there will be no night's rest. Now, sir, if you will sit there—so—with the light upon your face—we can converse. Affluence is about to return, brother Augustus."

Augustus and I stole out of the room on tiptoe. In the back room the table was laid, and the children were crowded in the window, looking at the cloth with longing eyes. Poor little children! They were grown pale and thin during these hard times, and their clothes were desperately shabby. Forty-four, a tall girl now of fourteen, angular and bony, as is common at that age, preserved some show of cheerfulness, as became the eldest of the family. It was hers to set an example. But the rest were very sad in countenance, save for a sort of hungry joy raised by the prospect of supper.

"Always something kind from the Captain," murmured the poor wife.

"It was lucky," I said, "that we had that cold round of beef in the larder. Cannot we have supper immediately? I am sure the children would like it."

The poor children gave a cry, and Forty-six burst into loud weeping.

"Things have not gone very well, latterly," said Augustus, looking uncomfortable. "Sometimes I even think that we don't get enough meat. We had some on Sunday, I remember"—and this was Friday—"because Ferdinand said it was the first real meal he bad enjoyed for a week. That was while we were sitting over our wine after dinner."

Nothing, not even actual starvation, would have prevented the two brothers from enjoying their Sunday pretence of sitting, one each side a little table, at the front window, with a decanter and two glasses before them. I do not know what the decanter contained. Perhaps what had once been Marsala. Ferdinand cherished the custom as a mark of true gentility, and was exceedingly angry if the children came in and interrupted. He said grandly that a gentleman "ought not to be disturbed over his wine." I think Augustus cared less about the ceremony.

Meantime the mother, assisted by Forty-four and Forty-five, brought in the supper—cold beef and hot potatoes—with real beer—no toast and water.

I pass over the details of the meal. Even Augustus was too hungry to talk, and Forty-six surpassed himself. I sat next to Forty-four, who squeezed my hand furtively, to show that she was grateful to the Captain. She was always a tender-hearted little thing, and devoted to her brothers and sisters. The pangs of hunger appeased, we talked.

"You have now an opportunity," said Augustus, leaning back in his chair after the fatigues of eating; "you have now an opportunity of boasting, my children, that a Crimean hero has actually come to this house in order to tell the history of the war to your uncle Ferdinand, the well-known writer."

The boys and girls murmured. This was, indeed, grandeur.

"We will drink," said Augustus, filling his glass, and handing me the jug. "We will drink a toast. I give you, children, coupled, the names of Captain Copleston, the Hero, and Ferdinand Brambler (your uncle, my dears), the Historian. It is my firm belief that this night has commenced what I may in military language call an Alliance, or—speaking as a lawyer, one may say that this night has witnessed the tacit execution of a Deed of Partnership—a Deed of Partnership"—he relished his words so much that he was fain to repeat them—"between the Hero and the Historian, which will result in their being known together, and indissolubly connected by the generations, yet to come, of posterity. For myself, I have, as you know, little other ambition than to be remembered, if remembered I am at all, as Augustus Brambler (your father, my dears), formerly an ornament to the Legal."

We drank the toast with enthusiasm. There were nowhere to be found children more ready to drink or eat toasts than the Bramblers.

"By our own family connections, Mr. Pulaski," Augustus continued, "we have more sympathy with the Navy than with the Army. Mrs. Brambler—your mother, my dears—is highly connected as regards that service; and it is, I confess, my favourite. Sometimes I think of putting Forty-six into it, though if they were wrecked on a desert island, and provisions ran short, he would come off badly. Forty-eight, of course, is out of the question where discipline and obedience are concerned. It would, however, have been just the service for poor little Fifty-one, my dears, had that interesting child been born."

He looked critically at Forty-six, sadly at Forty-eight, and shook his head. All hung their heads sorrowfully, as was customary at mention of the Great and Gifted Fifty-one—unborn.

"Two members of my wife's family—she was a Tollerwinch—were members of that gallant service, Mr. Pulaski. One of them, her uncle, held the rank of Master's Mate, and, if he had not had the misfortune to knock down his superior officer on the quarter deck, would now, one may be justified in supposing, have been Rear-Admiral Sir Samuel Tollerwinch, K.C.B.—of the White. I drink to the health and memory—in solemn silence—of the late Admiral."

Such was Augustus's enthusiasm, that we all believed at the moment the deceased officer to have died in that rank.

"The Admiral," Augustus sighed. "You must not be proud, my dears, of these accidents—mere accidents—of distinguished family connections. Your mother's first cousin, James Elderberry, entered the service also. He was a purser's clerk. I think I am right, my dear, in stating to Mr. Pulaski that James was a most gallant and deserving officer."

"He was, indeed," said Mrs. Brambler. "Poor Jem! And sang a most beautiful song when sober."

"Universally esteemed, my children, from the yardarm—to speak nautically—and the maintop mizenmast, wherever that or any other portion of the rigging is lashed taut to the shrouds, down to the orlop deck. His service was not long—only three weeks in all—and it was cut short by a court martial on a charge of—of—in fact, of inebriation while on duty. He might have done well, perhaps, in some other Walk—or shall we say, Sail of life?—if he had not, in fact, continued so. He succumbed—remember this, Forty-six—to the effects of thirst. Well, we must all die. To every brave rover comes his day." Augustus rolled his head, and tried to look like a buccaneer. "Your mother's cousin, my children, must be regarded as one who fell—in action."

(To be continued)

◆

WINTER EXHIBITIONS OF THE WATER-COLOUR SOCIETY AND INSTITUTE

II.

Of the more recent Associates, in landscape work combined with figures there is none who so takes captive the admiration of those who can appreciate thorough refinement combined with perfect respect for the simple truth of Nature as Mrs. Allingham. All her contributions to the Winter Exhibition are small, but how beautiful are her little studies of cottages and copses, of farmyard scenes and incidents, of beach groups, with children at play in the sand and nurses and young mothers on the watch. Since Frederick Walker was lost to the Arts no one has so presented the prose of life with poetic beauty, yet without sacrifice of truth.

Miss Clara Montalba continues to pour out her broad effective studies of Venetian shipping, but with no apparent advance or variety, except in a dashing sketch of a regatta on the Grand Canal, which is full of colour and movement. Of A. Goodwin's drawings, always original and imaginative, there is none this year which so appeals to the imagination as his "Rough Night at Sea," a pier view with a storm-rent sky, against which the vigilant eye of the lighthouse looks out warningly.

Brittan Willis, Bradley, and Otto Weber send excellent studies—the first of a shorthorn bull and carthorses, and cattle in landscape, very thorough and solid; the second, of a pleasant hunting-piece, "A Blank Day," and a timber-hauling team on the banks of the Seine; the third, of an English white heifer, rather cold in colour, but of great truth and finish, and an Italian threshing-floor, with grey oxen treading out the corn. G. H. Andrews' study for a picture of the foundering of the Victory, with 1,100 men, off the Casket, is a startling and vivid presentation of a terrible scene. Oswald Brierley, in several clever studies, helps to maintain the marine element in the Society.

Among such pretty and smoothly wrought figure drawings as E. K. Johnson's and Radford's, A. H. Marsh's gloomy pictures of labour, "Autumn"—a single gaunt Northumbrian farm lass, tending the fires in the field, and "Stony Land," women at work on a hungry upland—are impressive, though their gloom may be thought overcharged and their scale too large. Mr. Marsh has evidently been influenced by Israels and Millet. His Cullercoats fishermen's wives and daughters bringing in the night's catch pleases us better, just because, with quite as much truth and more picturesqueness, there is less gloom in it. Of the Institute's Winter Exhibition we can only speak generally in grateful recognition of the unusually large amount of excellent outdoor studies it contains. Those of H. Johnson, J. Mogford, J. Skill, W. W. May, and J. Orrock are genuine open-air work of the freshest and truest character, and distinctly better to my mind than what are called the "drawings" of these artists as distinct from their "studies." Then the two Dutch figure subjects of W. W. Wilson, one an interior with a young fisherman returning from sea to his old parents and his wife, the other, the "Defence of the Bridge," Dutch children near a village, who have planted a toy cannon on a plank over a field canal, in the golden light of a summer evening, have very uncommon merits of conception and execution. Another clever painter of Dutch subjects, a Dutchman, we believe, now settled in this country, G. Clausen, has a vigorous and original study of a tall Flemish girl, a somewhat ungainly, yet not ungraceful figure, putting a batch of bread into the oven. Two life-size heads of Bavarian foresters, by H. Herkomer, and one of a "Saint George," by C. Gregory, are tours de force in real water-colour. The truth of sunlight in Mr. Herkomer's heads is wonderfully expressed, and the character is excellently conveyed. The head and hands in Mr. Gregory's armed knight, though the face is common in type, are painted with a strength which, a short time since, would have been deemed quite unattainable in water-colour. Two studies by J. D. Linton, a mounted banner-bearer and a lady of the time of the Commonwealth in a yellow dress, are very solid and effective. The public may learn from W. Small's finished study for "The Wreck" all that there was in his oil-picture of the subject, which was hung out of sight in the Academy this year. It is a picture of rare power, though perhaps hardly attractive, owing to the terror of the subject. C. J. Staniland's studies of fish are all worthy of note for the subtlety of their colour-composition. A. Gow's two drawings of a traveller cantering uneasily alongside of a stranger, who looks suspiciously like a "Gentleman of the Road," and a village group gathered outside the gates of a mansion, doomed to sale by the death of the old squire, are capital examples of the interest to be given by well-chosen picturesque or romantic incident, effectively handled. His sister's group of a little girl reading to her convalescent sister is feelingly and gracefully treated. Robert's rustic groups of a country boy and donkey, and a boy feeding lambs, are as good as work so obviously suggested by W. Hunt can be. But his imitation is originality compared with that of the same old master by some of the fruit painters of the Institute, or of George Cattermole's subjects and treatment by his nephew C. Cattermole. This is the more provoking as both show technical strength that should enable them to stand alone. Townley Green has a charming figure of a Belgian servant girl standing in an antique doorway. John Tenniel exhibits two original sketches for Punch cartoons—France at the Tomb of Thiers, and the Bear tightening his grip upon the Turk. E. Bale's figure and landscape-studies are both very noticeable, in particular a half-length of a girl in yellow against a green background, with a coral necklace in her hands, of exceptional solidity and peculiarly well-combined colour.

TOM TAYLOR

THE READER

THE life and writings of a brilliant young Irishman—one who died too young for fame—are presented to us by his brother in three volumes (Longmans and Co.), entitled severally "Life and Letters," "Essays and Sketches," and "Poetical Works" of E. J. Armstrong. Of the three the "Life and Letters" are the most broadly interesting, for Armstrong was of those youths of promise whose personality is even more attractive than their writings, and who, in the impression which they make on others, in the readiness with which they are themselves impressed by the intellectual influences of their day, in their alternations of light and gloom, of high animal spirits and complete dejection, in their waverings from faith to doubt, and doubt again to broader faith, in their hopings and self-questionings through the golden time when the world's many paths lie still before them, though some, it may be, are already closing, irresistibly excite the sympathy of maturer age. Even the many who can never have heard his name will follow with pleasure the story of his brief career—the college days, the holiday rambles on Irish hills, by Jersey bays, or along dusty roads of Northern France—the literary efforts whose early promise won notice from men of European fame. Of his remains it is less easy to speak decisively. Fervid fancy and graceful expression come naturally to the Celtic intellect; while amid the maze of books and facts and "views," through which the young brain nowadays must force its way, originality is more than ever difficult. It is much if we get, not a new note, but musical variations on a key already struck; nor does it derogate much from Armstrong's powers if there is more of promise than of fulfilment in his writings, or if his own individuality seems to struggle through forms suggested by Tennyson or Coleridge or Goëthe. The essays and sketches are clever and thoughtful, the latter none the worse for a slight provincialism of tone. The poems are of a higher order,—one, the "Prisoner of Mount St. Michael," decidedly powerful in design and execution. But none of these volumes need apology for their introduction to a wider world than that which knew "Old Trinity" in 1860 and 1863.

"A History of Roman Literature" (Griffin and Co.), by C. T. Cruttwell, M.A., although a student's manual in the first instance, has almost equal claims to commendation as an agreeable volume for the much larger circle of English readers of Ancient Classics. One hardly, perhaps, sees why—unless for the sake of the youthful scholar, whose studies had better not go beyond the writers of the Silver Age—such a history should stop short at Silius and Fronto, or why the poets of the age of Brass, Claudian, once so neatly quoted by Mr. Disraeli, or gentle Ausonius, should be left out in the cold. Apart from this we have only praise for the taste and learning Mr. Cruttwell has brought to bear upon his task. More especially might we commend the reader to the chapters on the Roman writers and orators of the age when the men of letters were also the men of statesmanship and action, or (should his scholarship be of the olden school) to the short notice of the language of Italy, before, alongside with, and after, the growth and decline of that curious language within a language, the literary speech of ancient Rome.

For an almost perfectly proportioned sketch in outline of a literature of still greater height and range we may turn to Professor R. C. Jebb's "Greek Literature," the new number of Messrs. Macmillan and Co.'s "Literature Primers." From the nameless poets of the dawn of Grecian history—the group that clusters round the half-mythic Homer—to the last echoes of Hellenic song in the Anthologists of Justinian's Court we get in some 160 little pages a summary from which no noteworthy name has been omitted, and in which the key-note to each great writer and each distinct period or form of Grecian Art is happily given in a few pregnant paragraphs. The chapter on the Attic drama in particular could hardly, in our humble judgment, be improved upon.

It is the great merit of "The Treasury of British Eloquence" (W. P. Nimmo), compiled and arranged by R. Cochrane, that the selected specimens are all given in great measure in extenso. From Latimer to Spurgeon, from Sir John Eliot to W. E. Gladstone, we find in it good examples of the most effective orators of the pulpit or the Senate House—while for chefs d'œuvre of other forms of eloquence we need only turn to the addresses of Dean Stanley or the after-dinner speeches of Charles Dickens. Such a volume may also rank among aids to History rather than mere compilations of the Enfield's Speaker class.

But if "A Certain Professor" is too much like everyday mortals, the very opposite must be predicated of Mr. T. Sinclair of "The Mount" (Trübner and Co.), when descending from those spiritual heights to drive teams of adjectives three abreast—"divining, musing, poetic souls," "patient, non-tyrannic, life-regarding science," and the like—through sentences of which one at least extends its unbroken length well into the third page. For Mr. Sinclair flatters himself that he has passed within the Veil and seen the vision of the Sacred Mount; can assign their several places to every poet or half-poet of our time—the Goëthes, Heines, Wordsworths, Tennysons, Arnolds; can tell us which have had half-glimpses of the light and which have wandered blindly in the wilderness; or, if he must join the multitude for once in esteeming Shakespeare the truest poet since the "Makers" of the heroic ages of Greece, can see too that the great dramatist is really greatest where ordinary minds admire him least, and feeblest where the many-headed commend him most. It is but fair to say that Mr. Sinclair is clearly a man of some culture and of a certain erratic kind of power. We can scarcely, however, venture to commend him to unwary readers.

Much pleasanter is it to dip here and there into "Side Lights and Scripture Texts" (Hodder and Stoughton), by an old acquaintance, Mr. Fr. Jacox. One does not, of course, expect strict method, or even, perhaps, the most rigid decorum. We are prepared to cap Ecclesiastes with Sam Slick, or St. Paul with Mr. William Black. Still lazy readers owe Mr. Jacox much. While they have been reading the Cornhill with a paper-knife, or tearing through Miss Braddon to find who marries whom, he has been noting with assiduous pencil each passage that might do after-duty as a quotation, or threading all he has noted together into a far from unamusing patchwork. "Side-lights" in arrangement and solution strike us as among his happiest medleys.

Prestige, thinks Mr. Forjett, author of "Our Real Danger in India" (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin), is the one basis of our supremacy in the East—a prestige backed, it is true, by a mild good will, a sense of benefits received and benefits to come, on the part of the great masses of the population, but resting solely in the last resort on the belief in our superior strength. Loss of prestige through petting the Sepoy till he thought himself the white man's equal—not questions of annexation, changes of land tenures, or plots of Mussulman fanatics—led to the Mutiny of 1857. Loss of prestige among the dangerous classes of British India and the warlike States along our northern frontier will be our greatest and most real danger now, if Russia is allowed to deal with Turkey as she pleases. We know not how many will approve the Anglo-Indian's remedy—a foreign policy of the most "spirited" sort, instant despatch of troops to Turkey, training of the tribes beyond the Indian frontier under British officers, general arming of the population at home. But there can be little doubt that the danger he describes is a very real one, or that his views, so far at least as they depict native feeling in the East, are well worthy of the attention that may be claimed for a writer whose knowledge of Indian life and services through the great Mutiny are equally unimpeachable.

If we really wish to see ourselves as others see us, we should turn to some of the many books of European travel, written in the United States by middle-class Americans who cross the Atlantic—not to spend hastily-gotten fortunes in Paris, nor to display heavy jewellery and unlimited diamonds at a Swiss table d'hôte, but to secure a few months' rest and recreation in visiting for themselves those scenes and institutions in the Old Country of which they have read and heard so much from infancy. Such a work in a very brief form is "Summer Rambles in Europe" (Nelson and Phillips, New York), written by Alexander Clark. Although mainly composed of jottings by the way, and in no manner professing to be a comprehensive account of his tour, the work is interesting and instructive if only from the very Republican point of view taken by the author of many of our cherished institutions. Mr. Clark has a true democratic dislike to our railway system of three classes, and almost denounces it as unchristianlike; but, wonderful to relate, approves of our hotels, where, he remarks, you only have to pay for what you have, and are let severely alone by every one except the ubiquitous "boots," who is your "porter, boot-black, candlestick-fetcher, clothes-duster, newspaper-finder, and at your slightest nod or faintest whisper he will dance to your relief." Mr. Clark's rambles also comprise Holland, Belgium, the Rhine, and northern Switzerland, and he has throughout shown a keen power of observation of men and manners in his descriptions; though we must protest against the outcry he raises against the magnificent cathedrals, both in our own country and on the Continent. Mr. Clark thinks them far too grand for the simple Christian religion—"more sepulchral than worshipful;" and, as regards Chester Cathedral, an "immense tomb—mouldy, musty, almost repellent;" and again, "these old cathedrals are as foreign to the Gospel idea of worship as a fog is different from sunlight." But then it must be remembered that Mr. Clark is a Methodist, and that there are no cathedrals in the United States.

◆

CHRISTMAS BOOKS

VII.

MRS. SALE BARKER, in "Lily's Visit to Grandmamma," has managed to introduce a description of the principal objects in the Zoological Gardens which is worthy of better illustrations.

"Seven o'Clock," by Janie Brockman (Warne), is a home story for home-loving children, told in simple language for young folks of eight or nine.

Our old friend, the Hermit of Juan Fernandez, has been multiplied six hundred-fold by Mr. Gilbert Mortimer, who describes the voyage of the Golden Fleece under the title of "Six Hundred Robinson Crusoes" (Low and Co.). The narrative is a true one, and will no doubt be welcomed by many readers both old and young.

"Ida Dalton" (Remington) is a series of short sketches of varying merit. "The Three Naughty Boys" (G. Waterston) is a toy-book, with clever illustrations by C. A. Doyle.

"Hush-a-Bye Baby," the Christmas Number of Once a Week, by G. Manville Fenn, is a clever handling of a somewhat delicate subject, of which the opening portion is incomparably the best.

"The Scarlet Letter," by Nathaniel Hawthorne, and "Christmastide" (Boston: J. R. Osgood and Co.), are two sumptuously got-up volumes which mark an era in Christmas books for English readers. They are the first instalment (to us, at least) of Christmas volumes from the other side of the Atlantic, and rival in excellence of production anything we have ever received from the publishers on this side. The engravings are of the highest excellence, and show the perfection our American cousins have attained in wood engraving, whilst the printing and paper are everything that could be desired. The drawings in the "Scarlet Letter" are thoroughly artistic, and the landscapes in "Christmastide" are perfect gems.

The fourth and completing volume of "The National Portrait Gallery" (Cassell) is the best of the series. The likenesses are good, and the coloured chromos delicate and well printed. The sketches, apparently by different hands, are racy and well written.

Cassell's Family Magazine, The Leisure Hour, and The Sunday at Home present all the various and attractive features for which these popular serials have become so well known. The artistic portion of these yearly volumes is above the average. The two latter make coloured plates a feature in the way of frontispieces, whilst the former abounds with a profusion of well-executed wood engravings.

"By Land and Ocean" (Low and Co.) is curious as being the journal and letters of a young girl who went to South Australia with a lady friend, then alone to New Zealand, China, Japan, and across the continent of America—home again. Of course the narrative is necessarily confined to the cursory jottings which such a trip suggested, but although devoid of thrilling adventures the book is full of interest and novelty.

Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, have completed the first volume of their "New Natural History," edited by Professor Duncan, who has for his collaborateurs in this portion of the work Dr. J. Murie and W. S. Dallas, F.L.S. The volume, though popularly and profusely illustrated, is strictly scientific in its treatment, and is remarkable in this section for the numerous specimens of the Bat family, the majority of which have not we believe been previously illustrated.

From Messrs. Griffith and Farran we have three capital boys' books by W. H. Kingston. One, "Our Sailors," giving anecdotes of the engagements and gallant deeds of the British Navy during the reign of her present Majesty, has already reached a sale of eight thousand. Another, "Fred Markham in Russia, or, the Boy Travellers in the Land of the Czar," will have a special interest this season; whilst "Mark Seaworth, a Tale of the Indian Ocean," although written a quarter of a century ago, has lost none of its original charm, and will be heartily welcome in its new dress.

"The New Picture Book" (Stanford), with its pictorial lessons in form, comparison, and number, has, we are not surprised to see, reached its seventh edition. It is one of the best by far of children's books with which we are acquainted.—"The Instructive Picture Books," by the same publisher, are sketches from nature of animal and vegetable life in all lands, cleverly printed in colours, and far above the average both in execution and design.

"Week-Day Evening Addresses, delivered in Manchester by Alexander Maclaren" (Macmillan), is a little volume of earnest and eloquent discourses, as full of feeling as they are graphic and picturesque.

Energetic Church workers will like to hear of a second series of readings for Mothers' Meetings, by R. Marryatt, "Wives and Mothers" (Hatchards), in which plain advice is tempered by Christian teaching.—We have received Mrs. Hilton's "Sixth Year of the Crèche" (Morgan and Scott); Vol. II. of "Hand and Heart;" and some tasteful card games from Mullord Brothers, of which the "Willow pattern Plate" and the "Pyramids" are the prettiest.

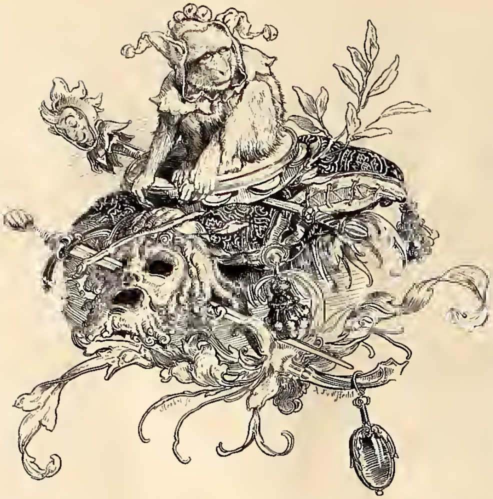
The pen of a ready writer certainly belongs to Mr. W. H. G. Kingston, who is again ready with a tale for boys, "The Young Llanero" (T. Nelson). The Venezuelan struggle for freedom from the Spanish yoke is his theme, and his hero belongs to an insurgent family burnt out of house and home, and compelled to seek refuge in the mountains.—Respect for old age, and the control of temper are the lessons of "Good out of Evil," by Mrs. Surr (T. Nelson), which is well suited for childish perusal, and contains some really artistic illustrations of birds.—Little ones just able to read will like "Aunt Emma's Picture Book" (T. Nelson)—varied pictures with brief comments, while elder sisters will find some pretty fancies anent flowers and a sheet of paper in "All in a Garden Green," by E. C. Traice (Marcus Ward).—The Teutonic nature seems specially adapted to the composition of fairy tales, and "Fairy Circles," from the German of Villamaria (Marcus Ward), is charmingly fresh and original, and reminds us of Hans Andersen. Wagner's beloved Nibelungen appear in the collection, as well as Barbarossa.—Three short seaside sketches comprise "Told by the Sea," by F. Frankfort Moore (Marcus Ward), slight in character, but amusing enough.—Mrs. Burnett's "Theo" (F. Warne), cannot compare for interest of plot with her "Lass o' Lowrie's," and the theme of the poor and lovely country girl winning the heart of a successful author from his learned but plain fiancée is rather well-worn. The hero is a very weak specimen, and we recommend Mrs. Burnett to study French and German before she attempts quotations in her next book.—"Tales, Poetry, and Fairy Tales," by Walter Brown (W. Brown), is a capital present for a child, and is embellished with some ninety woodcuts, many of which are printed from original blocks by the celebrated Thomas Bewick.—A new edition of the "Beauties of Shakespeare," by the late Rev. W. Dodd (Bickers and Son), in addition to the well-selected letterpress, contains a dozen permanent photographic illustrations from the Boydell Gallery.—"Topo: a Tale about English Children in Italy," by G. E. Brunefille (Marcus Ward), is especially noticeable for the excellent woodcuts, for which Miss Kate Greenaway has executed the drawings.—"Lapsed but not Lost: a Story of Roman Carthage" (Daldy, Isbister), is sufficiently recommended when we say that the author is the writer of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family," and finally we may mention as well worthy of notice, "A Book of Episodes," by J. M. Chanson, author of "The Regent" (Dean and Son), and "Marie—a Young Girl's History," the latter a translation from the Danish (Cassell and Co.).

"Early Days" (Wesleyan Conference Office) is yet another child's magazine of the usual type—stories, sketches, and illustrations; while "Sunday" (W. Wells Gardner) is intended for Sabbath reading. Turning to graver literature, the Rev. G. H. Wilkinson's "Instructions in the Devotional Life" (Wells Gardner) may be commended as a gift for young people for its good sense and and absence of partisan views.—"Darton's Girls' Own Annual" (same publishers) consists of novelettes, illustrations, and needlework hints for maidens in their early teens; while for elder sisters appears "The Ladies' Treasury" (Bemrose), containing the usual information anent dress, work, and cookery, dear to the feminine heart. To the share of the stronger sex falls "The Live Stock Journal Almanac" (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin), which will be useful alike to animal and bird fanciers, amateurs or professionals, and includes articles on cattle, horses, dogs, goats, and general pets, with excellent illustrations, as well as a calendar, &c.—Messrs. Rimmel send us specimens of their perfumes enclosed in various tasteful envelopes, cosaques, Christmas cards, &c.

GOETHE'S "FAUST"[*]

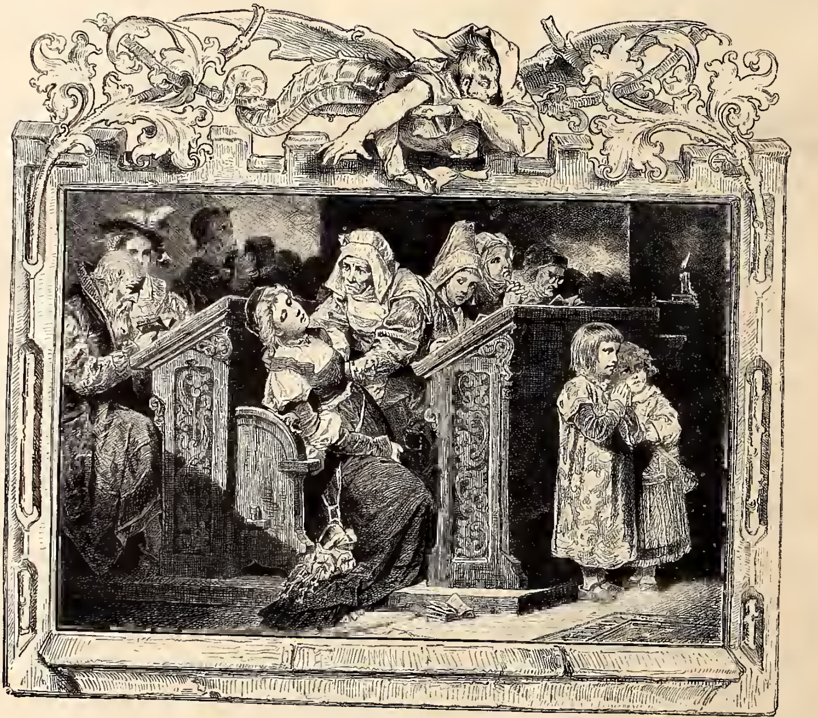
NOT long since we placed before our readers some specimens of the engravings from a magnificent edition of "Faust" put forth by Mr. Bruckmann, and now we have to execute the same agreeable task for another edition equally splendid. Authors are proverbially afflicted with vanity, nor was the great Goethe exempt from this failing. What gratification he would feel—supposing that the spirits of the departed are not beyond such mundane weakness—if he could be informed that his masterpiece, so far from passing gradually into oblivion after his death, had been translated and retranslated into all manner of tongues, and illustrated by the pencils of artists of the highest celebrity! So great, too, have been the improvements in printing and engraving processes, that a magnificent volume like this, which, if producible at all during Goethe's life time, would have been restricted to the libraries of Grand Dukes and Emperors, is now issued at a price comparatively so moderate that it may be purchased without extravagance by any lover of Art who is gifted with a fair share of this world's goods. The genius which pervades this wonderful poem is so essentially Teutonic that we never feel quite satisfied with "Faust" illustrated by any other than a German artist, however clever he may be. In the work before us, the two artists, Messrs. Mayer and Seitz, are both thorough Germans, and hence their illustrations are completely in harmony with Goethe's poetry. Take the two leading characters in the tragedy, for example. Faust is not made too young by Mr. Mayer, even after his transformation. He is not the picturesque love-inspiring youth depicted by some artists; he is the quiet, contemplative student, with grave, earnest eyes, as for instance, where he sees Margaret for the first time in the flesh. A sweet girl, this Margaret of Mr. Mayer's, not impossibly lovely, but rather a typical maiden of the finer type of Germanhood, such as may be met with any day in the quieter nooks and corners of the Fatherland, a girl whom you feel instinctively would make a thoroughly good wife and good mother, and whose fall is therefore all the more piteous. Even in the prison, with the dungeon straws clinging to her hair, she is still the same sweetfaced creature. Mr. Mayer, we think, excels in the quieter scenes, especially where children are introduced, but many of his more bustling episodes are full of vigour, as, for example, the adventure in the tavern, and the wild ride of the witches. With regard to Mr. Seitz, to whom the execution of the head and tail pieces have been entrusted (a specimen of which we engrave here) we can only say that in a branch of art—that of ingenious grotesqueness, in which the Germans are incomparably strong—he shows himself an accomplished master. It is a somewhat unthankful as well as an ambitious task to attempt a translation of

Continued on page 622



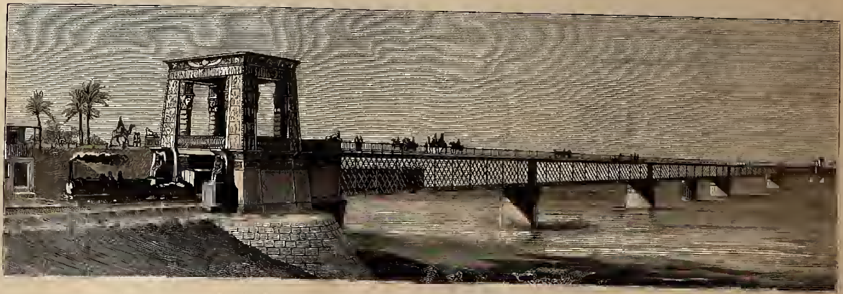
---

[*] "Faust: a Tragedy," by J. W. von Goethe, translated by T. J. Arnold, F.S.A. Illustrated by A. L. Mayer and Rudolf Seitz. London: Hachette and Co.

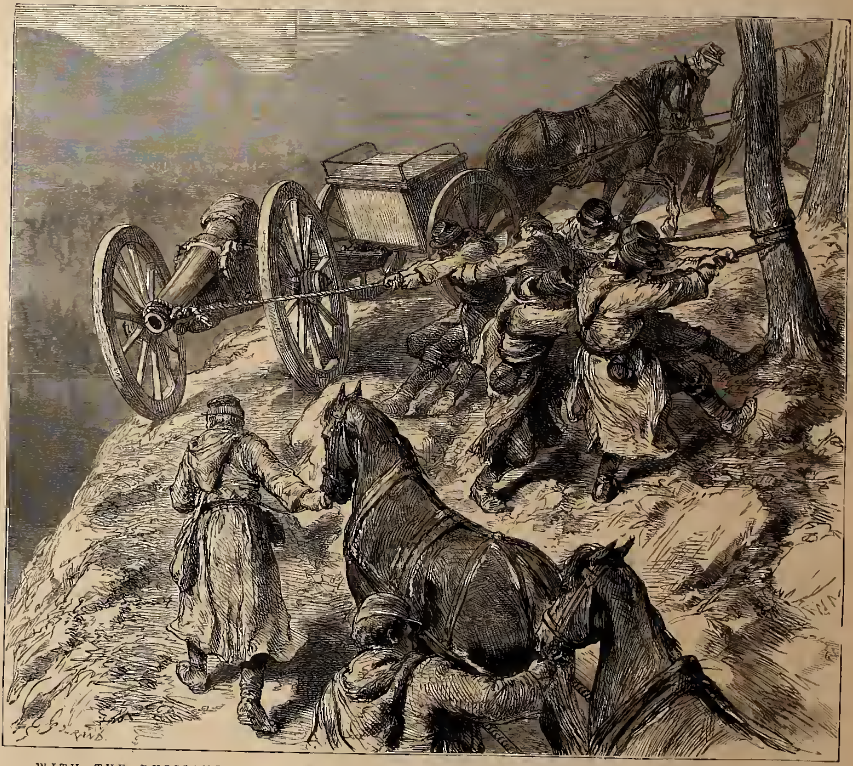


MARGARET IN THE CATHEDRAL
Margaret (swooning): "Neighbour! Your salts-bottle"

GOETHE'S "FAUST"
ILLUSTRATED BY ALEXANDER LIEZEN MAYER AND RUDOLF SEITZ



PROPOSED IRON RAILWAY BRIDGE ACROSS THE NILE AT MANSURAH



WITH THE RUSSIANS AND GENERAL GOURKO IN THE BALKANS—A DIFFICULT CORNER

(Continued from page 619)

Faust, because so many comparisons are necessarily made with former workers in the samefield. The version printed in this volume is from the pen of the late Mr. T. J. Arnold, best known to the English public as an energetic magistrate at the Westminster Police Court. There are occasional roughnesses and inversions in Mr. Arnold's translation, which is not to be wondered at when we remember that he has hampered himself by the resolve to reproduce exactly the original metres; but, on the other hand, judging from a somewhat cursory examination, there is an idiomatic raciness and vigour in his rendering which makes it eminently readable. We can scarcely, however, approve of Gretchen and Lischen being translated "Maggy" and "Lizzie." At any rate, "Maggie" would be preferable to "Maggy."

◆

British Field Sports are exceedingly fashionable in the United States this winter. Fox-hunting is largely practised, hawking is to be introduced, and "hare and hounds" has been tried in several schools with great success. Indeed, the various colleges are so occupied with athletic amusements, that the journals suggest that "by and by some little time will have to be set apart for study."

Old Crusts of Bread are carefully utilised by that frugal class of Parisians who gather up old cigar stumps to transform into fresh tobacco, and rake decayed vegetables out of the gutter to make a savoury soup. The "old crust man" goes round to the various restaurants, charitable institutions, and schools, and collects the crumbled and dirty scraps of stale bread, which he sorts into various categories. The cleanest and least damaged, after being dried and scraped, are used for that favourite French soup, croûte au pot. The smallest crusts are beaten in a mortar into a paste, which is used by the butchers to cover their cutlets, and the more dirty scraps are baked and formed into a brown glazed coating for hams. The refuse pieces are baked, burnt, powdered, flavoured with mint, and finally appear as toothpowder.

DEATH.

On the 25th inst., Philip Luke, son of Luke and Fanny Fildes, of Melbury Road, Holland Park, Kensington, W., aged one year.

NEW VOLUMES JUST COMMENCED OF

THE THREE MAGAZINES for 1878.

THE QUIVER
For JANUARY, price 6d.,
CONTAINS—
THE RESTING-PLACES OF OUR SAVIOUR, AND THE SCENES OF HIS SECLUSION. By the Rev. Prebendary Chadwick, B.D.
SCRIPTURE LESSONS FOR SCHOOL AND HOME. By the Rev. J. W. Gedge, M.A.
"THE QUIVER" BIBLE CLASS.
LAST WORKS OF THE BOOKS OF GOD. By the Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter, M.A.
CHARLES AND SARAH WESLEY.
"THE GOD WHO ONCE." New Hymn Tune. By Sir George J. Elvey, Mus. D., Organist of St. George's Chapel Royal, Windsor.
EARLY PILGRIMS: ABRAHAM. By the Rev. T. M. Morris.
THE PARABLES OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By the Rev. Canon Barry, D.D.
NERVINE TONICS. By the Rev. Arthur Brown.
A MOTTO FOR LIFE. A Tale for the New Year.
GOOD WORK AT HOME AND ABROAD.
MORE THAN CONQUEROR. Serial Story. By F. M. F. Skene.
A CHRONICLE OF BARHAM. Serial Story. By E. Owens Blackburne.
&c., &c.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE
For JANUARY, price 7d.,
CONTAINS—
EMBROIDERED HOUSE AND TABLE LINEN.
THE NURSING OF THE LONDON POOR.
IRIS. Song, with Music.
THE AVERAGE SERVANT.
A TIN OF SARDINES.
THE SCHOOLMISTRESS AT SKERNE DUN.
ON SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH SERVICE.
CHIT-CHAT ON DRESS.
COFFEE TAVERNS.
A LUCKY TUMBLE.
THE SONGS OF THE BELLS.
HANDS AND FEET—THEIR CARE AND COMFORT.
HOW MY CHILDREN WERE DRILLED.
KING BABY—Some Experiences of a Young Mother.
TIME SHALL TRY. Serial Story.
SUSPENSE. Serial Story.
THE GATHERER.
&c., &c.

LITTLE FOLKS
For JANUARY, price 6d.,
Forms the FIRST PART of the NEW VOLUME for 1878, and contains a beautiful COLOURED FRONTISPIECE, entitled "HURRAH FOR THE SNOW!" the Commencement of Two New Serial Stories, and many new features of attraction.

"'Little Folks' disarms criticism. It is so admirably adapted to the purpose for which it was designed, that nothing but praise can be accorded alike to the matter which is provided for youthful readers, and the exquisite pictorial cuts by which it is illustrated and enlivened."—Civil Service Review

BIRTHDAY PRESENTS, NEW YEAR'S GIFTS, REWARDS, PRIZES, &c.,

CASSELL, PETTER, and GALPIN'S COMPLETE CATALOGUE, containing a List of Several Hundred Volumes, consisting of Bibles and Religious Works (including DR. FARRAR'S "LIFE OF CHRIST," complete in Two Volumes), Fine-Art Volumes, Children's Books, Dictionaries, Educational Works, History, Natural History, Household and Domestic Treatises, Handbooks and Guides, Science, Travels, &c., together with a Synopsis of their numerous Illustrated Serial Publications, sent post free on application to CASSELL, PETTER, and GALPIN, La Belle Sauvage Yard, Ludgate Hill, London.

NEW EDITION THIS DAY

CHRISTMAS BOOKS. By Charles Dickens. With 28 Illustrations by F. Barnard. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper, 1s. 9d. Being the completing volume of the Household Edition of Dickens's Novels.

THE IMITATION OF CHRIST. By Thomas a Kempis. Beautifully Illustrated Edition. Demy 8vo, 16s.

CHAPMAN and HALL, 193, Piccadilly.

NEW NOVELS.

Second Edition.
New Novel by the Author of "Fashion and Passion."
WHO IS SHE? A MYSTERY OF MAYFAIR. By the Author of "Fashion and Passion." 3 vols.

New Novel by Captain Hawley Smart.
PLAY OR PAY: a Novelette. By Captain Hawley Smart, Author of "Breezie Langton," "Bound to Win."
[This day.

THE MISSING WILL. By Herbert Broom, LL.D. 3 vols.

FRANK RALEIGH OF WATERCOMBE, a Tale of Sport, Love, and Adventure. By the Author of "Wolf-Hunting in Brittany." 3 vols.

CHAPMAN and HALL, 193, Piccadilly.

Price 6d., post-free, 7½d.

FAMILY HERALD for Jan., Part 416.

PURE LITERATURE.
The Illustrated London News, in reference to pure literature, speaks of "The Family Herald, that joy to tens of thousands of innocent English households."

LEADING ARTICLES AND ESSAYS.
The British Quarterly Review says:—"There is a well-considered leading article or essay every week, upon some subject of an instructive or thoughtful character."

NOVELS AND TALES.
The Saturday Review says:—"Its novels and tales are quite as well written as the best circulating-library stories."

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.
The Saturday Review says:—"The editor is the confidant and confessor in every station of life. The Answers to Correspondents cannot be fictitious, a romance and a life history being embodied in almost each of them."

Price 6d., post free, 7½d.,

FAMILY HERALD for Jan., Part 416. WILLIAM STEVENS, 421, Strand, London; and all Newsvendors and Railway Stations.

CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE: WITH BRIEF NOTES ON EGYPT AND EGYPTIAN OBELISKS. By Erasmus Wilson, F.R.S. With Illustrations. Cloth, price 5s.; post, 5s. 6d.
BRAIN and CO., 26, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Now ready, Royal 8vo, cloth, price 38s.

BURKE'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE and KNIGHTAGE for 1878, contains a record of the families of Privy Councillors, Knights of various Orders, and Knights Bachelors, and important information as to precedence. In this edition the Club Addresses have been added.
HARRISON and SONS, 59, Pall Mall, London, S.W., Booksellers to the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

Folio, price 7s. 6d. each.

THROUGH THE EYE TO THE MIND—THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOKS: a Series of Volumes Illustrative of Natural History and of the Vegetable World, with Descriptive Letterpress.
"These volumes are among the most instructive picture books we have seen, and we know of none better calculated to excite and gratify the appetite of the young for the knowledge of nature."—Times.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Tenth Edition, with Fifty-four Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No 1; or, LESSONS FROM THE NATURAL HISTORY OF ANIMALS. By Adam White, late Assistant, Zoological Department, British Museum.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Fifth Edition, with many new Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 2; or, LESSONS FROM THE VEGETABLE WORLD. By the Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," "The Herb of the Field," &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Third Edition, with Sixty Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No 3: LESSONS ON THE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS, or the Natural History of the Quadrupeds which characterise the Four Divisions of the Globe.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Second Edition, with Forty-eight Folio Coloured Plates, price 7s. 6d.

THE INSTRUCTIVE PICTURE BOOK, No. 4: SKETCHES FROM NATURE, or Pictures of Animal and Vegetable Life in all Lands.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

Seventh Edition, with Thirty-six Oblong Coloured Illustrations, price 7s. 6d

RECREATIVE ILLUSTRATION— THE NEW PICTURE BOOK; or, PICTORIAL LESSONS ON FORM, COMPARISON, AND NUMBER, for Children under Seven Years of Age. With Explanation by Nicholas Bohny.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Map and Illustrations, price 6s.

THE HEROES OF YOUNG AMERICA. By Ascott R. Hope, Author of "A Peck of Troubles," "A Book About Boys," "A Book About Dominoes," &c., &c.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W

Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, price 6s.

ADVENTURES IN THE AIR: being Memorable Experiences of Great Aeronauts. From the French of M. De Fonvielle. Translated and edited by John S. Keltie.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

ATLASES.—All the best Atlases by Keith Johnston, Dr. Wm. Smith, The Useful Knowledge Society, Spruner, Stieler, Black, Philip, &c., in bindings suitable for presentation, from £1 to £6 6s., subject to a large discount for cash.
EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

STATIONERY.—"Stanford's Treasury Note," 4s. per ream, "Whatman's, Turkey Mill," Repp, and all the Ordinary and Special qualities of Note Paper, with corresponding Envelopes in Stock. Samples and prices on application. Card plates, dies, book plates, &c., &c., Engraved in the best manner
EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

DIARIES AND OTHER ANNUALS, 1878.—Letts', Pettitt's, De La Rue's, Marcus Ward's, Harwood's, Goldsmith's, Whitaker's, and other Diaries, Pocket Books, and Almanacs; Peerages, Court Guides, Foreign and Colonial Office List, Parliamentary and Clerical Directories, &c., &c., supplied on the day of publication, at a large discount for cash.
EDWARD STANFORD, 55, Charing Cross, S.W.

POMEROY ABBEY. MRS. HENRY WOOD'S ILLUSTRATED SERIAL STORY commences in the ARGOSY for JANUARY. Now ready.

Now ready for January,
MRS. HENRY WOOD'S MAGAZINE,

THE ARGOSY.
CONTENTS:
1. Pomeroy Abbey. By the Author of "East Lynne." Chap 1: Joan Pomeroy. Chap. 2: At the White House. Chap 3: The Keeper's Daughter. Illust. by M. Ellen Edwards.
2. Caromel's Farm. By Johnny Ludlow.
3. The Orkney and Shetland Islands. By Charles W. Wood, Author of "Through Holland." With Five Illusts.
4. Franz Werner. A Christmas Story.
5. The "British Workman."
6. The White Hen.
7. New Year's Night.

Sixpence Monthly.
"The best and cheapest of our magazines."—Standard.
"One of the marvels of the day."—London Scotsman
"An excellent collection of entertaining matter."—Observer.
"Johnny Ludlow's stories are almost perfect."—Spectator.
RICHARD BENTLEY and SON, 8, New Burlington St., W.

DANCING MADE EASY—COULON'S HANDBOOK OF DANCING is the most complete treatise on the subject, containing full descriptions of all dances, new and old, illustrated by upwards of forty woodcuts. Price 1s.; post free, 13 stamps.—A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, W. All new music half-price.

BY DR. BARR MEADOWS.
Seventh Edition, cloth, post free 32 stamps.

ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN. Remarks on the Abuse of Arsenic and other reputed Specifics.—G. HILL, 154, Westminster Bridge Road.

24th Edition, 8vo, cloth, pp. 1,102; price 16s.

HOMŒOPATHIC DOMESTIC MEDICINE. By J. Laurie, M.D. Completely re-arranged and revised, by R. S. Gutteridge, M.D. The most comprehensive Guide published for the use of families, emigrants, and missionaries, being free of all technicalities. The present edition contains, in addition to the symptoms and treatment of all general diseases, including those of females and children, many important new chapters, comprising among others the specific characteristic effects of all the new American remedies, plain directions for the treatment of accidents, and illustrations delineating the minor operations in surgery. Hydropathic appliances, affection of the eyes (with a description of the eyes and their appendages, and illustrations showing the various parts of the eye). Full directions are also given for the treatment of diseases prevalent in tropical climates. A new and concise Dictionary of Medical Terms and Treatment, with leading indications of treatment prefixed to the various chapters and divisions.—An Epitome of the above, 29th Edition, price 5s.
LEATH and ROSS, 5, St. Paul's Churchyard, and 9, Vere Street, London, W.

Now ready at all Booksellers.

LETTS'S DIARIES and POCKET BOOKS for 1878, to suit all classes. 116 varieties of size, from 6d. to 14s. each. Catalogues gratis.
LETTS, SONS, and CO. (Limited), 33, King William St., E.C.

MAPPIN and WEBB, Manufacturers,

76, 77, and 78, OXFORD, STREET, WEST END.

MANSION HOUSE BUILDINGS, CITY.

THE HIGHEST QUALITY AT LOWEST PRICES.

MAPPIN and WEBB'S PRESENTS.

PRESENTS—SPOONS and FORKS.

PRESENTS—TABLE KNIVES.

PRESENTS—NOVELTIES.

PRESENTS—ORNAMENTALS.

PRESENTS—USEFUL.

PRESENTS—IMMENSE ASSORTMENTS.

ELECTRO SILVER.—STERLING SILVER.

CATALOGUES POST FREE.

MAPPIN and WEBB, MANSION HOUSE BUILDINGS, CITY.

76, 77, and 78, OXFORD STREET, WEST END.

WATCHES and JEWELLERY, Good and Cheap,
KIBBLE, 22, Gracechurch Street.
Gold Watches, from 45s. Silver, from 21s.
Aluminium, 21s. Keyless ditto, 42s.
The Fashionable Silver Jewellery.
Whitby Jet Mourning Ornaments.
Christmas Presents in great variety

MORTLOCK'S POTTERY

MINTON'S CHINA GALLERIES.

DINNER SERVICES.

BREAKFAST SERVICES.

TEA SERVICES.

TOILET SERVICES.

ENGRAVED AND PLAIN GLASS.

SOLE ADDRESSES: 202, 203, 204, OXFORD STREET; and 30, 31, and 32, ORCHARD STREET, LONDON.

DEEP BLUE DINNER SERVICES can be obtained at GARDNER'S, 453 and 454, West Strand, from £3 13s. 6d. The set for 12 persons complete. A few of the leading patterns are detailed:

The Glengariff	£3 13 6
The Feeles	3 13 6
The Laurel	3 13 6
The Bramble	4 4 0
The Madras	5 5 0

Photographs post free.

GARDNER'S NEW DINNER SER- VICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons:—

The Osborne, in pink or green	£3 5 0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3 13 6
The Bramble, in all colours	4 4 0
The One Thousand and Two	5 5 0
The One Thousand and Two A	5 5 0
The Japanese Bamboo	6 6 0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNERS, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

JEWEL ROBBERIES.—CHUBB'S SAFES for JEWELS give the greatest security from the attacks of burglars, and are also Fire Resisting. All sizes, with various fittings. Chubb's Latches and Detector Locks. Price List sent free.—CHUBB and SON, 128, Queen Victoria Street, St. Paul's, E.C., and 68, St. James's Street, S.W.

WEDDING PRESENTS.—MECHI, 112, Regent Street, W.—Customers wishing to obtain for WEDDING, BIRTHDAY, or COMPLIMENTARY PRESENTS, dressing-cases and dressing-bags, writing-cases, work-tables, inkstands, card-boxes, tea-caddies, cutlery in all its branches, electro-plated and silver dessert knives and forks, and other articles of utility or ornament, will find every variety in style, elegance, design, and price at MECHI'S, 112, Regent Street. Catalogues post free.

WINTER EVENINGS.—FRET- WORK MACHINE, with saws, 25 beautiful designs for 42s. Strong, elegant, and efficient. Send for sketch and description. May be obtained from any ironmonger, tool dealer, cutler, or direct from WM. MARPLES and SONS, Hibernia Works, Sheffield.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS' One Shil- ling Moist Colour Box. Unadulterated pigments. Box in japanned tin.—LECHERTIER, BARBE, and CO., 60, Regent St., Lond., and local Artists' Colourmen and Stationers.

PHOTOGRAPHS and VIGNETTES beautifully coloured for 2s.
Mrs. RUSSELL, 30, Seafield, West Brighton.

THE MOORE and BURGESS MIN- STRELS' NEW CHRISTMAS ALBUM contains no less than 18 new and beautiful songs (which cannot be obtained in any similar publication), published Saturday, Nov 24. Words, music, choruses, and pianoforte accompaniments. Price 1s., post free 14 stamps, addressed MANAGER, Moore and Burgess Minstrels, St. James's Hall.—Wholesale of J. WILLIAMS, 24, Berners Street, W.

ASK FOR THE NEW YORK CONSOLIDATED CARD COMPANY'S

"SQUEEZER" PLAYING CARDS.
The highest finish, back and front, and handle like highly polished Ivory.
Retail of every Stationer, and Wholesale of
LAWRENCE BROTHERS, Sole Agents,
Viaduct Works, Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

PETER ROBINSON'S
COURT AND GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, REGENT STREET,
Is the Cheapest and the Largest
Warehouse of the kind
in London.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S
WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS,
REGENT STREET.
For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
in the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.

"ON RECEIPT of LETTER or TELEGRAM,"
MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—
with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required),
without extra charge.
PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.
DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
in the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well
as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by
PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
AN IMPORTANT PURCHASE
OF SEVERAL THOUSAND PIECES BY

PETER ROBINSON of Regent Street
OF THE BEST WEARING MAKES ONLY,
and highly recommended

Bonnet and Cie	at 5s. 0d
Jaubert	at 4s. 0d
Ponsons	at 5s. 3d.
Degoves	at 4s. 9d.

The above are from 2s. to 3s. per yard
under last year's prices.
The EMPRESS CACHEMIRE, at 6s.
Also Excellent Value at
2s. 6d., 3s. 3d., 3s. 11d., 4s. 6d., and 5s. 11d.
For Patterns address to
PETER ROBINSON,
256 to 262, Regent Street.

FOR SIX GUINEAS.

A BLACK SILK COSTUME
made of RICH LYONS SILK,
with Velvet Garniture,
Exquisitely cut and fashioned.
Copies of expensive Paris Models.
Photos free.
PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

REMARKABLY CHEAP. For One Guinea, A Black Quilted SATIN PETTICOAT.
For 2½ Guineas, A Black Silk TRAINED SKIRT.
At PETER ROBINSON'S of REGENT STREET.

FOR TWO GUINEAS, and up to Seven,
Costumes in New Black Materials,
in various fashionable Styles,
At PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET,

EVENING DRESSES, at One Guinea.
Black Brussels Net, at 29s. 6d.
Tulle (condition keeping), 50s.
Grenadine, 52s. 6d.
New Styles, well cut, and elegantly trimmed.
Illustrations free.

THE NEW CRAPE.
The Pure Silk Gordian Crape,
for Widows and Families.
Its advantages are—that it is made
of silk so pure, that it will not crease when sat upon
nor spot with rain.
It is a richer black, free from dress, and
the gummed appearance so objectionable in other Crape.
The wear of every yard is guaranteed.
The Gordian Crape is a Specialité,
only to be obtained at
PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET,
The MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Nos. 256 to 262.
Excellent qualities at 4s. 9d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 9s. 6d.
Patterns free.

WATSON, BONTOR, and CO.,
IMPORTERS.
TURKEY CARPETS.
PERSIAN CARPETS.
INDIAN CARPETS.
35 and 36, OLD BOND STREET.

SHANKLIN, I.W.—TO BE LET UN- FURNISHED or TO BE SOLD, in the best part of this favourite health resort, a charming small VILLA RESIDENCE, containing drawing-room, 17 by 14, dining room and small study, 4 bedrooms and 1 dressing-room, a good kitchen, washhouse with soft water, usual offices, and every convenience. Town water laid on. It has a picturesque, steeply terraced garden, stocked with productive fruit trees and ornamental shrubs, which forms a part of the Upper Chine. Close to the celebrated Shanklin Chine. Four minutes from church, eight minutes from sea. Recently put into thorough repair. Rent on lease, £55. Price for lease of 999 years, £850.

AMERICAN ORGAN for SALE.—A fine AMERICAN ORGAN by MASON and HAMLIN, containing Automatic Swell, Foot Swell, Sub Bass, Diapason, Flute, Melodia, Dulciana, Octave Coupler, Euphone, 2 Pedals suitable for drawing room, and sufficiently powerful for schoolroom or small church. Cased in American Black Walnut. Cost 55 guineas, now offered for £40 cash.—Apply by letter to X 2, Messrs. Geo. Rees, 43, Russell Street, Covent Garden.

ROLLER SKATES.—THE CELE- BRATED "SWALLOW SKATE can be supplied in any quantities. References to numerous Rinks, where this Skate has long been in use, and greatly approved. Sample pair, 21s. Five handy sizes at wholesale price.—H. M. THOMAS, Office, 6, Clement's Inn, Strand.

A WIDOW LADY, who has many little Children entirely dependent on her, earnestly begs for orders for most exquisite etchings of animals. A beautiful specimen etching sent, with particulars of her case and references (if desired) on receipt of 5s. in stamps.—Address Box 23, Penzance.

DEBENHAM and FREEBODY.

STOCKTAKING SALE.

MONDAY, December 31st, and following DAYS, the WHOLE STOCK of

FANCY AND MADE-UP GOODS WILL BE OFFERED AT GREATLY

REDUCED PRICES.

BLACK AND COLOURED SILKS.

DRESS MATERIALS.

HOUSEHOLD DRAPERY.

RIBBONS AND TRIMMINGS.

MILLINERY.

DEBENHAM and FREEBODY.

STOCK-TAKING SALE.

COSTUMES and MANTLES at exceptionally Low Prices. FRENCH MODELS half-price.

JUVENILE COSTUMES—Boys' Suits.

"ODDMENTS" and REMNANTS in all Departments at half-price.

NEW YEARS' GIFTS, BRONZES, WORK BASKETS, VASES, FANCY BOXES, DRESSING CASES, CARDS, TOYS, GAMES, &c., suitable for presents, will be cleared at half-price.

DEBENHAM and FREEBODY,
WIGMORE ST. and WELBECK ST.,
LONDON, W.

FASHIONS FOR THE WINTER OF 1877.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street.

300 PIECES RICH
BLACK and COLOURED VELVETS, plain and brocaded in all the new designs, prices, Black and Plain Colours, from 4s. 11d., Brocaded, from 12s. 9d. Patterns free.

NEW COLOURED LYONS SILKS,
In White, Cream, Ivory,
Tilleul, Moonlight, Coral, Eau de Nil, &c., &c.,
specially prepared for
BRIDAL AND EVENING WEAR,
also every new shade of Bronze, Navy, Claret, Prune, &c., &c., at 3s. 6d., 3s. 11½d., 4s. 4½d., and 5s. 3d. per yard.
250 Shades to select from. Patterns free on application to
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

BLACK SILKS OF STANDARD QUALITY.
Heavily dyed and showy makes at low prices should be avoided.
PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, having kept for the past 25 years Black Silks produced by Messrs. Bonnet, Ponson, Jaubert, and Tapissier, which are found upon careful examination to be the best and purest makes, invites special attention to these fine qualities, as being cheaper than at any former period, and at the same time recommended with more confidence for really hard wear than any other make of Silk; in proof of purity and excellence the highest awards were given at Philadelphia. Each quality guaranteed not to cut.
Prices, 4s. 6d. to 11s. 6d. per yard. Patterns free.
PETER ROBINSON, 103 to 108, Oxford Street, W.

VERY FASHIONABLE THIS SEASON.
CASHMERE MERINOES, all wool, This most useful material can be had in every new shade of Bronze, Vert Bouteille, Prune, &c., &c., from 2s. 3d. to 2s. 11d. per yard, 45 inches wide. Patterns free.

EVERY NEW SHADE FOR
BALL AND EVENING DRESSES, in Gauzes, Diamond Lustres, Fine Cashmeres, Japanese Silks, Lisse Muslins, and other thin fabrics, from 9s. 6d. to 73s. 6d. the Dress.
The highest quality Japanese Silks at 1s. 11½d. per yard.
Patterns free from PETER ROBINSON, Oxford Street, W.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES REQUIRING
MADE BALL and Wedding Dresses. Now ready, several thousand charming Dresses in White, Black, and all colours, from 18s. 9d. to 10 guineas. Engravings of the above, with many others, can be seen in the New Book of Fashions, which is sent post free.

A FAVOURITE DRESS IN TARLATAN.
THE "DORA" (any Colour or Black), profusely trimmed with flounces and ample train, 1 guinea, a substantial box included.
A pretty Brussels Net Dress, in White, Black, and all colours, for 28s. 9d., with material for bodice.
Patterns of Materials and Illustrations free from
PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

IMPORTANT TO FAMILIES REQUIRING MOURNING.
MESSRS. JAY, in reminding their clientèle that they are in direct communication with the manufacturers of the goods they supply, and thereby save them all intermediate profits, beg also to announce that they SELL whole Pieces of GOODS at WHOLESALE PRICES. Among other useful hard-wearing fabrics, at moderate charges, are Victoria Cord, 1s. per yard, 27 in. wide.

Barathea, 1s. 3d. per yard, 39 in. wide.
All-Wool Serge, from 14d. per yard.
All-Wool French Poplin, 13d. per yard.
French Merinos, from 2s. per yard, 40 in. wide.
Circassian Cloth, from 18d. per yard, 39 in. wide.
Windsor Cloth, both sides alike, 1 guinea the dress of 12 yards.
Good Serviceable Crape, from 2s. per yard.

EVENING DRESSES. Two Guineas and Two and a Half Guineas each. The newest and most fashionable style, and made of non-crushing silk net. Pencil Drawings of the same postage free on application.
JAY'S,
THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
Regent Street, W.

GASK and GASK'S DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP. SALE of the WHOLE of their IMMENSE STOCK at incomparably low prices.
OXFORD STREET and WELLS STREET.

SALE of MANTLES, COSTUMES, SILKS, MILLINERY, UNDERCLOTHING, &c., being the latest delivery of goods ordered early, at exceedingly low prices.—GASK and GASK.

SALE of DRESS FABRICS, LINENS, BLANKETS, CURTAINS, LONG CLOTHS, &c. The whole of the Stock remaining is now being cleared off at exceptional prices.—GASK and GASK.

SALE of HOSIERY, GLOVES, LACE GOODS, FRENCH and FANCY ARTICLES innumerable, suitable for presents, all now marked at the lowest sale prices.—GASK and GASK.

GASK and GASK'S DISSOLUTION of PARTNERSHIP, and SALE of the whole of their IMMENSE STOCK at incomparably low prices. See above. 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, Oxford Street; 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, Wells Street.

LEWIS and ALLENBY.

WINTER SALE of

REDUCED GOODS

IN ALL DEPARTMENTS,

JAN. 1st to 19th, 1878.

ORIENTAL EMBROIDERIES.

LEWIS and ALLENBY

INVITE inspection of their very large and complete Collection, comprising Choice Specimens of JAPANESE, CHINESE, INDIAN, PERSIAN AND OTHER WORKS OF HIGH CLASS, as well as a large variety of low priced and less important articles. These are designed for Curtains, Screens, Cushions, Chairs, Table-covers, and other useful and decorative purposes, and are admirably suited for gifts of an elegant character. A great variety of the above are in Stock, ready mounted; the collection of Screens being exceptionally complete, and at a wide range of prices.

REGENT STREET AND CONDUIT STREET, LONDON,
AND EAST STREET, BRIGHTON.

HENRY GLAVE'S
CHRISTMAS PRESENTS for 1877.
GRENADINES for DINNER, BALL, and EVENING WEAR.

White Grenadines, with Coloured Stripes, 3¾d., and with Satin Stripes, 10¾d. a yard.
Plain White Wool Grenadines, 10¾d. and 1s. 3½d.
Black Self Stripe Grenadines, 6¾d. a yard.
Black very rich Satin Stripe Grenadines, 6¾d. and 8¾d.
Coloured Bengal Stripe Barèges, 7¾d., suitable for children.
A very pretty Grey Granite Barège, at 9¾d.
Black Checked Grenadines, at 4¾d. and 8¾d.
White-Ground, Coloured-Checked Grenadines, at 8¾d.
Pink, White, Sky, and Ecru Honeycomb Grenadines, at 1s. 0½d.
Black Dentelle Grenadines, 8¾d., 10¾d., and 1s. 0½d.
Black Silk Grenadines, 10¾d., 1s. 4½d., 1s. 6½d. and 1s. 11½d.
Black Honeycomb Grenadines, 1s. 9½d. a yard.
Black Bareges, 1s. 0½d., 1s. 3½d., 1s. 6½d., and 1s. 11½d.
Black Wool Norwich Grenadines, 6¾d., 8¾d., 1s. 0½d., 1s. 6½d., and 1s. 11½d.
Black Glacé Grenadines, 4¾d., 6¾d., and 8¾d. yard.
Patterns free
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
DOUBLE-WIDTH HOMESPUNS, SERGES, and MELTONS, measuring from 54 to 60 inches in width.
Double-width Homespun Serge, in Blue, Black, or Brown, 1s. 3½d. Double-width Scotch Serges, in Autumn Colours, 1s. 11½d. Double-width Melton Cloths, 1s. 6½d., 1s. 11½d., and 2s. 11½d.
Stout Double-width Matelasse, 3s. 11d. to 6s. 11d.
Stout Beaver and Napp Mantle Cloths, 3s. 11d., 4s. 11d., and 5s. 11d. Stout Camel's Hair Cloths, 5s. 11d., 6s. 11d., and 7s. 11d. a yard.
All Patterns post free.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
CHRISTMAS BALL AND SOIREE DRESSES.
We have prepared photographs and sketches of the following New Styles, which are sent post free with patterns of material, instructions for self-measurement, and every other particular:—
"Robe de Bal," Coloured Tarlatan Dresses, 18s. 9d. or 25s. 9d.; "Palais Royal," 29s. 6d. or 35s. 6d.; "La Charmeuse," 2 and 2½ gs.; "Giroflée," 29s. 6d. or 37s. 6d.; "Fairy," 18s. 9d., 25s. 6d., or 29s. 6d.; "Ninon," 39s. 6d.; "Antoinette," 35s. 6d. and 2 gs.; "Yoland," 21s. 6d., 29s. 6d., and 35s. 6d.; "Gipsey," 3 gs. or £3 10s. 6d.; "Special Cheap Ball Dresses," complete, with made Bodice, in any Colour Tarlatan, 16s. 9d. each, made to measure in a few hours.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S
UNDERCLOTHING AND OUTFITTING.
A New Illustrated Price List is now ready, and can be sent free to any address.

300 dozen Ladies' Trimmed Nightdresses, 1s. 11½d. each, or three for 5s. 9d.; usual price 2s. 11½d. each.
Handsomely Trimmed Ladies' Nightdresses, with Scotch Insertion and edging, 4s. 11d.; or three for 14s. 6d.
Ladies' Trimmed Chemise, three rows insertion and edging, 2s. 6½d. each, or three for 7s. 4d.
Ladies' Handsomely Trimmed Chemise, 3s. 11½d. each, or three for 11s. 6d.; worth 5s. 11d. each.
Ladies' Plain Chemise, 1s. 4½d. each, three for 3s. 11d., or six for 7s. 10d.
100 dozen Ladies' Trimmed Knickerbockers, with insertion and edging, 2s. 6½d. each, or three for 7s. 4d.
50 dozen Ladies' Trimmed Drawers, 2s. 11½d. each, or three for 8s. 6d.

534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

HENRY GLAVE'S SALE
will commence on MONDAY, December 31.
Having bought the entire STOCK in TRADE of Mr. M. TURNER, of Brixham, Devonshire, altogether, we shall offer on the above and following days more than 20,000 pounds' worth of Silks, Dresses, Household Linens, Hosiery, Gloves, Ribbons, Lace, Mantles, Costumes, with upwards of 1,000 pounds' worth of various useful and ornamental fancy articles.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

ON TUESDAY NEXT, JANUARY 1, 1878.
HENRY GLAVE
will commence the SALE of the UNDERCLOTHING and OUTFITTING STOCK of Mr. L. R. WOODS, of Waltham New Town. This Stock consists of a large variety of made-up articles suitable for Ladies and Children.
534, 535, 536, and 537, New Oxford Street, London.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS.
REDUCTION
OF PRICES.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
30 inches long,
from 8 to 10 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
33 inches long,
from 9 to 12 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS
36 inches long,
from 10 to 14 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
40 inches long,
from 12 to 16 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS,
46 inches long,
from 20 to 25 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS, 40 inches long, richly trimmed with real marten tails, 12 inches deep, 20 gs.; Real Sable, 10 inches deep, 40 gs.; Skunk, 20 gs.

WAYRE'S SEAL PALETOTS can be sent on approval to any part of the United Kingdom by forwarding a reference in Town to

MESSRS. WAYRE, Manufacturing FURRIERS, 96, Oxford Street, and 332, Oxford Street (corner of Regent Circus). Established Half-a-Century.

£10.—In return for a £10 Note, free and safe, per post, one of BENNETT'S LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, perfect for time, beauty, and workmanship, with keyless action, air tight, damp tight, and dust tight.—65, Cheapside, London. Good chains at manufacturer's prices. P.O.O. to John Bennett.
BENNETT, 65 and 64, Cheapside.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO?—Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, book plates, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 20s. Solid gold ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked, with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 9d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourne Street, corner of St. Martin's Lane.

VISITING CARDS by Culleton.—Fifty, best quality, 2s. 3d., post free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate. Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 13s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25 Cranbourn St. (corner of St. Martin's Lane), W.C.

CULLETON'S Guinea Box of Stationery contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn Street (corner of St. Martin's Lane).

FOR ARMS and CREST SEND NAME and COUNTY to T. MORING, Inns of Court Heraldic Office, 44, High Holborn, W.C. Sketch, 3s. 6d.; Coloured, 7s. 6d. Seals, Dies, &c. Illustrated Price Lists Post free.

STATHAM'S PRESENTS for YOUTH. Endless Amusement for Holidays and Evenings. Illust. Catalogue, Polytechnic Amusements, Scientific Apparatus, Mechanical Models, Toys, Games. 3 stamps
W. E. STATHAM, 111¾, Strand, London.

THE NEW WONDER, "THE TELEPHONE," post free, 15 stamps. Produces the greatest wonder and astonishment. Can communicate at long distances in the house.—STEREOSCOPIC COMPANY, 54, Cheapside, and 110 and 108, Regent Street. The "Christmas Guinea Box" just out, with all the Novelties. "It is a Christmas institution."—Punch.

CONSUMPTION: its Proximate Cause and Specific Treatment by the HYPOPHOSPHITES, upon the Principles of Stœchiological Medicine, by
JOHN FRANCIS CHURCHILL, M.D.,
With an Appendix on the Direct Treatment of Respiratory Diseases (Asthma, Bronchitis, &c.) by Stœchiological Inhalants And Reports of nearly Two Hundred Cases by Drs. Churchill, Campbell, Heslop, Sterling, Bird, Santa Maria, Gomez, Maestre, Parigot, Rainvillier, Galves, Leriverend, Denobele, Feldman, Pfeiffer, Vintras, Bougard, Tirlfahy, Lanil, Fabbri, Panegrossi, Cerasi, Gualdi, Todini, Ascenzi, Regnoli, Valentini, Casati, Blasi, Borromeo, Fiorelli, and Fedeli.
London: LONGMANS and CO. Price 21s.

CONSUMPTION! CONSUMPTION! SILPHIUM CYRENAICUM (the celebrated plant of the Ancients) has now been acknowledged by the principal celebrities of the French faculty to be the only cure for Consumption, and all affections of the Pulmonary Organs, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c., &c. Its effect is magical, and the cure certain. To be obtained from all Chemists, with pamphlets, full instructions, &c. Wholesale from London Patent Medicine houses.

THOMPSON AND CAPPER'S
DENTIFRICE WATER
Arrests Decay in the Teeth and Sweetens the Breath. 55, Bold Street, Liverpool. Sold in 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. Bottles, by all Chemists.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the finest purifiers of the blood. They speedily correct all disorders of the liver and stomach, are invaluable in cases of dysentery, and as a general family medicine have no equal.

DINNEFORD'S FLUID MAGNESIA. The best Remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEADACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION; and safest aperient for delicate constitutions, ladies, and children. Of all Chemists.

DR. LELIEVRE'S ICELAND MOSS POULTICE (Patented) is exempt from all the inconveniences inseparable from Poultices made with Linseed or Bread. These spoil the linen, bedding, &c., dry up on the edges, rapidly ferment, giving a most unpleasant odour; and no dependence can be placed on the quality and freshness of the linseed meal. This New Poultice is instantaneous, for it is ready in a few seconds. Sold retail by all Chemists.
Wholesale: RIGOLLOT and CO., 81, Southwark St., London.

LESLIE'S ALMONDISED COD LIVER OIL (Registered).
No disagreeable smell or taste, no nausea.
Taken readily by the most delicate constitution and by Children.
"The natural nauseous taste of the Oil is disguised with considerable art. Children take it with avidity."—See Lancet, British Medical Journal, Sanitary Record, Medical Times, Medical Press, Medical Record, &c.
Prices—Pints, 4s. 6d.; half pints, 2s. 4d.; quarter pints, 1s. 3d., Imperial Measure.
Retail of all Chemists and Druggists, and Wholesale of LESLIE and CO. (Limited), Bond Court House, Walbrook, London.

THROAT IRRITATION.
EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.
Sold only in Boxes, 6d. and 1s. labelled
JAMES EPPS and CO., HOMŒOPATHIC CHEMISTS,
48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

CORPULENCE.—YATE HOLLAND'S EMACERATING POWDERS speedily and safely absorb superfluous fat and reduce corpulency, however long standing. 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. a box.—MARTIN and CO., 3, Paradise Road, London, S.W.; or through any Chemist.

NATURAL MINERAL WATERS.
VICHY.
Property of the French Government.
CELESTINS.—The water of this spring is very agreeable, sparkling, and slightly acidulated. Remedy for complaints of the Kidneys, Gravel, Gout, Diabetes, Rheumatism, &c.
HAUTERIVE.—This spring contains a greater quantity of carbonic acid, and is especially recommended as a table water.
GRANDE-GRILLE.—For complaints of the Liver and Biliary Organs, Indigestion, &c.
HOPITAL.—For Stomach complaints, &c.
VICHY WATERS are pleasant to the taste, and may be drank pure or mixed with wine or spirits.
CAUTION.—See that the name of the particular water required is on the capsule.
Sold by all Chemists, Wine, and Mineral Merchants.
Price One Shilling per Bottle.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CONSTIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children.
The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says: It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families."
Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists.
Wholesale: 82, Southwark Street, London.

FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH.— This excellent Family Medicine is the most effective remedy for indigestion, bilious and liver complaints, loss of appetite, drowsiness, giddiness, spasms, and all disorders of the stomach and bowels; or where an aperient is required, nothing can be better adapted.
For FEMALES, these Pills are truly excellent, removing the distressing headache so very prevalent, depression of spirits, dulness of sight, nervous affections, blotches, pimples, and sallowness of skin, and give a healthy bloom to the complexion.
Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per box.

MR. HERON, 10, Arthur Street, Belfast, writes: "DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS allayed the inflammation of my throat, relieved the cough, and gave me ease at once." Price 1s. 1½d.

MALVERN COLLEGE. The ANNUAL EXAMINATION for ENTRANCE EXHIBITIONS and SCHOLARSHIPS will be held on December 20th and 21st.

THE WANDERERS' CLUB, Pall Mall. This Club having now reached 1,378 Members, there remain only 200 VACANCIES.
Annual Subscription: Town Members, 8 guineas; Country Members, 4 guineas; Members Abroad, 2 guineas. Present Entrance Fee, 10 guineas. Apply to the Secretary.

THE GRAND HOTEL, LONDON.— The extensive building now in course of erection on the site of the historical mansion of the Dukes of Northumberland at the corner of Northumberland Avenue, Trafalgar Square, will, when completed, be opened as a first-class Hotel.
Messrs. GORDON and CO., Proprietors.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE (or NORTH LONDON) HOSPITAL.
SPECIAL CHRISTMAS APPEAL FOR AID.

Ordinary Annual Expenditure over . . .	£13,000
Reliable Income from Dividends, Annual Subscriptions, &c.	7,600
Deficit . . .	£5,400

The total amount of RELIEF AFFORDED TO NEW CASES FROM JANUARY 1 TO OCTOBER 31 THIS YEAR has been as follows:—In-Patients, 1,687. Out-Patients, 4,762. Casualties, 5,100. Ophthalmic Cases, 1,184. Cases of Diseases of the Skin, 655. Cases of Childbirth attended at the patients' own habitations, 1,337. Total, 14,725.
The Committee most earnestly appeal to the benevolent public for pecuniary assistance to enable them to PAY OFF the above liability of the past year. SUBSCRIPTIONS received by Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand, or at the Hospital.
NEWTON H. NIXON, Secretary.

NATIONAL INSTITUTION FOR DISEASES OF THE SKIN, Gray's Inn Road. Established 1864.
PHYSICIAN—Dr. BARR MEADOWS, 47, Victoria Street, S.W.
Free to necessitous; payment required from other applicants.

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.— THE CREAM OF OLD IRISH WHISKIES.
Pure, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome.
Universally recommended by the Medical Profession.
Dr. HASSALL says:—"The Whisky is soft, mellow and pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality."
20, GREAT TITCHFIELD STREET, W.

COCK'S READING SAUCE
Is the best and most economical Sauce ever manufactured
FOR FISH, ENRICHING SOUPS, GRAVIES, &c.
It only requires a trial to convince the purchaser of its excellence.
CAUTION.—The genuine is protected by Trade Mark, viz., CHARLES COCKS' Signature on a white ground across the Reading Arms.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN COMPANY, LIVERPOOL ROAD, LONDON, N., supply the best goods only. Whites for pastry, 10s. per bushel; households for bread, 9s. 4d.; wheat meal for brown bread, 8s. 6d.; coarse Scotch oatmeal, 3s. 2d. per 14 lbs.; fine, 3s. 4d.; American hominy, 4s.; barley, maize, and barley meal, 5s. 8d. per bushel, or 21s. 6d. per sack; buckwheat, 5s. per bushel, or 19s. per sack; oats, 4s. per bushel; crushed oats, 3s. 6d. per bushel, or 13s. 6d. per sack; middlings, 2s. 4d. per bushel; ground pollard, 1s. 8d.; peas, 7s. 6d.; tick beans, 8s.; split peas, 2s. 6d. and 3s. per peck; meat biscuits, 20s. per cwt.; lentil flour for invalids, in tins, 1 lb. size, 1s., and 7 lbs., 5s. All other kinds of grain and seed. Special prices for larger quantities. Post Office Orders and Cheques to be made in favour of GEORGE YOUNG

NEW YORK.

EPPS'S COCOA.

Wholesale Depôt: Smith and Vanderbeek, Park Place.

PARIS.

EPPS'S COCOA.

Depôt: A. Delafosse, Faubourg St. Honoré, 64.

WEIGH YOUR CANDLES.—Many Foreign Light-Weights are about. All the Candles of PRICE'S PATENT CANDLE COMPANY (Limited) are intended to be the exact weight without the wrapper. Try their Gold Medal Palmitine, burning brilliantly but slowly, and of the transparency of the finest Spermaceti. Try also their New Patent Night Lights, made without the paper case. Order of your own dealer.

PROFESSOR BROWNE'S WIGS and
SCALPS, from 35s.
47, FENCHURCH STREET.

PROFESSOR BROWNE'S Hair Department for Ladies comprises a large collection of Long Hair Head Dresses, Crop and Frizzy ditto, Chignons, Plaits, Coils, Coronets, Cachepugnes, and covered Stems in all shades of colour to suit the present fashion. Also Bands, Fronts, and Curls.—47, Fenchurch Street.

PROFESSOR BROWNE has the largest stock of Ladies' and Gentlemen's Ornamental Hair in the World always on view at his Establishment, 47, Fenchurch Street, London.

GOLDEN HAIR.—Robare's Aureoline produces, by two or three applications, the beautiful golden colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. of all perfumers and chymists. Wholesale, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, 5, Great Marlborough Street, W., and 93 and 95, City Road, E.C., London; Pinaud & Meyer, Boul. de Strasbourg, 37, Paris; 31, Graben, Vienna; and Rue des Longs Chariots, Brussels

GREY HAIR RESTORED to its Original Colour in one week by the use of CHARLES BOND'S HAIR RENOVATOR. The quickest, safest, and cheapest Hair Colour Restorer extant. Large Bottles, 5s. 6d. each; carriage free for six extra stamps.—CHARLES BOND, 239, Oxford Street (opposite Marble Arch), W.

NUDA VERITAS.—Grey Hair restored by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials post free.—R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

BREIDENBACH'S TALIPAT BLOSSOMS.—The NEW SCENT for 1877. A great novelty, and quite different to all others. 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., 10s., 20s. Sole Address, 157a, New Bond Street, London. All kinds of Perfumery for Export duty free.

IF YOUR HAIR IS WEAK USE
BREIDENBACH'S MACASSARINE OIL, 1s.; or three bottles in one, 2s. 6d.—Sole Address, 157a, New Bond St. Of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Drapers.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR
GLENFIELD STARCH
SEE THAT YOU GET IT,
As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

HOMŒOPATHIC HOSPITAL (SELECT) FOR LADIES, BOLTON HOUSE, 192, Clapham Road, Surrey. Established 1867. A private home where patients suffering from serious diseases, and requiring special supervision, can obtain the best medical and surgical treatment without incurring anxiety in their own homes. Treatise of successful cures forwarded for twelve stamps. Physician, DAVID JONES, M.D. Consultations daily, 11 till 1 (Tuesday and Friday excepted), at 15, Welbeck St., London.

GOUT and RHEUMATISM.—The excruciating pain of gout or rheumatism is quickly relieved and cured in a few days by that celebrated medicine, BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS.
They require no restraint of diet during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part.
Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per box

NEW DANCE MUSIC.

CHARLES D'ALBERT.—CHAPPELL and CO. have much pleasure in announcing the publication of several novelties by the above popular and favourite composer of dance music.

	s.	d.
THE ENGAGED WALTZ	2	0	net.
THE DISTANT SHORE. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's Song	2	0	"
THE SWEETHEARTS LANCERS, on Arthur Sullivan's Song and other favourite and original melodies	2	0	"
THE CLEOPATRA GALOP	2	0	"
THE FANFARE POLKA	1	6	"
THE MOLLIE DARLING QUADRILLE	2	0	"
SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite Composer."	2	0	"
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	2	0	"
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	2	0	"
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	2	0	"
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	2	0	"
RINK GALOP	1	6	"
FLEUR DE THE QUADRILLE	2	0	"
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	2	0	"
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	1	6	"
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como"	2	0	"
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	2	0	"
CHARLESTOWN QUADRILLES on Popular Airs	2	0	"
WEDDING QUADRILLE, on Christy Minstrel Melodies	2	0	"
COMO QUADRILLE, on Italian airs	2	0	"
BONNIE DUNDEE QUADRILLE	2	0	"
KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN WALTZES	2	0	"
MOUNTAIN DAISY WALTZES	2	0	"
LILY OF THE VALLEY WALTZES	2	0	"
WEST-END POLKA. (20th Edition)	2	0	"

N.B. A Complete List of M. D'Albert's Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

DAN GODFREY AND OTHER FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

	s.	d.
THE ROYAL WELSH LANCERS	2	0	net.
PLANTATION LANCERS	2	0	"
POLO LANCERS, on Favourite and Popular Tunes	2	0	"
ISIDORA WALTZ. New Waltz	2	0	"
LITTLE NELL WALTZ	2	0	"
CHRISTMAS ECHOES QUADRILLE, on Popular Airs	2	0	"
KNIGHT OF ST. PATRICK LANCERS	2	0	"
MERRY TUNES LANCERS	2	0	"
YOUNG FRIENDS' QUADRILLE	2	0	"
OLD FRIENDS' QUADRILLE	2	0	"
MABEL WALTZ	2	0	"
BARBE-BLEUE QUADRILLE	2	0	"
ROYAL ALFRED QUADRILLE	2	0	"
HILDA WALTZ	2	0	"
GUARDS' WALTZ	2	0	"
AU REVOIR WALTZ. WALDTEUFEL	2	0	"
LES MESSAGE DES FLEURS VALSE. LAMOTHE	2	0	"
CHANTS DE L'AUBE VALSE. LAMOTHE	2	0	"
TOUT A FAIT POLKA. HENRI LOUIS	1	6	"
"This polka will become an immense favourite."
CAROLINA WALTZ. HENRY LOUIS	2	0	"
LA FIANCEE POLKA. J. MEREDITH BALL	1	6	"
HILDRED WALTZ. J. MEREDITH BALL	2	0	"
GROSVENOR POLKA. A. W. NICHOLSON	1	6	"
KATHARINA GALOP. PERCY REEVE	1	6	"

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SPECIALITIES IN PIANOFORTES FOR EXPORT.

50, New Bond Street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S COLONIAL MODEL PIANOFORTES, Iron Plates, Extra Strong Bracings, Felt on Hammers, Panned Solid Panel, &c. Rosewood, 45 gs.; Walnut, 50 gs. Or Solid Dark Wood, Iron Pin Plates and Extra Screws, 50 gs.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S CROSS STRUNG IRON FRAMED OBLIQUE GRAND PIANOFORTE. Rosewood, 90 gs.; Walnut, 95 gs. Solid Wood, Extra Screwed for Tropical Climates, 100 gs. The strongest that can be manufactured. More powerful in tone than the small Grands.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM OF HIRING PIANOFORTES. CHAPPELL and CO. let the following PIANOFORTES on HIRE, and the Instrument becomes the property of the hirer at the expiration of the third year, provided each quarterly instalment shall have been regularly paid on the following terms:—

At £8 8s. per annum; £2 2s. per quarter.

A PIANINO, by CHAPPELL and CO., in Plain Mahogany or Walnut Case, 6 7-8 Octaves, with Check Action. Cash price for this Instrument, 20 gs.

At £10 10s. per annum; £2 12s. 6d. per quarter.

AN ELEGANT PIANINO, in best Walnut and Rosewood, with ornamented Fret, 6 7-8 Octaves, Check Action, and three strings—throughout the treble. Cash price, 27 gs. Models B or C in Catalogue.

At £12 12s. per annum; £3 3s. per quarter.

A HANDSOME COTTAGE PIANOFORTE, by CHAPPELL and CO., in Rosewood, 7 Octaves. Cash price, 32 gs. No. 2 in Catalogue.

At £14 per annum; £3 10s. per quarter.

A HANDSOME COTTAGE PIANOFORTE, by CHAPPELL and CO., in Walnut Case, 7 Octaves. Cash price, 35 gs. No. 2 in Catalogue.

At £16 per annum; £4 per quarter.

THE ENGLISH MODEL PIANOFORTE, by CHAPPELL and CO., in very handsome Rosewood, 7 Octaves. Cash price, 40 gs. Ditto, ditto, in Walnut Case, £4 10s. per quarter. Cash price, 45 gs. No. 4 in Catalogue.

At £20 per annum; £5 per quarter.

THE FOREIGN MODEL PIANOFORTE, by CHAPPELL and CO., in Rosewood Case, 7 Octaves, Check Action, and three strings. Cash price, 50 gs. Ditto, ditto, in elegant Walnut, £5 10s. per quarter. Cash price, 55 gs.

The above Pianofortes are exchangeable during the first quarter.

Residents abroad can be supplied with Pianofortes on this system, the hire being paid annually instead of quarterly, in advance.

The THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM IS APPLICABLE TO PIANOS OF ALL KINDS.

Upwards of 100 varieties.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM OF HIRING ALEXANDRE'S ORGAN HARMONIUMS.

No.		Per Quarter.
	At £5 5s. per annum.
1.	Mahogany. One Stop, or knee swell	1 6 3
	At £6 per annum.
4.	Carved Oak. Seven Stops	1 10 0
	At £8 16s. per annum.
4a.	Carved Oak. Ten Stops	2 4 0
	At £10 10s. per annum.
5.	Rosewood, Walnut, or Oak. Eleven Stops	2 12 6
	At £16 per annum.
10.	Oak Case. Fifteen Stops. Percussion	4 0 0
	At £20 per annum.
11.	Rosewood or Walnut. Fifteen Stops. Percussion	5 0 0
	At £14 per annum.
	EXHIBITION MODEL. Fifteen Stops. Oak	3 10 0
	At £11 4s. per annum.
No. 1.	DRAWING-ROOM MODEL. Rosewood, Walnut, or Oak	2 16 0
	At £16 per annum.
No. 2.	DRAWING-ROOM MODEL. Rosewood, Walnut, or Oak	4 0 0
	At £26 per annum.
No. 3.	DRAWING-ROOM MODEL. Rosewood, Walnut, or Oak	6 10 0
	At £30 per annum.
No. 4.	DRAWING-ROOM MODEL. Rosewood or Walnut	7 10 0
	At £60 per annum.
	THE HARP ÆOLIENNE. Modele de Salon. Nineteen Stops. Percussion action. Double expression	15 0 0

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PIPE ORGANS for DRAWING-ROOMS or CHURCHES, from 50 gs. to 200 gs., for SALE or HIRE, on the Three Years' System. Specifications for Organs suitable for any building or climate sent on application.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW ALEXANDRE ORGANS, from 20 gs. to 115 gs. A large number of these Instruments returned from Hire will be sold at greatly reduced prices for cash, or on the Three Years' System. Illustrated lists free by post.

50, New Bond Street.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS are to be had of every Musicseller and Bookseller in Great Britain, Ireland, the Colonies, and India, or will be sent direct post free at half the marked price (bound works and cheap vocal part music excepted) to any part of the world on receipt of remittance or satisfactory reference.

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S CATALOGUES of MUSIC.

Part 1. PIANO, ORGAN, HARMONIUM.
Part 2. VOCAL.
Part 3. HARP, CONCERTINA.
Part 4. VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, ORCHESTRA, &c.
Part 5. FLUTE, CORNET, CLARIONET, &c.

Sent gratis and post free to any part of the World.

ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square, London.

MARRIOTT'S NAVAL QUADRILLE. A new and extremely effective set on popular naval airs. Price 4s.

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

MARRIOTT'S MILITARY QUADRILLE. Just published. A remarkably attractive and vigorous set on popular martial airs. Price 4s.

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

Now Ready, at all Music and Book Sellers, or sent post free for thirteen stamps

ASHDOWN and PARRY'S THIRD ALBUM OF DANCE MUSIC.

CONTENTS:—

Valse	Pauline	C. Coote, jun.
Quadrille	Chilperic	Marriott.
Galop	After Dark	Montgomery.
Polka	Hinah Rose	C. Godfrey.
Lancers	Princess Louise	C. Godfrey.
Schottische	Jenny Bell	H. C. Swallon.
Quadrille	England and Wales	Marriott.
Valse	Kathleen Mavourneen	Montgomery.
Galop	Wind Up	C. Godfrey.
Country Dance	Off She Goes	Old English.

Price One Shilling.

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

CARE IS ALL FIDDLE-DE-DEE. A merry Christmas Song with Chorus (from the Extravaganza "The Miller and His Man"). Words by F. C. BURNAND; Music by ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Price 3s.

ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

KING CHRISTMAS. J. L. HATTON'S celebrated Song. The popularity of this capital baritone Song is ever on the increase. Price 3s.

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIECES.

	s.	d.
Figaro. Fantasia on Mozart's Opera	4	0
Cynthia. Serenade	4	0
Souvenir de Bal	4	0
Air Danois	4	0

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

SYDNEY SMITH'S NAZARETH.—Transcription of Gounod's grand composition for the Piano. Solo, 4s.; Duet, 5s.

London: ASHDOWN and PARRY.

POPULAR CLASSICS.—A series of sterling compositions for the Pianoforte Solo. Selected, edited, and fingered by WALTER MACFARREN. Sixty Numbers, price from 2s. to 5s. each. The series contains some of the most celebrated and beautiful works of Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Steibelt, Dussek, Hummel, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Chopin, &c. Detailed Lists forwarded gratis post free to any part of the world.

ASHDOWN and PARRY, Hanover Square.

DANCE MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

HAMMOND'S MUSIC PORTFOLIO. Price 1s. each number. Post free 13 stamps. Violin and Cornet Accompaniments to each number, 6d. each.

No. 1 CONTAINS:

Brise des Nuits Waltzes	Lamothe.
Hydropaten Waltzes	Gung'l.
Manuelita Waltzes	Waldteufel.
Autograph Waltzes	Strauss.
St. David's Quadrille	Dan Godfrey.
Bruder Lustig Galop	Budik.

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

Le Premier Baiser Waltzes	Lamothe.
Venus Reigen Waltzes	Gung'l.
Den Lieben Langen Tag Waltzes	Rudel.
Deutsche Herzen Waltzes	Strauss.
The 'Varsity Lancers	D'Egville.
The Pet Schottische	Bertrand.

CONTENTS OF No. 3.

SIX WALTZES BY JOSEPH GUNG'L.

Soldaten Lieder	Waltzes.
Gräfenberger	Waltzes.
Daheim!	Waltzes.
Jungherren Tänze	Waltzes.
Fantasiebilder	Waltzes.
Mein schönster Tag in Berlin	Waltzes.

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Frühlingslieder Waltzes	Gung'l.
Lille Waltzes	Strauss.
Le Tout du monde Waltzes	Metra.
La Fiancee Waltz	Lamothe.
Hochzeit (Wedding) Quadrille	Strauss.
Pergola Polka	Marie.

CONTENTS OF NO. 5.

Amoretten Tänze Waltzes, duet	Gung'l.
Soldaten Lieder Waltzes, duet	Gung'l.

A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, London, W.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S Practical PianoFORTE SCHOOL.

Section 1. No. 1. PIANOFORTE TUTOR.

FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

SWING WALTZ. By C. Danzi. Illustrated Title. Price 4s.

LAWN TENNIS SCHOTTISCHE.

By T. CAMPBELL. Illustrated Title. Price 3s.

FORSYTH BROTHERS, 272a, Regent Circus, Oxford St., London; Cross Street, South King Street, Manchester.

HY. KLEIN'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

THE WINIFRED WALTZ. 2s. net.
ELECTRICITY VALSE. 2s. net.
LIEB GRETCHEN (Daisy Dear) WALTZ. 2s. net.
IDA GALOP. 1s. 6d. net.

Post free of all Musicsellers and the Publishers, H. SMALL and CO., 2, Darville Road, Rectory Road, N.

TO LADIES.—SALE of NEW MUSIC at a large reduction in price. The most popular songs, pieces, or dances of the day sent post free from 4d., 6d., 8d., 10d., 1s., &c. Best editions, new copies, all publishers. Catalogues sent post free.—A. M. MOFFATT, 3, Barnsbury St., N.

MUSICAL-BOX Depot, 56, Cheapside, London, E.C.—Nicoles' celebrated Musical Boxes, playing best secular and sacred music. Price £4 to £120. Snuff-Boxes, 18s. to 60s. Catalogues gratis and post free.—Apply WALES and M'CULLOCH, as above.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO (Cooperative price for cash). Seven octaves, strong, sound, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free. Drawings gratis on application. THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., Portman Sq.

PIANOS, £16—Pianos, £18—Pianos, £20—GREAT SALE of PIANOS returned from Hire. Full compass, 7 octaves. In excellent condition, equal to new, at half the original prices. Packed free and forwarded to any part of the kingdom. Descriptive lists post free on application. THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker St., London, W.

EBONY and GOLD PIANOS, 28 Guineas, 35 Guineas, and 45 Guineas.—These charming and elegant Pianos, with ormolu embellishments, elaborately carved work, repetition action, and every recent improvement, may now be obtained at the above low prices for cash, or on the three years' system at one guinea per month. The Illustrated Catalogue gratis and post free.

THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

PIANO, £35 (Civil Service cash price).—Trichord Drawing Room Model, repetition action, grand, rich, full tone, handsome Italian walnut-wood case, elaborately carved fretwork front, and cabriole truss legs. The usual price charged for this instrument is 50 guineas. THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker Street, London.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS'S LIST ALL MUSIC POST FREE AT HALF-PRICE.

"THE GREATEST SUCCESS IN PARIS."

LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE. OPERA COMIQUE DE ROBERT PLANQUETTE.

Now Ready.

Suite de Valse, by O. Metra. Solo and duet. 2s. each net.
Quadrilles, by Arban. Solo and duet. 2s. each net.
Brilliant Fantasia, by E. Moniot. 1s. 6d. net.
Rondeau Valse, by B. Richards. 1s. 6d. net.
Chanson du Mousse, by B. Richards. 2s. net.
Valse Brillante, by B. Richards. 2s. net.
Polka Mazurka, by Natif. 1s. 6d. net.
Polka, by Arban. 1s. 6d. net.

In the Press.

Complete Opera, piano and score, 2s. 6d. net.
Vocal Score, English and French Words.
Selections of Airs, in two books, by Cramer. 1s. 6d. each.
Also arrangements by W. Kuhe.

N.B.—The sole right of representation, &c., for Great Britain and Colonies belongs to Mr. Joseph Williams.

MY SAILOR LOVE. Words by E. OXENFORD. Music by LOUIS DIEHL. Net, 1s. 6d. An exceedingly pretty song in A. Its sprightly, easily flowing melody will make it acceptable to amateurs, whilst there is sufficient artistic merit to attract the notice of the concert singer. Compass from E to F.

SO SINGS THE LARK. Words by E. OXENFORD. Music by FRANZ ABT. This is one of the most charming effusions of this talented composer; it is a song of genuine beauty, with delicately-written accompaniment, imitating the trilling of the lark. Key of E, ranging from D to E.

J. LEYBACH'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

Chant de Bivouac. 3s.	Zampa. 4s.
Fête des Bergères. 3s.	Tancredi. 4s.
Festa Romana. 4s.	L'Elisire. 4s.
L'Alsacienne. 4s.	Pégase Galop. 3s.
Bolero Brillant. 4s.	Chant du Patrie. 3s.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' JOYFUL PEASANT (DER LUSTIGE BAUER), Schumann's popular melody. 3s.

This is decidedly the most taking arrangement of this charming theme.—Vide Press.

ARDITI'S L'INGENUE. GAVOTTE.

Piano Solo. 3s.
SMALL BAND. 1s. 6d. net.
FULL ORCHESTRA. 2s. net.

As performed at the Promenade Concerts.

FLORIAN PASCAL. BERCEUSE.

SMALL BAND. 2s. net.
LA PRINCESSE. GAVOTTE MODERNE. BAND PARTS. 2s. net.

As performed at the Promenade Concerts.

SPRING SONG. By J. Leybach. ENGLISH, FRENCH, AND ITALIAN WORDS.

"A perfect little gem, easy to sing and play."

Compass D to F (in C). Post free, 18 stamps.

NEW SONGS by J. Leybach.

LIFE'S AUTUMN (in A). Compass E to G flat.
THE SIRENS (in F). Compass C to F.
BRIGHT STARS OF HEAVEN (in C). Compass D to F.
MAIDEN AND THE BIRDS (in B flat). Compass D to F.

Post free, 18 stamps each.

NEW SONG by Florian Pascal.—DAWN-SONG (Aubade), with English and Italian Words. Sung with the greatest success by Signor Giannini at Arditi's Concerts. Post free, 24 stamps. The special attention of Tenors is invited to this most artistic and effective Song.

CATALOGUES SENT POST FREE. Sole Agents for Moore and Burgess Minstrels' Songs. Shipping Orders on favourable terms.

LONDON: JOSEPH WILLIAMS,

24, BERNERS STREET, W.; and
123, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867.

BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.

Central Depot for the British Empire: 10, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

JULIA WOOLF'S NEW SONGS.

A GREAT SECRET. Words by F. E. Weatherly, Esq.
THE BEE AND THE ROSE. Words by Agnes Trevor.

"There is an irresistible charm of melody in both these songs."—Daily News.

Post free 24 stamps.

B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster Row.

ROBERT STANLEY'S NEW SONGS.

DEAR LITTLE FLOWERS.
WHEN LOVE'S GLOW HATH GONE BY.
EASTING.

Price 2s. each net.

J. B. CRAMER and CO., 201, Regent Street.

NEW MUSIC by Mary Travers (post free)

Faithful	2s. 0d. net.
It Was Nothing But a Rose, E flat, F, A flat	2s. 0d. net.
Wishing, E flat, F	1s. 6d. net.
Coquette, Morceau de Salon	1s. 6d. net.
Impromptu (in D)	2s. 0d. net.
Original Air, with Variations (in A)	1s. 6d. net.

ASHBEE and HOLLOWAY, 23, Spring St., Hyde Park, W.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS at HENRY RODRIGUES', 42, PICCADILLY.

Polished Brass Writing Sets of special designs.

Sets for the Writing Table and Boudoir, 21s. to £10.

Envelope Cases,	21s. to £5	Jewel Cases,	21s. to £5
Inkstands,	5s. to £5	Glove Boxes,	10s. 6d. to £2
Despatch Boxes,	21s. to £6	Handkerchief Boxes,	10s. to £2
Writing Cases,	10s. 6d. to £5	Caskets,	15s. to £5
Candlesticks (pair),	12s. to £3	Flower Vases,	21s. to £5
Candelabra,	42s. to £5	Jardinières (pair),	42s. to £5
Work Boxes,	15s. to £5	Card Trays,	21s. to £5

Rodrigues' Ladies' Dressing Case, silver-fitted, £10 10s.

And a large and choice assortment of English, Viennese and Parisian NOVELTIES, for PRESENTS, from 5s. to £5.

RODRIGUES' DRESSING BAGS for TRAVELLING, with silver and plated fittings, from £3 3s. to £50; Hand Bags, Waist Bags, Carriage Bags, and Bags of all kinds, at very moderate prices.—42, Piccadilly.

PORTRAIT Albums at Rodrigues', with patent leather guards, interleaved for vignette and cabinet portraits, from 10s. 6d. to £5. Rodrigues' New Easel Album. Regimental and Presentation Albums.—42, Piccadilly.

RODRIGUES' Monograms, Crests, and ADDRESSES designed, and STEEL DIES engraved as gems. NOTE PAPER and ENVELOPES stamped in colour relief, and brilliantly illuminated in gold, silver, bronze, and colours in the highest style of art.—42, Piccadilly.

BALL PROGRAMMES at Rodrigues'.—All the new patterns of the season arranged, printed, and stamped in the latest fashion. BILLS OF FARE, GUEST CARDS, and INVITATIONS.—42, Piccadilly.

VISITING CARDS, at H. Rodrigues'. A card plate elegantly engraved, and 100 superfine cards printed for 4s. 6d. BOOK PLATES designed and engraved in Modern and Mediæval Styles at RODRIGUES', 42, Piccadilly.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE.

PULVERMACHER'S "GALVANISM, NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF EXHAUSTED VITAL ENERGY."

In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Bands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post free for three stamps, on application to

J. L. PULVERMACHER'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 194, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—CURTAINS.—OETZMANN and CO. beg to announce that they have now received all their new designs in CURTAINS and CURTAIN MATERIALS, British and Foreign, of every description; some of the designs are very artistic. An early inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67 to 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.

OETZMANN & CO.

67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,

HAMPSTEAD ROAD,

NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT RD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZMANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77, and 79, Hampstead Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory, Albion Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle Place, London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF PREMISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY having been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS, it is now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in the world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully solicited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and CO. are enabled to offer special advantages to country customers in delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans, and fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive catalogue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.

READY MONEY versus CREDIT or BOOKING.—Messrs. OETZMANN and CO.'s business is conducted on the co-operative system of small profits, and cash payments, with the extra advantages of centralised management and personal proprietary supervision, the public receiving all the benefit of the co-operative system without its inherent trouble and annoyances, and the prices will be found lower than those charged at Co-operative Stores. This system offers great advantages to those in a position to pay ready money.—OETZMANN and CO.

CABINET and UPHOLSTERY DEPARTMENT.—Elegant Drawing-room Suites, handsomely carved Italian walnut wood, upholstered in rich Worsted Damask, from 8 guineas; ditto in Rich Silk and Satin, 20 to 60 guineas; Elegant Black and Gold Suites, from 12 guineas; superior ditto, from 18 to 50 guineas; solid Mahogany Dining Room Suites, 8 guineas; ditto Fine Spanish Mahogany, upholstered in best Marone Leather, 14 guineas; Massive Mahogany Telescope Dining Tables, from £2 15s.; handsome walnut large OVAL Centre Table, 3 guineas.

OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO.'S BEDROOM SUITES.—One of the largest and best assortments in the kingdom to select from, displayed in Showrooms 228 feet long, with Bedsteads and Bedding fitted up for inspection. Bedroom Suite, consisting of Wardrobe, Chest of Drawers, Washstand, Toilet Table and Glass, Towel Airer, 3 Chairs, and Pedestal Cupboard, from 6½ guineas complete. Some new and elegant designs, at 15, 18, and 21 guineas. Large and handsomely decorated Bedroom Suites, in Ash, Pitch Pine, and other Woods, at 28, 36, 50, and 75 guineas. Also in Black and Gold, 50 guineas upwards.—OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO.'S PATENT MATTRESS, the COMPENDIUM, requires no other mattress, palliasse, or bed to be used with it, and is at once the healthiest, softest, most economical, and complete bed extant. Descriptive catalogue post free.

ARTISTIC CANE WINDOW BLINDS and SCREENS.—These fashionable Blinds can now be had from stock or made to order in any size or design; also Cane and Wicker Chairs, Ladies' Needlework Mounts, Flower Stands, &c., in colours or black and gold. Prices considerably below those usually charged for these goods. Illustrated price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

PAPER-HANGINGS. — OETZMANN and CO.—PAPER HANGINGS at WHOLESALE PRICES.—A great reduction in price. All the new patterns are now on view at the Show Rooms.—OETZMANN and CO.

LINOLEUM.—OETZMANN and CO.—LINOLEUM.—Warm, soft, carpet-like in appearance, and very durable. ALL the NEW PRIZE DESIGNS are NOW in STOCK. A visit of inspection solicited. Prices below those usually charged for this favourite floor covering. The trade supplied.—OETZMANN and CO.

ANGLO-TURKEY CARPETS.—These superior Carpets, of which Messrs. OETZMANN and CO. have the exclusive sale, are of first-class British manufacture, have all the style and appearance of real Turkey Carpets, at little more than the price of good Brussels, and are very durable. Price lists post free on application. For the convenience of those residing at a distance, a large piece showing the border and centre of carpet, sent on receipt of 5s., which will be deducted from price of carpet or refunded upon return of pattern. Hearth Rugs to match, 6 ft. long by 2 ft. 8 in. wide, £1 5s. 6d. A large stock of real Turkey carpets at reduced prices.—OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s. 6d. There is nothing sold that can be compared with these for quality and cheapness. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and CLOTHING combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable with the least possible weight, and are of the very best quality. Price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

LINEN DEPARTMENT.—Fine white Linen Damask Table Cloths, 2 yards long, 3s. 11d.; 2½ yards long by 2 yards wide, 5s. 11d.; 3 yards by 2½ yards, 8s. 11d.; 3½ yards by 2½ yards, 12s. 6d.; 4 yards by 2½ yards, 15s.; Breakfast Cloths, from 1s. 11d.; strong Linen Kitchen Table Cloths, 1s. 11d. each; stout Huckaback, from 4½d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 4½d. per yard; stout White Calico Sheeting, 76 inches wide, 1s. per yard; 86 inches ditto, 1s. 6d. per yard; white Linen Sheeting, 76 inches wide, 1s. 11d.; 86 inches ditto, 2s. 6d. per yard; superfine quality ditto, 88 inches wide, 2s. 11d. per yard. Horrocks's Long Cloths and Sheetings at the Manufacturer's wholesale prices. Ladies should write for patterns, and compare price and quality.—OETZMANN and CO.

THE PORTLAND COAL VASE.—OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGNS for the Season, new shape, much admired, handsomely japanned and gold relieved, has bowl castors, opal handle, handscoop, and strong loose lining—a great convenience and saving in the wear. Price complete only 10s. 6d.

CHINA and GLASS DEPARTMENT.—Ironstone China Dinner Services—various neat and elegant designs, from 15s. 9d. the set; handsome ditto at 25s. and 35s. per set; a large assortment of superb patterns for selection; dessert services complete, 17 pieces, 13s. 9d.; best French China ditto, 18 pieces, very chaste, with burnished gold edges, 18s. 9d.; China Tea Services, complete, 28 pieces, 5s. 9d.; elegant ditto, burnished gold and enamelled, 25s. 9d.—OETZMANN and CO.

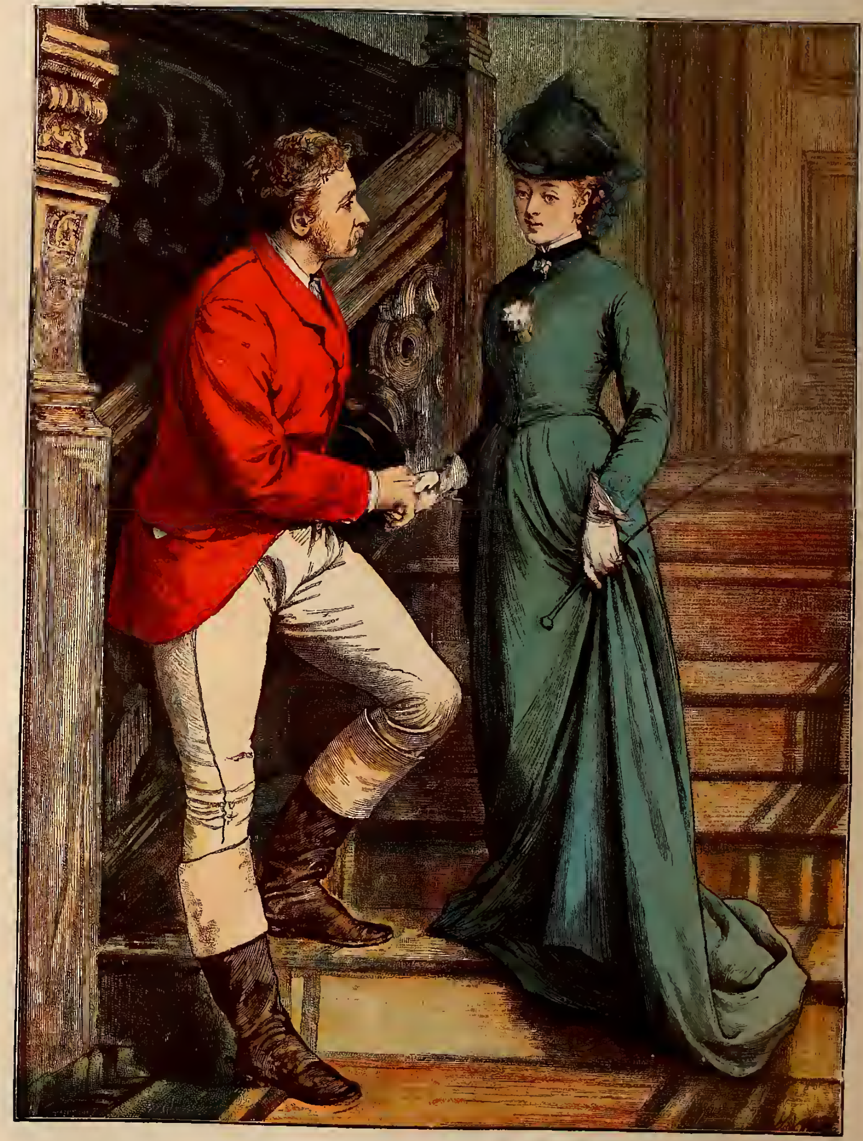
OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.

OETZMANN & CO.

HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by EDWARD JOSEPH MANSFIELD, at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand, both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—DECEMBER 29, 1877.



LADY MILDRED AND HER LOVER

"Very fascinating she looked, for her face wore an especially bright animated expression as she conversed with the rising young diplomat."

The Animated Portrait;

OR,

THE GROBY CASTLE CONSPIRACY:

AN EXTRAVAGANZA IN SEVEN SCENES.

BY ARTHUR LOCKER.

I.

LAWYER KEXBY'S ADVICE

GROBY CASTLE was not one of those exceptional ducal palaces which could at a pinch accommodate a brigade of soldiers, but it was a very comfortable abode for an unambitious nobleman. The house was ancient and picturesque, yet in excellent repair, and it was situated in a charming park, dotted over with fallow deer. Beyond there lay a large extent of sound farming land, all within a ring-fence, and all the property of the happy owner of Groby.

Is "happy" the proper epithet to apply to the Earl of Egglesthorpe? He had a charming wife, and a charming family of sons and daughters, but——well, there is apt to be a worm in the bud in cases of this sort.

It was a crisp morning late in autumn, and the usual phenomena of approaching winter were making themselves visible. A pale sun illumined trees whose naked limbs showed through their variegated but swiftly-thinning foliage; patches of hoar-frost whitened those parts of the lawn which lay in shade; and the under-gardeners were perpetually sweeping fallen leaves from the footpaths.

Judging from the outward aspect of the Earl of Egglesthorpe, the worm in the bud did not seem, at that moment at least, to be particularly troublesome. He was walking briskly up and down the terrace, perfuming the air with the incense of an after-breakfast Regalia, and by his side trotted his youngest son, Eustace, a sweet little boy of seven, clad in a suit of homespun. That his lordship was not overburdened with anxiety is proved by the fact that, between the puffs of his cigar, he was teaching his son a popular ditty of the period. The song in question describes a dialogue between two persons, one youthful the other elderly, both bearing the same Christian name, and its mention may serve to fix the date of this narrative for those persons who are interested in chronology.

From the bay-window of the library, which overlooked the terrace, two persons were impatiently watching the Earl's movements. Impatiently, because, having been summoned by the Earl to meet him at ten o'clock precisely, he seemed an hour afterwards totally oblivious of their existence, though their arrival had been notified by a servant. Besides, they were personages of considerable importance in the Groby executive, one being Mr. Kexby, the family lawyer, and the other Mr. Knoyle, the farm-bailiff. Mr. Kexby was tall, bony, and elderly, with a large flexible nose like an incipient proboscis. Mr. Knoyle was short and stout, with a humorous eye, and a hard mouth. His shoes were perhaps his most noticeable feature. They were very broad in the toes, very thick in the soles, and creaked so loudly as to strike terror into the hearts of tenant-farmers who wanted to ask a favour.

"Wish he'd come," muttered Mr. Kexby, as he strode up and down, rubbing his big nose. "I have to attend an important meeting in the City this afternoon, and I want to catch the 12.15 train."

"His lordship has no sense of the value of other people's time," said Mr. Knoyle. "I've half-a-dozen pressing jobs on hand this morning."

"I think I'll open the window and look out," remarked the lawyer. "It may attract his attention."

"Ay, do."

Mr. Kexby opened the casement, and looked out. As he did so the mischievous bailiff slily thrust a pin into the calf of his companion's leg. The lawyer uttered an unpremeditated howl, which effectually arrested the Earl's attention. Meantime, Mr. Knoyle stood with his arms folded, apparently absorbed in the contemplation of a Dutch sea-piece.

"Hallo! Eusty," said the Earl, "I forgot all about Mr. Kexby, I must go to the library." And he blandly waved his hand in the direction of the open window.

"I must really beg your lordship's humble pardon," began the lawyer, as the Earl entered the room, "for the apparent liberty I took, but something——"

Here Mr. Knoyle administered a sly pinch, which again caused his companion to utter a cry of pain.

"You were quite right, quite right, Kexby, to give me a reminder," said the Earl, good humouredly, "but you needn't again show me how you did it. Let's go to business." And with these words he settled himself in an armchair. The Earl was a handsome man of middle age, with a ruddy complexion, and a curly head of iron grey hair. His figure was remarkably youthful, and was set off by an effective velvet coat and a well-cut pair of trousers.

"Your lordship," observed Mr. Kexby, "would scarcely have ventured into these rash speculations had I not unfortunately been taking that six months' tour at the Antipodes."

"Probably not, Kexby, for you know that I'm desperately afraid of you. So I took advantage of your absence, just as a child, as soon as the nurse's back is turned, begins to make itself deliciously dirty."

"Bubble concerns, every one of 'em," muttered the lawyer, as he turned over a mass of prospectuses. "Working Men's Kettle and Saucepan Company (Limited); Young Milliners' Sewing Machine Loan Association (Limited); Lake Victoria Nyanza Threepenny Steamboat Company (Limited); John Doughboy and Son, Muffin and Crumpet Bakers (Limited); North Polar Tramways Company (Limited); and half-a-dozen Skating Rink Companies. Your lordship, I perceive, has, in your directorial capacity, agreed to furnish skating rinks to the following localities: Masulipatam, Timbuctoo, Llangafelach, North Putney, Coyote City, and Wagga Wagga."

"I'm afraid most of your Companies, my lord," said the bailiff, "are like my watch at bedtime. They want winding-up."

"Ha! not bad for an impromptu, Knoyle. But now comes the question, What are we to do? I want money, and lots of it."

"Put up your rents, my lord," answered Mr. Knoyle. "Most of the Egglesthorpe property's shamefully underlet."

"Couldn't venture on it," said the Earl, "at present, with a bad root-crop, rinderpest threatening, 'foot-and-mouth' on everybody's lips, and American beef tumbling in by the waggon-load. What do you advise, Kexby?"

"Well, your lordship is by no means a rich man for a peer of the realm, and a large sum of cash will be needed. May I ask what induced your lordship to go into these affairs?"

"I did it chiefly to please Gwendolen. Most of these concerns were pets of hers. Poor dear soul! She is charitable and romantic to the last degree. Besides, she fancied that they would turn out profitable investments. You can conceive her enthusiasm. Young artisans on marrying were to get their kettles and saucepans at cost price; every dressmaker was to have a sewing-machine of her own (I really enjoyed that Company, such nice girls used to come to the office making inquiries); Central African niggers were to travel up and down Lake What-his-name as cheaply as we do on the Thames between London Bridge and Westminster; and the North Pole was to be as easily got at as—as—I have been by these humbugging promoters. Well, Kexby," concluded the Earl, throwing himself back in his chair, and extending his legs, "what do you recommend?"

"The case is a bad one, and needs a severe remedy. Your lordship must sell the Castle."

"Sell Groby Castle! Why, it has been six centuries in the family. Twenty generations of Lilburnes have lived here. What will my ancestors think of me?"

"They will think that your lordship should never have ventured to the eastward of Temple Bar. You have an advantage over most so-called landowners, that Groby Castle is really your own, to do what you please with."

"But if I sell Groby, where am I to live?"

"You will still have the mansion in Upper Brook Street."

"Hang it, man, a fellow with a wife and seven daughters, to say nothing of sons, can't stew all the year round in Upper Brook Street."

"There is Ballyvanity Abbey, County Donegal. I've heard your lordship speak of it as a nice little box."

Mr. Knoyle burst into a loud laugh. "Nice little box, eh? Mr. Kexby don't know Ballyvanity as well as you and me, my lord, eh? Why, Ballyvanity has eighty-seven windows without a square of glass in 'em, the grand staircase was blown up in Cromwell's time, and there is no roof worth speaking of. Mrs. Kiernan, the housekeeper, occupies the only three habitable rooms, and she complains of being nearly eaten up by the rats."

"No, Kexby," said the Earl, "I am afraid the Countess, let alone the young ladies, would not approve of Ballyvanity. It makes a charming sketch in a portfolio, and there its merits end. However, if I must sell Groby——"

"I see no other way out of your lordship's troubles," interrupted the lawyer.

"I daresay we shall find some other place to shelter us besides Upper Brook Street. But now, how are we to keep this matter secret from the Countess? She imagines that I am in the full tide of prosperity. If she thought that I was in pecuniary straits, above all, if she knew that I proposed selling the old place, it would break her heart. Gentlemen, I rely upon you both to keep this conversation a close secret."

"I shan't breathe a syllable, my lord," said Mr. Knoyle.

"Nor I," added Kexby. "Moreover, I think I can arrange for the purchase of the estate in such a manner that her ladyship shall know nothing until the bargain is completed."

"Good. Manage to keep Gwendolen—the Countess, I should say—in the dark till the deed is irrevocably done, and I will consent to anything."

II.

MILDRED TO THE RESCUE!

WHILE the Earl was thus engaged in the library, an almost equally important colloquy was being held in her ladyship's boudoir between the Countess and her eldest daughter, the Lady Mildred. The Lilburnes were a comely family, and Mildred was not the least attractive of the flock. She was tall, slim, and fair-haired, with large, soft grey eyes. The mother was very like the daughter, allowing for the difference of two-and-twenty years between their respective ages. She was, however, of a more excitable temperament than Mildred, and just now her agitation showed itself by the manner in which she emphasised her words.

"My dearest Mildred, I have hitherto kept silent, but I cannot exist any longer without a confidant. Your poor father! Have you observed nothing?"

"You surprise me! I thought papa seemed particularly jolly just now. He was whistling on the terrace after breakfast like a curly-headed ploughboy."

"Oh! that is his artfulness, his considerate artfulness to hoodwink me and the rest of his family. Your father is labouring under the deepest anxiety. And I am the cause of it. I led him into these dreadful Companies."

"Dear Mamma, I thought these Companies were going to double our income."

"So I thought, Mildred," replied the Countess, in a self-chastising tone, "but I was deceived. The secret has been revealed to me in the dead of night—don't start, my love—not by a vision, but by your father talking in his sleep. He used to sleep like a baby, and now he lies tossing about, and talks of nothing but Companies."

"But that may only prove that he is deeply interested in the Companies, and not that the Companies themselves are in a bad way."

"I wish I could think so, Mildred, but I am contradicted by facts. To make sure that I was not being deceived by my own dreamy imaginings, I sat up in bed last night, and took down your father's disjointed mutterings on my ivory tablets. Listen! 'Why did I ever go into the City? Confound the City! Poor Gwendolen! Take care, that fender will fall on your head. I am skating on six rinks at once. Silence that dreadful bell! Did you know the muffin man? His crumpets cost me a hundred guineas each. The boiler has burst, and all the niggers are flying through the air! Down, down, down! Ruin! ruin! We must leave Groby! Poor Gwendolen!' My dear Mildred, can you wonder that I feel anxious?"

"No, I begin to think there must be something wrong."

"And it was so touching to hear him compassionating me! So gentlemanlike and considerate, even in his sleep! But we must not content ourselves with talking. Something must be done, and you, Mildred, must nerve yourself to the sacrifice."

"I am quite willing to sell dear grandmamma's diamonds," said Mildred with the air of a placid martyr.

"Grandmamma's fiddlestick!" exclaimed Lady Egglesthorpe impetuously. "My child, there is a dreadful leak pouring into the ship's hold, and you talk as if you could stop it with a cambric handkerchief! That Muffin imposture alone would swallow up your diamonds, necklace, earrings, and all. Mildred, you must come to the rescue by marrying a rich man."

"Any particular rich man?" asked the young lady, with a slight blush.

"Yes, my love, Sir Anthony Ammerdown."

"I knew you meant him. He is rather antique for me, isn't he?" said Mildred, with a little toss of her head.

"Of course, he is not young, my dear, for he has grown-up sons, but he is so agreeable, and so distinguished—you will feel proud to be the wife of a man who has been a Cabinet Minister, and will probably be so again when the present people go out."

"But, Mamma," pursued Mildred, "have you any reason to suppose that Sir Anthony cares the least bit about me?"

"My love," replied the Countess solemnly, and taking her daughter's hand in her own, "Sir Anthony was very confidential with me the last time he came to Brook Street. He spoke much of his loneliness since Lady Ammerdown's death, and he threw out very significant hints and glances in your direction."

"Well, Mamma, let us ask him here at Christmas—I suppose Papa will be able to keep his head above water till then—and then I will see whether I can bestow my affections on the renowned Privy Councillor. I suppose," she added in an indifferent tone, "it will only be civil to ask that tall son of his also?"

"Certainly, my love. Milly," exclaimed the Countess, with emotion, "you display a plastic amiability in this affair which convinces me that you are an angel!" And she imprinted a fervent kiss on her daughter's soft cheek.

III.

THE BUYER OF THE ESTATE

BEING a mansion of respectable antiquity, Groby Castle contained a chamber which was reported to be haunted. No one—of the existing generation, at least—had either seen or heard anything of a supernatural character; nevertheless there was a vague rumour in the family that on occasions of extraordinary emergency the portrait of Ralph Lilburne, which hung in the chamber aforesaid, was wont to quit the canvas on which it was painted, and stalk in bodily shape along the corridors of the castle. This Ralph, who had fought with great gallantry and lost his life during the Civil Wars, was, judging from his portrait, a good-looking, manly fellow, and as his descendant, the present owner of the estate, had a sincere admiration for his distinguished ancestor, it was not unnatural that when on the point of parting with his cherished inheritance he should stand musing before the picture.

"Well, Ancestor Ralph," he said, "what do you think of it? The deed is almost done, and in a few minutes the new purchaser of Groby will be here to complete the bargain. I hate having to make the sacrifice just as much as you must, but I hope you understand the temptations to which I have been exposed, although there were no Limited Companies in the seventeenth century, and that, as far as we can see, selling the property is the only way of meeting the difficulty. If you can suggest any other method," exclaimed the Earl, with great earnestness, "I entreat you to step down and let me know it."

The painted face looked benignly on his descendant, but remained immoveable. It was broad daylight, and the beings of the shadowy world, like the wild creatures of the woodlands, probably prefer to remain invisible while the sun is above the horizon. Nevertheless, the Earl was so excited by his impassioned appeal that his usually tough nerves experienced a convulsive thrill when a tapping sounded at the door of the chamber.

It was the Countess.

"So you are here, my dear Algy," she said. "I always knock before coming into this room, because I think it is more respectful to—to——" She glanced at the portrait without completing the sentence.

"To Ancestor Ralph," answered the Earl. "Yes, I fancy he likes it. Well, Gwendolen, do you want me?"

"Yes, I want to consult you about our Christmas invitations. Now we are so prosperous, I think we might enlarge our usual circle of friends."

"Poor purblind darling!" thought her husband. "She is teetotally in the dark.—Yes, my dear, now that we are so prosperous owing to these conf—— these admirable Companies I feel we may venture to launch out a little."

"I should like to ask Sir Anthony Ammerdown to begin with."

"The very man I was about to mention. Delightful fellow!—Looks like a schoolmaster, and talks like a peripatetic blue-book," muttered the Earl."

"Algernon, you are too amiable. And next——"

But here her ladyship was interrupted by the apparition of a tall footman, who announced that Mr. Kexby, Mr. Samuel Chiltoe, and Mr. Gussage had arrived, and were ready to wait upon his lordship.

"Light the gas-stove, John," said the Earl, "put the writing-materials on the table, and show the gentlemen up here."

"Up here!" exclaimed her ladyship.

"Yes, I prefer to settle this little business up here," replied her husband, with a friendly nod in the direction of Ancestor Ralph. "And I must ask you to retire for a few minutes, Gwendolen."

"The impending storm is about to burst," thought the Countess. "Chiltoe! Gussage! The very names smell of bankruptcy and ruin! Good-bye, dear," she said, with a playful smile, and quitted the apartment with a fortitude worthy of the mother of Coriolanus.

The Earl, Mr. Kexby, Mr. Chiltoe, and Mr. Chiltoe's legal adviser, Mr. Gussage, before settling the formal details of the purchase, separated into two tête-à-tête groups, and conversed for a while in a low tone.

"Rather a cad, isn't he, Kexby?" whispered the Earl.

"His heart is in the right place."

"More than his h's are. And what a queer-looking fellow his lawyer is! He's always blushing."

"He is a very young practitioner."

"His clothes are not young. He appears to have stepped into the long-pending suit (I don't mean a pun) of some ancient attorney. He's as rusty as a cottager's rasher of bacon."

The appearance of the wealthy Mr. Chiltoe certainly did not coincide with the Earl's expectations. He was short, slim, and young, under thirty decidedly. His hair was of a fiery red, and his ample beard and whiskers were of the same foxy hue. Of his face little could be seen, as he wore a pair of double-windowed tinted spectacles.

"Before signing the dockyments," observed Mr. Chiltoe, rising, and placing his knuckles on the table in accordance with the oratorical attitude assumed by chairmen of harmonic gatherings, "I should like to hask his lordship one or two questions. I've been 'ard at work money-making for some time, I've hinjured my heyes with chemicals in investigating the processes which led to the discovery of my Incomparable Hair Dye, which will burst upon an astonished world on the 1st of Janewary next—vide advertisements which will appear a week previous in all the noosepapers of the globe—and I want rest, I sigh for recreation, I crave the soothing hinfluence of ladies' society. My lord, I want, in plain English, to pass a jolly Christmas. I couldn't think of turning you and your good lady out of your 'ouse at this festive season, so I propose an arrangement which I 'ope will suit all parties. Give me an invite, my lord, hask me to stop here during the Christmas 'olidays, and I agree to pay for Groby Castle the price named by this respectable long-legged limb of the law."

Mr. Chiltoe concluded his motion by clapping Mr. Kexby familiarly on the back, and then sat down.

"Good, I approve," said a peculiar and somewhat muffled voice.

The four gentlemen started, and looked at each other with eyes of astonishment. Silence prevailed for a few moments, then the Earl rose, and fixing his eyes on Ralph's portrait, said in a tone of unwonted solemnity, "I accept your proposal, Mr. Chiltoe, and shall be happy to see you here whenever you can make it convenient to come."

"I've asked Mr. Chiltoe to spend Christmas week with us, Gwendolen," he afterwards observed to the Countess. "He's a self-made man, rather shaky in his aspirates, but a good fellow, and great fun."

IV.

AN INSCRUTABLE CREATURE

CHRISTMAS week came, and with it most of the expected guests. Sir Anthony Ammerdown arrived among others, and apologised for the absence of his tall son, who was detained, he said, by unavoidable business, but hoped to make his appearance before the holidays were over. On hearing this news, the Lady Mildred appeared at first somewhat chagrined, but after a confidential walk on the terrace with Sir Anthony she recovered her usual spirits so completely that any misgivings which her mother might have felt were completely removed. "It is evident," thought the Countess, "that Sir Anthony has kept his son away for fear of any possible rivalry, and it is also evident that darling Mildred accepts the situation. She will make the required plunge, and save us from ruin."

Meantime, the presumed philanderings of Sir Anthony attracted little attention on the part of the other inmates of Groby Castle, their curiosity being so completely absorbed by the sayings and doings of Mr. Samuel Chiltoe. He was emphatically a man of mystery. Nobody seemed to know anything about him except Mr. Kexby, and that astute practitioner of the law parried all inquiries by remarking: "Wait till the New Year comes, then you shall know all that I know." Even Lord Egglesthorpe, who was aware that the title-deeds of his estate had passed into the hands of this vulgar-spoken, carroty-pated little man, was obliged to be content to remain as much in the dark as anybody else. "You know as much, my lord, as it is necessary for you to know at present," said Kexby. "Mr. Chiltoe handed me a thumping cheque, which was duly honoured by the bankers upon whom it was drawn, and with the proceeds of that cheque I am satisfying your creditors. You have no further cause for anxiety; eat, drink, and be merry while Christmastide lasts, and if after Christmas I have anything further which I think it advisable to tell your lordship, you shall hear it."

Mr. Chiltoe's popularity with the rest of the guests was remarkable. When Sir Anthony arrived, Lord Egglesthorpe felt himself constrained to take that notable statesman aside, and apologise for Mr. Chiltoe's appearance at Groby Castle. "He is a man with whom I have had some business transactions, and whom I feel bound to treat with courtesy, but you will easily understand, Sir Anthony, that I should not voluntarily choose him as a companion."

To the Earl's surprise, after a lengthened colloquy with the objectionable Chiltoe, Sir Anthony spoke thus, using the dogmatic tone in which in days of yore he had been wont when seated on the Treasury Bench to reply to the complaints of some obscure M.P. "My lord, I am compelled to differ with the estimate you appear to have formed of Mr. Chiltoe. I find him a well-informed, intelligent young man. His accent, I admit, is peculiar, but if your lordship had sat as long as I have in the House of Commons, your ear would soon learn to tolerate all kinds of accents." The Earl, usually so good-natured, was quite nettled at this little homily, but he kept his irritation under control, and did not allow it to make itself visible. In secret, he vented his wrath to the following effect. "Annoying enough to have a low fellow like Chiltoe buy your estate over your head, but to be told that you can't discern a cad from a gentleman is rather too much. It's the way with these political men; they contradict just for the sake of contradiction." His lordship felt quite a childish pleasure when early the next morning, happening to follow Sir Anthony, who was attired in his dressing-gown, into the children's playroom, he found his youngest son Eustace accompanied by his small sister Lilian busily engaged in executing a portrait of the ex-Cabinet Minister on the wall. "It would have made an amusing picture," he afterwards told his wife; "the children were absorbed in their occupation, and totally unconscious that anybody was behind them, while Sir Anthony stood frowning and pursing up his lips, till after a moment or two he broke into a laugh at the absurdity of the caricature, whereupon the little ones scuttled away like a pair of mice when the cat appears."

Lady Egglesthorpe again, who was usually most particular in the selection of her acquaintances, was wonderfully gracious towards Mr. Chiltoe. But in her case the phenomenon was, in part, due to fear. She entertained a conviction that this man was in some way connected with Algernon's pecuniary troubles; she felt sure that her husband would not have invited him to Groby if he had not felt himself in Chiltoe's power; and she determined therefore to make friends of the formidable little man, with the view of disarming his future hostility. Besides, as soon as she had overcome her original repugnance to his personal appearance and mode of speaking, she found, like Sir Anthony, that there was something remarkably winning about the patentee of the Incomparable Hair Dye. And she observed another phenomenon which added to his attractiveness. "It is most interesting," she remarked to her husband, "to trace the effect of a little good society on an uneducated person. After talking to me for some time, Mr. Chiltoe really speaks so well that I could almost fancy he was a gentleman, but then he suddenly forgets himself, and commits the most terrible havoc among his h's as if to make up for lost time. Mildred and Hilda, strangely enough, don't seem to notice whether he is vulgar or not. They converse with him as freely as with any other young man. But then young ladies nowadays are getting very democratic in their tastes. I sometimes even fancy that Hilda has really a sort of liking for Mr. Chiltoe."

"Gwendolen, you must be joking."

"Indeed, I am not. Mothers have very acute eyes."

"Imagine that horrid little red-headed vulgarian for a son-in-law!"

"He is neither so horrid nor so vulgar as you suppose, Algy."

"But," added the Earl, in a softened tone, for he began to think that a man who had captured his castle might as well be captured by one of the castle's daughters, "but surely that little baggage, Hilda, won't give him any serious encouragement. Have you forgotten how she wept, and shut herself up, and got thin, and had to be fattened with light brown cod liver oil, when that impudent young Lieutenant was ordered off to China on board the Scamperdown? I don't like coquettes," added his lordship, in a tone of unusual severity.

"My dear Algy, that happened a long time ago, and besides sailors don't count as serious admirers. They are all alike, from admiral to cabin-boy. They find sweethearts in every port. My lord," she added, changing her tone to one of great solemnity, on which occasions only she used this formal mode of address—"my lord, you best know why this mysterious man is here. He evidently possesses some strange influence over you, and it is my duty, as a loving wife, to second your endeavours to please him."

Lord Egglesthorpe was quite impressed with the seriousness of his wife's manner, and coupling it with the mysterious words of encouragement which had been addressed in the haunted chamber to Chiltoe, determined to let Gwendolen arrange that uncanny little gentleman's love affairs as she pleased.

Not long after this dialogue took place the Countess was about to descend the grand staircase, when a very pretty sight in the hall below caught her eye. Hilda was standing in the hall by an old-fashioned press, which served as a store-closet, and from which she had taken some biscuits. She had coaxed several of the deer from the park into the hall to eat these dainties from her hand, indeed, one forward creature had the temerity to thrust its nose into the press, in quest of a further supply. Others, too timid to enter in obedience to the summons of their fair mistress, stood shyly without the portal, while, to complete the picture, Lilian, afraid of the branching horns of a noble buck, ensconced herself behind her sister's skirts, and the cat stood with arched back and glaring eyes, as much as to say: "How dare these vulgar out-of-door quadrupeds set foot in my premises!" Lady Egglesthorpe stood for some moments in silent admiration of this lovely picture, the mother's pride in the graceful attitude of her second daughter prevailing naturally over all her other emotions. For a brief space she soared in a delightful empyrean of unconsciousness. She was brought down to earth again with a bang, as it were, by a vulgar voice, which croaked in her ear. "Ain't it a pooty scene, my lady? Worthy of a fust-class hartist! Worthy of a Har Hay! The hanimals are charming, but the Lady 'Ilda is the charmingest of hall!"

Brought down so unceremoniously from her pleasant reverie, Lady Egglesthorpe experienced a transient sensation of disgust towards the utterer of these vile cockneyisms, and she said with some asperity, "I do wish, Mr. Chiltoe, if only for the sake of our guests, that you would be rather more careful in the pronunciation of your h's."

"I can't 'elp it, my lady, I really can't, I caught it when young from a hungrammatical nuss. But I'll make a heffort to please you, my lady." He then added in an accent which would have passed muster in the selectest of circles, "It's a very pretty sight, how I wish I could sketch!"

"You are an inscrutable creature," said the Countess, regarding him fixedly. "If you would always speak like that I would do anything to please you. I would——"

"Would you?" he returned in a low impetuous tone. "Would you assist me in gaining the dearest wish of my 'art?"

"Now you are relapsing into vulgarity, Mr. Chiltoe!"

"Ham I? If I ham, it's because the heffort with haitches is hawful. Listen, my lady," he continued, drawing her into a recess of the landing which was out of earshot of the hall, "I love that gurl, the Lady 'Ilda—I——"

"Hush, dear Mr. Chiltoe, you must not talk so. The fact is, my daughter is too young to think of such matters."

"Not too young to think of Leftenants, Har, Hen," replied Mr. Chiltoe, severely.

"Who told you this?" exclaimed the Countess, with amazement. "But please say Lieutenant, it sounds nicer."

"Leftenant or Lewtenant, it's all the same. I know the party. 'Ow, I decline to state. H.M.S. Scamperdown, China station, heh, my lady?"

"You have guessed rightly."

"Perhaps you are not aware, my lady, that I possess the gift of second sight. I can see that Leftenant now. Ha! ha!" he exclaimed, leaning over the balustrade, "and at this very hinstant he has his heyes fixed on the woman he loves best in hall the world!"

"In China?" asked the Countess breathlessly.

"I shan't say where," he added, in a prosaic tone. "Now, my lady, that I've satisfied you I know 'ow the land lies, may I go and make love to the Lady 'Ilda?"

The Countess made a faint gesture of assent. Chiltoe nimbly descended the stairs, and judging from the bright smile with which Hilda greeted him, it looked as if he had a fair chance of success with the Lieutenant's sweetheart.

V.

WAIT TILL THE FIRST OF JANUARY

"WHO is that tall young man in the scarlet coat whom I saw in the hall just now?" said the Countess to Sir Anthony Ammerdown on the following morning.

"Perhaps you did not recognise him 'in pink,' Lady Egglesthorpe," replied the ex-Minister. "I have the honour to be that tall young man's father."

"Your son, is it?" exclaimed her ladyship, in a tone of surprise which was scarcely polite. She feared that her little intrigue for converting Sir Anthony into a son-in-law might be imperilled.

"He has only just arrived," continued the baronet. "He is passionately fond of hunting, and hearing that the hounds were to meet at Ryecroft Bottom to-day, he ran down by the early train. Your neighbour, Sir Everard, has promised to mount him, and I fancy he'll spend the night there."

Lady Egglesthorpe began to feel reassured. It was plain that the cunning old statesman had taken precautions that his son should not see too much of the fascinating Mildred. Nor was she alarmed when the baronet added in a careless tone, "I've asked Lady Mildred to ride over with me to see them throw off," for she felt that any danger which might arise from the companionship of the son would be counterbalanced by the advantages of a tête-à-tête with the father.

"Ah! there she is," said Sir Anthony, glancing downstairs, "already in her riding-habit."

Yes, there she was truly, and very fascinating she looked, for her face wore an especially bright animated expression as she conversed with Mr. Edgar Ammerdown, the rising young diplomat. Lady Egglesthorpe's motherly instinct taught her at a glance that this delightful little dialogue had better be cut short as soon as possible, lest mischief should grow out of it, and she was about to swoop down on the confidence-exchanging couple for the purpose of carrying out her amiable intention, when her plans were frustrated by the sudden appearance of that odious little Mr. Chiltoe, who with somewhat vulgar familiarity laid a hand, clad in the most staring yellow dogskin, on her plump arm, and whispered, "Might I 'ave two words with your ladyship? I 'ear the 'ounds are going to throw hoff; I adore 'ounds, but I'm no 'orseman. 'Ave you a pony you could spare me? Little Lady Lilian's pony would suit me down to the ground. He's fat, he's bold, and he's small, so that if I tumble, and I'm a wretched 'orseman, Lady Egglesthorpe, I shan't 'ave far to fall."

The Countess had much ado to refrain from laughter upon hearing this singular request, especially as the little gentleman who proffered it was attired in the most sportsmanlike style, green cutaway coat, cord nether-garments, and top-boots, but she simply replied that Lilian's pony was quite at Mr. Chiltoe's service.

It is a singular fact that so long as the dogskin grasp of the inventor of the Incomparable Hair Dye was on Lady Egglesthorpe's sleeve, Mr. Edgar Ammerdown held the Lady Mildred's fair hand in his own, but as soon as Mr. Chiltoe uttered the sportsmanlike monosyllable, "'Yoicks!" apparently as an expression of his delight at having secured such a splendid mount, the fond hands parted as if by magic, and Lady Egglesthorpe on descending the stairs found the attitude of the young couple perfectly unobjectionable. So, after exchanging the usual greetings with her intended grandson-in-law, she simply reminded Mildred that she must try and manage to devote the afternoon to the distribution of Christmas gifts to the cottagers.

Mr. Chiltoe's feats of horsemanship excited great merriment at the meet, but the Earl, who had a keen eye for such matters, observed to Mr. Knoyle, "They may laugh at him, but the fellow knows how to make the pony go. I hope he won't break the poor old thing's wind. And if you take notice, although he's always within an ace of tumbling off, he always rights himself. It takes a clever horseman to do that."

"The little gentleman's quite a puzzle to me, my lord," remarked Mr. Knoyle.

"To me, too," replied the Earl. "Let us hope, Knoyle," he added in a half-whisper, "he'll make a good landlord."

Mildred was, as has been already shown, a dutiful daughter, and after luncheon she appeared fully equipped for her cottage rounds. She was a great favourite among the poor people, and none received her more gladly than old Mrs. Boscobel, who delighted in a visit from the great folks at the Castle. As soon as the footboy had deposited the old dame's Christmas hamper Mildred settled herself for a chat.

"I'm so glad you like Sir Anthony," she said; "some people think him pompous, but it's only his outward manner."

"He warn't pompous with me, your ladyship. He set where you're setting, and talked as free and easy to me as if I was Her Majesty. I hear he used to talk to Her Majesty, and tell her what she ought to do, and, what's more, Her Majesty used to do it. Think of that, my lady! And then he talked about you, Lady Mildred, and he said you were the nicest young——"

"Now, Mrs. Boscobel," interposed Mildred, playfully, "you must not repeat Sir Anthony's praises, or I shall grow too conceited. But see, here comes Mamma."

"Mildred," said the Countess, "please finish your rounds as quickly as you can, for till you come everything is at a standstill with the preparations for the Calico Ball. I will drive with you, and then we shall get the visits over quicker." As soon as they were seated, Lady Egglesthorpe said confidentially, "And what do you think of him now, my darling?"

"Him? which him? There are so many hims."

"My dear child, there is only one him, you know, in whom I wish you to be interested."

"You mean Sir Anthony?"

"Of course I do. Tell me, Mildred."

"Well, Mamma, he is old, like Father William in the song, but he is nice, very nice."

"Do you think you can love him?"

"I love him already."

"But I mean as a husband?"

"I will answer that question, Mamma, on the first of January."

"The first of January," exclaimed the Countess; "what a strange fascination that date seems to have for certain people at Groby Castle! I ask your father, who has at length reluctantly admitted to me that the affairs of those horrible Companies are not so brilliant as they should be, for further information about them, he says, 'Wait till the first of January.' I ask Mr. Kexby to tell me something of the antecedents of that mysterious little creature, Mr. Chiltoe, he replies, 'Wait till the first of January.' I ask Mr. Chiltoe himself to tell me something of himself, he answers, 'I will fully satisfy your ladyship on the first of January.' I ask Hilda to decide whether she will accept Mr. Chiltoe's proposals, she says, 'Wait till the first of January,' and now you have joined in the plot. Are you all leagued together in a dark conspiracy?"

"Dear mamma," said Mildred, kissing her mother, "put these strange fancies out of your head, and wait patiently till the First of January."

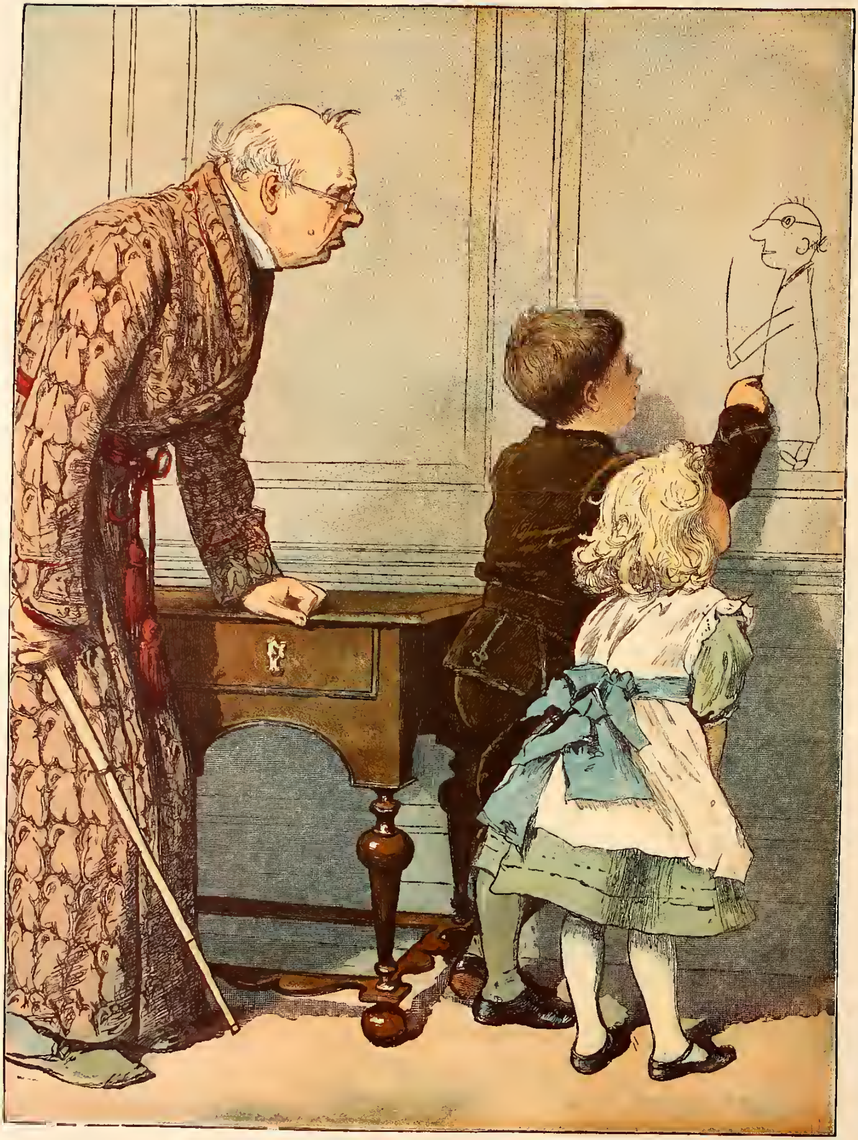
VI.

AIRY FAIRY LILIAN

WAS there really a conspiracy hatching within the venerable walls of Groby? Lady Egglesthorpe certainly thought so, and she also believed that Mr. Samuel Chiltoe, that mysterious little man, who alternately attracted and repelled her, was at the bottom of it. The Earl also knew something of which his wife as yet remained in blissful ignorance, namely, that Groby had passed out of his hands, and that so far from being a munificent host entertaining a circle of Christmas guests, the presence of himself and his family at the Castle was solely due to the good-natured forbearance of that vulgar little proprietor of the Incomparable Hair Dye. Having a superstitious streak in his composition he was wont to repair every day, and sometimes several times in the day, to the Haunted Chamber, where he would stand for many minutes together with his arms folded, and his eyes fixed on the immoveable countenance of Ancestor Ralph.

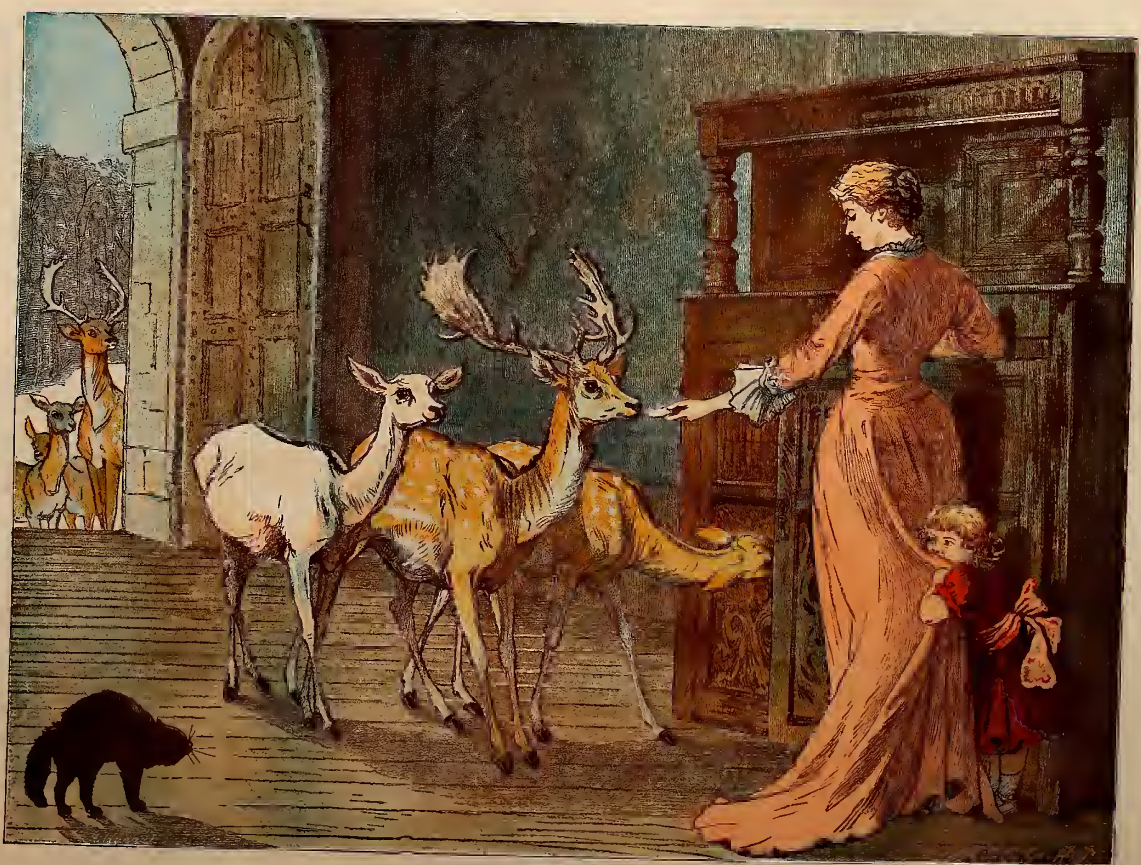
He was thus engaged early in the morning of the thirty-first of December, on the evening of which the much-anticipated Calico Ball was to take place. "The last day of the Old Year, Ancestor Ralph," he said, addressing the picture, which was just visible in the dawning light of the brief winter day. "Long before this time next year a new master will rule in the Castle. When that happens I shall be afraid to look you in the face. I shall hide you in a garret in Upper Brook Street, with your face to the wall. But could you endure the change more easily, Ancestor Ralph, if this stranger, who is destined to take my place, were to ally himself with my family, say, with my Hilda?"

To the discomfiture of the Earl's nerves, a deep sepulchral voice, which apparently came from the picture itself, distinctly replied, "I could." The Earl laid his hands on the mouldering



THE CARICATURE

"The children were absorbed in their occupation, and totally unconscious that anybody was behind them, while Sir Anthony stood frowning and pursing up his lips."



CUPBOARD LOVE

"Hilda had coaxed several of the deer from the park into the hall to eat these dainties from her hand."

tapestry, and was on the point of drawing it aside with the view of discovering whether there was any person concealed behind it, when his attention was distracted by the sound of rapid footsteps hurrying up the stairs, accompanied by half-suppressed childish screams, in which merriment and terror were equally blended. In another moment the door was abruptly opened.

The thirty-first of December, be it known, besides being the day fixed for the Calico Ball, was also the anniversary of, in the opinion of the Lady Lilian, a much more important event, namely, the Lady Lilian's birthday. Her ladyship awoke at a very early hour, and lay awake for some time, exercising her imagination over the presents which she was likely to receive, till at last the excitement became too much for her, and, as the sleepy nurse showed no signs of rising, she got up and quietly dressed herself. It was so delightful being up while the rest of the household was wrapt in a solemn stillness, that presently she aroused her brother Eustace in order that she might have a companion in her enjoyment. Eustace quite saw the fun of the thing; as soon as he was broad awake, he dressed himself in a trice, and then the pair wandered about the corridors and passages like a couple of little ghosts.

"Hush, what's that?" whispered Eustace, clutching his sister's hand, and thrusting her into a corner. It was sufficiently terrifying. A tall male figure, arrayed in what looked like a dressing-gown, crept stealthily up the staircase leading to the Haunted Chamber.

"It's papa," replied Lilian, who between cold and fright was all of a tremble. "He often goes there now."

"No, that's Papa!" exclaimed the brother, blowing out the candle as he spoke for fear of detection. It was very extraordinary. A second male figure, also arrayed in a dressing gown, but stouter and less active in step, had also mounted the stairs leading towards the mysterious apartment.

Lady Lilian's courage was rapidly oozing away. She began to whimper, and said, "I want to go back to bed."

"Oh, nonsense!" replied the valiant Eustace. "Why, the sun'll be up soon. Let's go and pay Mr. Chiltoe a visit. He's such a jolly chap, though Mamma says he murders the Queen's English."

Presently, having advanced a little further, Eustace paused before a door.

"Doesn't the splashing sound jolly? He's having his shower-bath. No, Lily, you mustn't peep through the keyhole. It's only intended for gentlemen. I'll look, and tell you when he has his dressing-gown on. There; now he's all right, and we can go in."

Mr. Chiltoe was not unaccustomed to the visits of these young persons, and usually took certain precautions before admitting them, but on the present occasion, before Lilian had been two minutes inside the door, she saw Something on the dressing-table of such an extraordinary and unexampled character that she clapped it on her head, and when Mr. Chiltoe tried to take it from her rushed out of the room, screaming with half-hysterical laughter. Mr. Chiltoe followed, with a towel hastily thrown over his head, and a hair-brush in either hand. He pursued the little Lady Lilian, who ran like a hare, and whose brother kept pace with her, to the door of the Haunted Chamber, which Eustace boldly opened. Father and children were so mutually startled at the sight of each other, that they only half-saw, or did not see at all, a tall figure which glided from behind the arras, snatched something from Lilian's curly pate, placed it on Chiltoe's head and vanished. Mr. Chiltoe himself retreated immediately afterwards towards his own apartment, running in his flight right into the motherly arms of Lady Egglesthorpe, to whom he apologised profusely for his state of dishabille. The Countess had been told that Lilian and Eustace had mysteriously disappeared from their beds, and was anxiously seeking them, so she was quite relieved when she found they were safe and sound, and kissed Lilian with fervour.

"Mamma," said the little Birthday Pet in an engaging half-whisper, "I've seen somefin' so funny. Mr. Chiltoe has a——"

What bullies elder sisters can sometimes be! Just as poor Lilian was beginning her story the Ladies Mildred and Hilda rushed forward simultaneously and with anxious faces, saying, "Dear Mamma, Lily talks too much; she'll excite herself into a fever. Come, Lily, there is something wonderful in the conservatory. Let's go and look at it."

Away trotted Lilian, with the happy elasticity of childhood, forgetting all about Mr. Chiltoe in the anticipation of this new marvel. The something wonderful in the conservatory proved to be a collection of birthday presents, and Lilian was persuaded by Hilda to put on her hat and jacket, and to enter the house, professing to have been out shopping in the village. It was a pretty sight, the company thought, when they had assembled for breakfast, to see her arrival, her face grave with excess of joy, and her little arms laden with gifts.

VII.

ANCESTOR RALPH STEPS OUT OF THE CANVAS

THE characters in the Calico Ball which took place at Groby Castle on the evening of the 31st December were entirely sustained either by children or by young persons who had not yet done growing. The dresses had been very carefully designed, and they attracted a great deal of attention inasmuch as they afforded a pretty complete panorama of the fashions from the Middle Ages up to a recent date. It was a picturesque sight to see them filing along two by two in procession. A French Incroyable of the period to which the famous Madame Angot belonged walked with one of Queen Bess's maids of honour; Mary Queen of Scots took the arm of a Hussar; George the Third went back some centuries, to the time of Richard the First, for a partner; a mediæval jester vented his sallies on a staid little maiden out of one of Albert Durer's engravings. There was nothing wonderful in the fact that a shepherdess should be linked with a postboy, but it was remarkable that a gay lady from the Court of the Merry Monarch should condescend to walk with a long-tailed Chinaman. Instead of a Wolf, Little Red Riding Hood chose Paddy with his shillelagh under his arm for a comrade; and besides these there were peasants from Normandy and Alsace, a vivandière, a corsair, Turks, Italians, Spaniards, and a Boulogne fisherwoman leaning on the arm of a British Jack Tar. The Ladies Mildred and Hilda had worked indefatigably in the arrangement of the children's toilettes, and they received valuable aid from Mr. Chiltoe, who, as became the inventor of the Incomparable Hair Dye, showed considerable skill in the arrangement of tresses, whether artificial or natural.

The grown-up portion of the company, who were attired in ordinary evening costume, played, at any rate in the earlier hours of the entertainment, the part of spectators rather than of actors, and they were content to look on at elaborate quadrilles which were danced by little ladies and gentlemen hailing in point of dress from all the centuries between the twelfth and the nineteenth. Later on, however, the inspiriting strains of the musicians became too fascinating for resistance, and everybody, old and young, tall and short (a small minority excepted, who did not care for dancing) was presently whirling round in waltzes, galops, and the newly-revived polkas, or threading the mazes of Scotch reels, or kneeling down in the Swedish contre danse, or advancing and retreating in La Tempête, or bowing and curtseying in Roger de Coverley. Fancy and non-fancy dresses were all mingled together in comic complexity. Napoleon the Great, a plump little hero of four-feet-six, was being whirled round by a wiry spinster aunt of five-feet-nine; slim young men in swallow-tailed coats strove to dance with little ladies from the Courts of Francis I., Henry IV., and Louis XIV.; while a small but gallant grenadier, who might have fought at Fontenoy, pirouetted with a tall young lady, dressed in the severely classic style of the First French Republic.

Nobody was in greater request than Mr. Samuel Chiltoe. He danced every dance, round, square, or polygonical; and as he always chose a fresh lady, he worked his way conscientiously through the centuries. He was, of course, too peculiar to be dressed in ordinary evening garments. He wore a Court suit of rich plum-colour, and, despite his fiery hair and tinted spectacles, made a very smart little figure.

The Earl of Egglesthorpe, the ostensible master of the mansion, stood by the fire-place, between his wife and Sir Anthony Ammerdown, gazing at the merry scene with eyes which had lost their usual expression of easy good-humour. Just then the clock chimed three-quarters. The hands pointed to a quarter to twelve.

"The New Year will soon be here," observed Sir Anthony.

"Ay!" said the Earl, gloomily, "and the new owner of Groby will soon claim his rights."

"Algy! my darling husband, of what are you speaking?" exclaimed Lady Egglesthorpe in alarm.

"Sir Anthony," continued the Earl, "you are an old family friend, and I will tell you all. Gwendolen may as well hear it too. She must hear it some day. I have been hit hard by those confounded Companies, I wanted cash, and I have sold Groby to—to—" here the Earl nearly broke down—"to that red-headed little monkey in plum-coloured velvet!"

"Algy," murmured the Countess, with her handkerchief to her eyes, "is this a dream or a reality?"

"It is a fiction, my dear Lady Egglesthorpe," said Sir Anthony, emphatically. "Chiltoe, I am certain, has never——"

Here the speech of the ex-Minister was interrupted by a commotion at the lower end of the hall, whence there proceeded loud shrieks, and whither in a few moments everybody crowded from all sides of the spacious apartment. Presently above the hubbub the resonant voice of Mr. Chiltoe was heard shouting, "Give him room, ladies and gentlemen! Give the gallant warrior room to move!"

Before proceeding further, it is advisable at this point to step a few paces backward in the chronology of this narrative. Among the visitors at Groby Castle there were two young ladies, sisters, named Twitterly, who were of a highly nervous imaginative temperament, and who were also greatly addicted to the reading and telling of ghost stories. These girls longed to pay a visit to the Haunted Chamber at Groby, concerning which some wonderful stories had been told them. "When could we have a more favourable opportunity than this?" whispered Clara to Agnes, as they stood in a corner apart from the merry throng of dancers. "It is the last night of the old year, and the clock will soon strike twelve. The upper part of the house must be quite deserted. If the ghost of Ralph Lilborne does ever walk it is as likely to walk on this night as on any night in the year."

"I will come, dear Clara," replied Agnes, in an impassioned tone. "We might see Something. How dreadfully nice it would be!"

So the Miss Twitterlys stole away unperceived upstairs, and Clara softly opened the door of the Haunted Chamber. To her surprise the room was not wrapped in darkness, for a candle was burning on the centre table. The girls' eyes were instantly fascinated by the portrait of Ralph Lilburne. The dim light made him seem singularly life-like. "It looks more like a real man than a picture," whispered Agnes. Instead of replying articulately, Clara uttered a low cry of terror, and clasped her sister's hand. It is one thing to anticipate seeing a supernatural appearance; it is another and a much more terrifying thing to see it in reality. Both the girls distinctly saw the right hand of the portrait move out of the canvas! In another moment the entire figure followed, stepped noiselessly on to the carpet, and advanced towards them! The Miss Twitterlys uttered a simultaneous shriek, and rushed hand in hand down the staircase, closely followed by the doughty Cavalier. On such trying occasions there is much consolation in the presence of a multitude, so the Miss Twitterlys fled for refuge, still shrieking loudly, into the midst of the brilliantly-lighted hall. The Spectre followed them. To the company generally, who were unaware of the uncanny fashion in which Ralph had stepped from his frame, there was nothing terrifying in his aspect. They simply saw a handsome young man, correctly attired in the costume of Charles I.'s day, and they not unnaturally regarded him as one of the characters in the Calico Ball, and crowded curiously round him. It was then that the indefatigable Mr. Chiltoe, as mentioned above, asked them to give the gallant warrior room to move. As soon as Ancestor Ralph was released by Mr. Chiltoe's exertions from the surrounding pressure, he advanced towards the Lady Mildred, and making her a low bow, offered her his arm. Lady Mildred accepted it with a gracious smile, but with perfect self-possession, as if Ghosts were as common as Guardsmen. The next moment Mr. Chiltoe, with a grotesque obeisance, offered his arm to the Lady Hilda, who accepted it with equal readiness. The quartet then advanced with slow and stately steps towards the fireplace, followed at a respectful distance by the rest of the company, among whom the Miss Twitterlys were not the least interested.

Just as they arrived within a few paces of the Earl and Countess, the clock in the great tower clanged out the hour of twelve.

The New Year had begun!

"I desire," said the Spectre, solemnly, "to confer with your lordship privately in your library. I will name the other members of this company whom I wish to be present at this interview. They are these: Her Ladyship the Countess of Egglesthorpe, her two elder daughters, the Ladies Mildred and Hilda, Sir Anthony Ammerdown, and my old and faithful friend, Mr. Samuel Chiltoe."

The Spectre bowed with profound gravity to each person in succession as he mentioned his or her name. "The remainder of our friends," he added, including the rest of the assemblage in one courteous and comprehensive salute, "will be good enough to resume dancing until our business is completed."

"This is quite too delightful," whispered Agnes Twitterly to her sister, as the Spectre and his chosen companions retired in the direction of the library. "It is like a chapter of the 'Mysteries of Udolpho' performed in real life."

"But I think, dear Agnes, you and I should have been treated as privileged guests, and invited to share in this mysterious council. Our eyes alone saw him descend from the frame in which he had been fixed motionless for ever so long; our eyes alone saw him once more metamorphosed into a thing of life!"

"Perhaps he was annoyed at our intrusion."

"Possibly he was. It is curious that now I don't feel the least afraid of him."

"Nor I."

"He is so good-looking."

"And no one would take him for a gh——for an inhabitant of the invisible world, don't you know, unless you knew, as we know, that he was one."

"He feels so substantial."

"You did not touch him, Clara!"

"I did, indeed, in the crowd, and he felt exactly like anybody else."

"Oh! Clara, I'm afraid you have no sense of reverence."

On reaching the library, the company, convoyed by the Spectre, found the lamps lighted, and Mr. Kexby, the family lawyer, and Mr. Knoyle, the bailiff, seated at the table, on which lay an ample army of documents. These two gentlemen rose and bowed respectfully. They did not appear in the least surprised or disconcerted at the appearance of the Spectre, a circumstance which especially perplexed the Earl.

"I do not believe in ghosts," said his lordship, "at the same time I am bound to confess, sir," he continued, addressing himself to the Spectre, "that you bear a very strong resemblance to the portrait of a respected forefather of mine, commonly known in the family as Ancestor Ralph. May I take the liberty of asking your name?"

"For a few moments I prefer to keep my name a secret," replied the Spectre.

"May I ask the object of this mysterious summons to the library?"

"In that respect your lordship's curiosity shall be immediately gratified. Not long ago, in this room, you effected an important transfer of property?"

"Yes, I know I did. I was driven up into a corner, and I couldn't help myself."

"You need not repent the transaction. I am the bearer of good news." Here the Spectre drew a roll of parchment from his bosom. "My lord, permit me to return to you the title-deeds of Groby Castle."

"You're very kind," said the Earl, "but I can't afford to buy back the estate. I've no money. Mr. Chiltoe's cheque has melted away irrevocably, gone to satisfy the claims of my creditors. Kexby told me so."

"No pecuniary compensation is needed," answered the Spectre.

"I don't understand," said the Earl. "I'm thoroughly puzzled. Besides, what about Mr. Chiltoe? Has he no voice in the matter? Is he willing to cancel his bargain?"

"Mr. Chiltoe and I are in partnership in this affair," said the Spectre gravely, "and we demand a reward, though not a money-reward, for the restoration of your title-deeds."

"Not a money-reward!" exclaimed the Earl. "Why what else can stir the enthusiasm of a newly-fledged landed proprietor?"

"This," said the Spectre, "the fair hand of the Lady Mildred." And he raised it to his ghostly lips, and kissed it. The lady endured the gallant salute with the most engaging amiability.

"My dear Algy!" interposed the Countess, excitedly, "you must not permit this, you really must not! Not even for the sake of recovering Groby. Mildred has promised Sir Anthony——"

"That she will marry any gentleman of Sir Anthony's selection," said Mildred. "Is it not so, Sir Anthony?"

"It is," replied the Ex-Minister. "And, as your daughter appears to approve of the choice, I make my decision in favour of this gentleman in trunk-hose."

"Ladies and gents," exclaimed Mr. Chiltoe, in his vulgarest tones, "please don't forget poor little Me. Me and Hancestor Ralph are in Co. together. He pairs hoff with the Lady Mildred, and Hi, Hi claim the 'and of the lovely Lady 'Ilda!"

"And I accept Mr. Chiltoe's proposal," said the Lady Hilda, smiling and blushing, "provided Papa and Mamma will give their consent."

"I'm more puzzled than ever," exclaimed the Earl.

"I'm lost in the profoundest astonishment," cried the Countess.

"Permit me to explain matters," said Lawyer Kexby, quietly stepping forward. "I took the liberty of mentioning to Sir Anthony, as he is an old and staunch family friend, that your lordship was in pecuniary difficulties. He said he would help you if he could do so without hurting your lordship's feelings. Then we all laid our heads together, and concocted a plot. Everybody was in the conspiracy, except your lordship, and her ladyship the Countess. Mr. Chiltoe——" here the lawyer made a significant gesture, whereupon the little gentleman addressed divested himself of a beard, wig, and spectacles, and revealed the features of a small but handsome dark-haired young man.

"Mr. Alfred-Hall Bowling of the Scamperdown!" exclaimed the Countess.

"Leftenant Har Hen, eh! Lady Egglesthorpe?" replied the soi-disant Chiltoe. "I hope your ladyship will forgive me all my tricks. If you knew the martyrdom I have endured wearing that meltingly oppressive wig and beard, and the danger I have incurred of vulgarising myself for life by forgetting how to pronounce my h's, I am sure you would forgive me!"

"You will forgive him, mamma, won't you?" said Hilda, throwing her arms round her mother's neck. Who could resist her pretty airs of fascination?

"I begin to suspect," said the Earl, with the old merry twinkle kindling in his eyes, "that Ancestor Ralph is also an impostor."

"Well, I must admit that he is," answered Sir Anthony, "he does not belong to the seventeenth century at all. He is a certain tall son of mine, for whom I entertain a considerable regard, and who, I hope, if he works hard and does his duty, may live some day to be Her Majesty's Representative at Washington, Paris, or Berlin. Take off your wig, Edgar, and show yourself in your real colours."

"Sir Anthony," said the Earl, clasping his old friend's hand, "I shall never forgive you."

"Nor I," added the Countess with a smile. And she kissed the old statesman's wrinkled cheek. "Yes, I'll forgive you on one condition. That you will tell us how you managed it all."

"I won't promise," replied Sir Anthony, "to let the whole of the cat out of the bag at once, but I'll disclose this much. I felt great pleasure in spending some of my money in helping an old friend out of a difficulty, and I knew, for certain tender reasons" (here he glanced at Mildred), "that Edgar would be my staunch ally. Just then, as luck would have it, Mr. Bowling came home

(Continued on page 12)

PAISLEY; and

23, IRONMONGER LANE, LONDON (THE OLD HOUSE).

J. and G. JOHNSTON, as Merchants, were the first House in England to advertise CORN FLOUR for the English and Export Markets. They are not now responsible for the quality of any Corn Flour but that which bears their own name.

WITH STEWED FRUIT OF ALL KINDS;
FOR PUDDINGS, CUSTARDS, BLANC-MANGE, CAKES; TO THICKEN SOUPS, SAUCES, BEEF TEA;
FOR ALL THE USES OF THE BEST ARROWROOT, AND WITH MILK FOR CHILDREN'S FOOD.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR IS THE BEST.

IT IS NOT RICE FLOUR; IT IS PREPARED AT GREAT EXPENSE SOLELY FROM MAIZE—INDIAN-CORN.

It is rich in heat-giving and flesh-forming properties; milk contains the constituents of bone and muscle, and the two in combination afford the most perfect and complete nourishment, closely resembling in nutritive value ordinary beef and bread, and in a form the most palatable and digestible, and therefore especially suitable for Children, and Mothers whilst nursing.

The emphatic and voluntarily declared opinion of The Lancet (Nov. 13, 1875), is that JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR is "quite free from adulteration" and "decidedly superior." The same article on JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR states that CORN FLOUR "itself has become a necessity."

The following are EXTRACTS from the EVIDENCE taken by the COMMITTEE of the HOUSE of COMMONS on the ADULTERATION OF FOOD ACT, returned to the House on July 3, 1874:—

CHARLES A. CAMERON, M.D., Professor of Political Medicine in the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland; Analyst for Dublin, Limerick, Waterford, Kilkenny, Galway, and Sixteen Irish Counties. Examined.

Answer to Question 4655:—"I am speaking now as a physician; and I think that a great number of children who could easily digest a delicately prepared Corn Flour could not eat a lump of wheaten flour made into dough, or cooked in any form, or even rice flour."

Answer to Question 4656:—. . . "All my children—and I have six of them—have used a large quantity of Corn Flour."

Question 4820:—"Would you state that it (Corn Flour) was a flesh forming nutriment in a very minimum degree?" Answer: "No; I consider that it would form a very large portion of flesh."

AUGUSTUS VOELCKER, Ph.D., F.R.S., Chemist of the Royal Agricultural Society. Examined.

Question 5664:—"We have had evidence that some kinds of arrowroot will command a wholesale price of two shillings per pound; in your opinion, is there more nutriment in a pound of some of those Corn Flours which you can get at about one-fourth the price?" Answer: "No. The two shillings is quite a fancy price for a fancy article, but . . . Corn Flour is just as nutritious as the more expensive arrowroots."

Question 5826:—"With regard to Corn Flour, you believe that the Corn Flour, if mixed with milk, may be beneficial to children?" Answer: "I know that it is."

Question 5555:—"Generally in conjunction with milk, is it not?" Answer: "Yes; in conjunction with milk. Nobody in his senses would think of Corn Flour or any of those preparations by themselves."

The following is the Report of the Committee:—

"The attention of your Committee has been called to the article known as Corn Flour, in reference to which important evidence as to its purity and its useful dietetic qualities has been given by some eminent medical and chemical authorities, which, however, is denied by one witness. Your Committee are fully convinced that the manufacture is quite legitimate, and that, like Arrowroot, Sago, and other starch foods, Corn Flour is perfectly wholesome, but that it should not in any case be given to infants without a considerable admixture of milk."

"I have examined JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR, and find it perfectly pure and most excellent in quality. When boiled with milk it affords complete nourishment for Children and persons of weak digestion.

"CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I.,
"Professor of Chemistry, Royal College
"of Surgeons, Dublin."

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR, being perfectly pure, is not liable to ferment, and keeps sweet in any climate for years.

To be obtained in all Parts of the World by Order through Grocers, &c. For Export it is Packed Specially with Great Care.

Some reasons why
JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR SHOULD ALWAYS BE EXPRESSLY NAMED when Corn Flour is ordered:—

"It is quite free from adulteration."—The Lancet. "Is decidedly superior."—The Lancet.

It is not Rice flour; it is prepared at great expense exclusively from Maize,—Indian Corn. It is rich in heat-giving and flesh-forming properties. In combination with milk it is the most perfect food for Children. Being perfectly pure, it does not ferment. J. and G. JOHNSTON, as Merchants, were the first House in England to advertise Corn Flour for the English and Export Markets. They have been almost entirely instrumental in introducing it as an invaluable article of nutritious food.

The Name CORN FLOUR is unfairly appropriated to articles that are not CORN FLOUR, but cheap imitations.

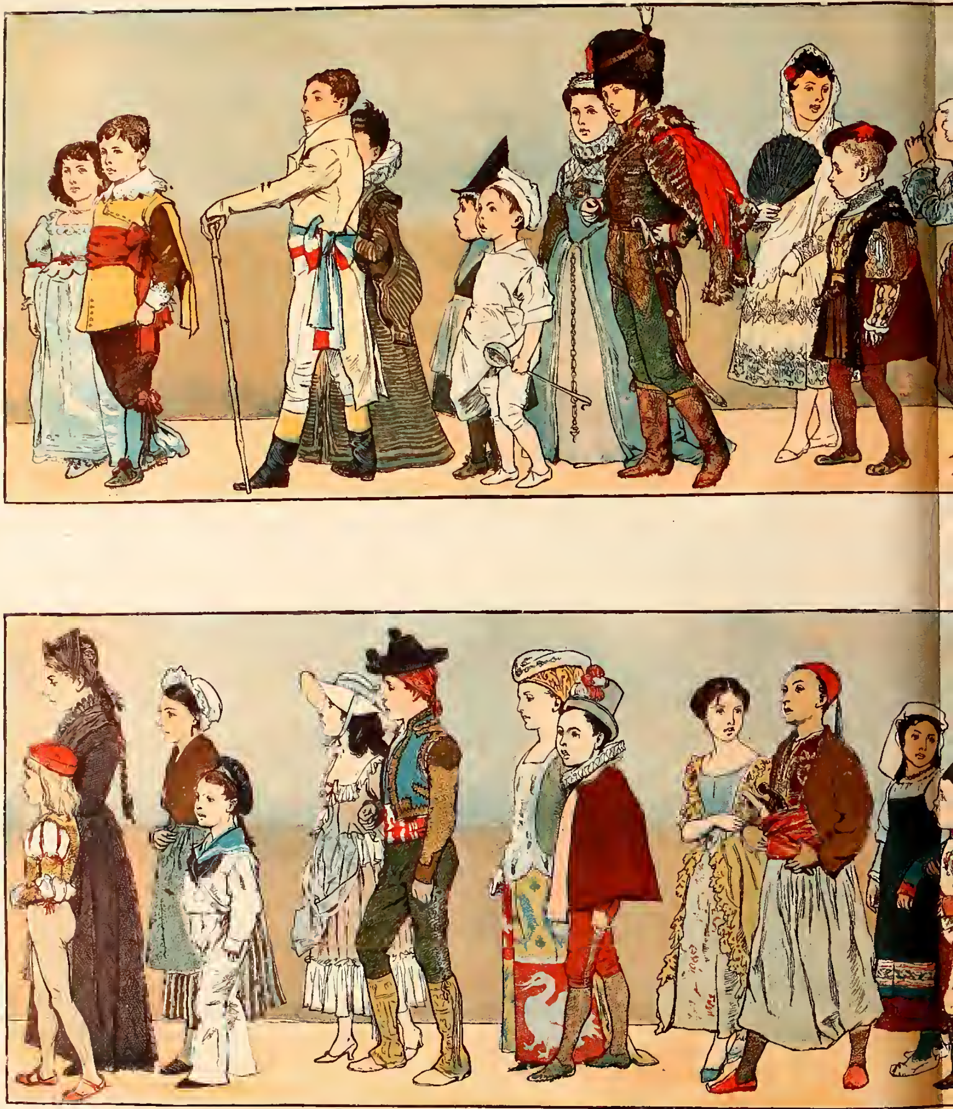
ALSO

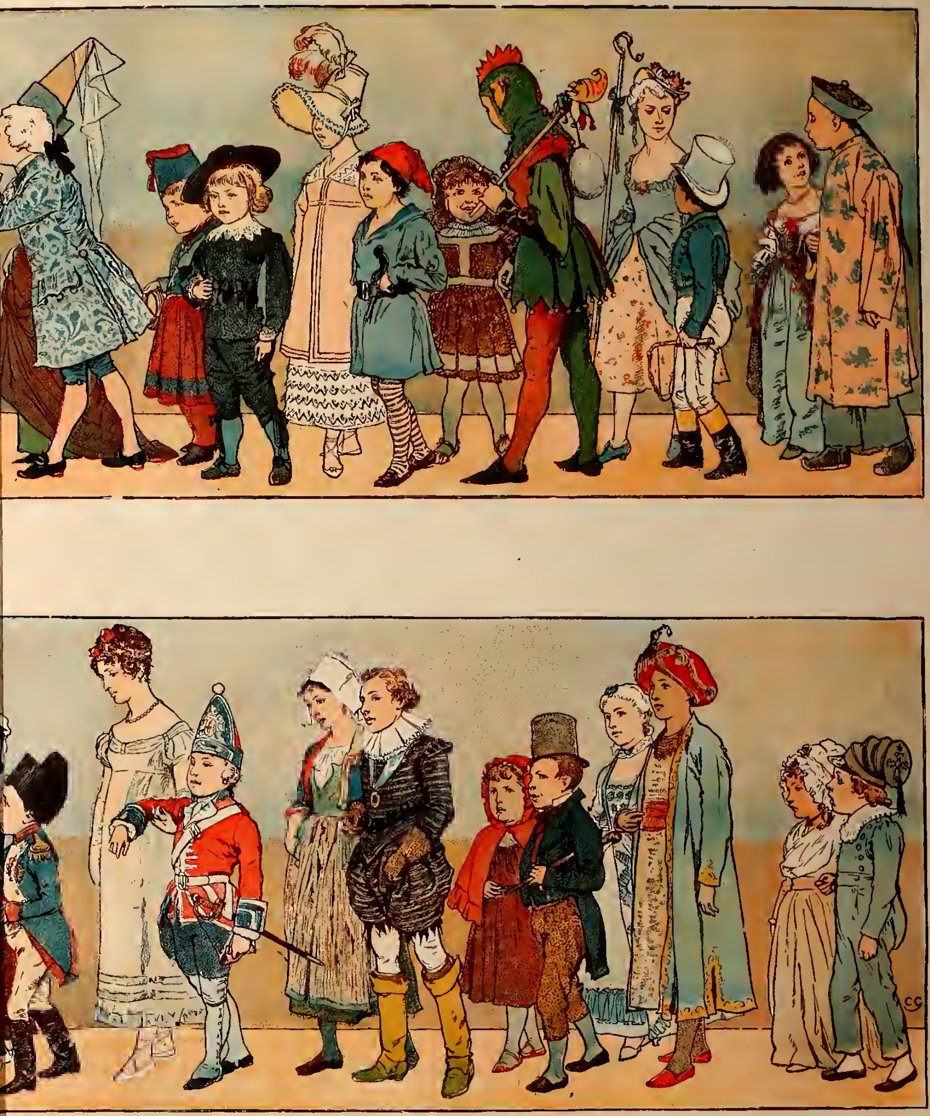
JOHNSTON'S SCOTCH OATMEAL,

Superior quality, warranted free from adulteration. Packets, ¼ lb., ½ lb., and 1 lb., with plain directions for making Porridge, Brose, and Gruel; also in 14 lb. bags. To be obtained by order from all Grocers, &c.



"The dresses had been very carefully designed, and they attracted a great deal of attention, as they afforded a pretty complete panorama of costum

THE CALICO BALL AT



ume from the Middle Ages up to a recent date. It was a picturesque sight to see the young people filing along two by two in procession.

T GROBY CASTLE

(Continued from page 8)

on sick leave. Not very sick, I suspect,—an affection of the chest which I may venture to designate as Hildamania. Well, I didn't grudge putting my hand in my pocket to help you, my old friend, but I determined to have some fun for my money, and I think I've had it. By the way, we haven't done any damage to your lordship's family picture. Ancestor Ralph was carefully removed from his frame, and when the right moment came Edgar took his place. That pair of ghost-loving sisters visited the Haunted Chamber just at the right moment. They had received delicate hints that if they went there they might see something wonderful."

"But how did you manage the mysterious voice from the picture which I heard on two occasions?" asked Lord Egglesthorpe.

"Your lordship remembers Gussage?" answered Mr. Hall Bowling, otherwise Chiltoe, "the rusty attorney's clerk?"

"Perfectly, a fellow who never opened his mouth, and who was always blushing."

"Well, he's a friend of mine whom we enlisted in the plot because he is an accomplished amateur ventriloquist. He's an awfully shy fellow, but he agreed to join our conspiracy provided he was never brought into contact with any ladies. Mr. Knoyle gave him bachelor entertainment at his house, and, except when we required his services professionally, he spent his days in rabbit-shooting and his evenings in grinding for the Indian Civil Service, and colouring a new meerschaum pipe."

"It was very rash of you, Alfred," said Hilda, "to allow the children to invade your dressing-room."

"Yes," replied her lover, "I was within an ace of being found out that morning when Lilian ran off with my auburn wig. Gussage behaved like a brick on that occasion. He was lurking, like Polonius, behind the arras with the benevolent intention of giving your lordship a ventriloquial surprise, when he saw the critical state of affairs, rushed courageously on the gigantic robber, and restored to me my head-gear."

"And you, Bowling, deserve the highest credit," observed Edgar Ammerdown, "for so skilfully keeping Lady Egglesthorpe in conversation while Mildred and I were enjoying our interview on the stairs."

"I think you young people have behaved most impudently," said the Countess. "I can hardly be persuaded to forgive you. What do you think of their conduct, Algy?" she added, turning to her husband.

"Unparalleled audacity is the only word for it," answered the Earl. "If any one had told me a twelvemonth ago that I should be so systematically humbugged and hoodwinked under my own roof I should have been ready to— But you see the young rogues were playing for very interesting stakes"—here he paused to kiss his daughters—"and it's the first hour of a New Year, and I've got my Castle back again, so, all things considered, I suppose I must forgive and forget, and say, 'Bless you, my children!'—And now, Ancestor Ralph, are you going to return to your frame?"

"I should like some supper first, if your lordship has no objection," replied the ex-spectre. "It's rather tiring work enacting the part of an Animated Portrait."

THE END

Blisson's Last Round:

A STORY OF SOME CHRISTMAS WAITS.

BY T. W. SPEIGHT,

Author of "In the Dead of Night," "A Brilliant Adventure," &c.

"WELL, now, Mr. Harold, it's not half a bad idea if your Ma don't object to it."

"I'm old enough to please myself in a matter like this, Quain," I said, with my most dignified air.

"And therefore old enough to please your mother, too, young gentleman."

"If you must know, I have spoken to her about it, Quain. It's all right in that quarter."

"In that case we shall certainly be very glad to have you, Mr. Harold. A second clarnet will strengthen us considerably. We shall meet for practice at seven to-morrow night at Dicky Dodd's."

"I won't fail to be there, Quain."

The above conversation between Ephraim Quain and myself took place one evening at the beginning of December many years ago. I was just nineteen at the time, and had not long come back from Germany, where I had been to finish my education. Among other acquirements I had learnt how to play the clarionet. I was rather proud of my playing in those days, and when I got back home I was not long in discovering a small musical coterie in our little town, to which I at once affiliated myself. The coterie in question, which consisted but of some half-dozen members, was in the habit of meeting every Friday evening for three or four hours' good playing. The members were small tradesmen of the town, and they were all musical enthusiasts. They were men who had reached the dignity and substance of middle age, which was, perhaps, one reason why they had dubbed themselves "The Tortoises," being all of them so very slow and sure. They met at each other's house alternately, and every six weeks or so they supped together in a modest way on tripe and onions or some other equally cheap and savoury dish. The recognised leader of the Tortoises was Ephraim Quain, the tailor. He played first violin. The second violin was played by George Moody, the baker, and the violoncello found its master in Dicky Dodd, the shoemaker. David Mapes, the greengrocer, patronised the flute, while Silas Grogram, the smallware dealer, had a preference for the clarionet. Finally, Martin Lunn, the parish clerk, brought up the rear with his harp.

When I first mentioned to Ephraim Quain, who had known me ever since I was no higher than his counter, my wish to join the Tortoises during the ensuing winter (I was to go to a situation in London next spring), he stared at me through his spectacles in speechless amazement. That any lad of nineteen should, of his own accord, want to become a Tortoise, even pro tem., was something altogether unheard of. Then, again, did not such a request, emanating from one so young, argue a considerable amount of arrogance and self-conceit? Here was a youngster who evidently put himself on a par with, and considered himself as the equal in knowledge and musical ability of, men old enough to be his grandfather—of men who had served an apprenticeship, each to his own pet instrument, long years before this jackanapes was born. Certainly boys nowadays were very different from the boys of forty years ago. They seemed to think that they could master everything with a hop, skip, and a jump.

"You must be very fond of music, young sir," said the worthy tailor, when he had sufficiently digested my daring proposition.

"I am very fond of it."

"Then come to my house to-night, and let me hear you play."

At Ephraim's house that evening I found two other Tortoises besides himself. They had come on purpose to hear me. When I had given them a specimen of what I could do, they all shook their heads solemnly. Then one cleared his throat, and uttered the word, "Showy." Another from behind his pipe grunted out the word, "Newfangled." The third, with a thump of his fist on the table, said emphatically, "That may be the Jarman way, but I'm dashed if it's the English!"

But they were good-hearted old boys for all that, and when they had sufficiently taken the wind out of my sails, they agreed that I should go to their next Friday's meeting. "If the lad's fond of music, and wants to improve hisself, it's a pity he shouldn't have the chance," said David Mapes, "and he couldn't help improving if he came to us." "Of course he couldn't," assented the others. "We don't go in for gimcracks and fireworks, we don't. We go in for something solid and substantial—something that a man can get a bellyful out of. Good music's like roast beef and taters. It always agrees with you, and you never get tired of it."

Thus it was that I became a Tortoise pro tem. But now Christmas was drawing near, and then it was that the conversation between Ephraim and myself, as detailed at the beginning of this paper, took place. Two nights a week during the three weeks that preceded Christmas the Tortoises turned themselves into Waits, and went about from house to house among their friends and customers, playing the simple homely tunes that accorded best with the coming season. Christmas would not have seemed like Christmas in our little town without the Tortoises and their music. It was no wonder that I wanted to go with them.

Although I did not tell Ephraim so, my mother had strongly opposed my wish to join the Waits, in fact, she would far rather that I had never joined the Tortoises at all. She thought that I, the son of a doctor, must of necessity lose caste by doing so. I could not see the matter in that light at all, and when she found how earnest I was about it, she gave way, dear soul! as she always did to my whims and wishes. So with the Waits I went, and tootled away on my clarionet to my heart's content.

Christmas Eve came round at last, and with it the last night of the Waits. It was to be a longer round than usual. We assembled at Ephraim Quain's house a little before ten o'clock. When we got there we were told that Silas Grogram, who played the clarionet, had sent word to say his cold was so bad that the doctor wouldn't let him leave home. "It don't matter so very much," added Ephraim, "because we've got young Mr. Harold here, though being our last night I should have liked us all to be together, and two clar'nets would certainly have been better than one. But what can't be cured must be endured."

Each of us had a mug of hot elder wine given him to drink. While we were sipping it, said Ephraim: "Friends all—all but young Mr. Harold there—you will not forget this night twelve months ago. It was poor Will Blisson's last night on earth."

"Will Blisson?" I said. "Was not that the man who made away with himself?"

"It was—more's the pity. He went out with us as it might be to-night, knowing all the time what he meant to do when he got home, but never hinting at it so much as by a single word. Then when we had done, he shook hands all round, nodded a good-night to us—he was always a man of few words—and went. Nobody saw him alive after that."

"There was some woman mixed up with the affair, wasn't there?" I asked. I had been in Germany when the tragedy took place, and had only a vague recollection of it.

"A woman? Yes—his wife. He had escaped the snares of matrimony till he was over fifty, then suddenly he went and married a neighbour's daughter that he had been used to dandle on his knees when she was a child. She had lost both father and mother, and would have had to go out to service. So she married Will Blisson instead."

"And a mortal pity it were," interposed David Mapes, "that they two ever became man and wife."

Everybody shook their heads in solemn agreement, and then Ephraim continued: "Though Will never said a word about it, everybody knew that the marriage was not a happy one. He was a quiet close-fisted man—some people might have called him stingy. She was a vain, feather-brained creature who, if she could have had her own way, would have spent all her husband's savings on dress and vanities."

"Ah, what red cheeks and what bright eyes she had!" interjected George Moody.

"Will had been one of us for years," went on Ephraim, addressing himself directly to me. "He played the clar'net, and a capital player he was. Silas Grogram, who's away ill to-night, didn't join us till after Will's death. Well, a year ago this very night, just before Will left home to go his rounds with us, a note was put into his hands. It was from his wife. She had gone away with another man. Will read the note, and put it into his pocket without a word. He went the rounds with us, and nobody knew there was anything the matter with him, but within two hours of his leaving us he had put an end to his life. Peace be with him! Amen."

"Amen to that," said everybody, solemnly.

"And now, my hearties, it's time we made a start."

We drank off our elder wine, and proceeded to put on our coats and comforters. Then Dicky Dodd, in accordance with immemorial custom, handed round his snuff-box. Each took a pinch in silence. Then Ephraim opened the door, and each taking his instrument, we set out. The harp did not go with us on our Christmas rounds. It was too heavy and cumbersome to be carried from place to place; in addition to which, Martin Lunn, who played it, was by nature fat and scant of breath.

"We'll go to Squire Swainson's first," said Ephraim, and in a few minutes we were there.

"Gently with the gate, my hearties," continued Ephraim. "We should come upon 'em like spirits in the night, without a sound till we all strike up together."

Following a winding path that led through the shubbery, we came presently to a small lawn interspersed with clumps of evergreens. The night was keen, with a slight frost. A white rime lay on the grass. There was no moon, but the stars shone clearly overhead.

"Who's that?" whispered Ephraim, pointing with his finger as we crossed the lawn. "There's somebody there. Can't be waiting for us, eh, boys?"

"Some chap sweethearting after the girls, perhaps," whispered David Mapes.

"Anyhow, he's no business here at this time o' night," remarked Dicky Dodd.

Somebody there certainly was: a muffled-up figure standing exactly opposite the big bow window. He did not move as we drew nearer, in fact, it almost seemed as if he were waiting for us. The stars shone brightly, and although the man's features were not clearly distinguishable, his form and figure could be plainly seen, down to the shape of his hat, the cut of his coat, and even to the dark muffler tied round his throat with its ends thrown over his left shoulder.

"Who can it be?" asked Ephraim in the same low voice as we drew near. "David, where's thy lantern?"

David Mapes when going his Christmas rounds always carried a small dark lantern under his capacious overcoat. Here and there a tortuous lane or a narrow field-path had to be traversed, or an awkward stile to be crossed, and as the Tortoises were no longer so young as they had once been, David's lantern was not without its uses.

In the present case the words were hardly out of Ephraim's mouth, before David brought out the lantern, pushed back the slide, and flashed the light full on the stranger's face. On that face the eyes of all present were bent. It was rugged, careworn, morose; with deep-cut lines at the corners of the eyes and mouth, and with shaggy overhanging brows, from beneath which glowed two deep-set eyes instinct with gloomy fire.

But hardly had my companions set eyes on this figure than with one accord they shrank back horror-stricken: with one accord their trembling lips breathed out the words, "It's Will Blisson!"

Then came a pause of mingled awe and astonishment as we all stood huddled together on the frosted grass, gazing with dread unspeakable on the ghostly figure before us. It stood there without moving, with its eyes bent on us—as we could feel—and still with the same air of waiting for someone or something.

George Moody was the first to speak. "I'm blest if he hasn't brought his clar'net with him!" he said in an awed whisper.

It was true. Now that George mentioned it, we could all clearly make out the shape of the instrument.

A little while, and Ephraim Quain spoke. He was our leader and we all looked to him for an opinion. "Boys," said Ephraim huskily, "we cannot doubt that we see before us our old friend Will Blisson, who came round with us for the last time this very night twelve months ago. Why he has been permitted to join us here again to night, is a mystery that we cannot fathom. But of one thing we may be quite sure—he is not here to do us any harm. We have no cause to stand in fear of him: why should we? As he is, so will each of us be in turn, and before very long. Friends and neighbours, let us get on with our work. We will play first of all, 'Hail Blessed Babe in Bethlem's Manger Laid.' Now then, all together."

I am afraid that the first few bars were rather shakily played. We had spread ourselves out a little, but hardly had the first note swelled on the night air when the silent ghostly figure that magnetised the eyes of all of us glided a few paces nearer till it formed, as it were, one of our group. We all shrank visibly away from it—all save brave old Ephraim. "Steady, friends, steady," he said in quavering accents. "Nothing in the wide world can harm us unless He wills it so." Thus encouraged we went on with our playing as steadily as our shaken nerves would allow us. We saw now why the ghost, or whatever it was, had come closer up to us. Its intention was to join us in our playing. It pressed its clarionet to its lips, and moved its fingers over the keys in accordance with the exigencies of the tune, but no sound, no faintest murmur of music, reached our straining ears. Still the figure played on—played its silent music—pausing when we paused, and beginning again when we began again. When the first piece was over, Ephraim gave out the name of the second, and in this too the figure joined, but silently as before. Could it hear us? I kept on wondering to myself. Did the music which we discoursed fill no more space in the vacant chambers of its brain than its did in ours?

When the second piece was at an end, we all, in accordance with a time honoured custom, lifted up our voices and cried, "'To all under this roof we wish a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.' The words had not left our lips before the ghost of Will Blisson had vanished. What a sigh of relief we all gave!

"We'll go to Farmer Woodruff's next," said Ephraim. "We shall get some hotted ale there, and that's a mortal fine thing on a cold night."

"It's coming on to freeze harder than ever," said George Moody with a shiver.

"Ah! We ain't so young as we once was," said Dicky Dodd. "Old bones and frosty weather don't agree nohow."

We only spoke in whispers. We hardly felt yet as if we were really alone. Turning up the collars of our coats, and burying our noses in our comforters, we set our faces for Farmer Woodruff's. It was a good half-mile away, but I don't believe that any of us spoke till we got there. The influence of what we had just gone through could not be thrown off in a moment. Ephraim was the first to speak. "We'll try the straw-yard gate," he said. "Maybe they're expecting us, and have left it unfastened."

Finding the straw-yard open, we passed through, and presently stationed ourselves in front of the house. The lower windows were not so closely shuttered, but that we could make out a light in one of the rooms. "That looks well for our hotted ale," whispered David Mapes, as he breathed on his frozen fingers.

"Blest, if poor Will ain't here a waiting for us again!" muttered Dicky Dodd.

"I thought we had very likely not seen the last of him," answered Ephraim. "He'll go with us wherever we go to-night, you see if he don't."

As before, the figure formed one of our group, and as before it accompanied us silently on its clarionet. If we were not quite so overcome as at first, still its proximity to us filled us with an awe too deep for words. When we came to talk the matter over among ourselves afterwards, one or two admitted that the chief thought in their minds at the time had been to wonder whether, when they in their turn should be gone, they would be permitted to come back, as Will Blisson had come back, and go the rounds on Christmas Eve with their old friends.

Before we had quite finished, Farmer Woodruff's door was thrown hospitably open, and as the last note died away, a cheery voice cried out: "A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to you all!"

"The same to you, Mister Jim, and many of 'em!" we responded in unison.

"Come inside and warm yourselves with a drop of old ale," cried Jim. So we scraped our shoes and filed in, the door being shut behind the last man. Involuntarily I glanced round. It was a relief to find that the figure had not come in with us. I breathed more freely.

How cosy and home-like seemed the warm well-lighted room! For my part, I should have liked nothing better than to stay there all night and pretermit the remainder of our rounds. On a table in the middle of the sanded floor stood a dish filled with mince pies and huge slices of plum cake. Close by was a large old-fashioned silver tankard with two handles, filled to the brim with hot spiced ale, on the surface of which floated a lemon stuck with cloves.

"Dad would have sat up for you himself," said Jim, "only

(Continued on page 16)

CHATTO and WINDUS, Publishers.

Catalogues and Prospectuses upon application.

MAJOR WHYTE-MELVILLE'S NEW NOVEL.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE for JANUARY will contain the first chapters of a New Novel by G. J. WHYTE-MELVILLE, author of "The Gladiators," &c., entitled "ROY'S WIFE." Illustrated by Arthur Hopkins.

THOMAS HARDY'S NEW NOVEL.

BELGRAVIA for JANUARY will contain the first chapters of a New Novel by THOMAS HARDY (author of "Far from the Madding Crowd," &c.), entitled "THE RETURN OF THE NATIVE." Illustrated by ARTHUR HOPKINS.

THE PICCADILLY NOVELS.

Illustrated by Gilbert, Du Maurier, Small, &c.

Antonina. By Wilkie Collins.
Basil. By Wilkie Collins.
Hide and Seek. By Wilkie Collins.
The Dead Secret. By Wilkie Collins.
Queen of Hearts. By Wilkie Collins.
My Miscellanies. By Wilkie Collins.
The Woman in White. By Wilkie Collins.
The Moonstone. By Wilkie Collins.
Man and Wife. By Wilkie Collins.
Poor Miss Finch. By Wilkie Collins.
Miss or Mrs? By Wilkie Collins.
The New Magdalen. By Wilkie Collins.
The Frozen Deep. By Wilkie Collins.
The Law and the Lady. By Wilkie Collins.
Felicia. By M. B. Edwards.
Patricia Kemball. By E. Lynn Linton.
Atonement of Leam Dundas. By E. Lynn Linton.
The Evil Eye. By K. S. Macquoid.
Number Seventeen. By Henry Kingsley.
Oakshott Castle. By Henry Kingsley.
Open! Sesame! By Florence Marryat.
Whiteladies. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Best of Husbands. By James Payn.
Walter's Word. By J. Payn.
Halves. By James Payn.
The Way We Live Now. By Anthony Trollope.
Diamond Cut Diamond. By T. A. Trollope.
Bound to the Wheel. By John Saunders.
Guy Waterman. By John Saunders.
One Against the World. By John Saunders.
The Lion in the Path. By John Saunders.
Ready-Money Mortiboy. By Walter Besant and James Rice.
The Golden Butterfly. By Besant and Rice.
My Little Girl. By Besant and Rice.
With Harp and Crown. By Besant and Rice.
The Case of Mr. Lucraft. By Besant and Rice.
This Son of Vulcan. By Besant and Rice.

Crown 8vo, red cloth extra, 5s. each.

OUIDA'S NOVELS.

FOLLE-FARINE.
IDALIA.
CHANDOS.
UNDER TWO FLAGS.
TRICOTRIN.
CECIL CASTLEMAINE.
HELD IN BONDAGE.
PASCAREL.
PUCK.
DOG OF FLANDERS.
STRATHMORE.
TWO LITTLE WOODEN SHOES.
SIGNA.
IN A WINTER CITY.
ARIADNE.

CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR NOVELS.

Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s. each.

Antonina. By Wilkie Collins.
Basil. By Wilkie Collins.
Hide and Seek. By Wilkie Collins.
Dead Secret. By W. Collins.
Queen of Hearts. By Wilkie Collins.
My Miscellanies. By Wilkie Collins.
The Woman in White. By Wilkie Collins.
Moonstone. By W. Collins.
Man and Wife. By Wilkie Collins.
Poor Miss Finch. By Wilkie Collins.
Miss or Mrs.? By Wilkie Collins.
The New Magdalen. By Wilkie Collins.
Frozen Deep. By W. Collins.
The Law and the Lady. By Wilkie Collins.
Bound to the Wheel.
Oakshott Castle. By Henry Kingsley.
The Adventures of Tom Sawyer. By Mark Twain.
A Pleasure Trip on the Continent. By Mark Twain.
Guy Waterman. By John Saunders.
One Against the World. By John Saunders.
The Lion in the Path. By John and Katherine Saunders.
Ready-Money Mortiboy. By Besant and Rice.
The Golden Butterfly. By Besant and Rice.
With Harp and Crown. By Besant and Rice.
This Son of Vulcan. By Besant and Rice.
My Little Girl. By Besant and Rice.
The Case of Mr. Lucraft. By Besant and Rice.

CHATTO and WINDUS, PICCADILLY, W.

BROWN and POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

HAS MORE THAN TWENTY YEARS' WORLD-WIDE REPUTATION.

BROWN and POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

IS DISTINGUISHED FOR UNIFORMLY SUPERIOR QUALITY.

FOR FAMILIES.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR is of constant utility in the preparation of Puddings, Custards, Blanc-mange, Soups, Sauces, &c. Also for Invalids and Children.

FOR HOTELS.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR is inexpensive, and admits, with simple treatment, of many elegant and most agreeable applications.

FOR CONFECTIONERS.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR is admirably adapted for cakes and biscuits, as well as for light dishes suitable for breakfasts, suppers, &c.

FOR SHIP STORES.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR is equally serviceable as an ordinary diet, and as a medicinal regimen.

FOR ORPHANAGES.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR is an economic substitute for arrowroot in all its uses, and, made with milk, it becomes an excellent diet for children, both in health and sickness.

FOR HOSPITALS.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR is an approved and perfectly pure carbonaceous food, having special uses in various forms of disorder, and always beneficial in conditions of debility.

BROWN and POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

IS SUITABLE FOR ALL SEASONS AND CLIMATES.

BROWN and POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

AFFORDS THE HIGHEST SATISFACTION TO ALL WHO USE IT

ESTABLISHED
1832.
NONE
GENUINE EXCEPT IN PINK PAPER WRAPPERS.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

AMONG THE CULTIVATED AND REFINED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD, THIS RENOWNED PREPARATION IS THE ACKNOWLEDGED FAVOURITE WITH BOTH SEXES. OVER FORTY YEARS' TRIAL AND EXPERIENCE HAVE ESTABLISHED ITS SUPERIORITY AND EXCELLENCE.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

IT CANNOT FAIL TO RESTORE GREY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, GLOSS, AND BEAUTY. WHEN THE HAIR TURNS GREY, LOSES ITS LUSTRE, AND FALLS OUT, IT SIMPLY REQUIRES NOURISHMENT. MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER, BY ITS GENTLE TONIC ACTION, STRENGTHENS AND INVIGORATES THE HAIR, AND, BY THE OPERATION OF NATURAL CAUSES, GREY OR WHITE HAIR IS QUICKLY RESTORED TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, GLOSS, AND BEAUTY. IT WILL STOP ITS FALLING, AND INDUCE A HEALTHY AND MOST LUXURIANT GROWTH. USE NO OTHER PREPARATION WITH IT, NOR EVEN OIL OR POMADE, OR ZYLO-BALSAMUM.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. IS THE BEST

TO RESTORE GREY HAIR.

BECAUSE IT IS MADE FROM THE CHOICEST MATERIALS, AND PREPARED WITH THE UTMOST CARE AND SKILL. OVER FORTY YEARS THE FAVOURITE PREPARATION. ENJOYING BY FAR THE LARGEST SALE, IT MUST BE THE BEST. IT DOES NOT DYE THE HAIR, BUT STRENGTHENS IT. GREY HAIRS SOON DISAPPEAR. BY ITS GENTLE TONIC ACTION THE ROOTS ARE STRENGTHENED, THE SOFT AND SILKY TEXTURE OF HEALTHY HAIR FOLLOWS ITS USE.

Sold by all Chemists, Perfumers, and Dealers in Toilet Articles.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN manufactures two entirely distinct Preparations for the Hair. One or the other is suited to every condition of the Human Hair. Both are never required at one time. For details as to each Preparation, kindly read above and below this paragraph. Readers can easily determine which of the two they require. These Preparations have a world-wide reputation. Enormous and increasing sale through Forty Years. Every Chemist and Dealer in Toilet Articles has both Preparations.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S ZYLO-BALSAMUM.

For the Growth and Preservation of the Hair.
It is a cooling, vegetable, and transparent liquid, without sediment

A SIMPLE TONIC AND DRESSING OF INESTIMABLE VALUE TO BOTH SEXES. THE FAVOURITE WITH THE YOUNG AND ALL THOSE WHO HAVE NO GREY HAIR. IT WILL NOT CHANGE THE COLOUR OF THE HAIR, BUT, BY EARLY USE, IT WILL PREVENT IT TURNING GREY. PREMATURE LOSS OF THE HAIR, SO COMMON IN THESE DAYS, MAY BE ENTIRELY PREVENTED BY THE USE OF ZYLO-BALSAMUM. PROMPT RELIEF IN THOUSANDS OF CASES HAS BEEN AFFORDED WHERE THE HAIR HAS BEEN COMING OUT IN HANDFULS. IT PROMOTES A HEALTHY AND VIGOROUS GROWTH. HAIR DRESSED WITH ZYLO-BALSAMUM IS ALWAYS CLEAN, FREE FROM DANDRUFF, AND WITH THAT BEAUTIFUL GLOSS ONLY SEEN IN HEALTHY HAIR. IT IS DELIGHTFULLY FRAGRANT. NO OIL OR POMADE SHOULD BE USED WITH IT.

CAUTION!—The Genuine only in Bluish Grey Wrappers.
Sold by all Chemists, Perfumers, and Dealers in Toilet Articles

---

THE FAVOURITE TOILET WATER OF THE AGE.

GOLDEN STAR BAY LEAF WATER,

TRIPLE DISTILLED FROM THE FRESH LEAVES of the BAY TREE (Myrcia Acris),

FOR THE TOILET, NURSERY, AND BATH.

A Toilet Water of peculiar and delightful fragrance, delicate and lasting,
refreshing and soothing.
GOLDEN STAR BAY LEAF WATER, triple distilled from the fresh leaves of the Bay Tree (Myrcia Acris). Indispensable and a luxury for the TOILET, NURSERY, and BATH.
A few drops on a Sponge or Towel moistened with water, and the FACE and HANDS bathed with it, is very beneficial to the skin, removing all roughness. Most highly recommended to apply after SHAVING. A small quantity in the BATH gives a delightful aroma, and it has most remarkable CLEANSING PROPERTIES. Particularly adapted to the BATHING OF INFANTS and young children; a few drops are sufficient for a basin of water. Most grateful to INVALIDS and all who suffer from HEADACHE, from mental labour or fatigue. Buy only the genuine
GOLDEN STAR BAY LEAF WATER,
sold in three sizes Toilet Bottles,
2s. 6d., 5s., 8s., by Chemists and Perfumers, or on receipt of stamps from the wholesale depôt, 114 & 116,
Southampton Row,
London.

"ELECTRICITY IS LIFE."
TRADE MARK.

PULVERMACHER'S PATENT GALVANIC CHAIN-BANDS, BELTS, BATTERIES, &c.,

RECENTLY IMPROVED,

Approved by the Academy of Medicine of Paris and other Medical Authorities in England and Abroad.

VITAL ENERGY, it is well known, depends upon the unimpaired functions of the nervo-electric fluid governing the whole economy; any deficiency thereof in the system manifests itself, according to the local parts of the body, by a variety of troublesome ailments, such as

Indigestion
Liver Complaints
Neuralgia
Sciatica
Deafness
Writer's Cramp
Loss of Voice
Asthma
Bronchitis
Paralysis
Epilepsy
Rheumatism
Gout
Constipation
Local Debility
General Debility
Female Complaints
Mental and Physical Weakness
Functional Disorders, &c., &c.

This is no conjecture, but an established scientific fact, and it must be admitted that the continuous Volta-Electric currents of these Chain-Bands, although applied externally, penetrate to the innermost organs, promoting digestion, circulation, and nutrition, and performing their recuperative and restorative work in a silent, natural way, devoid of the uncertainty, costliness, and inconvenience of ordinary treatment, or of any unpleasant sensation by shocks, counter-irritation, &c.

MR. PULVERMACHER refrains from advancing statements of his own in favour of his Medico-Galvanic appliances, but confines himself mainly to quotations from the opinions of competent medical and scientific authorities, including Sir CHARLES LOCOCK, Bart., M.D., F.R.C.S.; Sir HENRY HOLLAND, Bart., M.D., F.R.C.S., and F.R.S.; Sir J. R. MARTIN, Bart., C.B., F.R.C.S., F.S.A., and F.R.S.; Sir W. FERGUSSON, Bart., M.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.S., &c.

See Pamphlet, "GALVANISM, NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER of IMPAIRED VITAL ENERGY," sent post free for three stamps.

GALVANISM v. CRAMP.

"9, Silver Street, Manningham, Sept. 13, 1877.

"Dear Sir,—The electric band I had from you has been a great blessing to the patient for whom it was procured, as, previous to wearing it, he suffered greatly from cramp, and could not hold the tools he worked with, and had frequent attacks at night in the legs and thigh. A week after, and ever since the application of the band, the cramp has entirely ceased.—I am dear sir, yours truly,

"E. SCHOLEFIELD.

GALVANISM v. INDIGESTION.

"New Street, Woodbridge, Sept. 2, 1877.

"Dear Sir,—Having derived great benefit by wearing one of your galvanic belts, which I had from you in May last, I feel it my duty and privilege to acknowledge my thanks to you. The complaint was Indigestion, from which I suffered very much.—Yours respectfully,

"WALTER ADAMS.

"Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent St., London."

GALVANISM v. HEADACHE and NUMBNESS in FEET.

2, Union Passage, Birmingham,

"Dear Sir, I feel I cannot speak too highly of your appliances. I have derived very much benefit from using them. I am quite free from pain in the head, and have not had any numbness in my feet for a very long time. I have not consulted a medical man since I commenced to wear the combined bands. I have no rheumatic pains, and, although sixty-three years of age, I feel fifteen years younger, as I can now walk seven or eight miles without feeling fatigued, whereas I used not to be able to walk one mile.—I am, dear Sir, yours truly,

"Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher." "JAMES DOBSON.

GALVANISM v. HEMIPLEGIA of FIVE YEARS' DURATION.

"York, August 18, 1877.

"My dear Sir,—I received your Chain Band last May, for my case, which is one of hemiplegia of five years' duration. I put it on according to directions, and I had not been in bed half an hour before both legs felt the effect of the electric power, which was not at all unpleasant. At the end of a week I could use the affected leg as well as ever, and I am now happy to say the appliance has made a complete cure in my case, and restored me to perfect health and strength.—I am, dear sir, yours truly,

"G. E. BUCKLE.

"Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher."

GALVANISM v. INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

"Hendesley Rectory, Butesdale, Suffolk, August 8, 1877.

"Dear Sir,—I am astonished at the marvellous effect produced after the use of your Band for a month. The child, a boy of four years, lost entirely the use of one leg, which began to waste away, and was pronounced incurable. After the use of the Band for a week the leg broke out, and then began to gain strength, and now the little fellow is able to walk, to the delight and deep gratitude of his parents.—I remain, dear sir, yours faithfully,

"(Rev.) W. T. DIXON.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS HEADACHE.

"Eshall, Aug. 7, 1877.

"Dear Sir,—It affords me great pleasure to testify to the efficiency of your appliances. I was a great sufferer from nervous headache for over 20 years. I tried no end of remedies, but never found any relief until April last, when I purchased one of your Chain Bands, which I wore for a fortnight continuously, and I have never had an attack since.—I am, dear sir, yours gratefully,

"ELIZABETH HARRISON.

"Mr. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent Street."

GALVANISM v. DEAFNESS and TIC DOULOUREUX.

"Carthage, Ross, July 31, 1877

"Dear Sir,—I am happy to inform you that the appliances you forwarded to me for deafness and tic douloureux greatly relieved me, especially in the case of the first-mentioned complaint.

"I have been afflicted for the past fifty years, but it has not been so severe since using your Chain Band

"The above information I ought to have forwarded much earlier for the good of others.—I am, dear sir, yours truly,

"F. CORSER.

"Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher"

GALVANISM v. BILIOUSNESS.

"High Street, Leiston, Suffolk, July 31, 1877.

"Sir,—I am happy to say I am quite well. I have left the Band off about a fortnight, and I can now eat almost anything and not feel the worse for it, whereas before I could eat nothing but what disagreed with me. I recommend your treatment to any one who suffers from biliousness, as I have not felt any such symptoms since wearing your belt.

"Accept my earnest thanks. I will recommend your treatment to all sufferers. Your instructions are so simple that one cannot go amiss

"Believe me, dear sir, yours faithfully,

"AUGUSTUS TITLOW.

"Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher."

N.B.—The credulity of Invalids being constantly imposed upon by certain advertisers, Mr. Pulvermacher, confident in the 30 years' curative success of his PATENT GALVANIC APPLIANCES for Self-Application, is always desirous to offer that guarantee of sincerity which the public has a right to demand. In order to anticipate doubts as to the bonâ fide nature of his numerous testimonials, published in his Pamphlet, and in the Newspapers, he gives the full names and addresses from whence they emanate. In those cases, however, where only initials and incomplete addresses are given in accordance with the wishes of the patients, Mr. Pulvermacher will be happy to furnish, on application, any desired information to authenticate the same.

FOR FURTHER TESTIMONIALS both Medical and Private, see Pamphlet, "GALVANISM, NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF IMPAIRED VITAL ENERGY," post free for three stamps.

J. L. PULVERMACHER'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT,

194, REGENT STREET, LONDON,
W. (Nearly opposite Conduit Street).

BENHAM and SONS,
WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON, W

BENHAM and SONS' VENTILATING GLOBE LIGHTS.

The following are some of the advantages of this mode of lighting:—

1. It carries off all the heat and foul air from the burner.
2. It also ventilates the apartment by removing the heated and vitiated air.
3. It introduces a constant supply of external fresh air
4. The flame is powerful, steady, and cannot be affected by draughts
5. No smoke escaping, the ceiling is not blackened.

BENHAM and SONS' SHOW ROOMS FOR CHIMNEY-PIECES

BENHAM and SONS' SHOW-ROOMS FOR FENDERS.

BENHAM and SONS' STOVES FOR DRAWING-ROOMS

BENHAM and SONS' STOVES FOR DINING-ROOMS.

BENHAM and SONS' STOVES FOR LIBRARIES.

BENHAM and SONS' STOVES FOR ENTRANCE HALLS

BENHAM and SONS' STOVES FOR BEDROOMS.

BENHAM and SONS' DOG STOVES AND DOGS.

BENHAM and SONS' CHINA TILE STOVES

BENHAM and SONS' TILE HEARTHS.

BENHAM and SONS' GERMAN PORCELAIN STOVE may be seen in operation. Keeps alight for twelve hours. Consumes only 14lb coal in twenty-four hours.—50, 52, 54, Wigmore Street, W.

BENHAM and SONS' PATENT COAL ECONOMISING GRATES. This Grate in its construction is exactly the reverse of an ordinary Register Stove; instead of being recessed in the mantel, all the heating surface stands out prominently in the room.—50, 52, 54, Wigmore Street, W.

BENHAM and SONS' PATENT SLOW COMBUSTION GRATES keep alight for several hours, and save more than half the fuel.—50, 52, 54, Wigmore Street.

BENHAM and SONS' COOKING APPARATUS.—For cooking purposes, Benham and Sons have various patented arrangements adapted to the various requirements of hotels, club houses, hospitals, asylums, prisons, workhouses, schools, colleges.—50, 52, 54, Wigmore Street.

BENHAM and SONS' KITCHEN RANGES.

BENHAM and SONS' COOKING APPARATUS

BENHAM and SONS' LAUNDRY APPARATUS

BENHAM and SONS' HEATING APPARATUS

BENHAM and SONS' HOT-WATER APPARATUS

BENHAM and SONS' STEAM-ENGINES.

BENHAM and SONS' LAUNDRY DRYING CLOSETS.

BENHAM and SONS are also prepared to undertake ENGINEERS' WORK of every description for Asylums, Workhouses, and other large establishments, comprising the following, viz.: Steam Engines and Boilers; Heating Apparatus, by means of hot water, hot air, or steam; Hot and Cold Water Tanks and Services, Pumps, &c.; Baths, Lavatories, &c., Laundries, Wash-houses, and Drying Closets; Gas-works and Gas-fittings; Hoists (or Lifts) for dinners; Coals, &c.—Wigmore Street, London, W. Factory, 66, Wigmore Street.

BENHAM and SONS' LIFTS (or HOISTS), to work by Hand or Steam, or Hydraulic Power.—Wigmore Street, W.

BENHAM and SONS' GAS-WORKS, GAS-FITTINGS, and GAS-COOKING APPARATUS.—50, 52, and 54, Wigmore Street.

BENHAM and SONS' PATENT VENTILATING KITCHENER. It requires no brickwork to fix it. It roasts, bakes, boils, and steams with one fire, and supplies a bath if required. It carries off the heat and smell of the kitchen. It can be fixed in its place in a few hours after the fireplace is cleared out and prepared for it, and by local workmen if preferred.—50, Wigmore Street.

BENHAM and SONS' PATENT COAL CELLARETTE or "Londonderry," is specially adapted for use in clubs, banking-houses, hotels, railway stations, Government offices, hospitals, steampackets, noblemen's mansions, entrance halls, &c. One Londonderry placed in a corridor or landing will supply fuel for a whole suite of rooms.—50, 52, 54, Wigmore Street

BENHAM and SONS' PLATED TEA SERVICES from £1.

BENHAM and SONS' PLATED DISH-COVERS, on Nickel, from £9 per Set.

BENHAM and SONS' PLATED DESSERT KNIVES and FORKS.

BENHAM and SONS' PLATED FISH KNIVES and FORKS

BENHAM and SONS' PLATED TEA-URNS, on Nickel, from £6 18s.

BENHAM and SONS' PLATED TEA-KETTLES, on Nickel, from £1

BENHAM and SONS' PLATED BISCUIT BOXES, from 15s.

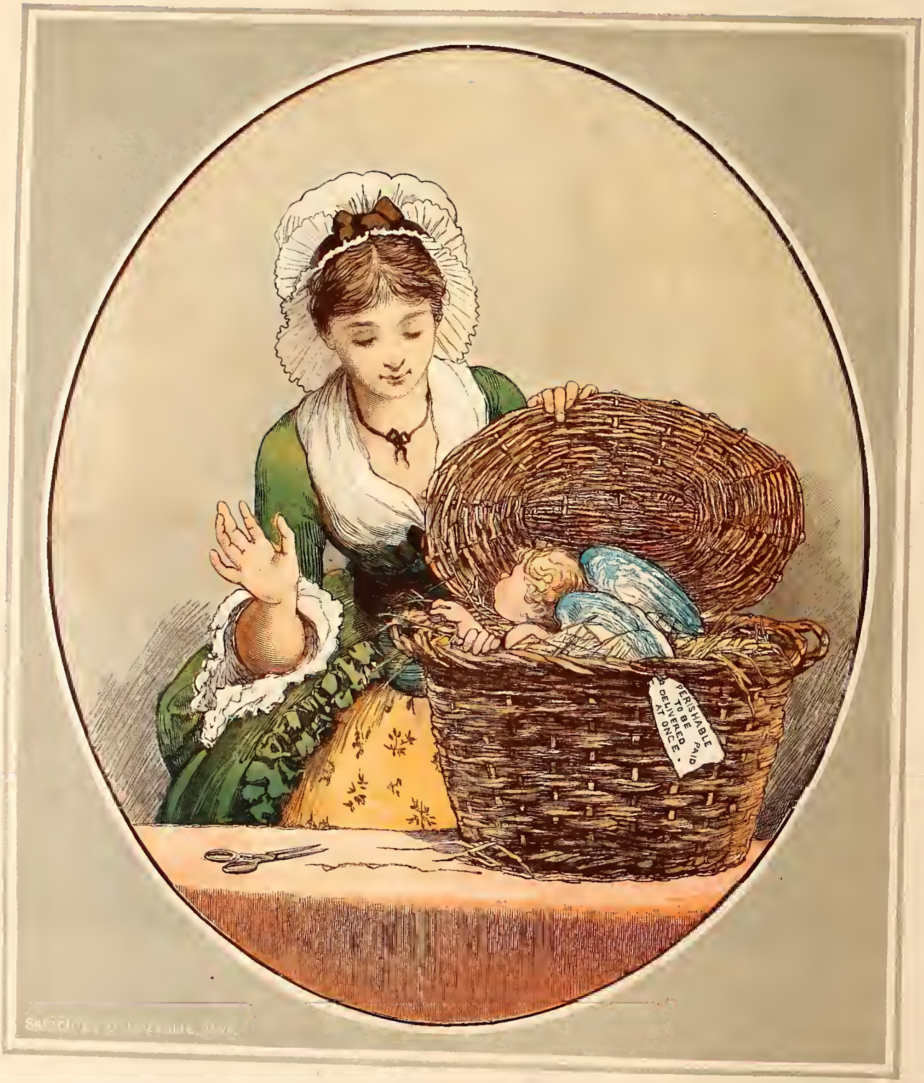
BENHAM and SONS' PLATED TRAYS and WAITERS, from 30s.

BENHAM and SONS' BRONZE TEA-URNS, from 50s.

BENHAM and SONS' BRONZE TEA-KETTLES, from 45s.

BENHAM and SONS' BATHS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION

BENHAM and SONS, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.; and at 3, Mansfield Chambers, St. Ann's Square, Manchester



A CHRISTMAS HAMPER

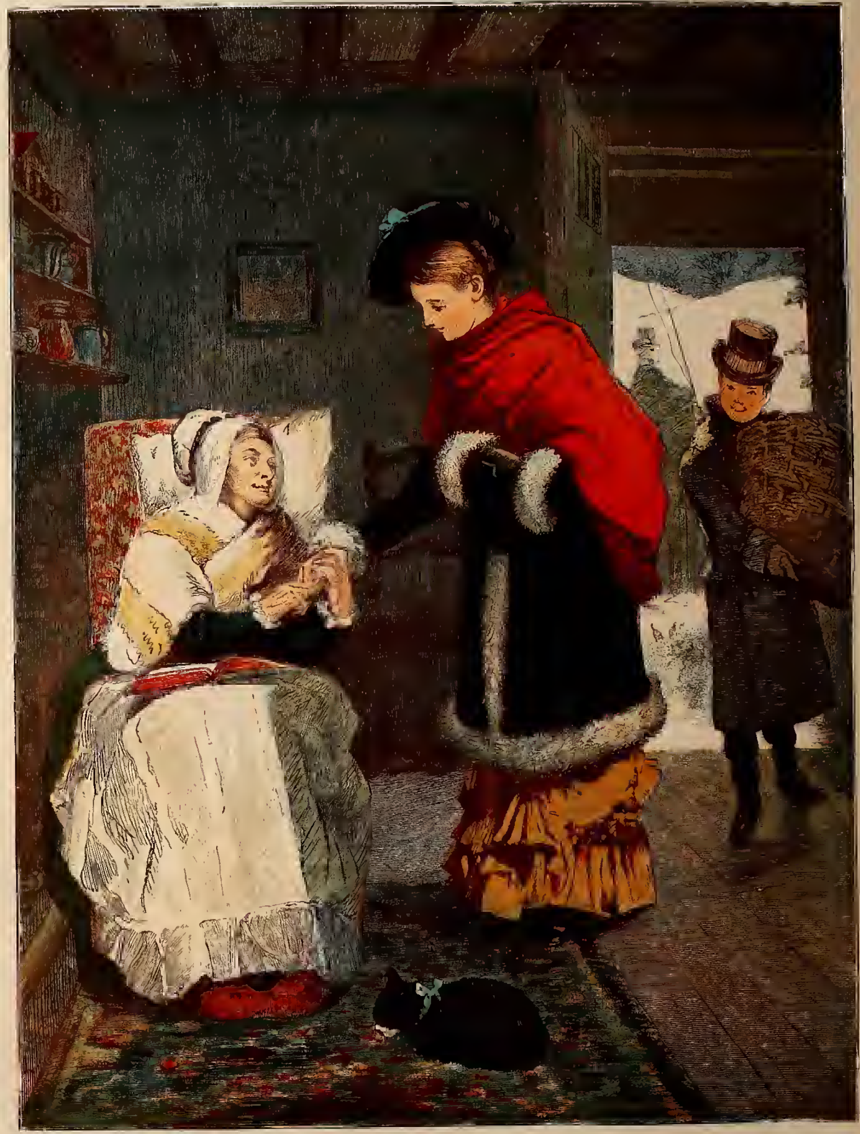
Roving about in search of sport,
Through grove and terrace, lane and court,
Dan Cupid, mischief-loving elf,
Chanced to discover on a shelf

A hamper, to a nymph directed,
Who hitherto had quite neglected
The worship due at Cupid's shrine.
"I vow," quoth Love, "she shall be mine,

In cockney rhyme my sacred fire
Shall melt the heart of sweet Maria."
He drew out partridges and pheasant,
Saying, "I'll be her Christmas present!"

Among the straw himself he hid,
While Venus kindly closed the lid,
And popped the treasure of her heart
Into a trusty carrier's cart.

Maria started when she spied
The little winged boy inside.
"You looked for game, sweet girl," cries he,
"Henceforward don't make game of me!"



A COTTAGER'S CHRISTMAS HAMPER

"None received her more gladly than old Mrs. Boscobel, who delighted in a visit from the great folks at the Castle."

(Continued from page 12)

his twitches have come on bad this last day or two, and I persuaded him to go to bed."

"Ah, there's a deal of rheumatics about at this time o' year," remarked Ephraim. "But it's an ill thing to have 'em at Christmastide."

He was in the act of lifting the tankard to his lips when I saw his face change suddenly. Following the direction of his eyes with mine, I perceived the cause in a moment. In the darkest corner of the room—a corner that the shadows seemed to love, and that the firelight hardly reached—stood an old-fashioned case clock black with age and much polishing. Leaning against the clock in an attitude of dejection stood the Figure. As yet no one had seen it but Ephraim and myself. The others were standing with their backs towards the clock busily engaged on the mince pies and plum cake. "Don't say a word, but let us get away as soon as we can," whispered Ephraim. Then he pulled himself together, and lifting the tankard to his lips he took a long deep draught. "That's real fine stingo for a night like this," he said approvingly as he passed the tankard to David Mapes. Then each of us in turn took a long deep draught, the lemon bobbing against our lips as we drank. "And now, boys, with all due thanks to Mr. Woodruff and Mr. Jim here, we mustn't stay another minute or we shan't get home till daylight."

As we were filing out with our instruments the grizzled head of old Farmer Woodruff, crowned with a long white nightcap like a huge extinguisher, was protruded over the carved oak banisters. "I couldn't let you go, my hearties, without just wishing a Merry Christmas to you all, though it is such a shivery-shakery sort o' night," said the old man.

At length we got away, and turned our noses towards Parson Newell's, Ephraim and I walking a little way behind the others. "That's just as he stood last Christmas Eve," whispered Ephraim in my ear—"leaning against the old clock case, not speaking a word to anybody, and not even drinking a drop of ale—though not above taking his glass like a man at other times. We all wondered, but didn't bother him much, knowing his strange ways."

Ephraim's prediction came true. Wherever we went that night there we found the Figure waiting for us.

"He might have know'd that Silas Grogram was ill, and have come to take his place for the sake of old times," hazarded Dicky Dodd.

"That would be all very well," said David Mapes, "if one could but hear his music, but if none of us made more noise than he makes, where would be the good of our going the rounds at all?"

We reached our last place soon after three o'clock. When we had done playing, and had shouted out the usual good wishes, Ephraim turned to us and said: "And now, my boys—for Home!"

Through the bare branches of the trees among which we were standing the night wind moaned and sighed fitfully. As in a faint whisper—a whisper, not an echo—and whence coming we could not tell, we heard breathed forth the two words, "For Home."

We all shuddered. The morning seemed suddenly to have grown colder. In the distance we heard the faint whooping of an owl.

But even as we looked, for we could not keep our eyes off it, the Figure began to fade—to fade and dissolve slowly before us. In a minute or two nothing could be seen but the dim outline of a human figure—as it were a patch of luminous haze, like the haze that rises from the meadows on autumn nights.

Suddenly through the darkness Ephraim spoke. "Farewell, old friend and companion!" he called out in low reverential tones.—And from the others came like an echo the words: "Farewell, old friend and companion!"

"May Heaven bless you wherever you are!" said Ephraim.

And, "May Heaven bless you wherever you are!" said all the rest.

But by this time the Figure was gone. Silently it had come, and silently it had vanished from among us. Where it had stood but a minute before we could now see the tree stems and an opening through the wood beyond. We turned on our heels and trudged solemnly homeward.

As each of our little band in turn drew near home he shook hands with the others, and after mutual good wishes, went his way.

At length Ephraim and I were left alone. "If you don't mind coming in with me for a minute or two, Mr. Harold," he said as we halted at his door, "I have something that I should like to show you."

Accordingly I went inside. Five minutes later he put into my hands a folded sheet of common coarse-looking note-paper. "This was found in poor Will Blisson's pocket after he was dead," said Ephraim. "Read it, Mr. Harold—read it."

This is what I read:—

"Husband,—When this comes into your hands I shall have left you for ever. I never loved you. I never even cared for you. I married you for a home, and because folk said you were a miser and had saved a heap of money. I would have stayed with you and have done my duty, only you made life too hard for me. I can stand it no longer. This night I am going away with my own true love. I knew long ago where you hid your money. I am your wife, and I have taken half of it. We shall never meet again.—Bessy."

Across this the unhappy man had written in pencil:—

"Bess, thou liest.—We shall meet again—on Judgment Day."

The Christmas Guest:

A MYTH.

BY JULIAN HAWTHORNE

They were ideal young people, and lived in a fairy farm house, in the Eldorado of lovers. Everything went happily with them; no troublesome grown-up people thwarted or annoyed them; they could be together as much as they liked, and had never in their whole lives heard of such a thing as impropriety. They had no enemies, nor so much as a single friend with conscientious ideas of duty. In spite of all this they were remarkably content with each other and with the world at large, and never did any wrong—to speak of—from week's end to week's end. For the rest, they had lived and played together ever since they could remember, had never quarrelled except to provide a pretext for a reconciliation, and she had always called him Eros, and he had always called her Psyche. They loved each other with all their hearts, and were a living refutation of the folly of those who would persuade us that pain and struggle are the necessary discipline of human beings. To see these two was enough to make one believe in the feasibility of setting up a new Garden of Eden on a durable basis.

Notwithstanding their fanciful nicknames, and exceptional surroundings and circumstances, Psyche and Eros were as thoroughly human in their thoughts and emotions as if they had lived in the most commonplace of country villages, and, although they had always been together, their temperaments were as wide asunder as the poles. Psyche was imaginative, dreamy, and sensitive to both mental and physical impressions; her gentle brown eyes would fill with tears at the lightest touch of pity or pathos, and the delicate bloom in her cheeks would fade and her girlish figure droop after but an hour's illness. Yet she was entirely wholesome and healthy both in mind and body, and though her voice was low and soft, and her manner tender and appealing, she had a strength and courage in the cause of right and truth such as a son of Anak might have envied. Eros, on the other hand, took practical views of life, and prided himself upon his solid common sense. Being now on the verge of his twenty-first birthday, he affected a manly and dogmatic tone, as of one who knew the world, and had arrived at the maturity of his judgment. He was a red-cheeked, fair-haired, blue-eyed youth, sturdy, vigorous, and jocund. Psyche loved him devotedly, and took every occasion to persuade herself that he was the wisest as well as the dearest of mankind. But she could not help suspecting sometimes that he was not always quite amenable to reason, and would feel very guilty when the conviction was occasionally forced upon her that she had taken a higher view of this or that question than he had. On the whole, however, she continued to maintain the sense of her own inferiority unimpaired, and the more inferior she felt the better was she pleased.

Now it so happened that Eros would come of age on Christmas Day; and as if the falling together of these two celebrations were not enough, it had been decided to enhance their joyfulness by the addition of a third—which was to be neither more nor less than the young people's wedding! Here, surely, was bliss enough to be crowded into one short twenty-four hours; and moreover, as Psyche observed, looking into her lover's blue eyes with the frank shyness of her own brown ones, "What Christmas Present could we make to each other so appropriate as the surrender of ourselves into each other's keeping?"

Yes, this was bliss enough even for ideal young people who lived in a fairy farm house in the Eldorado of lovers. Nevertheless—if it will believed—even this was not all! A fourth cause of rejoicing, and one to which Eros and Psyche looked forward with scarcely less delight than to their own near union, was the promised advent of an old intimate and friend of theirs, from whom they had been separated many years, but whom they had never forgotten, or ceased to reverence and love. He had been a young man when they were children, and they had looked upon him then, and did now, as a dear elder brother. He had been their confidant and adviser, the unweariable promoter and companion of their childish merrymakings, a teller of splendid stories, a man ardent, gay, sweet-tempered, wise. They had adored him as only children can adore such a friend; all his sayings were to them oracular, and all his doings superhuman. They fancied—with cause or without, it matters not—that but for him him they would not even have loved each other as they did. He had brought out the best that was in them, and inspired that best to become better. He had shown Psyche the manliness that was in Eros, and had opened the eyes of Eros to the rare loveliness of Psyche. What did they not owe to him? and since he went away, he had become transfigured in their memories.

Nine years had he been absent, a missionary among the heathen. But he had also travelled much in civilised lands, and had seen all manner of men and customs. Meantime he had written scores of delightful letters to the young friends who loved him—letters which they read and re-read scores of times, and thought more wonderful than his best stories in the old days. Throughout this long period he had never given up the purpose of seeing them again, and, if possible to part no more. But still the intended meeting had been put off; for Mortimer—such was his name—had so much work to do in illuminating darkened souls, as to leave but a distant hope of his ever being able to indulge his own personal desires. At length, however, the much wished-for opportunity had presented itself, and Mortimer was really coming. A few days before Christmas the young people received a letter from him, telling the great news. This letter was addressed to Psyche, who, as was her right, insisted upon having it all to herself, and would not allow Eros to lay a finger on it. She indeed vouchsafed to read it aloud to him, but tantalised him by pretending to reserve certain passages to herself—because, as she archly averred, they contained secrets for her private ear. Eros, as her future lord and master, was half-disposed to take umbrage at this exclusion, and, had the letter been from any other being in the wide world except Mortimer, there is no saying whether he might not actually have been jealous! But since he was debarred from jealousy, he solaced his discomfiture by putting on an air of complacent indifference, stroking his eyebrows with his forefinger, and twisting the ends of an almost imperceptible moustache. Psyche saw through his pretences, and knew that he was annoyed, and she hated to annoy him. Why, then, did she not hand him over the letter?

"I am on the point of setting sail," the letter ran, "and probably shall arrive soon after you receive this. At all events I am resolved to be with you on Christmas Eve—your marriage eve! Death alone can forestall me in that pleasure. I have said good-bye to my barbarians, who were very sorry to lose me, and fear that I shall never return to them. But I will; and I mean to bring you two (or you one, as you will be by that time) with me. Yes, my good old people; for though your home is Eldorado, mine is Paradise! Never was so beautiful a country—so tender and serene a climate—such gentle-hearted and Christian barbarians! It is a real Paradise, large enough and lovely enough to tempt all good souls to migrate thither; and I come forth into the world to find colonists, and bring them back with me. You will come, Psyche? and then I shall make sure that Eros will follow you, sooner or later!

"And so you are waiting for me to marry you? Well, I believe you are meant for each other, and I will do what I may to render your union sacred and perpetual. Not that I think mere earthly union is always the highest good for those who love. You know the old proverb; and there are lovers whose hearts never quite realise one another's worth until separation has taught it them. Do you love your old friend, who used to go nutting, boating, snow-balling, and story-telling with you, any the less because you haven't seen him for nine years? And would not you, Eros, love Psyche a thousand times better, were some chance to part you from her awhile? You have never had her out of your sight, except when your eyes were shut, and you don't half know how dear she is to you! It would do you good were I to take her with me to my Paradise, and leave you behind. Until you know what it is to be alone, and to see what you most want beyond your immediate reach,—you do not know everything! But perhaps you will be content not to know?"

All this, and much more, did Psyche read to Eros. But at the end of the letter there was a postscript, having glanced at which she looked up towards her lover with a sudden apprehension in her eyes. His own happened to be averted; and after an instant's hesitation, she folded up the letter and said, "The rest is a secret!"

"All right!" returned Eros, yawning, and getting up; "no woman can be entirely happy without a secret—every man knows that! so I'll make you a Christmas present of this one." And with that he sauntered off, his hands in his pockets.

When he was gone Psyche unfolded the letter and read the postscript again.

"I sail to-morrow," it said, "and am glad of it on more accounts than one. It is a long overland journey from my home to this port, and I did not know until I got here that a strange and fatal epidemic is wont to make its appearance in the town about this time of year. During the last few days it has broken out with great virulence, and people are dying all around me. It kills in a few hours, and gives no warning save a passing chill. Well, I have no fears; I have passed unharmed through a hundred pestilences. Still, if I should fail to sit by your fire-side next Christmas Eve, do no blame my will."

"Dear old Mort!" Psyche murmured, tears standing in her eyes. "What if he had died, just as he was on his way to meet us after all these years! I won't tell Eros—no, not even if it makes him angry. It's better he should be angry than anxious: if any one is to be anxious, let me be so. Only if Mort doesn't come on Christmas Eve—then Eros must know. But he will come, I know! and we shall all be happy."

It lacked scarcely three days to Christmas, and the house had to be arranged and decorated for the festivities. It was a house of a thousand to hold merry-makings in, and seemed really to take a genial interest in the preparations that were going forward, and to give it all the assistance that was in its power. Grey and weather-beaten without, within it was warm and home-like; square oaken beams divided the low ceilings of the rambling rooms; the deep fire-places were dusky with the smoke of ten thousand fires; the mellow old kitchen was a world in itself; and the shadowy bed-chambers, with their great four-post bedsteads, were just the place to play hide-and-seek in with ghosts and goblins. Moreover, the best of feelings prevailed between the venerable mansion and the natural and elemental surroundings amidst which it had so long existed. The forest grouped itself artistically in the background; the hill-side sloped lovingly towards it on the right; at a little distance, a clear-eyed pond smiled placid goodwill. And the rough spirits of Wind and Rain, Snow and Frost, seemed to grow soft and tractable in their sports with this time-honoured structure. "Merry Christmas!" they whispered, wept, and glistened; and the house glowed back a hearty response out of its diamond-paned lattices, and its clustered chimney breathed forth smoky satisfaction.

Meanwhile Eros and Psyche laboured with all their hearts and hands, and made the rooms green with ivy, holly, and laurel. In the parlour, beneath the cluster of mistletoe that hung from the ceiling, was arranged a little platform, with a dais, and an altar-table covered with white samite. It was here that the marriage ceremony was to take place. By mid-day of Christmas Eve all the preparations were complete, and the two lovers were sitting together in the deep bay-window, half-hidden by the ample curtains, and head-over-ears in a lovers' talk. They were big with the charming self-importance that belongs to young people in their condition. Love burned for them in the centre of all things—it illumined, warmed, and perfumed the whole world. For them the great earth turned more smoothly on her axis, and moved in a fairer orbit; the setting sun sank splendidly amidst his clouds for their sake; for their delight yonder rosy-cheeked boy ploughed his whistling way through the snow, and the sleigh-bells jingled so merrily from the distant road. If only Mortimer were there, their happiness would be complete. And now he must arrive every moment—so Eros kept saying, looking out of the window with confident expectation; but Pysche scarcely replied; her soft little hands were cold and tremulous, and the corners of her sweet lips drooped as she thought of the secret that harboured in her breast. It was the first secret she had ever had from Eros; O that it might resolve itself happily, and not—not as she now began to dread! For evening was coming on apace, and their friend had not yet come,—he did not come, though he had promised that Death only should forestall him. As minute after minute slipped by Psyche felt an almost irresistible impulse to snatch forth the letter from her bosom, where she had hidden it, and give it to her lover, that he might share and perhaps cheer her suspense. But she forbore; she was strong enough to suffer alone, and she felt, though hardly admitting it even to herself, that Eros was not so strong in that kind of strength as she. He would laugh at a blow from a fist such as would knock her senseless; but the blows of mental pain and disappointment he was but ill-fitted to endure. Thus thinking, the gentle Psyche crushed her trouble down, and even strove to forget it, or believe it unfounded and imaginary, if so she might answer her lover cheerfully, and in no way cast a shadow upon his Christmas Eve. But still that strange coldness crept at intervals through her veins, making her hands and her voice vibrate.

"Why, it's quite dark already!" exclaimed Eros at length. "Surely the man means to be here by supper time? I wonder how near he is now?"

"There may have been a delay—the snow is very deep, you know, in some places. Perhaps he won't find it possible to get here before to-morrow."

"Pooh! my dear little Psyche. You have forgotten the kind of man that our Mort is. When he says he'll do a thing, he does it—if hes alive! and in that very letter of yours, which you make such a mystery about, but which I know perfectly well has nothing in it more than you read to me,—he says in that very letter that only Death would stand in the way of his getting here to-night. And since he's a man in perfect health and in the prime of life, I don't see what doubt there can be that he'll keep his word. Only I do wish he'd told us the very hour, so that we mightn't have had this suspense to bother us!"

"Do you suppose we shall recognise his face when he comes?" asked Psyche, after a little pause.

"Recognise him? Of course we shall!" returned Eros positively, as became his masculine superiority. "He'll be considerably changed, to be sure; very likely he'll have a big black beard, and there'll be a few lines across his forehead and round his eyes; but you mustn't mind that. That sort of thing is bound to come on a man as he grows old—I'm beginning to find that out myself; and Mort—why he's nearly forty by this time!"

"How very wise he will be!" murmured Psyche, thought-

(Continued on page 20)

JOHN BRINSMEAD AND SONS'

GOLD MEDAL PIANOS.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"A perfect check, great power, and quick repetition."—Times of India.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"Produces a better quality of tone, greater durability, perfect repetition, with a check never before attained, with a certainty of the instrument never blocking."—Land and Water.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"The softest touch is sufficient to secure a reply, the touch and facility of repetition are really perfect."—Belgravia.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"The advantages fully justify the term 'Perfect' Check Repeater Action."—John Bull.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"The touch is very sure, light, and elastic."—Musical Times.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"This invention is simplicity itself."—The Queen.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"The latest and greatest improvements in the Pianoforte."—City Press.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"Every means are adopted to ensure the production of perfect instruments."—The Orchestra.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS, with the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action. On the Three Years' System.

The Standard. { "Receives the greatest approbation everywhere of musicians and manufacturers."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS, with the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action. On the Three Years' System.

The Engineer. { "Greater volumes and richness of tone are produced with increased durability."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT PERFECT CHECK REPEATER ACTION Pianofortes, of every description, manufactured expressly for India and extreme climates.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action,
May be obtained of every Musicseller.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action,
From 33 to 330 Guineas.

GILBERT L. BAUER'S PRIZE
MEDAL DRAWING-ROOM ORGANS.
Prices from 8 to 300 guineas, or the Three Years' System.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PIANOFORTES,
GUARANTEED FOR FIVE YEARS.
Illustrated Price Lists and Descriptions, with Opinions of the London Press and musical profession, forwarded post free upon application.
18, Wigmore Street, London, W.

Manufactory:
The Brinsmead Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action
PIANOFORTES,
of every description, manufactured expressly for India and extreme climates.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.
May be obtained at all the principal Music Warehouses.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
From 33 to 330 Guineas.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOFORTES.
GUARANTEED FOR FIVE YEARS.
Illustrated Price Lists and Descriptions, with Opinions of the London Press and musical profession, forwarded post free upon application.
18, Wigmore Street, London, W.

Manufactory:
The Brinsmead Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action, with the new Iron Grand Construction, full Trichord, and the Sostenente Sounding Board.
Prices from 60 guineas to 94 guineas.

18, Wigmore Street, London, W., and the Brinsmead Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.
Illustrated Price Lists forwarded upon application.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL
BICHORD PICCOLO PIANOS.
For the Schoolroom.
Prices from 33 to 40 guineas.

18, Wigmore Street, London, W., and the Brinsmead Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.
Illustrated Price Lists forwarded upon application.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL
BICHORD PICCOLO PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action,
Manufactured expressly for School use.
Prices from 43 guineas to 50 guineas.

18, Wigmore Street, London, W., and the Brinsmead Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.
Illustrated Price Lists forwarded upon application.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL
SEMI-COTTAGE PIANOS,
With the Escapement Action, Sub-metal Bridge, Iron Tubular Compensating Supports, &c.
Prices from 42 guineas to 84 guineas.

18, Wigmore Street, W., and the Brinsmead Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.
Illustrated Price Lists forwarded upon application.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL
SEMI-COTTAGE PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action,
Prices from 52 guineas to 84 guineas.

18, Wigmore Street, W., and the Brinsmead Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL
BOUDOIR GRAND PIANOFORTES,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action, complete Metal Frame, Sostenente Sounding Board, &c.
Prices from 105 guineas to 115 guineas.

18, Wigmore Street, London, W., and the Brinsmead Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.
Illustrated Price Lists forwarded upon application.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL
DRAWING-ROOM GRAND PIANOFORTES,
With the Sostenente Sounding Board complete, Metal Framing, &c.
Prices from 180 guineas to 210 guineas.

18, Wigmore Street, London, W., and the Brinsmead Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.
Illustrated Price Lists forwarded upon application.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL
CONCERT GRAND PIANOFORTES,
With the Sostenente Sounding Board, Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action, &c.
Prices from 180 guineas to 210 guineas.

18, Wigmore Street, London, W., and the Brinsmead Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.
Illustrated Price Lists forwarded upon application.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL
CONCERT GRAND PIANOFORTES
Of the most costly construction, in handsomely carved or inlaid Cases, with Metal Frames, Harmonic Bars, Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action, and all the Latest Improvements, three strings or unisons, &c.
Prices from 200 guineas to 350 guineas.

18, Wigmore Street, London, W., and the Brinsmead Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.
Illustrated Price Lists forwarded upon application.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

2, Manchester Square.

I have examined Messrs. Brinsmead and Sons' New Check Action as applied to their Pianos, and consider it a most ingenious and valuable invention, which cannot fail to meet with success.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

45, Blandford Square, N.W.

I have much pleasure in testifying to the great excellence of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons' Pianofortes. Their "Perfect Check Repeater" produces a touch that is absolute perfection, and which is unsurpassed by any other maker, native or foreign.

SYDNEY SMITH.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

6, St. Mary Abbot's Terrace, Kensington, W.

To Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons.

I have much pleasure in testifying to the efficiency of Messrs. Brinsmead and Sons' New Patent Check-Action (for Pianofortes), which I consider a very clever and useful invention, and likely to be extensively adopted.

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

Bognor, Sussex.

The touch and tone of the Pianofortes manufactured by John Brinsmead and Sons are alike admirable, and having thoroughly examined their instruments, I have much pleasure in highly recommending them. In the present day there is so much imposition practised upon the musical public that the purchase of a Pianoforte that will give permanent satisfaction is a very important matter.

Dr. T. LLOYD FOWLE, M.A.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

8, Lower Rock Gardens, Brighton.

Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons.

Gentlemen,—It gives me the greatest pleasure to state that I consider the instrument manufactured by you to be most excellent in tone, touch, and quality of material. I particularly admire your Pianos with the Patent Check Repeater Action and new Grand Construction, being a wonderful improvement upon the old system. In my opinion your firm having been successful in creating as good a touch to the Cottage Pianoforte as that usually accorded to the Grand. All those I have chosen have given the greatest satisfaction to the purchasers.

I am, gentlemen, yours very truly,

W. KUHE.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

I have great pleasure in certifying to the fine, rich, and powerful tone of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons' Pianos, also to the great improvements they have succeeded in attaining.

As a Professor of the Harp, I can safely add that the mellow tones of their Short Iron Gold Medal Grands blend charmingly with the instrument I profess, and form a delicious ensemble.

FREDERICK CHATTERTON,
Harpist to the Queen.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

The Close, Hereford.

Dear Sirs,—Your Patent Action is one of the best I have met with. This combined with the equal tone of your instruments must commend them to those desiring a first-class Pianoforte at a reasonable price.

Yours faithfully,
G. TOWNSHEND SMITH,
Organist of Hereford Cathedral, and Director of the Hereford Festival.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD-MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

To Messrs. J. Brinsmead and Sons, 18, Wigmore Street, W.

Gentlemen,—I have much pleasure in testifying to the excellence of your upright and horizontal Grand Pianofortes, as they are simply perfect in touch and tone.

FREDERIC GUILLAUME,
Chevalier de Liguoro,
Examiner-General of the Ancient Bourbonnie Society in the Royal Academy of Fine Arts at Naples, Honorary Member of the Musical Academies at Rome, Venice, &c., formerly Director-General of all Military Music for both Infantry and Cavalry of the Line in the Army of the Two Sicilies.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"Milan.

"To Messrs. J. Brinsmead and Sons,

"Dear sirs—It gives me the greatest pleasure, I can assure you, in recommending your truly excellent Pianos; and without hesitation, I pronounce them superior to any other pianofortes for their exquisite tone and brilliancy. And as to the improved Check Action, it is the only improvement that could have been thought of to complete its supremacy over all other manufacturers. With the assurance of this great success for your instruments, I am, yours respectfully,

"BARON CARLO MORA."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"I find Messrs. Brinsmead's pianofortes wonderfully improved by their new mechanism. Their durability I have tested for 25 years, and in this respect am sure they cannot be surpassed.

"CH. MANGOLD."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"Having used Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons' Pianos for many years, I can strongly recommend them for their noble and sympathetic tone, as well as for their organ-like and delicious singing quality.

"The touch of these instruments is absolute perfection.

"W. C. LEVEY."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

The following eminent musical authorities (the most celebrated throughout Europe and America) have also unanimously certified to the superiority of JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS' PIANOFORTES by awarding them the highest honours:

Sir WM. STERNDALE BENNETT, Mus. D., late Professor University Cambridge.
Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.
The Rev. Sir FREDK. GORE OUSELEY, Professor of Music, University of Oxford.
Rt. Hon. Sir GEO. CLERK, F.R.S., Chairman, Edinburgh; Chairman R.A.M.
Dr. J. R. BLACK, U.S.A.
Rt. Hon. the Earl of WILTON, G.C.H.
Lord GERALD FITZGERALD.
Hon. SEYMOUR EGERTON.
M. FETIS, late Director of the Royal Conservatory of Music, Belgium.
Professor M. LISAJOUS, of the Lyceum of St. Louis.
Herr ERNST PAUER, Professor R.A.M.
WM. POLE, Mus. B., F.R.S., Professor University of London.
Dr. HENRY WYLDE, Director of the London Academy of Music.
M. AMBROISE THOMAS, Membre de l'Institut, Professor du Conservatoire Imperial de Musique.
M. KASTNER, Membre de l'Institut.
M. GAVANT.
Herr E. HANSLICK, Docteur Professor de l'Histoire de la Musique à la Université de Vienna.
FREDERIC CLAY, Esq., Musical Director to H.M. Government.
Baron DE WATTEVILLE, Paris.
Baron DONALD MACKAY, The Hague.
P. L. SIMMONDS, Esq.
Herr C. N. DAVID, Copenhagen.
M. J. MARTELET, Paris.
Dr. MOLTON, The Hague.
Marquis D'ANDELARRE, President of the National Academy, Paris.
M. DETRUCHE.
Professor J. HENRY, LL.D., U.S.A.
Professor BARNARD, LL.D., U.S.A.
Professor J. E. HILGARD, U.S.A.
Professor J. C. WATSON, U.S.A.
General H. K. OLIVER, U.S.A.
GEORGE F. BRISTOW, Esq.
Sir WM. THOMSON, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S.
M. E. LEVASSEUR, Paris.
Herr P. F. KUPHA, Vienna.
M. EDWD. FAVRE PERROT, Zurich.
M. G. AYMAR BRESSION, Directeur-Général of the National Academy, Paris.
Vicomte OCTAVE DE BARRAL.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOFORTES were awarded

The Grand Medal of Honour and Diploma of Merit, Philadelphia, 1876.
The Gold Medal, Paris, 1870.
The Highest Award, the Grand Diploma of Honour, Paris, 1874.
La Medaille d'Honneur, Paris, 1870.
The Prize Medal, London, 1862.
Le Diplome de la Mention Extraordinaire, Netherlands International Exhibition, 1869.
The Gold Medal and Diploma of Honour, South Africa, 1877.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT
PERFECT CHECK REPEATER ACTION PIANOS.
Patented 1862, 1868, 1871, and 1875, in

GREAT BRITAIN,	ITALY,
PRUSSIA,	BELGIUM,
FRANCE,	and
AUSTRIA,	AMERICA.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD-MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

The effect which "the Perfect Check Repeater Action," patented by Messrs. Brinsmead, produces on the touch, is everything that can be desired by an artist. It appears to me the most important invention of modern times, both for freedom of execution and expression.

I have equal pleasure in referring to Messrs. Brinsmead's New Metal-Back Pianofortes, which, as regards durability, richness, brilliancy, equality and contrast of tone, by far surpass Pianofortes of the ordinary construction at a much higher price.

I will not fail to draw the attention of Her Royal Highness the Princess Christian, of Schleswig-Holstein, to these inventions the next opportunity which may present itself.

CHARLES JOHN HERMAN KEEBLEIN,
Conductor of the Philharmonic Society,
Capetown, Africa.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS,
Six feet six inches in length, with the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action. Price 95 to 115 Guineas.

"The tone of the Grand now referred to possessed all the qualities that a good piano ought to have, and in touch and action was perfect. The sweet and silvery quality of the upper octaves was worthy of special admiration."—The Era.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL IRON GRAND PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"Sir Julius Benedict played his well-known composition, 'Where the Bee Sucks,' on one of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons' grand pianos, with the recently-patented improvements, which enabled him to produce the sustained tones with great variety of effect in the light and shade of tones, especially so when extreme delicacy of touch is required."—Court Journal.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"Magnificent, grand, the air telling out with almost vocal clearness and sweetness to the bell-like treble arpeggio accompaniment, which contrasted excellently with the extraordinary power produced in the forte passages."—Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"An immense improvement in arpeggios. The rapid passages in the upper register, the beautiful flute-like tone, and quick and perfect repetition, were very effective."—Figaro.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
CONCERT IRON GRAND PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"Sir Julius Benedict, now seldom heard as a soloist, delighted the public once more by his arrangement of 'Where the Bee Sucks.' He played upon a new patent grand by Brinsmead, possessing a remarkably loud and clear tone."—Era.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"The upright iron grand piano, with sostenente sounding-board, produces the obvious result of a fuller and richer tone."—Morning Advertiser.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS,
With the Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action.

"Where all the pianos go to seems somewhat of a mystery, for a really good instrument will last a lifetime; and yet every year thousands are made by each of the great London manufacturers, while the numbers made by the 200 or more smaller firms must represent an enormous number in the course of each year. The improvements made in English pianos have caused this trade rapidly to increase, until one pianoforte manufactory after another has been built to supply the growing demand. One of the largest of these, lately erected by Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons, of Wigmore Street, covers nearly an acre of ground in the Grafton Road, Kentish Town, and is intended to accommodate 200 workmen. These works alone can supply 3,000 pianos annually."—Illustrated London News.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS
With Patent Perfect Check Repeater Action,
For India and extreme climates.
From £5 6s. to £13 per quarter.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
Improved Bichord Piccolos.
From £3 3s. 6d. to £4 16s. 6d. per quarter.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS,
Trichord Semi-Cottages,
With Iron Tubular Compensating Supports,
From £4 1s. to £7 10s. 6d. per quarter.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS.
Trichord Boudoir Extended end Piccolos.
From £6 11s. to £7 18s. per quarter.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS.
Ebonised and Gold Semi-Cottages,
With Iron Tubular Compensating Supports, &c.
From £7 6s. 6d. to £8 2s. per quarter.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS.
New metal frame (Grand construction), metal bridge, and sostenente sounding board, to any class piano from Class 5 upwards, 20s. per quarter extra.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
GOLD MEDAL PIANOS.
Descriptive Lists and Illustrated Catalogue will be forwarded, post free, on application to

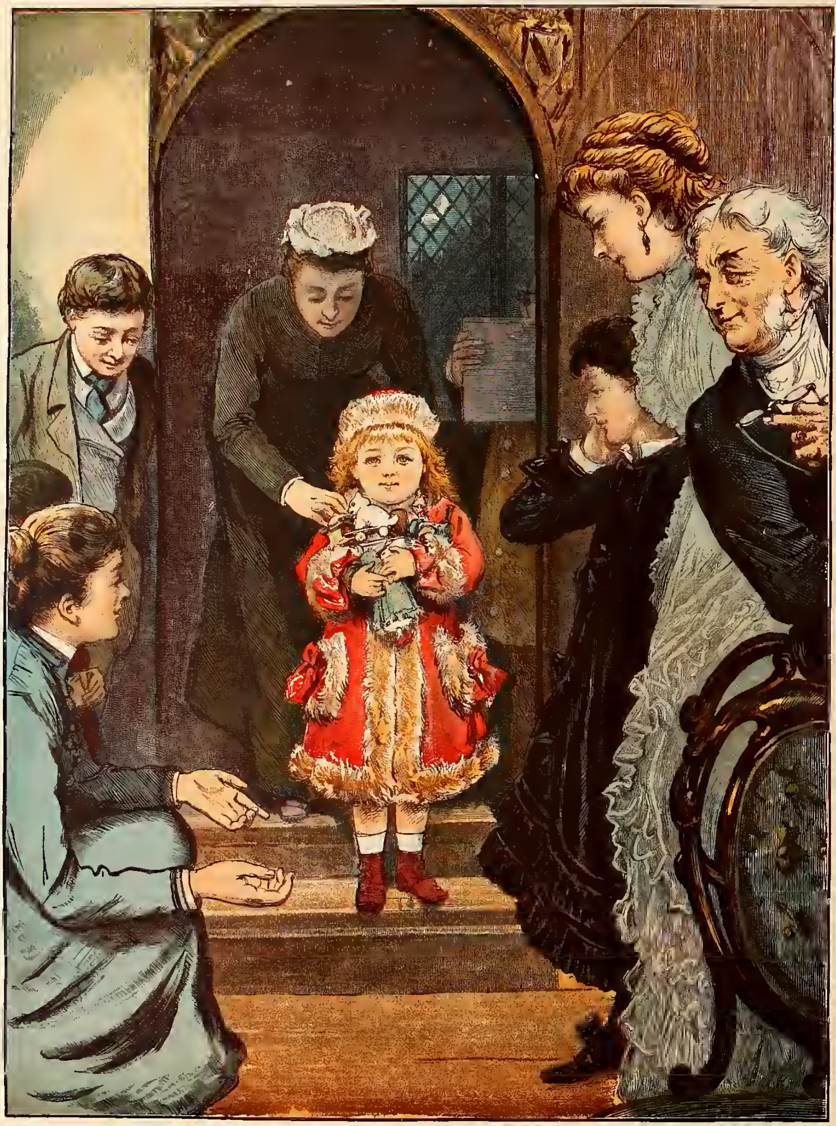
JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS,
18, Wigmore Street, London, W., and the Brinsmead Pianoforte Works, Grafton Road, Kentish Town, N.W.

JOHN BRINSMEAD AND SONS,

PIANOFORTE MANUFACTURERS,

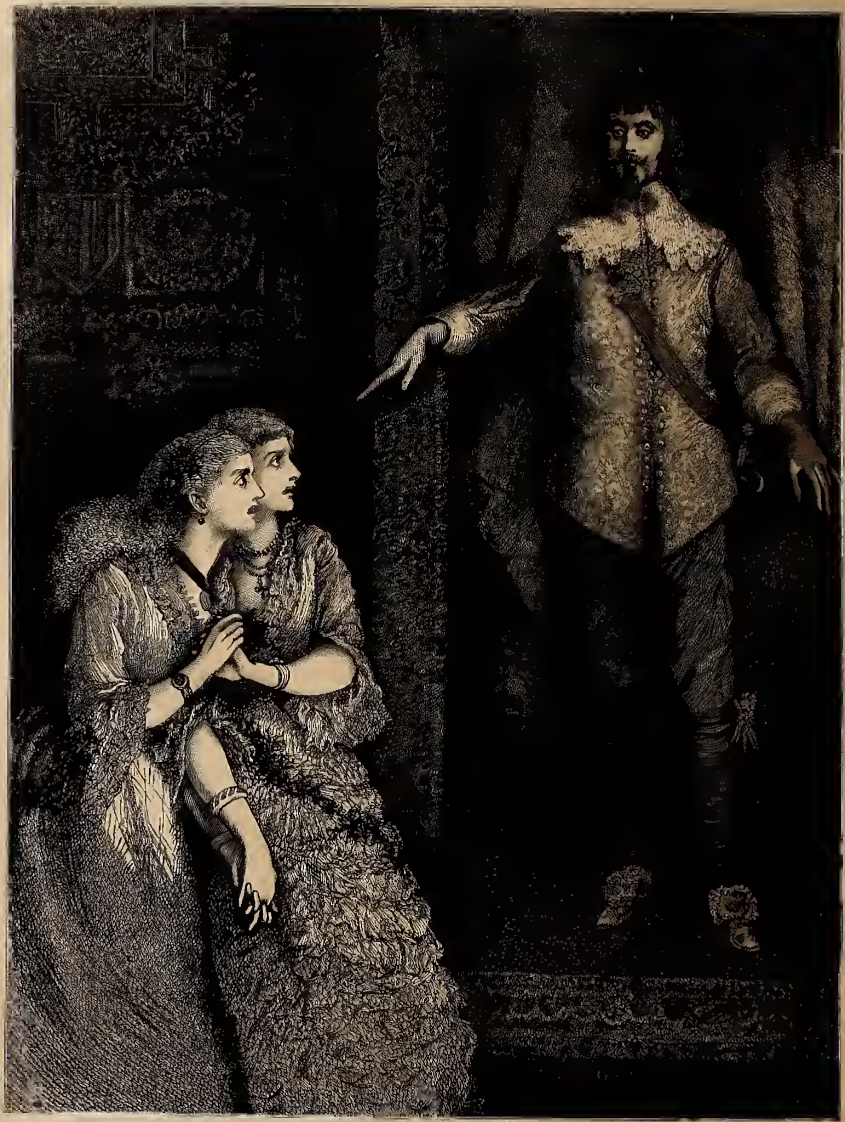
18, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W.

MANUFACTORY: THE BRINSMEAD PIANOFORTE WORKS, GRAFTON ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, N.W.



LILIAN'S BIRTHDAY PRESENTS

"It was a pretty sight to see her arrive, her face grave with excess of joy, and her little arms laden with gifts."



ANCESTOR RALPH

"Both of the girls distinctly saw the right hand of the portrait move out of the canvas!"

(Continued from page 16)

fully. "He was the wisest person in the world before he went away: we shall be almost afraid of him, now!"

"Well, as to that," said Eros, rubbing his downy upper lip and smiling, "as to that, my dear Psyche, you must speak for yourself. Undoubtedly, Mort—the dear old fellow—has an immense deal of information, and plenty of good sense to back it (which is more than always happens, I can assure you). But when a man reaches his majority, and is on the point of becoming a family man into the bargain (give me another, dear!) . . what was I going to say? Oh! well, I don't think I shall be much afraid of him, or of anybody else, that's all."

"Eros," whispered Psyche, feeling his strong young arm round her, and his hand on hers, "should you be willing to have him take us back with him to his Paradise, as he speaks of doing in the letter?"

"Well, my dear, that must depend a great deal upon circumstances. I shall talk with Mort, and see what he has to say about his place. We mustn't forget that we're very well situated as we are, and ought not to move unless we're pretty certain of bettering ourselves. The sort of society he speaks of might not suit us, you know; we're not missionaries, and don't care about barbarians as such. Mort, wise as he is, hasn't much practical sense in some ways; not so much as——some men I know! He's all for the loftiest and most ideal thing possible, without reflecting whether or not it's inconvenient or uncomfortable too. In short, unless his Paradise turns out to be a finer place than I think it will, I shall feel inclined to keep hold on what we have. Besides, Pysche, any place that you are in will be Paradise to me!"

This compliment fairly merited the reward which Eros immediately claimed and took for it, and which, by its deliciously potent effect upon both giver and receiver, made speech seem impertinent for a time. Psyche sat gazing out across the darkened snow with her tender brown eyes, and Eros looked fondly on her, thinking that he loved her more than anything in the world, and that life would be a blank without her. Surely, were she to be taken from him, all his light and warmth would depart along with her. That passage in Mortimer's letter which suggested that it might be well sometimes for lovers to be parted had received his unqualified, though unuttered, disapproval. Why should such a thing have been written? Often, since Psyche had read it to him, Eros had resolved to dismiss the idea from his mind; but such is the perversity of human minds that the idea remained in spite of him. It made him feel now and then really almost uneasy. The feeling, of course, was a morbid one; common sense and wholesome reason forbade him to entertain it. Had he no more confidence in Providence than to believe that it would take his Psyche from him—his Psyche, who had grown up with him from infancy? Would the good God be so cruel as to deprive him—and at this moment of all others—of the companionship of her whom he so loved? But the misgiving was unworthy of him: if he could not forget it, why, then he would face it, and face it down!

He bent towards Psyche, and discovered, by some method known to lovers, that her eyes were wet with tears. When Love is in supreme command, the soul is more tenderly alive to various influences, and hence more prone to sadness of a certain tender kind, than at any other epoch of life. But Eros had never understood Psyche's constitutional tendency to melancholy, and just now he found it especially inopportune.

"What makes you unhappy?" he exclaimed. "Aren't we together, and haven't we everything we want? And ought not this evening to be the most joyful we ever yet spent?"

She leaned her head on his shoulder, hiding a sigh. "I was wondering, dear," she said, "whether, when we go to the real Paradise, we shall meet and know each other there as we do now. Do you believe we shall?"

There were few problems too profound for the plummet of Eros's common sense to sound them. "Certainly we shall, my dear!" be answered emphatically. "What put such a question into your head?"

"But shall you love me then? And shall I be your own wife there, Eros, as I am to be here?"

"I really don't see the use, my dear little Psyche, of bothering our heads with such gratuitous puzzles as that. There's quite enough to attend to in this life, without trying to guess what may happen to us in the next. For my part it's enough to know that we love each other in the body, and are to be husband and wife here in this farmhouse. There'll be time enough to speculate about other states when we are in them."

"Ah, but Eros," said she, lifting her gentle face from his shoulder and looking in his eyes, "suppose that I were to die to night—this very night, before our wedding! Could you be content to wait—could you rest satisfied with the love that we have already loved in this world, and with the knowledge that I was still loving you in Paradise, and would be yours when you came there?"

Eros felt an impulse of impatience, which he repressed so far as not to give it words; but it turned his face away. Those theories of delicate tissue and transcendental application, which Psyche was given to entertaining, irritated and silenced him. He loved Psyche, as an honest man should love a woman—better than any other man ever loved a woman, he thought; and what more could be expected of him? Besides, was it not being ungrateful for the blessings in their possession, to be borrowing trouble from an improbable or unimaginable condition of things to come? It was really too bad, thought Eros, and he turned his face away and looked down the avenue, leaving Psyche unanswered.

It would have been quite dark now but for the whiteness of the snow. The wind was rising, and the window seat was getting chilly, and Psyche's hand, which still lay in his own, was cold as ice, and she herself seemed to shiver. The blinds must be closed, and they would go back to the fire, for Mortimer might not come till midnight, for all they knew. Stay!—what was that shadow moving this way up the avenue? Was it——

"Psyche! Psyche! look!" cried Eros, starting to his feet in joyous excitement. "That must be—isn't it?—yes, it must be Mortimer—it is our dear old Mort!"

"Oh, Eros, I believe it is!" she answered, peering tremulously through the darkness. "I can't see clearly; I had a vision of Death—that Death was coming instead of him!"

"Death, indeed!" exclaimed Eros with a laugh. "Let this be a lesson to you, my dear, not to indulge in silly fancies again. But come on! We must receive the dear fellow at the door."

He ran into the hall, Psyche following, and flung wide the heavy portal. A gust of icy wind burst in, as though it had been lying in wait for them on the threshold; and Psyche seemed to shrink away before it, and Eros himself could scarce repress a shiver. But they pressed forward again, and gazed out earnestly on the night. Yes, there could be no doubt about it now. There came their friend, he who was most honoured and trusted by them both, yet who, for nearly half their lives, had been a stranger to them—there he came, striding swiftly towards them across the snow. Only a dark, lofty shape he seemed; but the step, the bearing, were unmistakeable; they were Mortimer's own. By a simultaneous impulse the two young lovers threw one arm around each other, and extended the other to the advancing form. They could not cry out in welcome; was it their great joy that silenced them? for joy will sometimes bind the faculties like awe. It was very dark, and neither had remembered to bring a light. Almost before they were aware of it their strange friend was standing close in front of them. How icy cold was the wind!

In moments of high feeling and excitement we do and say things as in a dream, and afterwards hardly remember how we acted. So was it now with Eros and his Psyche. Did Mortimer take Eros's hand in a grasp as soft and cold as snow? Did he kiss Psyche's forehead with lips that sent a happy shudder to her heart? Did he speak to them in mellow, loving tones that sounded at once strange and familiar? And did they answer him? Or was it all a dream? Be that as it may, the spell soon passed off, and they found themselves in clear possession of their several senses once more. The long-expected guest had crossed their threshold, and thrown aside his heavy cloak, and removed the soft fur cap from his black hair, and, Eros leading the way, the three friends had entered the warm, firelit parlour.

"Sit down, all of us!" cried the host, rubbing his hands together. "Draw up to the fire, and get warm, if you can. My stars, what a night! Psyche, you look as if you'd been kissed by an icicle; and you, Mort—you are as cold as Death!"

They sat down round the broad hearth, the guest between the lovers; and as the firelight flickered over them, so flickered and fell and rose again their conversation. It often happens that, when we anticipate saying most, we find the least to say; and somewhat thus did it fall out in the present instance; or, perhaps, because in a meeting like this, however thoroughly foreshadowed and anticipated, there is apt to be a good deal of strangeness and unexpected diffidence to be overcome—perhaps it was for this reason that speech flowed but intermittently for a while. Nevertheless the lovers could feel that they were every moment growing more and more into sympathy and understanding with their new old friend, and doing so even more speedily and completely than might have been possible through the uncertain medium of words. He diffused around him, without effort, and apparently without being conscious of it, a gentle and winning influence which was fairly irresistible; so that by and by Psyche and Eros fancied that never before had they known him so well as now. At the same time, however, Psyche was inwardly aware of a great, yet indescribable, change from that Mortimer who had bidden her farewell nine years before. The principle, the genius of the man remained; but it existed now within the sphere of such a mighty and grand personality as transcended all she had previously known or conceived. It was as if some beneficent angel had stooped from Heaven to visit them, and, lest his celestial splendour should overwhelm them, had assumed the guise and tone of that human being in whom they felt the most affectionate trust. Through his manner and aspect, and the low resounding melody of his utterance, she seemed to catch glimpses of a power and wisdom almost superhuman; but blended with a deep kindliness and charity, and a sublimity of nature that were more human than humanity itself. She looked up to him, not in fear, but with a loving, familiar kind of reverence; and would have confided to him the choicest secrets of her heart.

The influence that he exercised was not of that kind which belongs to superior age. There was in him all the fire and vigour of unquenchable youth. His lofty figure was as alert and lightsome as it was majestic. His manner was instinct with gentle sprightliness and playfulness, and it was impossible not to feel cheery and hopeful in his company. The curve of his lips, and ever and anon the sudden kindling in his eyes, betrayed the fiery soul within; yet in everything that he said or did were visible the traces of a serene and absolute self-control.

"We are glad you came in time," observed Eros at last. "We should never have got married, I believe, if you had not been here to tie the knot."

"At least," added Psyche, in her clear, subdued voice, "you will make it seem more beautiful and indissoluble, and give it a deeper significance, than any one else could have done. Yes, I am glad you came in time. Do you know, Eros, I did not think Mortimer would come at all? That passage in the letter that I did not read you spoke of a strange pestilence—and immediately it came into my mind that Mortimer was dead. And even now," she continued, turning to the guest, and half-timidly meeting his strong unfathomable eyes with her own, "even now, though I see you here between us, I cannot feel as if our Mortimer were in this world. Are you really he? or a messenger come to tell us that he is gone?"

"I am alive—am I not?" answered the guest, with a particularly radiant smile; "and if I am, then your Mortimer is also. As to my getting here at the right time, I am always sure to do that; it would be a sad business, indeed, if I were not! But are you both certain that you are glad to have me here?"

"It would not be merry Christmas if you were not!" exclaimed Eros, heartily.

"I am not always so well received," the other resumed. "I have been in all sorts of places, and have met all sorts of people, and almost all have called me abrupt and unceremonious. But then, not many know me for what I really am."

"I think I know you," said Psyche, after a pause, "and I cannot imagine myself so happy that your coming would not make me happier."

"You need not fear to know me, Psyche," returned the guest, with grave gentleness; "and really I am not so unsympathetic as I must often seem. But I have a task in the world which brings me less credit in the performance than in the after result. Mankind, you know, Eros, are not always wise and far-sighted enough to recognise at the moment what is most for their good in the long run."

"Yes, I know that; but for my part I think I can tell what I need more quickly and surely than most people. For instance—that Psyche must be my wife, and that you must make her so!"

"You rate my powers too high," rejoined their friend, smiling again. "God only can make a man and woman one."

"Oh, I don't trouble myself with such fine-drawn distinctions. If you pronounce the service over us, I will take the rest for granted. As I was telling Psyche the other day, it's not worth while looking beyond this world. If she is mine here, I'll risk our getting separated hereafter."

"Hereafter may not be far off," said the guest, more gravely than he had yet spoken. "You were best not to leave it out of the account."

"Death is my enemy—I can see no good in him!" declared Eros; "and I will do the best I can to have my happiness in spite of him."

"He doesn't mean it!" exclaimed Psyche to their friend, in a low, appealing tone. "He knows that only Death can make Love immortal."

"I must tell you," observed the guest after a pause, "that I cannot stay here long; I shall be gone to-night. What I came to do, therefore, must be done soon."

"To-night!" cried Eros, in astonishment that was half-incredulous. Psyche said nothing, but hid her face in her hands and shivered a little.

"I wished to make you happy—happier than you have ever been—if you would let me," resumed the previous speaker. "Whoever has lofty beliefs will have a lofty fate. If your idea of marriage is high enough you will not hesitate to come with me to my Paradise. How is it with you, Eros?"

"Not yet!" replied Eros, laughing and shaking his head. "It's too far off, and the journey is too cold. If you are really determined to leave us, you must go without me. Surely you can't expect me to be ready to start at such short notice. No, no! I mean to stay by this comfortable fireside for a long time yet, and so shall Psyche!"

"Death has summoned men on shorter notice than this," said the other. "Think again before you decide."

"I have decided—and I never change my mind!" said Eros, obstinately.

And truly his preference was not an unnatural one. The old parlour presented a most attractive aspect. The great log which had been burning on the broad hearth had now fallen into glowing fragments, over which small yellow and bluish flames danced intermittently. Everything was warm, homelike, and familiar. Out of doors the stars shone crisp and white, and the snow glistened pure as a maiden's soul. But ah! it was so terribly cold; the beauty of the prospect could be enjoyed much better from the genial vantage-ground of the hearthstone.

"If that is your decision, you must abide by it," said the guest, and something in the words, and in the manner they were uttered, awed Eros for a moment. Then, turning to Psyche, he continued, "But even your Eros cannot choose for you. What is your preference? Are you, too, willing to postpone Paradise for the fireside!"

Psyche was naturally more imaginative than most young girls, and possibly there was something in the shadowy mystery of the hour, and in her own physical and mental condition, that wrought upon her mood. A creeping languor and a chill which the heat of the embers could not counteract were gaining possession of her, and filling her brain with weird fancies. Insensibly, he who sat beside her, and whose icy lips she had felt upon her brow, had become clothed to her apprehension with an unearthly, superhuman personality. No man was he, but an angel of tender and mighty sway, stooping from heaven on the eve of Christmas, to hold high argument with two mortal lovers on those questions which most nearly concerned their welfare. As she spoke her voice sounded faint and ethereal, while her eyes sought to penetrate the shadow which had fallen over the face of Eros.

"It is pleasant here," she said; "yet if, in Paradise, our union may be eternal and secure, it is surely better to be there."

"You will meet Eros where we are going," returned the strange friend, gently, taking her hand in his own. "If not this Eros whom you have known here, then another and a worthier one than he."

"Oh, not another!" whispered Psyche, entreatingly; "it must be this Eros—my own dear Eros whom I have always loved! I have lived with him, and our hearts are grown together. He is better and nobler than he seems."

"It is not for me to decide," was the answer. "But do you speak to him, Psyche. If he loves you, he will lay your words to heart."

Psyche rose from her chair, and, stepping somewhat feebly, crossed to where Eros sat, and stood before him, her hands clasped. The room had become more dusky, so that the three figures appeared rather like shadows than beings of flesh and blood. For a moment or two there was silence, and only Psyche's beseeching attitude seemed to speak.

"Eros," she said at length, "I feel that I must go—I must go with this friend of ours. Do you know him, Eros? He is your friend as well as mine. You might have gone with us; but that was not to be. We shall not know marriage here, and we shall seem to be separated for a time. But if your love for me has been as great as mine for you, the memory of it, and the faith in what is to come, will heal the worst of the parting. O my love! say it shall be so!"

"You are crazy—both of you!" cried Eros, wrestling with the fear that beset him, and striving to speak in an assured and masterful tone. "What has Mortimer to do with you, Psyche? You are mine, and whoever pretends to take you from me is my enemy!"

"Eros—Eros!" exclaimed the girl, with passionate earnestness, "it is you who are crazy, my poor darling. Mortimer is dead; and the letter which he wrote—the letter that I alone read and touched—had in it the contagion of the pestilence. It was the message of my death; and now my Death has come!"

"Death shall not have you!" cried Eros, starting to his feet; and such was the vehemence of his rebellious anger that he felt ready to defy even Omnipotence. "What have I done that I should lose you? I have loved you truly and faithfully—why should not my love have its rightful fulfilment? It shall not go for naught and end in dust and ashes! As for this future you talk about, what is it? a misty possibility—an indefinite surmise—nothing! I say it is unjust and tyrannical, and I will not submit! Come to me, Psyche!"

He reached towards her through the dusk, but she seemed to falter backwards from him, and when he would have followed, the tall form of the mysterious guest rose between, and beneath that mighty and majestic gaze the eyes of Eros wavered, though the rebellion in him was unconquered still.

"You must yield her to me," said those deep, reverberating tones; "yet it is not I that parts you. True lovers can be parted only through want of faith. Upon yourself alone, therefore, does it depend whether she leaves you for a time or for ever."

Eros pressed his hands to his head. Every good and evil impulse of his soul was in deadly struggle for the mastery. Was his love greater than Death? or had the past been a delusion—was the future to be a blank? He was but a man, with a man's weaknesses. He must rise to the higher levels through bitter trial, if at all; and except there were in him some elements of generous nobleness, to turn his stubborn self-will at the crisis of the conflict, the demon of mistrust would gain the victory. Had he such allies?

"Speak to him again, Psyche," murmured the lofty presence, "you may yet prevail."

"Eros," she said, throwing all the tenderness of her loving soul into the word, "this is more than our friend-- he is our brother. Love and Death should glorify each other. If they are enemies Death becomes cruel and Love degraded. Yield me up now that you may possess me for ever. Oh, quick, my love —quick!"

The struggling man uttered a cry, heartrending, full of anguish. He was faint and giddy, and the world seemed to reel beneath his feet. He stretched out his arms. "I love you, Psyche," he muttered. "Do not leave me behind; let me go with you."

He felt her hand again within his own. "You are my own Eros," she whispered in his ear. "I shall not altogether leave you; you will see me in dreams, and you will know that the Paradise I go to is near this earthly home of ours. At last —perhaps not for a long time—but at last we shall meet there. And now . . . . take me to our marriage altar, and let us say farewell there."

They came to the little samite-covered table, Psyche supported between the other two. The lovers knelt down together, and the form of the mysterious guest bended beneficently above them. Then Psyche slowly drooped sideways, and Eros caught her in his arms. Yet no—she was not there!

Still kneeling, he looked upwards through the window into the clear winter night, and saw where two cloud-shapes seemed to flit hand in hand across the starlit purple of the heavens. A strange peace entered his lately tortured soul. The doubt in his love's immortality was gone, and the struggle was ended.

"Take her, friend!" he cried, in a voice trembling with a deeper than earthly happiness. "So great is my love, that not in this world, nor with this mortal body, can I give it fit and full expression."

He was left alone in the old parlour, with the dead embers of the fire upon the hearthstone. Christmas bells were ushering in what was to have been his wedding-day; but, like their sweet notes, his mortal hopes had been caught up to heaven, but were not lost there. It is many years since then, yet every returning Christmas has found the same light of peace in his face that first dawned there so long ago. No brooding sullenness or failing faith has changed it into gloom.

But who was the mysterious guest, and why did he bear the likeness of him whom, above all others, Eros and Psyche had loved? That is a question which answers itself in all our lives. For when the time comes—as come it must—that this majestic Presence must be met face to face, shall we not trust that the countenance which will, perhaps, seem awful, may at least not be as that of a stranger whom we know not, and whose heart is indifferent towards us? Would it not be pleasant, at that hour, to recognise in him who must herald our entrance into a new Society, the well-known features of one whom our previous life had made our most secure and faithful friend?

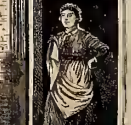
The Barley Mow

BY MRS. OLIPHANT,

Author of "The Chronicles of Carlingford," "The Curate in Charge," &c., &c.

CHAPTER I.

THE AIKINS



THE village of Ingleton lies not far from London, on the edge of one of the greatest of the Royal parks, in a beautiful woodland country, rich with fine trees. It is a village of gentility, not like the usual collection of houses which is generally called by that name. Behind backs, half a mile or so along the different roads that intersected the Green, stood a group here and there of humbler houses, which looked as if they had been sent off out of the way of the finer dwellings—the cottages ornées and detached mansions that formed Ingleton proper. All round the Green there was nothing visible except the houses of the gentlefolks. Here a beautiful green lawn visible across a ha-ha let itself be seen in a dignified simplicity, with its drooping larch and fine cedars, and the low house behind which nestled under the trees; there the warm limes of a shrubbery closed about the square loftier house that shone through them, conscious of its own importance. The biggest house of all upon the Green was a kind of modern castle, luxurious and splendid, in possession of an unimaginably wealthy "City man," whose footings and costliness were the talk of the neighbourhood, and the poorest a little cottage, half wood, half brick, at the other end, with all the irregular length of the Green between them to separate the great from the small. Close by this latter dwelling stood the Barley Mow, a favourite and picturesque little village public-house, the most inoffensive article of the kind, perhaps, which was to be found for miles and miles around. The Green itself was not like the trim and daintily-kept greensward, with orderly posts and railings, which is to be seen in many suburban hamlets; for Ingleton was too far from town to deserve that name. It was long, irregular, and just wild enough to be thoroughly natural. The lower end near the Barley Mow was smooth and neat, the best cricket ground that you could find in the neighbourhood. But the upper part, which widened out towards the great house which was known as Temple Hill, was still wild with gorse bushes, and bordered by a little thicket of rhododendrons, strayed thither from the adjacent park. Many a cricket match was played upon the lower Green, and on the bright summer Saturdays, when the cricket parties came, there was often quite a pretty little company from the surrounding houses to watch them, and a great traffic went on at the Barley Mow. It was an irregular old house, partly red brick, partly whitewashed, with a luxuriant old garden, warm and sunny, opening through a green wicket set in a great hedge on the right hand. A signpost stood in the open space in front, where the road widened out, and by the open door you could see through a clean, red-tiled passage into the garden at the back, where the turf was like velvet, and the borders full of all kinds of bright and sweet old-fashioned flowers. There were neither standard rose bushes nor red geraniums to be seen there, not that Widow Aikin, good woman, had any whim of taste that prompted her to despise these conventional inmates of the modern garden, but that the pinks and gilliflowers, the rockets and larkspurs, and great straggling rose bushes were cheaper and gave less trouble, having established themselves there, and requiring no bedding out. The room which looked out upon this garden was where the strangers and gentlefolks who came from far were entertained, and there was a parlour, with a bow window in front, for humbler persons. But the favourite place in summer for that kind of "company" was the bench outside the door, looking out upon the Green. There was little traffic of any kind in winter. But the summer aspect of the Barley Mow was a pleasant one. It had no air of stale dissipation about it, no heavy odour of spilt beer or coarse tobacco, but looked wholesome and sweet-smelling, a place of refreshment, not of indulgence. Anyhow, it was the fashion about the Green to think and say this of Widow Aikin's clean, honest, respectable house. She was a favourite with all the "families." She served them with milk as well as beer, and fresh eggs, and sometimes fruit. She had all sorts of little agencies in hand, found servants for the ladies on the Green, and executed little commissions of many kinds. She was a personage, privileged and petted, everybody had a smile and a kind word for her, and she for everybody. She was always about, never standing still, glancing in and out of the red-tiled passage, the bow-windowed parlour, the sunny garden, the noisy stable-yard. You saw her everywhere—now this side, now that —a ubiquitous being, so quick-footed that she was almost capable of being in two places at once.

It was a favourite subject with Mrs. Aikin to talk of her own loneliness, and incapacity to manage "such a house as this." She liked to dwell upon the responsibilities of the position and the likelihood that a lone woman would be imposed upon; and the Green generally considered this a very proper strain of observation, and felt it to be respectable that a widow should so feel and so express herself. But it was very well known that things had gone much better at the Barley Mow since Will Aikin managed very opportunely to be carried off by that vulgar gout which springs from beer, and has all the disadvantages with none of the distinctions belonging to its kindred ailment. There was no saying what might not have happened had he lived a year longer, for the creditors were urgent and the business paralysed. It was this which made his death opportune, for the brewers were merciful to the widow, and gave her time to redeem herself; and when she was relieved from the necessity of nursing him and studying his "ways," which were as difficult as if the landlord of the Barley Mow had been a prince of the blood, the widow blossomed out into another woman. It is but a poor compliment to the lamented husband, but widows continually do this, it must be allowed, giving the lie practically to their own tears. Happily, however, Mrs. Aikin, like many others in her position, took her own desolation for granted, and attributed her increase of prosperity to luck or the blessing of God, which is the better way of stating it. "Alas! that poor Will had not lived to see it!" she would say with kindly tears in her eyes, and never whispered even to herself that had poor Will lived it would never have been. She never missed an opportunity, good soul, of bringing him into her conversation, telling stories of his excellence, his good looks (he was one of the plainest men in the county), his good jokes (he was as dull as ditch-water), and his readiness in all encounters. She would stand in the doorway, with her apron lifted in her hand, ready to dry the tear which out of grief for his loss, or tremulous traditionary laughter over one of his pleasantries, was always ready to spring up in the corner of her eye. What did it matter to her that the poor old jokes were pointless? She never inquired into their claims, but accepted them as laughter-worthy by divine right.

Mrs. Aikin had but one child, Jane, a modest dark-eyed girl, with pretty fair curling hair, which gave her a certain distinction among the rustic prettinesses about. Her mother professed to be annoyed by the mingling of two complexions, protesting that Jane was always "contrairy," that such light hair should have gone with blue eyes, and that she was neither one sort nor another; but in her heart she was proud enough of her daughter's uncommon looks—and Jane was an uncommon girl. It has already been said that the smallest house on the Green stood near to the Barley Mow, a little place half wooden, half brick, which would have been tumble-down and disreputable had it not been so exquisitely neat and well cared for. This was the poorest little place of all the gentry's houses, but it was not by any means the humblest of the inhabitants who lived at the Thatched Cottage. Old Mrs. Mowbray was a very great person, though she was a very small person. She was the tiniest woman on the Green, and she had the tiniest income, but she was related to half the peerage, and considered herself as great a lady as if she had been a Grand Duchess. Nor did any one dispute her claim. The great people at Temple Hill were nobody in comparison with old Mrs. Mowbray. There was not one house on the Green that had such visitors as she had. She was grand-aunt to a duke, and nobody would have been surprised to hear that in her own person she had a far-away right to the Crown—a right, let us say, coming by some side-wind from the Plantagenets, leaping over the other families who are of yesterday. Many people at Ingleton called her the Fairy Queen. She had the easy familiarity of royalty with all her surroundings. What could it matter to her who her neighbours and friends were? She could afford to be indifferent to the trifling distinctions of society. Widow Aikin was not appreciably further out of the reach of this splendid little old poor patrician than Mrs. Temple at the great house. Education was in favour of the latter, it is true, but there was this against her, that it was possible for her to entertain some delusive idea of equality, of which Mrs. Aikin was guiltless. Mrs. Mowbray accordingly made no secret of the fact that she entertained a great friendship for the landlady of the Barley Mow, and was very fond of Jane. She had the girl with her a great deal, and taught her those pretty manners which were so unlike others of her class. When Jane was a growing girl of twelve or thirteen she used to wait upon the old lady's guests at tea as a maid of honour might have waited. It was done for love for one thing, which always confers a certain grace; and it was not possible to move awkwardly or act ungracefully under the eye of such a keen critic.

It was the general opinion of the ladies on the Green that this patronage might not be an advantage to Jane as she grew older, and it became necessary to choose what was to be her occupation in the world; but in this respect Mrs. Mowbray behaved with great wisdom. It was, indeed, against not only all her traditions, but all the habits of her mind to "put nonsense in the girl's head," and disgust her with her natural position, which was what the other ladies feared. What did it matter to Mrs. Mowbray whether the girl became a pupil-teacher; or pushed upward in the small scale of rank, as understood at the Barley Mow, to be a nursery governess and call herself a lady; or remained what she was by nature, her mother's right hand and chief assistant? Parties ran very high on the Green on this subject. It was fought over in many a drawing-room as hotly as if it had been a branch of the Eastern Question. Ought Jane Aikin to stay at the parish school with Mrs. Peters, whose favourite pupil she was, and become her aid and probable successor? Ought she, being so refined in her manners, and altogether such a nice-looking girl, to learn a little music and French, and become a governess? The ladies who were liberal, who believed in education, and that everybody should do their best to improve their position and better themselves, upheld the latter idea; but the strongest party was in favour of the pupil teacher notion, which was considered a means of utilising Jane's good manners and excellent qualities, without moving her out of "her own sphere of life"—and this set was headed by the Rector, who was very hot and decided on the subject. A third party, to which nobody paid much attention, and which consisted chiefly of Mrs. Aikin herself, the only real authority, intended Jane to remain where she was, head-waiter and superintendent at the Barley Mow. The question between the two first projects had already been warmly discussed in the drawing-rooms before it occurred to anybody that it could be Mrs. Aikin's intention to do such injustice to her daughter, or indeed that the good landlady had any particular say in the matter. What! make a barmaid of Jane! The Rector was, it is to be feared, very injudicious in his treatment of the question. He attempted to carry matters with a very high hand, and went so far as to say that no modest girl could be brought up in "an alehouse," as he was so foolish as to call it, an opprobrious epithet which Mrs. Aikin did not forgive for years. She was so desperately offended, indeed, that she went to chapel for four Sundays after she heard of it, walking straight past the church doors, and proclaiming her defection to the whole world. Mrs. Mowbray was the person who was employed to set this matter right. She was waited upon by representatives of the two different parties, both of them feeling secure of her sympathy, but both anxious at all events to bring that foolish woman, Jane's mother, to her senses. Mrs. Stoke was at the head of the governess set, and good Mr. Wigmore represented the Church. They met at the gate of the Thatched Cottage upon this mission. "I have not spoken to dear Mrs. Mowbray on the subject, because I feel so sure that she will be on our side—so fond as she is of Jane," said Mrs. Stoke. "Mrs. Mowbray is not the person to advocate any breaking up of the divisions which mark society," said Mr. Wigmore. "She knows the evil of all such revolutionary measures." And thus they went in, each confident in his and her own cause.

Mrs. Mowbray sat by the fire in the big old carved ebony chair, which made her look more than ever a fairy queen. She had a handsome old ivory face, with a tinge of colour on the cheeks, which looked as if it might once have been rouge. Strangers considered that this peculiarity of complexion gave an artificial and even improper look to the old lady, but on the Green it was considered one of the evidences of that supreme aristocratism which would not take the trouble to disguise anything it pleased to do, but would rouge, if rouge was necessary, in a masterful and magnificent way, making no secret of it. However, as a matter of fact it was not rouge, but perfectly real, as was the fine ivory yellow of her old nose, a stately and prominent feature, evidently belonging to the highest rank. She would not have budged from her ebony chair to receive any one less than the Queen; but she permitted Mrs. Stoke to kiss her, and Mr. Wigmore to shake her hand, with serene graciousness. When they had both seated themselves she looked at them across her knitting with a smile. "This looks likes a deputation," she said. "What do you want, good people? If it is to settle about my funeral there is no hurry—for my cold is much better, and I have a good many things to see after before I can think of such luxuries." This distressed both her visitors, who did not like to hear an old lady speak of such serious matters in this lightminded way.

"Indeed, indeed, dear Mrs. Mowbray, it was nothing of the kind. When such a dreadful event occurs there will be weeping and wailing on the Green; and we all know very well that though you always talk so cheerfully, and so amusingly——"

"You regard such subjects with the melancholy which becomes right-thinking people," said Mr. Wigmore; "but we came—or to speak for myself, I came——"

"To speak of Jane Aikin," cried Mrs. Stoke, feeling the importance of having the first word, "and her mother's inconceivable foolishness in keeping her at home; and the still more foolish step she has taken in separating herself from all her true friends."

"Frequenting the Dissenters' services," said Mr. Wigmore. "Few things more sad have come under my observation in this very distressing parish—which is really such a mixture of everything that is unsatisfactory——"

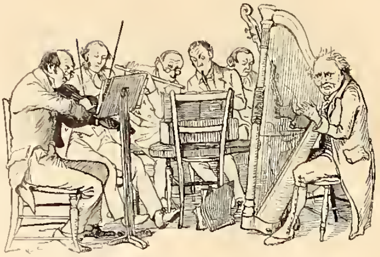
"The parish is just like other parishes," said Mrs. Stoke, "only much better, I should say—so many educated people in it, and so few poor comparatively. But I am sure our dear old friend will agree with me that Jane is quite out of place——"

"Now, my good people," said the old lady, "think a moment —what do you mean by out of place?—Everybody is out of place nowadays. I see people in this room calmly sitting down by me whose fathers and mothers would have come to the kitchen fifty years ago; but if I made a fuss what would any one say?"

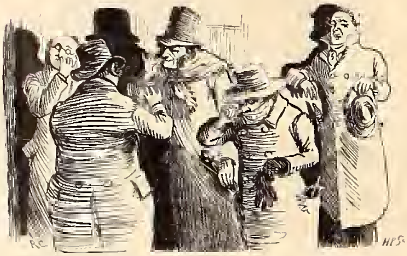
This made Mr. Wigmore very uncomfortable, whose father had been a cheesemonger in a good way of business; but as for Mrs. Stoke she did not care, being very well born, as she supposed. Mrs. Mowbray, however, took them both in quite impartially. "Unless people really belong to the old nobility," she continued, "I don't see that it matters about their place. It does not mean anything. Even in what we call the old nobility, you know, there's not above half-a-dozen families that are anything like pur sang. I know dukes that are just as much out of place as Jane Aikin would be at Windsor Castle. The only place any one has a right to is where their ancestors are born and bred—if they have any. And when you have not rank," said the old lady, looking keenly at Mr. Wigmore, "you had much better be peuple, as the French say. We haven't got an English word for it. No, it doesn't mean lower classes—it means peuple, neither less nor more. And Jane Aikin is pure peuple. She can't be out of place where she is."

"But you forget her education, dear Mrs. Mowbray—and you yourself that have given her such a taste for beautiful manners, and spoiled her for her own common class."

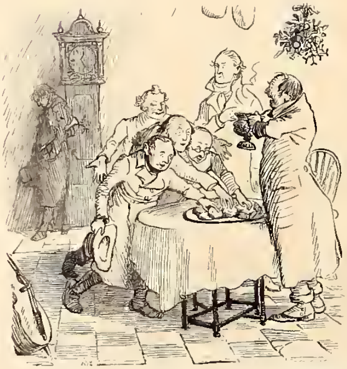
Mrs. Mowbray did not say anything, but she put on her spectacles and stared at her reprover. "I never spoil any one," she said; "out of my own condition—I make no secret of it—one girl is very much like another to me. They should all be



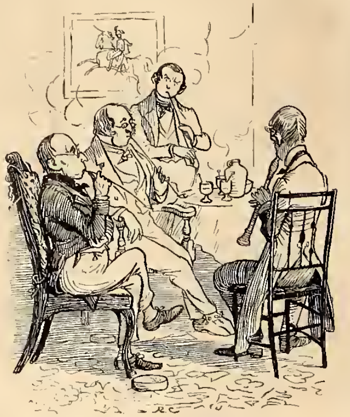
THE TORTOISES



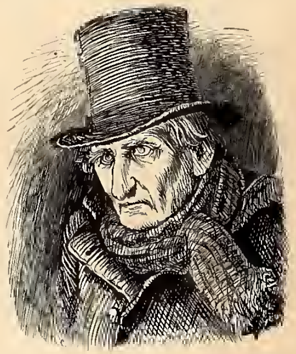
THEN DICKY DODD, IN ACCORDANCE WITH IMMEMORIAL CUSTOM, HANDED ROUND HIS SNUFFBOX



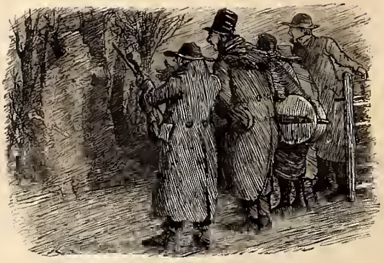
HE WAS IN THE ACT OF LIFTING THE TANKARD TO HIS LIPS WHEN I SAW HIS FACE CHANGE SUDDENLY. FOLLOWING THE DIRECTION OF HIS EYES WITH MINE, I PERCEIVED THE CAUSE IN A MOMENT. . . . LEANING AGAINST THE CLOCK IN AN ATTITUDE OF DEJECTION STOOD THE FIGURE



AT EPHRAIM'S HOUSE THAT EVENING I FOUND TWO OTHER TORTOISES BESIDES HIMSELF. THEY HAD COME ON PURPOSE TO HEAR ME. WHEN I HAD GIVEN THEM A SPECIMEN OF WHAT I COULD DO, THEY ALL SHOOK THEIR HEADS SOLEMNLY

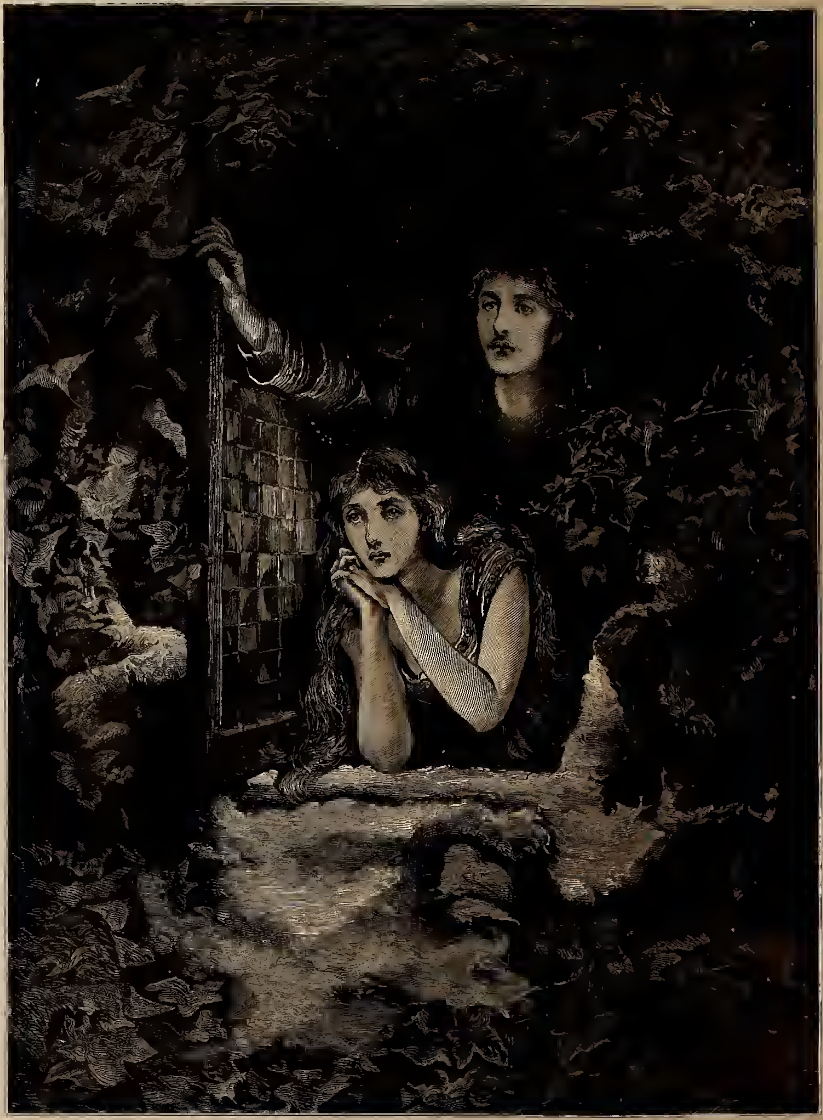


"IT'S WILL BLISSON!"



THE FIGURE BEGAN TO FADE—TO FADE AND DISSOLVE SLOWLY BEFORE US

BLISSON'S LAST ROUND



THE CHRISTMAS GUEST

"Psyche! Psyche! look!" cried Eros, starting to his feet in joyous excitement. "That must be—isn't it?—yes, it must be Mortimer—it is our dear old Mort!"

pretty-mannered—I never knew that to spoil any one, small or great."

"Dear Mrs. Mowbray, no; but if we could raise her to a position in which she would be appreciated. She has taken such a step out of her own class in associating with you."

"Associating—with me!" Mrs. Mowbray took off her spectacles again after she had gazed mildly with a wonder beyond speech in the speaker's face. Then she shrugged her shoulders slightly and shook her head. "I can't recall at this moment any one in this neighbourhood who does that. I have a great many friends, if that is what you mean, and I am not so particular as most people about the little subdivisions—but associates! I don't know any. Yes, Mr. Wigmore? you were going to speak."

"I am one of those who agree with you that the poor should be kept in their own place," said Mr. Wigmore. As he spoke the old lady took up her spectacles again, and deliberately put them on, looking at him as if (Mrs. Stoke said) he was a natural curiosity, which somewhat discomfited the excellent man—"but, as our excellent friend says, her manners and breeding are quite above her station."

"Jane Aikin has no station," said Mrs. Mowbray, promptly. "She is people, as I told you. I know nothing of your aboves and belows. Let her stay where she is, in her natural place and do her duty. Do your duty in that condition to which God has called you: that's what the Catechism says. There's nothing about being above or below. Very lucky for her she's got a natural place and her duty plain before her. If one had not one's own rank, which of course one does not choose, that's what I should prefer for myself, a distinct place and a clear duty—and that's what Jane Aikin has."

"In a public-house!" cried Mr. Wigmore, aghast.

"In her mother's house, sir," said old Mrs. Mowbray.

Thus the Green was routed horse and foot; but the old lady on further talk accepted the position of mediatrix to bring back the Widow Aikin to her allegiance, and to show her her duty as a churchwoman. She sallied forth for that purpose the very next morning in her old quilted white satin bonnet and great furred cloak. She never changed the fashion of her garments, having had abundant time to discover what was most becoming to her, as she frankly said. Mrs. Aikin was standing at her front door, looking out upon the bright morning, when the old lady appeared. There was very little doing at the Barley Mow. The parlour with the bow window was full of a dazzling stock of household linen, which Jane and a maid were looking over, and putting in order. Jane herself had the task of darning the thin places, which she did so as to make darning into a fine art. This had been taught her by Mrs. Peters at the parish school. Perhaps it was not, after all, such a valuable accomplishment as it looked, but certainly Jane's darning had a beautiful appearance on the tablecloths, after they had passed their first perfection of being, at the Barley Mow.

"The sunshine's a pleasure," said Mrs. Aikin, making her best curtsey, "and I hope I see you well, ma'am, this bright morning. It shows us as how spring's coming. Might I be so bold as to ask you to step in and take a chair?"

"Not this morning," said Mrs. Mowbray, in her frank voice, not unduly subdued in tone, "though I've come to scold you. They tell me you've gone off from your church, you that were born and bred in it, and Jane, though I taught her her Catechism myself. Do you mean to tell me you've got opinions—you?—with a nice child like Jane to thank God for, and everything going well——"

"Well, ma'am," said Mrs. Aikin, growing red and smoothing her apron, "I don't say as I'm one for opinions—more than doing your duty, and getting a bit of good out of a sermon when you can."

"That's very pious and right," said the old lady, "but your church that you were christened in is more than a sermon. I don't pretend to get much good of them myself, but you'll not tell me that you have left your church for that."

"Well, ma'am!" said Mrs. Aikin, reluctant to commit herself. She put out her foot, and began to trace patterns with her shoe in the sand on the doorstep, and fixed her eyes upon the process. She could not meet the little old lady's decided gaze. "Mr. Short at the chapel do preach beautiful, he do. You should just hear him for yourself. He'll make you come all over in a tremble, when you're sitting quite quiet like thinking of nothing; and then he's real comforting to poor folks and them as is put upon. It's almost a pleasure to feel as you've had your troubles with the quality too."

"Quality! Where do you find any quality to have troubles with?" said Mrs. Mowbray. "You and I have always been good friends. You don't consider that you're put upon, as you call it, because the Duke sent me my Christmas turkey. That was no offence to you."

"No, ma'am, never—not you. There is them that shall be nameless—not but what they call names a plenty."

"The woman's thinking of the Rector, I declare. Quality!" said Mrs. Mowbray, with an accent of mingled amazement and amusement. "No, my dear woman, he's not quality. But he meant no harm. He was thinking of the girl and her good. They think they know, these men; and we must submit, you know, to our clergy. It was because of his interest in Jane."

"Interest in Jane!" said Widow Aikin (she pronounced the name something like Jeyeyn; but the peculiarities of Berkshire are too much for even phonetic spelling), "if that shows an interest! telling her mother to her face as she wasn't fit to bring her up decent and respectable, and showing no more confidence than that in the girl herself."

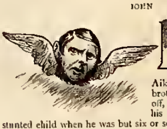
"It was his mistake," said Mrs. Mowbray, "he wants tact, that is what it is. He hasn't the right way of doing a thing, my dear woman. That is how these middling sort of people always break down. My nephew, the Duke, if he had to send you to prison, would do it as if it was the greatest favour in the world. But the middling classes have no grace about them. That's not to say that you're to give up your church that you were christened in and married in. Who's to bury you, woman? Do you never think of that? Not your Mr. Short at the chapel, I hope. At least I know he would never do for me. There ought to be more in your church than a sermon, or even than a pleasant word."

"Well, ma'am, I don't say but what that's true; and I never thought of the burying," said the widow, hanging her head. She was subdued and awe-stricken at the turn which the discussion had taken, and, indeed, had never intended to forsake "her church," but only to make a demonstration of her independence. Jane had come out from the parlour, leaving her work to listen to this argument, with great anxiety and interest, for her heart was in it. She was hovering in the passage behind her mother, now and then giving her a little touch or pull to enforce something the old lady said. During the pause that followed she came forward very anxiously, and put forward a plea of her own, in which there did not seem much point or applicability. "Oh, mother," she said, softly, pulling her sleeve, "and Johnny in the choir!"

"Oh, go along with your Johnnys," said the landlady of the Barley Mow. But it was clear enough that the victory was won.

CHAPTER II.

JOHN



It is full time that John should be spoken of, who was the other member of the family, and a very important one. He was Mrs. Aikin's nephew, the son of a brother who was very poorly off, and had been taken in by his good aunt as a miserable stunted child when he was but six or seven. The brother was a soldier, who had been discharged, and whose character it is to be supposed did not recommend him sufficiently to get any interest made for him, or to establish him anywhere in one of the occupations which seem made for old soldiers. Instead of this he had fallen into a kind of vagabondism, wandering from place to place, and as his wife was dead this only child had been miserably neglected, and was in a bad way when Mrs. Aikin took him to her kindly care. He had never been a prepossessing boy, and he did not at all share with Jane in the interest of the Green. He was heavy and lowering in his looks, quiet to outward appearance, though tales were told of him which were not consistent with this subdued aspect. Both the women, however, were devoted to John, either because they had no one else to be fond of, or because he possessed some qualities at bottom which made up for his faults of exterior. He certainly did not seem at any time to give himself much trouble to secure their affections. All that he did seemed to be done unwillingly—the very sound of his voice was churlish—and except Mrs. Aikin and her daughter nobody cared for the boy. From his very first coming, he had showed himself in an unfavourable light. He was then a boy of about eight years old, and little Jane, a delightful child, everybody's favourite, was a year younger. One summer evening he was standing with his hands in his pockets staring at the waggons with their big horses, when she came running up to him. "Come and play, Johnny," she said, in her soft little voice. "I won't," he said, pushing her out of his way with his shoulder. "Oh, Johnny, come and have tea in the garden," said little Jane, "mother says we may. I've got some cake and some gooseberries, and my own little tea-things, and all the best shall be for you. Oh, Johnny, come!" "I won't," he said again, though he faltered when he heard of the cake. "Oh, Johnny, come to please me," cried the poor little woman, already as foolish in her expectations as if she had been twenty years older. "To please you! I'd a deal rather please myself," cried the boy, once more thrusting her aside with a push of his shoulder. Little Jane was ready to cry, but the mother coming out full of business called to the children in her hasty way to go at once to the garden, and get out of her road. Upon which the boy shrugged his shoulders, and obeyed with brutish unwillingness and display of yielding to superior force. This was how he had been ever since. The little girl would coax and entreat, the kind mother give cheerful orders, never so much as seeing the lowering looks of rebellion. "Poor boy!" Mrs. Aikin would say, "he ain't got no mother, and I can see by his solemn face many a day as he's thinking and thinking of his poor father, which was never one as would settle down to anything. We has to do all we can to keep him cheerful, Jane and me." Thus from the very first they made up their minds to spoil the loutish unpleasant boy. The widow was continually praising him, and holding him up to the admiration of her neighbours. When it was found that he had a good voice, this gave them as much delight and triumph as if they had inherited a fortune, and when he made his appearance for the first time with the choir in his white surplice, the faces of the two were a sight to see, so glowing were they with satisfaction and delight. In this way the two cousins had grown up—the boy always sullen and downlooking, resisting rather than responding to the kindnesses heaped upon him, the girl always ready to smooth away every cloud, to say the best for him, to explain his moodiness and backwardness. "It is only his way," Jane would say in her soft voice, and her way was so ingratiating and conciliatory that no one could stand against it. His aunt, too, was foolish in her affection for this unattractive hero. He was the son of the house, the young master, though he had not a penny. His opinion was always asked about everything, and his judgment constantly relied upon. It was true that the advice he gave was not always taken, for Mrs. Aikin was very active, and liked to manage everything her own way; but when it happened that he agreed with her, she would trumpet forth his praises and give him all the credit. "I should never have thought of that but for Johnny. There's no telling the sense of him," the good woman would say admiringly. All this special pleading, however, could not give the Green any interest in John. Nobody cared for him except the two who cared so much for him, and nobody believed in him, notwithstanding his imposing appearance in the choir and his beautiful voice. As he grew up this voice changed from its angelical soprano to a big melodious baritone. He was the chief singer at Ingleton, and kept up the character of the place, which had always been noted for its choir, and indeed he was the only man in it to whom a solo could be entrusted. This made the Rector and Mr. Wigmore tolerant of the alehouse so far as he was concerned.

Thus the little family at the Barley Mow were happy enough, when the difficulty was got over about Jane. Of course Mrs. Aikin had the best right to settle what her daughter was to do, and, whatever they might advise, neither the clergy nor the ladies could do anything on their own account in the matter. So that when Mrs. Aikin gave up chapel and came back to her own pew all was forgiven and forgotten, and Jane, though the maid of the inn, became a greater favourite than ever. She was liked as much as her cousin was disliked. Even the contact which she could not be altogether saved from, in their position, with the roughest and coarsest class did not seem to affect her. She went about and served the beer, and waited on the summer visitors as softly and as neatly as she used to serve the ladies at tea in old Mrs. Mowbray's tiny drawing-room. She never took any notice of foolish things that might be said to her, and did not even seem to hear or see the squabbles and noisy talk that must always go on more or less about such places. In the cricketing time they were always very busy, and Jane no doubt had the additional temptation of the gentlemen who would have talked and flirted had she allowed them to do so—but she passed through everything like a humble Una, with a smile for everybody, but not a word that could have been objected to, had all the ladies in the Green sat in committee on her. Perhaps, however, her lout of a cousin did more for Jane than the ladies could have done. She was very modest and shy, and did not betray herself except to the keenest observation; but it was apparent enough to those who were chiefly interested that all her thoughts were for John. She was constantly doing his work for him in her quiet way, undertaking this and that to let him have a holiday, or go to a choral meeting, or have his innings at cricket. "Girls don't want so much play as boys," she would say, with a smile. And he took her at her word, and accepted everything she did for him as if it had been the most natural thing in the world. Strangely enough, her mother did not object to this. She spoiled and petted the clumsy fellow just as much as Jane did, and took it for granted that he should have all kinds of indulgences as if he had been a favourite son. The great terror of both of them was his vagabond father, who appeared now and then, a scandal to their respectability, and a standing danger to John. The two women were always in a fright lest this undesirable relative should lead their darling astray. "He is such a good boy now—he has always been such a good boy," Mrs. Aikin said, with an uncomfortable sense that nobody accepted this statement as gospel, which made her more and more hot in giving it forth. And when old Mrs. Mowbray stopped in her walk to inquire after Jane and the poultry, the widow fairly wept over this one danger which threatened the family peace. "Why do you let him come at all?" the old lady asked peremptorily. "If I were in your place, I would order him off the premises. You have done too much for him already, my dear woman. When a man becomes a vagabond he has no more claim on his friends."

This did not at all please the landlady of the Barleymow. Her honest face flushed, and she dried her eyes indignantly. "Nature is nature, ma'am," she said; "good or bad, you can't deny your own flesh and blood."

"But I could keep my own flesh and blood at a distance," said the old lady, "especially if it has got more harm in it, and could do me an injury still."

"That is all that troubles me," said Mrs. Aikin. "I'd be as happy a woman as steps the Green, but for that. Nature is nature, and a father's a father. And if so be as he was to put wild thoughts in our Johnny's head—what would me and Jane do? La, bless you, it would break that girl's heart."

"And that is just what I am thinking of," said Mrs. Mowbray, briskly. "You are a silly woman. What has Jane's heart got to do with it? You keep this boy by her side year after year. And now they're growing man and woman, and what's to come of it? What do you mean by it? That's what I say!"

"La, ma'am, what could come of it? They've been brought up like brother and sister," the widow said, with a laugh, and she went about with a smile on her face for the rest of the day. The other ladies made remonstrances of the same kind with equally little use. Of course, it was very clear that this was what she had made up her mind to—that the two should marry and succeed her when she grew old, and carry on the business. It was all suitable enough and natural enough. And, of course, the fact that Jane was above her position made no difference. When a woman is above her position the best thing for her to do is to conceal it carefully, and make the best of the circumstances. And she herself was not conscious of the fact of her superiority. Whether Mrs. Aikin had been so foolish as to communicate her ideas to Jane no one knew, but there could be little doubt that the poor girl took the arrangement for granted as much as her mother did. It was so natural! She had been fond of her cousin all her life, loving him with that most powerful of all kinds of love, the close tie of tender habit, the affection one has for the being whom one has protected, excused, and been good to all one's life. If she had not pushed him softly through his work, coaxed him through his lessons, made the best of him to everybody, how could poor Johnny ever have got on at all? He wanted her backing up so perpetually, that it might be permitted to Jane to believe that he could not have got on without her. It is common to say that the love of a woman for a man has often a great deal that is motherly in it, and certainly this was the case here. It had been her duty to be kind to him, to make him feel himself at home, he who had no other home. All her own little pleasures, almost ever since she could remember, had been made secondary to Johnny—and what so natural as that this should go on? She took it for granted, poor girl. She scarcely expected to be courted as other girls were who "fall in love" with strangers. It had not been necessary for her to fall in love. She had always been fond of her cousin. She had never thought of any other man.

And poor Jane was as delicate in her love as any lady of romance. She had none of the romping ways of country girls of her class. Neither was she sentimentally disposed. Her modest look dwelt upon him now and then with a tender pleasure, especially when he was singing, which was the only thing about him which seemed to justify that delusion. But even this look was so modest and so momentary that only careful observation surprised it now and then. She held her somewhat embarrassing position with a serious grace which was almost dignity—making no advances on her part, though she was the Crown Princess, and had everything to bestow, yet never doubting, I think, poor girl, what the course of affairs was to be. Was it not natural that he should love her best as she loved him best? and that their life should go on as it had always done, with something added but nothing taken away? Such was the simple, happy tenor of Jane's maiden thoughts.

Whether John divined what the women took for granted it would be difficult to say. Perhaps he saw the advantages of being master of the Barley Mow, and the homage he received no doubt increased his natural loutish self-complacency,—that stolid vanity which so often dwells in the minds of those who have nothing in the world to be vain of. He took it for granted on his side that he was the sun of this little world, and accepted everything as a natural homage to his fine deservings. He thought the more of himself for all they did for him, not of them. As for Jane, her pretty looks, her superiority, her grace and good breeding were nothing to the lout. He would have liked her a great deal better had she been a noisy, laughing, romping girl. He accepted all the little sacrifices she made, and allowed her to do his work, with that satisfied consciousness that she liked it, which gave him the feeling of doing rather than receiving a favour. And very likely he might go on, and carry out the programme, and marry her in the same lordly way. For there could be no doubt that it was very much to his advantage, and that his position as Jane's husband would be much more assured than that of Mrs. Aikin's nephew. So things went on, day gliding into day, and summer into winter. They were both young—there was no hurry; and to quicken the settlement or alter anything from the pleasant footing on which it at present stood was not at all the widow's wish.

The picture would have been incomplete, however, had there not been something on the other side. When one man is indifferent to the goods the gods provide him it is almost certain there is another somewhere to whom these gifts would seem divine. Jane had always kept up her friendship with Mrs. Peters, the schoolmistress, who had trained her, and whose assistant the ladies on the Green had wished her to be. She was fond of going to see her in the winter afternoons when there was not much doing, and always found something to do among the girls, work to set right, or a class to look after which had wearied the schoolmistress, and she got on so well with them that it was clear the ladies on the Green had not been wrong in their idea of her powers. But while she thus came and went about the good schoolmistress whom she loved, another person had come into the little circle, of whom Jane took little notice. This was a brother-in-law of Mrs. Peters, who had been lately appointed schoolmaster, and was very highly thought of in the parish. He was ten years at least older than Jane, and appeared to her a middle-aged man, though he was scarcely over thirty. He was a good schoolmaster and a good man, a little precise in speech, perhaps, and rigid in his ways, but true and honest and kind, anxious to be of real service to his pupils and everybody round him. It was not wonderful that his serious eye should be caught by the serious gentle girl who was so sweet and so kind to his sister-in-law, so much at home in the school, so helpful, and so understanding. After he had taken tea half-a-dozen times in her company the good young man's head was full of Jane. And he was not so instructed in the ways of the place as to be aware of Mrs. Aikin's understood plans, or the kind of tacit arrangement by which everything seemed settled. He did not even know of John's existence at first—and when he did become aware of him there seemed nothing alarming in the loutish lad, whose appearance and manners were not attractive to the outward eye. Mr. Peters, though the very name of a public-house was obnoxious to him, began to come out in the evenings, when that first winter was over, and would sit down in the shade on a bench outside the door of the Barley Mow, sometimes for hours together, within reach of all the noises, and of the smoking and beer-drinking which was a horror to him, and not respectable even, or becoming in his position. To see him seated there in his black coat, with that air of respectability half ashamed of itself, was both comical and touching. It was said that the Rector spoke to him about it, pointing out that the Barley Mow, however respectable in itself, was not a place where an instructor of youth ought to spend his evenings, a reproach which cut to the schoolmaster's very heart. But he was so far gone that he stood up in defence of the place where his beloved spent her life.

"Sir," he stammered, reddening and faltering, "I see a—person there: who is an example to—every one round."

"You mean Mrs. Aikin," the Rector said. "Yes, yes, Peters, she is very respectable, I don't say anything against her; but it is not a place for you to be seen at, you know."

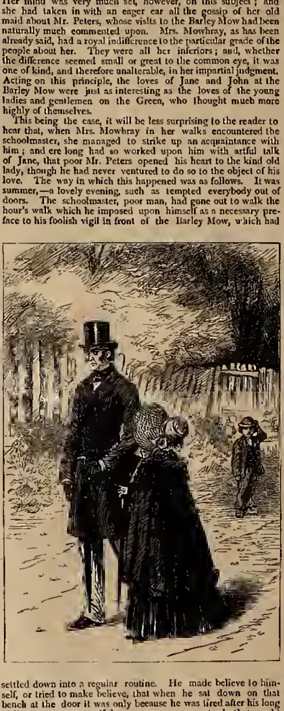
And this was true, there could be no doubt. The schoolmaster after this would come late. He would be seen going out for a walk, passing the Barley Mow with wistful looks after his tea-time, casting glances aside at the cheerful bustle; and when the darkness was falling, and everything had grown indistinct in the twilight, some keen eye would see him steal to his accustomed seat, and stay there, neither drinking nor talking, except to Jane when she passed him. He watched her taking the tray from her cousin's hand, letting him go free for his cricket or his practice, sometimes even sending him indoors to take a hand at whist, and had begun to be angry with the young man for letting her do his work for him before he surprised the gleam of soft love and kindness in Jane's pretty eyes which revealed the whole story. Was that what it meant? It was such a shock to him that the schoolmaster fell ill, and was not about the place for weeks. But at last he came back again, as people constantly do, to gaze at sights that break their hearts. The front of the Barley Mow was a cheerful place in these summer evenings. Mrs. Aikin allowed no rioting or excess of drinking on her benches, and she was as imperative as a little queen. And all the travellers who passed stopped there to get water for their horses and beverages not quite so innocent for themselves. The horses alone were a sight to see. The whole hierarchy of rank on four legs might be seen at the door. The beautiful riding-horses, slim and dainty, with their shy, supercilious looks; the carriage horses just a trifle less fine—the large florid, highly-fed brutes in the drays, that made no stand on their quality, but looked calmly conscious of unlimited corn at home—the saucy little pony, ready for any impertinence—the shabby, poor gentleman in the fly who had seen better days, meek beast, broken spirited, and unfortunate—the donkey, meeker still, but with a whole red revolution, if he could only but once get the upper hand, in his eye. It was curious to sit there in the darkening of the soft summer night, and see the indistinct vehicles gliding past, and all the dim figures of men, while the stars came out overhead, and the heat of the day sank into grateful coolness. And what a dramatic completeness the humble, bustling scene took, when one perceived the little human drama, tragedy or comedy, who could tell which, that was going on in the midst, Jane regarding the loutish cousin who was not her lover with those soft eyes of tenderness as the stars regarded the earth: he altogether indifferent, caring nothing, taking a vulgar advantage of her weakness to save himself trouble; and the spectator in the corner, hidden in the shadows, who did not lose a look or a word, whose very heart was burning to see the wasted affection, and made furious by the indifference. Mr. Peters would have given all he had in the world could he have purchased that soft look from Jane; but the lout thought nothing of it, except so far as it ministered to his own rude self-satisfaction. Perhaps he had his grievance too. He would have liked to escape from this propriety and quiet to the noisy revels on the other side of the Green, where there was always some nonsense going on at the Load-o'-Hay, a kind of rival, but much inferior place, which was the one place in the world which Mrs. Aikin regarded with feelings of hatred, and which moved even Jane to something like anger. He would have liked to have had "a bit of fun" there, and left the steady business of the Barley Mow to take care of itself. How it was that neither Jane nor her mother perceived or guessed the discrepancy between his thoughts and theirs is past divining. The girl, at least, one would have thought, must have had some moments of distrust, some wondering doubts, but if so she never showed them, and as for Mrs. Aikin, she was too busy a woman to think of anything that did not come immediately under her eyes.

CHAPTER III.

THE ENGAGEMENT

THIS state of calm, so full of explosive elements, could scarcely go on without some revelation, sooner or later, of the dangers below; and, again, the little old Fairy Queen, Mrs. Mowbray, had a hand in the revelation. Though she was so old, there was no more clear-sighted or keen observer in all the county; and, as her interest in Jane was great, it cannot be supposed that she had not seen through the complications about her. But as yet there had been no opening,—nothing which could justify her in speaking particularly on this subject; and all that could be said in a general way had been already said. Her mind was very much set, however, on this subject; and she had taken in with an eager ear all the gossip of her old maid about Mr. Peters, whose visits to the Barley Mow had been naturally much commented upon. Mrs. Mowbray, as has been already said, had a royal indifference to the particular grade of the people about her. They were all her inferiors; and, whether the difference seemed small or great to the common eye, it was one of kind, and therefore unalterable, in her impartial judgment. Acting on this principle, the loves of Jane and John at the Barley Mow were just as interesting as the loves of the young ladies and gentlemen on the Green, who thought much more highly of themselves.

This being the case, it will be less surprising to the reader to hear that, when Mrs. Mowbray in her walks encountered the schoolmaster, she managed to strike up an acquaintance with him; and ere long had so worked upon him with artful talk of Jane, that poor Mr. Peters opened his heart to the kind old lady, though he had never ventured to do so to the object of his love. The way in which this happened was as follows. It was summer,—a lovely evening, such as tempted everybody out of doors. The schoolmaster, poor man, had gone out to walk the hour's walk which he imposed upon himself as a necessary preface to his foolish vigil in front of the Barley Mow, which had settled down into a regular routine. He made believe to himself, or tried to make believe, that when he sat down on that bench at the door it was only because he was tired after his long walk; it was not as if he went on purpose,—to do that would be foolishness indeed. But he was no moth, scorching his wings in the flame,—he was an honest, manly pedestrian, taking needful rest in the cool of the evening. This was the little delusion he had wrapped himself in. When he was setting out for his walk, he met Mrs. Mowbray, and took off his hat with that mixture of conscious respect and stiff propriety which became his somewhat doubtful position. His position made him feel that more was expected from him than would be expected from the common people round. He was in his way a personage, a representative of education and civilisation; but yet he did not belong to the sphere occupied by the ladies and gentlemen. This made poor Mr. Peters doubly precise. But as the old lady,—whose lively mind was full of Jane, and of a little plan she had in her head,—turned to look at him instead of looking where she stepped, she suddenly knocked her foot against a projecting root, and would have fallen had not the schoolmaster, almost too shy to touch her, and wondering much in his own mind what a gentleman would do in such an emergency, rushed forward to give his assistance. Mrs. Mowbray laid hold of him with a very decided clutch. She was not shy;—she threw her whole weight (it was not much) upon his arm, which she grasped to save herself. "I was nearly over," she said, panting a little for breath, with a pretty flush rising into her pale old delicate cheeks. The shock stirred her old blood, and made her heart beat, and brought a spark to her eyes. It did not frighten and trouble, but excited her not unpleasantly, so thorough-bred was this old woman. "No, I am not hurt, not a bit hurt: it was nothing. I ought to look where I am going, at my age," she said; and held Mr. Peters fast by the arm, and panted, and laughed. But even after she had recovered herself she still leant upon him. "You must give me your arm to my house," she said; "there's the drawback of being old. I can't help trembling, as if I had been frightened or hurt. You must give me your arm to my house."



"Certainly, Madam," said Mr. Peters. He did not like to dispense with any title of civility, though (oddly enough, and in England alone) the superior classes do so; but he would not say "Ma'am," like a servant. It seemed to him that "Madam" was a kind of stately compromise; and he walked on, somewhat tremulous himself with embarrassment, supporting with the greatest care his unexpected companion; and though she shook, the courageous old lady laughed and chattered.

"You were going the other way?" she said. "I am wasting your time, I fear, and stopping your walk."

"Oh, no, Madam, not at all," said Mr. Peters; "I am very glad to be of use. I am very happy that I was there just at the moment,—just at the fortunate moment——"

"Do you call it a fortunate moment when I hurt my foot—not that I have really hurt my foot—and got myself shaken and upset like this,—an old woman at my age?"

"I meant—the unfortunate moment, Madam," said Mr. Peters, colouring high, and feeling that he had said something wrong, though what he scarcely knew.

"Oh, fie! that looks as if you were sorry that you have been compelled to help me," said the old lady, laughing.

Poor Mr. Peters had not the least idea how to take this banter. He thought he had done or said something wrong. He coloured up to the respectable tall hat that shaded his sober brows; but she stopped his troubled explanations summarily.

"Where were you going? It does not matter? Well, you shall come in with me, and Morris will give you some tea. You can tell me about your school,—I am always interested in my neighbours' concerns. You pass this way most evenings, don't you? I see you passing. You always take a walk after your day's work—a very wholesome custom. And then your evenings,—where do you spend your evenings? Are there any nice people who give you a cup of tea? Do you go and see your friends? Yes, I am interested, always interested, to learn how my fellow-creatures get through their life; I don't do much myself but look on, nowadays. And you know life's a strange sort of thing," said the old lady. "Nothing interests me so much. It isn't a line of great events, as we think in our youth,—the intervals are more important than the events. Are you dull, eh? You are a stranger in this place. How do you spend your evenings after you go in?"

"Madam, there is always plenty to do," said Mr. Peters; "a master can never be said to have much leisure." And then he unbent from that high seriousness, and said, with a mixture of confused grandeur and wistfulness, "In the circles to which I have admission there is not much that can be called society. I have to spend my evenings at home, or——"

"Or——?" said Mrs. Mowbray. "Just so, that is the whole business; alone, or—— But where is the 'or?' So am I. I am alone (which I generally like best), or—I have friends with me. Friends—I call them friends for want of a better word—the people on the Green. They bore me, but I like them sometimes. Now, you are a young man. Tell me what 'or' commends itself to you."

Thus exhorted, Mr. Peters hung down his head; he stammered in his reply. "I am afraid, Madam, you will think but badly of me if you knew—without knowing why. I go and sit down there—in front of Mrs. Aikin's house——"

"In front of the Barley Mow! Dear me!" she said, with well-acted surprise; "that is not the thing for a schoolmaster to do!"

"I know it, Madam," said Mr. Peters, with a sigh.

"Ah!" said Mrs. Mowbray, with the air of one who makes an important discovery; "ah! I divine you at last. It is a girl that beguiles you to the Barley Mow! Then it must be a good girl, for they allow no one else there. Bless me! I wonder if it should be Jane!"

"You know her, Madam?"

"Ah, it is Jane then? Mr. Schoolmaster—I forget your name—you are a man of penetration and sense; I honour you. A man who chooses the best woman within his knowledge—that's the sort of man I approve of. It happens so seldom. Men are all such fools on that point. So it is Jane!"

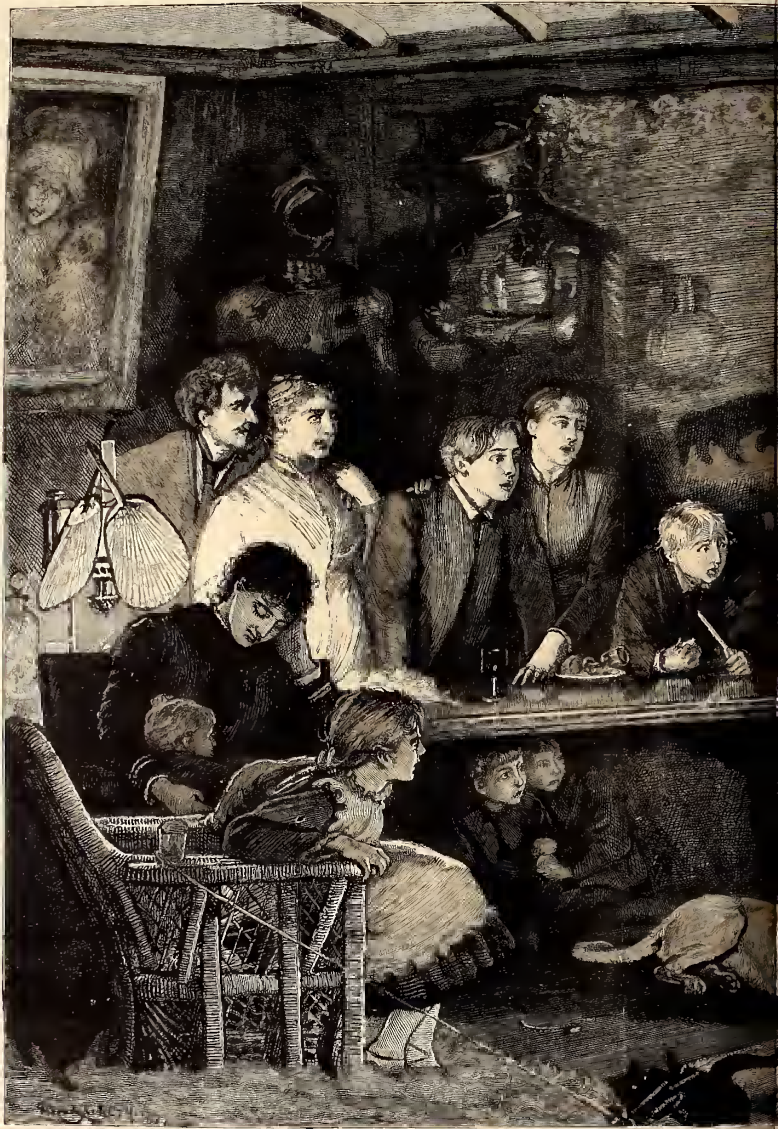
Mr. Peters breathed a long sigh. "She never looks at me, Madam—she never knows I am there. You must not think she has anything to do with it."

"Ay, ay, that's always the way. When the men show some sense the women are fools; or else it's the other thing. Now, listen to me. You say, Do I know Jane? Yes, I know her from her cradle. Why, I brought her up! Can't you see the girl has the manners of a lady? I gave them to her. There is nothing Jane will not do for me. And I like the looks of you. You're stiff, but you're a man. Do you think I should have come out of my way, and hurt my foot (oh, it is quite well now!) to speak to you, if I hadn't heard all about this? I want to help you to marry Jane."

"Oh, Madam, what can I say to you?" cried Mr. Peters, not knowing in his bewilderment what might be going to happen. He was shocked in his sense of propriety by being told that he was stiff, and by the old lady's frank avowal that she knew all about him after she had wormed his secret out of him; and he was excited by this promise of aid, and by the bold jump of his patroness to the last crown of success. To marry Jane! To get a word from her, or a kind look, seemed enough in the mean time; and he did not know on the spot whether he was ready to marry any one, even this Queen of his affections.

He led Mrs. Mowbray to her door, and listened to her talk, divided between alarm and eagerness. She made everything so easy! She was willing to be his plenipotentiary—to explain everything. She would see no obstacle in the way—all he had to do was to put himself in her hands. The old lady herself got very much excited over it. She said more than she meant, as people have a way of doing when they are excited, and sent Mr. Peters away in the most curious muddle of hope and fear,—hope that the way might be opened for him to Jane, fear lest he might be driven along that path at a pace much more rapid and urgent than he had meant to go.

Next morning, Mrs. Mowbray had made up her mind to send for Jane, and open the subject at once,—merely to represent to her how much more satisfactory this man was than such a lout as John. What a suitable union it would be! just her own quiet tastes and ways. And a man able to sustain and help her,



A HORRI

Without—the wind against the pane
Sighed like a ghost that strives to gain
Admittance to its old domain.

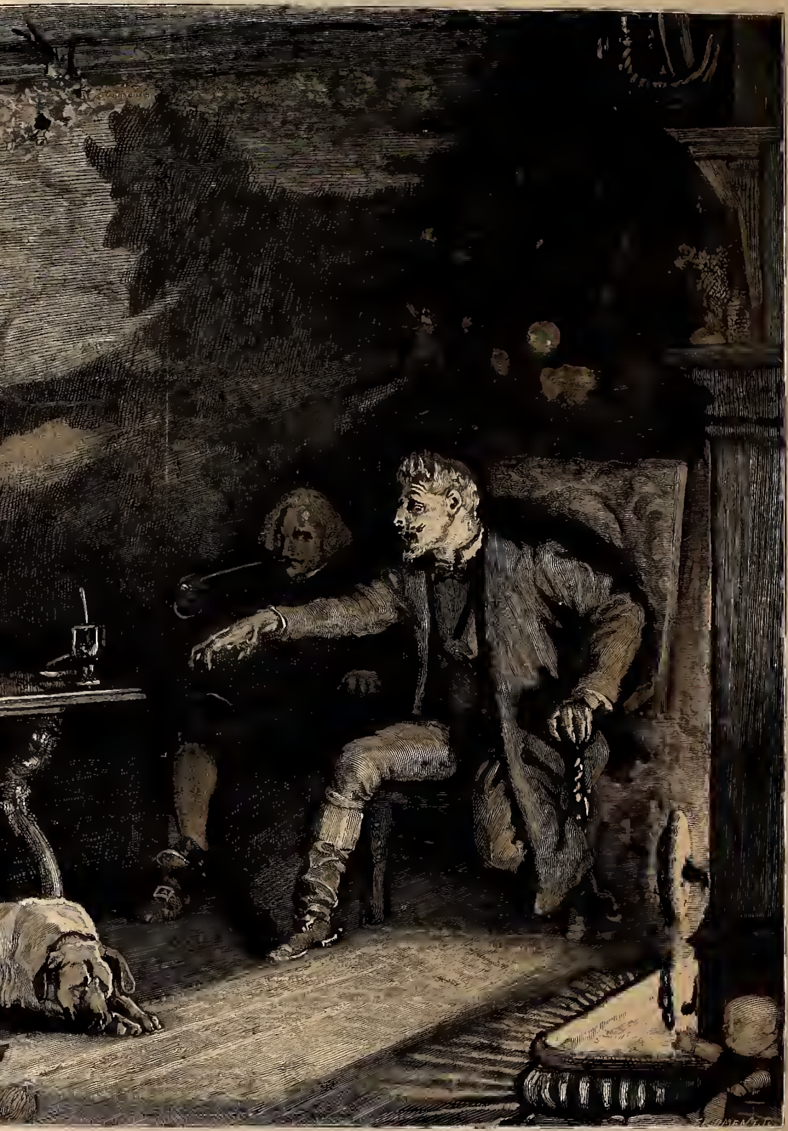
Within—the fire burnt brimstone-blue,
So that each face, to neighbours' view,
Seemed of a ghastly corpse-like hue.

Close by the fire sat Mr. Jones,
Who told, in earnest awe-struck tones,
A thrilling tale of blood and bones!

A tale of mystery and crime,
Beginning, "Once upon a time,"
And echoing like a funeral chime.

We listened with a solemn dread,
As to a message from the dead,
For Jones believed each word be said.

And as he spoke he waxed in vigour;
His hair rose up, his eyes grew bigger;
He seemed a supernatural figure!



BLE TALE

Entranced, we marked his stony glare,
His hollow voice, his bristling hair;
Our eyeballs gave back stare for stare!

And then we saw upon the wall
A Something that was worse than all,
Something that held us fast in thrall.

A grewsome Shape, with peaked jaw,
With hornèd head, with outstretched paw,
And at each finger's end a claw!

Our blood was chilled, we could not speak,
We could not even raise a shriek,
Each moment seemed a tedious week.

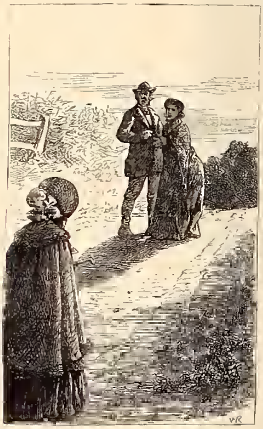
But Fear was soon laid on the shelf,
When we perceived this monstrous elf
Was but the shade of Jones himself.

Reaction made us laugh—and that
Made Jones's tale seem rather flat,
So presently he sought his hat.

Arthur Locker

instead of a lad of her own age, whom she would have to carry on her shoulders, instead of being guided by. The pleas in his favour were so strong, that the old lady could not see what pretence Jane could find for declining to listen to the schoolmaster. But she was not so certain about it next morning—and she neither went to the Barley Mow nor sent for Jane—but gave herself, as she said, time to think. And but for an accident that happened that very evening, prudence might have overcome the livelier impulse in her mind.

That evening, however, Mrs. Mowbray went out again to see the sunset, taking a short turn down the lane from her house. The lane ran between her house and the Barley Mow, and a back door from Mrs. Aikin's garden opened into it. It was a very green, very flowery bit of road, leading nowhere in particular except due west; and as the ground was high here—for Ingleton stood on a gentle eminence raised above the rest of the valley—this lane of an evening, when the sun was setting, seemed to lead straight through into the sunset. This was an exceptional evening, when the sunset glowed with all the colour that could be found in a tropical sky, and the whole world was glorified. It drew Mrs. Mowbray out in spite of herself; she had thrown a scarf over her cap and about her shoulders, being so near home, and was "stepping westward," like the poet, but with the meditative step of age which signifies leisure from everything urgent, and time to bestow upon this great pageant of Nature. To be so at leisure from everything in thought as well as in life is a privilege of the aged and solitary. And there is nobody who enjoys the beauty of such a scene or dwells upon it with the same delight. But the privilege has its drawbacks, like most human things. Those busy folks who give but a glance, and are gone, have perhaps a warmer, because accidental pleasure—the more deliberate enjoyment is a little sad. Mrs. Mowbray, however, was one to feel this as little as could well be. She walked briskly, and her mind, even in the midst of this spectacle, was full of her plans. She was half-way down the lane, with all the light in her face, when she suddenly perceived two figures black against the light in front of her, standing out like black silhouettes on the glow of lovely colour. She saw them dimly; but they, having their backs to the dazzling light, and being totally unmindful of the sunset, saw her very clearly, and were much alarmed by her appearance. They had been so much occupied with each other that the sound of the old lady's step upon some gravel was the first thing that roused them. The girl gave a frightened exclamation, and sprang apart from her companion, who for his part backed into the hedge, as if with the hope of concealing himself there. Though Mrs. Mowbray's attention and curiosity were immediately roused, she did not even then recognise them, and they might have escaped her if they had not been so consciously guilty. The girl was the first to be detected. She ran off after that startled look, with a half-laughing cry, leaving the other to bear the consequences.



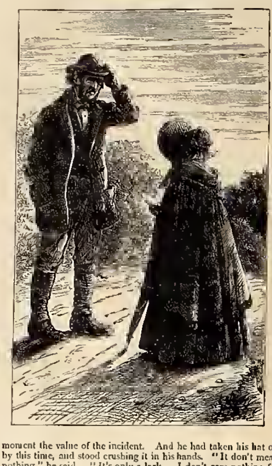
"Bless me! Ellen Turner. The little flirt! She is after some mischief," Mrs. Mowbray said to herself; and even then she thought nothing of the young man. But he was not aware of that. He did not know that her eyes, which had been fixed on the glow in the sky, were dazzled by it, and unable to see him; and, feeling himself detected, it seemed to John safer to take the matter in his own hands. He made a step into the middle of the road, in front of her. He could not have done anything less wise. Mrs. Mowbray was thinking only of Ellen, and nothing at all of the man she was fooling. This was the way she put it to herself: What did it matter who the silly fellow was? If he put any dependence on such a little coquette as that, he was to be pitied, poor fellow. The old lady had half a mind to warn him. But she was much surprised to find him confront her like this, and even a little frightened. And it was only now that she recognised who he was.

He had forgotten what little manners he had, and all his awe of "the quality" in the excitement of the moment. "You'll go telling of us!" he cried, in sudden excitement, almost with a threat of his clenched hand.

A thrill of apprehension ran through the old lady's frame, but she stood still suddenly, confronting him with the courage of her nature. "How dare you to speak to me so, with your cap on your head?" she said.

John's hand stole to his hat in spite of himself. He fell back a step. "I beg your pardon, my lady; but I was a-going to say—You won't say nothing to them?—It was a—accident—it wasn't done a-purpose. You won't tell—about her and me?"

"Whom am I to tell?" The old lady had seized the position already, and it made her herself again. She perceived in a moment the value of the incident. And he had taken his hat off by this time, and stood crushing it in his hands. "It don't mean nothing," he said. "It's only a lark. I don't care nothing for her, nor I don't suppose she do for me."



"That I'll answer for," said Mrs. Mowbray briskly; "neither for you nor any one else, you vain blockhead. But if it's only a lark, as you say, what are you frightened for? And what do you want of me?"

He stared at her for a moment with his mouth open, and then he said, "Haunt and Jeyeyne thinks a deal of you."

"I daresay they do," said the old lady; "but what of that? And they think a deal of you, you booby,—more's the pity. If you have a fancy for Ellen Turner, why don't you let them know? Why don't you marry her, or some one like her, and have done with it? I don't say she's much of a girl, but she's good enough for you."

His hand griped upon his hat with rising fury; the very dullest of natures feels the keen edge of contempt. And then he laughed; he had a sharp point at his own command, and could make reprisals.

"They'd kill her," he said, "if they knew it. They're too sweet upon me to put up with it. They think as I don't see what they're after; but I see it fast enough."

"And what are they after, if you are so clear-sighted?"

"They mean as I'm to settle down and marry Jeyeyne,—that's what they mean. They think, 'cos I'm a quiet one, that I can't see an inch from my nose. They think a fellow is to be caught like that afore he's had his fling, and seen a bit of the world."

"Oh," said the old lady; "so you want to have your fling, and see the world?"

"That is just about it, my lady," said the lout, taking courage. "I talks to her just to pass the time; but what I wants is to see the world. I won't say as I mightn't come back after, and settle down. Jeyeyne's a good sort of girl enough,—I've nothing to say against her; and she knows my ways,—but a man isn't like a set of women. I must have my fling,—I must,—afore I settle down."

"And who is to do your work, Mr. John, while you have your fling? Or are you clever enough to see that you are not of the least use at the Barley Mow?"

"Oh, ain't I of use! See what a fuss there will be when they think I'm going! But Haunt can afford a good wage, and there's lots of fellows to be had."

"You ungrateful cub!" cried the old lady; "is this all your thanks for their kindness taking you in, and making a man of you! You were glad enough to find a home here when you were a wretched hungry little boy."

"Begging your pardon, my lady, I never was," said John, with a gleam of courage. "I'd have been a deal better with father if they'd let me alone. He'd a got me into the regiment as a drummer, and I'd been in the band afore this. And that's the sort of life to suit me. I ain't one of your dull sort,—I likes life. This kind of a dismal old country place never was the place for me."

"You ungrateful, unkind, impertinent!"——

Mrs. Mowbray stopped short. She could not get out all the words that poured from her lips, and the sight of him there opposite silenced her after all. Mrs. Aikin's goodness to this boy had been the wonder and admiration of everybody round. They had considered her foolishly generous,—Quixotic, almost absurd, in her kindness; and now to hear his opinion of it! This bold ingratitude closes the spectator's mouth. Perhaps, after all, it is better to leave the bramble wild, and the street boy in the gutter; and give up all attempts to improve the one or the other. But there is nothing which so silences natural human sentiment and approval of charity and kindness. Mrs. Mowbray was struck dumb. Who could tell that he had not even some shadow of justice in his wrong,—something that excused his doubt, but nothing to excuse his unkindness? This strange suggestion took away her breath.

"They've had their own way," said John; "they did it to please themselves; and that's what they'd like to do again—marry me right off,—a fellow at my age, and stop my fun! But I'm not the sort to have a girl thrust down my throat. I'll have my fling first, or else I'll have nothing to say to it. Now, my lady," he added, lowering his voice, and coming a step nearer, "if you'll stand my friend! There's nobody as Haunt and Jeyeyne thinks so much of as you. If you says it they won't oppose. I don't want to quarrel with nobody; but I will have my fling, and see the world!"

"And so you shall!" cried Mrs. Mowbray; "if I can manage it. So you shall, my man! Get out of Jane's way,—that's all I want of you. And I think better of you since you proposed it! Yes, yes! I'll take it all upon me! There's nothing I wish for more than that you should take yourself out of this. Have your fling! And I hope you'll fling yourself a hundred miles out of the reach of the Barley Mow!"

John looked at her with dull amazement. What did she mean? His thanks were stopped upon his lips. For, after all, this was not a pleasant way of having his choice backed up. "Get out of Jane's way!" His heavy self-complacency was ruffled for the moment. "I don't mind how far I go," he said, with a suspicious look.

"Nor I, I assure you," cried Mrs. Mowbray, briskly; "I'll plead your cause;" and with that she turned round and went back again, forgetting all about the sunset. Nature is hardly treated by the best of us; we let her come in when we have nothing else in hand, but forget her as soon as a livelier human interest claims our attention. This was how even the old lady, who had been so meditatively occupied by Nature, treated the patient mother now.

Next day was Sunday, and of course Mrs. Mowbray could not enter upon this business which she had undertaken then. But when there is any undercurrent of feeling or complication of rival wishes in a family, Sunday is a very dangerous day, especially when the family belongs to the lower regions of society, and the Sunday quiet affords means of communication not always to be had. This, of course, was scarcely the case among the household at the Barley Mow, but the habit of their class was upon them, and the natural fitness of Sunday for an important announcement, joined, it is to be supposed, with the fact that he had already unbosomed himself to one person, drew John's project out. When Mrs. Mowbray accordingly took her way to Mrs. Aikin's on the Monday morning, more and more pleased as she thought of it, with the idea of getting John out of the way, she saw at once by the aspect of both mother and daughter that her news was no news. The two women had both a look of agitation and seriousness which on Mrs. Aikin's part was mingled with resentment. She was discoursing upon her chickens when Mrs. Mowbray found her way into the barnyard. "They don't care what troubles folks has with them, not they," she was saying with a flush on her cheek. "The poor hen, as has sat on her nest all day, and never got off to pick a bit o' food. What's that to them, the little yellow senseless things? And them as we've brought up and cared for all our lives, and should know better, is just as bad." Jane was putting up a setting of Bramahpootra eggs for somebody. She was very pale, and made no reply to her mother, but her hand trembled a little as she put them into the packet. "What is the matter?" said the old lady as she came in. Jane gave her a silent look and said nothing. "La bless us, ma'am, what should be the matter?" said Mrs. Aikin. They were so disturbed that Mrs. Mowbray did a thing which she was not at all in the habit of doing. She departed from her original intention, and said nothing at all of her mission, concluding, as was the fact, that John himself had spoken. No later than that afterooon, however, her self-denial was rewarded, for Mrs. Aikin came to the Thatched Cottage, curtseying and apologetic. "I saw as you didn't believe me, ma'am," she said. "There is nobody like you for seeing how things is. A deal has happened, and I don't know whether I'm most pleased or unhappy. For one thing it's all settled between Johnny and Jane."

"All settled!" the old lady was so much surprised that she could scarcely speak.

"Yes, ma'am, thank you, the poor dears! I always said that as soon as he knew his own mind—There ain't a many lads as one can see through like our John."

"You didn't wish it then?" said Mrs. Mowbray. "I should have thought this morning that something bad had happened. You didn't wish it! Then we've all been doing you injustice, my dear woman, for I thought you had set your heart on this all along."

"And so I have; and I'm as happy—that happy I don't know what to do with myself," said Mrs. Aikin, putting her apron to her eyes.

"Happy! nobody would think it to look at you—nor Jane. I thought I knew you like my A, B, C, but now I can't tell a bit what you mean."

"Jane, she's all of a flutter still, and she's that humble-minded, all her thought is, Will she make him happy? But you don't suppose, ma'am, as I think any such nonsense—lucky to get her, I say, and so does everybody. It ain't that. But he's been seeing his father, and his father's put nonsense in the lad's head. I always said as he'd do it. Johnny's the best of boys; he'd never have thought of such a thing if it hadn't been put in his head. He says he wants to go out into the world and see a bit of life afore he settles down."

"And that is what troubles you? If I were you I should let him go," said the old lady. "Lucky! I should think he was lucky. A young fellow like that! He is not half good enough for Jane."

"Well, ma'am," said Mrs. Aikin, half ruffled, half pleased, "it is well known who was always your pet, and a great honour for her and me too—and I don't know how it is as folks do such injustice to our John. It's all the father, well I know; leave him to himself and a better boy couldn't be. But I've written him a letter and given him a piece of my mind. It's him as always puts fancies in the boy's head. See the world! Where could he see the world better than at the Barley Mow! Why there's a bit of everything at our place. There's them gentlemen cricketers in the summer, and the best quality in the kingdom coming and going at Ascot time, and London company in the best parlours most every Sunday through the season. All sorts there is. There was never a week, summer or winter, so long as I can remember, but something was going on at the Barley Mow. Summer, it's nothing but taking money from morning to-night. I don't mean to say," said Mrs. Aikin, suddenly recollecting that this sounded like a confession of large profits such as no woman in trade willingly acknowledges—"I don't mean to say as the expenses ain't great, or as it's all profit, far from it. But what I says to Johnny I don't deny anywhere—it's a living—and it's the amusingest living and the most variety of any I know."

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES

WITH SPECIAL NOVELTIES and Patented Improvements.
Without Addition to the Recently Reduced Prices.
The Cheapest and Best.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

WITH New SELF-ADJUSTING
BALANCE WHEEL
are the Most Simple and Perfect for Family Sewing and every Variety of Needlework.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

REDUCED PRICE from £4 4s
Cash £4.
With New Patent Triple Action
Balance Wheel,
Which is Self-Adjusting
In its Perfect Control by Learners

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

HAND OR TREADLE,
with
Self-Adjusting Balance Wheel.
On Hire at 2s. 6d. per Week,
with Option of Purchase Without Extra Charge or Expense.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

With NOVEL THREAD-COCOON
and Cocoon Shuttle Case.
The Latest Improvement.
No Re-winding of Thread.
Perfect Sewing, with Great Saving of Time.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

ARE THE MOST HIGHLY PERFECTED for Every Class of Lock-Stitch Sewing,
Braiding, and Embroidery,
and are the Cheapest.
Price from £4 4s. Cash £4
No Re-winding of Thread.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED and Largest Sale
in Every Country.
Hand or Treadle.
With New Patent Self-adjusting
Balance Wheel.
On Hire at 2s. 6d. per Week

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

WITH SELF-ADJUSTING
BALANCE WHEEL.
Machine cannot be turned in wrong direction.
Perfection for those learning to Sew.
And for Every Variety of Family
Sewing, Embroidery, and Braiding.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

WITH SPECIAL IMPROVEMENTS.
The New Thread Cocoons,
On Sale at all the Offices of the Company.
Price per dozen or per gross.
As cheap as Cotton on Spools.
No Re-winding of Thread.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

With Novel THREAD-COCOON
Ready wound for use.
Makes a Perfect Tension,
With a Precision and Beauty of Stitch
Unequalled by any other Machine.
No Re-winding of Thread.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

HAND or TREADLE,
On Hire, at 2s. 6d. per Week, with
OPTION of PURCHASE,
Can be Returned at any Time, or Purchased at any Time,
Without Addition to the Price,
or any Extra Charges of any kind.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES. SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

CAUTION.

BEWARE OF PERSONS, WHO HAVING NO GOOD TRADE
REPUTE OF THEIR OWN, USE OUR NAME,
"SINGER,"
To PALM OFF COUNTERFEIT MACHINES
of Inferior Construction and Manufacture

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

EVERY SINGER MACHINE
Has the COMPANY'S NAME
PRINTED UPON THE ARM,
And
Impressed upon the Brass-Trade-Mark Plate.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

To Avoid Deception
Buy only at the Offices of
THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY.
(Formerly I. and M. Singer and Co.)
CHIEF OFFICE in EUROPE—
39, Foster Lane, London, E.C.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES. SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES. SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.

District Offices in London :—

Cheapside, E C, 147
Oxford Street, W, 132
Commercial Road, E, 12
Brompton Road, S W, 144
High Street, Croydon, S E., 11r.
South Street, Greenwich, S.E., 13r.
Castle St., Kingsland High St., 3.
Newington Causeway, S E, 31 and 33.
Clarence Street, Kingston, S.W

AND 214 OTHER BRANCH OFFICES
throughout the
UNITED KINGDOM.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

Imperial 8vo, handsomely bound, gilt edges, 8s.
ENGLISH PICTURES, Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By the Rev. SAMUEL MANNING, LL.D., and the Rev. S. G. GREEN, D.D. With Coloured Frontispiece and numerous Wood Engravings.

Imperial 8vo, 8s., handsomely bound in cloth gilt,
AMERICAN PICTURES, Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By SAMUEL MANNING, LL.D. Profusely Illustrated in the best style of Wood Engraving by eminent English and Foreign Artists.

Imperial 8vo, 8s., handsomely bound, gilt edges,
THE LAND OF THE PHARAOHS: EGYPT and SINAI. Illustrated by Pen and Pencil. By SAMUEL MANNING, LL.D., Author of "Those Holy Fields," "Swiss Pictures," &c. Profusely Illustrated with fine Engravings.

Imperial 8vo, 8s., handsomely bound, gilt edges,
THOSE HOLY FIELDS: PALESTINE. Illustrated by Pen and Pen and Pencil. By SAMUEL MANNING, LL.D. Uniform with "Swiss Pictures," "Italian Pictures," &c. Profusely Illustrated.

Imperial 8vo, 8s., cloth elegant,
ITALIAN PICTURES, Drawn with PEN and PENCIL. By SAMUEL MANNING, LL.D. Profusely Illustrated.

Imperial 8vo, 8s., cloth elegant,
SPANISH PICTURES, Drawn with PEN and PENCIL. By SAMUEL MANNING, LL.D. With Illustrations by Gustave Doré and other Eminent Artists.

Imperial 8vo, 8s. cloth elegant,
SWISS PICTURES, Drawn with PEN and PENCIL. By SAMUEL MANNING, LL.D. With numerous Illustrations by Whymper and others.

Imperial 8vo, 6s., bevelled cloth boards, gilt edges,
INGLESIDE AND WAYSIDE MUSINGS. A companion volume to "The Harvest Quiet Eye." By the same Author. With numerous fine Engravings. [Ready in January.

Imperial 16mo, 3s., cloth elegant
SONNETS OF THE SACRED YEAR. By the Rev. S. J. STONE, M.A. Neatly printed with bordered pages.

Small 4to, 8s., cloth boards, gilt edges,
THE HOMES AND HAUNTS OF LUTHER. By the Rev. Dr. STOUGHTON. With numerous Engravings by Whymper and others.

Small 4to, 8s., handsome bevelled boards, gilt edges,
LYRICS OF ANCIENT PALESTINE. Poetical and Pictorial Illustrations of Old Testament History. With Illustrations by Skelton, Staniland, A. de Neuville, and others; engraved by Whymper.

Imperial 8vo, 7s., cloth; 8s 6d., gilt edges; 10s 6d, half calf,
THE LEISURE HOUR VOLUME for 1877 contains 828 pages of Interesting Reading. Well illustrated by eminent Artists.

Imperial 8vo, 7s., cloth; 8s 6d., gilt edges; 10s 6d., half calf,
THE SUNDAY AT HOME VOLUME for 1877 contains 828 pages of Sunday Reading, profusely Illustrated with Wood Engravings and Coloured Pictures.

Complete in one volume, 4s., handsomely bound, gilt edges,
BIBLE PICTURES FOR OUR PETS. With large Illustrations, drawn by Selous, Staniland, Webb, Watson, Harrison Weir, Downard, Doré, and other well-known Artists. Quarto.

London: 56, Paternoster Row; 65, St. Paul's Churchyard; and 164, Piccadilly; Brighton, 31, Western Road; Manchester, 100, Corporation Street; Liverpool, 18, Slater Street.

ALL BUYERS OF
CHRISTMAS AND NEW-YEAR'S GIFTS should obtain a Catalogue of the Society's Publications, which may be had gratis from the Depositories or through any Bookseller.

THE THREE MAGAZINES

FOR THE NEW YEAR.

THE QUIVER. "An outlay of sixpence upon THE QUIVER will not be regretted by those who are desirous of finding something at once easy to understand and worth the reading. The illustrations are a very pleasant feature in the number."—Guardian.

THE QUIVER.—New Volume commenced with the November Part. Price 6d. Order THE QUIVER FOR NOVEMBER, price 6d.

THE QUIVER.
List of some of the contributors to "The Quiver."
His Grace the Archbishop of CANTERBURY.
His Grace the Archbishop of YORK.
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of BATH and WELLS.
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of CARLISLE.
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of DERRY
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of GLOUCESTER and BRISTOL.
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of ROCHESTER.
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of ST. ALBANS.
The Very Rev. the Dean of CANTERBURY.
Rev. Canon BARRY, D.D., D.C.L.
Rev. Canon BATEMAN, M.A.
Rev. Canon FARRAR, D.D., F.R.S.
Rev. Canon ELLIOTT, B.D.
Rev. Canon RYLE, M.A.
Rev. Prebendary CHADWICK, B.D.
Rev. Prebendary JACKSON, M.A.
Rev. DANIEL MOORE, M.A.
Rev. P. B. POWER, B.A.
Rev. W. BOYD CARPENTER, M.A.
Rev. R. MAGUIRE, D.D.
Among Contributors of Original Sacred Music are Sir JOHN GOSS, Mus. D., Composer to Her Majesty's Chapels Royal.
Sir GEORGE ELVEY, Mus. D., Organist of the Chapel Royal, Windsor.
Sir H. S. OAKELEY, Professor of Music in the University of S. Edinburgh.
Sir R. P. STEWART, Mus. D., Professor of Music in the University of Dublin.
G. A. MACFARREN, Mus. D., Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge.
E. J. HOPKINS, Organist of the Temple
CHARLES STEGGALL, Mus. D., Organist of Lincoln's Inn.
JOSEPH BARNBY, Precentor of Eton College.
J. F. BRIDGE, Mus. D., Westminster Abbey.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE.—"Its character is so marked and decided that we have no hesitation in giving 'Cassell's Family Magazine' the FIRST POSITION AMONG THE MONTHLIES for the people."—Edinburgh Courant.

Now ready; price 7d,
CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE for DECEMBER, forming the First Part of a New Volume, and containing the commencement of two new Serial stories and many new features of attraction.

LITTLE FOLKS.—"The praise of 'Little Folks' is among all the critics as the perfect ideal of a magazine for the young."—Glasgow Mail.

On Dec. 20th will be published, price 6d
LITTLE FOLKS for JANUARY. Being the First Part of the New Volume for 1878. Containing a beautiful coloured Frontispiece, entitled, "HURRAH FOR THE SNOW."

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S GIFTS, REWARDS, PRIZES, BIRTHDAY PRESENTS, &c.
CASSELL, PETTER, and GALPIN'S COMPLETE CATALOGUE, containing a List of SEVERAL HUNDRED VOLUMES, consisting of Bibles and Religious Works (including Dr. Farrar's "Life of Christ" in its complete volume form), Fine-Art Volumes, Children's Books, Dictionaries, Educational Works, History, Natural History, Household and Domestic Treatises, Hand-Books and Guides, Science, Travels, &c., &c., together with a Synopsis of their numerous Illustrated Serial Publications, sent post free on application to CASSELL, PETTER, and GALPIN, Ludgate Hill, London.

GRIFFITH and FARRAN'S Gift-Books FOR CHRISTMAS AND THE NEW YEAR.

MASTERPIECES OF ANTIQUE ART. From the Celebrated Collections in the Vatican, the Louvre, and the British Museum. By STEPHEN THOMPSON, Author of "Old English Homes," "Old Masters," &c. Twenty-five Examples in Permanent Photography. Elegantly bound. 42s.

OXFORD UNDERGRADUATE LIFE.
WILTON OF CUTHBERT'S. By the Rev. H. C. ADAMS, M.A., Author of "Hairbreadth Escapes," &c. Illustrated by John Lawson. 5s.; gilt, 5s. 6d.

"THOSE UNLUCKY TWINS!"—"The brightest, merriest, jolliest little pair of monkeys in the world." By ANNETTE LYSTER. Ten Illustrations by John Proctor. 2s. 6d.

CAST ADRIFT; the Story of a Waif. Suitable for Girls of from Twelve to Sixteen Years of Age. By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN. Eight Illustrations by Miss C. Paterson. 3s 6d., gilt edges, 4s.

LITTLE MAY'S FRIENDS; or, Country Pets and Pastimes. A Story inculcating the gentle and benevolent treatment of dumb animals. By ANNIE WHITTEM. Ten Illustrations by Harrison Weir. 3s 6d., gilt, 4s.

A STORY OF ETON SCHOOL LIFE.
TALENT IN TATTERS; or, Some Vicissitudes in the Life of an English Boy. By HOPE WRAYTHE. With Eight Illustrations. 3s. 6d.; gilt, 4s.

TEN OF THEM; or, The Children of Danehurst. Full of lively fun and amusing reading for boys and girls alike. By Mrs R. M. BRAY, Author of "Jack a Nory," &c. Twelve Illustrations by A. H. COLLINS. 2s 6d.

THE SECRET OF WREXFORD; or, Stella Desmond's Search. By EMMA CASS. Chiefly suited for young girls, but not without adventure that boys may relish. 8 Illusts. by Miss C. Paterson. 2s 6d.

MADELON: a Story. By the Same. 2s. 6d. "A pretty little tale, quite worth telling."—Times.

W. H. G. KINGSTON'S NEW BOOK.
THE THREE ADMIRALS, AND THE ADVENTURES OF THEIR YOUNG FOLLOWERS. Illustrated by J. R. Wells and C. J. Staniland. 6s.; bevelled boards, gilt edges, 7s 6d.
By the same Author, uniform with the above in size and price.
THE MISSING SHIP
THE THREE COMMANDERS.
THE THREE LIEUTENANTS.
THE THREE MIDSHIPMEN.
HURRICANE HURRY.

New Editions of Popular Books by the same Author.
FRED MARKHAM IN RUSSIA; or, The Boy Travellers in the Land of the Czar. Third Thousand. Illustrated, 3s. 6d.; gilt edges, 4s

MARK SEAWORTH: a Tale of the Indian Ocean. Sixth Thousand. Illustrated, 3s. 6d.; gilt edges, 4s.

OUR SOLDIERS; or, Anecdotes of the Campaigns and Gallant Deeds of the British Army during the Reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria. With an Account of the Abyssinian Expedition. Eighth Thousand. New and Revised Edition, with Frontispiece, 3s.; gilt, 3s. 6d.

OUR SAILORS; or, Anecdotes of the Engagements and Gallant Deeds of the British Navy. Eighth Thousand. New and Revised Edition, with Frontispiece, 3s.; gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY M. E. B.
THE THREE WISHES. By the Author of "Clement's Trial and Victory," "Little Lisette," &c. Illust. by C. O. Murray. 1s 6d.

BRAVE NELLY: or, Weak Hands and a Willing Heart. By the Same. Third Thousand. Illust. by C. O. Murray. 1s. 6d.

GRIFFITH and FARRAN, WEST CORNER OF ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, LONDON.

C. BECHSTEIN, BERLIN, Pianoforte Manufacturer, by Special Appointment, to His Majesty the Emperor of Germany, H.R.H. Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Germany (Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland). First Prize Gold Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867. BECHSTEIN INSTRUMENTS are recommended by all leading artists as the best and cheapest. Price lists and testimonials post free.
Central Depot for the British Empire: 10, RATHBONE PLACE, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.

TO LADIES.—SALE of NEW MUSIC at a large reduction in price.—The most popular songs, pieces, or dances of the day sent post free from 4d., 6d., 8d., 10d., 1s., &c. Best editions, new copies, all publishers. Catalogues sent post free.—A. M. MOFFATT, 3, Barnsbury St., N.

MUSICAL BOXES, by Nicole, Freres. —KEITH, PROWSE, and CO., direct importers, have the largest Stock of really fine BOXES in Europe, £3 to £300. The new rooms devoted to the display of these instruments are now ready. Self-acting and Barrel Pianoforte, 18 guineas to 300 guineas.

FLUTES.—NEW MODEL, for beauty of tone unsurpassed, four guineas and seven guineas; Rudall's Prize-medal Flutes, new and second-hand. A great variety of second-hand Flutes, one guinea to 25 guineas, at KEITH, PROWSE, and CO.'s Manufactory, 48, Cheapside.

BANJOES.—CHEAPSIDE MODEL is best. Covered back, machine head, &c., five guineas; including light case, £6. Other models one to twelve guineas. Self-instructing book, with airs, songs, &c., 6s. net, post free.—KEITH, PROWSE, and CO., Manufacturers, 48, Cheapside.

BUTLER'S MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Violins, Harmoniums, Concertinas, Flutes, Flageolets, Guitars, Banjoes, Accordions, Flutinas, Zithers, and Musical Instruments of every description. Largest assortment in the kingdom at BUTLER'S MANUFACTORY, 29, Haymarket, London.—Illustrated catalogues of 50 pages, sent free by post.

BUTLER'S BRASS BAND INSTRUMENTS, Cornets, Saxhorns, Drums, Flutes, Fifes, Clarionets, &c., are in use in all parts of the kingdom and colonies, giving universal satisfaction. Manufactory—29, Haymarket, London. Prices, with drawings, post free.

RIMMEL'S PERFUMED ALMANACKS (Arts and Sciences), 6d. FAN ALMANACKS, 6d. COMIC POCKET BOOK (Olympus), 1s. Christmas Cards and Presents in great variety. List on application.—E. RIMMEL, Perfumer, 96, Strand, 128, Regent Street, 24, Cornhill, London; and 76, King's Road, Brighton.

THE LAST MOMENTS OF MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.—Sichel's Grand Historical Painting has just been reproduced by the Oleographic Process in a sumptuous and splendid style. Price £5 5s.
The very best Oleograph yet produced. It would grace any Drawing Room. Will go very far to remove any prejudice that yet exists against the new Art.—ART JOURNAL, Nov., 1877.
Marks the attainment of a very high point indeed in the modern process of reproducing Oil Paintings by Oleography.—THE TIMES, October 15, 1877.
Of all Fine Art Dealers, and of the Publishers, RAPHAEL TUCK, 177, City Road, London. Prospectus and Key post free.

A BASHI-BAZOOK and A DON COSSACK. Just Published, Two fine Cabinet Studies in Crayon in the Frank Miles style, after Helen K. Shaw. Guaranteed not to fade. Price 1s. each plain, or 2s 6d. each coloured by hand in water-colours. Of all the Fine Art dealers, or post free on receipt of stamps from the Publisher, RAPHAEL TUCK, 177, City Road, London.

DINNEFORD'S FLUID MAGNESIA. For over 30 Years approved as the best Remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN, HEADACHE, GOUT, and INDIGESTION; and as a safe and gentle Aperient for delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.—DINNEFORD and CO., 172, New Bond Street, London, and of all Chemists.

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—Universally recommended by the Medical Profession. A pure old spirit, mild, mellow, delicious, and most wholesome. Dr. HASSALL says:—"The samples were soft and mellow to the taste, aromatic and ethereal to the smell. The Whisky must be pronounced to be pure, well-matured, and of very excellent quality."

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.

THE GREATEST OF ALL PIANOFORTES.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.
STEINWAY HALL, NEW YORK.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.
STEINWAY HALL, LOWER SEYMOUR STREET,
PORTMAN SQUARE, LONDON, W.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.—Attention is directed to the CHANGE in the LONDON ADDRESS of Messrs. Steinway and Sons, their new and enlarged premises, like the recent addition of 400 acres to their business territory in New York, having been rendered necessary by the pressure of the world-wide demand for their Instruments.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.
Grand, Upright, and Square.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.—The supremacy of the Steinway Pianofortes in relation to all Pianofortes throughout the world is a fact which has long since been removed from the arena of discussion, it being certified by every possible form of appropriate evidence.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. Merely comparative superiority, however, does not convey an adequate conception of the merits of the Steinway Pianofortes, nor of the complete revolution in pianoforte construction throughout Europe and America which the creative genius of Messrs. Steinway and Sons has enabled them to accomplish. Every improvement in the pianoforte made within the past quarter of a century—the most fertile period in its history—has been the creation of Messrs. Steinway and Sons; and, conversely, every maker, without exception, who has not empirically copied the Steinway Pianoforte has made no improvement in his instruments, but remains a mere reproducer of the primitive and imperfect types of the pianoforte belonging to a past generation.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.—It should also be understood that no one can form a true conception of the scientific, artistic, and structural perfection to which the pianoforte has now attained who has not seen and heard a Steinway Pianoforte; and, in the words of one of the most accomplished of modern pianists—"in them is found the Ideal Instrument."

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.
Typical Extracts from recognised Authorities

HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF SWEDEN.—"Your beautiful Instrument, by its noble tones, excited general admiration at the solemn yearly meeting of December last, when it was heard for the first time; and it will, I am sure, in a very effective way, benefit the pianoforte instruction at our Conservatoire. The Royal Government has, at my request, been pleased to decree to you the National Gold Medal, bearing the inscription—'His qui artes excoluere laboribus;' and the Royal Academy has, in its first meeting of this year, unanimously called upon Mr. Theodore Steinway to take a place as member of its Honourable Corporation.—Believe me, Sirs, yours most sincerely, OSCAR."

PRESIDENT MUSIC DEPARTMENT, PARIS ACADEMY OF ARTS.—"The Pianos of Messrs. STEINWAY appear to me, as well as to all the artists who have tried them, superior to all that have been made to this day in the entire world."

LISZT.—"The magnificent STEINWAY GRAND PIANO now stands in my music-room, and presents a harmonious totality of admirable qualities, a detailed enumeration of which is the more superfluous as this instrument fully justifies the world-wide reputation that for years you have everywhere enjoyed. After so much well-deserved praise, permit me also to add my homage and the expression of my undisguised admiration."

MADAME ESSIPOFF.—"The wonderful beauty and sympathetic quality of the tone of the STEINWAY PIANOFORTE, so delightful, and, so to speak, satisfying to the sense of hearing, arises from the perfect purity of its component parts, hence its richness and gem-like sparkle and brilliancy, which, together with the greatest possible volume, depth, sonority, with unequalled singing and carrying quality, render, to my taste, the Steinway tone the very essence of poetry.

"The action is perfection itself—responding with equal promptitude to the most delicate or the most powerful touch; and under the severest trials its wonderful precision, elasticity, and power remain unchanged, enabling the boundless resources of the Steinway Pianofortes to be fully unlocked, according to the inspiration of the artist.

"No other Pianofortes—European or American—known to me possess such extraordinary durability under the severest usage, nor combine all excellences in such a high degree as yours, and in them I have found my ideal instrument."

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.

RUBINSTEIN.—"On the eve of returning to Europe, I deem it my pleasant duty to express to you my my most heartfelt thanks for all the kindness and courtesy you have shown me during my stay in the United United States; but also, and above all, for your UNRIVALLED PIANOFORTES, which once more have done full justice to their world-wide reputation, both for excellence and capacity of enduring the severest trials; for during all my long and difficult journeys all over America, in a very inclement season, I used, and have been enabled to use, your Pianos exclusively in my 215 concerts, and also in private, with the most eminent satisfaction and effect."

MADAME ARABELLA GODDARD. "Your UNRIVALLED GRAND PIANOS are certainly the most perfect instruments I have met with, especially your latest achievement, the Centennial Grand Piano. Their volume of tone is simply marvellous, and at the same time of truly musical and poetic quality, which never changes its noble character under either the most delicate or the most powerful touch; with an action of the most unerring precision, power, elasticity, and unequalled durability under the severest trials."

RICHARD WAGNER.—"The incomparably magnificent STEINWAY GRAND PIANOFORTES."

MDLLE. TITIENS.—"I am deeply impressed and very much pleased with your magnificent PIANOFORTES, and consider they fully deserve their great reputation."

MISS ANNA MEHLIG.—"Your PIANOFORTES—with their sympathetic and poetic tone, their glorious sonority, yet wonderful evenness throughout their scales, their perfect and responsive action, their capacity of remaining in perfect tune and order under the severest trials of travel, changes of atmosphere, and of use—I prefer to all others."

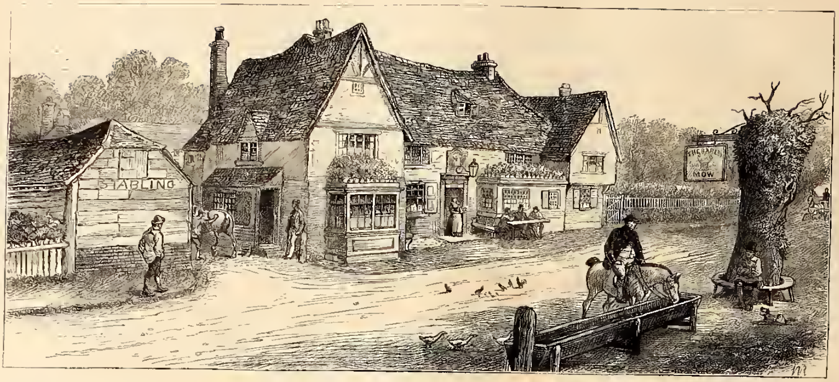
MISS MARIE KREBS.—"Their tone is marvellously grand, of exquisite poetic and sympathetic quality, which was to me a perfect revelation when trying the STEINWAY PIANO for the first time, and it is just this thoroughly musical quality of tone, inseparably characterising your pianos, which so grows both upon hearer and player, that a cultivated musical ear will prefer the tone of your pianos to all others. The touch is simply perfect—elastic, pliable, and promptly responding to every demand made by the pianist."

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.

PIANOFORTES FOR INDIA.—The STEINWAY Instruments are the only Pianofortes in the world which are capable of permanent endurance amid the severities of an Indian climate. Not only is each Model—Grand, Upright, and Square—constructed with a degree of solidity very far beyond that of any European Instruments, but also this solidity is an integral portion of their construction or prime factor in the production of their unrivalled artistic qualities, and not—as in all European pianofortes—a mere external adjunct imposed upon an inherently inferior and imperfect workmanship.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. Descriptive and Illustrated Catalogues will be forwarded post free to any part of the world.

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.
STEINWAY HALL,
Lower Seymour Street, Portman Square, London, W.



THE BARLEY MOW

"And yet he wants to see the world; there's no accounting for men's depravity. Do you mean to let him go?"

Mrs. Aikin laughed. "I ain't a good one to deceive," she said; "this morning I was all in a way, but now I've had time to think. You know yourself, ma'am, that to say 'No' is the way to make a boy more determined than ever. Seemingly I'm a giving in, but I don't mean to take no steps one way or other. I'll let things take their course. And now that Jane and him understands one another, and the summer trade's so brisk, who can say? Maybe it'll go out of his head if he ain't opposed. I've give my consent—so far as words goes—but I tell him as there's no hurry. We can wait."

She laughed again in thorough satisfaction with her own tactics. And Mrs. Mowbray, with a different sentiment, echoed the laugh. "Yes we can wait," the old lady said, "my poor little Jane!" That was all, but it made Mrs. Aikin angry, she could not tell why.

Mr. Peters at this period kept putting himself perpetually in Mrs. Mowbray's way. He went past her house for his walk, he came back again past the thatched cottage. She could scarcely go out in the evening that he did not turn up in her path, and for some days the old lady was cruel enough to say nothing to him. At last one evening she called the poor schoolmaster to her. "You must make up your mind to it like a man," she said, "Jane is going to marry her cousin. It is all settled. The mother told me, like a fool."

"All settled!" Poor Mr. Peters grew so pale that she thought he was going to faint. "I saw him," he gasped, "only yesterday, with——"

"Never mind, yes; that's quite true," said the old lady. "That woman has settled it like a fool. They are going to throw the girl away among them. But we cannot do anything. You must make up your mind to it like a man."

The schoolmaster's stiffness and embarrassment all melted away under the influence of strong feeling. He took off his hat unconsciously, showing a face that was like ashes. "Then God bless her," he said, "and turn away the evil. If she is happy, what does it matter about me!"

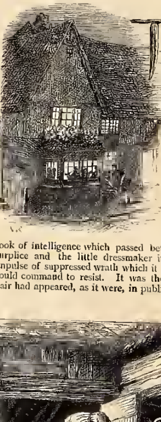
"She will never be happy," said the old lady, "never, with that lout; and the thing for us to do is to wait. I tell you, what you've got to do is to wait. After all, the devil seldom gets things all his own way."

Mr. Peters put on his hat again, and went away with a heavy heart. He did not go near the Barley Mow. He went home to his room, and sat there very desolate, reading poetry. He could bear it, he thought; but how could she bear it when she came to hear of Ellen Turner and those meetings in the lane?

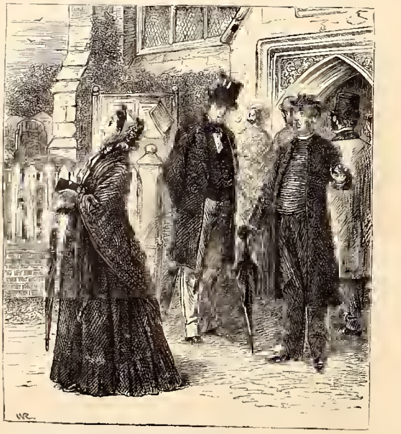
At present, however, nothing was known of Ellen Turner at the Barley Mow. The very next Sunday after that the women had forgotten all the evils of John's perversity, and remembered only the fact of the engagement, and that all doubt was over on the point which they thought so essential to their happiness. Mrs. Aikin had a new bonnet on, resplendent in red ribbons, and the happiness in Jane's face was better than any new bonnet. As it happened, there was a solo in the anthem that day which John sang standing up in his white surplice, and rolling out Handel's great notes so that they filled the church. He had a beautiful voice, and while he sang poor Jane's face was a sight to see. As he sang her countenance glowed with a kind of soft rapture. She clasped her hands unawares with the prayer-book held open in them, her eyes were raised, her lips apart, her nostrils slightly dilated. She had the look of a votary making a special offering. Poor simple Jane! There was no consciousness in her mind of any elevation above the rest, as she lifted that ineffable look, and praised God in a subdued ecstacy, offering to Him the voice of her beloved. For the moment Jane was as the prophets, as the poets, raised up above everything surrounding her, triumphing even over the doubt that was too ready to invade her. She was but a country girl, the maid of the inn, occupying the most unelevated and most unelevating of positions, but yet no lady of romance could have stood on a higher altitude, for the time.

CHAPTER IV.

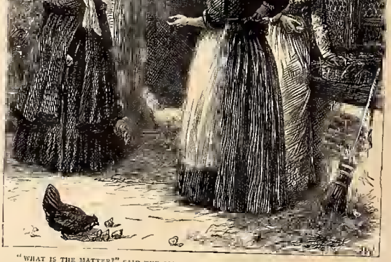
THE CATASTROPHE



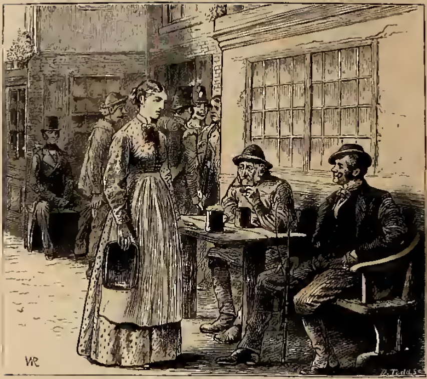
THIS however was the last time that Jane's look of modest silent happiness could touch any heart. Whether she caught sight of some private telegraphing which passed between her newly-betrothed and Ellen Turner in the very church that very day, is not known, but other people saw it with wonder and forebodings. Mr. Peters, who had seen the rapture in Jane's upturned face with a mingled pity and sympathy and pain which made him, too, heroic for the moment, perceived the nod and look of intelligence which passed between the baritone in the surplice and the little dressmaker in the free seats with an impulse of suppressed wrath which it took all the moral force he could command to resist. It was the first time the betrothed pair had appeared, as it were, in public, since it was known that



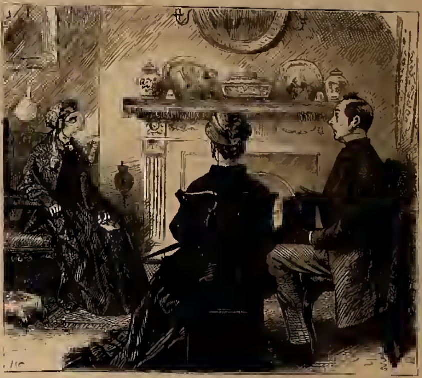
SHE WAS SO DESPERATELY OFFENDED, INDEED, THAT SHE WENT TO CHAPEL FOR FOUR SUNDAYS AFTER SHE HEARD OF IT, WALKING STRAIGHT PAST THE CHURCH DOORS, AND PROCLAIMING HER DEFECTION TO THE WHOLE WORLD



"WHAT IS THE MATTER?" SAID THE OLD LADY AS SHE CAME IN. . . . . "LA BLESS US, MA'AM, WHAT SHOULD BE THE MATTER?" SAID MRS. AIKIN

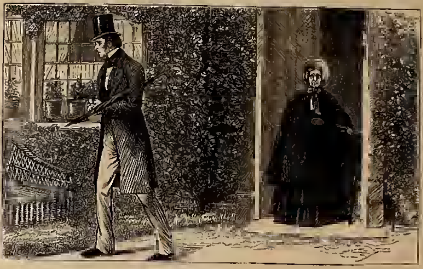


TO SEE HIM SEATED THEN IN HIS BLACK COAT, WITH THAT AIR OF RESPECTABILITY HALF ASHAMED OF ITSELF, WAS BOTH COMICAL AND TOUCHING



AS HE SPOKE THE OLD LADY TOOK UP HER SPECTACLES AGAIN, AND DELIBERATELY PUT THEM ON, LOOKING AT HIM AS IF (MRS. STOKE SAID) HE WAS A NATURAL CURIOSITY, WHICH SOMEWHAT DISCONCERTED THE EXCELLENT MAN

"all was settled." And was it for this, for a vulgar reprobate who betrayed her at the moment of union, while the first happiness ought still to have been in delicate blossom, that she had overlooked altogether the far more worthy love of the other? He could not help wondering over that any more than Jane herself, a little while later, could help wondering. The best thrown aside, the worst chosen—is not this a far more poignant and wonderful evil than the tyrannies of parents or hindrances of fate which keep lovers apart? But no more from that day did Jane's celestial content wound any sufferer. She grew grave, pale, almost visibly older from that moment. She withdrew herself from everybody. Even the old lady at the thatched cottage, who depended upon her for so many things, did not see her for weeks together. And their next meeting was a chance one, and took place on an August evening, about a month after these events. How Jane could have kept out of sight for so long was a mystery which nobody could have explained; but she had managed it somehow, sending respectful messages of regret by her mother. This time they met face to face without warning, as Mrs. Mowbray was returning in the cool of the evening from Sir Thomas Denzil's, where she had been dining. The old lady sent her maid away instantly, so anxious was she to have a conversation with her favourite. Jane for her part would fain have escaped, but she could not be rude to her kind old patroness, and Mrs. Mowbray took her arm quite eagerly. "You may go home, Morris," she said; and almost without waiting till the maid was gone, "What has become of you, Jane? Where have you been hiding? Is it because you are so happy, my dear, or for some other reason, that you run away from me?"—A nervous quiver went over poor Jane; she said with a trembling voice, "For another reason." She did not even look her old friend in the face.



MR. PETERS PUT ON HIS HAT AGAIN, AND WENT HOME WITH A HEAVY HEART

"Then what is it, my dear? Come, tell me. Don't you know whatever it is, you can't hide it from me."

To this Jane made answer by drooping her head and turning away her face; and then she pressed the old lady's hand, which was on her arm, to her side, and said hastily, "I was coming—I wanted you to speak for me—oh! ma'am, if you would speak to mother! about—about——"

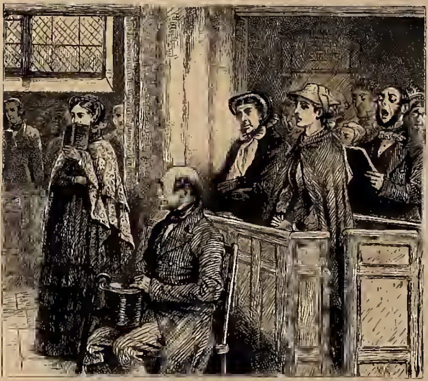
"What! my poor little Jane! What, dear? Tell me, tell me freely," said the old lady, almost crying. There could be but one subject that could excite the poor girl so.

"About John's going away. Oh, he's sick of this quiet place! I can see it—and mother takes no notice. Men are not like us women. He's dying to get away, and mother she can't see it. She humours him in words, but she will not do anything. Oh, ma'am, speak for us! He's had all we have to give him, and he's tired of it, and he never will be happy till he gets away."

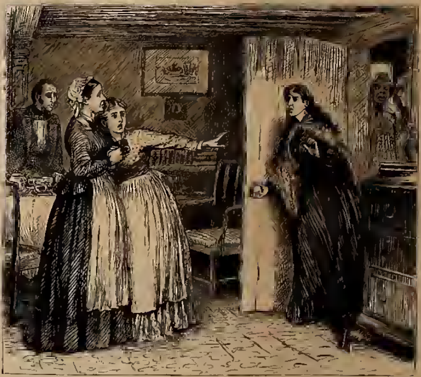
"Do you wish him to go.—You, Jane?"

"Yes," she cried, passionately, "I wish it, too!—it will make me happier. I mean not so—miserable——. Oh, ma'am, that's not what I mean. I am all confused like. I know—I know it's for his good to go away——."

"But it's your good I think of—and your mother, too," said Mrs. Mowbray. "We care for you, and not for him. You've avoided me, Jane, and never told you me if you were happy—but you're engaged, you and he——"



SHE CLASPED HER HANDS UNAWARES WITH THE PRAYER-BOOK HELD OPEN IN THEM, HER EYES WERE RAISED, HER LIPS APART, HER NOSTRILS SLIGHTLY DILATED



THE DISTURBANCE OUTSIDE CONTINUED, AND JUST AT THIS MOMENT THE WORDS BECAME AUDIBLE, ALONG WITH THE SOUND OF STEPS RUSHING TO THE DOOR. "MY 'USBAND! MY 'USBAND!" CRIED THE VOICE; "WHAT HAVE YOU DONE WITH MY 'USBAND?"

"It was a mistake," she said, "all a mistake! We didn't know our own minds. Don't you know, ma'am, that happens sometimes? I always felt it was a mistake—but mother deceived herself. It's so easy to believe what you wish. And he deceived himself. But now that he's done it it drives him wild——Oh, he must go—that's the only thing that will do any good. If she would only see it, and let him go!"

"Do you want to break it off, Jane?"

"Oh," she cried, with a moan, "break it off! Am I one to break it off? But he can't abide the place, and he wants to go. ——If he has any true—respect—for me—he'll feel it when he's gone. That's what I think. Oh! ma'am, speak a word to mother, and tell her to let him go."

"There is more in your mind," said the old lady, "but if it is as serious as this—I'll go there straight, my dear. I'll go straight and speak to your mother. I know you've got more in your mind."

Jane did not make any reply, but quickened her steps to keep up with the active old woman as she hurried on. Poor Jane was past all make-believe. "Think!" she said, almost under her breath, "what it is when he comes and pretends to be fond of me——Oh, ma'am! pretends as if he loved me—after all I know!" She wrung her hands, and there was a suppressed anguish in her voice, such as only a tender creature outraged could have been driven to. Then Mrs. Mowbray, who knew all the gossip of the place, remembered to have heard that Ellen Turner, who was a dressmaker, had been working at Mrs. Aikin's—no doubt that was the cause. She went along quickly, almost dragging the girl with her. It was a beautiful evening, soft, and cool after a hot day. The lights were beginning to twinkle about the Barley Mow. There were people sitting out on the bench, and people visible at the open windows with the lights behind them, and a murmur of cheerful voices. The scene was very homely, but the night was so soft, the shadows so grateful upon the refreshed earth, the dews so sweet, and nothing but rest and refreshment in the air. Overhead the sky was veiled, a few modest stars peeping from the edges of the clouds, nothing bright to jar upon the subdued quiet. All this went to Jane's heart. She began to cry softly, as she looked with wistful eyes at her home. The sensation subdued her. So peaceful and quiet, with the vague half-dim figures about, the cheerful lights in the windows, was it possible that there could be such trouble there?

But all at once there came a jarring note into this tranquillity—the sound of a woman's voice raised in anger. They were going towards the garden door, but before they reached it somebody was pushed out violently, and half falling forward, came stumbling against Jane, who was straight in the way. "Get out of my sight, you little baggage, you treacherous, wicked, lying creature, you bad girl!" cried Mrs. Aikin in a furious voice. Jane clutched at Mrs. Mowbray's arm, and shrank back, while the girl who had stumbled against her gave a sudden scream of dismay. It was Ellen Turner, her cheeks blazing red with anger, though the sight of Jane cowed her. "What have you been doing, you little flirt?" cried old Mrs. Mowbray. "If a man speaks to me, ain't I to give him a civil answer?" cried the girl standing still, and preparing to give battle. Jane did not say a word. She shook herself free of the old lady without knowing what she did, and went into her mother, without as much as a look at the other. As soon as she had disappeared John appeared out of the darkness like a spectre. "Run, Nell, run," he said. "She's safe now. She's in Jane's hands. I'll see you to-morrow. Run, Nell, run." And he darted back again among the guests, and threw himself into his work with devotion. Never before had John been seen so busy and so civil. Who could interfere with him in the middle of his work? He was as safe as if he had been at church.

What had happened was that Mrs. Aikin had found her nephew and the little dressmaker together, on very affectionate terms, and her outburst of sullen wrath was very hot and violent. But after the first moment it was entirely against Ellen that her anger was directed, and she was as little willing as before to listen to Mrs. Mowbray's suggestion that he should be sent away. She was, like most women of her class, perhaps like most women of all classes, furious against the girl, half sorry for, half contemptuous of the man. "Lord, what could Johnny do against one of them artful things?" she said, when she had calmed down. "It's Jane's fault, as don't talk to him enough, nor keep him going. That minx shall never set foot in my house again." Jane said very little while her mother talked thus. She was very pale, and her breath came quickly, but she betrayed no emotion either of grief or anger. She stood still by her mother's side while Mrs. Aikin cried and sobbed. Jane was past all that. She said, "He don't know his own mind, mother. Let him go as he wishes." They were both made incapable of work by this sudden incident. But John,—John had turned into a model of industry and carefulness. While the two women retired into their little parlour with the door shut, he, safe from all interference, kept everything going. He ran about here and there, attending to everybody, civil and thoughtful. When he was asked what was the matter, he answered carelessly, "Some row among the women," as if that was too trifling and too everyday a matter for his notice. He had never shown so much cleverness in all his life before.

Even after this, however, the widow still temporised. Yes, she said in words she would let him go, but after the bustle was over—after the summer work was done with. She gave a hundred excuses, and invented new reasons constantly for her delay. Jane said little, having said all she could. A new reserve crept over her, she talked to nobody—went no more to see Mrs. Peters, and never saw her old friend at the Thatched Cottage when she could help it. She was sick of her false position, as well as of those pangs which she told to nobody, which were all shut up in her own heart. No more in church or otherwise did the look of happiness come back to her face. When John sang she would stand with her eyes fixed on her book, or else would cover her face with her hand. The beautiful song was no longer hers to be offered up to God's praise. But sometimes during the sermon her eyes would turn unconsciously to that foolish pretty face in the free seats,—the pink and white countenance of Ellen Turner, inferior in beauty as in everything else to herself. "What is there in her that is better than me? Why should she be preferred to me?" was what Jane was asking herself, with a wondering pain that was half self-abasement and half indignation. Just so good Mr. Peters, in the school pew, gazed from her to the loutish bass in his surplice and back again. Why should fate be so contradictory and hearts so bitterly deceived?

This state of affairs, however, could not go on very long—and it came to a conclusion quite suddenly at last. There was an agricultural show in the neighbourhood some twenty miles off from Ingleton, to which all the rural people of the neighbourhood, and John among them, went, at the end of August. In other circumstances Jane would have gone with her cousin; but she had no heart for shows of any kind. In the evening most of the Ingleton people came home, but not John. Mrs. Aikin was evidently frightened by his non-appearance, but she made the best of it. "He had gone to see his friends," she said, "and of course he had missed his train. He was always missing trains. He was the carelessest lad!" But when next day came, and the next, with no news of John, the mother and daughter could no longer disguise their alarm. The widow "was in such a way" that her friends gathered round her full of condolence and encouragements; and Mrs. Mowbray herself put on her bonnet, and went to tell her not to be a fool, and to bid her remember that young men cannot be held in like girls. "I know that, ma'am, I know that," said Mrs. Aikin, soothed. The rest of her consolers had encouraged her by telling her they had always foreseen it, and that this was what over-indulgence always came to at last. The widow turned her back upon these Job's comforters, and clutched at Mrs. Mowbray's shawl. "I've held him too tight, ma'am, and I should have taken your advice," she said. They had sent expresses in all directions in search of him, and that very evening they had information that he had enlisted in the regiment to which his father had formerly belonged, and which was at the time quartered in the town where the show had been held. This is always, though it is hard to say why, terrible news for a decent family. "'Listed!" do not all the vagabonds, the good-for-nothings, 'list? It was Mr. Peters who brought this news to the two anxious women. He had been in Castleville "by accident," he said; the truth being that he had given the children a holiday on purpose to offer this humble service to the woman who had his heart. It was good news, though it was such bad news, for the widow's imagination had begun to jump at all sorts of fatal accidents, and he was made kindly welcome, and allowed to remain with them until Mrs. Aikin's first fit of distress and relief, and shame and vexation, and content was over. "It's his father, it's all his father," she said. "Such a thought would never, never have come into our Johnny's head." Mr. Peters, with trembling anxiety, observed that Jane did not say a word. She was moving about with her usual quickness, preparing tea, that the kind visitor who had taken so much trouble should have some refreshment after his long walk. She was full of suppressed excitement, her cheek less pale than usual, her eyes shining. But she said nothing till her mother's outburst was over. Mrs. Aikin was a foolish, soft-hearted, sanguine woman. As soon as she knew the worst her mind leapt at a universal mending and making up. She had no sooner dried her eyes and swallowed a cup of tea, after protesting that she "could not touch it," than she began with a certain timidity in another tone.

"It's well known what most families do when such a thing happens," she said, with a sigh, "folks as has more money than we have. And I've heard say as it was a foolish thing to do; but when you consider all things——Lads is so silly, they never see what they're doing till after it's done, and past changing—past their changing I mean."

Jane did not say anything, but she stood still suddenly in the middle of the room to listen, with a startled look.

"I dare to say he's repented long before this," said the widow, "him as never was put to hard work nor ordered about, him as had most things his own way, though he mightn't know it. It might have been better for Johnny if you and me hadn't been so fond of him, Jane—and it will all tell upon him now. We've spoiled him, and we're leaving him to bear it by himself! Oh! Jane! Jane!"

"What is it, mother? You are thinking of something," said Jane, with a harsh tone, quite unusual to her, in her voice.

"Oh, Jane, you're hard-hearted, you ain't forgiving, you're not like me," cried the widow. "If you were the girl folks think you, you would come to me on your knees, that's what you would do, to get me to buy him off——"

"Oh, mother, mother, I knew that was what you were coming to. Don't do it! I cannot bear it. I cannot go on with it. You may save him, but you'll kill me."

"Kill you—what has it got to do with you?" said Mrs. Aikin, drying her eyes. "Thank the Lord, it ain't so bad but what it can be mended—when one comes to think of it! I'll write to the lawyer this very night."

"If I can of any use," said Mr. Peters, faltering. The more he felt it was against himself, the more he was anxious to do it to show, if only to himself, that it was Jane and not his own interest that was nearest to his thoughts. But the poor man felt chilled to the heart as he made his offer. He did not understand Jane. It was only an impulse of anger, he thought, against the lover for whom, no doubt, she was longing in her heart.

"You're very kind, Mr. Peters—very kind. I'll never forget it—and you think it's the right thing, don't you, now? He ain't fit for the army, isn't Johnny. He was always delicate in the chest, and needs to be taken a deal of notice of. And to give him up all for one thing—all for a minute's foolishness."

"Mother!" said Jane, with a shrill tone of passion in her voice, "he is not to come back here again; let him be!"

"No—no—no. You'll be the first to thank me, though you've lost your temper now. The fright will do him a deal of good," Mrs. Aikin said, getting up with all her cheerfulness restored. "We'll leave him a week or so just to see the error of his ways, and then we'll buy him off, and have him back, and settle everything. Poor lad! You may take my word he's miserable enough, thinking of you and me, and wondering what we are thinking of him. Poor John! We won't go on shilly-shallying any longer, but we'll have it all settled when he comes home."

She was still speaking with the smile on her face which these pleasant anticipations had brought there when a sudden commotion got up outside—loud voices, and something like a scuffle. Sounds of this kind are not so rare or so alarming even at the best regulated of taverns as they are in a private house, and the widow paid but little attention. She went across the room, and opened her big, old-fashioned chest. Her heart was warmed and her face brightened by her resolution. Jane gave a glance of despair at Mr. Peters (which he no more understood than if he had not seen it). She went across the room after her mother, and laid her hand on her shoulder. "Mother," she said, "don't do it—don't do it, let him have his choice."

"Ah! what was that?" cried Mrs. Aikin, with a start.

The disturbance outside continued, and just at this moment the words became audible, along with the sound of steps rushing to the door. "My 'usband, my 'usband!" cried the voice, "what have you done with my 'usband?" The mother and daughter turned round by a common impulse, and looked at each other—then stood as if stiffened into stone, with their faces to the door. Without another word said they knew what it meant. They needed no further explanation, nor the sight of Ellen Turner, all in disorder, with her hair hanging about her neck, and her face swollen with tears, who suddenly dashed the door open, and came wildly in. "John, John! I want my 'usband," the poor creature cried, half demented. Jane shrank back against her mother, leaning on her heavily, then cast a wondering gaze around, appealing as it were to earth and heaven. Could it be true? She put out one hand to the girl to silence her, and turned round and leant against the wall, with a gasp for breath and a low moan. This was all the demonstration she made. She was not even conscious of the altercation that followed, the crying, and questioning, and denying. Jane turned her face to the wall. People have died and broken their hearts with less pain. The world seemed to go round with her, and all truth and sense to fail.

When she was seen again, which indeed was next day, moving about her work as if nothing bad happened, Jane was like a ghost in the first morning light. All the blood seemed to have been drained out of her. She was like a marble woman, moving unconsciously, not touched by anything she did. "I am quite well," she said, when people asked, "quite well, and quite right, there is nothing the matter." As for the poor schoolmaster, he went home that night sobbing in the great pity of his heart. Though he loved her so, the good fellow felt that if anything could have brought back to her the wretched lout whom she had loved he would have done it had it cost him his life, but Mr. Peters had to go away helpless, unable to save her a single pang, as most of us one time or other have to do.

When and how John had found means and ways to make himself Ellen Turner's husband, or whether he had really done so at all, remained always a mystery to the Green. But she went off to him, and became a wretched hanger-on of the regiment, from which Mrs. Aikin no longer thought of buying him off. Nothing else could have settled the question so summarily, and but for Jane's stony face all the neighbourhood would have been glad. Her misery, which was so patient and sweet, and of which she talked to no one, lasted a great deal longer than it ought to have done, everybody felt. But it could not last for ever. Bad enough that such a girl should waste the first sweetness of her life on such a delusion, but the delusion must come to an end some time. After a longer interval than pleased the Green, an interval of which old Mrs. Mowbray was very impatient, declaring pettishly a hundred times that she would marry off the faithful Peters to some one if Jane did not mind, Jane came to herself. She is now the mistress of the schoolroom, if not the schoolmistress, with too many children of her own to be able to take charge of those of the parish, but so "comfortable," with what the Barley Mow affords, that the schoolmaster's income requires no eking out from her work. She is far better off, and in circumstances much more congenial to her than if she had been able to carry out the plan which had been her early dream, and which she and her mother had so passionately wished. And Jane is happy, but the scar of the old wound has never departed, and never will depart. It is unforgetable for the sake of the pain, more than for the sake of the love. As for the faithful Peters, he is as happy as ever schoolmaster was, and very proper and mindful of his position, and would not sit on a bench outside a village inn nowadays night after night, as he once did, not for any inducement in the world.

Mrs. Aikin held out, and kept her place after Jane was married as long as that was practicable, but has sold the business now (and it brought in a pretty penny), and lives very happily with a cow of her own and a poultry yard, and half-a-dozen grandchildren. Happy woman! She has no scar upon her comfortable soul, and knows of no mistake she ever made, but she feeds the hungry mouths of a wretched nephew and his wretched family, and does not grumble, for, after all, she says, "Nature is Nature, and it was all his father's fault."

MECHI'S CHRISTMAS PRESENTS, WEDDING GIFTS, and GENERAL PRESENTATIONS.—First-class work—newest fashions—great variety. Still (despite the beards) his famous Magic Strops, Paste, and Razors are in demand. Plenty of good Table Knives for the Roast Beef at Christmas, and Cases of Dessert Knives for the good things which follow the plum pudding. Illustrated Catalogues post free.—No. 112, Regent Street (opposite Vigo Street).—Dressing Bags and Dressing Cases, very suitable as presents, at moderate prices.

WHEN YOU ASK FOR
GLENFIELD STARCH
SEE THAT YOU GET IT,
As inferior kinds are often substituted for the sake of extra profit.

RODRIGUES' Monograms, Crests, and ADDRESSES designed, and STEEL DIES engraved as gems. NOTE PAPER and ENVELOPES stamped in colour relief, and brilliantly illuminated in gold, silver, and colours in the highest style of art.—42, Piccadilly, London.

VISITING CARDS, at H. Rodrigues'. A card plate elegantly engraved, and 100 superfine cards printed for 4s. 6d. BOOK PLATES designed and engraved in Modern and Mediæval Styles at RODRIGUES', 42, Piccadilly.

BALL PROGRAMMES at Rodrigues'.—All the new patterns of the season arranged, printed, and stamped in the latest fashion. BILLS OF FARE, GUEST CARDS, and INVITATIONS.—42, Piccadilly.

EGERTON BURNETT'S
ROYAL WELLINGTON
SERGES.

The Court Circular, the Queen, Myra's Journal, &c., testify to the superiority of EGERTON BURNETT'S SERGES as par excellence the material for ladies' wear.

EGERTON BURNETT, WELLINGTON, SOMERSET, respectfully calls attention to these SERGES. He has repeatedly had the honour of supplying them direct to the ROYAL FAMILY, and orders are daily arriving from all parts of the kingdom. Being woven from the finest wools, and of a permanent patent dye, which neither rain nor salt water can affect, they surpass all others in appearance and durability. Prices from 1s 2½d. to the finest at 4s. 6d. per yard. New autumn mixtures are ready.

E. B.'s NEW SNOWFLAKE, VIGOGNE, and CACHEMIRIENNE SERGES are most fashionable.

A SPECIAL STRONG MAKE IS WOVEN FOR BOYS' AND GENTLEMEN'S SUITS, 54 inch, from 3s. 9d. Pattern Books of the various makes and shades sent free by post, and carriage is paid to Bristol or London on parcels over £2.

GOODS PACKED FOR EXPORTATION.

EGERTON BURNETT,
WOOLLEN MERCHANT, WELLINGTON,
SOMERSET.

HENRY RODRIGUES'
CHRISTMAS PRESENTS and
NEW YEARS' GIFTS.
42, PICCADILLY, LONDON.

POLISHED BRASS WRITING TABLE SETS OF ANTIQUE AND SPECIAL DESIGNS.
SETS for the BOUDOIR, TOILET and WRITING TABLE 21s. to £10.

Envelope Cases,	21s. to £5	Candlesticks (per pr.)	12s. to £3
Blotting Books,	5s. to £2	Work Boxes,	15s. to £5
Inkstands,	5s. to £5	Jewel Cases,	21s. to £5
Despatch Boxes,	21s. to £6	Glove Boxes,	10s 6d. to £1
Writing Cases,	10s 6d. to £5	Handkerchief Boxes,	10s. to £5
Letter Scales,	8s. 6d to £5	Card Trays,	21s. to £5

Dressing Cases, Flower Vases, Jardinières, Caskets, Candelabra.
Rodrigues' Ladies' Dressing Case, silver-fitted, £10 10s.
And a large and choice assortment of English, Viennese and Parisian NOVELTIES, for PRESENTS, from 5s. to £5.

RODRIGUES' DRESSING BAGS for TRAVELLING, of the best workmanship and latest improvements, with silver, silver-gilt, and plated fittings, from 63s. to £50; Hand Bags, Waist Bags, Carriage Bags, and Bags of all kinds, at very moderate prices.—42, Piccadilly.

PORTRAIT Albums at Rodrigues', with patent leather guards, four portraits on a page, interleaved for vignette and cabinet portraits, from 10s. 6d. to £5. Regimental and Presentation Albums.—42, Piccadilly.

CHEAP HANDSOME GILT FRAMES for the COLOURED PICTURE given with this Paper,
"ONCE UPON A TIME."
2s 6d., glass complete; maple and gilt, 3s. 6d.; packing case, 1s. extra.

EIGHT BEAUTIFUL CHROMOS,
20 in. by 16 in., 10s.
Four Lake Scenes and Four Landscapes, worth half a guinea each. Two Sets will be sent carriage free.

FOUR LARGE STEEL ENGRAVINGS for One Guinea published at Two Guineas each.
SUNSHINE OF LOVE. By BROOKS.
THE FARMER'S HOME. By BROOKS.
THE DISTINGUISHED MEMBER. By LANDSEER.
THE VILLAGE FESTIVAL. By DAVID WILKIE.
Suitable for Wedding Presents or for Institutions.
Size, 36 in. by 26 in.

ALL IN FIRST-CLASS CONDITION.

GEO. REES, 41, 42, 43, Russell Street,
COVENT GARDEN.

BENNETT.	65 and 64, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON.
WATCHES.	BENNETT'S GOLD PRESENTATION WATCHES, FROM £10 TO £100.
CLOCKS.	TO CLOCK PURCHASERS. JOHN BENNETT having just completed great alterations in his Clock Show-Rooms, is enabled to offer to purchasers the most extensive Stock in London, comprising Clocks for the Drawing, Dining Rooms, and Presentation, of the highest quality and newest designs, at the lowest prices.

JOHN BENNETT, WATCH and CLOCK MANUFACTORY, 65 and 64, CHEAPSIDE.

CATALOGUES AND PRICE LISTS POST FREE.

£10.—In return for a £10 Note, free and safe, per post, one of BENNETT'S LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, perfect for time, beauty, and workmanship, with keyless action, air tight, damp tight, and dust tight.—65, Cheapside, London. Good chains at manufacturer's prices. P.O.O. to John Bennett.
BENNETT, 65 and 64, Cheapside.

AN ELEGANT ASSORTMENT OF DRAWING-ROOM CLOCKS
OF THE NEWEST DESIGNS.
ASTRONOMICAL, TURRET, and OTHER CLOCKS,
Made to Order.

BENNETT'S DINING, DRAWING ROOM, and HALL CLOCKS.

MARBLE CLOCKS	from	£2	2	0
DITTO, STRIKING HOURS and HALF HOURS	from	3	3	0
DRAWING-ROOM CLOCKS of the NEWEST DESIGNS	from	4	4	0
HALL CLOCKS, in MAHOGANY, OAK, or WALNUT CASES	from	12	12	0
CHIME CLOCKS, in HANDSOMELY CARVED CASES	from	18	0	0

Estimates on Application.
MANUFACTORY, 65 and 64, CHEAPSIDE.

BENNETT'S GOLD PRESENTA- TION WATCHES,
For India, 10 gs., 20 gs., 30 gs., 40 gs.

BENNETT'S LADIES' GOLD KEY- LESS WATCHES,
For India, from 10 guineas.

BENNETT'S KEYLESS HALF- CHRONOMETERS, compensated for variations of temperature, adjusted in positions, with improved keyless action.

Specially fitted for India.

In Gold	30 to 40 Guineas
In Silver	16 to 25 Guineas
Ditto for Ladies, with richly Engraved Gold Cases and Dials,	from 20 to 30 Guineas

BENNETT'S KEYLESS SILVER WATCHES,
For India, from 6 guineas.

BENNETT'S 18-CARAT HALL- MARKED CHAINS and choice JEWELLERY. Free and safe for Post-office Order.

BENNETT'S KEYLESS WATCHES.
NO KEY REQUIRED.
AIR-TIGHT, DAMP-TIGHT, DUST-TIGHT.

Silver	6 Guineas	8 Guineas	10 Guineas
Gold	10 Guineas	12 Guineas	14 Guineas

Every Watch skilfully Examined, Timed, and its performance Guaranteed.

SAFE AND FREE BY POST.

JOHN BENNETT'S WATCHES.
65, Cheapside.

- PRESENTATION GOLD WATCHES, 20 to 40 guineas.
- LADIES' GOLD KEYLESS ACTION WATCHES, from 10 guineas.
- SILVER WATCHES, with Keyless Action, from 6 guineas.
- GOLD KEYLESS HALF-CHRONOMETERS, from 30 to 40 guineas.
- SILVER HALF-CHRONOMETERS, from 16 to 25 guineas.
- HALF CHRONOMETERS are compensated for variations of temperature, adjusted in positions, and Wind and Set Hands without Keys.
- ENGLISH HALL CLOCKS, chiming the quarters, from 30 guineas.
- RICHLY-GILT DRAWING-ROOM CLOCKS, with classic designs.
- MARBLE DINING-ROOM CLOCKS, with Antique Bronzes.
- 18-CARAT HALL-MARKED CHAINS and CHOICE JEWELLERY.

JOHN BENNETT'S
CLOCK and WATCH MANUFACTORY,
65 and 64, Cheapside.

COUNTRY ORDERS attended to with the utmost care. Post-office Orders, or Cheques, crossed London and Westminster Bank, to JOHN BENNETT, 65, Cheapside.

INDIAN ORDERS should be accom- panied by remittances or London references.

SHIPPERS, CAPTAINS, and WHOLE- SALE BUYERS LIBERALLY TREATED.

INDIAN and ENGLISH RAILWAYS CONTRACTED WITH on the BEST TERMS.

BENNETT'S HOUSE, OFFICE, and SHOP DIALS EIGHT DAY PIECES.
In Mahogany, Oak, or Rosewood Cases, warranted for perfect time.

CASH PRICES.

12-in.	£3	3	16-in.	£7	10
14 "	4	4	20 "	10	10
15 "	5	5	24 "	15	15

Price Lists post free on application.

JOHN BENNETT'S WATCH and CLOCK MANUFACTORY,
65 and 64, CHEAPSIDE,
LONDON.

PETER ROBINSON'S COURT AND GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, REGENT STREET,
Is the Cheapest and the Largest
Warehouse of the kind
in London.

AT PETER ROBINSON'S WAREHOUSE FOR BLACK GOODS, REGENT STREET.
For TWO GUINEAS and up to FIVE
CHOICE BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES COMPLETE,
in the New Style
(Princess Polonaise and Skirt),
Patterns and Photos free.

URGENT MOURNING.
"ON RECEIPT of LETTER or TELEGRAM,"
MOURNING GOODS will be forwarded to all parts of England on approbation—no matter the distance—with an excellent-fitting Dressmaker (if required), without extra charge.
PETER ROBINSON, 256, 258, 260, 262, Regent St., London.

DEEP MOURNING ORDERS.
DRESSES, Costumes, Mantles, Millinery,
and all made-up articles,
in the most appropriate and best styles,
at the lowest possible cost.
Dressmaking and Millinery,
by clever and expert artists.

INEXPENSIVE MOURNING, as well as the Richest Qualities, can be supplied by PETER ROBINSON,
upon the most advantageous terms, to Families.
The Court and Family Mourning Warehouse,
256, 258, 260, 262, Regent Street, London.

BLACK SILKS.
AN IMPORTANT PURCHASE
OF SEVERAL THOUSAND PIECES BY
PETER ROBINSON of Regent Street
OF THE BEST WEARING MAKES ONLY,
and highly recommended

Bonnet and Cie	at 5s. 0d.
Jaubert	at 4s. 0d.
Ponsons	at 5s. 3d.
Degoves	at 4s. 9d.

The above are from 9s. to 3s. per yard
under last year's prices.
The EMPRESS CACHEMIRE, at 6s.
Also Excellent Value at
2s. 6d., 3s. 3d., 3s. 11d., 4s. 6d., and 4s. 11d.
For Patterns address to
PETER ROBINSON,
256 to 262, Regent Street.

BLACK SILK DRESS VELVETS.
Exceedingly good qualities,
at 7s. 6d., 8s. 9d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d.
A Special Bargain
in Lyons Velvet, at 10s. 9d.
Black Silk Trimming Velvets
at 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 9d.
At PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT STREET.
Nos. 256 to 262.

FOR SIX GUINEAS.
A BLACK SILK COSTUME
made of RICH LYONS SILK.
with Velvet Garniture,
Exquisitely cut and fashioned.
Copies of expensive Paris Models.
Photos free.
PETER ROBINSON, of REGENT STREET.

REMARKABLY CHEAP. For One Guinea, A Black Quilted SATIN PETTICOAT.
For 2½ Guineas, A Black Silk TRAINED SKIRT.
At PETER ROBINSON'S of REGENT STREET.

EVENING DRESSES, at One Guinea.
Black Brussels Net, at 29s. 6d.
Tulle (condition keeping), 50s.
Grenadine, 52s 6d.
New Styles, well cut, and elegantly trimmed.
Illustrations free.

IRISH LINENS.—JAMES LINDSAY and COMPANY, Donegall Place, Belfast, will forward to any railway stations, carriage paid on parcels of £3 and upwards in value,
DAMASK TABLE LINENS, DIAPERS, SHEETINGS, PILLOW LINEN, SHIRTINGS, TOWELLINGS, &c., and every Description of LINEN FABRICS for Household Use.
Price List and Patterns post free.
JAMES LINDSAY and CO., Linen Merchants, &c., Belfast.

HAMILTON and KIMPTON.

TAILORS AND OVERCOAT MAKERS, 105, Strand.
Gentlemen can depend on the very best Materials at Fair Price. N.B.—No cheap, common goods kept at this Establishment.—105, Strand (opposite Exeter Hall).

GARDNERS' TOUGHENED GLASS and INDESTRUCTIBLE DINNER WARE, the Glass direct from De la Bastie's Manufactory. Wholesale price lists free on application.—GARDNERS', Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

DEEP BLUE DINNER SERVICES can be obtained at GARDNER'S, 453 and 454, West Strand, from £3 13s. 6d. The Set for Twelve Persons complete. A few of the leading patterns are detailed.

The Glengariff	£3	13	6
The Kecica	3	13	6
The Laurel	3	13	6
The Bramble	4	4	0
The Madras	5	5	0

Photographs post free.

GARDNERS' NEW DINNER SER- VICES are perfect in shape, elegant in appearance, and unequalled in price, complete for 12 persons:—

The Osborne, in pink or green	£3	5	0
The Glengariff, in all colours	3	13	6
The Bramble, in all colours	4	4	0
The One Thousand and Two	5	5	0
The One Thousand and Two A	5	5	0
The Japanese Bamboo	6	6	0

Coloured Drawings post free.—GARDNER'S, Glass and China Manufacturers, 453 and 454, West Strand, Charing Cross.

LEWIN CRAWCOUR and CO., Com- PLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS,
71, 73, and 75, Brompton Road, London. Established 1810.

COMPLETE ILLUSTRATED

CATALOGUE, GRATIS AND POST FREE,

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION,

CONTAINS NEARLY 700 DESIGNS OF

USEFUL, ARTISTIC, AND WELL-SEASONED FURNITURE AND ESTIMATES FOR FURNISHING OF HOUSES.

LEWIN CRAWCOUR and CO. forward all Goods selected from Catalogue carriage-paid to any Railway Station in the Kingdom.

THE ASTRONOMER ROYAL, in his Report to the Admiralty (13th August, 1870) on 40 Chronometers entered for annual competition, says of M. F. DENT'S CHRONOMETER—"This is the finest chronometer that we have ever had on trial."—M. F. Dent, Chronometer, Watch, and Clock Maker to the Queen, 33, Cockspur Street, Charing Cross. The Report on Chronometers, Watches, &c., by the Judges at the Philadelphia Exhibition, can be had on application to 33, Cockspur Street, Charing Cross.

LEA and PERRINS' SAUCE.— In consequence of Spurious Imitations, which are calculated to deceive the Public, LEA and PERRINS have adopted a New Label, bearing their Signature, "LEA AND PERRINS," which signature is placed on every bottle of WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE, and without which none is genuine.

Sold wholesale by the proprietors, Worcester. Retail by dealers in sauces throughout the world.

DE LA RUE and CO.'S INDELIBLE RED LETTER DIARIES, CONDENSED DIARIES, and TABLET CALENDARS, for 1878, in great variety, may now be had of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Publishers,
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

DE LA RUE and CO.'S PLAYING CARDS. The New Patterns for the Season may now be had of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Manufacturers,
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

By Royal Letters Patent.
"DEXTER" PLAYING CARDS, with rounded Corners and Patent Index-pips, extra thin, and highly burnished on both sides. Of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Manufacturers,
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

DE LA RUE and CO.'S CHRISTMAS CARDS, in great variety, prepared from original designs and illustrated by original verses. Of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Publishers,
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

GO-BANG, a JAPANESE GAME, with Board arranged on an improved principle, Counters, and "Guide" by "CAVENDISH." Retail at 5s. and upwards Of all Booksellers and Stationers. Wholesale only of the Manufacturers,
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

Now ready. 11th Edition. 8vo, cloth, extra gilt, price 5s
WHIST. The Laws and Principles of. By "CAVENDISH." Of all Booksellers and Stationers.
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

By the same Author
ECARTÉ. The Laws of, with a TREATISE ON THE GAME. Price 2s. 6d. ROUND GAMES AT CARDS, Price 1s. 6d. PIQUET, Price 3s. 6d. LAWN TENNIS and BADMINTON, Price 1s. POCKET GUIDES, Price 6d. each: WHIST (3)—Guide; Laws; Leads. BEZIQUE. POLISH BEZIQUE. ECARTÉ. EUCHRE. SPOIL-FIVE. CRIBBAGE. CALABRASELLA. SIXTY-SIX. GO-BANG. BACKGAMMON. CHESS. DRAUGHTS. Of all Booksellers and Stationers.
THOS. DE LA RUE and CO., London.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.— STATHAM'S POLYTECHNIC AMUSEMENTS, Scientific Toys, Games, &c. Endless Pastime for Holidays and Evenings. Illustrated Catalogue, 3 stamps.
W. E. STATHAM, 111½, Strand, London.

A BEAUTIFUL CHRISTMAS PRESENT.
"OUR DARLING."
Messrs. MENDELSSOHN and LESSER, of 35, Jewin Street, Fore Street,
London, E.C.,
Have published a magnificently-finished
OLEOGRAPH
under the above title.

Price per Copy	7s. 6d.
Ditto, in a 3 inch gilt frame	15s. 0d.
Ditto, in a 5-inch best English gilt frame	25s 0d.

Carriage paid to any part of the United Kingdom.

JENNER AND KNEWSTUB'S NOVELTIES AND ELEGANCIES, suitable as presents, include a large and varied stock of albums, almanack frames, card trays, chatelaines; a beautiful selection of carriage and other clocks of Jenner and Knewstub's special design; bags, travelling bags, hand bags, waist bags, with antique silver frames, &c., caskets, candelabra, gold, silver, and plated dressing cases, despatch-boxes, double bottles, Elgin writing-cases, envelope-cases, game and bezique boxes, jewel-cases, miniature cases, mirrors, Norwegian and other belts of artistic design, with the Empress Ombrelle, and every useful and ornamental novelty in appendages in gold, silver, enamel, plated maresque, &c.—JENNER and KNEWSTUB, to the Queen, 33, St. James' Street and 66, Jermyn Street.

PICTURE FRAME AND DECORA- TIVE MOULDINGS, &c., &c.
H. MORELL, 28 and 30, GREAT ST. ANDREW STREET, BLOOMSBURY, LONDON, Importer of Patent Washable Gilt and other Mouldings. White and Ornamental Mouldings already prepared for gilding, also carved, Maple, Rosewood, Walnut, and Oak Mouldings of every description manufactured on the premises by experienced workmen.

The largest Stock in London of Decorative and Picture Frame Mouldings. An immense variety (see Illustrated Pattern Book, post free for three penny stamps). Also Oak Oxford Frames.

Black and Gold Oxford Frames.
Carved Frames.
White Frames for Gilding
Ornamental Frames for Gilding.

The same also gilt in an artistic manner by first-class workmen.

Frames of any design made on the shortest notice for Graphic and other Christmas Plates.

Every requisite for the trade at the cheapest possible prices.

H. M. begs respectfully to inform Shippers and the Trade that he is unequalled in London for quality and prices, and they would do well to select a Case from his Stock.

Note the Name and Address.

Price 6d.; Interleaved with ruled note, 8d.; Neat Case, 1s. 6d.; Russia Gilt, 2s. 6d.; exquisitely painted Calf, 3s. Do. gilt rim, 5s. (post 1d. each extra).
CHARMING PRESENT — Howlett's VICTORIA GOLDEN ALMANACK for 1878. 32 pages of delicate rose tinted enamel, brilliantly wrought in gold letters, contains the information of large year-books; and is not (as many are) a trade advertisement.
London: SIMPKIN, Stationers' Hall Court; HOWLETT, 10, Frith Street, W.; and all Booksellers.

FINE ENGRAVINGS from the WORKS of Sir Edwin Landseer, R.A., Sir Joshua Reynolds.

J. M. W. Turner, R.A.,	W. P. Frith, R.A.,
T. Faed, R.A.,	Rosa Bonheur,
John Philip, R.A.,	Alma Tadema.

Choice artist proof and good print impressions from the above. Also a large collection of all the new engravings. On VIEW at T. McLEAN'S, 7, Haymarket, near the Theatre.
Catalogues forwarded on application.

TOOTH-ACHE.

INSTANT CURE.

BUNTER'S NERVINE.

FORMS A STOPPING.

SAVES THE TOOTH.

J. Hounsell, Esq., Surgeon, Bridport, writes: "I consider Bunter's Nervine a specific for Toothache. Very severe cases under my care have found instantaneous and permanent relief. I therefore give my testimony of having used it with invariable success, and recommend its use to the profession and the public."
Of all Chemists, at 1s. 1½d. per packet.

LAXORA, the best remedy for CON- STIPATION and Derangements of the Organs of the Stomach, Bile, Headache. Specially suitable for ladies and children.

The LANCET, June 9, 1877, says: It is a great improvement on the preparations which are in common use for the same purpose, and will be really valuable in families."

Sold 1s. 1½d. retail by all chemists and druggists.
Wholesale: 63, Southwark Street, London.

WALLER'S SCURF SPECIFIC, an infallible remedy for DANDRIFF, in whatever form it may assume on the head. 2s. 6d. per pot, or forwarded by post in wood boxes on receipt of 2s. 6d. in stamps.
W. WALLER, 86, Camden Road, London, N.W.

LADIES who SAVE the COMBINGS of their HAIR can have them properly prepared, the roots turned, and made up by a process perfected by W. Waller, and returned post free at 3s. 6d. per oz.—W. WALLER, Court Hairdresser, 86, Camden Road, N.W.

HORSE SHOW, AGRICULTURAL HALL, LONDON.—The FIFTEENTH ANNUAL HORSE SHOW for 1878 will open as usual on the SATURDAY after the Derby Race, June 1. The same Prize List as 1877, except that the Prize for the best Hunter will be Fifty Pounds in Cash and the Agricultural Hall Medal. The Prize Awards of 1877 may be had on application with a stamped envelope.
By order, J. SIDNEY, Secretary and Manager.
Agricultural Hall Company (Limited).

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil).

HYDROLEINE. Equal to ten times the quantity of Cod Liver Oil.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil). The nauseous taste of Cod Liver Oil is removed by Hydration. Easier to administer than Cod Liver Oil

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) Entirely supersedes plain Cod Liver Oil. Contains ready-digested Cod Liver Oil. Can be taken by the most delicate stomach. Is immediately assimilated.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) Produces rapid increase in flesh and weight.

"HYDROLEINE" has been described as partially-digested oil, which will nourish and produce increase in weight in those cases where oils or fats not so treated are difficult or impossible to digest. All tendency to emaciation and loss of weight is arrested by the regular use of HYDROLEINE, which may be discontinued when the usual average weight has been permanently regained."

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil). Superior to any Emulsion or Pancreatised Oil ever known.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) Is not a Patent Medicine. Has the formula upon every bottle. Is Tonic, Digestive, and Highly Nutritive.

IN "NOTES on CONSUMPTION and

WASTING DISEASES

SUCCESSFULLY TREATED by

HYDRATED OIL, With cases showing the immediate increase in weight produced by it." (Published by Diprose, Bateman, and Co., Sheffield St., Lincoln's Inn Fields),

G. OVEREND DREWRY, M.D., Phy- sician to the National Free Dispensary for Consumption and Wasting Diseases, Gower Street, W., Author of "Common Sense Management of the Stomach," &c.,

REFERRING to CASES treated at the NATIONAL FREE DISPENSARY says that

"HYDRATED OIL produces an effect such as neither Cod Liver Oil nor any preparation of it with which I am acquainted even faintly approaches."—Page 23, and on page 21.

"PATIENTS are unanimous in their statement that the appetite is much increased by taking Hydrated Oil, and that so far from possessing the unpleasant taste of ordinary Cod Liver Oil, the taste of Hydrated Oil is agreeable rather than the reverse, and is described by some as resembling Devonshire cream. These, I submit, are very important points, in cases usually attended by great irritability of stomach. The general improvement in strength shown within a fortnight was in many instances surprising even to myself, who had seen already in private practice many sterling results from its use. My experience, however, shows that in cases where Cod Liver Oil or an emulsion of it has been depended upon, increase of weight is rarely obtained."—Page 26.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil). Economical in use; certain in result.

THE agreeable character of HYDRATED OIL is conclusively shown by the fact that Delicate Women and Young Children take it with avidity; and in the case of Infants who do not thrive upon the food given, the nourished and well-conditioned appearance of the child after this treatment is most marked.

THE CHEMICAL PRINCIPLES upon which Hydrated Oil is prepared were first described

IN a TREATISE on the ASSIMILA- TION AND DIGESTION OF FATS IN THE HUMAN BODY, by

H. C. BARTLETT, Ph.D., F.C.S. Published by Messrs. J. and A. Churchill, New Burlington Street.

"FAT in the HUMAN BODY." Page 41.

"NOTHING appears to restore the healthy functions of the liver and pancreas in these cases except the frequent ingestion of oil or liquid fat, so treated artificially that it is already partially transformed by fermentation and the reaction of bile. Seized on with avidity by the absorbents, it is insensibly assimilated by the digestive organs, until they gradually become strengthened, not only to provide their own nourishment, but to transform a sufficient quantity of fat to supply the inevitable waste throughout the body."

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil). From its valuable tonic effect on the nervous system, in addition to its special stimulating action on the organs concerned in the production of fat in the body, it also causes marked increase in weight in persons of naturally thin habit who do not present any evidences of disease.

THE permanence and perfection of the emulsion and the extreme solubility of the HYDRATED OIL is shown by its retaining its cream-like condition as long as the purest Cod Liver Oil will retain its sweetness. Unlike simple Cod Liver Oil, it produces no unpleasant eructation or sense of nausea, and should be taken in such very much smaller doses, according to the directions, as will ensure its complete assimilation; this at the same time renders its use economical in the highest degree.

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) is imme- diately assimilated. Unlike ordinary Cod Liver Oil, it does not Purge, does not produce Sickness, or what is so well known as biliousness, nor does it pass through the body unchanged, as it is already partially digested, and suitable for immediate absorption and assimilation. Hence its economical value, none being wasted.

WEAKLY INFANTS thrive on it. Appetite is improved, digestion assisted, and strength increased by HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil). A true Nerve Tonic, a REAL DIGESTIVE, and POWERFUL NUTRITIVE.

ALL Persons taking HYDROLEINE are particularly urged to keep an ACCOUNT FROM WEEK TO WEEK of THEIR WEIGHT, that the gain and improvement may be shown.

MESSRS. J. M. RICHARDS and CO., having devoted special attention to perfecting a process by means of which uniformity in the production of HYDRATED OIL is secured, desire to direct the attention of the medical profession and the public to this preparation, to distinguish which the name of HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil) has been registered under the Trade Marks Act by them

HYDROLEINE (Hydrated Oil), in Half- pound Bottles, price 4s. 6d. Sold by all Chemists. Manufactured by J. M. RICHARDS and CO.—Office and Warehouse, Great Russell Street Buildings, Great Russell Street (corner of Charlotte Street, Bloomsbury), London.

NEW DANCE MUSIC.

CHARLES D'ALBERT.

CHAPPELL and CO have much pleasure in announcing the publication of several novelties by the above popular and favourite composer of dance music.

	s.	d.
THE ENGAGED WALTZ	2	0	net.
THE DISTANT SHORE. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's Song	2	0	"
THE SWEETHEARTS LANCERS, on Arthur Sullivan's Song and other favourite and original melodies	2	0	"
THE CLEOPATRA GALOP	2	0	"
THE FANFARE POLKA	1	6	"
THE MOLLIE DARLING QUADRILLE	2	0	"
SWEETHEARTS. Waltz on Arthur Sullivan's popular Song. "One of the best waltzes ever written by the above favourite Composer."	2	0	"
TRIAL BY JURY LANCERS, on Airs from Sullivan's popular Cantata	2	0	"
TRIAL BY JURY QUADRILLE	2	0	"
TRIAL BY JURY WALTZ	2	0	"
TRIAL BY JURY POLKA	2	0	"
RINK GALOP	1	6	"
FLEUR DE THE QUADRILLE	2	0	"
FASCINATION VALSE à Trois Temps	2	0	"
PRINCESS MARIE GALOP	1	6	"
SICILY QUADRILLE. Companion to "Como."	2	0	"
TWILIGHT DREAMS WALTZES	2	0	"
CHARLESTOWN QUADRILLES on Popular Airs	2	0	"
WEDDING QUADRILLE, on Christy Minstrel Melodies	2	0	"
COMO QUADRILLE, on Italian airs	2	0	"
BONNIE DUNDEE QUADRILLE	2	0	"
KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN WALTZES	2	0	"
MOUNTAIN DAISY WALTZES	2	0	"
LILY OF THE VALLEY WALTZES	2	0	"
WEST-END POLKA. (20th Edition)	2	0	"

N.B. A Complete List of M. D'Albert's Popular Dance Music will be sent on application.

DAN GODFREY AND OTHER FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

	s.	d.
THE ROYAL WELSH LANCERS	2	0	net.
PLANTATION LANCERS	2	0	"
POLO LANCERS, on Favourite and Popular Tunes	2	0	"
ISIDORA WALTZ. New Waltz	2	0	"
LITTLE NELL WALTZ	2	0	"
CHRISTMAS ECHOES QUADRILLE, on Popular Airs	2	0	"
KNIGHT OF ST. PATRICK LANCERS	2	0	"
MERRY TUNES LANCERS	2	0	"
YOUNG FRIENDS' QUADRILLE	2	0	"
OLD FRIENDS' QUADRILLE	2	0	"
MABEL WALTZ	2	0	"
BARBE-BLEUE QUADRILLE	2	0	"
ROYAL ALFRED QUADRILLE	2	0	"
HILDA WALTZ	2	0	"
GUARDS' WALTZ	2	0	"
AU REVOIR WALTZ. WALDTEUFEL	2	0	"
LES MESSAGE DES FLEURS VALSE. LAMOTHE	2	0	"
CHANTS DE L'AUBE VALSE. LAMOTHE	2	0	"
TOUT A FAIT POLKA. HENRI LOUIS "This polka will become an immense favourite."	1	6	"
CAROLINA WALTZ. HENRY LOUIS	2	0	"
LA FIANCEE POLKA. J. MEREDITH BALL	1	6	"
HILDRED WALTZ. J. MEREDITH BALL	2	0	"
GROSVENOR POLKA. A. W. NICHOLSON	1	6	"
KATHARINA GALOP. PERCY REEVE	1	6	"

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SPECIALITIES IN PIANOFORTES FOR EXPORT.

50, New Bond Street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S COLONIAL MODEL PIANOFORTES,

Iron Plates, Extra Strong Bracings, Felt on Hammers, Pinned Solid Panel, &c. Rosewood, 45 gs.; Walnut, 50 gs. Or Solid Dark Wood, Iron Pin Plates and Extra Screws, 50 gs.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S CROSS STRUNG IRON FRAMED OBLIQUE GRAND PIANOFORTE.

Rosewood, 90 gs.; Walnut, 95 gs. Solid Wood, Extra Screwed for Tropical Climates, 100 gs. The strongest that can be manufactured. More powerful in tone than the small Grands.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM OF HIRING PIANOFORTES.

CHAPPELL and CO. let the following PIANOFORTES on HIRE, and the Instrument becomes the property of the hirer at the expiration of the third year, provided each quarterly instalment shall have been regularly paid on the following terms:—

At £8 8s. per annum; £2 2s. per quarter.

A PIANINO, by CHAPPELL and CO., in Plain Mahogany or Walnut Case, 6 7-8 Octaves, with Check Action. Cash price for this Instrument, 20 gs.

At £10 10s. per annum; £2 12s. 6d. per quarter.

AN ELEGANT PIANINO, in best Walnut and Rosewood, with ornamented Fret, 6 7-8 Octaves, Check Action, and three strings—throughout the treble. Cash price, 27 gs. Models B or C in Catalogue.

At £12 12s. per annum; £3 3s. per quarter.

A HANDSOME COTTAGE PIANOFORTE, by CHAPPELL and CO., in Rosewood, 7 Octaves. Cash price, 32 gs. No. 2 in Catalogue.

At £14 per annum; £3 10s. per quarter.

A HANDSOME COTTAGE PIANOFORTE, by CHAPPELL and CO., in Walnut Case, 7 Octaves. Cash price, 35 gs. No. 2 in Catalogue.

At £16 per annum; £4 per quarter.

THE ENGLISH MODEL PIANOFORTE, by CHAPPELL and CO., in very handsome Rosewood, 7 Octaves. Cash price, 40 gs. Ditto, ditto, in Walnut Case, £4 10s. per quarter. Cash price, 45 gs. No. 4 in Catalogue.

At £20 per annum; £5 per quarter.

THE FOREIGN MODEL PIANOFORTE, by CHAPPELL and CO., in Rosewood Case, 7 Octaves, Check Action, and three strings. Cash price, 50 gs. Ditto, ditto, in elegant Walnut, £5 10s. per quarter. Cash price, 55 gs.

The above Pianofortes are exchangeable during the first quarter.

Residents abroad can be supplied with Pianofortes on this system, the hire being paid annually instead of quarterly, in advance.

The THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM IS APPLICABLE TO PIANOS OF ALL KINDS.

Upwards of 100 varieties.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM OF HIRING ALEXANDRE'S ORGAN HARMONIUMS.

No. — Per Quarter.

At £5 5s. per annum.
1. Mahogany. One Stop, or knee swell . . . 1 6 3
At £6 per annum.
4. Carved Oak. Seven Stops . . . 1 10 0
At £8 16s. per annum.
4a. Carved Oak. Ten Stops . . . 2 4 0
At £10 10s. per annum.
5. Rosewood, Walnut, or Oak. Eleven Stops . . . 2 12 6
At £16 per annum.
10. Oak Case. Fifteen Stops. Percussion . . . 4 0 0
At £20 per annum.
11. Rosewood or Walnut. Fifteen Stops. Percussion . . . 5 0 0
At £14 per annum.
EXHIBITION MODEL. Fifteen Stops. Oak . . . 3 10 0
At £11 4s. per annum.
No. 1. DRAWING-ROOM MODEL. Rosewood, Walnut, or Oak . . . 2 16 0
At £16 per annum.
No. 2. DRAWING-ROOM MODEL. Rosewood, Walnut, or Oak . . . 4 0 0
At £26 per annum.
No. 3. DRAWING-ROOM MODEL. Rosewood, Walnut, or Oak . . . 6 10 0
At £30 per annum.
No. 4. DRAWING-ROOM MODEL. Rosewood or Walnut . . . 7 10 0
At £60 per annum.
THE HARP ÆOLIENNE. Modèle de Salon. Nineteen Stops. Percussion action. Double expression . . . 15 0 0

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PIPE ORGANS

for DRAWING-ROOMS or CHURCHES, from 50 gs. to 200 gs., for SALE or HIRE, on the Three Years' System. Specifications for Organs suitable for any building or climate sent on application.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW ALEXANDRE ORGANS, from 20 gs. to 175 gs. A large number of these Instruments returned from Hire will be sold at greatly reduced prices for cash, or on the Three Years' System. Illustrated lists free by post.

50, New Bond Street.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS'S LIST.

ALL MUSIC POST FREE AT HALF-PRICE.

"THE GREATEST SUCCESS IN PARIS."

LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE.

OPERA COMIQUE DE ROBERT PLANQUETTE.

Now Ready.

Suite de Valse, by O. Metra. Solo and duet. 2s. each net.
Quadrilles, by Arban. Solo and duet. 2s. each net.
Brilliant Fantasie, by E. Moniot. 1s. 6d. net.
Rondeau Valse, by B. Richards. 2s. net.
Chanson du Mousse. B. Richards.
Valse Brillante. B. Richards. 2s. net.
Polka Mazurka, by Natif. 1s. 6d. net.
Polka, by Arban. 1s. 6d. net.

In the press.

Complete Opera, piano and score, 2s. 6d. net.
Vocal Score, English and French Words.
Selections of Airs, in two books, by Cramer. 1s. 6d each.
Also arrangements by W. Kuhe.

N B.—The sole right of representation, &c., for Great Britain and Colonies belongs to Mr. Joseph Williams.

MY SAILOR LOVE. Words by E. OXENFORD.

Music by LOUIS DIEHL. Net, 1s. 6d. An exceedingly pretty song in A. Its sprightly, easily flowing melody will make it acceptable to amateurs, whilst there is sufficient artistic merit to attract the notice of the concert singer. Compass from E to F.

SO SINGS THE LARK. Words by E. OXENFORD.

Music by FRANZ ABT. This is one of the most charming effusions of this talented composer; it is a song of genuine beauty, with delicately-written accompaniment, imitating the trilling of the lark. Key of E, ranging from D to E.

J. LEYBACH'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

Chant de Bivouac. 3s.
Fête des Bergères. 3s.
Festa Romana. 4s.
L'Alsacienne. 4s.
Bolero Brillant. 4s.
Zampa. 4s.
Tancredi. 4s.
L'Elisire. 4s.
Pégase Galop. 3s.
Chant du Patrie. 3s.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' JOYFUL PEASANT (DER LUSTIGE BAUER),

Schumann's popular melody 3s. This is decidedly the most taking arrangement of this charming theme.—Vide Press.

ARDITI'S L'INGENUE. GAVOTTE.

Piano Solo. 3s.
SMALL BAND. 1s. 6d. net.
FULL ORCHESTRA. 2s. net.
As performed at the Promenade Concerts.

FLORIAN PASCAL. BERCEUSE.

SMALL BAND. 2s. net.
LA PRINCESSE. GAVOTTE MODERNE. BAND PARTS. 2s. net.
As performed at the Promenade Concerts.

SPRING SONG. By J. Leybach.

ENGLISH, FRENCH, AND ITALIAN WORDS.
"A perfect little gem, easy to sing and play."
Compass D to F (in C). Post free, 18 stamps.

NEW SONGS by J. Leybach.

LIFE'S AUTUMN (in A). Compass E to G flat.
THE SIRENS (in F). Compass C to F.
BRIGHT STARS OF HEAVEN (in C). Compass D to F.
MAIDEN AND THE BIRDS (in B flat). Compass D to F.
Post free, 18 stamps each.

H. WEIST HILL'S COMPOSITIONS.

Performed with great success at the Alexandra Palace.

VALSES.
Alma. 4s.
Son Image. 2s.
True Love. 2s.

POLKAS.
Gertrude. 1s. 6d.
Belle of the Promenade. 1s. 6d.

Gavotte, Madame de Pompadour (beautifully Illustrated). 2s.
Bashi-Barouk Galop. 1s. 6d. Osmanli March. 1s. 6d.
To Paris in Ten Hours Galop. 1s. 6d.

Review.—"Marked by far more thought and musical ability than dance music usually is."

NEW SONG by Florian Pascal.—

DAWN-SONG (Aubade), with English and Italian Words. Sung with the greatest success by Signor Giannini at Arditi's Concerts. Post free, 24 stamps. The special attention of Tenors is invited to this most artistic and effective Song.

SIR MICHAEL COSTA'S NAAMAN.

Vocal Score, complete, Octavo Edition, 4s. net.
Do. do. bound in cloth. 6s. net.

All the numbers of "Naaman" can also be had separately, including the celebrated Aria, "I Dreamt I was in Heaven," 3s.; and the Triumphal March, "Naaman," as Piano Solo, 3s. Piano Duet, 3s.; and also as Organ Solo, with Pedal, 3s.

SIR W. STERNDALE BENNETT'S WORKS for the PIANOFORTE, in two vols. Cheap Edition now ready, including the celebrated Toccata, Scherzo, Op. 13; Capriccio, Op. 27; Three Sketches, &c. Price 6s. net each vol.; or, bound, cloth, 8s. net.

PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS, By SIR W. STERNDALE BENNETT.

NEW EDITION CAREFULLY FINGERED, &c.

Capriccio. Op. 2.
The Lake. Op. 10, No. 1.
The Millstream. Op. 10. No. 2.
The Fountain. Op. 10. No. 3.
Three Musical Sketches. Complete.
Allegro con Precisione. Op. 11. No. 1.
Moderato Grazioso. Op. 11. No. 2.
Allegro Brillante. Op. 11. No. 3.
Vivace Giocoso. Op. 11. No. 4.
Andante Capriccioso. Op. 11. No. 5.
Allegro Agitato. Op. 11. No. 6.
Six Studies. Complete.
Andante Expressivo. Op. 12. No. 1.
Grazioso. Op. 12. No. 2.
Presto. Op. 12. No. 3.
Three Impromptus. Complete.
Serenata. From Op. 13.
Scherzo. From Op. 13.
Sonata.
Allegro Grazioso. Op. 18.
Caprice. Op. 22.
Presto Leggiero. Op. 24. No. 1.
Capricciosa. Op. 24. No. 2.
Agitato Assai. Op. 24. No. 3.
Alla Fantasia. Op. 24. No. 4.
Presto Agitato. Op. 24. No. 5.
Lento-Allegro con Bravura. Op. 24. No. 6.
Suite de Pieces. Op. 24. Complete.
Rondo Piacevole. Op. 25.
Scherzo. Op. 27.
Introduzione e Pastorale. Op. 28. No. 1.
Rondino. Op. 28. No. 2.
Capriccio. Op. 28. No. 3.
L'Amabile. Op. 29. No. 1.
L'Appassionata. Op. 29. No. 2.
Two Characteristic Studies. Op. 29.
Tema e Variazioni. Op. 31.
Pastriete Pas Gal. Op. 34.
Rondeau à la Polonaise. Op. 37.
Toccata. Op. 38.

FLORIAN PASCAL'S NEW PIECES.

PRES DU LAC (Meditation), artistically illustrated. Price 2s. net.
UN BIJOU PERDU, artistically illustrated. Price 2s. net.
BERCEUSE. Price 1s. 6d. net.
LES VIEUX TEMPS. Gavotte. Price 1s. 6d. net.
LA PRINCESSE. Gavotte moderne. 1s. 6d. net.
TRANSCRIPTION BRILLANTE (Braham). As played by Madame Arabella Goddard. 2s. 6d. net.

HAROLD THOMAS'S POPULAR PIANO PIECES.

OPERATIC (very brilliant).

Il Trovatore (new). 4s.
La Traviata (new). 4s.
Stradella (new). 4s.
Le Prophète (new). 4s.
Lohengrin. 4s.
Tannhauser. 4s.
Mose in Egitto. 4s.
Les Huguenots. 4s.
Faust (Gounod). 4s.
Lucia. 4s.
Masaniello. 4s.
Marta. 4s.
Freischutz. 4s.
Don Giovanni. 4s.

DRAWING-ROOM PIECES.

Les Cuirassiers. 4s.
The Sleigh Drive. 4s.
Chant Rouman. 4s.
Air Styrien. 3s.
Birdie and Brooklet. 3s.
The Musical Clock. 3s.

FOR SUNDAY PLAYING.

St. Paul (Mendelssohn). 4s.
Hymn of Praise. 4s.
Cujus Animam. 4s.

MOST USEFUL TEACHING PIECES.

Albion (English Airs). 4s.
Erin (Irish Airs). 4s.
Cambria (Welsh Airs). 4s.
Scotia (Scotch Airs). 4s.

Full Catalogues of all Harold Thomas's Piano Pieces forwarded on application.

CATALOGUES SENT POST FREE.

Sole Agents for Moore and Burgess Minstrels' Songs. Shipping Orders on favourable terms.

LONDON: JOSEPH WILLIAMS,

24, BERNERS STREET, W.; and
123, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

HAMMOND'S MUSIC PORTFOLIO.

Price 1s. each number. Post free 13 stamps. Violin and Cornet Accompaniments to each number, 6d. each.

No. 1 CONTAINS:

Brise des Nuits Waltzes	Lamothe.
Hydropaten Waltzes	Gung'l.
Manuelita Waltzes	Waldteufel.
Autograph Waltzes	Strauss.
St. David's Quadrille	Dan Godfrey.
Bruder Lustig Galop	Budik.

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

Le Premier Baiser Waltzes	Lamothe.
Venus Reigen Waltzes	Gung'l.
Den Lieben Langen Tag Waltzes	Rudel.
Deutsche Herzen Waltzes	Strauss.
The 'Varsity Lancers	D'Egville.
The Pet Schottische	Bertrand.

CONTENTS OF No. 3.

SIX WALTZES BY JOSEPH GUNG'L.

Soldaten Lieder	Waltzes.
Gräfenberger	Waltzes.
Daheim!	Waltzes.
Jungherren Tänze	Waltzes.
Fantasiebilder	Waltzes.
Mein schönster Tag in Berlin	Waltzes.

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Frühlingslieder Waltzes	Gung'l.
Lille Waltzes	Strauss.
Le Tour du monde Waltzes	Metra.
La Fiancée Waltz	Lamothe.
Hochzeit (Wedding) Quadrille	Strauss.
Pergola Polka	Marie.

A. HAMMOND and CO., 5, Vigo Street, London, W.

FRANCIS and DAY'S POPULAR SONGS by the Best Composers.

Half Price. 24 stamps each.

THE PATRIOT (Baritone). F. CAMPANA.
THE LOVES OF THE BRAVE AND FREE. ODOARDO BARRI.
LOST AND FOUND. ODOARDO BARRI.
THE GOLDEN DREAM. KING HALL.

FRANCIS and DAY'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE PIECES

Half Price 18 Stamps each.

DUNSTER'S GAVOTTE.
DUNSTER'S TARANTELLA.
DUNSTER'S FESTIVAL MARCH for PIANO, ORGAN, or HARMONIUM.
LEON DORE'S STILL I LOVE THEE.
SMALLWOOD'S RUSSIAN WAR MARCH.
SMALLWOOD'S TURKISH WAR MARCH.

FRANCIS and DAY'S DANCE MUSIC for CHRISTMAS.

Half Price and Post free.

MARRIOTT'S THEY ALL DO IT QUADRILLE (on Popular Melodies). 4s.
SMALLWOOD'S BONNY WREATH POLKA. 3s.
EATON'S FROHLICH GALOP. 3s.

FRANCIS and DAY'S COMIC SONGS for CHRISTMAS.

Half Price 18 stamps each.

WEDDING BELLS; or, TAKE HIM HOME.
WE MEAN TO KEEP OUR EMPIRE IN THE EAST.
POOR MR. COPPETT (By G. W. HUNT).
THE COLORADO BEETLE'S COME (HARRY HUNTER).
CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE (HARRY HUNTER).
MISS JENNY AP-TOMMAS AP-SHENKLIN AP-JONES.
TO BE CONTINUED IN OUR NEXT.

No. 5, Vol. 2 of the MOHAWK MINSTRELS' MAGAZINE OF FAVOURITE SONGS and BALLADS.

Price 1s., containing Sixteen New and Original Songs, Humorous and Pathetic, by HARRY HUNTER, written by him especially for this work.

Just published

SMALLWOOD'S PIANOFORTE TUTOR.

Price 5s. (Post free for 36 stamps). Pronounced by all who have seen it to be the easiest Instruction book to teach and to learn from ever issued. The lessons and exercises are well chosen and carefully studied, and graduated in a most easy manner, making the practice interesting and pleasing. Several beautiful original melodies are introduced, as are also many well-known airs by celebrated composers, some pretty duets, and a choice selection of Sacred Music.

FRANCIS BROTHERS and DAY, 351, Oxford Street.

CHOPIN'S SEVENTEEN POLISH SONGS.

Bound, 4s. net.
RIMBAULT'S SUNDAY SONGS FOR CHILDREN. Bound, 4s. net.
BARTHOLOMEW'S HOLY THOUGHTS IN SONG. Bound, 4s. net.
MACFARREN'S LADY OF THE LAKE CANTATA. 4s. net.
LAWSON'S PEOPLE'S SONGS AND BALLADS. 6s. net.
MACFARREN'S ORATORIO, JOSEPH. 4s. Bound 6s.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, and CO.,
84, New Bond Street, London, W.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S Practical Pianoforte School.

Section 1. No. 1. PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
FORSYTH BROTHERS, London and Manchester.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S New Edition of POPULAR WORKS.

For list of pieces already published Catalogues will be forwarded post free on application to FORSYTH BROTHERS, 272a, Regent Circus, Oxford St., London; Cross Street, South King Street, Manchester.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

INSTITUTED 1822.
Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830,
Under the immediate patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen and the Royal Family.
President—the Right Hon. the Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

The Lent Term will commence on MONDAY, the 21st January, 1878, and will terminate on SATURDAY, the 20th April.

Candidates for admission can be examined at the Institution on THURSDAY, the 17th January, at Eleven o'clock.

By order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.
Royal Academy of Music,
Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

CHRISTMAS and NEW YEAR'S HOLIDAYS.

THE MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS

WILL CELEBRATE THEIR

THIRTEENTH CHRISTMAS and NEW YEAR'S HOLIDAY FESTIVAL

in the

ST. JAMES'S GREAT HALL,

upon a scale of unexampled magnitude.
AN ENTIRELY NEW
And most brilliant Programme, having been specially prepared for the occasion, in which the Whole Strength of the Company,
Numbering
Nearly Fifty Artists,
will take place.
The Great Hall will be fitted with a Splendid Proscenium and Scenery, and will be illuminated in a most magnificent manner,
Presenting a Coup d'Œil of Rare Beauty.
Seats for Five Thousand Visitors.
Performances will be Given Throughout the Holidays

EVERY DAY at 3.

EVERY NIGHT at 8.

Omnibuses run direct to the doors of St. James's Hall from every Railway Station in London. Every West-End Omnibus will also carry visitors to the door of the Hall.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.

OETZMANN & CO.

67, 69, 71, 73, 77 & 79,

HAMPSTEAD ROAD,

NEAR TOTTENHAM COURT

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OE
MANN and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, Ham
Road, near Tottenham Court Road; Cabinet Factory,
Works, Drummond Street; Bedding Factory, Eagle
London, N.W. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Dr
Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Han
Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, &c., and every other requisi completely furnishing a house throughout.

THE IMMENSE RANGE OF P
MISES formerly the EAGLE BREWERY h
been REBUILT and ADDED to their SHOW ROOMS now one of the largest Furnishing Establishments in world. Comparison of price and quality respectfully cited before deciding elsewhere. OETZMANN and C enabled to offer special advantages to country custome delivery of goods by their own large Pantechnicon Vans fixing in position by competent persons. Descriptive logue, the best furnishing guide extant, post free.

PAINTINGS, OLEOS, CHROM
PHOTOS, and Engravings; a choice assortmen handsome frames. The paintings are by well-known a and the name guaranteed. Also, a large assortment
Bronzes, Statuettes, Vases, Clocks, Antique Furniture,
Artistic Furnishing Items. A catalogue of art depar post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

CABINET and UPHOLSTERY D
PARTMENT.—Elegant Drawing-room Suites, h somely carved Italian walnut wood, upholstered in Worsted Damask, from 8 guineas; ditto in Rich Silk
Satin, 20 to 60 guineas; Elegant Black and Gold Suites,
12 guineas; superior ditto, from 18 to 50 guineas;
Mahogany Dining Room Suites, 8 guineas; ditto Fine Spa
Mahogany, upholstered in best Marone Leather, 14 guin
Massive Mahogany Telescope Dining Tables, from £2 1 handsome walnut large OVAL Centre Table, 3 guineas.
OETZMANN and CO.

OETZMANN and CO.'s FIVE GUINE
NONPAREIL BEDSTEAD and BEDDING
marvel of quality and economy combined—consists o
4 ft. 6 in. wide handsome Brass and Iron French Bedste one of O. and Co.'s patent Pallio Mattresses, and a good W
Upper Mattress, good Feather Bolster, and two Pillo
Every one about to furnish should see this excellent set view in the Show Rooms. Also to suit the above, two f
Linen Sheets, one ditto Bolster-case, two ditto Pillow-ca three superior quality Blankets, and handsome wh
Marsella Quilt, for 78s. 6d. the set.—OETZMANN and CO

OETZMANN'S Patent Pallio Mattre supersedes the use of the old rigid Palliasse; is mo cleanly, healthy, and elastic; combines the advantages of Mattress and Palliasse at the cost of one article. Price fr 16s. 9d. upwards. See page 123 in "Guide to House Fu nishing," sent post free on application.—OETZMANN and C

LINOLEUM.—OETZMANN and C
—LINOLEUM.—Warm, soft, carpet-like in appearan and very durable. ALL the NEW PRIZE DESIGNS a
NOW in STOCK. A visit of inspection solicited. Pric below those usually charged for this favourite floor coverin
The trade supplied.—OETZMANN and CO.

ANGLO-TURKEY CARPETS.—The superior Carpets, of which Messrs. OETZMANN an
CO. have the exclusive sale, are of first-class British manu facture, have all the style and appearance of real Turke Carpets, at little more than the price of good Brussels, an are very durable. Price lists post free on application. Fo the convenience of those residing at a distance, a large piec showing the border and centre of carpet, sent on receipt of 5s which will be deducted from price of carpet or refunded upo return of pattern. Hearth Rugs to match, 6 ft. long b 2 ft. 8 in. wide, £1 5s. 6d. A large stock of real Turkey carpets at reduced prices.—OETZMANN and CO.

EVERY ONE SHOULD SEE the large handsome AXMINSTER HEARTH RUGS that OETZMANN and CO. are now selling at 9s. 11d. each, usual price 15s. 6d. There is nothing sold that can be compared with these for quality and cheapness. An immense variety of designs and colours to suit every pattern in Carpets; a visit of inspection solicited.—OETZMANN and CO.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and CLOTHING combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable with the least possible weight, and are of the very best quality. Price lists post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

MADRID STRIPED CURTAINS, all wool, 3 yards long by 48 inches wide, 15s. per pair; 3½ yards, 17s. 6d.; 4 yards, 20s.; best Worsted Damask Curtains, in green, crimson, or any self colour, plaited top, bordered all round with best embroidered silk lace, 3 yards long by 51 inches wide, 25s. per pair; 3½ yards, 30s.; 4 yards, 35s.; best rep, ditto, 3 yards by 54 inches wide, 42s.; 3½ yards, 50s.; 4 yards, 57s. 6d. Forwarded same day on receipt of order. One trial will ensure recommendation. No common damask or rep used, sold, or advised. Descriptive lists post-free.
OETZMANN and CO.

KITCHEN REQUISITES.—OETZMANN and CO.'S TEN POUND SET (List No. 2A, page 231, in their "GUIDE TO HOUSE FURNISHING," sent post free on application), includes Tables, Chairs, Clock, &c., with the various culinary utensils and requisites, contained all the most useful articles required in every kitchen, each being of superior quality, and is the most practical selection extant.—OETZMANN and CO.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY DEPARTMENT.—Superior Electro Plate Tea and Coffee Pots, Spoons, Forks, Cruets, &c. (quality guaranteed); best warranted Table Cutlery; handsome Coal Vases, from 3s. 11d. upwards; Dish Covers; Japanned Toilet Sets, full size, bath, pail, and can, various neat designs in colours, 8s. 11d. per set. Kitchen Ironmongery of every description. Mats, Matting, Brooms, Brushes, Pails, &c. Bronze Umbrella Stands, from 3s. 9d. Table Lamps, complete, good style, 3s. 11d.
OETZMANN and CO.

EXHIBITION PATTERN COAL VASE.—OETZMANN and CO.'S NEW SPECIAL DESIGNS for the season, much admired, handsomely japanned, and rich burnished gold ornamentation, with opal handles, strong loose lining, a great convenience and saving in wear. Price complete, 21s.—OETZMANN and CO.

CHINA and GLASS DEPARTMENT.—Ironstone China Dinner Services—various neat and elegant designs, from 15s. 9d. the set; handsome ditto at 25s. and 35s. per set; a large assortment of superb patterns for selection; dessert services complete, 17 pieces, 13s. 9d.; best French China ditto, 18 pieces, very chaste, with burnished gold edges, 18s. 9d.; China Tea Services, complete, 28 pieces, 5s. 9d.; elegant ditto, burnished gold and enamelled, 15s. 9d.—OETZMANN and CO.

POSTAL ORDER DEPARTMENT.—OETZMANN and CO.—ORDERS sent per POST, whether large or small, receive prompt and careful attention. Those residing at a distance, or any to whom a personal visit would be inconvenient, desirous of leaving the selection to the Firm, may rely upon a faithful attention to their wishes and interest in the selection. This Department is personally supervised by a member of the Firm. For further particulars please see page 287 in Catalogue, sent free on application.

OETZMANN and CO., COMPLETE HOUSE FURNISHERS, 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD ROAD (three minutes' walk from Tottenham Court Road and Gower Street Station, Metropolitan Railway). Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. Orders per post, large or small, receive prompt and faithful attention in the selection. Close at 7, and on Saturdays at 4 o'clock. Descriptive Catalogue post free.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE.

OETZMANN & CO.

HAMPSTEAD ROAD.

Printed for the Proprietors by EDWARD JOSEPH MANSFIELD, at 12, Milford Lane, and published by him at 190, Strand, both in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, Middlesex.—DECEMBER 25, 1877

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS-URBANA

3 0112 099118470